FOREWORD

I feel flattered and consider it to be great privilege to have been asked by Shri Vettam Mani to contribute a foreword to his Purânic Encyclopaedia, a really magnificent literary production, massive in size and rich and invaluable in contents. This is the first attempt in Malayalam and for the matter of that in any Indian or foreign language, so far as I know, to produce a comprehensive and well-nigh exhaustive book of study and reference with regard to episodes, incidents, characters etc. occurring in the many Purânas and such other works in Sanskrit. In the field of mythology, with regard to variety and contents as also sheer bulk, Greece stands first. Egypt comes only next. But Indian mythology—the epics and the purânas—far exceeds and excels both Greek and Egyptian mythologies put together in merit and size. Even the preparation of a complete list of characters mentioned in our epics, purânas etc. will be a stupendous and well-nigh impossible task calling for the combined efforts of a number of scholars. But, fortunately for us, each and every such name, one need not necessarily know or be acquainted with. At the same time there are great names which compel attention and should not escape a proper study. And, such names are legion, and Shri Mani has not omitted mention of even one such name in his great work. I looked up the encyclopaedia for a few such random names, and was really surprised to find detailed treatment of the same in the book. Moreover, with reference to really important names, incidents and episodes connected with them and the whole genealogy are given. Everything is fully documented and quite authoritative. And, deep, extensive and exhaustive study, patient and untiring research and above all absolute dedication to the cause are so very patent on every page of the book. Literally and in effect Shri Mani’s is a unique contribution, the first and foremost book, in the magnificent spheres of religion, culture, scholarship and history all put together. As the pioneer in the field he can justly feel happy and proud about his rare achievement, and he deserves in ample measure the unstinted praise and appreciation of all lovers of learning and culture.

Shri Mani has already earned well-deserved reputation as a teacher, especially in Malayalam, and also as a diligent student of literature and author of talent. He evidently possesses a flair for research. All such distinguished talents and attainments of his have been fully and quite successfully commissioned in the preparation of this marvellous encyclopaedia. He has put every lover of learning and knowledge everywhere, under an eternal debt of gratitude by the publication of this noble work.

PREFACE

It is a matter of profound pleasure and pride for me that the internationally famous publishers in the field of Indology, M/s Motilal Banarsidass of Delhi are publishing the English translation of my Purânic Encyclopaedia, which was originally published in Malayalam, and which has already run into four editions.

The Purânas along with the Great Epics—the Râmâyâna and the Mahâbhârata, have for centuries, profoundly influenced Indian life and Culture. The well-known definition of a Purâna as a work having five characteristic features—purâṇam pāñca-laksânam—namely, primary creation, secondary creation, the genealogies, the ages of Manu, and the dynastic account hardly does justice to the full significance of these works. They are much more than that. While their genealogies and the dynastic account form the bed-rock of the political history of ancient India, they throw a flood of light on all aspects of Indian Culture—its religion, social practices, art, literature and sciences. They serve as the key to the proper understanding of the various aspects of Hinduism—its beliefs, its modes of worship, its mythology, its festivals, feasts, and fasts, its sacred shrines and places of pilgrimage, its philosophy and ethics and its theogony. Truly it has been said that a Brahmin was not really wise if he did not know the Purânas. The study of ancient Indian history, and culture—particularly religion—is impossible without a proper knowledge of the Purânas. As a matter of fact, it is virtually impossible to understand not only ancient Indian culture and life, but also the literature in modern Indian languages, as it largely draws upon the ideas and ideologies as embodied in the contents of the Purânas and the epics.

The literary writings in all Indian languages are indebted to the Epics and the Purânas in more than one way—their form, content, ideas and ideologies are all influenced to a greater or lesser extent by these ancient works. Direct and indirect allusions to Purânic episodes, characters, events, are frequently to be met with in the literary writings of all Indian languages. Teachers engaged in imparting instruction in the literature in modern Indian languages must therefore be conversant with the contents of the Purânas and Epics in order to be able to explain these allusions wherever they occur in the writings in modern Indian languages. However, it is well nigh impossible for an average teacher to go through the whole of this vast literature. Thus the need for a handy work of reference like the present Encyclopaedia is apparent.

The desire to compile a Purânic Dictionary that should solve many of the day to day problems of the Indian language teacher, took root in me, several years ago, but I could not arrogate to myself the capacity to fulfill this urgent need. I waited for many years, for more competent and better equipped scholars to come forward and produce a work of my dreams. But since no one appeared to quench this thirst, I plunged myself into this vast ocean of Sanskrit literature, and for thirteen years I dived deep into it, studying not only the original texts but also modern works in English, Sanskrit, Malayalam and Hindi. This took me five years, and I spent about twenty thousand rupees on books and travelling for this project. I started the compilation on 1st of January, 1953, and it took me seven years to start preparing the Press copy of my work. The first volume of my 'Purânic Nighantu' was released in February 1964 and the remaining four were published after an interval of six months in each case. The second edition of all the five volumes was brought out in May 1967, still under the original title 'Purânic Nighantu'. However, in the third revised and enlarged edition in one volume published in October, 1971, the name was changed to 'Purânic Encyclopaedia'.

In an endeavour like this imperfections and drawbacks are only inevitable, and I am fully conscious of the same. But as a pioneer effort, and as a much needed aid to the teaching and study of Malayalam language and literature, it will, I hope, be found useful. Scholars and general readers in Malayalam have been generous in welcoming the encyclopaedia. That four editions of the work had to be brought out within a period of seven years from 1967 to 1974 speaks eloquently for the merit, and utility of the work and I feel my labour and expense amply rewarded. I felt still more flattered when the celebrated firm of M/s Motilal Banarsidass of Delhi, who have already laid the world of Indology under a deep debt of obligation by their monumental publications in all fields of Indian Culture and history, mooted a proposal for publishing an English translation of the Malayalam original. I am deeply indebted to them for bringing my work before a much wider circle of readers. The onerous task of translating the work into English was entrusted to a committee of five scholars: 1. Mr. P. Rajaram

I need hardly point out that these members of the editorial committee are highly qualified for this work and I must gladly acknowledge the fact that they have more than amply justified the trust placed in them.

Finally, I cannot adequately express my feelings of deep gratitude to Shri Puthezathu Rama Menon, the doyen of Malayalam literature, for writing an excellent introduction to the original Malayalam edition of the work. I am also beholden to many scholars and the reading public who have been pleased to extend a most generous welcome to the Encyclopaedia.

VETTAM MANI
A (w). The first letter (Vowel) of all Indian languages.

According to the Nānārtharānamālā this letter has the following meanings:—Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva, tortoise, court-yard, battle, harem, jewellery, sea, Pārvatī and bow-string.

ABALA is one of the fifteen devas who were the sons of Pāṇcjaranyā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 11).

ABHAYA was one of the sons of Dhrṣṭarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīmasena. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 104; Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 62).

ABHAYAM. King Idhmajihva divided his kingdom Plakṣadvipa into seven parts and gave them to his seven sons. Abhayam is one of the parts. The other six parts are:—Sīvaṁ, Yamasainī, Subhadraṁ, Sāntainī, Kuṇāṁ and Amṛtainī. See “Idhmajihva”, (Bhāgavata, 5th Skanda, Chapter 20, Verse 2). It is seen (from M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 9) that the territory known as Abhayam was conquered by Bhīmasena. (See Foot-note).

ABHĪBHU. He was a King, the son of the King of Kāśī and a relative of the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed by the son of King Vasudāna. He had a most wonderful horse. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 151, Verse 63; Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Verses 23-24; Droṇa Parva, Verses 26-27).

ABHIMANYU I. He was the heroic son of Arjuna the central figure of the Mahābhārata, by his wife Subhadrā.

2) Purāṇa-jnana (Previous Birth). There is a story about Abhimanyu's Pārvajanma in the Mahābhārata. It was Varcas, son of Candra, who incarnated as Abhimanyu, son of Arjuna. A conference took place between the Devas and Candra about the incarnation of the Devas in the world for the destruction of the wicked people. Candra told the Devas: “I do not like to send Varcas, whom I love more than my life, to the earth. Still, I think it is not right to stand in the way of the plans of the gods. You must agree to one condition if I am to send my son. Let him be born as the son of Arjuna. I am unable to be separated from him for more than six years. My son will enter into the Cakra Vyūha of the enemies to be killed by them and return to me in the sixteenth year.” The devas (gods) accepted this condition. That is why Abhimanyu was killed in his sixteenth year. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67).

3) Military Training and War. Abhimanyu received his training in arms from his father Arjuna. Later, he went with his mother Subhadrā to Dvārakā and lived for some time with his uncle Śrī Kṛṣṇa. There he is said to have received training in arms from Pradyumna, son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. After the incognito life of the Pāṇḍavas, Abhimanyu married Uttarā, daughter of the King of Vīrata. War broke out between Kaūravas and Pāṇḍavas. On the first day itself Abhimanyu entered into a duel with Bhṛhatvāla, King of Kosala. In the terrible conflict with Bhīṣma, Abhimanyu broke Bhīṣma's flagstaff. After that he assisted his father Arjuna to fight against Bhīṣma. Verses 8-13 of Chapter 55 of Bhīṣma Parva of the Mahābhārata describe Abhimanyu's fight with Lakṣmaṇa in the second day's battle. Then he took his place in the Ardha Candra Vyūha (semi-circular phalanx) formed by Arjuna. He fought fiercely with the Gandhāras. He attacked Salya and killed Jayatesa, King of Magadha, along with his elephant. We find Abhimanyu assisting Bhīmasena in M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapters 63, 64, 69 and 94. After that Abhimanyu defeated Lakṣmaṇa in battle. Then he defeated Vikarpa, Citrasena and others also. Later he took his position in the Śrīṅgātaka Vyūha created by Dhrṣṭaduryumṇa. He started fighting with Ḫagadatta. He defeated Ambaṣṭha and Alanībuṣa. Next he fought a duel with Sudīṣṭa. After that he encountered Duryodhana, Bhṛhatvāla and others. M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 10, Verses 47-52 are a description of Abhimanyu's heroism by Dhrṣṭarāṣṭra. He snatched Paurava's weapon and threw it on the ground. Next he fought with Jayadratha and Salya. Then he was caught in the Cakra Vyūha (circular phalanx) of the enemies. There he inflicted great losses upon the enemy forces. Salya was stunned and his brother was killed by Abhimanyu. M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 35, Verses 12-16 say that after death Abhimanyu attained the immortal world of the Munis (Saints). King Parīkṣit was the son of Abhimanyu. In M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verses 18-20, we find that after his death, Abhimanyu entered the moon in his former form of Varcas.

4) After Death. M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 71, Verses 12-16 say that after death Abhimanyu attained the immortal world of the Munis (Saints). King Parīkṣit was the son of Abhimanyu. In M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verses 18-20, we find that after his death, Abhimanyu entered the moon in his former form of Varcas.

5) Other names of Abhimanyu. In the Mahābhārata Abhimanyu has been referred to by several other names, such as ĀRJUNI, Saubhadra, Kārṣṇī, Arjunāṁatma, Sukrātmajātmaka, Arjunāpura and Phālguṇi.

6) Other details. King Parīkṣit was the son of Abhimanyu. Janamejaya was born as his son. It was Janamejaya who was killed by Bhīṣma.
AHIMANYU II

jaya who performed Sarpasattra. (A yaga) Satānikā was the son of Janamejaya. Satānikā had a son named Sahasrānikā. King Udayana, the jewel of the Candra Vani (Lunar dynasty) was born to Sahasrānikā by the goddess Mrgāvati (See ‘Udayana’, stories about this Udayana are very famous). Kālidāsa has mentioned in his “Meghdūtā” about the old rustic who thronged the country-sides to tell and listen to Udayana stories.
(Kathāsārītāgāra, Madana Kaṭṭukalambaka, 4th Taranāgī)

AHIMANYU II. One of the sons of Manu. The ten sons born to Manu by Nadvalā were: Kuru, Puru, Satyadyumna, Tapasvī, Satyavān, Suci, Agniṣṭoma, Adhirātra, Sūdyumna and Ahimanyu. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Section I, Chapter 13).

AHIMANYU VADHA PARVA. A part (branch) of Drona Parva. (See “Mahābhārata”).

AHINAYA. In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 342, Ahinaya has been defined as follows: Ahinaya is the art of presenting before the people the ideas that are to be communicated to them. There are four divisions of this art known as Sattvika, Vācika, Āṅgika and Āhārya depending on Sattva, Vāk, Āṅga and Āhārya. Besides these, another division known as Abhimānikā (Abhimāṇoṭhā) may also be mentioned. This signifies the expression of rasas like Śringāra. There are two kinds of Śringāra known as Sāmbhoga and Vipralambha.
Four varieties of Vipralamba called Pārvāṅurāga Vipralambha, Māna Vipralambha, Pravāsa Vipral-ambha and Karuṇa Vipralambha are mentioned. The union after Vipralamba is Sāmbhoga-Śringāra. All Sattvika bhāvas are included in Śringāra. All these have to be expressed through Abhinaya.

AHIRU. A Rājārśi who was born of the sixth Kālakeya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 53).

AHĪŠĀKAM. A Janapada (Village) of ancient India.
The warriors of this Janapada were called Abhiśākas.
(M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 12; Chapter
93, Verse 2).

AHĪSĀRAM. A Janapada of ancient India. (M.B.
Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 94).

AHĪSĀRĪ. Arjuna conquered this city, which was one of the ancient cities of India, in the course of his Digvijaya (conquest of the world).

AHĪSYANTĀ. A son born to Mahārājā Kuru by Vāhini. He had three brothers named Craitarratha, Muni and Janamejaya. Abhisyanta was the younger brother of Āśavān and elder brother of Craitarratha.
(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 50-51).

ACALA I. 1) General. Acala was the son of Subala, a King of Gândhâra. He was Śakuni’s brother and a heroic Charioteer on the side of the Kauravas. (M.B.
Udyoga Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 1).
2) Acala had also taken part in Yudhīṣṭhīra’s Rājasūya. (A very expensive sacrifice—yāga—performed by an emperor.) (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 7).
3) Acala had a brother named Vṛṣaka. In the battle between the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas, Arjuna killed Acala and Vṛṣaka. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 11).
4) One night Vyāsa summoned the departed holy souls and Acala also was among them. (M.B. Āśvamedhiaka Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 12).

ACALA II. Name of a bull. Among the pārśadas of Skanda we see the bull named Acala. (M.B. Sāla Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 74).

ACALA III. An epithet of Mahāviṣṇu. Among the thousand names of Mahāviṣṇu we see the name Acala also. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 92).

ACALA. Subrahmanya, who was born from Śiva’s god from the fire, was made Commander-in-Chief (Generalissimo) by the gods to kill Tārakasūra.
A large number of warriors and mothers were assigned to assist him. A woman named Acālā was included among those mothers. (M.B. Sāla Parva, Chapter 40, Verse 14).

ACCHODĀ. A spiritual daughter of the Pitṛs. (For further details see “Āmāvasā”).

ACCHODASARAS. A river, who was the daughter of the Pitṛs called Agnisvāttas. (Hari Vaṁśa, Chapter 18, Verse 26).

ACYUTA. (See Viṣṇu).

ACYUTĀYU. He was a heroic warrior on the Kaurava side. Śrutāyū was the brother of Acyutāyū. Both of them were killed by Arjuna in the Kaurava-Pāṇḍava battle. These heroes attacked Arjuna and Śri Kṛṣṇa furiously with their arrows and Arjuna had some difficulty in killing them. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 93, Verses 7-42).

ACYUTA STHALA. This is an ancient village in India. In ancient times Śūdras of mixed castes inhabited this region. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 9).

ADHARMA. A description of the lineage of Adharma is found in Agni Purāṇa. Himśā (violence) is the consort of Adharma. The couple procreated two children, Arṇta and Nikrī, and from them sprang up Bhaya (fear), Naraka (Hell), Māya (illusion), Vedanā (pain) etc. And, out of them Māya brought forth Death, the destroyer of (all) objects. Vedanā, in its turn produced Sorrow and Grief out of Raurava.
From Death were born Disease, Senility, Sorrow, Intense desire and Anger. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

ADHARMA. Adharma is a person who is an embodiment of Adharmanas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 53). Adharma’s wife Nīrītī delivered 3 children; Bhaya, Mahābhaya and Mṛtyu. Adharma had another son, Darpa (conceit) born of Wealth. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 90, Verse 27).

ADHASSIRAS I was a great sage. Śri Kṛṣṇa is said to have met the sage on his way to Hastinapura. (M.B.
Udyoga Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 64).

ADHASSIRAS II. There is a reference in Viṣṇu Purāṇa to a hell called Adhassiras. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 2, Chapter 6).

ADHIRA. A King; also a great devotee of Lord Śiva.
Once he decreed death penalty on an innocent woman.
He also destroyed with his own hands a temple of Śiva.
As a consequence of those two sinful deeds he became a devil after death. Ultimately by the grace of Śiva he cast off the devil’s form and became an attendant of Śiva. (Pādu Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 111).

ADHIRĀYA. A Kingdom in ancient India, described in Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 44. Today this place is known as Rewa.

ADHIRATHA: Foster father of Karna.
1) Lineage. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Brahmā-Ati-Candra-Purūravas-Āyus-Nahuṣa-Yayāti-Anudruhyu-ADHOKŚAJA

2) Foster father of Kṛṣṇa. Sage Durvāsas had taught Kṛṣṇa some mantras to get children, and Kṛṣṇa, then unmarried, tested the first mantra with the Sun-god as her object. The Sun-god appeared before Kṛṣṇa and from his power she conceived and duly delivered a child, Kṛṣṇa. Fearing obloquy Kṛṣṇa concealed the child in a box and floated it on the river, Ganges. At the time Adhiratha, a great commander of Dhṛtarāṣṭra came to the river for a bath. His wife was one grieving over not having a child of her own. So, when Adhiratha found a child in the floating box, he took it home, and himself and his wife Rādhā brought up the child with pleasure. The child was named Vāsudeva, and the child grew up to become the famous Kṛṣṇa and favourite friend of Duryodhana. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 67 and 130; Vana Parva, Chapter 309; Devībhāgavata, Skandha 2).

3) Some particulars. Adhiratha was King of Aṅga. He was a Sūta (charioteer) and Kṛṣṇa grew up as his son. Kṛṣṇa was sent to Hastināpura to be trained in the use of weapons, and it was here that Duryodhana and Kṛṣṇa developed their friendship and alliance. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 3). Śrī Mahādevībhāgavata, in Chapter 3 relates the following incident: "Thus lamenting Kṛṣṇa sent the box concealing Kṛṣṇa, by the nurse, to be floated in the river, and after bath, food etc. she spent the hours in the normal way within the inner apartment. Rājā Adhiratha bathing in the river saw the box floating in the river". These facts prove that Adhiratha was not only the King of Aṅga but a good charioteer as well, and further a very good friend of Dhṛtarāṣṭra.

4) We come across Adhiratha on the occasion of the trial of skill in the use of arms between the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas. When Kṛṣṇa entered the lists the Pāṇḍavas questioned his nobility of birth. Seeing Kṛṣṇa's great humiliation and discomfiture Duryodhana enthroned him immediately as King of Aṅga. Vyāsa, who witnessed the scene has given a picturesque description of it.

ADHOKŚAYA. A synonym of Mahā Viṣṇu. (Kaṁsāri-radhokśayā)—Amarakoṣa).

ADHRIΓU. A great sage (Maharsi) who lived during the Rgvedic period. (Rgveda, Manḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 112).

ADHṚŚYĀ. A river. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 24).

ADHYAPĀYANA. A disciple of the great preceptor of Atharvaveda, Sumantu. He divided Atharvaveda into two parts and gave one to Utatthya and the other to Vedadarāṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 12).

ADITI. 1) Genealogy. Kaśyapa, grandson of Bhrahmā and son of Marevi married Aditi, daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. Aditi had twelve sisters: Ditī, Kāla, Dañāyas, Danu, Śithihikā, Krodhā, Pṛthā, Viśvā, Vinatā, Kāpalī, Muni and Kadrū. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 12). Devas are sons born to Kaśyapa by Aditi and hence they are known as Adityas also. Kaśyapa married all the thirteen sisters including Aditi, and all living beings owe their origin to them. (See Kaśyapa).

2) Descendants. 33 sons were born to Aditi. 12 of them are called Dvādaśādityas, viz. Dhiḥā, Aryānī, Mitra, Śakra, Varuṇa, Aiśvī, Bhaga, Vivasvān, Pūrṇa, Śavīcā, Tvāṣṭā and Viṣṇu. Amongst the other 21 sons are the 11 Rudras and 8 Vāsus. (See M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 15).

3) Main incidents. 1. How Mahāviṣṇu was born as the son of Aditi. The Mahābhārata and the Rāmāyaṇa refer to a story about the birth of Mahāviṣṇu as the son of Aditi. Viṣṇu entered the womb of Aditi as Vāmana (Dwarf). This story was related by the sage Viśvāmitra to the boys Rāma and Laksmana while they were accompanying the story in the forest. When they entered Siddhāśrama Viśvāmitra pointed to the latter that the Āśrama was sacred, because Mahāviṣṇu had stayed there for long as Vāmana. The Devas induced Mahāviṣṇu to obstruct the sacrifice (yāga) being performed by Emperor Mahābali, son of Virocana. At that time Aditi, the wife of Kaśyapa was doing penance so that Mahāviṣṇu might be born as her son, and accordingly he entered her womb, 1000 years later she gave birth to Viṣṇu, and that child was known as Vāmana. (See Vāmana; also M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 272, Verse 62, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 83, Verses 25 and 26, as also Vāmkī Rāmāyaṇa, Canto 29).

2. Rebirth of Aditi. Once Kaśyapa made all arrangements to perform a sacrifice (yāga). Having failed to get the suitable cow for it, he stole Varuṇa's cow and conducted the yāga. Not only that, Kaśyapa refused to return the cow even after the yāga was over. Varuṇa in hot anger rushed to Kaśyapa's hermitage. Kaśyapa was absent, and his wives, Aditi and Surāsā did not treat Varuṇa with due respect. The enraged Varuṇa cursed them to be born in Gokula. He also complained about the matter to Brahmā. Brahmā told Kaśyapa: "Since you, a learned person, have stolen the cow, may you along with your wives be born in Gokula and tend cows". Accordingly Kaśyapa and his wives, Aditi and Surāsā, were born respectively as Vasudeva, Devaki and Rohiṇī in Gokula in the 25th Dwāpara yuga. (This story has been told by Vyāsa to Rāja Janamejaya). (Devībhāgavata, Skandha 4).

3. Aditi in prison. Devaki is Aditi reborn. There was reason for Devaki being imprisoned on the orders of Karnas. When Kaśyapa was living in an Āśrama with Aditi and Diti he was so much pleased with the services of Aditi that he asked her to beg for any boon she wished. Accordingly she prayed for an ideal son. The boon was readily granted, and Indra was the son thus born to her. The birth of Indra engendered jealousy in Diti towards Aditi, and she also demanded a son equal to Indra. Kaśyapa obliged Diti also. As Diti advanced in pregnancy and her beauty also increased Aditi got jealous of the former and she called her son Indra and told him that unless something was done in time, Diti would deliver a child equal to him (Indra) thus relegating him probably to the place of second Deva. Thus admonished by his mother the artful Indra approached Diti and told her: "Mother, I have come to serve you". Diti was greatly pleased. Indra's services drove Diti to sleep very quickly, and Indra used the opportunity to enter the womb of Diti and cut into 49 pieces the child with his weapon, the Vajra. The child in the womb began crying on receiving cuts with Vajra when Indra asked it not to cry. (Mā ruda, don't cry) and so the child got out of Diti's womb as 49 Mārutas (winds). Then did Diti wake up and cursed Aditi as follows: "Your son did treacherously kill my offspring in the womb itself. So he will forfeit the three worlds. You were responsible for the murder of my child. You will, therefore, have to spend days in prison grieving over your children. Your children also will be annihilated." Because of this curse of Diti, Indra once lost Devaloka and had to live elsewhere, and Nahuṣa functioned, for a time as Indra. (See Nahuṣa.) In the 28th Dvāpara yuga Aditi transformed as Devaki had to be a captive of Kaṁsa, and Kaṁsa killed her child by dashing them on the ground. (Devibhāgavata, Skandha 4).

4. Narakāśura stole the earrings of Aditi. Narakāśura, who turned out to be a curse and menace to the three worlds consequent on the boon he got from Viṣṇu, attacked Devaloka once, and carried off Indra’s royal umbrella and Aditi’s earrings. Mahāviṣṇu incarnated himself as Śrī Kaṁsa, killed Narakāśura in battle and got back the earrings etc. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 80; Sābhā Parva, Chapter 38, Verse 29; Bhāgavata Daśama Skandha).

5. Mahāviṣṇu became seven times son to Aditi. Once, desirous of having children Aditi cooked food (rice) sitting herself in the entrails of Mount Mynaka (M.B. Aranyā Parva, Chapter 135, Verse 3). Dharmaputra, in the course of singing the glories of Lord Kaṁsa after the great war refers to Viṣṇu having taken birth seven times in the womb of Aditi. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 6).

6. Budha cursed Aditi. A story in the Mahābhārata refers to Budha’s once cursing Aditi. The ever increasing power of Asuras made the Devas anxious. Aditi, the mother of the Devas decided to send them all to annihilate the Asuras. She had finished cooking food for her sons, and lo! there appeared before her Budha and asked for food. Aditi asked him to wait pending her sons taking their food hoping that there would be some food left after that. This caused Budha to lose his temper and he cursed her that (Aditi) she would become the mother of Vivasvān in his second birth as Anda, when she would suffer pain in her abdomen. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 34, Verses 96–98).

7. Former birth of Aditi. During the former years (period) of Svāyambhuva Manu the Prajāpati called Sutapas, along with his wife Pṛṣṇi did Tapas for 12000 years. Then Mahāviṣṇu appeared before them, and Pṛṣṇi prayed for a son like Viṣṇu himself, and Mahāviṣṇu was born as her son named Pṛṣṇigarbha. This story is related by Śrī Kaṁsa to his mother on his birth as the son of Vasudeva. (Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha, Chapter 3).

She, who became the wife of Prajāpati as Pṛṣṇi before Svāyambhuva Manu, and was born again as Devaki, the wife of Vasudeva is one and the same person.

ADRA. A King of the Solar dynasty. (See Sūrya Vansha).

ADRI. A nymph (devātṛ). There is a story in Devibhāgavata about her being cursed by a Brahmin and turned into a fish.

ADRŚṬABHAYA is the curse put on King Janamejaya by Saramā, the dog of the Devas. While Janamejaya, son of Parīkṣit was conducting, along with his brothers, a yāga of long duration at Kurukṣetra the son of Saramā went to the place and was thrashed by the brothers of Janamejaya. Seeing her weeping child Saramā naturally got angry. She cursed the king thus: "My son did not commit any offence; he did not even look at the havis (oblations), nor did he lick it. For having thrashed the innocent child you will experience Adṛṣṭabhaya. When the yāga was over Janamejaya got rid of the curse by getting sage Somaśravas do certain proper rites.

ADRŚYANTI, wife of sage Sakti, the son of Vasiṣṭha and mother of sage Parāśara.

Kalmāśapāda, a king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty reached the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha during a hunting expedition when Sakti, eldest of the hundred sons of Vasiṣṭha came walking towards him. False pride prevented either of them from giving way to the other. The King got angry and whipped Sakti. Sakti cursed the king and he was converted into a demon. This happened at a period when sages Vasiṣṭha and Viśvamitra were at logger-heads. Viśvamitra got admitted into the body of King Kalmāśapāda a demon called Kimkara, and the king set out to take revenge upon Sakti, the son of Vasiṣṭha. The king was further promised all support by Viśvamitra. Kalmāśapāda ate up all the hundred sons of Vasiṣṭha. Overcome with grief Vasiṣṭha attempted suicide many a time. But the spirit (Atman) did not quit the body. Thus sunken in grief Vasiṣṭha lived in his hermitage with Adṛṣṭyanti, wife of Sakti. One day Vasiṣṭha heard distinct sounds of the chanting of the Vedas and Adṛṣṭyanti told him that a child of his son, Sakti, was developing in her womb and that the vedic sounds heard were sounds produced by that son chanting the vedic hymns. Vasiṣṭha thus was happy to hear that the dynasty will not become extinct and, so, gave up all ideas of suicide. Another day Kalmāśapāda in the guise of the demon hurriedly came to devour Adṛṣṭyanti and Vasiṣṭha gave him redemption from the curse. He was restored to his old state and form. Adṛṣṭyanti duly gave birth to a son, and the child grew up to become Parāśara, father of Vyāsa.

While the Pāṇḍavas, in the course of their forest life, were passing the banks of river Gaṅgā at midnight, a Gandharva named Aṅgāraparṇa enjoying in the river-water clasped with Arjuna, and he was defeated. The story of Adṛṣṭyanti is one of the many stories told by Aṅgāraparṇa to the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Adī Parva, Chapters 175-178).

AGASTYA.

2) Birth. A story occurs in Uttara-Rāma-Carita about the birth of Agastya. Nimi was the son of Ikṣvāku of the Sūrya dynasty. When he ascended the throne he decided to celebrate a sacrifice of long duration. He invited Vasiṣṭha to perform the sacrifice. But Vasiṣṭha, who had to participate in the sacrifice of Indra, could not accept the invitation and Nimi had to return disappointed. At this he got angry, sought the help of Sātānanda, the son of the great hermit Gautama and the sacrifice was begun. Vasishtha did not like this. He cursed Nimi that life might be separated from his body. Nimi retorted with the same curse. Vasishtha’s spirit separated itself from his body and began to roam about in the sky. At last he requested Brahmā to provide him with a body. Brahmā granted his wish and said that he would be born again from Mitra and Varuṇa.

When the spirit of Vasishtha returned to the earth it was Mitra and Varuṇa moving about, having only one body for both. Vasishtha’s spirit entered into that body. One day Mitra-Varuṇa happened to see the celestial beauty, Urvāśī on the seashore. They embraced Urvāśī and immediately the spirit of Vasishtha entered the body of Urvāśī.

After this Mitra and Varuṇa separated themselves from one another and assumed two different bodies. Varuṇa approached Urvāśī with lustful desire, but rejecting him Urvāśī accepted Mitra. Varuṇa had seminal flow and this semen was taken and kept in a pot. At the sight of this, remorse and passion arose in Urvāśī and the semen of Mitra already received in her womb oozed out and fell on the ground. This also was collected and kept in the same pot along with that of Varuṇa. After a few days the pot broke open by itself and two babies came out. One was Agastya and the other Vasishtha. As these two were born of the semen of Mitra and Varuṇa, they came to be known as Maitrārvaruṇi. This story partly occurs in Śanti Parva of Mahābhārata, Verse 343 of Chapter 88.

3) Education. Very little is mentioned in the Purāṇas about the education of Agastya. Still there are ample proofs that he was well-versed in the Vedas and sciences and well skilled in the uses of diverse weapons.

In Verse 9, Chapter 139 of Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Drona says to Arjuna as follows:

“Agniveśa, my teacher was the disciple of Agastya, in the art of using bows and arrows and I am his disciple”.

When it is said that even Agniveśa the teacher of Drona was a disciple of Agastya, his proficiency in the art of using weapons could easily be discerned.

4) Marriage. There is an interesting story behind the marriage of such an austere man as Agastya, who had brought all the passions under control. As the hermit Agastya was walking along the forest, he saw his ancestors (Pitrs) hanging head downwards in a canyon. He wanted to know the reason and they replied: “Child; we would be allowed to enter heaven only if sons are born to you. So get married as soon as possible”. The necessity of marriage occurred to him only then. But will be there any woman who could be patient enough to become the wife of this bearded dwarfish hermit? Agastya did not lose heart. At that time the King of Vidarbha was doing penance to obtain a son. Agastya collected the quintessence of all living beings, with which he created an extremely beautiful lady and named her Lopāmudrā. Agastya gave Lopāmudrā as daughter to the King of Vidarbha. The King who was delighted at getting such a daughter, employed hundreds of maids to look after the child, who soon grew up to be a young lady. Agastya once approached the King of Vidarbha and expressed his wish to have Lopāmudrā as his wife. The King was in a dilemma. On the one hand he did not like his beautiful daughter having the brightness of fire, to be given as wife to the hermit, clad in the bark of trees and wearing tufts of matted hair. On the other hand he was afraid of the curse of the hermit Agastya. As the King was trying hard to find a solution, Lopāmudrā herself came to the King and said “Father, I am happy to say that I shall willingly become the wife of the hermit Agastya.” At last her father consented and discarding royal garments and ornaments, Lopāmudrā accompanied Agastya. It is mentioned in Vana Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 5, that they were married at Mahāśindhuśthā. After their marriage they went to Gaṅgādvāra. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 96).

5) The story of how Agastya ate Vatāpī. While Agastya was doing severe penance, Lopāmudrā attained puberty and had menstruation. Longing for a child, she went and stood beside Agastya. She expressed her wish to lead a family life. Her demands did not stop there. During conjugation, Agastya should wear flower garlands and ornaments, and she must be provided with divine ornaments. Agastya was surprised at the enormity of her demands. Poor, penniless Agastya! Leaving Lopāmudrā in the hermitage he went in search of money. He at first approached King Śrutavā, who produced accounts of his income and expenditure and convinced Agastya that he was having no balance at all. Agastya, accompanied by Śrutavā, then proceeded to King Bradhnaśya. He also produced accounts and refused to help Agastya, who then followed by Śrutavā and Bradhnaśya went on to the wealthy King Trasadasyu, who also producing his accounts refused to render any help to Agastya. Finally Agastya accompanied by the three Kings, went to the house of Ilvala, a noble asura of immense wealth. This asura Ilvala lived in Manimapatattana with his younger brother Vatāpī. Once Ilvala approached a hermit Brahmin and requested that his wish for a son, having the power and status of Indra, be granted. The Brahmin refused to grant such a boon. Since then Ilvala and Vatāpī considered Brahmins as their enemies. The elder brother converted the younger one (Vatāpī) into a goat and whenever a Brahmin visited his house, he would kill the goat, prepare mutton dishes and set them before his guest. When he had finished eating, Ilvala would call aloud. “Vatāpī, come out!”. Breaking the stomach of the guest open, Vatāpī would come out. In this way Ilvala had killed a good number of Brahmins. It was at this juncture that Agastya and the Kings came to beg money of him.

Ilvala welcomed the guests with hospitality and as usual killed the goat, prepared food with it and served the food before Agastya. When Agastya had finished eating, Ilvala called Vatāpī loudly. But Agastya slowly said, “Vatāpī, jirno bhava” (Let Vatāpī be digested) and immediately Vatāpī was digested in the stomach of Agastya. The awe-stricken asura Ilvala gave each Brahmin ten thousand cows and as much gold and to Agastya he doubled the quantity of alms. Over and above this, he presented Agastya with a chariot hitched with two fine horses called Virāvān and Surāvān. Agastya returned to his hermitage and adorned himself as Lopamudrā had demanded. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 99).

6) Birth of a son. Lopamudrā became pregnant. Agastya told her, "A thousand ordinary sons, or hundred sons, each having the strength of ten ordinary sons, or ten sons, each having the strength of hundred ordinary sons, or a son, greater and nobler than one thousand sons—which of these do you prefer?" Lopamudrā preferred one son. When she was with child Agastya again went to the forest to do penance. After seven years of pregnancy Lopamudrā gave birth to a lustrous son. The hermit Drdhasyu, who is also called Idhmavāḥa, is this son. This child is said to have chanted the Vedas (Holy Scriptures) immediately on his birth. He used to gather twigs for kindling the sacrificial fire of his father, and hence he got the name Idhmavāḥa.*

7) How he stamped the Vindhya mountain down. Once the talebearer Nārada happened to come to the Vindhya Mountain, who gladly welcomed Nārada, gave him a seat, showed hospitality and asked for news. Nārada said "May you be blessed. Just now I am coming from the Mahāmeru. Indra, Agni (fire) and other gods live there. Kailāsa, Nīsadha, Nila, Gandhamādana etc. are mountains far nobler than this Meru. But they are not so haughty as him. That the Sun and the Moon and such others revolve round him, is the reason for his arrogance". On hearing these tales, Vindhya thought that Meru should be taught a lesson. Once Vindhya made his peaks grow higher and higher till they touched the sky. The Sun, the Moon and others found it very difficult to pass over the high peaks in their usual journeys to the West, and so they had to roam about in the sky. When the journeys of the Sun and the Moon were hindered, everything in the world fell into chaos. The gods came to Vindhya in groups and tried to pacify him. But their attempts were futile. So they approached Agastya and made their petition to him. He agreed to pacify Vindhya somehow or other. Agastya and his wife came to Vindhya from Kāsinagara. When Vindhya saw Agastya he began to shiver with fear. Contracting all his high peaks, he bowed before Agastya, who said to Vindhya thus "Vindhya, I am going to South Bāhārāta. Let your heads be low till I come back". Vindhya agreed. Agastya passed on to the South and built a hermitage in the Malayācala and lived there. Since then Agastya had never gone to the North and Vindhya had never risen up. As he had made the mountain (Agá) bow its head, he got the name Agastya. (Tenth Skandha of Devībhāgavata).

8) Nāhuṣa transformed to a huge serpent by Agastya. Devendra killed Vṛtrāsura, an enemy of the gods. As Devendra had resorted to treachery for killing the enemy (see the word Vṛtrāsura) he incurred the sin of 'Brahmahatya'. Once Indra went to the Mānasarasar, without the knowledge of anybody and hid himself in the petal of a lotus flower. The gods and especially Śacīdevi were much alarmed at the disappearance of Devendra. Heaven was without a King. Bad omens began to appear. Indra, who had hidden in the lotus stalk in the shape of a water-snake, was not at all visible as the petals had closed over him. It was at this critical moment that King Nahuṣa had completed hundred horse-sacrifices and became eligible for the throne of Devendra. At a great gathering of the Gods Nahuṣa was elected as Devendra. Though Nahuṣa got all the celestial maids at his disposal in the Nandanodyāna (Nandana Garden) his passion for women was not satiated. So he began to have an eye on Indrāṇi. She was in sorrow and misery at the disappearance of her husband Indra, and did not at all look with favour on this new move on the part of the new Indra. She sought the help of Brhaspati, who agreed to protect her from Nahuṣa. The newly-elected Indra could not tolerate this disloyalty on the part of Indrāṇi. He became furious and threatened Brhaspati with death, if Indrāṇi was not sent to him forthwith. All hermits gathered round Nahuṣa and tried with their advice to dissuade him from this attempt, but he would not be dissuaded. Nahuṣa belittled Brhaspati and all the hermits and was rude to them. Finally the hermits, being afraid of Nahuṣa, went to Brhaspati to persuade him to send Indrāṇi to Nahuṣa. Brhaspati suggested to Indrāṇi a way of safety. Accordingly she came to Nahuṣa and said to him "Lord, to become your wife, is a matter of great pleasure to me. But before that I must make sure if my husband is living anywhere. So allow me to make a search". Nahuṣa agreed to this and by the blessings of Devi, Indrāṇi found out her husband. But Indra would not return to the court, with Indrāṇi, who then complained about Nahuṣa's outrageous behaviour. Indra advised her a new way to protect herself from Nahuṣa's onslaught.

Indrāṇi returned to Nahuṣa and told him "Lord, women generally love pomp and glory. I have a mania for vehicles. You should make a palanquin. Let the palanquin bearers be hermits. You must come to my house in that palanquin with hermits as your palanquin bearers and then I will accept you as my husband." Nahuṣa agreed. He employed Agastya and such other hermits to bear his palanquin. He got into his palanquin and started for Indrāṇi's house. His desire to reach Indrāṇi was such that he thought the hermits to be very slow. To make them quick enough he ordered "Sarpa, Sarpa" (walk quick, walk quick). The hermits began to run. Still Nahuṣa was not satisfied. He kicked at the heads of the hermits and whipped the dwarfish Agastya.

Agastya got angry and cursed Nahuṣa thus: "Since you have whipped me saying 'Sarpa Sarpa', may you be transformed into a mahāsarpa (huge serpent) and fall into the great forest."

The horror-stricken Nahuṣa pleased Agastya by praise. Agastya said that Nahuṣa would be freed from the curse and attain heaven when he happened to meet Dharmaputra. Nahuṣa instantly changed into a serpent of immense size and slid into a great forest in the Himālayās. (Deviśabhagavata, 8th Sarga).

During their sojourn in the forest, the Pândavas visited many holy places and reached the Yāmana mountain in the Himālayās. When Bhīma was passing by the mouth of a cave he was attacked by a huge serpent. In spite of his immense strength Bhīma could not extricate himself from the hold of the snake, who eventually informed Bhima of its previous history. When Bhima understood that the serpent was none other than Nahusa, a King of the Surya dynasty (Solar), he felt sorry for him. Dharmaputra, who came there in search of Bhima, talked with Nahusa, who immediately regained his original form and went to heaven. (Mahâbhârata, Chapter 17 of Udyoga Parva; Chapter 179 of Vana Parva; Chapter 342 of Sânti Parva).

*Idhma—twigs of firewood. (Idhma—twigs of firewood) (vāha—carrier).
It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 100, that the person who cursed Nahuṣa and turned him into a huge serpent, was the hermit Bhṛgu, who had been hiding in the hair of Agastya.

9) How Agastya drank up the ocean. Indra ruthlessly killed Vrtrāsura, who had been harassing the Gods, with the help of the Kālakeyas. The frightened Kālakeyas got into the ocean and hid themselves at the bottom. From that hideout they decided to destroy the three worlds. At night they came out on the earth and ate a good deal of Brahmins, and caused much damage to the hermitages of Vasiṣṭha and Gâyavana. All the Brahmins on the earth were terribly afraid of the Kālakeyas. The gods went to Viṣṇu and prayed for protection. Viṣṇu informed them that the Kālakeyas could not be caught unless the ocean was dried up, and this task could be performed only by Agastya. So the Gods approached Agastya and told him what Viṣṇu had informed them. With pleasure Agastya accepted the job. Accompanied by the Gods and hermits he neared the swaying and surging ocean. While all were watching unwinkingly Agastya brought the great ocean into his palm and drank it up very easily and subsequently the Kālakeyas were killed. Now the Gods again approached Viṣṇu and made representation about the loss of the ocean. Viṣṇu told them that by the penance of Bhagiratha the divine Gaṅgâ would fall into the earth and then the ocean will be filled. In this way the earth regained its lost ocean. (Mahâbhârata, Vana Parva, Chapters 101 to 105).

10) Agastya cursing Kubera and his companion. In the course of their sojourn in forest, the Pândavas visited several holy places and reached the proximity of the Himālayas. Leaving his brothers behind, Arjuna went up the Mahâmeru to worship Śiva. Years passed by. At last his brothers also started for the Mahâmeru in search of Arjuna and with the help of the hermits Vyâšapâvâ and Ârṣiṣeṇa, they reached Kubera-pûrâ (the capital of Kubera). There Bhima destroyed the army of Kubera and killed Manîmân, his friend and favourite. Dharmaputra, repenting of his younger brother's iniquity bowed before Kubera and asked him with politeness, why the power of Gods gave way to the power of man. Kubera replied that it was due to the curse of Agastya and began to depict the event thus: Once my friend Manîmân and myself were going, in a chariot, to be present at the singing and chanting just begun at Kuśâvatî. At that time Agastya was standing in his hermitage on the bank of Kâlîndi, performing Sun worship. When Manîmân saw this from the sky, he spat on the head of Agastya, who instantly getting wild cursed me. "Lo, Kubera, your friend Manîmân spat on my head in your sight. So this Manîmân and your army will meet with death at a man's hand. When they die you should not feel sorry for them. If it becomes possible for you to meet the man who killed Manîmân you will be liberated from the curse."

It is this curse that brought about the death of Manîmân and the army. When Kubera saw Bhima face to face his curse was revoked. (Mahâbhârata, Vana Parva, Chapter 160).

11) Agastya cursing Mârica and Tâdakâ. The boys Râma and Laksmaṇa went to the forest with Viṣṇûmitra for protecting sacrifice. When they entered the Tâdakâ forest Viṣṇûmitra told them the story of Tâdakâ thus:

Tâdakâ is the daughter of Suketu, a semi god of the tribe Yaśa. Being childless for a long time Suketu was miserable and began to do penance before Brahmâ, who blessed him and granted his wish and a daughter was born to him. This daughter was named Tâdakâ. Brahmâ blessed her, giving her the strength of one thousand elephants. Tâdakâ grew up and became a young woman. Suketu gave her in marriage to Sundâ, son of Iharjha. Tâdakâ gave birth to a son called Mârica. When Sundâ was killed, Tâdakâ got wild and went into the hermitage of Agastya causing much havoc there. At this Agastya got angry and cursed her to become a Rakûśa (giantess) and instantly the bodies of Tâdakâ and Mârica were deformed. Tâdakâ could not control her anger and she demolished the hermitage of Agastya. (Vâlmîki Râmâyana, Bâlakândâ).

12) The story of the theft of lotus. Once Bhrigu, Vasiṣṭha and other hermits went on a pilgrimage, with Indra as their leader. On the way they reached Brahmasaras, in the holy place of Kauśkî. Agastya had grown some lotus flowers there. The pilgrims plucked stealthily all the lotus flowers nurtured by Agastya and ate them. The furious Agastya got into the midst of the hermits in search of the culprit. None admitted the theft. Finally he caught hold of Indra, as the thief. Indra said "O, Lord, had it not been for my eagerness to hear discourses on duty from your face, I would not have stolen your lotus flowers." Saying thus Indra returned the lotus flowers. Agastya was pleased and let Indra and the hermits depart in peace. (Mahâbhârata, Anûsasana Parva, Chapter 94).

13) How Agastya burned the Asuras (demons). (This story occurs in the Mahâbhârata as, having been told by the God Vâyu to Bhîṣma as a discourse on the greatness of Agastya, and Bhîṣma reiterating it to Arjuna).

Once the Gods had to accept defeat at the hands of the Asuras (Demons) and they approached Agastya and said thus: Oh, hermit, since we have been defeated by the Asuras, our prosperity is at an end. There is none to help us but you.” Hearing this Agastya became angry and began to burn the Asuras to death, by the merits of his penance. Many of them fell down on the earth and some fell into Pâtâla (the nether world). The asuras who thus fell were not killed by Agastya. Thus the menace of the Asuras in heaven was warded off, and the Gods lived in peace and prosperity. (Mahâbhârata, Anûsasana Parva, Chapter 155, Verses 1 to 13).

14) Indra’s conflict with Agastya. Once Agastya commenced a sacrifice of twelve years’ duration. Many hermits participated in this sacrifice. No sooner had the hermit begun the sacrifice, than Indra, (the God of Thunder and Rain) stopped rain in the world. Crops could not be raised. But Agastya provided everybody who took part in the sacrifice, with sumptuous meals. The hermits wondered how Agastya could do this. Some of the hermits feared that the sacrifice would have to be stopped before the stipulated time, if the drought continued. Agastya told them not to fear, and that if Indra refused to send rain, he himself would become Indra and protect the subjects. Indra was horrified, when he heard this and he began to send rain regularly. (Mahābhārata, Āśvamedhika Parva, Chapter 92).

15) Story of Gajendramoksha (The redemption of an elephant). In the Bhārata a story occurs, as to how Agastya cursed King Indradyumna, and turned him to an elephant. While Indradyumna, the King of Pândya was absorbed in deep meditation on Viṣṇu, Agastya reached the palace. Being immersed in meditation the King failed to notice the arrival of the great hermit, who getting angry with the King, cursed him to become an elephant, for one thousand years. Instantly the King was deformed into a big tusker and quitting the palace it went to a big forest and lived there happily with the she-elephants there. At that time a hermit named Devaḷa was doing penance in that forest. One day Hūhu, a gandharva (a class of semi-gods) enjoying the company of some celestial maids came to the place where Devaḷa had put up his hermitage. The hermit saw the Gandharva and the maids playing and bathing in the pond in front of his hermitage in complete nudity. Getting angry Devaḷa cursed Hūhu and he was deformed into a crocodile. This pond which was in the Trikūṭa Mountain was thus under the suzerainty of the crocodile. The tusker (Indradyumna) entered the pond to drink water. The crocodile caught hold of the leg of the elephant. Each tried to pull the other with equal force. This fight is said to have lasted for a thousand years. When both were tired, godly feelings began to dawn in their minds. Then, riding on an eagle Mahāviṣṇu appeared before them, cut them asunder with his Čākryauḍha (the wheel-weapon) and both were given deliverance. (Bāhagavata, 8th Skandha, Chapter 2).

16) Agastya teaching Śrī Rāma the Āditya-hṛdaya Mantra (A hymn in praise of the Sun). When Śrī Rāma was fighting with Rāvaṇa in Lankā, dejection befell him, his heart being weighed down with faintness, for a little while. Rāvaṇa made the best use of this opportunity and began to advance. The gods had gathered in the sky above to witness the fight. Agastya, at that particular moment, taught Śrī Rāma the Āditya-hṛdaya Mantra, a hymn in praise of the Sun-god and when Śrī Rāma chanted that mantra, he resumed fight with Vigour and Rāvaṇa was defeated and slain. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Sarga 107).

17) How the slant of the earth was rectified by seating Agastya. The matrimonial ceremony of Śrī Parameśvara and Pārvatī was held in the Himālayas. On that auspicious occasion all the living beings of the world were present, and as a result the Himālayan region sank down and the earth slanted to that side. To keep the equilibrium of the earth, Siva sent Agastya to the south. Accordingly Agastya reached Kuttalam, where there was a temple dedicated to the worship of Viṣṇu. Agastya had besmeared his forehead with ashes and so admission to the temple was denied to him, by the devotees there who were Vaiṣṇavites. By his own power Agastya turned himself into a vaiṣṇavite and got into the temple, and immediately the image of Viṣṇu in the temple changed by itself into a Sivalinga (idol representing Siva). Since then the temple at Kuttalam has remained a temple of Siva. Agastya proceeded to the southernmost point of the earth and sat there and because of his weight the earth regained its normal position. (Skanda Purāṇa).

18) Agastya and the Kraunḍa Mountain. When Agastya passed the Vindhya mountain and proceeded to the South a Rākṣasa (giant) called Kraunḍa hindered his way. By his power the Rākṣasas caused to fall everywhere a very heavy rain. Agastya sprinkled a few drops of water from his waterpot on Kraunḍa, who instantly became a mountain. Telling him that he would get deliverance from the curse when the weapon of Subrahmanya struck him, Agastya continued his journey to the South. (Skanda Purāṇa).

19) Agastya and the River Kāverī. Once Sūrapadmā, an Asura (demon) drove the Gods out from heaven. Indra came to Siyāli a place in the district of Tanjāvūr (Tanjore) and began to do penance to please Siva. Rain was completely stopped. Agastya had compressed the river Kāverī and held the water in his waterpot. Gaṇaṇapati having come to know of this, came in the form of a crow and toppled the waterpot. Agastya got angry and ran after the crow, which immediately assumed the form of a boy. Agastya caught hold of him. The boy instantly revealed himself as Subrahmanya and granted Agastya a boon. “Your waterpot will always be full”. Since then there had never been shortage of water in the Kāverī. (Skanda Purāṇa).

20) Agastya in the palace of Bhadrāśa. Once Agastya lived in the palace of Bhadrāśa as his guest for seven days. Agastya praised Kāntimātī the queen on several occasions. The King wanted to know the reason. Agastya said: During her previous birth Kāntimātī was the handmaid of a rich man. On one occasion of dvādaśī (twelfth night after full moon) in the month of Tula (second half of October and first half of November) the rich man had asked his handmaid to see that the lights in a certain temple did not go out and she did so, in consequence of which, during her current birth she has become your queen, bearing the name Kāntimātī. The King and the queen were much pleased at this explanation of Agastya and thenceforward they began to observe dvādaśī as a day of fasting. (Vāyu Purāṇa).

21) Agastya cursing Uruṣā, Jayanta and Nārada. Once Agastya went to the realm of the Gods, as a guest of Indra. On that day a performance of dance by Uruṣā was held in honour of Agastya. In the midst of the dance Uruṣā’s eyes fell on Jayanta and she fell in love with him; her steps went out of beat. Nārada also went wrong slightly in playing on his famous lute called Mahātī. Agastya got angry and cursed Uruṣā, Jayanta and Nārada. According to the curse Jayanta became a bud. Uruṣā was born in the earth as a woman called Mādhavī and ‘Mahātī’ the lute of Nārada became the lute of the people of the earth.
22) Agastya cursing Duspanya. Duspanya was the last son of the King of Pataliputra. The wicked Duspanya had slain a large number of babies, and the King therefore expelled him from the palace. Duspanya went into the forest, where he caught hold of the child of Ugraravas and killed it by putting it under water. Ugraravas cursed him and accordingly he fell into water and died and his spirit became a ghost and wandered about tormented with pain and anguish. At last the spirit approached Agastya, who called his disciple Suriṣṇa and asked him to go and bathe in the Agnītīrtha (a bath) in the Gandhamādana mountain and bring some water from the tīrtha and sprinkle it on the spirit of Duspanya. Suriṣṇa acted accordingly and immediately the spirit of Duspanya received divine figure and entered heaven. (Setu Māhātmya).

23) How Agastya got golden Bangle. Once Agastya entered a forest of about a hundred yojanas wide. The forest was devoid of life. When he had walked a few more steps some Gandharvas (semi-gods) and celestial maids came there singing and dancing. From among them a noble male being came forward to the bank of a lake in the forest and ate without any hesitation, the corpse of a man that was lying there. After that he walked round Agastya and made obeisance to him. Agastya asked him why he had eaten the corpse of a man. The noble man told Agastya thus: "In tretā yuga (the third age) there lived a King named Vidarbha. I am his son and my name is Sveta. After having ruled over my kingdom for a long time, I came to the bank of this lake and began to do penance. After that discarding my body I entered heaven. Though I attained heaven my hunger was not appeased. I asked Brahmā how, I, a dweller of heaven, got this hunger. Brahmā said that when I was King I had given nothing to anybody and so I got this hunger even after entering heaven. As a remedy Brahmā suggested that I should come here everyday and eat corpse and when I had completed ten thousand days the hermit Agastya would come here and that when I offered him a golden bangle my sin would be washed away." Saying thus Sveta offered to Agastya the golden bangle given by Brahmā and then he vanished and the corpse also disappeared. Sveta went to heaven. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

24) Other informations concerning Agastya.

(1) Agastya had a brother called Suriṣṇa. (Agnipurāṇa, Chapter 7).
(2) Suriṣṇa was Agastya's disciple too. (Setu Māhātmya).
(3) Ilvala and Vāṭāpi were the sons of the giantess Ajamukhi. In the valley of a mountain Ajamukhi prayed to Durvāsas for love and thus Ilvala and Vāṭāpi were born from Durvāsas. These two sons demanded that Durvāsas should impart to them all his merits of penance. Getting angry Durvāsas cursed them that they would meet with death at the hands of Agastya. (Skandapurāṇa, Āsura Kāṇḍa).
(4) Agastya had been the priest of the King Khela. (Rgveda, 112th Sūkta).
(5) When Śrī Rāma returned to Ayodhyā, with Sītā from Lālīkā, hermits from various parts visited him, among whom, Dattātreya, Namuci, Pramuci, Śrī Vālmiki, Soma, Kaṇḍu, Agastya and their disciples were from the South. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

(6) Agastya gave Śrī Rāma an arrow, which, when shot at an asura (demon) would pierce his heart, pass on to the other side, fly to the sea and bathe in the sea-water and return to the quiver, it is said. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).
(7) Once Agastya visited the hermitage of Āpastamba. He asked Agastya, who, of Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Siva, was the Supreme deity. Agastya replied: "These three are only three different manifestations of the one supreme Being". (Brahmapurāṇa).
(8) For the story of how Agastya cursed the sons of Manibhadra and transformed them to seven palms, see the word 'Saptasālā'.
(9) There was a hermit called Suriṣṇa, to whom Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa paid a visit when they were wandering in the forest. This Suriṣṇa is the younger brother of Agastya. (See the word Suriṣṇa).
(10) Agastya cursed Śuka and deformed him into a Rāksasa. (See the word Śuka ii).

25) Conclusion. It is believed that the great hermit Agastya, who had performed such wonderful deeds by the merits of his penance, is still doing penance in the Agastya Kūṭa hills. Agastya who had travelled throughout the length and breadth of Bhārata had several hermitages. In the Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakānda, Sarga 11, a description is given, of a beautiful hermitage of Agastya, and the peaceful atmosphere that prevailed in and around it. Agastya had presented to Śrī Rāma a bow got from Viṣṇu, when the brothers visited his hermitage. Agastya had accompanied Śrī Rāma and his followers on his return journey to Ayodhyā from Laṅka, with Sītā after killing Rāvana. There is a legend in the Tamilnāḍ Agastya was a member of the first two ‘Saṅghas’ (groups) of the “three Saṅghas”, mentioned in Tamil literature. As Agastya was dwarfish he is mentioned as Kurumuni, (short hermit) in Tamil works. He has written a Tamil grammar on music, literature and drama. But this work is not available now. The Tamil Grammar ‘Tolkāpyam’, which is considered to be the oldest grammar, was written by Tolkāpyār, one of the twelve disciples of Agastya. Even today in certain temples in the Tamilnāḍ, Agastya-worship is carried on. Kambar, has mentioned about Agastya in his Rāmāyaṇa. A great Tamil author Villiputturan says that the Tamil language is the beautiful maiden presented by Agastya. It is believed that the following works have been composed by Agastya:

1) Agastya Gitā; in the Varāhapurāṇa, Paśupālopāyana.
2) Agastya Śaṅkhitā; in Pańcarātra.
3) Agastya Śaṅkhitā, in the Skandapurāṇa.
4) Śiva Śaṅkhitā, in Bhāskara Śaṅkhitā.
5) Dvāideha-nirṇaya Tantra.

AGASTYA KŪṬA. This is the sacred mount where the sage, Agastya, sat and did penance during his sojourn in the southern parts of India. In the Kṣiṅkhandhā Kāṇḍa of Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa we find King Sugriva commanding that all his soldiers going in search of Sītā should pay homage to the sage Agastya.

AGASTYA PARVATA. This is a mountain in South India believed to belong to the Kēlahāra mountain range. Agastya Kūṭa is in this mountain.

AGASTYA SARAS. This is another name for Agastya tīrtha.
AGASTYA-ĀŚRAMA. The Purāṇas make mention of several āśramas connected with sage Agastya. The Pāṇḍavas during their exile visited an āśrama of this name. This is situated near Pañcāvalī twenty-four miles to the south-east of Nāsik. It is known as Agastya-giri now. (Sloka 20, Chapter 80; and Sloka 1, Chapter 96 of Vana Parva, M.B.). The Mahābhārata mentions another Agastya-Āśrama near Prayāga. Dharmaputra along with Saint Lomaśa stayed here for some time. Vālmiki describes an āśrama of this name which Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa visited during their exile in the forests. (Chapter 11, Aranya Kāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa).

AGASTYA TĪRTHA. This is one of the five tirthas or sacred places of worship lying scattered in the southern ocean. The other four are the following: (1) The Saubhadrā tīrtha (2) The Pauloma tīrtha (3) The Kārandhama tīrtha and (4) the Atiśvāna tīrtha. These five were known as Paṇca tīrthas and many saints used to live there. There lived in each of these tīrthas one huge and fierce crocodile and all the saints living there, afraid of these crocodiles, deserted their places one by one. (Ref : Sloka 3, Chapter 220 of Ādi Parva, M.B. For more details see under Paṇca tīrtha).

AGASTYA VAṬA. This is a sacred shrine in the neighbourhood of the Himālayas. Arjuna paid a visit to this place while he was living with his brothers in the forests during their period of exile. (Sloka 2, Chapter 214 of Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AGATI. A city. Two sons Taksaka and Chhattraketu were born to Lakṣmaṇa (the brother of Śrī Rāma) by his wife Urmilā. The court of the eldest prince Taksaka was situated in the city of Agati. Formerly this place was known as Kanakhalā and was occupied by forest tribes. Exterminating these forest tribes, Lakṣmaṇa built a city there and apportioned it to his eldest son Taksaka. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

AGHA. The name of an asura. This asura was one of the followers of Kaimśa. According to the instructions of Kaimśa, Agha once set out to Gokula to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa. At that time Śrī Kṛṣṇa was playing on the banks of the river Kālindī with other cowherds. Aghāsura watched the games of the children from the sky above. Then he transformed himself into a colossal serpent and lay with his mouth wide open; his open mouth looked like an immense cave. The foul smell coming from his mouth soon spread over the whole place. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the other children did not know anything about this. In the course of their games they walked into the cave-like mouth of Agha and were soon trapped in his belly. Agha then closed his mouth and all the boys including Śrī Kṛṣṇa were now imprisoned inside his body. Some of the boys died. Realizing the situation Śrī Kṛṣṇa now enlarged his body. His body grew larger and larger until at last it burst open the body of the serpent (Agha). Thus Agha was killed. Śrī Kṛṣṇa then restored the dead boys to life by his divine looks (Kātaśa). This Aghāsura was the brother of Bakāsura and Pūtanā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, Chapter 12).

AGHAMARŚAṆA. He was a great hermit of austerity, who had observed the duties pertaining to Vāna-prastha (the third of the four stages of life—forest hermit). (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 244, Stanza 16).

AGHAMARŚAṆA SŪKTA. This is a hymn in the Rgveda. It is said that all sins will be eliminated, if this hymn is recited three times, standing in water.

AGHĀRDDANAVAMI. (See the word NAVAMI VRATA).

AGHĀŚVA. A King hermit (Rājārṣi) named Pedu. (Rgveda, Manḍala 1, Anuvāka 17, Śūkta 116).

AGNI.

1) Genealogy. Agni was descended from Viśu in this order: Viṣṇu-Brahmā-Angīras-Bhrāspati-Agni.

2) Birth. We come across several contradictory statements in the Purāṇas regarding the birth of Agni. There is some real difficulty, therefore, in tracing correctly the true genealogy of Agni. The one given above is based on statements in Bhāgavata and Mahābhārata. Angīras is one of the six mind-born sons of Brahmā.* Angīras married Śraddhā and got four daughters and two sons. Bhrāspati was one of the sons and Utaṭhya was the other. The daughters were Sinivāli, Kuhū, Rākā and Anumāti. (There is a mention of a third son named Saṁvarta in the Bhāgavata by Eluthassan though the original quoted below does not say so) Śraddhā tu aṅgīrāsaḥ patnī
Catasro 'sutakanyakāh
Sīnvāli Kuhū Rākā
Caturtbya 'anumātiṣṭathā
Tatputrāvaparāvāstām
Khyātāu svārocisc'ntare
Utatthya bhagavān sāksāt
Brahmīśḥāca Brhaṣpātiḥ. Bhrāspati married Cāndrāmaṇī and got six divine sons. Of these Saṁyū, the eldest, married Saṭyā and Agni was born to Saṁyū of Saṭyā. (Slokas 1 to 4, Chapter 219, Aranya Kāṇḍa of Malayālam Mahābhārata).

3) Agni—One of the āsta-dik-pālakas. (Āṣṭa = eight, dik = zone, pālaka = guardian). The Devī Bhāgavata states in its eighth chapter that Agni is one of the eight guards posted at the eight different zones to protect the universe. Indra guards the east; Agni, the south-east; Yama the south; Niṛṛti, the south-west; Varuṇa, the west; Vāyu, the north-west; Kubera, the North and Śiva, the north-east. The place where Agni sits on guard is known as tejovātī.

4) Agni—One of the five elements. The universe is believed to be composed of five elements of which Agni is one. The other four are Water, Earth, Ether and Air.

5) The story of how Agni gave a Māyā Sītā (Phantom Sītā) to Śrī Rāma. During their exile in the forests Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were for some time living in an āśrama built on the shores of the ocean. One day Agni disguised as a Brāhmin approached them and said "O, Śrī Rāma, thou art born to kill the demon Rāvaṇa and save the world from his atrocities. Sītā is going to be a cause for that. Time is not far for you to finish this duty of yours. Rāvaṇa is soon to come and kidnap your wife, Sītā. You must, therefore, allow me to play a trick on Rāvaṇa. Entrust Sītā with me and I shall keep her safe. In her place here you can keep a Māyā Sītā (Phantom Sītā) which will be a live replica of your real wife. In the end when you take back Sītā after killing Rāvaṇa you will be compelled to throw your wife into the fire to test her chastity. At that time I will take back the repuca and give you back your real wife'. Sri Rama was very much pleased to hear this. Agni then, by his yogic powers created a Phantom Sitā and gave her to him. Rama kept this as a secret even from Lakṣmaṇa. In the great Rama-Ravaṇa battle Ravaṇa was killed and Śri Rama took back Sitā to his kingdom. Then respecting public opinion and wishing to establish in public the purity of his queen King Śri Rama put her into the fire. At that moment Agni took back the replica and gave back the real Sitā to Śri Rama. Sitā thus came out from the fire unscathed. Later, on the advice of Rama and Agni, the Phantom Sitā went to the sacred place Puṣkara and started doing tapas (penance) there. After doing tapas for a long period of three lakhs of divine years this Phantom Sitā became known as Svargalakṣmī. It was this Svargalakṣmī that later on in the Dvāpara yuga came out from the yajña kunda of King Pāṇcāla as Pāṇcāli and became the consort of the Pāṇḍavas. Vedavati, daughter of Kuśadévaja in Kṛtyyuga, Sitā, daughter of Janaka in the Treta yuga, and Pāṇcāli, daughter of Drupada in Dvāpara yuga are one and the same person. On account of this she is known as trihāyaṇī also. (Chapter 9 of Devī Bhāgavat).

6) The story of how Agni got indigestion. In olden times there was a bold and mighty King called Śvetaki. He conducted several different types of>yajña. Afflicted by the unending dense smoke in the yajña hall all the ascetics left the place and went their way. Undaunted by this, Śvetaki started another twelve-year sacrifice in which not a single sage took part. The sages rebuked him and said if he wanted to conduct a sacrifice again he could invite śūdras to help him. (Śūdras belong to the lowest caste among Hindus and are not allowed to participate in sacrifices generally.) Enraged by this insult Śvetaki went to Kailāsa and did fierce penance. Lord Śiva appeared before him and gave him Durvāsas as a priest for his yajña. For twelve years sage Durvāsas performed the yajña pouring into the mouth of Agni through the sacrificial pit unlimited materials of food. Agni was overfed and he got indigestion. He lost all appetite for food, became weak and the brilliance of his face faded. (Chapter 235, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

7) The story of how Agni burnt the big forest, Khāṇḍava. When the indigestion continued without abate for some time Agni approached Brahmā and asked for a cure. Brahmā declared that his indigestion would be cured if Agni could burn the huge forest, Khāṇḍava, the abode of the enemies of the Devas. Agni immediately started consuming the forest. But the inhabitants of the forest soon quenched the fire. Disappointed Agni went to Brahmā again and the latter advised him to wait for some time till the advent of Nara-Nārāyaṇas to that forest. They would then help Agni to burn the forest. Agni waited for the time to come. At that time the Pāṇḍavas were living in Indraprastha with Śri Kṛṣṇa. When the heat became unbearable there Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa came to the banks of river Yamunā. Hearing about the arrival of Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna who were none but the incarnations of Nārāyaṇa and Nara, Agni disguised as a brahmin approached them and requested them to help him to burn the Khāṇḍava forest. Agni added that any attempt of his to burn the forest was always foiled by Indra who would send a heavy downpour of rain to quench the fire because Takṣaka, an intimate friend of Indra, was living there. To gain his end Agni gave Arjuna an arrow-case which would never be empty, a chariot bearing a monkey flag, four white horses adorned with gold chains and also the famous Gāndiva bow. To Śri Kṛṣṇa he gave the cakrāyudha or the divine wheel-weapon. (All these military equipments were once given to Agni by Varuṇa.) When all these were given to them Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna got ready to help Agni to burn the forest. Agni started burning the forest, Indra at once sent a heavy downpour of rain and Arjuna created a canopy of arrows above the forest preventing the rains from falling on the forest. Agni carried on his work undisturbed, the forest was burnt and Agni was cured of his indigestion. (Ślokas 233 to 239, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

8) Agni falls in love. As an inaugural procedure to the great Rājasūya which Dharmaputra performed at Indraprastha his four brothers Bhīma, Arjuna, Nakula and Sahadeva conducted a victory march to the four different sides of the kingdom. Sahadeva who turned south conquered many kings including Dantavakra and Bhiṣmaka and reached a country called Māhiṣmatipura. There he had to encounter a powerful king called Nila. Before long there broke a fire in his camp. Disheartened, Sahadeva prayed to the God, Agni, for help. It was then that Sahadeva came to know about the ties between Agni and Nila. King Nila had a beautiful daughter named Sudarśanā. Once when she was talking to her father after having entered the Agni-hotra Agni fell in love with her. From that day onwards Agni became dreamy about the beautiful lips of Sudarśanā. It reached a stage when Agni would burn only if it was blown by the lips of Sudarśanā. This ended in Agni marrying Sudarśanā. After the marriage Agni lived in the palace of his father-in-law, King Nila, as a useful ally. It was at this time that Sahadeva came to conquer Nila. But Agni knew that for the proper conduct of the Rājasūya of Dharmaputra his father-in-law had to surrender to Sahadeva and so advised his father-in-law to do so. What appeared to be a difficult problem was thus easily solved. (Chapter 31, Saṅhā Parva, M.B.).

9) How Emperor Śibi was tested by agni. Once Agni and Indra thought of testing how strong and deep was the sense of charity in Emperor Śibi. Indra took the shape of a hawk and Agni that of a dove and the dove flew and dropped down into the lap of the Emperor who was at that time doing a yāga. The hungry hawk came chasing its prey and finding the dove in the lap of the Emperor said: “O King, is it proper on your part to withhold my food from me, and keep it in your lap?” Hearing this Śibi replied: “This dove has sought refuge in me. It is my duty to give it protection. If it is only food you want I shall give you food.” Śibi then offered many things including his kingdom to the hawk in return for the dove. But the hawk refused them all and finally agreed to accept an equal weight of flesh from the body of the Emperor. Śibi without any hesitation cut a portion of his thigh and weighed it against the dove in a scale. The dove weighed more and the Emperor started putting more and more flesh from his body to make the weight equal. But the dove always weighed more and at last the Emperor said he would weigh himself against the dove. As the weak and fleshless Emperor was about to get into the pan of the scale Agni and Indra emerged from the bodies of the dove and hawk and appeared before the Emperor. They blessed him and immediately took him to heaven. (Chapter 131, Vana Parva, M.B.).

10) Agni and the tisticles of a goat. The occasion is when sage Viśvāmitra is taking Rāma and Lakṣmāna to the forests to give protection to the sages against the demons. They reached the place where Ahālyā lay as a stone cursed by Gautama. Viśvāmitra told them the story: “It was here that the great sage, Gautama, lived with his beautiful consort, Ahālyā. Once Indra had an intercourse with her privately and Gautama coming to know of the misdeed cursed her and turned her into stone. By the curse of the same sage Indra lost his testicles. Greatly aggrieved by this loss Indra prayed to god Agni for help and on the advice of Agni the devas removed the deformity by placing a goat’s testicles instead.” (Slokas 48 & 49, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

11) How sage Bhṛgu cursed Agni. Sage Bhṛgu was living with his wife Pulomā in his āśrama. Pulomā became pregnant. One day when Bhṛgu wanted to go out for a bath in the river he asked Agni to keep a watch over his pregnant wife. There was a demon by name Puloma who was once in love with Pulomā. On this particular day Puloma entered the āśrama to see his former love. When he entered the āśrama Puloma saw Agni there burning with a brilliant flame in the fire-pit. Puloma said: “O God of fire, if I ask you a question must give me an impartial reply. I was in love with this Pulomā and I had accepted her as my wife spiritually. But, then, her father gave her to Bhṛgu. Who, then, is the true owner of Pulomā?” Agni was afraid of Bhṛgu. Yet he explained the position honestly. “It is true that Pulomā has married Bhṛgu. But he has not married her according to Hindu rites.” Hearing this the demon changed himself into the shape of a swine and carried away Pulomā. On the way Pulomā delivered a male babe and it fell on the ground. The boy was named Cyavana. It was this boy that became later on the famous Cyavana Mahārṣi. Even at birth the boy was brilliant as the Sun to look at and Pulomā, the demon, noticing the unusual brilliance of the child left the mother and child on the way and fled frightened. Pulomā returned to the āśrama carrying the child weeping profusely all the way and creating a lanchrymal river called Vadhūsaras. As soon as she entered the āśrama the angry sage asked “Who told Puloma that you are my wife?” Pulomā then told her husband all that happened there and Bhṛgu called Agni and cursed him thus: “May you be a consumer of all things on this Earth”. Greatly aggrieved Agni went away and hid himself. The absence of Agni created chaos in all the three worlds; Heaven, Earth and the Nether-world. A deputation of all the afflicted people waited upon Brahmā and Brahmā modified the curse and declared that all that Agni touched would become pure. Agni was consoled and he started his work as usual.

12) How Agni cursed frogs, birds and elephants. Many important events took place while Agni was underground cursed by Bhṛgu. It was during that time that Pārvatī cursed all the Devas and the Devas were defeated by the asuras (demons). The necessity of a warrior capable of defeating the asuras arose then. The idea of creating Lord Subrahmanya came up and Brahmā said that only Agni could help them in this matter since Agni was the only one who escaped from the curse of Pārvatī, being underground at the time of the curse. The Devas started a vigilant search but Agni was not to be found. Agni was then hiding inside the ocean. The ocean was getting hot and the animals living there found their life unbearable. Frogs went to the devas and told them where Agni was hiding. Enraged at this Agni cursed the frogs saying that they would never be able to find the taste of anything. Frogs went weeping to the devas who in turn blessed the frogs saying that they would acquire the ability to move about easily in any darkness. Agni changed his place of hiding and went and hid in a big banyan tree. An elephant going by that way found him out and informed the devas; knowing this Agni cursed the elephants saying that its tongue would go deep inside. But the devas blessed the elephants saying that the position of the tongue would never be a hindrance to free eating and that elephants would be able to eat anything and everything. Agni left the banyan tree and hid himself in the hollow of a Saṁi tree. A little bird living in that tree gave information to the devas and the devas found him out before he got time to leave the place. Agni cursed the bird saying that its tongue would always be curved inside and the devas blessed it saying that the curvature would help it to sing beautiful songs. Since Agni was found out from Saṁi tree this tree became sacred. Since this finding out of Agni after a long absence is like a re-birth of Agni the Purāṇa mention that Agni was born from the Saṁi tree. The Devas then requested Agni to help them to create a son capable of conquering the demons.* (Chapter 85, Anuśasana Parva, M.B.).

13) Birth of Subrahmanya. At that time Varuṇa performed a yāga. All the dīkṣālakas (zone guardians of the universe) including Śiva participated in the yāga. Seeing the beautiful wives of the sages Śiva had emission. Taking the semen in his hand he put it into the fire. Agni carried it to Gaṅgā and requested her to take it for conception. Though she at first refused she took it, became pregnant and finally delivered a male child whom she threw into the forest Śaravaṇa. It was this child who became known as Kārttikeya or Subrahmanya later on. (Chapter 85, Anuśasana Parva, M.B.).

14) How Agni blessed Nala. While Nala was going to the wedding of Damayantī Indra, Agni, Varuṇa and Kāla accosted him on his way and asked him to go as a messenger of theirs and advise Damayantī to marry one of them. Nala did so but Damayanti was adamant and said she would marry none other than Nala. So all the four gods appeared as Nala in the wedding hall. Damayanti who was confused prayed that she should be shown the real Nala. The gods then changed into their original forms and blessed Nala. Agni said he would come and help him the moment he wanted him. Thus Nala became a good cook and Nala Pâçekân (Pâçekân = cooking) became famous. Even now it is a synonym for good cooking. (Chapter 57, Vana Parva, M.B.)

*Kathāsārītāgara gives another version of why Agni went and hid himself under the ocean. When Kāma, the God of Love, was burnt to death by Śiva, Parvati, Śiva’s wife, did not find a way to get a child from her for her husband. At last Brahmā approached Śiva and told him that the absence of Kāma was making creation difficult. Śiva then declared that thereafter Kāma would find a place in the minds of all living beings included himself, Parvati and Śiva immediately commenced a sexual life which went on incessantly for a hundred years without reaching the climax. The world was agitated and the universe stood on the verge of ruin. The Devas decided to send Agni to intervene. But Agni was afraid of Śiva and so went and hid himself under the ocean. (Chapter 6, Lāvāṇaśakilambaka of Kathāsārītāgara).

15) Agni and Râmbhâ. There was once a dânava called Dânu. He had two sons named Râmbhâ and Karambha. They had no children and tormented by this they went to Pâçekândâ and started doing penance. Râmbhâ sat in the centre of Pâçekâgî (five fires) and Karambha in water to do penance. Indra afraid of the severe and powerful tapas of the two took the form of a crocodile and killed Karambha who was doing penance in water by dragging him down to the water. Bereaved Râmbhâ started to commit suicide by jumping into the fire. God Agni appeared before him and asked him what he wanted. Râmbhâ then said that he should get a son who would be famous as a warrior in all the three worlds. Agni agreed. Râmbhâ on his way back saw a voluptuous she-buffalo and married her at yaksâ kavâgī. They lived a happy married life and one day a he-buffalo envious of their life attacked Râmbhâ and killed him. Grief-stricken Râmbhâ’s wife jumped into the funeral pyre and committed suicide. Then from the fire arose a demon named Mahîśasûra (Mahîśa = Buffalo. Asura = Demon). This buffalo-demon became a terror to all in the three worlds later on. (Chapter 3, Devi Bhágavata).

16) Difference of opinion between Agni and Aîgiras. Bhaga-vân Aîgiras did penance in his own âsrama and became more brilliant than Agni. The whole world was submerged in his brilliance. Agni felt a bit depressed at this. Agni argued that it was not proper on the part of Brahman to give anybody else more brilliance than himself. So as a protest against this Agni disappeared from the world. Even Aîgiras was annoyed at Agni’s disappearance and so he went and consolated Agni and took him to Brahman. Brahman declared that henceforth the world would recognize Agni as the father and Aîgiras as his son. Thus Agni got the first place in effulgence. This is a story told by sage Mârkaṇḍeya to Dharmaputra. (Chapter 217, Vana Parva, M.B.).

17) Agni and Mahâbali. On their way to the forest sage Vîśvâmitra took Râma and Lakshmana to Siddhâśrama. The sage explained to the princes the importance of that âsrama. He said: “Mahâvisnpu lived in this âsrama for a number of years. It was at that time that the Emperor of the asuras (demons), Mahâbali, son of Viśvana, was ruling the world conquering even the devas. After having conquered all the three worlds Mahâbali decided to conduct a âyâga. A deputation of the devas headed by Agni then waited upon Mahâvisnpu and Agni said: “O Lord, Mahâbali has commenced a âyâga and before it is finished you should go to him and do something for the benefit of the devas”. It was at this request of Agni that Mahâvisnpu took the form of Vâmana and sent Mahâbali to the nether-world. (Chapter 29, Bâlakânda, Vâlmiki Râmâyana).

18) Agni and Nahusa. Repenting for his act of killing Vrtra Indra unknown to anybody went and hid in a lotus in the Mânasa Saras (Lake Mânasa). Perplexed by the disappearance of their leader the devas brought Nahusa from the Earth and made him their leader. Nahusa became very proud and arrogant of his new position and tried to make Indrâni his wife. Indrâni went to Bhhaspati for help. Bhhaspati commanded Agni to go and find out Indra. Agni searched for him in forests, rivers and oceans. At last he went to Mânasa Saras and searched among the lotuses. There he found Indra hiding in a lotus and Bhhaspati was duly informed. Then Bhhaspati gave Indrâni some clever directions to kill Nahusa and Nahusa was killed. (See Agastya). There is a story in Sânti Parva, Chapter 28, of how Agni took for himself a quarter of the sin which Indra acquired because of his killing Vrtra, a brahmin by birth. (Chapter 14, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

19) Agni Deva and Kàrtttvairyarjuna. After the great Kuruksetra battle the Pâdavas went again to Kuruksetra along with Śrî Kṛṣṇa. On their way Kṛṣṇa showed them the Parasûrâmanahradas and narrated to them several stories of Râma. Reference to Agni comes when Kṛṣṇa explains the reason why Parasûrama cut off the thousand hands of Kàrtttvairyarjuna. It was at the time when Kàrtttvairyarjuna was ruling the three worlds by his might that Agni went and asked for alms from him. Kàrtttvairy gave Agni mountains and forests for his food which Agni burnt and ate. In one of the forests was the âśrama of sage Āpava and that also was burnt. Enraged at this the sage cursed Kàrtttvairy saying that his thousand hands would be cut off by Parasûrama. Though the curse was not seriously minded by the King then, it so happened that before long Kàrtttvairy had to encounter Parasûrama in a battle when the children of the King stole a sacrificial cow belonging to Jamadagni, father of Parasûrama. In the battle all the thousand hands of Kàrtttvairyarjuna were cut off by Parasûrama. (Chapter 43, Sânti Parva, M.B.).

20) How Agni was duped. Once the wives of the Sapta-rûpas (seven Saints) attended a yâga where Agni was also present. Agni fell in love with them but knowing it to be futile to make any attempt to fulfil his desire he went to the forests dejected. Śvâhâdevi, daughter of Daksâ was for a long time craving to marry Agni and she decided to take advantage of the opportunity thus offered. Disguising herself as the wife of Aîgiras, one of the seven saints, she approached Agni and said: “O lord, I am Śvâ, wife of Aîgiras. We were all excited when you darted cupid’s arrows against us and they have now selected me to come to you for fulfilling your desire”. Agni believed her and took her as his consort. (Chapters 223 to 227 of Vana Parva, M.B.).

21) How Agni became a doctor. There was once a sage called Dattâtreya who had a son called Nimi. Nimi had a son and he died after thousand years. The bereaved sage performed a śrâddha which was attended by all devas. The feast was so sumptuous that the devas got indigestion after that. Consulting Brahman Agni prescribed a remedy for their indigestion. He said: “whenever you take any food make me also a participant in that. If you do so you will never get indigestion”. That is why a very small portion of any cooked food is first thrown into the fire before given for eating. This story is part of Bhishma's oration to Dharmaputra on the origin of Sراد� (The ceremony conducted on the anniversary of the death of a person by his son). (Chapter 92, Anusâsana Parva, M.B.).

22) How Agni became a horse. There was once a preceptor named Āvēda. He got a disciple named Uttāṅga. One day Āvēda left his āśrama for a distant place leaving his disciple in charge of the management of the āśrama. The preceptor was absent for a long time and his wife started making love to Uttāṅga. The dutiful disciple strongly objected to this. When Uttāṅga completed his course of study under Āvēda he enquired what he should give to his preceptor. The preceptor directed him to his wife. The wife who bore a grudge against Uttāṅga resolved to tease him and said that she should go to King Pauṣya and beg of him the earrings worn by his wife. Uttāṅga started immediately and getting the earrings was coming back when on the way Taksāka wrested the ornament from him and went and hid in the nether-world. Uttāṅga followed Taksāka and there Agni in the form of a horse appeared before him and asked Uttāṅga what he wanted. He replied that he wanted to subdue all the serpents in the nether-world. Agni then advised him to blow thrice the nostrils of the horse. As he did so flames burst forth from all the openings of the horse making the nether-world hot and smoky. Taksāka was frightened and he at once gave back the earrings to Uttāṅga. Uttāṅga was again worried for he had very little time to carry the earrings to the preceptor in time. Here again Agni helped him by carrying him swiftly on his back to the āśrama. When the preceptor and his wife found that Uttāṅga had carried out their wish they blessed him. (Chapter 3, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

23) Agni becomes a messenger. Once there arose a misunderstanding between Bhṛṣapati and Sāivārttaka, sons of Aṅgiras. Bhṛṣapati went to devaloka as priest while the other remained in the world as a mad saint. At that time a King called Marutta invited Bhṛṣapati to officiate as priest for a yajña of his. But Bhṛṣapati refused to accept it. Nārada saw Marutta in despair and told him thus: "You go to Kāśi (Benares) and there at Puradvāra place a dead body and wait there. Sāivārttaka, Bhṛṣapati's brother will come and repro- mend you. Without minding his scoldings follow him and request him to become the chief priest for your yajña. He will then ask you who advised you to do like this. Tell him that Nārada did so and if he asks where he could find Nārada do tell him that Nārada is hiding inside Agni". Hearing this Marutta went to Kāśi and did all as directed. Sāivārttaka agreed to become the priest but wanted Marutta to bring some gold from Kaśā which before that. Marutta brought that also and the yajña started. Bhṛṣapati when he came to know of all these developments became sorry for his refusal first and decided to become the priest of Marutta for his yajña. It was Agni who carried this message of consent to King Marutta. Thus Marutta's yajña was performed in a grand way. (Chapter 9, Aśvamedha Parva, M.B.).

24) Agni takes back the Gāndiva. At the time of Khaṇḍava dāhāna (burning of Khaṇḍava forest) Agni gave Arjuna the famous Gāndiva bow which Varuṇa had given him. After the great Mahābhārata battle Agni took back this bow from Arjuna. The Pāṇḍavas at the fag end of their life started on a pilgrimage to the south with their consort Pāñcāli. Marching along slowly they reached the shores of Aruṇa Samudra (Aruṇa Ocean). Arjuna had with him then the Gāndiva and also the arrow-case which never becomes empty. When they reached the shores of the ocean Agni blocked their way standing before them in the form of a huge mountain and said, "O Arjuna I am god Agni. It was I who gave this famous Gāndiva bow to you. The bow belongs to Varuṇa. So please throw it into the ocean and proceed on your way". On hearing this Arjuna threw both the bow and the arrow-case into the ocean and continued the march. (Slokas 33 to 43, Chapter 1, Mahāprābhānīka Parva, M.B.).

25) Additional information about Agni, the God of fire.
1) Svāhādevi, wife of Agni, gave birth to three sons, named Dākṣiṇān, Gārhaṇapāyam and Āhavanīyam. (Chapter 9, Devī Bhāgavata).
2) Agni, the God of fire, got three sons by his wife Svāhādevi named Pāvaka, Pavanāma and Suci. These three sons had all together forty-five sons. These forty-five grandsons, three sons and Agni himself constitute the fortynine Fires mentioned in the purāṇas (Aṅgiras).
3) Nila, the monkey, is born of Agni. (Sarga 41, Chapter Kiśkindhā, Rāmāyana).
4) Dhṛṣṭadyumna, the great archer, was born of Agni. (Sloka 126, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva, M.B.).
5) Subrahmanya was born as the son of Agni. (Chapter 225, Vana Parva, M.B.).
6) Agni, the God of fire, loved all prajāpatis like his sons. (Chapter 65, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).
7) The sage, Birgu, was born from Agni. (Sloka 8, Chapter 5, Ādi Parva, M.B.).
8) All Devatās are Agni himself. (Sloka 109, Chapter 85, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).
9) God Agni loved God Skanda more than anybody else. (Chapter 226, Vana Parva, M.B.).
10) At the time when Śrī Rāma after killing Rāvaṇa was putting Sītā to a purity test by throwing her into the fire, Agni witnessed that Sītā had done no wrong and was pure and chaste as before. (Sloka 28, Chapter 201, Vana Parva, M.B.).

11) In the beginning Brahmā created the universe. There was no death then and the Earth became over-crowed. Brahmā got worried and he sent fire from his body to burn all beings. The world was on the verge of extinction when Lord Śiva intervened and requested Brahmā to withdraw Agni and create the god of Death. (Chapter 52, Droṇa Parva. M.B.).

12) Agni is one of the Aṣṭa Vasūs which are eight in number. The others are: Āpa, Dhruva, Soma, Dharma, Anila, Pratyuṣa and Prabhāṣa. (Chapter 15, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

13) Śuci, son of Agni, born of Svāhādevi is Badāvagni himself. (Chapter 20, Agni Purāṇa).

14) The God, Agni, uses a spear as his weapon and the vehicle he uses is a goat. (Chapter 51, Agni Purāṇa).

15) The sage, Agastya, converted the Viṣṇu idol at the Kuttalam temple into one of Śiva and when people around started an agitation Agastya sent forth flames of fire through his eyes. (Asura Kanda of Skanda Purāṇa).

16) Agni was born to Purūravas as a son named Jātavedas. (Chapter 14, Navama Skandha of Bhāgavata).
17) The Devas wanted help to clean their hands when oblated materials stuck to their hands and Agni created from water three sons named Ekata, Dvita and Trita for this purpose. Of these Trita fell into a well while drawing water. Seeing him fall the demons closed the well but Trita broke the top and came out. (Sūktā 92, Anuvāka 10, Mandala 1 of Rgveda).

18) Once the earth looked like heaven because of the immemorial celestial beings that came to earth in search of Agni. (Sūktā 63, Anuvāka 12, Mandala 1 of Rgveda).

19) The Sun hands over his effulgence to Agni in the evening and takes it back from him in the morning. (A fact from Śruti—Sūktā 71, Anuvāka 12, Mandala 1 of Rgveda).

20) For making fire for the sacrificial ceremony the sages use two Apra sticks (These are two pieces of wood, one upper and another lower, and fire is produced by attrition). It is believed that the sages get the strength to produce fire from it through Vyāna, one of the forms of Vāyu (air). So Rgveda describes Agni as the son of Vyān. (Sūktā 112, Anuvāka 16, Mandala 1).

21) In the times of the Rgveda Agni was worshipped as a God. (Sūktā 1, Anuvāka 1, Mandala 1, Rgveda).

22) Lord Śiva entered into an elaborate and long conjugal play for creating Subrahmanya. Hundred years went by and still the preliminaries never ended. The universe was on the verge of a collapse and so the devas decided to send Agni to put a stop to this libidinal play of Śiva. But Agni was afraid of Śiva and therefore abscended and hid himself in the ocean. The ocean became hot and the water-animals unable to bear the increasing heat went and informed the devas of Agni’s hiding place. Agni cursed them all saying that all of them would go dumb. He then went to the Mandara mountain in the shape of an owl and hid there. But the devas went there also and picked him up. Agni then by his terrible heat stimulated Śiva into action. Śiva threw his semen into Agni and Agni poured it into Gaṅgā and Gaṅgā delivered a child which later on became Subrahmanya. (Taraṅga 6, Lāvānakalambaka of Kathāsaritsāgara).

26) Conclusion. Agni stands next to Indra in importance in the Vedas. Because Agni was indispensable for yāgas the care of Agni became very important. According to the Rgveda the birth of Agni is different. Born of the clouds Agni reaches the earth as lightning. Then Agni forakes its form and becomes invisible. It was Mātariśvā who gave form to Agni and gave him to the Bhṛgu family. From that day onwards it became possible to produce fire and the Rgveda describes how Agni is produced by sages by the use of Apra sticks. The main job of Agni is to receive the oblations from devas when they conduct yāgas.

27) Synonyms of Agni.

AGNIHOTRA (M).

This is a sacrifice offered to Agni-deva. This has two parts, nitya and Kāmya.

The synonyms:

This is an under the word of a sacrifice place near Gautamavana. (See Slokā 146, Chapter 84, Vana Parva, M.B.).

AGNIDHRA (AGNIHOTRA).

2. Birth. Priyavrata, son of Vivasvatamanu, married Barhiṃṣati, daughter of Viṣvakarmā. Agnīdhra was one of their ten sons. The other nine sons were: Idhmaiṇvā, Yajñabhu, Mahāvira, Hīryanaretas, Gṛṭa-prṣṭā, Sava, Medātithī, Viṭihotra and Kāvi. A daughter also was born to Priyavrata and Barhiṃṣati named Uṛjaśvāti. Sukra married her and Devayānī was their daughter.

3. Married life. Agnīdhra married a nymph named Pūrvacitti. They had nine children: Nābhi, Kınıpurasu, Hari, Hāvarta, Ramyaka, Hāpraś Trayyakura, Kur, Bhadrāśa, and Ketumālā. It was from this Kuru that the Kuru Vaiśāya began.

4) Other incidents. (1) Agnīdhra ruled over Jambudvīpa for a long time. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skanda 8).

(2) While he was the ruler of Jambudvīpa Agnīdhra once went into a cave and did hard taps there without eating any food. Brahmā then sent a beautiful nymph (Apsara maiden) to him to tempt him and thwart his taps. Agnīdhra fell a victim to the temptation. His penance was shaken by that nymph named Vipracitti. He married her. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 5, Chapter 2).
AGNIKETU. A demon (Râksasa) who was a close friend and supporter of Râvana. Râma killed him in the course of his battle with Râvana.

AGNIKUMARA. An epithet of Lord Sûravana.

AGNILOKA. One of the devolakas situated on the summit of Mount Mahâmeru. There are a few other devolakas on the same mountain. They are: Indraloka, Vaumaloka, Svayaloka or Kaïlasa, Satyaloka and Vaikuntha. (Devi Bhâgavata).

AGNI MUN. Name of one Agni.

AGNI MUNA. The hero of Kâlidâsa’s play, Mâlavikâgnimitra. He was a King of the Sûga dynasty and the son of Pûryâmitra. Kâlidâsa’s play deals with the marriage of Mâlavîka and Agni Muna.

AGNI MUNIKA. An Asura. He was descended from Vişnu in this order: Vișnu - Brahma - Marici - Kaśyapa - Sûrapanâma - Agnîmukha.

2. Birth. Sûrapanâma married Maya’s daughter and Agnîmukha was born as their son. In the battle between the devas and asuras, the latter were defeated and one of them sought shelter in Pûtâla (the lower world). Kaśyapa married his daughter, Surâs. They had six children; they were: Sûrapanâma, Sûnîkka, Sûnâmakka, Târâkâsura, Gomukha, and Âjîmukha. Sûrapanâma married Maya’s daughter, Agnîmukha was one of their four sons, the other three being Bhûngopa, Vajrânâtha and Hîra. (Skanda Purâna, Âsuras, Kaśmîra). In the Skanda Purâna there is a vivid description of the valiant way in which Agnîmukha fought in the battle between the devas and asuras.

AGNIPA. Son of a Brahmin named Vedanidhi. Once five gandharva maidens named Pramodî, Sûnâ, Susvâra, Sutâra and Candrikâ fell in love with him and requested him to marry them. Being a strict Brahmacrin Agnîpa was offended by this request and so he cursed them and turned them into frogs. Vedanidhi pitied them and sought the advice of sage Lomasha as to how those unfortunate maids could be redeemed from the curse. According to Lomasha’s advice the five maidens bathed in the holy lake of Prayâgapatirâ and regained their original limbs. Then obeying the instructions of sage Lomasha Agnîpa married all these five gandharva maidens. (Chapters 128 and 129, Uuttaikhandâ, Padma Purâna).

AGNIPRAVEŞA (M). Entering fire. In the Yudbhâ-Kandâ of the Râmâyana, Valmiki has described Sîta’s entering and standing in fire (Agnipravesa) as a test of her purity. Though Râma recovered Sîta from Râvana, he wanted to accept her as his wife only after her purity had been tested and proved. So he decided to test her by fire (Agniparikshana). Sîta shed tears at the thought that her husband doubted her chastity. Laksmana, at Râma’s bidding, made a pyre. Sîta jumped into it after praying to the gods. She remained unscorched by the fire and Râma gladly received her once more as his wife.

AGNIPURA (M). A sacred place (Punya tirtha) in Indore on the banks of the river Narmada. Many scholars identify this with the place Mahesâvaram. (Sloka 43, Chapter 15, Anusasana Parva, M.B.).

AGNIPURA (S). A deity born of the union of two devas, Agnîdeva and Somadeva. He is one of the devas who receive the havis (oblations) poured into the sacrificial fire in a homa.

AGNIŚOMA (S). Agni and Soma. Agni had two sons by his third wife Bhûmi (also called Niśa). They were deva to many sages, devas and Sage Vasiṣṭha. It is a vast comprehensive work dealing with every subject of importance. To give a copy of this book to a good Brahmin on the Full Moon day in the month of Marga Sîra is supposed to be a highly virtuous and meritorious deed.

2) Contents. This large Purâna consists of about 420 chapters. It deals in detail with the following subjects: The Daśavatâras of Mahâvisuṇa; Râmâyana; Mahâbhârata; rules and injunctions relating to the worship of various gods (devapujavidhi); installation of idols in temples (devatâpratishṭha); Sāmanavatras; astrology; architecture and sculpture; Ayurveda; Viṣṇavâdyâ (treatment of poisons from snakes etc.); the principles of the drama (Nâtaka) and other allied arts; figures of speech and all alankaras in general; and physiology of the human body. All these subjects are treated in a detailed and scientific manner.

AGNIŚOMA (S). A King of the Solar dynasty (Sâryavâna).

AGNIŚOMA (S). A King of the Solar dynasty (Sâryavâna).

AGNIŚARMA. (See the word Vidyuddhota).

AGNISIKHA. Father of Vararuci. He is also known by the name Somadatta. (Kathasarîtsagara-Kathapeshthahambaka-Tarâpa I. See also the word GunaVARA).

AGNIŚIRATIRTHA. A holy place on the plains of the river, Vaman. Arjuna’s brother, Shâdeva, performed a yâga at this place. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 90).

AGNIŚOMA. A deity born of the union of two devas, Agniśeta and Somadeva. He is one of the devas who receive the havis (oblations) poured into the sacrificial fire in a homa.

AGNIŚOMA (S). Agni and Soma. Agni had two sons by his third wife Bhûmi (also called Niśa). They were
AGNIŚAUCA(M)

Agni and Soma. These two sons were collectively called Agnisomas.

AGNIŚAUCA(M). A cloak with magical properties given to Nala by the serpent, Kārkoṭaka. After separating himself from Damayanti, Nala was wandering in the forest. Then he was bitten by the poisonous serpent, Kārkoṭaka. This deformed Nala beyond recognition. Then the serpent gave him this shawl (Agniśauca). Anybody who wore that cloak would regain his original form and colour. (Kathāsaritāgāra-Aaḵārāravitā-lambaka-Tarāṅga) 6).

AGNIŚTALI. (See the word PURŪRAVAS).

AGNIŚTHAMBHĀ(M) A mantra that will reduce the burning power of Agni.

AGNIŚTOMA. (See AGNIŚṬU).

AGNIŚṬU. (AGNIŚTOMA).

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in this order:—Viṣṇu-Svāyambhumānu - Uttānapāda-Dhruva-Sṛṣṭi-Kripu-Cakṣuṣamanu-Agniśṭu.

2) Birth. Ten good sons were born to Manu by his wife, Nādvalā and Agniśṭu was one of them. The other nine sons were: Īru, Piṇḍu, Śatadumna, Taṁpaśī, Satyavāk, Kavi, Ātriśū, Śudhyumna and Atrimanyu. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

AGNIŚVATTĀ. One of the seven Pītrs. The other six Pītrs are: Vairāja, Gārhapatyā, Somaṁp, Ekaśrīga, Āturveda and Kāla. (M.B., Sābhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verses 44, 45 and 46).

AGNIVESA. A Sage. He was the preceptor of Draup and Droopada. It is believed that he learned archery and the military arts from Sage Agastya. Droop had the greatest respect for this guru, Agnivesa. He was a master in the use of all weapons. There are references to this in Chapter 139, Ādi Parva of the Mahābhārata.

AGRAHA. The name of an Agni, a son of the Agni named Bhum. Bhum married Suprajā, daughter of the sun and Agrah. Agra was one of the six children born to them. In the Āturmāsikāyāja Agra receives eight kinds of havis (Oblations). (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 221).

AGRANJU. The name of an Agni. He was the fifth son of the Agni named Bhum and his wife, Niśādevi. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Ślokas 15 to 22).

AGRASANDHANI. The name of the book which Yama (the God of Death—Kāla) keeps in which all the virtuous and sinful actions of men are recorded.

AGRAYANTI. One of the hundred sons of Dītarāṣtra. He is also known by the name, Antiyāyī. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 116, Verse 11).

AHA I. One of the aṣṭavānas. His father was Dharma and mother, Ratidevi. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Ślokas 17 to 20, Chapter 66).

AHA II (AHAH). A sacred pond. If one bathes in it he will go to the land of the Sun. (M.B., Vana Parva, Śloka 109, Chapter 93).

AHA III. One born of the dynasty of demons (asura-vanśa). (See under Heti, the genealogy chart of the demon dynasty).

AHARA. A son born of Danu to Kaśyapa. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Śloka 29, Chapter 65).

AHALYĀ. Turned into stone by the curse of her husband, Gautama. Ahalīyā was a princess of the Pṛīt dynasty.

2) How Ahalīyā got a curse and became a stone. The story of how Ahalīyā was cursed by her husband, Gautama, and was turned into a stone is told in different versions in different purāṇas. The following is the version in the Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa. When Viśvāmitra was taking back Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa from the forest to the palace of Janaka they came across an āśrama on their way. Giving details of that āśrama Viśvāmitra told the princes thus: “This is the āśrama where the sage, Gautama, was living with his wife, Ahalīyā. Indra fell in love with the beautiful Ahalīyā and while the sage was out for bathing Indra entered the āśrama in the disguise of the sage himself and took bed with her. But when Indra could not get out Gautama himself came to the āśrama and enraged at what he saw, cursed them both. Indra was to lose his testicles and Ahalīyā was to turn into a stone. But taking pity on her the sage declared that she would take her original form the moment Rāma of tretā yuga came to that place and touched the stone by his foot. Testicle-less Indra went to deva-loka and there his friends feeling sorry for him, substituted a goat’s testicle and got him to normal.” While Viśvāmitra was talking to the princes, Śrī Rāma’s foot touched the stone and Ahalīyā stood up in all beauty. Ahalīyā and Gautama lived in the same āśrama again for another long period.

In Kathāsaritāgāra this story is told in a slightly different yet more interesting way. As soon as Gautama entered the āśrama Indra turned himself into a cat. Angrily the sage questioned Ahalīyā, “who was standing here when I came in?” Ahalīyā replied, “Eho śīlo katu mahājāra!” (Esha sthitam katu mājujarah). It was a cat which was standing there. Here Ahalīyā used a pun on the word ‘majujarah’ and tried to be honest. ‘Mahājara’ is the Prakrit form of the word ‘mājujarah’ which means cat. But ‘mājujarah’ has another meaning also, (ma = mine jāra = lover i.e. mājujarah = my lover). So Ahalīyā did not lie to her husband. (Kathāsaritāgāra, Lāvāpakaḷaṁbaka).

3) How Ahalīyā happened to bring up the mighty monkey, Bāli and Sugrivā. Once Aruṇa, the charioter of Sūrya, (the Sun) went to deva-loka to see the dance of the celestial maidens there. Since there was no admission to the dance for men Aruṇa disguised himself as Ārmidevi and sought admission; seeing the beautiful form of Ārmidevi Indra fell in love with her and that night a child was born to Indra by her. On the advice of Indra Ārmidevi took the child to Ahalīyā before daybreak and left it there to be looked after by her. It was this child which later on became the famous Bāli. Aruṇa went a bit late that morning to his master, the Sun. The latter wanted an explanation and Aruṇa told him what had happened. The Sun then asked Aruṇa to become Ārmidevi again and seeing the enchanting figure the Sun also got a child of her. This child also was taken to Ahalīyā and it was this child that later on became the famous Sugrivā.

AHALYĀHĪRADA(M). A sacred pond in the tapovana AHARA. A son born of Danu to Kaśyapa. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Slokas 25, Chapter 65).

AHICCHATRA. This was the capital of the state Ahicchatra which Droṇa got from Drupada, the King of Pañcāla.

AHICCHATRA (M). A state under the sovereignty of King Pañcāla. On the completion of his studies under Droṇa Arjuna brought before his preceptor King Drupada as a captive in discharge of the duty he owed to him as his master. Drupada then gave the state of Ahicchatra to Droṇa and got his release. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Slokas 73 to 76, Chapter 137).

AHĪMSĀ. Non-injury. There are opinions both in favour of and against Ahīṃsā in the puruṣās. Sukrācārya entails the importance of Ahīṃsā to the asuras (demons) thus:

Bho! Devaripavāḥ satyaṁ
Brāvim bhavatāṁ hitam
Ahīṃsā paramo dharmaṁ
Hantayāḥ hyātatāyināṁ
Dvijairbhogaratatrivede
Daśitāṁ hiṁsānam paśoh
Jihvāśvāpatherai Kāma—Mahīṃśaiva parā matā.

"Oh, foes of the devas, I shall tell you the truth which is good for you. Non-injury to any living being is the most righteous thing. Do not molest even those who come to kill you. Even that act would be 'hiṁsā' (injury). It was those brahmins who were attached to worldly pleasures and addicted to overeating that enjoined in the Vedas that hiṁsā is permissible for yāgas." (Devi Bhāgavata, Skanda 4). Mārkandeya Muni (sage) says thus: "Why should I mind the innumerable killings going on unnoticed in this world full of life. People of old speak very sacreligious about Ahīṃsā, But O best of brahmins, who can live in this world without injury to another life?" (M.B., Aranyā Parva, Slokas 32 & 33, Chapter 208).

AHĪRATHA. A King of the Pūrū dynasty. (See under Pūrū vanāśa).

AHIRBDHNYA. One of the sons of Viśvakarmā. Five sons and one daughter were born to Viśvakarmā of his wife Surabhi. They were Ajaikapāṭa, Ahirbdhnya, Tvaṣṭa, Rudra, Barhiṃśmati and Sāṁjñā. (See under genealogy of Viśvakarmā).

AHĪTĀ. A river of ancient Bhārata. (M.B., Bhiṣma Parva, Sloka 21, Chapter 9).

AHORĀTRA (M). (See under Kālamāṇa).

AHOVIRA. A sage who adhered strictly to the injunctions associated with the Vānapraṣṭha stage of life. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Sloka 17, Chapter 144).

AI (कृ). This diphthong means a female sage (yogini) according to the Agni Purāṇa (Chapter 348 of Agni Purāṇa).

AIKVŚAVIKI. Wife of Suhotrā who was a son of Emperor, Bhūmanyu. Suhotrā had three sons by Aikvśavi. They were Ājaimidhā, Sumidhā and Purumidhā. (See Chapter 94 of Ādi Parva of the M.B.).

AILA I. Son of Ilā; Purūravaśa. (See under Ilā).

AILA II. A member of the court of Yamarāja. (See Sloka 16, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva, M.B.). In Sloka 65, Chapter 115 of Anuśāsana Parva, it is said that he never ate non-vegetarian food in his life.

AINDAVA. (See paragraph 13 under the word BRAHMĀ).

AIRĀVATA I. A large elephant, son of Irāvati.

1) Geology. Descended from Viṣṇu in this order:—Viṣṇu - Brahmā - Kaśyapa - Bhadramatā-Irāvati-Airāvata. Kaśyapa married Dakṣa's daughter, Krodhavāsa who bore him ten daughters. They were: Mrgi, Mrgamandā, Hari, Bhadramatā, Mātaṅgī, Sārdūli, Sveta, Surabhi, Sarasā and Kadru. Of these Bhadramatā had a daughter named Irāvati and Airāvata was her son. Airāvata was not human in shape; he was a large elephant. (See Sarga 14, Aranyakāṇḍa, Rāmāyaṇa).

2) Indra's Vāhana. Indra made Airāvata his conveyance (vāhana). Indra was Kaśyapa's son by Aditi. Airāvata also was descended from Kaśyapa. So Indra took Airāvata as his vāhana.

3) Airāvata caused the churning of the ocean of Milk. There is a story of how Airāvata was responsible for the churning of the milk-ocean (Kṣīrāśuddhi-mathanam). Once some maidens of devaloka presented a garland of flowers to sage Durvāsas. When Durvāsas visited Indra's court he gave that garland to Indra. Indra put it on the tusks of his vāhana, Airāvata. The fragrance of the flowers attracted a swarm of bees which became an intolerable nuisance to Airāvata. So Airāvata tore the garland off his tusks and hurled it away. When Durvāsas heard this, he took it as an insult. In his anger he cursed all the gods— the curse was that all gods should become subject to old age and the decrepitude and infirmities of old age. But though Durvāsas cursed the gods, he also prescribed a remedy. The gods could redeem themselves from the curse by drinking Amṛtām obtained from the ocean of Milk (Mahāviṣṇu lies on the serpent, Śeṣa on this ocean). The curse began to operate and the gods lost their perennial youth. The gods then befriended the Asuras and with their help they churned the ocean of Milk. They got the nectar (Amṛtām), drank it and regained their youth. (See under the word ĀMRITAM).

4) There is another story about Airāvata—A story of how he also rose out of the ocean of Milk. It is said that when Durvāsas and asuras churned the ocean of Milk, Airāvata also came up along with the other good things. This story is narrated in the 18th Chapter of Ādi Parva of the Mahābhārata. The explanation given is that when Durvāsas cursed the gods, Airāvata was oppressed with a sense of guilt because he was responsible for the curse. So he took refuge in the ocean of Milk and there started propitiating Mahāviṣṇu. There is however no warrant for such an explanation in the puruṣās. But the explanation sounds plausible because it explains the absence of Airāvata during the interval between Durvāsas's curse and the churning of the sea. Airāvata is represented as a white elephant. It is probable that he became white after his long residence in the ocean of Milk. This lends some additional plausibility to the above explanation.

5) Airāvata, the Lord of the elephphant. In the Viṣṇu Purāṇa we are told how Airāvata was made the chief of all elephants. When the Mahārṣis had crowned Prthu as the sovereign King, Brahmā gave new posts of honour to many of the devas. He made SOMA (Moon) the lord of the Stars and Planets, of Brahmins, Yajñīs and herbs. Kubera was made the overlord of all Kings; Varuṇa was made the master of the seas and all water; Viṣṇu, the lord of the Ādīyās and Pāvakā (Fire) the lord of the Vasus. Along with these Brahmā made Āraṇvata the lord of all elephants. (Chapter 22, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

6) The breaking of Āraṇvata’s tusks. There is a story of how the tusks of Āraṇvata were broken narrated in the Aṣṭottara of Skanda Purāṇa. Once an asura (demon) named Śrūpadama attacked devaloka. A fierce battle ensued between the gods and asuras. In the course of this battle, Jayanta, Indra’s son, was hit by an arrow and at once he fell dead. Enraged by this Āraṇvata rushed at Śrūpadama’s chariot and shattered it to pieces. Āraṇvata then attacked Śrūpadama who broke his tusks and hurled him down to the earth. Āraṇvata lay paralysed for a long time; then he got up, retired to a forest and prayed to Lord Śiva. With the grace of Śiva Āraṇvata regained his lost tusks and was able to return to devaloka.

7) Other details about Āraṇvata. (1) There is a belief that Āraṇvata is one of the eight elephants guarding the eight zones of the universe. These eight elephants are called the Aṣṭottara. Āraṇvata is supposed to guard the eastern zone. (Chapter 66, Ādi Parva, Mahābhārata).

(2) Āraṇvata and three other diggajas are supposed to reside in Puśkara Island. (Chapter 12, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

ĀRAṆVATA II. Name of a serpent born to Kaśyapa and his wife Kadru. This is mentioned in Sloka 5, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva of the Mahābhārata. Arjuna’s father-in-law and Uñjī’s father, Kauravya belonged to the family of this serpent. (See Sloka 18, Chapter 213, Ādi Parva).

ĀRAṆVATA. An asura who was killed by Śrī Krṣṇa. (See Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva, Mahābhārata).

ĀRAṆVATĀGAṬṬA. Name of a place near the seashore, lying to the north of the mountain, Śrīgavān. (See Sloka 37, Chapter 6, Bhīṣma Parva).

AṆIKAM. Name of a small division of a parva of the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata).

AITAREYA I. A great scholar with profound knowledge of the Vedas. Being a non-brahmin he was not able to learn the Vedas from a guru. In spite of this handicap he acquired considerable scholarship and wrote a learned commentary on the Rgveda. This commentary ranks high among the various commentaries on the Vedas.

AITAREYA II. Son of Sage, Māṇḍuki by his first wife, Itārā. Being the son of Itārā he came to be called Aita-reya. As a boy he was very pious and used to chant the mantra “Nāmo Bhagavate Vāsudevāya” frequently. But he was a shy and silent boy and his father mistook his silence to be a sign of stupidity. Dissatisfied with him and being desirous of having learned sons, Māṇḍuki married another woman named Piṅgā and had four sons by her who all became very learned. Once Itārā called her son and told him that his father regarded him as an unworthy son and was often twitting her using insulting words for having given birth to so unworthy a son. She then told him of her resolve to sacrifice her life. Aitarāya then made an enlightening discourse to her and dissuaded her from her determination to commit suicide.

Some time later Lord Viṣṇu appeared before them and blessed the mother and son. On the advice of Viṣṇu Aitarāya participated in the yaṇa conducted by Hari-medhya at Koṭiṭhūtha and there he made a learned speech on the Vedas. Hari-medhya was so pleased with him that he gave his daughter in marriage to him. (See Skanda Purāṇa, Chapters 1, 2 and 42).

AJA I. A king of the Solar dynasty.

M.B., Anūcāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 75 says that Aja never used to take meat.

AJA II. Among the different kinds of Rṣis mentioned by Yudhiṣṭhira, we find a class of Rṣis called Ajas. (M.B., Śanti Parva, Chapter 26). These Ajas had attained Heaven by Śvādyāya (self discipline) alone.

AJA III. King Jalini had a son named Aja. Uṣīka was the son of this Aja. King Uṣīka prayed to Indra for a son. Indra himself was born as the son of Uṣīka assuming the name Gādhi. Satyavatī was born as the daughter of Gādhi. She was married to Rāja. Parasurāma’s father, Jamadagni was the son of Rāja. (M.B., Śanti Parva, Chapter 49).

AJA IV. By the grace of Śiva Surabhi was able to purify herself by penance. She then gave birth to Aja, Ekaṭāt, Āhīrbudhṇya, Tvasṭā and Rudra. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

AJA V. In the first Manvantara* Śvāyambhuva, in the second Manvantara Śvārociṣiṇ and in the third Manvantara Utama, were Manus. To the third Manu, Utama, were born as sons Aja, Paṇa, Dīpta and others. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 1).

Besides the above, the term Aja has been used to mean Sūrya, Śiva, Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śrī Krṣṇa and Bīja (seed).

AJAGAVA. Ajagava is a bow made of the horns of a goat and a cow. Brahmins tormented the right hand of the King Vena. From it the brilliant Prīhu who shone brightly like the God Agni, appeared as the son of Vena. At that time the very first Ajagava bow, divine arrows and armours dropped from the sky. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 13).

AJAIKĀPAT I. He was one of the eleven Rudras, who were born to Śtānudeva, the son of Brahmā. The eleven Rudras are:—

1. Mrgavyāḍha  7. Dahanā
2. Nirṛti  8. Īvara
3. Āhīrbudhṇya  9. Kapāli
5. Sarpā  11. Śtānū.  6. Ajaikapat

(M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 2).

AJAIKĀPĀT II. Among the sons of Viśvakarmā, we find one Ajaikāpat. Brahmā created Viśvakarmā. Viśvakarmā had four sons—Ajaikāpat, Āhīrbudhṇya, * One Manvantara is a period equal to 4,320,000 human years or equal to 1/4th day of Brahmā.

 The names of the Eleven Rudras given in the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 5 are: Hara, Bahurūpa, Tryambaka, Aparājīta, Vṛṣākapi, Šāmbhu, Kaṇḍari, Raivatva, Mrgavyāḍha, Šara, Kapāli. A total number of 108 Rudras are mentioned in the Purāṇas.
AJAKA

AJAKA. An Asura.

Birth. Kaśyapa was born the son of Maṅgala, son of Brahman. Kaśyapa married Dānu, one of the daughters of Daśa and had two sons by her. They were Ajaka and Vṛṣapāraṇva. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 24; Chapter 67, Verse 16).

AJAKĀŚA. A king of the Puru Vāni. The mighty Jahn was born to Ajamiṭha by his wife Kesīni. Two sons, Ajakāśa and Balaṇa were born to Jahn. Kuśika is the son of Balaṇa. Kuśika is the grandfather of Viśvāmitra. For genealogy see Puru Vāni. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 276).

AJAMIṬHA I. A famous king of the Puru Vāni. 1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in this order:—Brahma—Atri—Candra—Buddha—Pururāvas—Ayuṣ—Nahusa—Yāyati—Puru—Janaṃeṣa—Praccinā—Mana-syū—Vitabhaya—Sundu—Bahuvidha—Saṃyati—Rahovādā—Bhradāśa—Maṭnāma—Santvādha—Dusyanta—Bharata—Bhratkaṭṭha—Hasti—Ajamiṭha. 2) Birth. Several dynasties like Yadu Vāni, Puru Vāni etc. take their origin from Yāyati. Dusyanta belongs to that dynasty. King Bharata was born as Dusyanta's son by Sakuntalā. Suhotra—Sukha—Gaya—Gardrā—Suketu and Bhratkaṭṭha were Bharata's sons. Bhratkaṭṭha had four children, who were: Nara, Mahāvira, Garga and Hasti. Of them Hasti had three sons: Purumihīda, Ajamiṭha and Dvimiṭha. 3) Other details. Ajamiṭha had three queens—Dhumini, Niśi and Kesīni. Of them, Dhumini had a son, Rksa and Niśi's son was Dusyanta (This was not Sakuntalā's husband, Dusyanta) and Kesīni's sons were Jahn, Praja and Rāpiṇa. Parameteṣi was another name of Kesīni. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 30-32; Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 2).

AJAMIṬHA II. We come across another Ajamiṭha also in the Lunar Dynasty. He married Sudeva, daughter of Vikaṇṭha a King of the Lunar Dynasty. This Ajamiṭha had 2400 children by his four wives, Kaikēyī, Gāndhāri, Viśālā and Rksā. Of them Saṅharaṇa married Tapati, the daughter of Vivasvān. See Tapati Saṅharaṇa. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verses 35-37).

AJĀMILA. Ajāmila's story is given in the Bhāgavata as an example to illustrate that even the most wicked person can attain Viṣṇupāda (Salvation). Ajāmila was a Brahmin who was once sent by his father to the jungle to fetch samit (leaves and twigs to make the sacrificial fire). Ajāmila met there a beautiful Śūdra woman. Forgetting everything, the Brahmin made her his wife and children were born to them. When that Brahmin, who was the very embodiment of all virtues, reached the age of eighty-seven, the time came for him to die. Yamadātas (Agents of Yama—the god of death) had arrived. The frightened Ajāmila shouted loudly the name of his eldest son, 'Nārāyaṇa'. Hearing the repeated call of his name 'Nārāyaṇa', Mahāviṣṇu appeared there and dismissed the agents of Yama. From that day Ajāmila became a devotee of Viṣṇu and did penance on the bank of the Ganges and after some years attained salvation. (Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha, Chapter 1).

AJĀMUKHA (AJAVAKTRA). He was one of the soldiers in Skanda's army. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 75). In the battle between Skanda and the Asuras, Ajāmukha killed the Asura, Madhu. (Skanda Purāṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

AJĀMUKHA (AJĀMUKHA I. 1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Brahmā-Maṅgala-Kaśyapa-Ajāmukha. 2) Birth. Long ago in the battle between Devas and Asuras one of the routed Asuras had fled to Pāṭāla (Hell). Surasā was his daughter. Brahmā's grandson, Kaśyapa married Surasā. She gave birth to six children—Sūrapadmā, Śīnḫikā, Śīnḥakavatā, Tārakāśa, Ajāmukha and Gomukha. The Asura woman Ajāmukha is one of them. 3) Chief events. (1) Marriage with Dvūrāsas. Once Sūrapadmā called his two brothers, Śīnḥakavatā and Tārakāśa and ordered them to set up two cities, one to the north and the other to the south, of Mahāmeru. In obedience to his elder brother, Tārakāśa started with one half of the army and set up a city to the south of Mahāmeru. That city was named Māyāpura. Śīnḥakavatā lived in the city on the northern side of Mahāmeru. Their sister Ajāmukha went about enticing men to satisfy her lustful passion. Once, in the course of her wanderings, she met Durvāsas in the Himālayan valley. They fell in love and married. The two Asuras, Ilvala and Vāṭāpi were born from their union. They insisted on sharing their father's achievements between them. Durvāsas cursed them that they would die at the hands of Agastya. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa). (2) The cutting off of Ajāmukha's hands. While wandering with her lustful passion, Ajāmukha once went to the Śiva temple at Kāśi. There she happened to meet Indra's wife, Śaċidēvi. In order to give her to her brother, Sūrapadmā, Ajāmukha caught hold of Śaċidēvi. Śaċidēvi screamed aloud. Suddenly Śiva appeared there with His sword. Even then Ajāmukha refused to release Śaċidēvi. Śiva rescued Indrāṇī (Śaċidēvi) by cutting off Ajāmukha's hands. Hearing this, Sūrapadmā sent his army and imprisoned the Devas. The imprisoned Brahmā at the instance of Sūrapadmā, restored Ajāmukha's hands. Sūrapadmā's son, Bhāṅgugopa fought against the remaining Devas and defeated them. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).

AJĀMUKHA. See AJĀMUKHA.

AJANĀBHA. A mountain. A reference to this is seen in the M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 32. Another name, Anuṇābha Varṣa for the territory ruled over by Ajānābha, is also found in Bhāgavata, Fifth Skandha, Chapter 1.

AJARA. Tapaṇakā, the minister of King Vatsa, told him the story of a man named Ajara to illustrate the law that all people will have to suffer the consequences of their actions in a previous birth. The story is given below:—Once upon a time, there lived a King named Viṇayaśīla in Viḷāśapura, in the city of Śrīkaṇṭhānagari. After some years, the King was affected by wrinkles of old age. A physician named Tarupacandra came to the palace to cure the King of his wrinkles. “The King should remain alone in the interior of the earth for full eight months. He has to use a medicine while remaining there. It should not even be seen by anyone else. I myself am to administer the medicine”—This was the physician's prescription. The King agreed. Accordingly the King and the physician spent six months in the interior of the earth. After that the physician, after a search, found a man who exactly resembled the King and brought him to the interior of the earth. After two more months, the physician murdered the King and came out with the new man. The people welcomed him with honour as the King who was cured of his wrinkles. This man was Ajara. After some time, the physician approached Ajara for his reward. Ajara said: "It is by my Karma-phala (consequence of my actions in my previous birth) that I have become King. In my previous birth I renounced my body after doing penance. According to the boon which God gave me on that occasion, I have become King in my present birth". The physician returned empty-handed. (Kathasaritsägar, Ratnaprabhālatābaka, 6th Tārāngī)

AJAVINDU. He was a King, born in the dynasty of the Suvrās. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 14).

AJEYA. He was a King in ancient Bharata. Ajeya's name is found among the names of the Kings mentioned by Saṅjaya to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. All these Kings were mighty and generous rulers who were the recipients of divine arrows. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 234).

AJIGARTA (RČIKA). He was a greedy Brahmin. (See RČIKA I)

King Hariścandra who was distressed by having no children, propitiated god Varuṇa. Varuna blessed him saying that a son would be born to him. But the condition was that the child should be sacrificed to Varuṇa. When the child was born, Hariścandra did not like to sacrifice the boy. The sage Viśvāmitra suggested that instead of sacrificing his own son it would be enough if he bought another boy and sacrificed him. Accordingly, Hariścandra sent his minister to find and purchase a Brahmin boy for the sacrifice. At that time there lived in Ayodhya a greedy Brahmin named Ajīgarta. He had three sons. In the course of his search, the minister came across this needy Brahmin and asked him whether he was willing to sell one of his three sons. He continued: "Why should you be in this wretched state of poverty and misery? Sell one of your sons and you will get 100 cows as the price". The minister's words and the price offered for the son made a deep impression on the Brahmin's mind. He thought: "It is impossible for me to earn 100 cows. Even if it were possible how long would it take? If I sell him I shall get hundred cows at once. What a lucky chance! The loss of a son is nothing". So thinking, he sold his son Sunāśeṣa. (For the rest of the story, see the word "Sunāśeṣa"). Devi Bhāgavata, Skandhas 7, 8).

2) Birth. Prthu had two sons, Antardhāna and Vādī. Antardhāna had a son, Havirdhāna, by Śikhaṇḍinī. Dhiṣṇu, who was born in the Agnikula became Havirdhāna's wife. Six sons were born to them, Prachinabharhi, Suṣra, Gaẏa, Kaśuṇa, Vraja and Ajina. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa Part I, Chapter 14).

AJISAKA. (See the word SAKAVARSA).

AJODARA. There was an individual called Ajodara in Skanda's army. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 60).

AKAMPANA. (A mighty warrior among the demons).

2) Other details. Sumāli married Kettumati and got fourteen children. They were 1) Prahasta 2) Akampana 3) Vīkṣaṇa 4) Kañcākumāka 5) Dhūmānya 6) Daṇḍa 7) Supārvā 8) Śāṁśrāda 9) Prākātru 10) Bhāsaṅkarā 11) Veka 12) Puṣpotkaṇṭha 13) Kaṇkaśi 14) Kumbhinādī. Of these the last four are daughters. Prahasta was one of the ministers of Rāvaṇa. The thirteenth child Kaṇkaśi was married to Viṣṇivas, son of Pulastya. Viṣṇivas got three sons and a daughter. They were Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarna and Vībhишana and Sūryaṇākha. It was Akampana who informed Rāvaṇa that Rāma and Lakṣmana had killed his three allies, Khar, Dūsāṇa and Triṣiras (Araṇya Kakṣa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

3) Death. Akampana fought a fierce battle with Hanumān and in the end Hanumān plucked a big tree and hit Akampana on the head with it and killed him. (Sarga 56, Yuddha Kāpaḍa of Rāmāyaṇa)

AKAMPANA II. He was a king who lived in the Krta-yuga. He had a son named Hari who was a fierce fighter. He was killed in a battle and the King became much depressed. Nārada consoled him with other stories and Vyāsa told this story to Dharmaputra when he found the latter greatly dejected and gloomy after the great battle was over. (Chapter 52, Śrūṇa Parva of M.B. also makes mention of Akampana).

AKARKARA. A serpent, son of Kadru.

2) Birth. Kaśyapa married the eight daughters of Dakṣa named Aditi, Diiti, Danu, Kālikā, Tāmṛa, Krodhavāśa, Manu and Anāla. Krodhavāśa got ten sons. One of them is Kadru. Ananta and Akarkara were born of Kadru. (Śloka 16, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AKRODA. A King of the Pāru dynasty. He was born to King 'Ayutānāyi' and his Queen, Kāmā, mother of Akrodha, was the daughter of Prthuśravā. (Śloka 21, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AKRASĀRAMA. He is one of the few sannyāsins who have gone to heaven after completing the fourth āśrama of life namely, Sannyāsa. The Kaurava-Pāṇḍava battle was over. As the eldest, Dharmaputra performed obsequies to all those of his kith and kin dead in the war. He was then met by many sages including Vyāsa and Nārada who comforted him in his bereavement. When Dharmaputra later met Bhima the latter among many other stories told him the story of Akraśārama also. (Śloka 17, Chapter 244, Sāntī Parva, M.B.).

AKRTAVRĀNA.

1) General information. Akṛtavrāna was a great sage of erudition and was a disciple of Parāṣurāma. He is excolled in the Purāṇas and it is said that Sūta who recited first the story of Mahābhārata to an assembly of sages in the forest of Naimiṣa was a disciple of Akṛtavrāna. (Skandha 12 of Bhāgavata).

2) How he became a disciple of Parāṣurāma. Para-urāma was returning after obtaining arrows from Lord Śiva after pleasing him by fierce penance. He was walking briskly through the dense forests anxious to be at the side of his preceptors to get their blessings. As he passed a great cave he heard a moan and on getting to the site of the sound found a brahmin boy being attacked by a tiger. The tiger immediately fell dead by an arrow from Paraśurāma. Lo, the tiger turned into a gandharva freed now from a curse because of which he was for years living as a tiger. The gandharva bowed down respectfully and thanked the sage for giving him relief and left the place. The brahmin boy fell down at the feet of Paraśurāma and said, “Great Lord, because of you I have now become Akṛṭavrāṇa meaning one who has not received any wound. (Akṛṭa = not having secured. Vṛṣṇa = wounded). I shall, therefore, be your disciple forever henceforth.” From that day onwards he never left Paraśurāma but followed him as his disciple.

3) Other details. (1) In the story of Malabhārata we find Akṛṭavrāṇa in several different contexts appearing on behalf of Paraśurāma. It was Akṛṭavrāṇa who told Dharmaputra the life and exploits of Paraśurāma during the exile of the Pāṇḍavas in the forests. (Chapters 115 to 117, Vana Parva, M.B.).

(2) In Chapter 83 of Udyoga Parva we read about Akṛṭavrāṇa meeting Śrī Kṛṣṇa while the latter was going to Hastināpura.

(3) In Chapter 173 of Udyoga Parva we read about Akṛṭavrāṇa detailing the history of the Kaurava dynasty to Duryodhana.

(4) Akṛṭavrāṇa has played a very important role in the story of Āmbā, daughter of the King of Kāśī. Āmbā along with her two sisters, Ambikā and Ambālikā, were brought down to Hastināpura by Bhīṣma for his brother Vicitrāvīrya to marry. But on knowing that Āmbā had mentally chosen Sālva as her husband, Bhīṣma allowed her to go back to Sālva. But on her return to Sālva he refused to accept her and she came back to Hastināpura. Bhīṣma then requested Vicitrāvīrya to accept her as his wife which, unfortunately, Vicitrāvīrya also refused to do. Ambā then turned to Bhīṣma and besought him to marry her which, much to his regret, he could not do because of his vow of celibacy. Thus forsaken by all, all her sweetness turned into bitter hatred towards Bhīṣma and she remained alive thereafter only to kill Bhīṣma. But even the foremost of warriors were not willing to antagonise Bhīṣma and so her appeal to help was not heeded by any. It was then that Hotrāvaha her grandfather on the maternal side met her and directed her to Paraśurāma. When she went to Paraśurāma it was Akṛṭavrāṇa who received her and on hearing her sorrowful tale encouraged her to seek vengeance on Bhīṣma. Again it was he who persuaded Paraśurāma to champion her cause and go for a fight against Bhīṣma. During the fight Akṛṭavrāṇa acted as charioteer to Paraśurāma. (Śloka 9, Chapter 179, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

(5) Akṛṭavrāṇa was one of the many sages who were lying on a bed of arrows during the great Kurukṣetra battle. (Śloka 8, Chapter 26, Anuśasana Parva, M.B.).

AKRŪRA

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brāhma-Ati-Candra-Budha-Purūravas-Āyus-Nāhuṣa-Yāyat-Yadu (Chapter XII of Agni Purāṇa). Descending from Yadu in order were Sahasrajit-Saṭajit-Hehaya-Dharma-Kunti-Bhadrasena-Dhanaka-Kṛttavrāṇa-Cāillasya-Madhū-Viṣṇu (Chapter XXIII of Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata). The Viṣṇu dynasty begins and from Viṣṇu in order descended Yudhajīti-Śini-Satyakṣa-Tīyakṣa-Jaya-Kunti-Anamitra-Prśni-Svaphalaka-Akrūra. (Chapter XXIV of Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

2) Birth. Svaphalaka of the Viṣṇi dynasty married Nandini, daughter of the King of Kāśī and Akrūra was born to them. Akrūra was an uncle of Śrī Kṛṣṇa but is respected more as a worshipper of Kṛṣṇa.

3) Other details. (1) He became famous as a commander of the Yādava army. (Chapter 220 of Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(2) Akrūra was also present for the Śvayamāra (wedding) of Pāṇčāli. (Śloka 18, Chapter 185 of Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(3) At the time of Arjuna’s eloping with Subhadra, a grand festival was going on in the Raivata mountain and Akrūra was partaking in the same. (Śloka 10, Chapter 218, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(4) Akrūra accompanied Kṛṣṇa with the dowry intended for Subhadra. (Śloka 29, Chapter 220, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(5) Akrūra came to the country called Upalavaya for attending the marriage of Abhimanyu. (Śloka 22, Chapter 72, Vīra Parva, M.B.).

(6) Akrūra and Āhuca always quarrelled with each other both alleging that the other sided with the opposite camp of Kṛṣṇa. (Ślokas 9 to 11, Chapter 81, Śaṅti Parva, M.B.).

(7) Kāṁśa planning to kill Balabhadrārāma and Śrī Kṛṣṇa conducted a festival called Cāpapūjā (worship of the bow). It was Akrūra whom Kāṁśa sent to bring Balabhadrā and Kṛṣṇa for the festival. Akrūra understood the plot, informed Kṛṣṇa about it and also advised Kṛṣṇa to kill Kāṁśa. (Daśāma Skandha, Bhāgavata).

(8) Akrūra fought against Jarāsandha on the side of Kṛṣṇa. (Daśāma Skandha).

(9) On another occasion Kṛṣṇa, Balabhadrā and Ud-dhava sent Akrūra to Hastināpura to get tidings about Kuntī and the Pāṇḍavas. Akrūra met his sister Kuntī and talked to her for a long time and also met Dhṛta-rāṣṭra and talked to him after which he returned to Dvārakā. (Daśāma Skandha).

(10) Akrūra went to Hastināpura as a messenger from Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Refer sub-para 3 of para 13 under Kṛṣṇa).

4) Domestic life. Akrūra married Sūtanū, daughter of Āhuca and had two sons named Devaka and Upadevaka. (Navama Skandha).

5) Syaṃantaka and Akrūra. Refer para 2 under the word Kr̲tavarmā.

AKṢAHRDAYA

1) Genealogy. Descended in order form Viṣṇu as follows: Brāhma- Pūlasya- Viṣṇavas - Rāvaṇa - Akrūra. (Uttararāmāyaṇa).

2) Birth. Three sons were born to Rāvaṇa, King of the demons, by his wife Mandodari. They were Meghānāda, Atīkāya and Aksakumāra. Aksakumāra was a redoubtable hero and a fierce fighter but was killed by Hanumān in Lāṅkā. (Sarga 47, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

AKṢAII. We find another warrior of this name among the soldiers who came to help Skanda in the Kaurava-Pāṇḍava battle. (Śloka 58, Chapter 45, Śaṅya Parva, M.B.).

AKṢAHRDAYA. A sacred chant or mantra. When Nala was roaming about in the forests after his separation from Damayanti he happened to see the cobra, Kārkotaka, from a wild fire. But in return the snake bit him and made him as black as clouds. He then advised Nala to go to the palace of King R̲tuparṇa where the cobras said, Nala would be taught the secret mantra of Āksahṛdaya by the King.

One who knows this sacred chant can find out all secrets of a game of dice and can count within no time the number of leaves, fruits and flowers on a tree. Nala went to Rūpaṇa and stayed with him. While living there a brahmin named Sudeva came to Rūpaṇa and informed him that Damayanti was going to marry again. Rūpaṇa immediately started for Vidarbha taking Nala as his charioteer. The chariot driven by Nala flew like a wind and on the way when Rūpaṇa’s hand-knealing fell down and he requested Nala to stop the chariot. Nala informed him that by the time the request was made they had travelled already one yojana. As they proceeded they saw a huge tree full of leaves and fruits. Rūpaṇa at a glance told Nala that the tree contained five crores of leaves and two thousand nine hundred and five fruits. Nala was surprised. Then they understood that Nala was able to drive the chariot so quickly because of his knowledge of the sacred chant Āsahṛdaya and that Rūpaṇa was able to count the leaves and fruits because of his knowledge of the chant Āksahṛdaya. They taught each other the sacred mantras. Because of this Āksahṛdaya Nala was able to win the game of dice the second time and regain his kingdom. (Chapter 72, Vana Parva).

AKŚAMALĀ (ARUNDHATĪ). See under Arundhati.

AKŚARAPATATA. A particular place in the country of Ānarita. At this place Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed two demons named Gopati and Tālakettu. (Slokas 29, Chapter 38, Sahā Parva, M.B.).

AKŚARAPURUSA. When all was set for the Kurukṣetra battle Arjuna showed signs of weakness and hesitated to proceed for a fight. Śrī Kṛṣṇa then through the famous Gītā enunciated a philosophy of life during the course of which he speaks about the two puruṣas, Kṣara and Aksara. All that we see in this world and enjoy are Kṣara and the power behind all of them is Aksara. God is one who transcends the aspects Kṣara and Aksara and stands as the root cause of all life. (Slokas 16 to 19, Chapter 39, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.)

AKŚASŪTRĀ. She was the wife of the sage Āpastamba. She was a very chaste woman. (See under Āpastamba).

AKŚAUHINĪ. A big division of an army. It is described in the Verses 19 to 26 in the 2nd Chapter of Adi Parva of the Mahābhārata. It says thus: One chariot, one elephant, three horses and five soldiers constitute what is termed a Patti. Three such pattis make one Śenāmukha and three such senāmukhas make one Gulma. Three gulmas make one Gana and three such ganas make one Vāhini. Three such vāhinis make one Pārthā. An Akśauhinī contains 21870 chariots, an equal number of elephants, 65160 horses and 109350 soldiers.

AKŚAYAPĀTRA. This is a copper vessel given to Dharmaputra by Śrīva (Sun). To destroy the Pāṇḍavas, Duryodhana kept them in a palace made of lac. They escaped from there and passing through dense forests crossed the river Ganges and reached the Kingdom of Pāṭelā where they married the King’s daughter, Kṛṣṇā (Pāṭelā). On their way they killed two demons called Hidimba and Baka. When they were living happily at Indraprastha the jealous Duryodhana defeated them in a game of dice by foul play and sent them for a period of twelve years to the forests. The Pāṇḍavas found it impossible to feed the innumerable subjects who faithfully followed them to the forest. Dharmaputra then prayed to the God, Śūrya and he appeared before him and gave him this Ākṣaya Pātra (Ākṣaya = never getting empty, Pātra = pot). Everyday this pot never got empty till the meals of Pāṭelā were over. (Chapter 3, Vana Parva, M.B.). See also under Duryodhana, Para 12.

AKŚAYAVĀTĀ. A sacred lake. When the Pāṇḍavas during their exile went to Pālustyārama sage Pālustya gave a description of all the sacred lakes in India. He says, “After reaching Mārkandeya lake you should visit the meeting place of the rivers Ganges and Gomati. Then when you reach Gaya you will find there a lake called Ākṣaya-vāta. If you bathe in that lake you will get salvation”. In the Navama Sandhā of Devi Bhāgavata you find the following about Akṣaya-vāta: “Puruśabhadrā is one of the famous sacred rivers in India. This river starts from the Himalayas with the name Saravati and flowing for 500 yojanas (One yojana is equal to about 8 miles) on the left side of river Gomati reaches the western ocean. There is an aśrama called Akṣaya-vāta on the shores of this beautiful river which always carries crystal clear water. The aśrama got that name because of a big banyan tree standing near it. Kapila, the great sage, did penance sitting here for a long time. Lord Siva, Bhadra-kāli and Skanda used to come and sit underneath this banyan tree.

AKŚĪNA. He was the son of Visvāmitra. (Slokas 50, Chapter 14, Anuśāsana Parva. For more details see under Visvāmitra).

AKŪPĀRA.

1) General information. There is a lake in the Himalayas called Indradymuna. Akūpāra is a tortoise living in it. There is also a statement that this is the Adi-Kūma (second of the ten incarnations of God). A description of Akūpāra is found in Chapter 199 of Vana Parva in Mahābhārata.

2) Cirejijī (One who has no death). When the Pāṇḍavas were in exile in the forests sage Mārkandeya tells many stories to Dharmaputra to console him in his sad plight. The Pāṇḍavas asked Mārkandeya whether he knew of anybody living before him. Then the sage said, “In times of old Indradymuna an ascetic King (Kājasṛi) fell down from heaven when he fell short of his accumulated ‘Punya’. Sorrowsome he came to me and asked me whether I knew him. I replied in the negative adding that perhaps Prāvirakarṇa an owl living on the top of the Himalayas might know him since he was older than me. At once Indradymuna became a horse and taking me on its back approached the owl living in the Himalayas. The owl also could not remember Indradymuna but directed him to a stork named Nāḍījarīga who was older than the owl. The Ascetic king took me then to the Indradymuna lake where the stork lived. The stork also could not find the identity of Indradymuna. Perhaps he said that a tortoise of name Akūpāra living in that same lake might know him. We then approached the tortoise and enquired whether he knew Indradymuna. This tortoise sat in meditation for some time and then weeping profusely and shaking like a leaf stood bowing respectfully and said, “How can I remain without knowing him? There are several monuments of the useful work done by him here. This very lake is of his making. This came into existence by the march of the cows he gave away to the people”. The moment the tortoise finished speaking a chariot appeared from heaven to take the King away. The King after leaving me and the owl in their proper places ascended to heaven in the chariot.

ALAGHU. A son born to Vasiṣṭha by Orījā. Rāja (Rajās) Gātra, Urdhvabāhu, Savana, Sakra and Sutapās, who were great hermits, were brothers of Alaghu, who has another name 'Alagha'. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

ALAKĀ. The city of Kubera.

ALAKANANDĀ. River Gaṅgā of devaloka. The river gaṅgā of the earth when it flows through devaloka is called Alakanandā and is called Vaitarani when it flows through Pīṇḷoka (nether world). Kṛṣṇadvaipāyana (Vyāsa) declares that Deva Gaṅgā with crystal pure water flowing in devaloka under the name Alakanandā and Vaitarani of the nether world, a terror to sinners, are the same as the Gaṅgā of the earth. (Slokas 21 and 22, Chapter 170, Bhāṣa Bhārata, A.P.).

Starting from Viṣṇupāda Alakanandā flows through Devayāna which blazes with the splendour of a crore of beautiful many-storeyed buildings. Flowing from there to Candramandala (moon) and flooding it completely flows down to Brahmaloka. From there it divides into four rivulets and flows to the four different sides with the names Sītā, Cakṣus, Alakanandā and Bhadrā. Of these Sītā falls on the thickly wooded mountain tops of Mahāmeru and flowing from there through Gandhamādana by the side of Bhadrāsvarasā falls down in the eastern ocean. Cakṣus falls on the top of Mālayāvan mountain and flowing through Ketumāla falls down in the western ocean. The most sacred of the group, Alakanandā, falls on the mountain of Hemakṣa and from there flows through Bhāratavāsa and falls down in the southern ocean. The fourth, Bhadrā, falling on the top of the Mountain, Srigavān, flows to the northern ocean. Of these the most sacred is Alakanandā which flows through Bhāratavāsa and it is believed that even those who think of taking a bath in that will acquire the benefit of performing yāgas like Āśvamedha and Rājaśīya. (Udghātīna of Śrī Mahādeviśvābhāvata).

ALAMBALĀ. A giant who used to eat human flesh. This cannibal was the son of Jātāśura. This asura (Alambala) fought on the side of the Kauravas in the Kurukṣetra battle because Bhīmasena had killed his father, Jātāśura. In the battle, Ghatotkaca cut off the head of this mighty warrior and magician and threw his head into the war-chariot of Duryodhana. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 149).

ALAMBAṬṬRĪTHA. A holy place where there was a sacred bath. Garuḍa, when he went to devaloka (the realm of the gods) to bring Amṛtam (ambrosia) took rest in this holy place. (See under the word Garuḍa. Also M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 39, Stanza 39).

ALAMBUṢA I. Son of the giant Rāṣṭrapāla. He had fought on the side of the Kauravas. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 167, Stanza 33). There was a contest between Alambuṣa and Ghatotkaca, on the first day of the battle of Kurukṣetra.

"Alambuṣa shot ninety sharpened pointed arrows at the son of Bhīmasena (Ghatotkaca), cut his body in several places. Though he was full of wounds, he fought all the more fiercely". (Bhāṣā Bhārata, Bhāṣma Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 43).

Alambuṣa had engaged Abhimanu, Sātayaki, Ghaṭot-kaca, Kuntibhoja and Bhīmasena all mighty men of arms, in single combat, in the Kaurava battle. It is seen that he has got another name, Sālakaṭārīkha. He was killed by Ghaṭotkaca in the battle. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 109, Stanzas 22 to 33).

ALAMBUṢA II. Another king on the side of the Kauravas. Sātayaki killed this king. (Mahābhārata, Drona Parva, Chapter 140, Stanza 13).

ALAMBUṢA III. A king of the Rākṣasas. It is seen that this Alambuṣa was defeated and driven away from the battle-field by Arjuna. (Drona Parva, Chapter 167, Stanzas 37 to 47).

ALAMBUṢA IV. A giant, the son of Jātāśura. Ghaṭot-kaca killed this giant in the battle.

ALAMBUṢA. A celestial woman born to Kaśyapa by his wife Prabhā.

1) Geology. Begins from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā-Kaśyapa-Alambuṣa.

2) How she enticed the hermit Dadhīca. In days of yore there was an ascetic named Dadhīca. He began doing tapas on the bank of the river Sarasvati. Indra was in consternation. Indra sent this celestial maid Alambuṣa to entice the hermit. When the ascetic got down to the river, Alambuṣa approached him with enticing actions and expressions. When the hermit saw her he became passionate and he had seminal flow. The sperm fell into the river. The river became pregnant and delivered a child in due course. He was called Sarasvati. Alambuṣa brought the child before Dadhīca, who blessed the child and said that there would be a drought in the country continuously for twelve years and that at that juncture Sarasvati would recite passages from the Scripture to the Brahmans who had forgotten them. The much pleased Sarasvati and Sarasvata went back.

At that time Indra lost his Vajrāyudha (weapon of thunderbolt) somewhere. The Asuras (enemies of Gods) made an onslaught on the gods and their realm. Indra knew that with a weapon made by the bone of Dadhīca the Asuras could be destroyed. Indra asked the Gods to bring the bone. They came down to the earth and requested Dadhīca to give them a bone. Dadhīca gave his bone died and attained heaven. With his bones Indra made a good deal of weapons such as the Vajrāyudha, wheel weapons, maces and sticks and with them Indra slew all the Daityas (Asuras).

After this there was a great famine in the country. As there was no rain, crops failed and lands became dry and the Brahmins left the country. Sarasvata alone remained with his mother. After twelve years the famine and starvation came to an end. By then the Brahmins had forgotten the hymns and mantras of the Vedas. They approached the boy Sarasvata and renewed their memory. (Mahābhārata, Salya Parva, Chapter 51).

3) Panarjanama (Rebirth). Long ago Indra went to Brahmā. There was one Vasu called Vidhūma also with Indra. When these two were standing near Brahmā, Alambuṣa also came there to pay homage to Brahmā. The garments she had on were displaced by wind. Vidhūma saw the dazzling beauty of her body and was overpowered by libido. Alambuṣa who understood this, was filled with passion for him. Brahmā who saw the changes in them looked at Indra with displeasure. Indra knowing the mind of Brahmā cursed them: "Both of you who have lost meekness shall become human beings and then your desire will be fulfilled”. Owing to the curse Vidhúma was born as Sahasrániká, the illustrious King of Candra varíka (Lunar dynasty) and Alambúsá took birth as Mr̄gávati, the daughter of King Krtavarmá and his wife Kalávati. (Káthásaritságára, Kathámukháambaka, Táraágá). 4) The curse of Tilottámá. Sahasrániká the incarnation of Vidhúma and Mr̄gávati the incarnation of Alambúsá fell in love with each other on the earth also. Before the wedding took place Devendra once invited Sahasrániká to heaven. He lived there for a time as the guest of the Gods. After having defeated the Asuras it was time for him to return. Indra sent Tilottámá to keep company. The charioter was driving. Sahasrániká immersed in the thought of Mr̄gávati was sitting silent. Tilottámá said something which the King did not hear. Tilottámá cursed him that he would be separated for fourteen years from the object about which he was thinking. He was not even aware of the curse.

5) The period of separation. The King returned to Káuśám-bi his capital city. Without much delay the wedding ceremony also was conducted. She became pregnant. One day she told her lover-husband that she had a desire to dip in a blood pond. The King made a pond and filled it with a solution of Láksá (vax, when dissolved in water, the water will look like blood) and such other substances. Mr̄gávati was dipping and splashing in it when an eagle taking her to be a piece of flesh took her away. At the loss of his wife Sahasrániká lost her senses and fell down unconscious. Immediately Mátali, Indra’s charioteer, came down from the realm of Gods and brought the King back to consciousness, and then informing him of the curse of Tilottámá he returned. Without paying any heed to the consolatory words of his ministers or other inmates of the palace the King went on lamenting and moaning, “ha, my love Mr̄gávati! Where are you now?” and waited for the end of the period of the curse, executing Tilottámá. Casting Mr̄gávati on the Mountain of the Rising Sun the great bird flew away. The horror-stricken queen, thinking of her present condition cried aloud. A very large mountain snake began to draw near to swallow her. A divine person saved her from that situation and vanished. The unprotected Mr̄gávati decided to commit suicide. It was a forest which abounded in lions, tigers, bears and such other ferocious animals. But none of them came near her; over and above the exertion of carrying, she had to bear the difficulties of her forlorn condition, and she grew weary and worn and became unconscious. Then a hermit boy came there and questioned her who was now lean and ill-dressed, about her condition and consoling her guided her to the hermitage of the great hermit Jámadagní. When she saw the hermit who was as radiant as the Sun, she bowed low before him. “My daughter! Don’t fear. You will get a heroic son here who will continue your family. You will be reunited to your husband.” Said the great and noble hermit, who could foresee the future. Somewhat pacified Mr̄gávati lived in that hermitage waiting for reunion with her husband. After some days she gave birth to a son who had all the symptoms of greatness. At the birth of the child Mr̄gávati heard an unknown voice saying, “This boy will become the great and renowned King Udayana. His son would get the leadership of the Vidyádharas (the musicians of the Gods)”. At this the queen was immensely pleased. The boy Udayana grew up in the hermitage, an incarnation of all good qualities. The hermit to whom the past, the present and the future were not obscure, performed the necessary rites and rituals becoming a Śaśtriya boy (Ruling caste) and taught him everything including the Dhanurveda (the Science of Archery). As a token of her intense love for the son, she put a bangle with the name of Sahasrániká inscribed on the arm of Udayana. One day when Udayana was tramping the forest, he saw a snake-charmer catching a snake. Seeing the beauty of the snake he asked the snake-charmer to let the snake free. But the snake-charmer replied, “Oh Prince, this is my daily bread. I earn my livelihood by exhibiting snakes. My previous snake was dead and it was with the help of a good deal of herbs and spells and incantations that I caught this one”.

When he heard this Udayana felt pity for him and gave the bangle to the snake-charmer and let the snake free. When the snake-charmer had gone with the bangle, the snake beaming with joy said to Udayana: “I am Vasuúmeni, the elder brother of Vásuki. I am grateful to you for giving me freedom. I give you this lute producing exquisite notes of music, betel and some tricks to prepare never fading garlands and paste to make marks on the forehead. Receive them as my presents”. Udayana accepted the presents with gladness and returned more luminous than before to the hermitage of Jámadagní. The snake-charmer took the bangle, given by Udayana to the bazar for sale. The police caught him and took him before the King, because they saw the name of the King inscribed on the bangle. The King asked him how he got the bangle and the snake-charmer told the King the story from the catching of the snake till he got the bangle. “This is the bangle that I put on the arm of my wife. The boy who gave this bangle to this snake-charmer must be my son.” The King was thinking with sadness, when the King heard a voice from above say, “O King! the period of the curse is over. Your wife and son are in the Mountain of the Rising Sun”. At these words the King felt extreme joy. Somehow or other he spent the rest of the day. Early the next morning the King followed by his army, went to the Mountain of the Rising Sun to bring back his wife and son. They took the snake-charmer to show them the way.

In due course the King and his train reached the holy hermitage of the eminent hermit Jámadagní. The place was always vibrant with sounds of the repeating and recitation of the Holy scriptures and covered with smoke mingled with the fragrance of burning herbs and other oblations burned in the sacrificial fire. The various wild animals which are born enemies of each other got on amicably there. The hermit who was an incarnation of the higher aspirations greeted the King who was the protector of the ascetics, with the hospitality becoming his status. The King who saw Mr̄gávati with their son was overcome with gladness. Their reunion caused a shower of Ambrosia (Ámrta). The King stood before the hermit with folded arms and bowed head for permission to depart. To the King the hermit Jámadagní said: “Oh, King, you are welcome to this hermitage. To those such as you who are of the ‘Rajogánaprathána’ caste (Ruling race) the peaceful atmosphere of our hermitage may not be appealing to the heart. But a holy hermitage is more respectable than the palace of an Emperor. There is no place for unhappiness here. You might have known that the reason for your separation is a curse. When you were returning from heaven with Tilottamā, you were so much engrossed in the thought of Mrgavati that you did not pay any heed to the conversation of Tilottamā. She was displeased with your behaviour and cursed you. In future, if ever you happen to get into a position which will cause you mental trouble you can be assured of the presence of this Jamadagni.

The King said, "I am extremely grateful to your Emi- nence for this great boon. I am fully aware of the fact that the presence of the holy hermits who have under their control the eightfold prosperity, is always a harbinger of peace and prosperity. I am very sorry to say that the exigency of my possession at the capital due to the pressure of work in connection with the ruling of the country compels me to cut short my visit to this holy hermitage. I shall be looking forward with pleasure to occasions which will enable me to pay visits to this Holy abode."

Much pleased at the speech of the King the hermit said to Mrgavati: "My daughter! Not only myself, but all the inmates of this hermitage are highly pleased at having got you in our midst for so long. We are sorry to part from you. Now look! The animals of the hermitage are standing round you and shedding tears. Still we are consoled at your reunion with your husband. Naturally you are of a very good character and your life in this hermitage has given you a nice training and so there is no need for any more advice from me at this time."

Saying this he drew Udayana to his side, kissed him on his head and said to the King again: "This son is a deco- ration to your dynasty. This handsome boy has been, taught everything becoming a royal prince. Let him be a costly gem to you."

Thus blessing the boy the hermit led him to the King. The joy at her reunion with husband, her shyness at being near him, her sorrow at having to depart from the hermitage and the surging feeling in her mind—all these made her dumb and so being unable to say any- thing she expressed her love and regard for the hermit whom she loved as her father, by some motions of her body and took leave of him with her son. The blessed King and his train, looking at the men, beasts and birds which accompanied them for a while, took leave of them and proceeded to the capital city. On reaching there the King anointed his son Udayana as King. Sahasrā- nika then went to the Himalayas to practice asceticism with his wife. (Kathāsatisāgara, Kathāmukhalambaka, Taraṅga 2).

(b) Enticing Trṇabindu. A story is seen in the Bhāga- vata of how Alambusā enticed the King Trṇabindu. He married Alambusā and a daughter named Iḍavidī (Ilabilā) was born to them. This Ilabilā was married to Vṛiṇavas, to whom a son named Kubera (the Lord of wealth) was born. By Alambusā Trṇabindu had three sons called Viṣāla, Śunyabandhu and Dhūmraketa.

"Tam bhejelambusā devi bhajanīyagunālayām
Varāpārsayāaste, putrāḥ
Kanyā cedībīdbhavāt
Tasyāṃputpādāyāmā
Vi-crāvā dhanadhā suṭaṁ
Prādāya vidyāṁ paramā-

"He who is the seat of all laudable qualities (Ṭrṇabindu) was honoured by Alambusā (as husband). Iḍavidī their daughter was given in marriage to Vṛiṇavas and to them was born Dhanada (Kubera). His father who was a great hermit taught him everything required. Three sons Viṣāla, Śunyabandhu and Dhūmraketa, were born to them. Viṣāla who was the founder of the Dynasty, built a city called Viṣalā. (Bhāgavatam, Navama Skandham, Chapter 2, Stanza 31-33). Alambusā took part in the birthday celebration of Arjuna.*

(Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 49) (See Footnote)

ALARKA. A book on rhetorics and figures of speech. See the word Paṭṭu.

ALARKA. Wife of King Naravāhanadatta. It is seen in the Kathāsasritāgara where a Vidyādhara woman tells the story of Alai-kāravati to the King.

Once a Vidyādhara named Alai-kāravati ruled over a city called Śrī Sundarapura in the Himalayas. His father was called Kātcanaprabha. A son was born to them. They named him Dharmasāla because he was the best son-in-law. A young prince became a king because he was a excellently expert in all aspects of the throne. He executed regal duties and ruled his subjects better than his father. Kātcanaprabha, wife of Alai-kāravati, gave birth to a daughter. At the time of her birth a heavenly voice said that she would become the wife of Naravāhanadatta the emperor of the Vidyādharaas. They named her Alai-kāravati. She grew up in a very beautiful maiden. She learned arts and sciences from her father. She went on a pilgrimage to the Śiva temples. One day she heard a celestial voice: "Go to the Sva-yamū temple in Kaśmir and worship there and you will get as your husband Naravāhanadatta.” Finally Naravāhanadatta the emperor of the Vidyādharas married her. (Kathāsasritāgara, Lambaka 9, Taraṅga 1).

ALOLUPA. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra.

ALPAKĀLA (M). A short time. (Alpa = short and Kāla = time). In the Bhāgavata the following definition is given of alpakāla: "Take two tender leaves of a lotus and place one on the other. Let a strong man take a sharp needle and thrust it hard at the leaves. The time taken for the needle to pierce one leaf and reach the other is alpakāla." (Bhāgavata (Malayalam version), Skandha 3).

ALARKA (M) 1. The name of an insect. It was in the form of this insect that Indra went and bore a hole on the head of Kamā while Parāshurāma was sleeping on his lap. The blood that flowed from Kamā’s head wetted the head of the preceptor.

ALARKA II. A king of the states of Kaśī and Karuṣa. He was a very honest man. Forsaking all riches and his kingdom he accepted Dharmamārga. (Śloka 64, Chapter 115, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.). He was a member of the council of Yama. He attained salvation by yoga and meditation. (18th Sloka, Chapter 8, Sabha Parva, M.B.). Once Alarka decided to overcome the five senses. To control them he sent arrows at the mind, nose, tongue, ear, eye, skin and intelligence. But the senses never surrendered to them. Then Alarka by sheer dhyâna and yoga brought them under control. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 30).

Alarka once told a blind brahmin boy to ask for any boon from him. The boy demanded the eyes of Alarka. To keep his promise Alarka scooped out his eyes and gave them to the blind boy. (Râmâyâna, Ayodhâya Kânda, Sarga 12, Sloka 43).

ALÂTÄRŚI. A woman in the service of Skanda. (M.B., Sâlya Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 8).

ALÂYUDHA. A giant. He was the brother of Bâkâsura. He fought on the side of the Kauravas. (M.B., Droñ Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 46 and Chapter 176, Stanza 6). Alâyudha combated with Bhîmasena and Ghatottaka and was killed by Ghatottaka.

AMADHYA. A synonym of Śrî Kṛṣṇa. (M.B., Sânti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 90).

AMÂHÄTHA. A serpent. It was burnt up in the fire at the Sarpa satra of Janamejaya. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 16).

AMÂNTHU. A man in the family of Priyavrata.

AMÂRACANDRA. A Sanskrit poet. It is believed that he lived in the 13th Cent. A.D. Bâla Bhrâta was his work. Amarakandra was a Jain priest. It is said that he was a courtier of Visaladeva, the son of King Viradhava who ruled over Gujarât from 1243 to 1262.

AMÂRAGUPTA. He was the minister of King Vikrama-sihâ who ruled over Avantî in olden times. (Kâthâ-saritsâgara, Madana Mahâcukâmbaka, First Tarâṅga).

AMÂRAHRADRA. A place of holy bath. One who takes his bath here will attain Svarga. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 106).

AMÂRAKANÇÂTAKA. A mountain. It was on this mountain that some parts of Tripura, which was burnt by Śiva fell. From that time it became a holy place. In Padma Purâna, Ādi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 15, we see the following passage about the benefits obtained by visiting this holy place. “One who goes to Amarakançâtaka mountain will enjoy the fourteen worlds for thirtyseven thousand crores of years. Afterwards he will be born on earth as King and reign as supreme emperor. A visit to Amarakançâtaka has ten times the value of an Aśvamedha. If one has Śiva’s darśana there, one will attain Svarga. At the time of eclipse, all kinds of holy things con verge towards Amarakançâtaka. Those who take their bath in Jvalâñvara in Amarakançâtaka will enter Svarga. The dead will have no rebirth. Those who renounce their lives at Jvalâñvara will live in Rudraloka till the time of great Déluge. In the valley of Amarakançâtaka and in the Tirtha live Devas known as Amrâs and numerous Rûsis. Amarakançâtaka Kṣetra has a circumference of one yôjana. (about eight miles).

AMÂRAPARVATA. An ancient place in Bhrâta. Nakula had conquered this place. (M.B., Sabha Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 11).

AMÂRÂVATI. It is the city of Indra, the King of the Devas. Its location is described in Devi Bâhagavata as follows: “Brahma’s world extends over 10,000 yôjanas on the Mahâmeru mountain. There are eight cities—each 2,500 square yôjanas in extent—of the Aṣṭadik-pâlakas in eight parts of this Brahmâpurî. Thus there are nine cities on the top of the Mahâ Meru. They are the following:

1. In the centre is Brahmâ’s city, Manovâti.
2. To the east of Manovâti, Indra’s city, Amârâvati.
3. In the south-east corner, Agni’s city, Tejovâti.
4. On the southern side, Yama’s city, Sânâyamâni.
5. In the south-west corner, Nirîti’s city, Kûptâvânâjâ.
6. In the west, Varûpa’s city, Sráddhâvâti.
7. In the north-west corner, Vâyu’s city, Gandhavâti.
8. In the north, Kubera’s city, Mahâdâya.
9. In the north-east corner, Śiva’s city, Ya’ovâti.

(Devi Bâhagavata, Āṣṭânâ Parâha.)

AMÂRÂNANA. See the word “PAŅÇATANTRA”.

AMÂVÄSI. In Amarakâo we read about Amâvâsî: “Amâvâsî tvamâvâsî daśâh sûryendusamgamah”. Amâvâsî means New Moon. “Âma” means “Saha”. So Amâvâsî is the Union of Sun and Moon in the same rāśi.

Once Bhiru Mahârâja cursed Agni. At that time Agni explained the importance of Amâvâsî. The oblations which are offered as homa into the fire become the food of the Devas and Pitrûs. Substances offered as homa on Purânamâsî become food of the Devas and those offered on Amâvâsî become food of the Pitrûs. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 7).

AMÂVAȘU I. Son of Purâravas by Urvâši. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 24).

Genealogy. From Vîśû, Brahmâ-Atri-Candra-Budhâ-Purâravas-Amâvasû.

AMÂVAȘU II. One of the Pitrûs. Once Aâchôdâ was fascinated by the physical charm of this Amâvasû and made advances of love to him. Amâvasû repelled her advances. On account of this impropriety of Aâchôdâ, who was a spiritual daughter of the Pitrûs, she was degraded and in her next birth was born as Kâli or Satyavâti. (Padma Purâna, Śrîtî Kânda).

AMÂBA. Daughter of a King of Kâti:

1) Ambâ and Vîcitrâvîra. Ambâ is an ill-starred character in the story of the Mahâbhârata. She had two younger sisters named Ambîkâ and Ambîlîkâ. Bhiṣma, who had taken a vow to remain a bachelor for life, had once taken Ambâ, Ambîkâ and Ambîlîkâ, the three daughters of the King of Kâti, to Hastinâpura. The circumstances in which this happened, are described in Devi Bâhagavata, Prâthama Skandha as follows: Šantanu, a King of the Candra Varînâ, had two wives, Gaṅgâ and Satyavâti. Bhiṣma was the son of Gaṅgâ and Cîtrângâda and Vîcitrâvîra were the sons of Satyavâti. Soon after Bhiṣma’s birth, Gaṅgâ vanished. After a long period of reign, Šantanu also died. Satyavâti and the three sons were left behind in the palace. According to a vow he had taken long ago, Bhiṣma, instead of succeeding to his father’s throne, left it to his brother Cîtrângâda. Once Cîtrângâda went for hunting in the forest. There he came across a Gandharva named Cîtrângâda. The Gandhariva did not like another man with his own name to be living in this world. So he killed the king. After that Viśitravīrya became king. Bhīṣma had to take up the task of arranging a suitable marriage for Viśitravīrya.

2) The Swayamvara. It was at this time that Bhīṣma came to know that the King of Kāśi was arranging the Swayamvara of his three daughters, Ambā, Ambikā and Ambālīkā. Bhīṣma went there and in the presence of all the kings who had assembled there, took the three princesses with him to Hastināpura. There he made all preparations for the marriage. But as the time for the ceremony approached, the eldest and most beautiful of the princesses, Ambā went to Bhīṣma and said: “I had already made up my mind long ago to marry Sālva, the King. Besides, we are deeply in love with each other. Therefore, please consider whether it is proper on the part of a great man like you to force me into another marriage.”

On hearing this, Bhīṣma allowed her to do as she liked. Ambā then went to King Sālva and made an appeal to him to accept her as his wife since they were mutually in love.

3) Sālva’s rejection. To her words Sālva replied: “What you have said about our mutual love is true. But it is not right for a man to accept a woman who has been accepted by another. I saw Bhīṣma taking you by hand and helping you into his chariot. Therefore go at once to Bhīṣma himself and ask him to accept you.” Stunned by his words, she turned away, to go to the forest to do penance.

4) Revenge on Bhīṣma. In the Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 17, we find that Ambā had cherished a secret desire to wreak vengeance on Bhīṣma. She went to the Āśrama of Saṅkhāvatīya Muni in the forest and stayed there for the night. Her wish to do penance was approved by the Muni. On the next day, Ambā’s maternal grandfather, Hotravāhana (Srūjaya) came that way. Hotravāhana came to know of all her misfortunes. He advised her to inform Parasurāma of all her grievances. Just at that moment Aktravāra, a follower of Parasurāma happened to come there. Hotravāhana introduced Ambā to Aktravāra. Both Aktravāra and Srūjaya explained all her affairs to Parasurāma. Parasurāma undertook to persuade Bhīṣma to accept Ambā (as his wife). But Parasurāma’s proposal was turned down by Bhīṣma. A terrible duel took place between them at Kurukṣetra. When the fight reached a critical stage, Nārada and the gods induced Parasurāma to withdraw from the duel. Thus the fight ended with equal victory to both. Finding that it was not possible to achieve her object through Parasurāma’s mediation, Ambā renounced food, sleep etc. and went to the Yamunā valley to do penance for six years. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 188). After that for one year she went on a fast, lying under the water in the river Yamunā. Again for another year she did penance, standing on the tip of the toes and eating only dry leaves. Next, she reduced the sky and earth to flames by doing penance. The goddess Gāngā appeared to her and when she understood her plight, she told Ambā that it was not possible to kill Bhīṣma. In her agony and despair, without even drinking water, she wandered about here and there. The goddess Gāngā cursed her to become a river in the Vatsa country. As a result of the curse, a part of her was turned into the river known as Ambā.

5) Śiva’s Boon. The remaining part of her engaged itself in penance. Śiva appeared to her and told her that in the next birth she would attain masculinity. He added that she would be born in the Drupada dynasty as a great archer under the name of Citrayodhi and kill Bhīṣma. Pleased with this prophecy, she took a vow that she would kill Bhīṣma and making a pyre, burnt herself to death.

6) Rebirth. King Drupada’s queen had been in great distress for a long time because she had no children. Drupada propitiated Śiva by worshipping him for an issue. Śiva blessed him and said that a girl would be born to him, but she would be transformed into a boy. In due course, the queen gave birth to a girl, but it was announced that it was a boy. Therefore the child had to be brought up, dressed like a boy. The child became famous under the name of Śikhāndi. When Śikhāndi attained youth, Drupada decided to look for a wife for him (her ?). Still he was greatly perplexed as to how to find a wife for Śikhāndi who was already a youthful virgin! But his wife assured Drupada that Śikhāndi would become a man, according to Śiva’s blessing. So, Drupada made a proposal for Śikhāndi’s marriage with the daughter of the King of Daśārha.

7) Śikhāndi’s Marriage. Hiranyavāra, the King of Daśārha, gave his daughter in marriage to Śikhāndi. The couple arrived at Kāmbalyapura. By this time the wife came to know that the “husband” was a woman. She disclosed the secret to her Ladies-in-waiting. They in turn communicated it to the king. Enraged at this, Hiranyavāra sent a messenger to King Drupada to ascertain the truth of the matter. He even began to make preparations for waging a war against Drupada, King of Pañcāla. Drupada and his queen were in a fix. At this stage the distressed Śikhāndi proceeded to the forest, determined to commit suicide. People were afraid of entering that forest because a Yakṣa named Śhūṇakarṇa lived there. Śikhāndi went to the premises of the Yakṣa and performed certain rites for a number of days. The Yakṣa appeared to her. Śikhāndi explained the whole matter to him. They entered into a contract. According to it, they exchanged their sexes—Śikhāndi receiving the male sex of the Yakṣa and the Yakṣa receiving the female sex of Śikhāndi. Śikhāndi returned home as a man. Drupada repeated with greater force his old plea that his child was a man. Hiranyavāra made a thorough examination of Śikhāndi and convinced himself of the truth. Many years after, Hiranyavāra died.

8) Kubera’s Arrival. At that time, in the course of his world tour Kubera arrived at the residence of Śhūṇakarṇa. The Yakṣa who was in female form, did not come out to receive Kubera. In his anger, Kubera pronounced a curse that the female sex of Śhūṇakarṇa and the male sex of Śikhāndi would continue for ever. The Yakṣa prayed for the lifting of the curse. Kubera released him from the curse by saying that after the death of Śikhāndi, the Yakṣa would be restored to his own male sex.

According to the previous agreement, Śikhāndi went to Śhūṇakarṇa’s place after the death of Hiranyavāra. But coming to know of all that had happened, he returned home. Thus Śikhāndi became a man permanently. Śikhāndi had received his training in arms under Dronācārya. In the great Kaurava-Pāṇḍava battle, he became a charioteer.
9) Sikhandi's Revenge. The Mahabharata, Bhishma Parva, Chapter 108, describes Bhishma's encounter with Sikhandi during the Kaurava-Pandava battle. The Pandavas started the day's battle by keeping Sikhandi in the vanguard. Bhima, Arjuna, Abhimanyu and other warriors were giving him support. It was Bhishma who led the Kaurava forces. Arrows began to fly from both sides. It was the tenth day of the battle and Sikhandi shot three arrows aimed at Bhishma's breast. Bhishma, with a smile of contempt said to Sikhandi, "Sikhandi! Brahman created you as a woman. You may do as you like". Hearing this taunt, Sikhandi became more infuriated. Arjuna inspired him with greater courage. After that, keeping Sikhandi in front, Arjuna began to fight with Bhishma. Sikhandi also showered his arrows on him. Ten of these arrows of Sikhandi hit Bhishma's breast. Bhishma disregarded even those arrows. At last he said: "I cannot kill the Pandavas because they are invulnerable (avadhāyā). I cannot kill Sikhandi because he is really a woman and not man. Though I am also invulnerable and cannot be killed in battle, yet today I have to die; the time has come for me to die." Meanwhile Sikhandi and Arjuna were discharging a continuous and heavy shower of arrows at Bhishma. At last Bhishma fell down. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 173).

AMBĀJANMA. It is a place of sacred bath where the sage Nārada usually resides. Those who die here will attain salvation (Mokṣa) by Nārada's blessing, according to M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 81.

AMBĀLĪKĀ. (1) The youngest of the three daughters of the King of Kaśi—Ambā, Ambikā and Ambālīkā. Vīcitavrīya, son of Santanu married Ambikā and Ambālīkā. The mother of this princess was Kausalyā.

2) Pāṇḍu's Mother. Vīcitavrīya died before children were born to his wives. To avoid the extinction of the family, Satyavati, mother of Vīcitavrīya summoned Vyāsa, her other son and asked him to beget a son for Ambikā, Vyāsa obeyed his mother half-heartedly. Ambālīkā did not like the dark-complexioned, crudely attired Vyāsa. Still owing to the Mother's pressure, she passively submitted to the act. As a result of their union was born Dīrtarāṣṭra, who was blind from his birth. The grief-stricken mother called Vyāsa again and asked him to have union with Ambālīkā this time. As Ambālīkā's face was pale at the time of their union, a child with pale complexion was born to her. He was named Pāṇḍu. Having thus failed in both attempts, Satyavati asked Ambikā to go to Vyāsa again. At night Ambikā secretly disguised her waiting-maid and sent her in her own place, to Vyāsa. The waiting-maid experienced exquisite pleasure in Vyāsa's company. As a result, the most intelligent son was born to her. It was he who became the renowned Vidura. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 106).

AMBARIṢA I. A King of the Iṣkvāku dynasty.

1) Genealogy and Birth. From Vyāsa was born in the following order: Brahmadā, Marīci-Kaśyapa. - Vivasvān-Vaivasvatamau-Iṣkvāku-Vikuiuki - Saśāda - Purāṇa-ya-Kukutstha-Anenas-Prululā-Praṇoṣajit - Yuvanāṣva-Māṇḍhātā-Ambāriṣa. Māṇḍhātā had three sons: Ambāriṣa, Mucukunda and Purukutsa and fifty daughters. The Muni (Sage) Saubhāra married the daughters.

2) Ambāriṣa's Yāga (sacrifice). In Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa there is a story of Devendra's theft of the sacrificial cow from Ambāriṣa's yāgaśālā. Devendra could not bear the thought of King Ambāriṣa winning world-renown and glory by performing yāgas. Therefore Indra stole the sacrificial cow and took it away. The Upādhyāya (Chief Priest) was alarmed at the disappearance of the cow and expressed his opinion to the King that it would be enough to sacrifice a human being instead of the cow. The King searched for the cow in all countries, cities and forests. At last he reached the peak of Bhrgutuṅga where the sage Rēkita lived with his wife and children. The King explained to the sage the whole story. He requested him to sell one of his sons in exchange for 100,000 cows. Rēkita had three sons. The eldest was his father's favourite and the youngest was the mother's pet. In the end, Rēkita sold the second son, Sunāṣeṣeṇa in return for 100,000 cows. On his return journey with Sunāṣeṣeṇa the king rested for a while at Puṣkara Tirtha. There Sunāṣeṣeṇa happened to meet his uncle Vīsvāmīra and complained to him about his sad plight. Sunāṣeṣeṇa's wish was that the king's yāga should be performed and at the same time his own life-span should be extended. Vīsvāmīra promised to save Sunāṣeṣeṇa. He called Madhusuchandas and his other sons and said to them: "One of you must take the place of Ambāriṣa's sacrificial cow and save the life of Sunāṣeṣeṇa. God will bless you." But none of the sons of Vīsvāmīra was prepared to become the sacrificial cow. Vīsvāmīra uttered a curse on his sons that they would have to spend a thousand years on earth, eating dog-flesh. Then he turned to Sunāṣeṣeṇa and told him that if he prayed to the gods at the time of Ambāriṣa's yāga, they would save him. So Sunāṣeṣeṇa went to Ambāriṣa's yāgaśālā. As ordered by the assembled guests, Ambāriṣa bound Sunāṣeṣeṇa and had him dressed in blood-red robes, ready for the sacrifice. Sunāṣeṣeṇa began to praise and pray to the gods. Soon Indra appeared and blessed him with longevity. He also rewarded Ambāriṣa for his yāga. Thus Sunāṣeṣeṇa was saved. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa Bāla Kāṛḍa, Sarga 61).

3) Ambāriṣa and Dūrvāsas. In Bhāgavata we see a story which describes how the Sudarṣana Cakra which emerged from Ambāriṣa's forehead chased Dūrvāsas in all the three worlds. Ambāriṣa was a devout worshipper of Viṣṇu. From the very beginning of his reign, peace and prosperity spread all over the country. Mahāviṣṇu who was pleased with the deep piety and devotion of Ambāriṣa appeared to him and bestowed on him the control of his Viṣṇu's Sudarṣana Cakra. After that Ambāriṣa started the observance of Ekādaśi vrata. The rigour of the observance alarmed even Indra. He decided to obstruct the observance somehow or other. At that time, Dūrvāsas arrived in devaloka. Indra instigated Dūrvāsas to spoil the Ekādaśi observance of Ambāriṣa. Dūrvāsas went to Ambāriṣa's palace. There the King received him with due respect and sent him to the river Kālinḍi for his bath and morning rites. Dūrvāsas went for his bath and deliberately stayed away till the conclusion of Ambaṛiṣa’s Ekyādaśi observance. At the end of the observance, after feeding the gods with his offerings, Ambaṛiṣa kept the remaining portion for Durvāsas. After his bath etc., Durvāsas returned, but he was furious when he was offered the leavings of the food of the gods and refused to take any food. In his anger he advanced towards Ambaṛiṣa. A terrible monster Kṛṣyā emanated from the Maharṣi and was about to destroy Ambaṛiṣa. Ambaṛiṣa at once called upon Sudarṣana Cakra, which appeared instantly and after cutting the throat of Kṛṣyā, turned against Durvāsas. Terrified by it, Durvāsas began to flee for life. The Cakra pursued him at his heels. Durvāsas went to Indra and sought refuge with him. But the Cakra followed him there. Indra pleaded helplessness. Then the Maharṣi went to Brahmā and sued for his help. There also the Cakra pursued him. Brahmā sent him to Śiva. Śiva was also unable to give him shelter. Sudarṣana continued to chase him. Durvāsas then sought shelter with Mahāviṣṇu. Viṣṇu told him plainly that there was no alternative but to go and sue for mercy to Ambaṛiṣa himself and advised him to do so. At last Durvāsas returned to Ambaṛiṣa and begged his pardon. Ambaṛiṣa saved him from Sudarṣana Cakra and described to him the glory resulting from the observance of Ekyādaśi vrata. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

4) Other Details (1) Ambaṛiṣa performed a yāga in the Yamunā valley. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter I, Verse 277; Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 6; Vana Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 2).

(2) Maharṣi Durvāsas recalled Ambaṛiṣa’s power. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 265, Verse 33).

(3) The Sage Viṣṇu once told Dharmaputra that Ambaṛiṣa was one of the 16 great kings who lived in ancient times. The 16 reputed Kings were: Marutta, Suhotra, Paurava, Śibi, Śrī Rāma, Bhagiratha, Dilīpa, Māndhātā, Yāyāti, Ambaṛiṣa, Śaśānīdu, Gaya, Rāntideva, Bharata, Prthu and Pārasūrāma. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 64).

(4) Ambaṛiṣa fought single-handed against thousands of Kings. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 64).

(5) He performed one hundred yāgas. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 64).

(6) Ambaṛiṣa once questioned Indra about his (Ambaṛiṣa’s) army Chief Sudeva becoming more mighty than himself. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 98, Verses 6-11).

(7) Ambaṛiṣa gave 110 crores of cows to the Brahmins. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 23).

(8) Ambaṛiṣa was also among the Munis who committed theft of Agastyā’s lotuses. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 24).

(9) Besides giving cows to Brahmins, Ambaṛiṣa gave them the country also. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 8).

AMBAṬIṢHA II. When Balabhadrarāma entered the lower world (Pātāla) after death, among the Nāgas who welcomed him, there was one called “Ambaṛiṣa”. (M.B., Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

AMBaṬIṢHA I. King Śrutāyu, who belonged to the party of the Kauravas was the ruler of Ambaṭṭha land and so he was called Ambaṭṭha. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 96, Verses 39-40). He was killed in the fight with Arjuna. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 93, Verses 60-69).

AMBAṬIṢHA II. There was a hero called Ambaṭṭha among the warriors on the side of the Pāṇḍavaśas. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 50). He fought against King Čedi who was on the side of the Kauravas and in the fight King Čedi fell.

AMBAṬIṢHA III. See the word “VARAṣṇa”.

AMBaṬIṢHAM. A region in ancient India. It is believed that it was to the north of Sindha. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 7).

AMBHORUḤA. A son of Sage Viṣvāmitra. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 59).

AMBīKĀ I. Elder sister of Ambālikā. (See AMBA-LIKĀ).

AMBīKĀ II. Another name of Pārvatī. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 12).

AMBUMATI. A river. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 56).

AMBUVĀHI. A river. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 27). Praising this river at dawn and dusk will bring divine grace. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 20).

AMBUVICA. One of the Kings of Magadha. He had a minister named Mahākārni. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 203, Verses 17-19).

AMHU. An Asura in the period of the Rgveda. This Asura had been doing much harm to the hermits. Purukūṭa was the hermit whom he tormented most. Indra vanquished this Asura and destroyed seven of his cities. (Rgveda, Viṣṇudvīpa, Sūktā 51, Khanda 7).

AMITADHVĀJA. A Rākṣasa. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 50).

AMITAŬJĀ. A mighty Kṣatriya King of the PāṇČāla kingdom. He was born from the element of a Rākṣasa named Ketumāṇa. Before the Pāṇḍavaśas went to war, they had sent an invitation to him. He was one of the distinguished royal allies of the Pāṇḍavaśas. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 12; Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 12; Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 71, Verse 11).

AMITRAJIT. A King. In his country there were innumerable Śiva temples. Nārada Muni who was delighted by this sight, went to the Palace and said to Amitrajit: “In the city of Campākāvati there is a Gandharva virgin named Malayagandhinī. She has been abducted by Kaṅkālaketu, a Rākṣasa. She has promised to marry the person who will rescue her from him. Therefore please save her from the Rākṣasa.” As suggested by Nārada Amitrajit killed Kaṅkālaketu in battle and recovered Malayagandhinī and married her. Vira was their son. (Skandha Purāṇa).

AMOGHA I. A Yāṣṭa who accompanied Śiva when the latter once went on a journey to Bhadravaṭa. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 35).

AMOGHA II. This name has been used as a synonym of Skanda. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 232, Verse 5).

AMOGHA III. A synonym of Śiva. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 114).

AMOGHA IV. A synonym of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 25).

AMOGHA (M). An Agni which originated from Brhaspati’s family. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 24).

AMOGHA. Śāntanu Maharṣi’s wife. Once Brahmā visited Śāntanu Maharṣi’s Aśrama. As the Maharṣi was not at home, it was Amoghā who received the guest with due reverence. Fascinated by the irresistible charm of Amoghā, Brahma had an involuntary emission of seminal fluid. He felt ashamed of his own weakness and left the Āśrama immediately. The Mahārṣi who returned to the Āśrama soon after, came to know from his wife whose semen it was. He asked Amoghā to accept Brah. Daeva's precious semen and not to let it be wasted. Being a devoted wife, she accepted it, but unable to bear the divine pregnancy, she deposited it in the water lying in the valley of the Yugandhara mountain. From that time, it became a place of holy bath, known as Lobita. It was by bathing in this holy water that Paraśurāma washed away his sin of annihilating the Kṣaṭrivas. (Padma Purāṇa, Śrāṇi Khaṇḍa, 55).

AMPIṬṬA. A name for barbers. ‘Aṃpiṭṭa’ is derived from the Sanskrit word ‘Aṃbiṣṭha’. The word Aṃbiṣṭha means Physician. In olden days barbers were physicians also. Going about from house to house, they could easily practise both these professions. Since barbers practised physic also they were called Aṃbiṣṭhas. Aṃpiṭta is a corrupted form of Aṃbiṣṭha. (Dravidian Philology).

Barbers sometimes style themselves as “Pandits”. It is on the basis of this that we have today, “All Kerala Pandit Sabha” and other similar names. There is a legend on the basis of which this community has assumed the title of “Pandit”.

Long ago when Śrī Buddha was about to go to the forest for performing Tapas, thousands of people flocked together to have his darśana. Buddha wished to continue his journey after shaving his head. Buddha asked loudly whether anyone in the crowd was prepared to shave his head. Only a single man came forward cheerfully to do that work. Buddha turned to him and said: “My dear friend, you are the only Pandit in this crowd. You have the wisdom to understand that there is nothing disgraceful in shaving one’s head.”

He shaved Buddha’s head. From that day his descendants came to be known as “Pandits”.

AMRṬĀ. Daughter of a King of Magadhā. She was the wife of Aṇāśva and mother of Purīkṣit. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 41).

AMRṬAM. (See PRĀMṛṬAM).

AMRṬAM. A delicious and precious food obtained from the ocean of Milk when the Devas and Asuras churned it. In Chapter 152 of Agni Purāṇa, the word “Mṛtam” is defined as wealth received by begging and “Aṃṛtam”, as wealth received without begging, and “Pṛṃṭam” as another kind of wealth obtained without begging.

1) Cause of Kṛṣṇādhi-māthanaṃ. (Churning of the Sea of Milk)—Once when Mahārṣi Durvāsas was travelling through a forest, he met the Apsarā woman, Menakā, with a garland of Kalpaka flowers in her hand. The fragrance of the flowers filled the whole forest. Durvāsas approached Menakā and requested her to give the garland to him. The Vidyādharī (Apsarā woman) prostrated before the Mahārṣi with reverence and presented the garland to him. Wearing that garland on his hair, Durvāsas went to devolaka.

There he saw Indra riding on his elephant, Airāvata, accompanied by his retinue of Devas. The Mahārṣi took the rare garland from his head and presented it to Indra, the King of Devas. Indra received the garland and placed it on Airāvata’s head. The elephant was attracted by the fragrance of the garland and took it in its trunk, examined it by smelling it and then threw it on the ground.

Durvāsas, who became angry at the way in which his garland was slighted by Indra said to him: “Since you have treated my garland with disrespect, the glory and prosperity of devolaka will perish!” On hearing the curse, Indra alighted from the elephant, frightened. He begged pardon of the Mahārṣi. The furtive Muni continued: “I am not soft-hearted; nor am I of a forgiving nature. Other Munis may forgive. Remember, I am Durvāsas. You have become so haughty because other Munis like Vasiṣṭha and Gautama have been flattering you too much.” Having said this Durvāsas went his way. Indra returned to Amārāvati.

From that day the glory of devolaka began to decline. The three worlds became dull. Even the plants and shrubs began to wither. The performance of yāgas came to an end. The Devas began to be affected by the infirmities of old age. Taking advantage of this situation, the Asuras started preparations for opposing the Devas. Under the oppression of the Asuras, the Devas groaned in distress. Led by Agni Deva they sought refuge under Brahā. Brahā led them to Mahāviṣṇu. They all joined in praising Viṣṇu who appeared and told them like this: “O Gods! I shall enhance your glory. Do as I tell you. Along with the Asuras bring all kinds of medicinal herbs and deposit them in the ocean of Milk. Obtain Amṛtam from it by churning it with Mahāmeru as the churning staff and Vāsuki as the rope. The Amṛtam (Amṛta) which will be produced by churning the Milk sea, will make you strong and deathless. I shall see that the Asuras will share in your troubles but not in enjoying Amṛtam.”

2) Churning of the Milk Sea. After Viṣṇu had vanished, the Devas made a treaty with the Asuras and began to work for getting Amṛtam. All of them joined together in bringing various kinds of medicinal herbs and after putting them in the Milk sea which was as clear as the cloudless sky, began to churn it, using Manthara Mountain as the churning staff and snake Vāsuki as the rope. The party of Devas was posted at the tail-end of Vāsuki while the Asuras took their stand at the head. The Asuras became enraptured by the fiery breath coming out of Vāsuki’s mouth. The clouds which were blown by that breath invigorated the Devas.

Mahāviṣṇu transformed himself into a tortoise, and sitting in the middle of the Milk Sea served as the foundation for the Manthara Mountain, the churning staff. Assuming another form, invisible both to Devas and Asuras, Mahāviṣṇu pressed down the Manthara Mountain from above.

While churning the Milk Sea like this, the first object that rose to the surface was Kāmadhenu. Both Devas and Asuras were strongly attracted towards Kāmadhenu. While all were standing spellbound, Vārūṇidevi with her enchanting dreamy eyes next appeared on the surface. Pārījātam was the third to appear. Fourth, a group of Apsarā women of marvellous beauty floated up. The Moon appeared as the fifth. Śiva received the Moon. The venom which came out of the Milk Sea as the sixth item, was absorbed by Nāgas. After that arose Bhagavān Dhanvantari, dressed in pure white robes and carrying a Kamandalu in his hand filled with Amṛtam. All were delighted at this sight. Next Mahālakṣmī made her appearance in all her glory with a lotus in her hand and seated in an open lotus flower. Gandharvas sang celestial songs in her presence; Apsarā women danced. For her bath, the Gaṅgā river arrived there with her tributaries. The Milk Sea itself took on physical form and offered her a garland of ever-fresh lotus flowers. Brahmā bedecked her with ornaments. After that Lakṣmīdevī, fully adorned in all her magnificent jewels, in the presence of all Devas, joined the bosom of Mahāviṣṇu. The Asuras were displeased at it. They snatched the pot of Amṛtam from Dhanvantari and fled away.

3) How Amṛtam was recovered. With the loss of Amṛtam, the Devas were in a fix. They began to consider how the pot of Amṛtam could be recovered. Accordingly Mahāviṣṇu transformed himself into a celestial virgin, Mohini, of extraordinary beauty. She approached the Asuras as a shy girl. The Asuras were enchanted by her surpassing beauty. They asked her, “Who are you?” Looking down on the ground, Mohini replied: “I am the little sister of Dhanvantari. By the time I came out of the Milk Sea, the Devas and Asuras had already gone. Being lonely I am going about in search of a suitable mate.”

On hearing her words, the Asuras began to make friends with her one by one, determined not to waste this opportunity. They told her that she should distribute Amṛtam to all of them and in the end she should marry one of them. Mohini agreed, but added: “All of you should close your eyes. I shall serve Amṛtam to all. He who opens his eyes last, must serve Amṛtam to me and he will marry me”.

All of them accepted this condition. They sat in front of Mohini with closed eyes. In a moment Mohini left the place with the pot of Amṛtam and went to deva-loka.

4) Rāhu’s neck is cut. When the Asuras opened their eyes, Mohini was not to be seen. Finding that they were betrayed, they were in great perplexity. All of them pursued Mohini to deva-loka. Devas had put the Sun and Moon gods on guard duty at the gates of deva-loka. At the instance of the Asuras, Rāhu in disguise entered the divine assembly chamber. The Sun and Moon gods detected him and Viṣṇu with his weapon, Sudarśana Cakra cut open his neck. Swearing that he would wreak vengeance on the Sun and Moon Rāhu returned. In the 8th Skandha of Bāhagavata it is said that even now from time to time Rāhu swallows the Sun and Moon, but they escape through the open gash in his neck and this is known as solar eclipse and lunar eclipse.

5) Defeat of the Asuras. Indra and all other gods took Amṛtam. The enraged Asuras attacked the gods, who had gained strength and vigour by taking Amṛtam. The Asuras were driven away in all directions. All the three worlds began to enjoy glory and prosperity again.

6) Kalakāṭa. The story of how the deadly poison, Kālakāṭa arose at the churning of the ocean of Milk, is given in M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 18, Verses 42-45, as follows: After many precious things had come up Kālakāṭa poison with flames and flames, appeared on the surface of the ocean. Its strong smell caused a stupor in all the three worlds. Fearing that the world will perish, Brahmā requested Siva to swallow that poison. Siva gulped it down, but stopped it in his throat. From that day he became “Nilakaṇṭha”.

7) The story of Airāvata. Indra’s tusker Airāvata was responsible for the churning of the ocean of Milk. But in the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 42 it is said that a white elephant with four tusks arose during the churning of the ocean of Milk and that Devendra caught and tamed it. This is an obvious contradiction. Besides, in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyaka-kanda, 14th Sarga, the wounded Jaṭāyu describing his family history to Śri Rāma, gives the following account about the origin of Airāvata:

Kaśyapa, one of the Prajāpatis, married the eight daughters of Dakṣa. One of them named Krodhavāsā had ten daughters by Kaśyapa. They were: Mrig, Mrgamadā, Hari, Bhadramadā, Mātāngi, Sārdūli, Svetā, Surabhi, Surasā and Kadru. Of them Bhadramadā gave birth to a daughter, Irāvati. The tusker Airāvata is Irāvati’s son.

An explanation for this discrepancy may be seen in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 3rd Section, Chapter 1. Now six Manvantaras have passed (See ‘MANVANTARA’). This is the seventh Manvantara. Each Manvantara has a new Indra. According to this, different Indras have their own Airāvatas. This is the only explanation for this apparent contradiction.

8) Amṛtam and Garuḍa. There is another story about Amṛtam which says that Garuḍa once went to deva-loka and brought Amṛtam from there to be given to the Nāgas, but Devendra came down and took it back. This story is given in Mahābhārata from Chapter 27 onwards. Vinātā, a wife of Kaśyapa gave birth to Garuḍa and Kadru and her sister gave birth to the Nāgas. Once there was a dispute between Vinātā and Kadru. Vinātā said that the hairs on the tail of Uccaiśravas, Devendra’s horse, were white but Kadru asserted that they were black. To settle the dispute they made a bet. The condition was that the loser must become the servant maid of the winner. As instructed by Kadru, some of the Nāgas went in advance and hung down from the tail of Uccaiśravas, thus giving the false appearance of a tail with black hairs. By this trick Vinātā lost the bet and had to become Kadru’s servant maid. As a result of it, the task of looking after Kadru’s children became Garuḍa’s duty. Kadru told him that if he fetched Amṛtam from deva-loka and gave it to the Nāgas, she was prepared to release him from the bondage. So Garuḍa flew up to deva-loka, fought with the gods and defeated them. He returned with the pot of Amṛtam and gave it to the Nāgas. The Nāgas went to take their bath after placing the pot on darbha grass spread on the floor. Just then Devendra swooped down and carried away the pot of Amṛtam to deva-loka. When the Nāgas returned after their purifying bath, the pot was not to be seen. In their greed they began to lick the darbha grass on which the pot was placed. The sharp edge of the grass cut their tongues into two. This is why the Nāgas (snakes) came to have forked tongues.

Amṛtam which has been thus recovered after many such adventures, is still preserved carefully in deva-loka.

AMSÁ. A sage of the family of Marící.

1) Genealogy. He was descended from Vișṇu through Brahmac, Marící and Kaśyapa.

2) Birth. Marící was one of the six sons, all rśis, of Brahmac. These six sons, born parthogenetically of Brahmac, were: Marící, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha and Kṛta. Marící had a son named Kaśyapa. Kaśyapa married the thirteen daughters of Dakṣa. The eldest of them, Aditi, gave birth to twelve sons Dhatā, Ayaman, Mitrā, Sakra, Varuṇa, Aníśa, Bhaga, Vivasvān, Pūṣan, Śāvata, Tvāṣṭa and Viṣṇu. Aníśa is one of these twelve sons who have been called the twelve Ādityas. (See Chapter 65 of Adi Parva of the Mahābhārata).

3) Events. The Mahābhārata says (Śloka 66, Chapter 123) that Aníśa was present at the time of Arjuna’s birth when several devas had come there to see the infant. In Śloka 34, Chapter 45 of Śalya Parva it is said that Aníśa was present on the occasion of the Abhiṣeka of Skanda-deva. Aníśa is said to have presented to Skandadeva five good warriors: Parigha, Vaṭa, Bhima, Dahanā and Dhatu.

AMSAPÁYA. Name of a priest (Ṛtvik) qualified to officiate at a sacrifice. This priest officiated at the sacrifice (yajña) performed by Brahmac at Puṣkarakṣetra. (See Chapter 34 of Padma Purāṇa).

AMSĀVATĀRA. The incarnation of God on earth is called avatāra. When the incarnation is only partial, that is, when only some of the divine elements incarnate, it is called anāṁsāvatāra (Aníśa=part). Chapters 54 to 64 of Adi Parva of the Mahābhārata give us a list of the gods who have incarnated partially. The following list of devas and their anāṁsāvātāras is based upon the account given in the fourth Skanda of Śri Mahādevi Bhāgavata.

Name of the god Name of the anāṁsāvatāra
1. Kaśyapa Vasudeva
2. Ađiśeṣa Balabhadrā
3. Nārāyaṇarṣi Śrī Kṛṣṇa
4. Yamadharma Yudhiṣṭhira
5. Aśvinidevas Nakula and Sahadeva
6. Dharma Vidura
7. Śiva Aśvathāmā
8. Gandharvarājā Devaka
9. Aṣṭavaśu Bhīṣma
10. Marudgana Kṛpa; Kṛtavarmā
11. Aditi Devaki
12. Naraṇa Arjuna
13. Vāyu Bhimaśena
14. Śūrya Karna
15. Bṛhaspati Drona
16. Varuṇa Santanu
17. Marut Vīrāta
18. Harīna Dhrītaśrṣtra
19. Dvāpara Śakuni
20. Pāvaka Dhrīṣṭadyumna
21. Kali Duryodhana
22. Rākṣasa Śikhandi
23. Varuṇa Drupada
24. Viśvedevas Sons of Pāṇčāli
25. Dṛiti Mādri
26. Vipracitti Jarāsandha
27. Hayagrīva Keśi
28. Bāṣkala Bhagadatta
29. Lamba Pralamba
30. Sanatkumāra Pradyumna

Name of the god Name of the anāṁsāvatāra
31. Laḵṣmi Pāncāli
32. Siddhi Kuntī
33. Māti Gāndhārī
34. Jaya Hiraṇyākṣa
35. Vījaya Hiraṇyakaśipu
36. Hiraṇyākṣa Ravaṇa
37. Hiraṇyakaśipu Kumbhakarna
38. Rāvaṇa Śiṣṭapāla
39. Kumbhakarna Daṇḍavakra
40. Prahāda Śalya
41. Kālanaṇi Kariṇa
42. Anuhāda Dhṛṣṭaketu
43. Khara Dhenuka.

(For more details see under the word, AVATĀRA).

AMSUDHANAPATTANA. Name of an ancient town in North India. Bharata passed through this town while going to Ayodhyā from Kekaya after Daśaratha’s death. Vālmikī has described this town in the Rāmāyaṇa in this context.

AMSUMĀN. Name of a King belonging to the Solar dynasty (Śrīyā Varāṇa).

2) Birth. Śagara, a king of the Śrīyā varāṇa, (mentioned above) had two wives, Sumati (Vaidarbhi) and Keśinī (Saibā) by name. Keśinī gave birth to a son named Asaṃanjas. Aṁśumān was the son of Asaṃanjas and the father of the famous Bhragratha. (For the whole title, BHAGIRATHA).

3) Some other details. Aṁśumān was one of the Kings who attended the Svayaṁvara of Pāncāli. (Vide Śloka 11, Chapter 185 of Adi Parva of the Mahābhārata).

AMSUMĀN II. There is a reference to one Aṁśumān in the course of the description of the Viśvedevas.

AMSUMĀN III. King of Bhoja who was killed by Drona in the war at Kurukṣetra (Vide Śloka 14, Chapter 6 of Karṇa Parva).

Aṁśumātī. The daughter of the Gandharva King named Drona. Her story is narrated in the Śiva Purāṇa to illustrate the benefits of performing the Padaṇa-Varāṇa. Śūta expatiates on the importance and advantages of Padaṇa-Varāṇa to a number of sages in Naimiṣāranya. King Satyavarāṇa was a scrupulous observer of Padaṇa-Varāṇa. Unfortunately he defaulted in his observance of the Varāṇa owing to unavoidable circumstances and, after his death, was born again as the King of Vidarbha. He was killed in a battle by the King of Śiva and his wife, pregnant at that time, fled to a forest. She gave birth to a son on the bank of a river. Then, when she stepped into the river to drink some water, she was carried away by a crocodile. Presently a Brahmin woman named Uṣa happened to pass that way with her son named Śucivrāṇa. Seeing a newborn infant there, that Brahmin woman took him, gave him the name, Dharmaṇa and brought him up as her own son. According to the advice of a pious Brahmin named Śaṇḍilya, both Śucivrāṇa and Dharmaṇa started performing Pradoṣa-Vrata. Lord Śiva was pleased with them and gave them much wealth. Dharma-gupta happened to meet Anāmitra, daughter of the Gandharva King, Dramila, one day in a forest and they fell in love with each other. Dramila came to know of their love and so gave his daughter in marriage to Dharma-gupta. As a result of the wealth and power which he had acquired by observing strictly Pradoṣa-Vrata Dharma-gupta was able to return to Vīdarbha, defeat King Ṣiva and regain his kingdom from him.

AMŪRTARAYAS. He was a renowned King of ancient Bhrata and the father of King Gaya. Amūtrayas received a sword from Pūrṇa. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 75).

ANĀDIPAKA. (See Pañcatantra).

ANĀDHṚṢṬI I. A King of the Pūrṇa dynasty.
Anādhṛṣṭi is a son born to Radraus-van by Miśrakeśī, an Apsarī woman. (M.B., Ṣādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 8-12). Anādhṛṣṭi has two synonyms, Rācevī and Anavagbhāṇu.

ANĀDHṚṢṬI II. Verse 58, Chapter 14 of Sabhā Parva mentions seven great Yādavas. One Anādhṛṣṭi is named amongst the seven. This Anādhṛṣṭi was present at the marriage of Abhimanyu at Iapalavannagara. (M.B., Viṛata Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 22). There was one Anādhṛṣṭi also amongst the warriors who encompassed Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa at the battle-field of Kurukṣetra. (M.B., Udyyoga Parva, Chapter 151, Verse 67). He was the son of King Vṛddhakṣema. Hence he was called Vṛddhakṣema also.

ANĀDHṚṢṬYĀ. One of the Kauravas. (M.B., Ṣādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 105).

ANĀGATA. (See PañCATANTRA).

ANĀGHA I. Son of Vasīṣṭha. He had seven sons, by his wife Uṣjā. They were: Rājās, Gotra, Ērdhvabāhu, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas and Sukra. Holy characters, they became the saptarasī of the age of the third Manu. (Manvantara).

ANĀGHA II. was a Gandharva. He participated in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (M.B., Ṣādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 53).

ANĀGHA III. A king called Anagha is referred to in Verse 22, Chapter 8 of M.B.

ANĀGHA IV. Skanda has a synonym, Anagha as well. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 232, Verse 5).

ANĀGHA V. A bird named Anagha is mentioned among the children of Garuḍa. (M.B., Udyyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 12).

ANĀGHA VI. Used as a synonym of Śiva. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 38).

ANĀGHA VII. A synonym of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 29).

ANAGHAM. A place in ancient India. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 9).

ANAGNI(S). They are Pāḍīs. Pāḍīs like Aṇgivāttas, Barhisads, Anagnis, Sāṅgis were offsprings of Brahma. Two damsels, Menā and Dhārīṇī were born to them of Svadhā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

ANALĀ I. A daughter of Dākṣa. Some of the other daughters are Aditi, Ditī, Danu, Kālikā, Tāmṛā, Krodhavāṣa, Manu and Analā. These daughters were married to Kāṣyapa, son of Marici. Trecs, creepers etc. owe their origin to Analā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranya kāṇḍa, Canto 14).

ANALĀ II. Another Analā is referred to in Verse 71, Chapter 66 of Ādi Parva, in M.B. This Analā was the wife of Kāṣyapa and a great granddaughter of Krodhavāṣa, the daughter of Dākṣa. Krodhavāṣa begot Śvetā, and she Surabhi; Rohinī was the daughter of Surabhi and Analā was Rohinī’s daughter.

ANALĀ III. Daughter of Mālyavān born of Sundarī. She was married to Vīvāyasu. Kumbhinaśi was her daughter. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Uttarakāṇḍa).

ANĀLAMBĀ. A sacred pool. A bath in the pool is as efficacious as the Puruṣāmṛeda yajña. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 32).

ANĀMITRA I. A king of the Solar dynasty. The Ātmapurāṇa refers to him as the son of Nīghna.

ANĀMITRA II. Anamitra, son of Dṛṣṭa is referred to as a king of the Yādavas in Ātmapurāṇa.

ANĀMITRA III. One Anamitra, son of Viṣṇi is referred to in Mātsyapurāṇa. He was the father of Śini.

ANĀMITRA IV. A son born to King Kṛṣṇa and his wife Mādrī.

ANĀMITRA. Father of Cākṣuṣa, the Manu of the 6th Manvantara and son of sage Anamitra. (See Ananda).

ANĀNATA. A sage. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 4, Sūka 175).

ANANGA I. Son of Kardmaprajapati, and a king reputed for his love of the people and unparalleled integrity. He had a son called Atubala. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 91).

ANANGA II. (See Kāmadeva).

ANANGA. A river in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 35).

ANANATA I. (ĀDIŚEṢA).
1) Genealogy. Mahāviṇu begot Brahmā and he the Prajāpatis and Anantā (Ādiśeṣa) is one of the Prajāpatis. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakāṇḍa, Canto 14, Verse 7). Ananta is also referred to as the son of Kāṣyapa, one of the Prajāpatis born of Krodhā. (M.B., Ṣādi Parva, Chapter 105, Verse 41). Also Balabhadrāma, elder brother of Śri Kṛṣṇa was a partial incarnation of Ananta.

2) Differences with mother. Vinātā and Krodhā were two wives of Kāṣyapa prajāpati. Garuḍa was born as Vinātā’s son and numerous serpents like Ananta, Vāsuki, Takṣaka, Kārkotaka were sons of Krodhā. Once a controversy developed between Vinātā and Krodhā, the latter saying that there were a few black hairs on the tail of Airāvata and the former denying it. It was agreed that she who proved wrong in the argument would become the slave of the other. To prove herself to be right Krodhā, the same night, asked her sons to go and stay suspended in the hairs of Airāvata’s tail. Some of the sons agreed to do so, while her other (prominent) sons like Ananta expressed their disinclination to do such an unethical act. Krodhā cursed these disobedient children of hers to die at the serpent yajña of Janamejaya, whereupon Ananta and his supporters departed in sorrow. (M.B., Ṣādi Parva, Chapter 65).

3) Ananta’s new engagement. Departing thus from his mother Ananta visited sacred centres like Gandhāmādana, Badari and practised austerities. And, Brahma appeared before Ananta and asked him not to worry, but to go to the nether world and support the world on his hoods. Brahma also told him that Garuḍa would render him all help in the new task. Blessed thus by Brahmā, Ananta gladly took up the new job. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 24).

4) Ananta has another abode in the palace of Varuṇa in the west. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 18).

5) Ananta’s prowess. About Ananta’s prowess Viṣṇu Purāṇa has the following to say: At the bottom of Pātāla there is a base (Tamāsīc) form of Viṣṇu called Ādiśeṣa. Even the Dānavas and the Daityas are not able to describe the attributes of that form. The Siddhas call this Ādiśeṣa Ananta who is worshipped by Devas and rṣis. Ananta has 100 heads and the Svastika mark which is clearly visible is his ornament. The 1000 gems in his head illuminate all regions, and he renders the Asuras powerless for the good of all the worlds. Ādiśeṣa whose eyes ever rotate due to the overflow of his prowess, and who wears blue apparel and garlands of white gems shines forth like another Mount Kailāsa beautified with garlands of clouds and by the flow of the Gaṅgā. Śrī Devī and Vāruṇa Devī serve Ananta who holds in one hand a lāṅgīkula and in the other a mace (mūsala). As the deluge (end of a yuga Kalpānta) approaches Rudra emanates from the faces of Ananta and consumes the three worlds. Ādiśeṣa dwells in the nether world wearing the whole earth as a crown. Even the Devas cannot gauge his nature, shape, prowess etc. When he yawns the earth and waters shake and shiver. The Gandharvas, Nāgas, Cārīṇas etc. fail to understand the real extent of his attributes, and that is why this strange being is called Ananta (endless). It was by worshipping Ananta and by his grace that sage Garga was able to master the sciences of astronomy and causation (nimitta). (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 2, Chapter 5).

6) The land of Ananta. Pātāla is Ananta’s world, and at its bottom there is a spot called Ananta. That spot is 30000 yojanas in extent, and here lives Ananta. He is known as Saiṅkarṣāṇa also. He bears the whole nether world as though it were a mustard seed. And, when he thinks of destroying the entire world the Rudra called Saiṅkarṣāṇa will appear with other Rudras and weapons like tridents (Trīṣūla). Other serpents bow at the feet of Ananta, who is supremely beautiful with divine lustre. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

ANANTA II. A synonym of the Sun God. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 24).

ANANTA III. A synonym of Śrī Kuṇa. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 70, Verse 14).

ANANTA IV. One of the military captains of Skandha. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 57).

ANANTA V. A synonym of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 83).

ANANTA VI. A synonym of Śiva. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 135).

ANANTA. Wife of Janamejaya, son of King Pūru.

ANANTA. The abode of Ananta in the nether regions. (Devi Bhāgavata, Canto 8). (There are certain indications that Ananta refers to Trivandrum, Capital city of the Kerala State. Explanations of words like Svaraga, Bhūmi, Pātāla, Ananta, Deva, Asura, throw much light on this inference).

ANANTAVIDJAYAM. The conch of Dharmaputra. It was blown during the great war. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 15).

ANAPAYACOLA. A King of the Cola country, 1063-1112. The Tamil poet Sekhilar who composed the twelfth song of the great Śaiva religious book called Tirumurayil was a minister of this King.

ANARAKATĪRTHA. A sacred pool. Brahmā, along with Viṣṇu and others bathe daily in this sacred pool. Therefore, it is said that the sins of all those who bathe in the pool will be washed off.

ANARANYA (ANARANYA). A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 236). For genealogy, see IKṢVĀKU. Anarany was a vegetarian. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 59).

Rāvaṇa once attacked his country whom he challenged to a duel. In the duel Anaranyā died. Before dying he cursed Rāvaṇa that he would be killed by Rāma, son of King Daśāratha. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 45).

ANARANYA. (See ANARANYA).

ANARKA (M). A king born in King Kaśi’s dynasty. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

ANASA (ASAMGA). A brother of Akrūra. (Bhāgavata, Daśaṃa Skandha).

ANASUYA. Wife of Sage Atri, son of Brahmā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 10).

1) Genealogy. From Mahāviṣṇu were born in order Brahmā, Śvāyambhuva Manu, Devahūti, Anasuyā. To Śvāyambhuva, son of Brahmā, was born by his wife Śatarūpā five children: Uttānapāda, Priyavat, Aūhtī. Devahūti and Prasūti and Devahūti was married to Kardama, son of Brahmā. They begot two daughters, Kalā and Anasuyā. Mariči married Kalā and Atri married Anasuyā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 1, Chapter 4).

2) The Tapāsakti of Anasuyā. Once upon a time, rains having failed for ten years the whole world sweated in agony and river Gaṅgā got dried up. Famine stalked the world. In this dire contingency it was the tapāsakti of Anasuyā that made trees bear fruits and Gaṅgā to flow again. Also, she converted ten days into nights on the request of the Devas. During their forest life Rāma and Sītā reached the hermitage of sage Atri, and the sage and Anasuyā treated the guests sumptuously. The above story about the tapāsakti of Anasuyā was told then by Atri. The story helped to increase Rāma’s respect for Anasuyā. Anasuyā gave Sītā all proper advice. She taught Sītā that absolute service to husband is the greatest tapas ordained to women. Anasuyā gave to Sītā a very sacred garland and a sublime gem. And, after that Rāma and Sītā left the hermitage. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyākanda, Cantos 117 and 118).

3) Sons of Anasuyā. She had three sons: Dattītreya, Duryāsas and Candra. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 10). (The reason for Mahāviṣṇu being born as Dattītreya, Śiva as Duryāas and Brahmā as Candra to Anasuyā is given under Atri).

ANAUPAMYĀ. Wife of Bāṇāsura. Once she developed an amorous interest in Nārada, which led to some domestic quarrels. (Padma Purāṇa, Ādiśkaṇḍa, Chapter 14).

ANAVADYĀ. Wife of Kaśyapa, this Apsara woman participated in the birth day celebrations of Arjuna. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 62).

ANDA.* Sītā, the disciple of Vyāsa said to the Munis at the Naimiṣāraṇya about the creation of the Universe:

In the beginning in the heavy universal darkness, the first seed of life (anda) appeared. (M.B., Ádi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 28).

Andhaka. The entire universe consisting of the fourteen worlds, which are: Bhūloka, Bhuvarloka, Svarloka, Maharloka, Janarloka, Tapaloka, Satyaloka, Pātala, Rasātala, Mahātāla, Talātala, Sutala, Vitāla, Atala.

Andha. An offspring of Kaśyapa by his wife Kadru. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 16).

Andhaka. There is a story in M.B., about a huntsman, Vataka killing one Andha, an evil being. Andha whose form and shape were that of an animal, by doing tapas, became recipient of a boon for destroying everything. Brahmā rendered him blind lest the world perish, and that animal began to be known as Andha.

When Andha began his programme of complete destruction many people rushed up to Viśvāmitra in his abode in the forest. Andha followed them. But, Viśvāmitra, in the interest of self-protection pointed out the refuge to Andha. As punishment for this sin Viśvāmitra had once to go to hell. This story was related by Kṛṣṇa to Arjuna during the great war at Kurukṣetra, and the reason for telling the story was this: During the fight Arjuna hesitated to aim arrows against Karna. Enraged by this attitude of Arjuna Dharmaputra asked him to hand over his famous bow, Gāṇḍiva to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Feeling insulted at this demand Arjuna, all on a sudden, drew his sword to do away with Dharmaputra. Śrī Kṛṣṇa, prevented Arjuna from attacking his noble brother, and in this context related the above story to prove the truth that sins committed even unwittingly will lead one, as in the case of Viśvāmitra to hell. (M.B., Karna Parva, Chapter 69).

Andha. The excellent disciple of Dhaumya, consumed the leaves of a tree which made him blind. (See Ayodhadaunnya) (M.B., Ádi Parva, Chapter 3).

Andhaka. There was a very renowned king called Andhaka in the Yadu dynasty. All kings belonging to this dynasty used to be called Andhakas.

Andhaka. Verse 12, Chapter 4 of M.B., Udyoga Parva refers to another king called Andhaka. The Pāṇḍavas had sent to him a messenger soliciting military help.

Andhaka. An Asura.

1) Birth. This Asura was the foster son of Hiranyākṣa. Siva was really his father. While once Siva was immersed in yoga his daughter closed his eyes playfully with her hands, and lo! a darkness rose and enveloped the whole place. From that darkness, with a sound as that of thunderbolt, appeared a Rākṣasa. He got the name Andhaka as he was born from darkness. At that time Hiranyākṣa was doing tapas for a son. Siva appeared before him and bestowing on him Andhaka as a foster son said as follows: "If he (Andhaka) earns the hatred of the world or desires even the mother of the three worlds or kills brahmins I will myself burn him to ashes". After saying this Siva disappeared. (Vāmanā Purāṇa, Chapter 63).

2) Andhaka desires Pārvatī with lust. One day overcome by erotic passion Andhaka said to his henchmen as follows: "He is my true friend who brings Siva's consort, Pārvatī to me. Yes, he is my brother, na, father even." Hearing these raving of Andhaka, Prahlāda went to him and convinced him that Pārvatī, in fact was his mother. But Andhaka was not quietened. Then Prahlāda explained to him the gravity of the sin of desiring other person's wives. Even this had no effect on Andhaka. He sent Sambārāsura to Siva to ask for and bring Pārvatī to him. Siva sent word to Andhaka that if the latter would defeat him in the game of dice Pārvatī would be sent to him. Andhaka got enraged and rushed to mount Mandara and began a fight with Siva.

3) Death. Defeated in the encounter, Andhaka craved for Siva's pardon. He admitted that Pārvatī was his mother. He also prayed for Siva's blessings for removal of his Asurahood. Siva granted him the prayers. The sins and Asurahood of Andhaka were thus ended. Siva made him the head of the Asuras, named Bhṛgū. (Vāmanā Purāṇa, Chapter 63 etc.).

Andhaka. A sacred pool. A dip in this pool will bring all the benefits of a Puruṣanēdha yajña. (M.B., Anuśāsanā Parva, Chapter 25, Verses 32, 33).

Andhakaraka. A place in the island of Krauñca. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 18).

Andhakaram. A mountain in the island of Krauñca. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 22).

Andhakūpā. In the Devi Bhāgavata, Mahāviṣṇu describes 28 hells to Nārada, and Andhakūpā is one of them. (See Naraka). Andhakūpā is reserved for those who kill either Brahmins or devotees of God or Sannyāsins (holy people). This hell abounds in cruel beasts like the bear and leopards, evil birds like the eagle, reptiles like the snake and scorpion and dirty insects like bugs and mosquitoes. The sinner will have to put up with all these sufferings in hell till the period of his punishment expires. (Devi Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

Andhatāmisra. One of the 28 hells. (See Naraka).

This hell is destined for wives who cheat their husbands and consume food and for husbands who cheat their wives and eat food. Agents of Yama get hold of such sinners and push them into the Andhatāmisra. As the cords of the agents with which they bind the sinners get tighter around their bodies they faint and fall down owing to unbearable pain. When they regain consciousness and try to run away and escape, the Agents of Yama again bind them with the cord. (Devi Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

Andhra. This is the Andhra Pradesh in modern India. It has to be surmised that this place was very famous during the period of the composition of the Mahābhārata. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 49).

Andhra. Warriors from Andhra were called Andhras. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 8).

Andhakaraka. Verse 24, Chapter 4 of Sabhā Parva, describes this king of Andhra Deśa as having sat in the assembly hall of the palace constructed by Maya at Indrarāpa for the Pāṇḍavas. He was also present at the Rājaśeṣya Yajña performed by Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 11).

Andhakaraka. The warriors of Andhra Deśa were called Andharakas also. (M.B., Karna Parva, Chapter 20, Verses 10 and 11). In the Bhārata war the King of Pāṇḍya killed those warriors. Kṛṣṇa incited Arjuna to kill the Andhras and the Pūlindas. (M.B., Karna Parva, Chapter 73, Verses 19 to 21).

Andhakaraka. Andharakas are classed with Mlec-chās (lowest caste of people) in Verse 42, Chapter 207 of Sānti Parva.

ANENAS I. A king of the Lunar dynasty (Candra Vaniṣa).

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā - Atri - Candra - Budha - Purūravas - Āyus-Anenas.

2) Birth. Purūravas had by his wife Urvaśī six sons named Āyus, Śrutāyus, Satyāyus, Raya, Vijaya and Jayā. Of them, Āyus, the eldest, had five sons named Nahuṣa, Kṣatravṛddyha, Rāji, Rambha and Anenas. Nahuṣa had a son named Yayaṭi to whom were born the sons Puru, Yadu and others. The two dynasties of Yadu and Puru (Yaduvānśa and Puruvānśa) originate from them. To Anenas, brother of Nahuṣa, a son named Suddha was born. Suddha begot Śuci who begotTrikakup and a son named Sāntarāya was born to Trikakup.

ANENAS II. A Mahārāja of the Ikṣvāku dynasty.

ĀNGA. A King belonging to the Candra Vanīṣa. (Lunar dynasty).

2) Birth. Āṅga, Kaliṅga, Suḥma, Kaṇḍra, Vaṅga, Adrupa and Anāśabhū are the seven sons born to Bali, the son of Sutapas, by his wife Suteṣṇa, and the King Āṅga is one of them. There is a story about the birth of these sons.

Once there lived a hermit named Utatthya. He was the elder brother of Bṛhaspati. One day when Mamātā, Utatthya’s wife, was pregnant, Bṛhaspati approached her with carnal desires. In spite of her efforts to dissuade her brother-in-law from his attempts she could not prevail upon him. He forced her and satisfied his desire. The child in her womb protested and kicked the sperm of Bṛhaspati out into the floor. Bṛhaspati got angry and cursed the child in the womb: “May you fall in perpetual darkness”. So the child was born blind and remained blind throughout his life. Hence he got the name ‘Dīrgaṭhamas’. Dīrgaṭhamas married Pradvēṣī. A son named Gautama was born to them. The duty of supporting Dīrgaṭhamas fell upon the wife and the son, who put him on a raft and pushed him astray into the River Ganges. King Bali, who was bathing in the river saw this. He rescued the hermit and took him to the palace and pleasing him by hospitality, requested him to begot children in his wife Suteṣṇa, who detesting the idea sent a Śūdrā woman Dāhrcyī in her stead and eleven children were born to them. By and by Dīrgaṭhamas came to know of the deceit played by Suteṣṇa on him and he became very angry. But the King pacified him and pleased him again and Dīrgaṭhamas begot five sons by Suteṣṇa. They were Āṅga, Vaṅga, Kaliṅga, Paṇḍra and Suḥma. Dīrgaṭhamas blessed them that they would become very famous. Āṅga, Vaṅga, Kaliṅga, Paṇḍra and Suḥma were the five kingdoms ruled by Āṅga, Vaṅga, Kaliṅga, Paṇḍra and Suḥma respectively. These five are the famous kings of the Bāli family. (Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 104).

3) How Āṅga got children. Once Āṅga performed a horse sacrifice. But the gods did not appear to receive oblations. Holy seers said that the Gods refused to accept the oblations offered by the King because he was childless. So he performed the sacrifice called Pūtrākāmeṣṭi (Sacrifice to get a son) and from the sacrificial fire arose a divine person with a golden flask of pudding, which he offered to the King and his queen. The King and the queen Sūṇiṭhā ate the pudding, as a result of which a son was born to them. He was named Vena. This son was wicked. Because of his wickedness the King became so miserable that he left his kingdom and went on a pilgrimage. Since there was no other means the people enthroned Vena, who tortured his subjects beyond limit. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha, Chapters Band 14).

ĀNGADA I. A son of Bāli.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā-Kaśyapa-Indra-Bāli-Āṅgada.

2) Birth. Āṅgada was the son of Bāli (the son of Indra) born of his wife Tārā. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 28).

a) Āṅgada was a member of the group of monkeys sent by Sugriva to find out Sītā. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakāṇḍa).

b) He was the foremost among the group of monkeys who entered Madhvavana and ate the berries in the garden, on their return after the search for Sītā.

c) Āṅgada was sent to the court of Rāvaṇa as a messenger by Śri Rāma. (Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa).

d) In the battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa Āṅgada combated with Indrajit. (Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa).

e) After his combat with Indrajit, Āṅgada and his followers led an attack on the army of Rāvaṇa. (Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa).

f) After the battle, Śri Rāma anointed Āṅgada as the heir-apparent to the Kingdom of Kīśkindhā. The necklace which Bāli had given on his death to Sugriva, was returned to Āṅgada. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

g) Śri Rāma returned to Ayodhyā after his forest life and celebrated a horse sacrifice. The sacrificial horse was caught and detained by King Suratha. Coming to know of this Satrughna sent Āṅgada to deal with Suratha, who said that the horse was detained with the intention of meeting with Śri Rāma personally. Āṅgada returned and told Satrughna what Suratha had said to him. (Padma Pūrṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa).

ĀNGADA II. There was a prince called Āṅgada among the mighty men-of-arms on the side of the Kauravas.

Aṅgada got into action on the battle-field on the twelfth day of the battle. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 38).

ĀNGADA III. Sratakiṛti the wedded wife of Śatrughna, brother of Śri Rāma, had two sons called Āṅgada and Chandraketu. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

ĀNGADA IV. In the Bhāgavata we see another Āṅgada who was the son of Gada, the brother of Kṛṣṇa by his wife, Bṛhaṭi.

ANĀKARMA. Actions on the stage are of two kinds. One is expressed by the major organs of the body. The other is expressed by the minor organs of the body. Head etc. are major organs and eyebrow etc. are minor organs. Actions expressed by major organs are called Anākarma and those by minor organs are called Pratyāṅga karma. (Agni Pūrṇa, Chapter 341).

ANĀGALAMMA. She is the wife of Virabhadrā, a servant of Śiva. She has a rope in her left hand, with which she hauls up the spirits of the dead.

ÂN̄GA (M). The kingdom ruled by King Āṅgū. Other details:

1) The Dynasty. The first King of the Āṅga dynasty was Āṅgū, the son of Bali. Anāgābhū, Draviratha, Dharmaratha, Romapāda (Lomapāda), Caturāṅga, Prthulāṅka, Bhadraratha, Bhranmanas, Jayadṛavarta, Vijaya, Drḍhavrata, Satyakarmā, Atiratha, Karṇa, Vṛṣasena and others were kings of this dynasty. Karṇa was the adopted son of Atiratha. During the period of the Mahābhārata, Kings of the Atiratha family were under the sway of the Śandra vāṁśa (Lunar dynasty) kings such as Dhitarāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu. (For further informations see the word Atiratha).

2) How Karṇa became the king of Āṅga. A contest in archery and the wielding of other weapons was going on in Hastināpura, the competitors being the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas. The status of Karṇa, who appeared on the side of the Kauravas, was questioned by the Pāṇḍavas on the occasion and Duryodhana, who always stood on his dignity, anointed Karṇa as the King of Āṅga, on the spot. ([M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 136].

3) Drought in the kingdom of Āṅga. Lomapāda (Romapāda) the king of Āṅga once deceived a hermit Brahmin. So all the Brahmins quitted the country and thereafter there was no rainfall in the country for several years. The sages of the country began to think on the means of bringing about rain. One day they approached the King and told him the only way to get rain was to bring the great hermit Ṣṛyaśṛiga to the country. Once Kaṭyāpa happened to see Urvaśī and he had seminal flow. The sperm fell in a river. A deer swallowed it along with the water it drank. It gave birth to a human child with horns on the head. This child was called Ṣṛyaśṛiga. It was brought up by a hermit called Vībhāṇḍa in his hut. Ṣṛyaśṛiga had never seen women and by virtue of this, there occurred rainfall wherever he went. The King Lomapāda sent some courtesans to the forest to attract Ṣṛyaśṛiga, who following them arrived at the court of Lomapāda the King of Āṅga and the King gave Ṣṛyaśṛiga, as a gift, his daughter Sāntā. Thus the country got rain. This Lomapāda was a friend of Daśarathra. ([M.B., Aranyā Parva, Chapters 110 to 115].

4) How the Kingdom got the name Āṅga. One opinion is that the Kingdom got its name from the King Āṅga who ruled over it. Another opinion is that the king got his name from the country he ruled. However there is a story revealing how the country came to be called Āṅga.

In the realm of God, preliminary steps were being taken for making Śrī Parameśvarā wed Pārvatī. According to the instructions of Devendra, Kāmādeva (the Lord of Love—Cupid) was trying to break the meditation of Śiva and when Śiva opened his third eye, fire emitted from it and Anāṅga (Kāmādeva) was burned to ashes. It was in the country of Āṅga that the ashes of the ‘āṅga’ (Body) of Kāmādeva fell from the sky. From that day onwards the country came to be called Āṅga and Kāmādeva, ‘Anāṅga’ (without body). ([Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 26].

5) Other informations.

(1) It is mentioned in the Hindi Dictionary, ‘Śabda Śāgara’ that the kingdom of Āṅga embracing Bhagatpur and Mirigah in Bihār had its capital at Cāmpūpurī and that the country had often stretched from Vaidyānāthān̄ma to Bhūvanesvar.

(2) Arjuna had visited the Kingdom of Āṅga also during his pilgrimage. ([M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 9].

(3) The King of Āṅga was present at the sacrifice of Rājāśūya (Royal consecration) celebrated by Dharmaputra, when the Pāṇḍavas were living at Indraprastha. ([M.B., Śabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 16].

(4) On one occasion Śrī Kṛṣṇa defeated the Āṅgas in a battle. ([M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 15].

(5) Āṅgajīrāna had defeated the Āṅgas once. ([M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 12].

(6) In the battle of Kurukṣetra between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas, on the sixteenth day of the battle, the heroes of Āṅga made an onslaught on Arjuna. ([M.B., Karṇa Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 12].

(7) The Āṅgas attacked the armies of Dhrṣṭadyumna and the King of Pāñcāla. ([M.B., Karṇa Parva, Chapter 22, Stanza 2].

(8) A low caste man from Āṅga attacked Bhīma, who killed the man and his elephant. ([M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 26, Stanzas 14 to 17].

ÂNGÂMALÂJA (M) (MALADA—KARUṢA). General Information. (1) This was a country in ancient Bāhrāta. ([Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 50].

(2) Viṣṇumitra had taken to the forest from Ayodhya Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa to protect the hermits and their yāgas. On the way they entered the Tāṭaka forest. Viṣṇumitra told the boys in answer to their questions thus: “In olden days this place was a countryside known as Ângamalâja or Malada or Karuṣa. There is a reason for calling the country by that name. Indra killed Vṛtra and thereby incurred the sin of Brahmahatya and so he came away to this country and lived here for a while. The Gods found him out here. They poured water on the head of the unclean Indra and the dirt, hunger, excreta and Karuṣa having been separated from his body fell on the soil of this place and was mingled with it. Indra’s body became pure. As excreta, Karuṣa etc. were mingled with the soil of this country, it came to be called Ângamalâja, Malada or Karuṣa from that day onwards. One part of the country was called Malada and the other part Karuṣa. Indra, having been purified by washing in water returned to heaven with the Gods. After that this country became uninhabited for a long time. The horrible Tāṭaka lives in this forest now”. ([Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 24].

ÂNGÂPRÂDAKṢIŅĀ. Rolling behind a chariot round the temple as a vow.

ÂNGÂRA. A king of ancient India. He was defeated by Mândhātā in a battle. ([M.B., Śaktu Parva, Chapter 29, Stanza 88].

ÂNGÂRÂJÂVÂMSA. (THE DYNASTY OF ÂNGÂ KINGS). Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā—Atri—Gandara-Buddha—Purūras—Ayus—Nahaus—Yāyāti. Yadu, Turvasu, Druhyu and Anudruhyu were the four sons of Yāyāti. The Āṅga dynasty starts from Turvasu, one of the four. The following are the descendants of Turvasu. Varga was the son of Turvasu, Gobhānu, the son of Varga, Traiśāṇi the son of Gobhānu, Karandhama, the son of Traiśāṇi, Marutta, the son of Karandhama, Duṣyanta, the son of Marutta, Varūtha, the son of Duṣyanta, Gāndīra the son of Varūtha, and Gândara the son of Gāṇḍīra. The five powerful peoples, the Gāndhāra, the Golas, the Keralas, the Pāṇḍyas and the Kolas have descended from Gāndhāra.

Two sons, Drhiyu and Babhrusetu were born to Gāndhāra. Babhrusetu begot Purovasu; Purovasu begot Gāndhāri. From Gāndhāra Gṛhma was born, from Gṛhma Gṛha was born, from Gṛha Viduṣa was born, and from Vidiṣa Praeetas was born. Praeetas got a hundred children of whom the prominent were Anidra, Sabhānara, Cākṣuṣa and Paramesu. To Sabhānara was born Kālānala and Śrījaya to Kālānala, Puraṁjaya to Śrījaya and Janamejaya to Puraṁjaya. Mahāśāla was the son of Janamejaya; Mahāmanas the son of Mahāśāla, and Uṣinara the son of Mahāmanas. To Uṣinara were born Nṛga, Nar, Kṛmi, Suvrata and Sibī by his wives Nṛgā, Nārā, Kṛmi, Dāsā and Dṛṣṭadvati respectively. To Sibī were born four sons called Prthudarbha, Vira, Kaikaya and Bhdraka. Four separate kingdoms arose in the names of them. Uṣinara had another son called Titikṣu. From Titikṣu was born Ruṣadratha; from Ruṣadratha was born Paila, from Paila was born Sutapas and from Sutapas was born the great hermit Bālī. From Bālī, Aṅga, Vāṅga, Kālīṅga, Punḍra, Bāleya and Bālayogi were born. To Aṅga was born Dadhīvāhana. The King Draviratha was the son of Dadhīvāhana, Dharmanatha the son of Draviratha, Citrara the son of Dharmanatha, and Satyara was the son of Citrara. To Satyara was born Lomapāda; to Lomapāda was born Caturāṅga; to Caturāṅga was born Prthulāṅka, to Prthulāṅka was born Campa; to Campa was born Harāṅga, to Hārāṅga was born Bhadrasratha, to Bhadrasratha was born Bhakatkarma, to Bhakatkarma was born Bṛhadbhānu, to Bṛhadbhānu was born Bṛhadāṃśa, to Bṛhadāṃśa was born Jayadratha, to Jayadratha was born Bṛhadratha and to Bṛhadratha was born Vīṣavajjita. After that Karnā became the King of Aṅga. The son of Karnā was Vṛṣasena and the son of Vṛṣasena was Prthusena. These are the kings of the Aṅga dynasty.

(Āgni Purāṇa, Chapter 277.)

Āṅgāraka I. An Asura who took the form of a pig.

The story of how this Asura was killed by his daughter Āṅgāravati, is given below.

Long ago there was an emperor named Mahendra-varmā in Ujjainī. His son Mahāsenā did penance for a long time to get a wife and a sword. At last Devī appeared and granted the boon: "My son! take this extraordinary sword. So long as you have this sword, your enemies will not prevail against you. Āṅgāravati, the renowned beauty of the three worlds, who is the daughter of the Asura Āṅgāraka, will become your wife in due course. As you do horrible deeds, you will be called Candra-mahāsenā." He was given the sword and a tusk called Naḍāgiri. One day Mahāsenā went to the forest for hunting. He saw a very large pig. The King used his arrows. But they did little harm to the pig. Moreover it turned the chariot of the King over to one side and ran to a cave. The King followed it with fury. On the way he sat on the bank of a lake with wonder, for a lady of exquisite beauty was walking along the mossy turf in the midst of some maids. Slowly she approached the King and talked with him. The young lady had entirely captured the heart of the King, who told her everything. She began to weep.

"Who are you? Why do you weep?" The King asked her. She replied with a deep sigh, "The pig you saw, is my father Āṅgārakāsura. His body is as hard as diamond and not vulnerable to any sort of weapon. These maids have been caught by him from various royal houses and brought here for my help. My name is Āṅgāravati. My father was changed to a giant by a curse. Now he is asleep discarding the form of pig. When he wakes up, filled with hunger and thirst, he will do you harm. My tears flowed out in the form of heated life-breaths, when I thought of these things." The King said, "Go and sit by him and cry when he wakes up. He will ask the reason. Then tell him that you had been crying, when you thought how forlorn you would be without a mate, in case your father was killed by somebody." Āṅgāravati did as she was told. Hearing her words Āṅgāraka said, "My daughter! No body can kill me. My body is made of diamond. There is only one vulnerable point in my body which is on my left forearm and it is always covered with my bow." The king hid himself closely and heard everything. He fought with the Asura and hitting at the vulnerable point killed him. The king married Āṅgāravati and took her to his palace. Two sons were born to him. They were called Gopālaka and Pālaka. By the grace of Indra a daughter also was born to him by her and she was Vāsavadattā, the wife of the famous Udayana. (Kathāśārisāgara, Kathāmukhalambaka, Tārārīga 3.)

Āṅgāraka II. A prince named Āṅgāraka is seen to have been the descendant of Jayadratha, the King of Sauvira. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 265, Stanza 10.)

Āṅgāraka III. A planet named Maniga which is a satellite of Brahmac is seen to have been called by the name Āṅgāraka also. (Mahābhārata, Śabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 29.)

Āṅgāraka IV. We see one Āṅgāraka among the one hundred and eight sons of the Sun. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 10.)

Āṅgāraka. (Śimhiḍā.)

1) Genealogy. Descended in the following order from Vīṣṇu, Brahmā-Marci-Ka^yapa-Āṅgāraka.

2) Birth. In the battle between the Gods and the Asuras, most of the Asuras were killed and one Asura fled from the clutches of death to Pātāla (the nether world). Surasā was the daughter of that Asura. Kāśyapa married Surasā. To them were born the two daughters, Āṅgāraka (Śimhiḍā) and Ajāmukhi, and four sons, called Sūrapadma, Śimhavaktra, Tārakāsura and Gomukha. Theś Simhiḍā is the sister of Tārakāsura. (Śkanda Purāṇa, Asura Kanda.)

Other details. This giantess Āṅgārakā had a clash once, with Hanumān. Sugrīva had sent a large number of monkeys under the leadership of Hanumān to search for Sītā. He gave Hanumān certain instructions regarding the route he had to follow. Sugrīva said, "There is a giantess in the middle of that Southern Sea. Her name is Āṅgāra. She pulls the shadow towards her and feeds on the object of the shadow." From this it is clear that she was a giantess who lived in the sea between Lāṅkā and South India. She knew the art of bringing to her side, anybody who passed over the sea, by pulling at his shadow. When Hanumān jumped to Lāṅkā from the mountain of Mahendra the giantess attacked Hanumān. It is seen that the name Siṁhikā also is used for Aiṅgārakā. Hanumān who was subjected to the excessive attraction of Siṁhikā, felt a great storm raging round him. Finally he found her out, a monster with such an uncouth face and a mouth as wide as the hole of Pāṭāla (the nether world). There was a terrible fight between Hanumān and the monster, in which Siṁhikā, fell on the ground beaten. After the fight Hanumān resumed his journey. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Sundarakāṇḍa, Sarga 1, Stanza 178 to 186).

Aṅgāra (M). A countryside in ancient India. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 60).

Aṅgāraparṇa. (Citraratha) See the word CITRARATHA I.

Aṅgāravati. (See Aṅgārakā).

Aṅgavāha. A king of immense fame, belonging to the dynasty of Vṛṣṇi. Aṅgavāha attended, with Balabhadrārāma, the sacrifice of Rājasūya (Royal consecration) celebrated by Yudhīśthira. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 16).

Aṅgiras I.

1) Birth. He is a hermit born from the mind of Brahmā. Six mind-born sons (Māṇasa-Putras) were born to Brahmā, known as Mārici, Aṅgīrās, Atri, Pulastya, Pulāha, and Kṛatū. All the six of them became great hermits. (Mahābhārata, Adī Parva, Chapter 63, Stanza 10)*

2) Important events.

(1) The failure of Aṅgīras. There was a King named Citraketu in the kingdom of Sārasana. Once Aṅgīras reached his palace when the King was in a miserable state as he was childless. The King informed Aṅgīras of his sorrow. He pacified the King and said that a son would be born to him. He and his wife Kṛtaḍvyūti were filled with joy. The other wives of the King did not like this. They feared that when a son was born to Kṛtaḍvyūti the King might overlook them. To the king a son was born of Kṛtaḍvyūti and the other wives poisoned the child and killed him. While the parents were weeping over the dead child Aṅgīras and Nārada arrived there and wiped their tears. Aṅgīras agreed to bring the child back to life. He instantly called the spirit of the dead child to him and asked it to become the son of Citraketu. The spirit replied that it had a large number of parents in several previous births and that it was not possible for it to become the son of Citraketu, and then it vanished. Aṅgīras and Nārada went on their way. Citraketu became a devotee of Viṣṇu and by the curse of Pārvaṭi, was born again as Vṛtraśura. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6, Chapter 14).

(2) How Aṅgīras cursed Sūdrāsana and transmuted him to a serpent. While Sūdrāsana, a vidyādhara (a class of semi-gods) was travelling lustfully with a group of beautiful girls he came across Aṅgīras and some other hermits. He teased Aṅgīras calling him ‘durbhāga’ (unlucky) and Aṅgīras cursed him and changed him to a big serpent and he was promised liberation from the curse, when, during the dvāpara yuga (one of the four ages) Mahāviṣṇu would incarnate as Śrī Kṛṣṇa and would tread upon him and then he would regain his former form. From that day onwards Sūdrāsana lived on the banks of the river Kālindī in the form of a serpent. It was

*There is another story about the birth of Aṅgīras. At a sacrifice celebrated by Rudra, seminal flow occurred to Brahmā who happened to see some celestial maids and was overpowered by passionate feelings. Brahmā put the sperm in the fire. From that fire appeared Aṅgīras along with Marici, Bhrigu and others. This deva (the shining one—the God) was called Aṅgīras because his origin was from Aṅgāra or Gīṇer.
you should not utter words of falsehood, nor should you abstain from speaking the truth. If you do so your head will be cut into a hundred pieces by Indra with his Vajrāyudha (the weapon of thunderbolt)”. Hesitating to take a decision, because of the words of Sudhanvā, Prahlāda went to Kaśyapa to clear his doubts, and asked: “Lord, do you know which are the future worlds destined for those who utter words of falsehood or abstain from giving out the truth?” Kaśyapa said, “On him, who abstains from speaking truth knowingly a thousand cords of death will fall. He who tells falsehood will have to perform many a deed of duty to attain heaven.”

Having heard the words of Kaśyapa, Prahlāda said to Virocana, “Virocana, Sudhanvā is greater than you. Āṇgiras is greater than me. Likewise the mother of Sudhanvā is nobler than your mother. So according to your bet you owe your life to Sudhanvā.” Pleased at the righteousness of Prahlāda, Sudhanvā gave Virocana a boon to live a hundred years more. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 63).

(6) How Āṇgiras became the first son of Agni (Fire God). Once Āṇgiras was blazing out as a furious being. All the worlds were illumination by that flame-fire. As Āṇgiras was performing the functions of Agni (fire), peoples of the worlds discarded Agni, who being sad at the derision shown towards him by the worlds went to a forest and hid himself there. The living beings were in trouble owing to lack of fire. When he became aware of this Āṇgiras went to the forest and pacified Agni. From that day onwards Āṇgiras agreed to become the first son of Agni, who resumed his duties as usual. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 217).

(7) How Āṇgiras got the name Atharvāṅgiras. After the slaughter of Vṛtrāṣura, Indra went to the lake known as Amṛtasaras and hid himself there in a lotus flower. At this time the Gods anointed Nahuṣa as Indra. Agastya cursed him and turned him to a serpent and sent him to the earth. When Indra returned to heaven many persons gathered there to greet him. Āṇgiras also was one among them who did obeisance to Indra. He paid his homage by reciting the hymns of Atharvaveda. Indra who was greatly pleased at this, said to Āṇgiras, “Hereafter you shall be known as Atharvāṅgiras”. Āṇgiras got this boon from Indra, returned with gratitude. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 5 to 7).

(8) Āṇgiras and Drona. In the battle of Kurukṣetra, between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas the great teacher, Drona began to release his divine darts towards his enemies in all directions. Immediately Āṇgiras with many other hermits came to Drona and told him, “You have burned to death innumerable men with your Brahmsātra (The most powerful of all missiles). Your end is very near. So put your weapons down and stop your fight.” Drona seems to have paid no heed at all to the advice of the hermits. He did not stop fighting too.

(9) The sermon of Āṇgiras on the merits of Tirūkṣas or holy places (Baths). Dharmaputra once asked Bhīṣma about the importance of holy ghāṣ or tirūkṣas (Baths). Bhīṣma told Dharmaputra, what Āṇgiras had once told Gautama about the merits obtained by going on pilgrimage to holy tirūkṣas or Baths. Āṇgiras had described the holy nature and character of holy Baths in Bhārata such as Puṣkara, Prabhāsa, Naimīsa, Sāgarodaka, Indramārga, Devika, Svarṇabindu, Hiranyabindu, Indratoya, and such other numerous tirūkṣas. (Mahābhārata, Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanzas 7-11).

3) Other details:

1) Dakṣa gave his two daughters in marriage to Āṇgiras, (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).
2) Āṇgiras once saved the Sun. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 92, Stanza 6).
3) While the Pāṇḍavas were in exile in forest, Āṇgiras had been chanting and meditating in Alakanandā in the region of the mount Gandhamadāna. (Mahābhārata, Aranya Parva, Chapter 142, Stanza 6).
4) When the hermits had stolen the lotus flowers of Agastya, Āṇgiras gave some hints about the culprits. (Mahābhārata, Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 20: See Agastya).
5) Āṇgiras once gave a discourse on fasting and the merits of fasting. (Mahābhārata, Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 106, Stanzas 11 to 16).
6) Āṇgiras on another occasion delivered lectures on the secrets of duties. (Mahābhārata, Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 8).
7) Once Āṇgiras drank the water in the ocean to the last drop. (Mahābhārata, Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 153, Stanza 3).
8) When his thirst was not quenched, even though he had drunk the entire water available in the world, he created new springs of water again and drank them dry. (Mahābhārata, Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 153, Stanza 5).
9) Once Agni failed to show respect to Āṇgiras, who cursed Agni and therefore forward smoke came out from fire. (Mahābhārata, Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 153, Stanza 8).
10) Āṇgiras conducted many of the important sacrifices of King Avikṣit. (Mahābhārata, Aśvamedhika Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 22).
11) Indra once gave Āṇgiras a boon. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 18, Stanzas 3 to 7).
12) Āṇgiras blessed Dhruva who had been doing penance. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anuśa 1, Chapter 11).
13) The daughters named Sīnvālī, Kuḥū, Rākā, Anumati were born to Āṇgiras by his wife Śmṛti. (Āṇgira Purāṇa, Chapter 20).
14) Āṇgiras is the first of the Agni devas (Fire-Gods) and a hermit. He had a son called Hiraṇya-Stūpāḥ, who also was a hermit. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 7, Sūkta 31).
15) The Hermit Āṇgiras began to invoke the Gods to get a son equal to Indra. Then Indra, thinking that nobody should be born as his equal, took birth as the son of Āṇgiras. He was called Savya. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 10, Sūkta 51).
16) Indra sent Saramā, the bitch of the Gods, to find out the place where the cows had been hidden; Indra acted according to the advice of Āṇgiras. At first the bitch did not consent to go. But when Devendra promised to feed her young one with milk she agreed. Saramā found out the place where the cows were hidden and informed Indra of it. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 11, Sūkta 62).
17) Rbhus are the sons of Sudhanvā. (Son of Āṇgiras). The hermit Kutṣa also is descended from Āṇgiras. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 10).
(18) Angiras was the son of Brahmā in the Svāyambhuva Manvantara (See Manvantara), but in the Vaivasvata Manvantara he was born from Agni.

(19) Once Vāyu (the Wind-God) had to run away from Angiras and hide himself as he had caused some displeasure to Angiras. On another occasion Angiras taught philosophy and sacred doctrines to the hermit Saunaka. (Mundakahāpāṇīya).

ANGIRAS II. In the family of Marici, son of Brahmā, another King of the name of Angiras is seen.

Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā, Marici, Kaśyapa, Vaivasvata Manu, Uttanapāda, Dhruthu, Śiṣṭa, Rītu, Cākṣuṣa Manu, Ūru, Angiras. (About this Angiras, no other information is available in the Purāṇas. Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anśa 1, Chapter 13; Āgni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

ANGIROBHAYA. A hermit named Kakkśīvan. (Ṛg veda, Manu-jala 1, Anuvāka 17, Sūkta 120).

ANKAVIḌĀRĀYA. A brother of Jayadratha, a King of the kingdom of Śindhu. Arjuna killed him. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 263, Verse 12).

ANIKE. A Yasaka, one of the attendants of Kubera. (M.B., Sābha Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 18). He was a king of the Aiga dynasty. (Āgni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

ANIKE. A division of the army. (See under ĀKṢAU-HIṢI).

ANI LA. One of the Aṣṭa (8) Vasus. His father was Dharma and mother Śvāsā. Anila married Śiva and had two sons, Manojaya and Avijñāti. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verses 17-23).

ANI LA II. Garuda had a son called Anila. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 9).

ANI LA III. A word used as a synonym of Śiva. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 100).

ANI LA IV. A word used as a synonym of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 38).

ANI LA V. A Kṣatriya King. His father, Vṛṣādārbi presented him as Daḵṣinā to the Saptarṣis (7 sages) at a yajña performed by him (father). The King expired soon after this. There was then a famine in the country. The Saptarṣis, tortured by famine and thirst, got ready to prepare food with the corpse of the King. But the corpse retained its form and they could not cook food with it. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 96).

ANI LA. A famous serpent. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 7).

ANIMĀṆḌAYA. 1) General. How he got the name Animāṇḍavya. Once there was a famous Brahmīn named Māṇḍavya. He died Tapas (penance) for many years standing silent in front of his Āśrama, under a tree, raising his hands in prayer. At that time some thieves happened to pass by that place, with stolen property belonging to the King. Finding that the King's men were pursuing them, the thieves fled away after leaving their stolen property in Māṇḍavya's Āśrama. The King's men seized Māṇḍavya with the king's property. Even prolonged and repeated questionings did not bring out a single word from Māṇḍavya. At last the thieves were caught. Mistaking him as one of the thieves, the King's men produced Māṇḍavya also along with the thieves before the King. The thieves were all condemned to death. The royal executioners took all of them to the place of execution and stuck them up at the tip of a trident (Śūla). The thieves died, but even after a long time Māṇḍavya did not die. In Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Verses 46-51, it is said that at this stage Śiva appeared and blessed him with longevity and then vanished. Several Munis in the shape of birds came near Māṇḍavya who was lying on the trident and made enquiries about him. The King came to know of all these stories. Full of repentance, he went and begged pardon of Māṇḍavya. The attempt to pull out the trident from Māṇḍavya's body failed. At last it was removed by cutting it off. Since the tip (Anī) of the trident was left behind in his body he was thereafter known as "Anī Māṇḍavya". (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 107).

2) Curse on Dharma. After going about in the world for many years with the tip of the trident in his body, Anī Māṇḍavya once asked Dharma: "Oh! Lord, why is it that an innocent man like me is afflicted with the trident?" Dharma answered: "In your boyhood you once caught small birds and pierced them with a grass reed. It is a result of that sin that you have been pierced with the trident." Māṇḍavya replied: "The Śastras ordain that there shall be no punishment for sins committed till the age of twelve. Therefore the punishment inflicted on me is wrong. As the murder of a Brahmin is a greater sin than any other murder, may you be born as a man in the 'Śūdra Caste'!"

By the above curse of Māṇḍavya, Dharma was born a son of a Śūdra woman. It was this child who later on became the renowned Vidura of the Mahābhārata. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 107).

3) The story of how the Sun did not rise. When Anī Māṇḍavya lay on the tip of the trident another event happened. Atri Muni's son UgraSravas was the husband of Śilavati. No other woman had so far surpassed Śilavati in her fidelity to her husband. Once UgraSravas happened to fall ill. He expressed his desire to visit a prostitute's house. As he was too weak he could not walk. The devoted wife Śilavati carried him on her own shoulders and took him to the prostitute's house. They were passing near the place where Anī Māṇḍavya was lying on the trident. Coming to know of the matter, Māṇḍavya pronounced a curse that UgraSravas should die before sunrise. Śilavati shuddered on hearing this. Fearing that she would be widowed by the death of UgraSravas, she, in her turn, pronounced a curse that the Sun should not rise again.

Next day the sun did not rise. All activities came to a standstill. At last the gods approached Atri Muni. They in used Anasūya, Atri's wife to persuade Śilavati to withdraw her curse. Then the sun rose again and UgraSravas died. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 42).

4) Other details. When the Pāṇḍavas were living in Hastinapurā, Śrī Rṣṣa once paid a visit to them. On his way he met with certain munis. Among them was Anī Māṇḍavya also. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83).

5) Once the King of Videha told Māṇḍavya that the world is transient and advised him to strive for spiritual peace. Anī Māṇḍavya who was pleased with the King's advice attained mokṣa (salvation) at once. (M.B., Śanti Parva, Chapter 276, Verses 3-14).

ANIMIṢA. Verse 10, Chapter 101 of Udyoga Parva refers to one Animiṣa, son of Gāruḍa. Also the word is used as a synonym of Śiva (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 14) and of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 36).
ANIRUDDHA. Grandson of Śri Krṣṇa.
1) Genealogy. From Viṣṇu was born in this order: Brahmā, Atri, Ćandra, Budha, Prūravas, Āyus, Nahuṣa, Yaṇātyi, Yadu, Sahasrajit, Satajit, Helaya, Dharma, Kunti, Bhadrasena, Kṛtvārya, Kṛtvāryājuna, Jayadhvaja, Tālājāṅgah, Vīhitotra, Ananta, Durjaya, Yudhājīt, Śini, Satyaka, Sātyaki, Jaya, Kuṇi, Anamītra, Prśni, Citraratha, Vīḍūratha, Śrīra, Śini, Bhola, Hrīdīka, Śrūṣasena, Vasudeva, Śri Krṣṇa, Pradyumna, Aniruddha.
2) Birth. Śri Krṣṇa had 16008 wives. Out of the 16008 from Rukminī was born Pradyumna and from Pradyumna, Aniruddha.
3) Kidnapped by Uṣā. One of the stories about this handsome prince refers to his being kidnapped by Uṣā daughter of Bāṇāsura. Bāṇāsura, chief among the 100 sons of emperor Mahābali had 1000 hands. Siva pleased by the sacrificial devotion of Bāṇāsura granted, as requested by him, the boon that he himself (Śiva) and Pārvati would guard the fort of the Asura, of course with some reluctance. None, none had the prowess to attack this valiant Asura. Overflowing with conceit at this he challenged Śiva to a fight. Śiva foretold that the flagstaff of Bāṇa would one day be broken and then a powerful antagonist would defeat him. Bāṇa impatiently awaited the threatened day.
One day Uṣā happened to witness the scene of Śiva and Pārvati engaged in love-making. Excited by the sight Uṣā too desired to enact such a scene with a lover, and she intimated her desire to Pārvati. Pārvati told her that Uṣā would, within three days, see in a dream a handsome prince with whom she might make love. Accordingly, dressed herself in all glory with choicest ornaments Uṣā awaited the happy day. On the third day a handsome prince appeared before her in her dream. Waking up, she began crying. Seeing Uṣā crying Citralekha, her companion, and daughter of her father's minister, assured her (Uṣā) that whoever might be the prince who appeared in her dream shall be brought down with the power of Mantra. Citralekha drew the pictures of all princes known to her and showed them to Uṣā. The pictures represented all handsome men from Devas to men. ‘No, this is not my prince charming’ was Uṣā’s reply. Then Citralekha drew the picture of Śri Krṣṇa of Pradyumna, and then of Aniruddha. When Uṣā saw Aniruddha’s picture she stretched her hands to embrace that. It was this prince who had appeared before her in the dream.
Next night Citralekha, by the power of her Mantra, brought into Uṣā’s room from Dvārakā Aniruddha, who was then in his sleep. While Uṣā and Aniruddha were thus together in the room her father, Bāṇa, got scent of it and took Aniruddha into custody.
The disappearance of Aniruddha led to much commotion in Dvārakā. Then Nārada reached Dvārakā and gave details about the Aniruddha incident. Śri Krṣṇa and Pradyumna, in all rage, hurried to Bāṇa’s palace and encircled his palace with a strong army. Then did Bāṇa’s flagstaff break into two and fell down. The fierce fight that ensued ended in the defeat of Bāṇa. Aniruddha married Uṣā and the elated couple started for Dvārakā. Vajra was the son of Aniruddha. (Bhāgavata, Daśama Śaṅkha, Chapters 61, 62 and 63).
4) More information. (1) It was at the feet of Arjuna that Aniruddha mastered the Dhanurveda (Science of warfare). (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 38).
(2) Aniruddha is also conceived in the forms of Viṣṇu and Brahmā. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 65, Verses 69 and 70).
(3) Brahmā was born from the abdominal centre of Aniruddha when the latter had taken the form of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Śanti Parva, Chapter 341, Verses 15-17).
(4) The word Aniruddha is also used as a synonym of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 33).
ANIRUDDHA II. The Mahābhārata refers to another Aniruddha who belonged to the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. Both the Aniruddhas were present at the wedding of Pāṇcālī. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verses 17-20).
ANIRUDDHA III. The Mahābhārata mentions yet another King Aniruddha. He did not eat flesh. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 15).
ANJALIKĀSRAMA. This is a sacred place. One who lives at this Tīrtha for some time, gets the benefit of visiting the sacred tīrtha at Kanyakumārī ten times. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 52).
ANJALIKĀVEDHA (M). This is an art by which an elephant could be made to stand submissively. Bhīmasena had mastered this art. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 23).
ANJĀNA. 1) Mother of Hanumān—Wife of Kesari, the noble monkey and daughter of Kūṉjara, the monkey leader. She was the mother of Hanumān. Once while Śiva and Pārvati were gambling in the guise of monkeys, rambling through the woods, Pārvati became pregnant. That pregnancy was given to Vāyu. At that time Anjāna was doing penance for an issue. Vāyu transferred the pregnancy he had received from Pārvati to Anjāna. Thus Anjāna gave birth to Hanumān. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 66).
Anjāna gave birth to Hanumān in the woods in a valley on the southern side of Mahāmeṣu. She was frightened at the sight of the child, shining like the sun. Hanumān began to cry for mother’s milk. Anjāna said to Hanumān: “Monkeys are fond of red ripe fruits. Therefore eat whatever you find in red colour.” Saying this Anjāna transformed herself into a goddess and went to Heaven.
2) Pārṇajāna (Previous Birth). In her previous birth Anjāna was a goddess named Puṇjīkāstalā (Mānagarāva). As a result of a curse, this goddess was born as a she-monkey in the Himalaya region. With the birth of Hanumān, the curse was lifted. (Uttara Kāmāyaṇa). For more details see “Puṇjīkāstalā”.
ANJANA. This is an elephant belonging to the Asuras. His origin is in the family of Supratika. The other three elephants born in this family are: Airāvata, Vāmana and Kumuda. (This Anīvata was not the Airāvata of Devendra). There are references to Rākṣasas coming to the battle-field on the back of elephants. There is another mention of Anjana the elephant standing in the battle-field. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 99, Verse 15; Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 57; Droṇa Parva, Chapter 112, Verse 32).
ANJANA (M). This is the name of a mountain. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 98, Verse 15).
ANJANA PARVAN. He was the son of Ghatotkaca and grandson of Bhīmasena. For genealogy, see BHĪMASENA. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 194, Verse 20).
ANR̐TA 44

ANTARA. A place in ancient India. (M.B., Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 66).

ANTAKA I. Once the Devas, under the auspices of emperor Prthu, turned goddess earth into a cow and milked her. The result was twelve yamas, and Antaka was one of the twelve. (See Prthu). (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69, Verse 26).

ANTAKA II. The Rgveda makes mention of one Śrāvasti, Antaka. (Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 112).

ANTAPIČA. (See KETUMĀN V).

ANTARDHANĀ. Son of King Atri of the Manu dynasty. He had a son called Hāvīrddhānā. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 23). And for genealogy see Manuvāmā.

ANTARDHANA. A King, the son of Prthu. (For genealogy see Prthu). (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 11).

ANTARDHANA(M). A weapon of Kubera. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 38).

ANTARDHĪ. A son of emperor Prthu. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18). For genealogy see Prthu.

ANTARGIRI. A place in between the Himālaya ranges. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 49). Arjuna conquered this place. (M.B., Sābhā Patva, Chapter 27, Verse 3).

ANTARIKSABA I. One of the seven sons of Murūsura, the other six being Tāmra, Śravaṇa, Vasu, Viśhabhavās, Nabhavān and Aruṇa. After the death of their father they quarreled with Śrī Kṛṣṇa and were killed by him. (Bhāgavata, Daśaśaṁkha, Chapter 59, Verse 19).

ANTARIKSABA II. A Rājā named Antarikṣa is mentioned in the Bhāgavata. Genealogy. Viṣṇu, Brahmā, Śvāyambhuva, Priyavrata, Agnidhira, Nābhi, Ṛṣabha, Antarikṣa. Śvāyambhuva Manu had two sons, Uttānapāda and Priyavrata. Dhruva was the son of Uttānapāda. Priyavrata married Barhismatī, and they had eleven children including Agnidhira. Agnidhira married Pūrvacittī, a Deva woman, and they became parents to nine sons, viz. Nābhi, Kimpuruṣa, Hari, Ilīvṛtā, Ramyaka, Hiraṇmaya, Kuru, Bhadrāvaśa and Ketumāla. Nābhi wedded Merudevi, and to them were born 100 sons. The eldest son was Bharata, after whom this country (Indiā) is named, i.e., Bhārata. Bharata had 9 younger brothers, namely Kusāvarta, Ilīvṛtā, Brahmāvarta, Malaya, Ketu, Bhadrāsa, Indrāsprk, Vidrābha and Kīkaṭa. * These brothers had nine younger brothers who were all highly evolved yogis. They were Kavi, Hari, Antarikṣa, Prabuddha, Pipālāyana, Avirhotra, Draṃidha, Camaśa and Karabhājana. (Bhāgavata, Pañcama Skandha, Chapters 1-4).

ANTARVĀSA. A place in ancient India. (M.B., Sābhā Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 17).

ANU. The Prince named Anu was the son-in-law of Suka Brahmārsī, son of Vyāsā. Suka Brahmārsī married the beautiful Pīvārī, the daughter of the Pītrīs. Sukadeva and Pīvārī had four sons: Kṛṣṇa, Gaurāprabhā, Bhūri and Devaśruta and a daughter named Kirti. Kirti was married to Prince Anu the son of Dīghbrājā. (Devī Bhāgavata, Prathama Skandha).

ANUCAKRA. One of the two attendants delegated by Taśā (a Prajāpatī) to help Skanda in war, the other being Cakra. (M.B., Sālya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 40).

ANUCANĀ. A nymph. This Devaśri, along with other nymphs came down on earth at the time of the birth of Arjuna and danced. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 61).

ANUDATTĀ. One of the five sons created by Pañcavānaya for the Pītrīs. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 10).

ANUDATTĀ(M). The fire (Agni) called Pāncaśanaya created the elements named Anudattas. Pāncaśanaya generated these elements from his two hands with the help of his spiritual strength (tapāśaktī). (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 10).

ANUDĀRA. One of the hundred sons of Dīṁtarāṣṭra. (See Kauravās).

ANUDRUḤYU. Son of Yayāti. 1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Brahmā, Atri, Candra, Purūravas, Āyus, Nāhūsa, Yayāti, Anudruḥyī. 2) Birth. Yayāti had two sons, Yadu and Turvasu, by Devayānī, and three sons, Drūhyu, Anudruhyu and Puru by Śrāṃsīthā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 12).

ANUDYUTAPARVA. An inner parva of Sābhā Parva. In this parva is told the story of the game of dice played between Duryodhana and Dharmaputra.

ANUGIṬAPARVA. A sub-section of Aśvamedha Parva. (See M.B.).

ANUGOPTA. A Viṣvadeva. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 37).

AṆUḤA. A King in ancient India. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 232).

AṆUḤLĀDA. Brother of Prahlāda. 1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Viṣṇu, Brahmā, Kaśyapa Hīranyakaśipu, Anuhlāda. 2) Birth. Kaśyapa married Diti, daughter of Daśaka. Diti was a younger sister of Aditi. The sons of Aditi became devas and the sons of Diti became asuras. Diti gave birth to two sons named Hīranyākṣa and Hīranyakaśipu and a daughter Śīṁhikā. Śīṁhikā was given in marriage to Viṣṇu. They had two sons, Rāhu and Ketu. Five sons were born to Hīranyākṣa and four sons were born to Hīranyakaśipu. These four sons were: Anuhlāda, Hīḍa, Prahlāda and Śāṅhālāda. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anuśaṁ 1, Chapter 15 and Agnī Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

ANUKARMA. A Viṣvadeva. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 39).

ANUKRAMANIKĀ PARVA. The Mahābhārata is divided into 18 parvans. The first of them is called Ādi Parva and the first of its many sub-divisions is named

*Rāmānuja's Bhāgavata (Malayalam) mentions one Aśvāvarta also as Bharata's younger brother. But the name does not occur in the original. (See Bhāgavata, Chapter 4, Verse 10.)
ANUKRANÂJIKÂ PARVA. And, in this parva (Chapter) Ugra-rasvas (Sûtananda) son of Lomaharsha begins telling the Bhûrata story at the yajja (of 12 years' duration) held by Kulpati Sûnaka at the forest of Naimiśa. Vyasa composing the Mahabhûrata, the creation of the world, the greatness of the Mahabhûrata, Vyasa teaching his disciples the Mahabhûrata—all this comes in this narration. (See Mahabhûrata.)

ANUMATI. Daughter of Anugiras, son of Brahman. Anugiras had two wives, Smûthi and Khyâti, and four daughters, Anumati, Râkû, Kuhû and Sinivâli by Smûthi, and three sons, Ucathya, Brhaspati and Sûnhvarta by Khyâti. (Vişu Purâna, Part 1, Chapter 10).

ANUMLOCA. An Apantaratama. (See Mahabhûrata.)

ANUPA. (M.) A famous place in ancient India. Some scholars hold the view that Anûpa is near river Narmadâ. (Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 24).

ANUPÂTI. A synonym of Kàrttavivra. (Vana Parva, Chapter 116, Verse 19).

ANUPÂVRTTA. A place in ancient India. (M.B., Bhûsha Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 48).

ANUSASANA PARVA. One of the Parvans of the Mahabhûrata. (See Bhûrata.)

ANUSMÁNA. A river in ancient India. (M.B., Bhûsha Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 24).

ANUSRUTASRASAS. Son of Somali (Vişu Purâna).

ANUSUTUP. One of the seven horses of the Sun God, the other six being, Gâyatri, Brhati, Uûnik, Jagati, Triştup at Paitkî. (Vişu Purâna, Part 11, Chapter 8).

ANUVINDA. The son of Kaliyug. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 66).

ANUVINDA I. One of the 100 sons of Dhrtarâstra. There is a story in the Mahabhûrata about his being imprisoned along with Durthyodana. Knowing that the Pandavas were living in the forest in all comfort and happiness Durthyodana and others went in procession to them. Anuvinda also was in the procession. While Durthyodana and party were staying in a tent in the forest, a Gandharva named Citrasena appeared on the scene and imprisoned them. Anuvinda too was imprisoned. (See Citrasena). (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 242, Verse 8). He was killed in war by Bhisama. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 66).

ANUVINDA II. The puûrâñas refer to one Anuvinda, a prince of Avanti. (1) He had a brother called Vinda. (2) He was defeated by Sahadeva who set forth to subjugate the kings of the south just before the Râjasya yajja of Dharmaputra. (M.B., Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 10). (3) An Akshuhi (division of army) was despatched by Anuvinda to help Durthyodana. (M.B., Udverya Parva, Chapter 19, Verses 24, 25). (4) On the first day of the war Vinda and Anuvinda fought duels with Kuntibhoja. (M.B., Bhûsha Parva, Chapter 45, Verses 72-73). (5) Irawân, son of Arjuna defeated both Vinda and Anuvinda in the battle. (M.B., Bhûsha Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 18-22). (6) They fought with Bhim, Arjuna and the king of Vîra. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 25, Verses 20). (7) Anuvinda was killed by Arjuna. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 399, Verses 27-29). (8) Vinda and Anuvinda had a sister called Mitravindâ. The three of them were the children of Rûjôdhîdevi, sister of Sri KṚṣṇa's father. Sri KṚṣṇa married Mitravindâ, which her brother did not like. This was their reason for quitting the Pândava camp and fighting on the side of the Kauravas. (Bhûgavata, Dāśâma Skandha, Chapter 58, Verses 30, 31).

ANUVINDA III. The Mahabhûrata refers to another prince Anuvinda also. He was the son of a Kekayârâja. He also fought against the Pândavas and was killed by Sâtyaki. (M.B., Karna Parva, Chapter 13, Verse 21).

ANUVINDA. A wife of Sri KṚṣṇa. (Padma Purâna).

ANUYAYI. One of the 100 sons of Dhrtarâstra. He is called Agravayâ also; he was killed in battle by Bhumasena. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 102; Chapter 116, Verse 11 and Drona Parva, Chapter 157, Verses 17-20).

ANVAGBHÂNU. A King of the Pûru dynasty. (For genealogy see Pûru dynasty). Pûru had three sons, Ísvara, Raudrâvâ and Prâvâ. He had also another son Manasyu by Sâraseni, another wife. Anvagbhânu is the son born to Manasyu and his apsarâ wife, Mitra-keśi. Anvagbhânu is known as KṚṣṇu and Anâhârśi also. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 8-12).

APÂLÅ. A daughter of the great sage, Atri. Suffering from leprosy and hence forsaken by her husband Apål stayed with her father and started tapas to please Indra. One day, on her way home from the river, Apål tasted the Soma which was meant to be offered to Indra and hearing the sound produced then Devendra appeared before Apål. She gave the Soma to Indra, who was so pleased with her that he cured her of her leprosy. (Ṛgveda, 8-91).

APÂNTARATAMÄS. 1) General. A Maharâghi (Great Sage). He was born out of the sound 'bhu' uttered by Mahâviśu. The sage is also known as Sârasvata and Apântaratamas. Because he was absolutely free from inner darkness or ignorance he was called Apântaratamas. The sage, who was cognizant of the past, the present and the future divided and systematized the Vedas as ordered by Viṣu.

2) Viṣa was Apântaratamas reborn. Mahâviśu ordained that in the Dvapara age he be born as the son of Paraśara and once again divide and systematize the Vedas, and so was born as Viṣa. (Sri Śâknâra's Mundakopanisâd and Bhrasmatrâ Bhûṣya).

APÂNTARATAMA. (Sârasvata). This is another name of Apântaratamas. (See Apântaratamas).

APÂRARÂHMA. (See Parâbrahma).

APÂRARÂJITA. One of the serpents born to Kâsyapa of Kadru. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 13).

APÂRARÂJITA II. A King born out of a part of one of the eight Asuras, who were known the Kâlâyakas. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 49). The Pândavas had invited this King before they went to war. (M.B., Udverya Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 21).

APÂRARÂJITA IV. A King of the Kuruvârâs. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 54).

APÂRARÂJITA V. One of the seven Rudras, the other ten being Hara, Bahu Birtha, Tryambaka, Vrâskâpi, Sambhu, Kapardî, Raivâta, Mrgavâyadhâs, Sarpa and Kapâli. (Agni Purâna, Chapter 18).

APÂRARÂJITA VI. Used as a synonym of Mahâviśu. (M.B., Anûsasana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 89).

APÂRAKÂŚI. A place in ancient India. (M.B., Bhûsha Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 42).
ARANTHA(M).

APARAKUNTI. A place in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 43).

APARAMLECHA(M). A place in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 65).

APARANTA. A city on the west coast of ancient South India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 67).

APARANTA II. Another name of the Sūrāraka temple. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 67).

APARSEKA(M). A place in ancient India. (M.B., Śabāh Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 9).

APARAVALLAVĀ(M). A place in ancient India. (M.B., Śabāh Parva, Chapter 9, Verses 62).

APARĀVIDYA. Knowledge is of two categories or types. Viz.

1) Parāvidyā. That science or knowledge, which helps us to know or realise Him (Brahma) who is without either beginning or end, who could neither be seen with the eyes nor perceived by any of the senses.

2) Aparāvidyā. This includes knowledge of the four Vedas Rā, Ya, Sa and Atharvā; the six Vedāṅgas (sub-divisions of the Vedas) Śiṣṭā, Kaḷa, Nirukta, Chandā, Vāyūkaraṇa, Aṭipīdāna, Dharmaśāstra and the pūrṇās; as also, Nyāya śāstra (Logic), Vāidyā śāstra (medicine) Gandharva śāstra, Dhanurveda and Artha śāstra (economics).

APODADHAUMYA. (See Ayodhadaumya).

APPAYADIKŚTA. A reputed Rhetorician in Sanskrit, who thrived in the 16th Century A.D. He wrote two treatises on rhetoric, the Kuvalayānanda and Gitraminānā. The former is an interpretation of chapter 5 of Jayadeva's Candrāloka and is very popular in South India.

APRACI. A hell. (See Naraka). (Visṇu Purāṇa, Part 2, Chapter 6).

APRATISHTA(M). A hell. (See Naraka).

APSARAS.* An Apsaras is a nymph (devastri). These apsarā women were born at the churning of the ocean of Milk. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Bālakāḍa, Chapter 45, Verse 32 and Visṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 3). There are thousands of Apsaras. (Details given against the names of Apsaras).

APSUHOMYA. A great sage (Maharsi) who adorned the assembly of Yuddhiṣṭhira. (M.B., Śabāh Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 12).

ARA (ARAJAS). Daughter of Śukra maharsi. Íkṣvāku begot three sons, Dāṇḍa, Viṣvaṅga and Nimi. After his father's death Daṇḍa became king of the country between the Vindhyā and the Himālayas. In the course of a hunting expedition once Daṇḍa saw and was immediately attracted by the charms of Aṛa, daughter of Śukra maharsi. He committed rape on her and she told her father about the attack by Daṇḍa. The Maharsi asked his daughter to do tapas, and further told her that he would burn Daṇḍa's kingdom by a rain of fire. Aṛa did tapas, and at the behest of the Maharsi Indra destroyed Daṇḍa's kingdom by a downpour of a rain of fire. Afterwards this place became a terrible forest where neither birds nor animals lived, and came to be known as Daṇḍakārāṇya. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

ARAKKILLAM. (Palace of wax). Both the Kaurava and the Pāṇḍava princes lived in Hastināpura. The Pāṇḍavas became experts in archery, and their exemplary character and conduct made them, so to say, the apple of their eyes to the people. This evoked great jealousy in Duryodhana who made up his mind to completely ruin the Pāṇḍavas somehow or other. Duryodhana, with Dhṛtarāṣṭra's consent, built a new palace at Vārṇāvata. Though many others did not know that the palace was made of wax the Pāṇḍavas, from secret information knew the fact. But, they only pretended ignorance. Duryodhana and his minister Purocana, saw to it that the Pāṇḍavas shifted their residence to the walled palace. Duryodhana had planned to set fire to the palace and burn to death the Pāṇḍavas. But, the shrewd Vidura through his messenger Kanaka gave notice of the conspiracy to the Pāṇḍavas just in time. One night Purocana set fire to the walled palace, but the Pāṇḍavas escaped by a secret passage, which the architect of the palace had made while constructing it, and about which the Pāṇḍavas had previous knowledge. The same night a huntsman, with his five children, was also staying in the palace. As they were unconscious with heavy dosage of liquor they could not escape the fire. Those six people, and accidentally Purocana too were burnt to death. People, who gathered at the spot, thus saw seven corpses, and the news was broadcast that the Pāṇḍavas, including their wife Pāṇḍā and their mother had been burnt to death. This incident took place one year after the Pāṇḍavas had shifted their residence to the walled palace. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapters 141-151).

ARALI. One of the sons who were Brahmvādins, of Viśvāmitra. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 58).

ARANTUKA. A guard posted at a boundary line of Kuurksetra. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 52).

ARANTUKA. A sacred spot in ancient India, in river Sarasvati. A bath there is as beneficial as performing the Agnisomya yajña. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 53, Verse 24).

ARANYA. A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. (See Ikṣvāku dynasty).

ARASYA PARVA. A sub Parva in the Mahābhārata. (See Mahābhārata).

ARAṬTA(M). A place in ancient India. After Droṇa was killed in the great war, Kṛtavarmā ran away with the warriors of Aratṭa. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 193, Verse 13).

*Arītiḥā, a wife of Kaśyapa, delivered thirteen Apsaras. They were: Ālaṃbuṣa, Miśrakaṇa, Viḍyūta-parṇā, Tiḷottama, Rākṣita, Rāmbā, Manorāma, Keśini, Subēhu, Surajā, Suratā and Supriyā. Arītiḥā gave birth also to four Gandharvas, Hāhā, Hūḥū, Atibāhu and Tumburu as mentioned in the following verse.

AriṣṭāhiNa Subhagadēvi devarśitaḥ purā
Alaṃbuṣa Miśrakaṇa Viḍyūtparṇā Tiḷottama
Aṣṭiṣṭiḥa caiva rāmbā parlta manorāma
Keśini ca subhāśica viśvāyata ca hahāhūḥ
Tumburu cātā ārṣaḥ śrīśaṁ gandharvasaṇtiṃaḥ.
ARAYANNAM. The swan (Harīsa).

1) General. A bird (Harīsa) in Devaloka. The prefix ‘ara’ denotes royalty, sublimity, greatness etc. Many purāṇas describe Arayannam as a bird of the Devas. Mānasasaras at the heights of the Himālayas is the permanent abode of these divine birds. They do not like the rainy season. So they come down to the earth when rain begins at the Mānasasaras, and go back to the Saras, when rain begins on the earth. This phenomenon explains Cemušeri’s (Malayalam poet) statement in his Kṛṣṇagathā that ‘when rain set in hamsas—Arayannams—began flying away’.

2) Origin. Kaśyapa, the son of Brahmā, married the eight daughters of Daṇka, Tāmrā being one of them. Tāmrā bore five daughters Krauṇic’, Bhāṣi, Syeni, Dhrtrarṣṭri and Suki. Syeni gave birth to the kite, Dhrtrarṣṭri, the Hamsa and the Koṇa and Suki the Sukas (doves). Koṇa or the Cakravāki bird is the sister of Hamsa. This is how the Arayanna and the Cakra-vāka got Devatva (divinity). (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranya-kāṇḍa, Canto 14).

3) Bhīṣma and the Arayanna. Śiśūpāla, before his death, blabbered a lot of unbecoming things about Bhīṣma, who was partial to his (Śiśūpāla’s) enemies. And, he related the story of an Arayanna to elaborate the stand taken by the aged Bhīṣma. An aged Harīsa (Arayanna) which once dwelt on the sea-coast preached to all other birds much about ethical actions. The birds felt great respect for the Arayanna. They flew across the sea in search of prey after entrusting their eggs to the Arayanna. The old Arayanna grew fat on those eggs. There was one intelligent bird among the lot, and when it looked for the eggs they were not to be found. That bird informed its colleagues about the treacherous conduct of the Arayanna. The birds organised themselves and attacked the Arayanna to death. Oh! Bhīṣma, the same will be your end also. (M.B., Sābhā Parva, Chapter 41, Verses 30-41).

4) Nala and Arayanna. While Nala, the prince of the Niṣadha kingdom was resting in a garden he saw an Arayanna in a tank there. Out of curious pleasure Nala caught it, but seeing its mental tremor he let it free. Out of gratitude for this generous act, the Arayanna played the role of the messenger for Nala to get as his wife Damarayanti, the very beautiful daughter of the King of Vidarbha.

5) How the Arayanna (Harīsa) got the white colour. Once king Marutta was conducting the Māhesvara Satra (a yāga) and Devas like Indra came down to receive their share of the Havis (oblations in the sacrificial fire). And, this was the time when Rāvana with his attendants was on his triumphal tour. Hearing that the Devas were at the Aśrama of Marutta, Rāvana also went there, and Indra and the other Devas, trembling with fear, assumed different disguises and hid themselves away. Indra assumed the guise of the peacock, Yama of the crow, Kubera of the chameleon and Varuṇa of the Arayanna. Thus beguiled Rāvana went his own way. The Devas, who thus escaped blessed the family of those birds whose forms they assumed. Indra shaped the blue feathers of the peacock with mixed colours and eyes like his own. Moreover, he blessed them that they would never be affected with any disease, and that they would dance with their feathers spread when rain set in. Yamadharma blessed the crows that they would get the offerings made on earth by men to their departed ancestors. And Bhagavān Varuṇa told the Rāja-Hārīsa: “I escaped the clutches of Rāvana by assuming your shape and form. Therefore, be thee, who are now black and white, in future as purely white as milk”. Kubera blessed the Chameleon with capacity to change colour as and how it pleased, and also for its checks to appear golden in colour to the onlookers. After thus blessing the birds the Devas disappeared. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

ARUBUDA. An Asura. Indra killed this Asura. (Ṛgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 10, Śūkta 51).

ARUBUDA I. A nāga (serpent) living in mountains. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 9).

ARUBUDA II. The mountain Ālu. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 55).

ARCANĀNAS. A muni born in the Ātreya-gota of the dynasty of Atri. He desired to marry Rathavīti. But her father had decided to give her in marriage only to a Mahārṣi, and, therefore Arcanānas became a Mahārṣi with the help of the Marutta and wedded Rathavīti. Mahārṣi Śyāvāśva was their son.

ARCISMATI. The fourth daughter of Mahārṣi Aṅgiras. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 216, Verse 6).

ARCIS. Pṛthu and the Arcis were born from the arms of Vena. (Bāgavata, 4th Skandha, Chapter 15). Pṛthu did tapas in forest and gave up his physical body in fire and attained Vaiuṅgṭha (the abode of Vīṣṇu) with the Arcis. (Bāgavata, 4th Skandha). For details see Pṛthu.

ARCISMAT. A sect of Pṛthu. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 236, Verse 15).

ARHDHEVAS (SEMI-GODS). In temples hermits, ancestors, serpents, celestial maids and such others also are worshipped. Among these there are Vasus, Nāgas, Asuras, Pāiśācas, Vētālas and many other classes. These are the semi-gods. (See Page 27 of Nāma-nāṁgūm Daivaṅgall).

ARHDHAKILĀṬRTHA. A holy ghāt or bath built by the hermit Darbhi. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 153).

ARHDHASĀDHAKA. A minister of King Daśaratha. He had eight ministers. “The great king had eight ministers who were pure and famous and experts in dealing with matters of their concern : Jayanta, Dṛṣṭi, Vījaya, Śiddha, Ardha-sādhaka, Āśoka, Mantrapāla and Sumantra were they”. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākānda, Sarga 7, Stanzas 2 and 3 : Vallathol Translation).

ARGHĀBHĪHANAPARVA. A parva in the Mahābhārata. (See M.B.).

ARION. A King of the lunar dynasty. He was a son born to Arvācina (a king of the Pūru dynasty) and Maryādā, a princess of Vidarbha. Arīha had a son, Mahābhauama, born of his wife, a princess of Aṅgā. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 19, Verses 18-19).

ARIMEJAYA. A Rāja of the Pūru dynasty. (See Pūru dynasty). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

ARIŚṬ. Wife of Kaśyapa. The Gandharvas were born of her. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19, M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 83).

ARIŚṬA (ARIŚTAKA). An asura, a servant of Kaśīsa. Once, at the instance of Kaśīsa he went to Gokula disguised as an ox to kill Śri Kṛṣṇa. The ox instilled terror in people by tearing to pieces hills and mountains.
with its horns and bellowing like hell. But Śrī Kṛṣṇa faced the beast, and raised blows on him and it was thrown hundred yojanas away and it died. At the time of death it regained its former from as Asura. (Bhāgavata, Daśāmā, Skandha, Chapter 37).

ARISTANEMA (ARISTANEMI). (See Aristanemi).

ARISTANEMI I. One of the six sons of Vinatā.

1) Genealogy. Viṣṇu, Brahmā, Kaśyapa and Aristanemi. Kaśyapa married Dīrtrārṣṭri, daughter of Dakṣa. Śukī was their daughter, Śuki had a daughter Nāta and she a daughter, Vinatā. Aristanemi, Tāraksya, Aruṇa, Garuḍa, Para, Aruṇi and Śrī Vaṇūrī were the children of Vinatā. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 40).

2) Tapaśaṅkta of Aristanemi. Aristanemi with his son was once performing tapas in the forest. The son was immersed in meditation clad in the skin of a deer as looking like a deer. Paraparāṇājaya, the King of Hryaya who happened at the time to be hunting in the forest discharged his arrow against the son of Aristanemi taking him for a deer. When the king found out the real fact he felt extremely sorry, and he craved pardon of the boy's father for unwittingly killing his son. Then Aristanemi pointing out his son who was standing alive asked the King, "Is this the boy whom you killed?" The King was naturally wonder-struck. But Aristanemi told the King that there was nothing to wonder at in the case as nobody would be able to kill them because their Tapāśaṅkta was so great. The King felt so happy at this, and returned to his palace after prostrating at the feet of the sage. (M.B., Aranya Parva, Chapter 184).

3) Some other details. (1) Sumati, wife of King Sagara of the Solar dynasty, was the daughter of Aristanemi. (Rāmāyana, Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 38, Verse 4). (2) Kaśyapa had the synonym Aristanemi also. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Kiśkinḍhākāṇḍa, Canto 66, Verse 4; Devi Bhāgavata, Saptama Skandha). (3) Aristanemi's wives delivered sixteen children. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19). (4) Aristanemi has spoken a lot about the greatness of Brahmins. (M.B., Aranya Parva, Chapter 184, Verses 17-22). (5) Aristanemi once gave much spiritual advice to King Sagara of the Surya Varṇa. (M.B., Śanti Parva, Chapter 288, Verses 5-46).

ARISTANEMI II. Mahābhārata, Śanti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 8 refers to one Aristanemi, the second son of Kaśyapa.

ARISTANEMI III. A Rājā called Aristanemi occupied a place in the council of Yama. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 9).

ARISTANEMI IV. A false name assumed by Sahadeva while the Pāṇḍavas lived incognito in the Vīrāṭa kingdom. (M.B., Vīraṭa Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 5).

ARISTANEMI V. A synonym of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 71, Verse 5).

ARISTANEMI VI. A King. Realising the transient nature of worldly life, he gave up his kingdom and went to and did tapas at Mount Gandhamādana. Indra who was very much pleased at this sent a messenger with a vimāna (aeroplane) to conduct the King to Svarga (heaven). When he was told that there was in Svarga also the states of being high or low, and fall happened when the effect of good actions decreased, the King gave up his desire for Svarga and sent back Indra's messenger. Then Indra sent the King with a messenger to the Āśrama of Vālmiki so that he might gain spiritual knowledge. Vālmiki consoled the King with the advice that the telling, hearing and pondering over the story of the Rāmāyana alone would be enough to get eternal salvation. (Yogavāśishṭam).

ARJUNA. The third of the Pāṇḍavas.

2) Previous birth. Arjuna and Śrī Kṛṣṇa are often referred to as Naraṇa or Nārāyan. In their previous life they were two Rṣis called Nara and Nārāyaṇa, and from that time onwards they lived as inseparable companions and sons of the same parents. They entered Mahāsamādhi at Badaryārama in the Himālayas. Of the two Nārāyaṇa was a partial incarnation of Viṣṇu. About the Nararśi the Devi Bhāgavata has the following to say: "Dharma had his origin in the heart of Brahmā, and he earned great reputation for truthfulness and adherence to Vedic dharma. He married the daughters of Dakṣa. Dharma had four sons, Hari, Kṛṣṇa, Nara and Nārāyaṇa. Of the four sons Hari and Kṛṣṇa became great yogis, and Nara and Nārāyaṇa, great tapasvins. Nara and Nārāyaṇa did tapas, worshipping Brahmā for 1000 years at the holy Badaryārama in the plains of the Himālayas. Nara was born in the next birth as Arjuna. (Devī Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha). See Nara.

3) Birth. To Vicitravīrya son of Santanu was born Dīrtrārṣṭra by Ambikā, and Paṇḍu by Ambalikā. Paṇḍu had two wives, Kuntī and Mādrī. The curse of a Muni made physical contacts with his wives impossible for Paṇḍu. (See Paṇḍu). Kuntī, before her marriage had attended on Mahārāj Durvāsas who pleased with her service made a gift of five mantras to her. The effect of the mantras was that Kuntī would become mother of a son from him about whom she was thinking while she repeated the mantras. As soon as she got the mantras she retired to a solitary place and thinking of the Sun-God repeated the first mantra. At once Suryadeva appeared and Karṇa was born to her by him. After assuring her that the incident would not affect her chastity Surya disappeared. Kuntī abandoned the child to float in the river Gaṅgā, and stayed with Paṇḍu keeping the other four mantras to herself. Since Paṇḍu could not contact the body of his wives, with his permission Kuntī began practising the other four mantras one by one. By three mantras she got three sons, Dharma, Durmata and Dharma, born to Arjuna from Indra and Bhīmasena from the wind- God (Vāyu). The remaining one mantra Kuntī gave to Mādrī. She repeated it thinking of the Asvini Devas, and two sons, Nakula and Sahadeva were born to her. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 63 onwards).

4) Festival of birth. At the birth of Arjuna Kuntī heard a heavenly voice declare as follows: "Oh! Kunti! your son will be equal to Siva in prowess and unconquerable just as Indra is. After defeating all the Kings he will perform the Āsvedamedha thrice. He will please Śiva and get the great weapon called Pāśupata from him. On the orders of Indra he will kill Nivāta-kavacas. Hearing the above prophecy the Devas played ecstatic music and flowers were showered from the sky. The Sapatāśrīs, Prajāpāthis and other sages arrayed themselves in the sky. Thus, all animates and inanimate objects celebrated the birth of Arjuna.

5) Naming. Sages from the top of the Sataśrīga mountain came together to perform the chrstening ceremony of Arjuna. While enumerating the various names of Arjuna, it is said in the Vīraṭa Parva that Kṛṣṇa was the name Pāndu gave to his son. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 123, Verse 20).

6) Childhood. The Pāṇḍavas spent their childhood at Hastināpura with the Kauravas. Then Arjuna studied the art and science of using weapons, dance, music etc. along with the other boys. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 1). Kaśyapa, the high priest of Vasudeva did for Arjuna the usual Sārīkāras like Upanayana (wearing of the holy thread) etc. Arjuna was taught the first lessons in Dhanurveda (Science of archery) by Rājarśi Śuka. Afterwards, Kṛpācārya became the preceptor of the Pāṇḍavas in Dhanurveda, and it was then that Dronācārya came. There is a particular story about Dronācārya becoming the guru. (See Drona).

7) Special favour of Drona. Arjuna showed very great interest in the science of the use of weapons. Drona, the master, wanted to teach Aśvatthāmā, his son, certain special things, and he began sending all his disciples to fetch water. Aśvatthāmā used to be the first to return with the water, and before the others returned Drona began teaching Aśvatthāmā the special lessons. Arjuna came to understand this programme and he began returning with water along with Aśvatthāmā. Then the guru began teaching the special things to both Aśvatthāmā and Arjuna. Drona instructed the cook not to serve Arjuna food in the darkness. While Arjuna was once taking his food, wind blew out the burning lamp, and Arjuna alone continued eating. Because of constant practice Arjuna was quite sure about the position of the hand and the mouth in the process of eating, and Arjuna surmised from this that archery also could be practised in darkness. He began practising them. The guru came to know of it, and witnessing Arjuna’s performance praised Arjuna as a unique archer. (Bhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 132).

8) Ekalavya’s finger was cut. Ekalavya, son of Hiraṇyadhanus, King of the Niśādas (a tribe of hunters, forestmen) approached Drona to learn the science of the use of weapons. Drona, the Brahmīn, refused the prayer of this prince of the forest tribe. Ekalavya, after pros-trating at the feet of Drona returned to the woods, made an image of Drona with earth and meditating upon it as guru began practising the use of weapons. The Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas went hunting in the forest. Seeing there Ekalavya with his matted hair and clad in deer skin the hunting dogs began barking at him. Ekalavya shot into the mouth of the dog seven arrows at one and the same moment. With the arrows thrust in the mouth the dogs ran back to the Pāṇḍavas, and they found out the culprit, Ekalavya, who claimed himself to be a disciple of Drona. Grief-stricken at this claim Arjuna hurried up to Drona and said: “You had pronounced me to be your foremost disciple without an equal. But, today Ekalavya, another disciple of yours has relegated me to the second place”. Thereupon Drona went and saw Ekalavya in the forest. Ekalavya, in all devotion stood up and saluted the guru. And the guru said, as follows: “Oh! Ekalavya if this art my disciple give me the daksīṇa (fee) due to the guru, and I desire to get the thumb of your right hand as my fee”. At once Ekalavya cut his thumb and gave it to Drona. Henceforth Arjuna became Drona’s unequalled disciple. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 132).

9) Arjuna got Brahmaśirāstra. When once Drona and his disciples were bathing in the river Gaṅgā, a whale caught hold of the leg of the guru. The combined efforts of the disciples failed to extricate the leg from the grip of the whale. Ultimately Arjuna shot an arrow and released the guru’s leg. Greatly pleased at this Drona imparted to Arjuna knowledge about Brahmaśirāstra, and Arjuna was enjoined not to use the astra against men, but to use it only when confronting higher beings than men. [Bhārata (Malayalam), Ādi Parva, Chapter 133].

10) Competition in arms. When the training of the princes was almost over Dṛgṭaṛṣṭra decided to have a rehearsal of their attainments, and the scene for it also was set. The princes with bows and arrows appeared on the scene. Yudhiṣṭhira and others first exhibited their skill in shooting arrows in the order of their seniority. Every scene was explained to Dhṛtrāṣṭra by Vidura and to Gāndhārī by Sahājaya. Duryodhana and Bhīma clashed with each other. Aśvatthāmā pacified them and kept them apart. And, then Arjuna and Karna appeared on the scene, and the onlookers declared them to be equal in skill in archery. When their shooting exhibition was over, Karna who got angry again rushed to the stage. Arjuna also got ready. Arjuna challenged Karna’s eligibility on the ground that he was low-born and not a Kṣatriya. At once Duryodhana proclaimed him as the King of Aṅgā. Though this pacified the scene, this competition in archery served much to make the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas the bitterest of enemies. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapters, 136, 137).

11) Arjuna’s gurudakṣiṇā (Offering of fee to the preceptor). At the starting of training the princes Drona told them: “I have one thing in mind, and you must do it for me when you have completed the course of training. All the disciples except Arjuna kept silent at this, but Arjuna promised to fulfil the guru’s wish at the proper time. The training was over, and it was time for gurudakṣiṇā. Drona asked to be brought bound before him Drupada, King of Paścālā. (For Drona’s enmity towards Drupada see Drupada). Thereupon the Pāṇḍavas marched to Paścālā, and in a fierce battle Arjuna defeated Drupada. Though Bhīma tried to kill Drupada Arjuna did not permit it, but took him bound to Drona. This ended Drona’s hatred towards Drupada, who now gifted half his kingdom to Drona. Drona was very much pleased with Arjuna for the above act, and advised him to fight even him (Drona) if the latter opposed him (Arjuna). To this Arjuna replied ‘Yes’. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 139, Verse 14). With this promise to fight even the guru in case the guru attacked him Arjuna became the most reputed archer in Bhārata.
12) Jealousy of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. After the guru dakṣiṇa Arjuna marched against the neighbouring kingdom. He defeated very easily in war the king of Yavana and the Kings Saivāna, Vipula and Sunitra. These victories of Arjuna made the Kauravas very anxious; Dhṛtarāṣṭra brooded over it. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 138, Verses 20–23).

13) Escape from the waxen palace. Duryodhana made up his mind to destroy the Pândavas somehow or other. He got the Pândavas to shift their residence to a palace made of wax at Vāraṇāṣṭa, and one year after this the palace was set fire to. The Pândavas escaped death by fire through a tunnel and entered the forest, the next day. (See Arakkiḷam).

14) Arjuna on the banks of river Ga. The Pândavas walked much through the terrible forest, and after midnight reached the banks of the Gaṅgā. At that time Anāgaraparṇa (Citraratha), the Gandharva was enjoying his time in the river with some Apsāra women. The presence of men at the scene, the Gandharva did not relish. Arjuna and the Gandharva crossed in words, which led to a duel. In the duel the Gandharva was defeated. As the wife of the Gandharva prayed with tears in her eyes Arjuna spared him his life. The grateful Gandharva told the Pândavas many interesting stories. He also made a present of divine horses and imparted to them the esoteric knowledge called Cākṣuṣ-vidyā. The Gandharva finally told the Pândavas that they were attacked because they came without Agni and Ahuti in their front. He also explained this fact that Arjuna could subjugate him on account of his (Arjuna's) genuine celibacy. (See Citraratha).

15) Pāṇcāllīwayaiyavara. Citraratha, during his talks with the Āṇḍavas had pointed out to them the need to have a priest to lead and guide them in all matters, and accordingly they visited Dhaumyāśrama and installed the Mahārṣi (Dhauyana) as their priest.

And, meantime, seeing thousands of people on their way to attend the Savyāvanvara (marriage by open choice of husband by the girl) of Kṛṣṇa (Pāṇcāli) daughter of the King of iñācāla, the Pândavas also followed the crowd. Veda Vyāsa, whom the Pândavas met on their way blessed them. King Drupada wished to give his daughter Kṛṣṇa in marriage to Arjuna. The news that the gda as were burned to death in the palace of wax grieved Drupada. Yet he had made arrangements for a trial of strength by Heroes at the Savyāvanvara. A tremendous bow was got ready and installed on the ground, and a machine constructed which was kept suspended in the air. The target was placed inside the machine. And then Drupada spoke thus: “My daughter shall be married to him who will bend the bow and with the first arrow hit the target placed inside the machine”. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 155, Verse 11). Great warriors like Duryodhana, Karṇa, Śiṣuṭa, Śiṅṭumāra took their seats in the marriage hall. All the kings failed even to lift the bow up. Ultimately Arjuna lifted the bow and hit the target very easily. Pāṇcāli put the wedding garland on Arjuna’s neck. When the Pândavas returned to their mother with Pāṇcāli in the evening the mother from inside her room said: “What you have got today, my sons, you enjoy among yourselves.” Kunti said this under the impression that what her sons had got was some Bhīkṣa. At any rate, in obedience to the above injunction of the mother Pāṇcāli became wife to the five Pândavas. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapters 190, 191).

16) Arjuna at Indraprastha. The svayāvanvara of Pāṇcāli broadcast news about the whereabouts of the Pândavas. Dhṛtarāṣṭra brought them back to Indraprastha, and installed them in a new palace built at the place called Khāṇḍavaprastha. (Indraprastha). Dharmaputra ruled a part of the country with Indraprastha as capital. Nārada went there once and advised the Pândavas to guard themselves against mutual quarrels as the five of them claimed one and the same woman as wife. Thenceforth it was set forth that Pāṇcāli would live with each husband in turn for one year. It was also settled that during a particular year if any other husband than the one whose turn it was to live with Pāṇcāli saw her the intruder was to go on a pilgrimage for one year.

Once a brahmin came to the palace complaining that his cows were stolen by thieves, and Arjuna promised to help him. Arjuna did so without remembering that all his weapons were stored in Dharmaputra’s palace. That year Pāṇcāli was living with Dharmaputra. Forgetting the fact Arjuna went to Dharmaputra’s palace, got his weapons and helped the brahmin. For thus breaking the rule Arjuna left his palace on a pilgrimage for one year.

17A) Arjuna married Ulūpikā and Citrāṅgadā. Arjuna with his bow and arrows went into the forest. Many brahmīns followed him. Arjuna reached the banks of Gaṅgā and entered the waters for a bath. Here Arjuna was attracted by Ulūpikā, daughter of the Nāga King and he married her. A son was born to them called Irāvān. After visiting places like Agastya vātām, Vasiṣṭhagiri Arjuna reached Manalur. He married Citrāṅgadā, daughter of Citrāṅgadā, King of Manalur. After a stay of three months there he went southwards. Citrāṅgadā gave birth to a son named Baḥruvāhana.

17B) The mark on Arjuna’s flag is Hanumān, and the following story is attached to it. Arjuna, once during a tour of the country was much surprised to see the Dam constructed by Śrī Rāma from Rāmeśvara to Lāṅkā. He also felt that it was not at all proper on the part of Śrī Rāma to have sought the help of monkeys to construct the dam. Śrī Rāma could have made a dam with arrows. Arjuna put this question to a great scholar (Pandit) who was sitting nearby reading the Rāmāyaṇa. Neither the Pandit nor the other brahmīns gathered there could give a convincing answer to Arjuna’s doubts. Then a monkey child went up to Arjuna and told him with pride that a dam made of arrows would have broken when the monkeys walked on it. Arjuna said then, “no, no, no monkey will be able to break the dam built with Rāma’s arrows; which monkey would break a dam of arrows made even by me?”. And, a debate began about the subject. The monkey and Arjuna agreed to a bet that if a monkey broke the dam made by Arjuna he would end his life by jumping into fire, and if the monkey could not break the dam it would for ever be Arjuna’s slave. Arjuna constructed a dam with arrows. And, as soon as the monkey set foot on it it was broken. Arjuna tried again. Though now it caused some efforts on the part of the monkey the dam broke this time also. Arjuna was thus left with no alternative but to die by jumping into fire and a fire was accordingly lit. Before Arjuna jumped into the fire a brahmin boy, who was bathing in the river ran upto Arjuna and told him that his attempt at self annihilation was not justified as the bet was made without an arbiter. When Arjuna who was wedded so much to truth brushed aside this argument and got ready to end his life the boy said: "If you are so very insistent about it you (Arjuna and the monkey) compete once again with me as arbiter. This suggestion of the boy was accepted. The monkey child tried its best to break the dam, but it failed. It developed its body to the size of a mountain and jumped on the dam. Even then it did not break. Then he ran up to the boy who was acting as arbiter and prostrated at his feet crying 'Rāmacandra'. At the same moment Arjuna also prostrated before the boy crying 'Śrī Kṛṣṇa, slave to devotees'. The boy asked both of them to get up, and after admonishing them for their conceit gave them good advice. He also asked the monkey child to keep his word by remaining as the emblem of Arjuna's flag. (The monkey boy was actually Ṣaṅkūmān and the brahmin boy Śrī Kṛṣṇa.)

17 C) Arjuna married Subhadra. Arjuna went to the holy place called Saubhadratirtha and redeemed the woman named Vṛgā from the curse she was labouring under. (See Vṛgā). Arjuna continued his journey and reached Gokarna and Prabhāsa tirtha, where he met Gada, brother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Gada described to Arjuna the great beauty of his sister, Subhadra. Arjuna went to Dvārakā and paid his respects to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. A few days later the yādavas celebrated a great festival at mount Raivatataka. Arjuna went there disguised as a Sannyāsin and forcibly took away Subhadra with him with the permission of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Though the yādavas got ready for a fight they were ultimately pacified, and Subhadra was married to Arjuna. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter, 218-224).

17D) Brahmin boy saved. When once Arjuna was in Dvārakā wīt Śrī Kṛṣṇa a brahmin appeared on the scene lamenting that his child died as soon as it was born. Nobody paid any heed to this, and then Arjuna rose up and assured protection to the next child to be born to the brahmin and asked him to return home in peace. Arjuna also vowed that he would end his life by jumping into fire if he failed to protect the next child of the brahmin.

As the time for the delivery of his wife approached the brahmin took Arjuna home. Arjuna made the house secure by making an enclosure with his arrows. Yet the child died; not only that, at the time of birth itself its body disappeared. And, the brahmin heaped insults on Arjuna, who looked very foolish. Rendered thus an object of ridicule Arjuna began to make a fire for him to jump into. At this Śrī Kṛṣṇa appeared before Arjuna and prevented him from jumping into fire. And then both Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna went to Viśṇuloka and submitted the case of the brahmin to him. Viṣṇu told them: "Oh! Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, it was I who took away the brahmin boys for the pleasure of seeing you both here. You may immediately return with the brahmin boys. And, Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna returned with the boys to the brahmin, who now felt very happy. (Bhāgavata, Daśāma Skandha, Chapter 89).

17E) Burning of Khaṇḍava forest. While Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna were spending their days on the banks of river Yamunā in the summer season Agni Bhagavān (the fire-god) requested them to give the Khaṇḍava forest as food to him. (See Khaṇḍavadāhā). Arjuna agreed to oblige Agni Bhagavān, who presented to Arjuna the bow called Gāṇḍiva, a white horse, and many other powerful arrows. When Agni began burning the forest, Indra sent a heavy shower of rain. By creating a tent with arrows Arjuna saved the forest from the rain. Arjuna killed Takṣaka's wife, cursed the N. ga called Asvasena and saved Maya, the architect of the Asuras who was put up in the forest. Indra was pleased and gifted many divine arrows to Arjuna. Maya gave the famous conch, Devadattam to Arjuna. By now the one year of the pilgrimage of Arjuna was over and he returned to Indraprastha. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapters 233-239).

17F) Fight between Arjuna and Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (See Gālava, para 4).

18) Again to the forest. Maya, who escaped death in Khaṇḍava forest, in his great gratitude, went to Indraprastha, and with the permission of Dharmaputra built for the Pāṇḍavas an exceptionally beautiful palace. And then the Pāṇḍavas made the conquest of all the earth, and after killing enemy kings like Jarāsandha, the Kimpurūṣas, the Ḥadākas, Śīsūpurā, Kurudhā and Bhagadatta returned to Indraprastha and performed the Rājasūya yajña. The Kauravas who got jealous at this went on a visit to Indraprastha. When they entered the palace built by Maya they were put into many a ludicrous situation. (See Sabhāpraveśa). Insulted and humiliated they returned to Hastinapura and challenged the Pāṇḍavas to a game of dice, and in the game the Pāṇḍavas lost not only their kingdom and other riches, but Pāṇcāli as well. Duśāsana dragged Pāṇcāli and stripped her of her clothes in the royal assembly and thus mercilessly insulted her. According to the terms and condition agreed to with reference to the game of dice, the Pāṇḍavas had to lead forest life for twelve years and live for one year incognito. The Pāṇḍavas again started for the forest. (M.B., Sabhā Parva).

19) Pāṇḍavas in Kamyaka forest. A number of brahmins also accompanied the Pāṇḍavas to the forest. The noble brahmin, Saunaka consoled the aggrieved Dharmaputra in the Dvaitavana. Dharmaputra felt worried that he could not feed the brahmins who accompanied him into the forest. Pāṇcāli prayed to the Sun-God, and he gave the Aksayapātra to her. (See Aksyapātra). And, after this the Pāṇḍavas, along with the brahmins, entered the Kamyaka forest. (M.B., Aranya Parva, Chapter 36).

20) Arjuna secured divine arrows. Dharmaputra asked Arjuna to do tapas in the Himālayas and thus secure divine arrows. Accordingly Arjuna went south and saw Indra in the Indrakila mountain. Indra gave him boons. There Arjuna killed Mākaśura. And, then Arjuna went to Mount Kailāsa and prayerfully concentrated his mind on Śiva. Śiva appeared in the guise of a forest dweller. (See Pāṇcāli Parvatī). After that he got the Dāṇḍāśṭra from Yama, Pāṇḍāśtra from Varuna and Antardhanāśtra from Kubera. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapters 37-41).

21) Arjuna in Indraloka. Indra, who was so very pleased that Arjuna got so many divine arrows deputed his charioteer, Mātaḷi, to bring Arjuna to Devaloka, and at Devaloka he learned more about archery and music. The Apsarā women forgot themselves when they saw the exceptionally handsome Arjuna. Urvaśī, mad with love, sent her messenger Citrasena to Indra. Being told about Urvāśī's love Arjuna closed both his ears with hands, and reminded the messenger of Urvāśī's maternal position with reference to him. Urvāśī cursed and turned Arjuna into an eunuch. Indra consoled Arjuna by assuring him that Urvāśī's curse will turn out to be of great benefit to him. Afterwards Arjuna stayed in Devaloka for a few days with Citrasena, and during the period he killed Nīvatākavaca and Kālakaya. Arjuna became a friend of Mahārṣi Lomaśa, who had gone to Devaloka to see Indra. Promising Arjuna that he would protect Dharaputra Lomaśa returned to the earth. Arjuna left the Kāmyaka forest and returned to his brothers after an absence for five years. He met the brothers at Mount Gandhamādana. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapters 42-47).

22) Procессion. At last a witty and humorous brahmin went to Dhṛtarāṣṭra and dilated upon the hardships being suffered by the Pāṇḍavas, and Duryodhana and others were extremely pleased and happy to hear it. Yet, they shed crocodile tears. But Duryodhana was in a mighty hurry to see with his own eyes the pitiable plight of the Pāṇḍavas. On the pretext of going out for hunting Duryodhana and others with the permission of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, started for the forest with a number of attendants. 8,000 chariots, 30,000 elephaters, thousands of infantry soldiers, 9,000 horses, merchants, ornaments, courtiers and thousands of hunters formed this procession into the forest. Just like roaring winds during the rainy season the procession caused thunderous noise. Duryodhana approached the pool in the Dvāta forest and waited at a distance. (M.B., Arṇya Parva, Chapter 239, Verses 25-29).

Duryodhana and attendants put up tents in the forest. The Gandharvas obstructed Duryodhana, and he and the Gandharva called Citrasena clashed with each other. Duryodhana was made a prisoner. Arjuna came on the scene and released him. And, thus humiliated Duryodhana returned to Hastinapura with the attendants. (M.B., Arṇya Parva, Chapters 239-253).

23) Arjuna lost consciousness. While once Pāṇcāli was alone King Jayadratha forcibly took her away. Within seconds the Pāṇḍavas confronted Jayadratha and regained Pāṇcāli. Jayadratha and his men were killed. The Pāṇḍavas, who were very weary and tired walking in the forest felt extremely thirsty. Nakula, at the instance of Dharaputra climbed a tree and looked around and sighted a pool of clear water. When Nakula went to the pool and began to draw water a voice from above was heard saying as follows: “Do not be so very daring. This is my ancestral wealth. If you answer my questions you may not only drink the water but also take some with you”. Without paying any heed to this warning Nakula drank water from the pool, and lo! he fell down unconscious immediately. Sahadeva who went to the pool in search of Nakula and drank water from the pool also met with the same fate as Nakula. Arjuna and Bhima also had the same fate at the pool. Lastly Dharaputra went to the pool and understanding what happened to his brothers requested permission to drink water. At once a Yakṣa appeared and brought the brothers of Dharaputra back to consciousness. In fact, the Yakṣa was none other than Yamadharmeda. (For questions and answers of the Yakṣa see Dharaputra.) (M.B., Arṇya Parva, Chapters 312-315).

24) Life incognito. Now the twelve years of forest life being over the Pāṇḍavas decided to spend the one year of life incognito in the Virāṭa palace. Arjuna disguised himself and deposited his clothes and weapons in the hollow of a Sāmi tree in the forest. And the Pāṇḍavas in various disguises reached the Virāṭa palace. They assumed false names: Dharaputra as Kaṅka, Bhīma as Valāla, Arjuna as Bhṛṇḍālana, Nakula as Grānthika and Sahadeva as Aśīṭaṇemi and Draupadi as Mālīṇi. When the life incognito of the Pāṇḍavas for one year was about to expire a rumour reached the Kauravas that the Pāṇḍavas were at the Virāṭa capital, and the Kauravas thought that the Pāṇḍavas will appear on the scene if a war was fought against King Virāṭa. The Kauravas, with this object in view, lifted the cows of Virāṭa and that led to war. Uttara, the prince of Virāṭa boasted that he would fight provided he had a good charioteer. Bhṛṇḍālana (Arjuna) agreed to act as such and they started for the warfield. At the sight of the massive army of the Kauravas Uttara got frightened and tried to run away from the field. But Bhṛṇḍālana tightly bound Uttara to the chariot, drove it very fast through the forest, took back from the hollow of the Sāmi tree his weapons and returned to the battle-field. The Kauravas were absolutely defeated in the war and they took to their heels. They understood that the very clever and terrible warrior in disguise was Arjuna himself. But, by the time the period of the Pāṇḍavas life incognito was over. The king of Virāṭa, greatly pleased over this victory in war gave his daughter, Utārā in marriage to Abhimanyu, son of Arjuna. (M.B., Virāṭa Parva).

25) Preparations for war. After the forest life and life incognito the Pāṇḍavas returned. The Kauravas refused to give them half the kingdom. Śrī Kṛṣṇa, on behalf of the Pāṇḍavas, implored that half the kingdom or five districts or five houses or at least one house be given to them. But, the Kauravas took the stand that not even an iota of land would be given to the Pāṇḍavas. And, war was perfecr decided upon. Duryodhana went to Kṛṣṇa at Dvārakā to request for support in war. Kṛṣṇa, who favoured the Pāṇḍavas lay in false sleep as he did not want to fight against them. Duryodhana sat at the head of Kṛṣṇa. Arjuna, who came after some time sat at the feet of Kṛṣṇa and remained there standing. Awakening from sleep, it was Arjuna whom Kṛṣṇa saw first. After the greetings were over with Arjuna, Kṛṣṇa saw Duryodhana also. Between Kṛṣṇa without any arms and the armed forces of Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna chose Kṛṣṇa and Duryodhana his armed forces to help each side in the impending war. (Udyoga Parva).

26) War. Both the Parties were encamped in Kurukṣetra ready for war. Śrī Kṛṣṇa acted as Charioteer to Arjuna. He stopped the chariot in between the opposing armies. Arjuna felt deep anguish to find his own people arrayed on the opposite side for war. Reluctant to kill relations, elders, friends and preceptors Arjuna laid down his arms in the chariot. Then did Kṛṣṇa instruct him in Karmayoga (the philosophy of action). That instruction and advice of Kṛṣṇa is the world-famous Bhagavad Gītā. The Gītā cleared off Arjuna's illusions and he praised the Lord, Śrī Kṛṣṇa, who revealed his all comprehensive form (Viṣvarūpa) to Arjuna. On the first day of the war Arjuna fought a duel with Bhīma, and the second day he fought the Kaurava forces with exceptional prowess. And then Arjuna prevented Kṛṣṇa from killing Bhīṣma. But, the Kaurava army faced defeat that day. On the third day Arjuna defeated Bhīṣma, Aśvatthāmā, Trigarta, Bhagadatta and others. Thereupon a really fierce fight began. The war lasted for 18 days. The important incidents during the 18 days can be summarised as follows:—

1. Fierce fight between Arjuna and Bhīṣma.
2. Fight between Arjuna and Aśvatthāmā.
3. Arjuna destroyed the Kaurava army.
4. Irāvāṇa, son of Arjuna, was killed.
5. Arjuna fought against Drona and Suśarmā.
6. Took the vow to kill Bhīṣma.
7. Sīkhaṇḍi prompted to kill Bhīṣma.
8. On the appearance of Sīkhaṇḍi the Kaurava army, took fright and fled in great disarray.
10. Duel with Bhagadatta.
11. Duel again with Bhīṣma.
12. Bhīṣma fainted and fell on the ground.
14. With Sīkhaṇḍi in the front made an attack on Bhīṣma.
15. Arjuna discharged three arrows to serve as pillow to Bhīṣma who, dislodged from the chariot, was lying on a bed of arrows.
16. Cool water sprinkled on the face of Bhīṣma with the aid of divine arrows.
17. Fought against Drona and defeated his forces.
18. Satyajit deputed to remain with Dharmaputra to help him.
19. Sudhavā killed.
20. Again fought with Bhagadatta.
21. Suprāṭik, the elephant of Bhagadatta killed.
22. And after that, Bhagadatta also killed.
23. Vṛṣaka and Acala killed by Arjuna.
25. Arjuna killed the three brothers of Karṇa and confronted Karṇa.
27. Hearing about the death of Abhimanyu, Arjuna fell down unconscious.
28. Awakened, Arjuna vowed to kill Jayadratha.
29. Arjuna performed Siva Pūja.
30. Arjuna dreamt that night to have paid homage to Śiva along with Kṛṣṇa and that Śiva gave him divine arrows like Paśupata.
31. Marched forth routing the elephant regiment of Durmārsana.
32. Routed Duśśāsana in fight.
33. Again fought Drona, Kṛtavarmi, Śrutiyudha, Sudakṣiṇa, King of Kamboja.
34. Sudakṣiṇa killed in fight.
35. Śrutiyu, Acyutiyu, Niyutiyu, Ambaṣṭha and the Mlecchas’ army killed.
36. Vinda and Anuvinda killed.
37. Warfield converted into a house of arrows, on account of the great collection of arrows.
38. Arjuna defeated Duṣṭodhana.
39. Fought the nine great warriors on the Kaurava side.
40. Arjuna cut off the right hand of Bhūriṣtravas at the instance of Kṛṣṇa.
41. Cut off the head of Jayadratha with arrows. The head and the arrows were thrown on the lap of Jayadratha’s father.
42. Alambaṣa, King of Rākṣasas killed.
43. Daṇḍadhāra killed with his elephant.
44. Arjuna killed the six brothers of Suśarmā, viz., Satyasena, Candrasena, Mitrasena, Śruteṇjaya, Sauśrutī and Mitradharmā.
45. Difference of opinion arose between Dharmaputra and Arjuna about the failure to kill Karṇa, and in the heat of excitement Arjuna called his elder brother ‘thou’.
46. Immediately repenting Arjuna drew sword to kill himself. But, regained mental peace by begging pardon of the brother.
47. Killed Vṛṣasena, son of Karṇa.
48. Karṇa brought down Kṛṣṇa’s crown by his arrow resembling the face of the serpent. Enraged at this Arjuna killed Karṇa.
49. Killed Satyakarmā, Satyeṣṭha and others.
50. After bowing to Vyāsā, Arjuna withdrew arrow. (M.B., Bhīṣma, Drona, Karṇa, Sālyā and Sauntedi Parva).

27. After the war. In the great war the Kaurava army, to the very last man, was annihilated. The Pāṇḍavas assembled together. Thoughts about the future came up. Śri Kṛṣṇa consoled the sorrowing Dharmaputra. As desired by Vyāsā, Kṛṣṇa, Dharmaputra and others returned to Hastināpura and took the reins of governing the country, and the idea of performing an Āsvamedha Yāga was seriously mooted. A King named Marutta agreed to give money needed for the yajā. Arjuna defeated all enemy kings. (M.B., Śānti Parva).

28. Death and rebirth of Arjuna. On his way back after digvijaya Arjuna was killed by the arrows of his son, Bābhravāhana. Immediately did Ulūpi, Arjuna’s wife bring back to life her husband by Mṛtatejivāni mantra. Then Arjuna questioned Ulūpi about the reason for his son killing him, and also as to how she happened to be present at the time. Ulūpi described the story of a curse in answer to Arjuna’s query. (M.B., Āsvamedha Parva, Chapter 79).

29. The story of the curse. Ulūpi said: You shall not get angry. Yes, all is for the best. In war you killed Bhīṣma by unrighteous means, viz., with the help of Sīkhaṇḍi. On his death, the Arjavanus and Gaṅgā Devi cursed you with hell. I told about this curse to my father, who begged the Vasus for redemption, and they said that you would be redeemed from the curse when your son, Bābhravāhana, killed you. Accordingly he has been brought here to kill you.

The above story pleased Arjuna. (Āsvamedha Parva, Chapter 81).

30. Āsvamedha. Arjuna again defeated Meghasandhi, the King of Magadhā, Sakuniputra and others and returned to Hastināpura, where the Āsvamedha yajña was performed. The Yādava dynasty was extinguished before long. Arjuna did all the rites due to them on death. He grieved over the departure of Śri Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 11, Chapter 31). And then he went to Indraprastha with the consorts of Kṛṣṇa. On the way dacoits overcame Arjuna and snatched away some of the females. Arjuna felt very sad. Then Vyāsā appeared and told him that he would be strong and powerful only in the presence of Kṛṣṇa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 15).

31. ‘Pāṇḍavas’ journey to the other world. Now, it was time for the Pāṇḍavas to journey to the other world.
It was at this juncture that the Yādava dynasty ended and Śrī Kṛṣṇa was killed, and some of Kṛṣṇa's consorts were abducted. Arjuna could not save them, and they jumped into the river and died. Arjuna, who lost all his power began the great journey with his brothers. On their way Agnideva advised him to deposit reputed bow, Gāndīva in the sea, and Arjuna did so. (Mahāprashāna Parva, Chapter 1, Verses 1-42). The Pāṇḍavas continued their journey, Yudhīṣṭhira leading them. They reached the Himālayas, and there Pāṇḍāli expired. To Bhima's query as to why Pāṇḍāli expired first, Yudhīṣṭhira replied that it was due to her having been more partial to Arjuna. The others continued their journey and then Sahadeva died. Yudhīṣṭhira explained that Sahadeva died second due to his arrogance and conceit. And, the others continued going forward. An emaciated dog was already with the Pāṇḍavas during their journey. Nakula was the third to die, and Yudhīṣṭhira attributed it to his (Nakula) extreme conceit about his beauty. And, Arjuna's death next, Yudhīṣṭhira said, was due to his having not kept his vow, once made, to kill the whole lot of enemies in a day. After proceeding a short distance further Bhima also fell dead, and Yudhīṣṭhira thought to himself that it was due to Bhima's voracious eating. And, then Devendra came in his chariot of gold and welcomed Yudhīṣṭhira to Svarga. But, he refused the offer saying that he would not do go alone, leaving his brothers behind. When Indra assured him that his brothers were already there, in Svarga, Yudhīṣṭhira got into the chariot and reached Svarga, and he was elated to find his brothers there happy with Pāṇḍāli. (Mahāprashāna Parva and Svaragārohaṇa).

34) Origin of certain words. Towards the close of his life incognito, Arjuna went to the Śaṁ tree to take out Gāndīva kept in its hollow. Uttarā also was with Arjuna. Then Arjuna revealed himself to Uttarā, and also elaborated the meaning of his various names as follows:

I shall tell you my ten names. Arjuna, Phālguna, Jīśu, Kīrti, Śvetavāhāna, Bhiḥbhuṣa, Vijaya, Kṛṣṇa, Savyasācī and Dhanāṇjayā... I am called Dhanāṇjayā, because even after having conquered all the lands and amassed wealth I stand in the centre of righteousness ... I am called Vijaya because in fights with haughty opponents I always succeed... I am called Śvetavāhāna because white horses are harnessed in war to my chariot decked with golden ornaments... I am called Phālguna because I was born in the month of Phālguna and under the star, Phālguna... I am kīrti because during my fight with the Dāyiya I put on my head crown glowing as Sun... I am called Bhiḥbhuṣa by men and Devas because I never resort to revolting means during war... Devas and men call me Savyaścī because both my hands are adept in using the bow, Gāndīva... I am Arjuna because, in the world people are rare who possess such fair colour as I do, and moreover I do only white (just and ethical) acts... I am called Jīśu, because I am unassailable and unconquerable, and I subjugate and conquer, and also because I am the son of Indra... My father gave me the tenth name of Kṛṣṇa because I was very attractive (Kṛṣṇa = attractive).

[Mahābhārata (Malayalam)].

35) Wives of Arjuna.

(1) Pāṇḍāli (2) Ulūpī (3) Cītrāṅgadā (4) Subhādrā.

36) Sons of Arjuna. Śrtaṅkiśi, Irāvan, Bāhrūvāhāna, Abhimanyu.

ARJUNA II. A son of Emperor, Nimi.

One Arjuna, son of emperor Nimi, got philosophical advice from a Muni named Asita (Brahmāṇḍapurāṇa, Chapter 47).

ARJUNA III. (See Kārttavīryārjuna).

ARJUNA IV. A member of Yama's assembly. The other members are : Kapotarama, Tṛṇaka, Sahadeva, Viṣva, Śāśva, Kyṣṇa, Saṭānanda, and Mahīśvara. (M.B., Sahā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 17).

ARJUNĀBHIGAMANAPARVA. A sub Parva in Mahābhārata. (See Mahābhārata).

ARJUNAKA. A hunter. Dharmaputra was called to his side by Bhīṣma his body torn by arrows in fight and he felt very sad and sorry to see Bhīṣma in that state. To console Dharmaputra Bhīṣma related a story and this hunter was one of the characters in the story. The story may be summarised as follows:

35) Once, the son of an old Brahmin woman Gautami, died on account of snake-bite. A hunter caught and brought before Gautami the snake. His object was to kill it immediately. But the serpent proved its innocence by pleading that it bit the boy impelled and prompted by Death. At once death (mṛtyu) appeared on the scene and explained that it was prompted by the God of Death. And, it was the child who was responsible for the cause of death, and Gautami was the cause for the birth of the child. Ultimately Gautami herself assumed responsibility for the sin. Bhīṣma consoled Dharmaputra by telling that as in the case of Gautami in the story, the cause for every effect was the chain of Karma. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 1).
ARJUNA

ARJUNAVANAVASAPARVA. A sub parva in Mahābhārata. (See Mahābhārata).

ARKKA I. A synonym of the Sun. (See Sūrya).

ARKKA II. A king of olden days. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter I, Verse 236).

ARKKA III. The royal sage Rṣika was Arkka, the Asura, reborn. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verses 32, 33).

ARKKAPARṆA. Kaśyapa's son by his wife Muni. He was a Devagandharva. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 43).

ARTHAM. From the forehead of Mahāviṣṇu a golden lotus grew up from which Śrī Devī was born. Dharmārthas (Dharma = righteousness and artha = wealth) also were born from Śrī. “From the forehead of Viṣṇu, sprung up a golden lotus and His wise spouse Śrī arose there from and oh, Pānda, righteousness and wealth came into being from Śrī”. (Bhāṣābhārata, Śaṅti Parva, Chapter 59, Stanzas 130 & 131). ARUṆA. A sect among the Rākṣasas. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 285, Verse 2).

ARULMOLITHEVAR. The Śaiva text of the south is called Tirumuram, and it contains twelve songs. The first seven of those songs were composed by Tirutījāṇa-sambandha, Tirunavukkaṭṭar and Sundaramūrti. The twelfth song is called Periyapurāṇa composed by Arulmilathevar. He is also called Sekhilar. Tevar was prime minister (A.D. 1063-1112) of Cola. (Some great lives.

ARUṆA I. 1) Birth. Son of Kaśyapa by Vināṭa. Kaśyapa, son of Brahmā, married Vināṭa and Kadrū, and being so much pleased by their services he gave them boons. Kadrū got the boon to have 1000 nāga (serpent) sons, and Vināṭa to have two sons more powerful and vital than the sons of Kadrū. After this Kaśyapa went into the forest again for Tapas. After a period, Kadrū gave birth to 1000 eggs and Vināṭa to two. Both the mothers kept their eggs in pots so that they were in the right temperature. After 500 years the pot broke up and Kadrū had her 1000 sons. Vināṭa felt pains at this and opened one of her pots. A child only half-developed emerged from the egg and he was Aruṇa. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 16, Verses 5-7). After another 500 years the other egg of Vināṭa hatched itself and a glowing son emerged. He was Garuḍa.

2) Genealogy. While Rāma and Lakaṇṭha wandered in the forest searching for Sītā they saw the wounded and disabled Jātiyū. Jātiyū described his genealogy as follows: “Kaśyapa, son of Brahmā, married the daughters of Daksā. Of the two wives, Vināṭa delivered two sons, Garuḍa and Aruṇa. Sampāṭi was Aruṇa's elder son and he (Jātiyū) the younger. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakaṇḍa, Canto 14). Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19 also refers to Garuḍa and Aruṇa as the sons of Vināṭa.

3) Aruṇa curses his mother. The fact of Vināṭa forcing open one of her eggs prematurely and Aruṇa emerging out of it with only a half-developed body has been mentioned above. Aruṇa got angry at the haste of his mother and cursed her to live as slave of Kadrū for 500 years, and then Garuḍa would redeem her from slavery. He also asked her to wait for 500 years so that the birth of another physically deficient son like himself might be avoided. After pronouncing this curse Aruṇa rose to the sky. This curse was the reason for Vināṭa's becoming a slave of Kadrū. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 16, Verses 18-23).

4) Aruṇa became charioteer of Sun. The Sun and the Moon betrayed to the Devas Rāhu, who waited at the entrance of Devaloka to snatch off the Nectar (Āmṛtam) got at the churning of the sea of milk (Kṣīrābhuddhi). Thenceforth Rāhu does often swallow the Sun and the Moon. That phenomenon is called the eclipse (of the Sun or Moon. Sūrya-grahaṇa and Candra-grahaṇa). Enraged by these frequent attacks of Rāhu, the Sun-God began once to burn like anything. Murmuring that everyone would cooperate when there was something to be achieved, but would go on their own way when the object was achieved, the Sun-God began burning so virulently as to destroy all living forms, and the Devas were frightened by this and took refuge in Brahmā. Brahmā called Aruṇa and asked him to stand as charioteer in front of the Sun-God everyday so that the Sun’s intensity might be reduced. From that day onwards Aruṇa has been functioning as the charioteer of the Sun. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 24, Verses 15-20).

5) Birth of sons. Sycē, wife of Aruṇa delivered two sons, Sampsāṭi and Jātiyū. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 71).

6) Aruṇa assumed female form. Śīlāvati, the chaste woman, once did naked Tapas to redeem her husband, Ugratapas from the consequences of a curse. The object of her tapas was to prevent the next dawn (Sunrise). Owing to the intensity of her tapas the Sun ceased to rise, and this gave his charioteer Aruṇa some rest. Then it was that Aruṇa came to know of a programme of naked dance by the women in Devaloka. Women alone were admitted to the dance hall. Aruṇa, therefore, assumed female form and sat among the Devon women, and the beautiful 'female' kindled erotic sentiments in Indra and he enjoyed a night with 'her'. Also, a son was born to them. And, before the day dawned Aruṇa, at the instance of Indra entrusted the child to Ahalyādevi and returned to join duty as the Sun-God's charioteer. (Aruna, while he acted as Indra's wife was called Aruṇidevi). Aruṇa was a bit late to report for duty, and when questioned by Sun he detailed the happenings during the last night. This evoked the desire in the Sun to see Aruṇa in female form. Aruṇa did so, and the Sun enjoyed her. This also resulted in the birth of a son, who too was, at the instance of the Sun, entrusted to Ahalyādevi. Ahalyādevi brought both the children with tender love, which Gautamā muni, her husband did not like. He cursed them and turned them into monkeys. After some time Indra went to Ahalyā's to see his child and he was told the story of Gautamā's curse. Indra searched out both the monkeys. In view of the elder one having a long tail he was called Bāli (Vāli) and the neck of the second one being very beautiful, he was named Sugrīva. At that time, Rkṣarāja, the monkey King of Kiskindhā was very unhappy because he had no sons. He came to know of Bāli and Sugrīva, and requested Indra to give both the monkeys to him as sons. Indra gladly obliged him. Indra blessed Bāli to the effect that half the strength of anybody who attacked him would be added to his own natural power. Indra then sent him and Sugrīva to Kiskindhā.

ARUNA II. A king of the solar dynasty, and father of Triśāńku. (Devī Bhāgavata, Sāptāma Skandha).

ARUNA III. A sage in ancient India. A community of R̄ṣis was denoted by this name. Those R̄ṣis were called Arunas. The Ajas, Pr̄śnis, Sikatas, Ketus and Aruṇas—they attained Sarga by self study. (M.B., Śantī Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 7).

ARUNA V. A R̄ṣi. Taittīrīya Aranyaka refers to him as born from the flesh of Brahmā at the time of creation.

ARUNA VI. A Dānava (Asura) born in the dynasty of Vipracitti. He did tapas for long years repeating the Gāyatrī mantra, and got from Brahmā the boon not to die in war. Becoming very arrogant on account of this boon he left Pātāla (neither region) for the earth and deputed a messenger to challenge Indra for war. At that time a heavenly voice called out that as long as Aruṇa did not give up the Gāyatrī he could not be worsted in war. Then the Devas sent Bhāsapti to Aruṇa to make him give up Gāyatrī. Aruṇa questioned Bhāsapti as to why he of the enemy camp had come to him (Aruṇa). Bhāsapti replied: "You and I are not different; both of us are worshippers of Gāyatrī Devī. Being told so Aruṇa gave up worship of Gāyatrī Devī, and she felt offended at this and sent thousands of beetles against him. Thus, without fighting Aruṇa and his army were extinguished. (Devī Bhāgavata).

ARUNA VII. A son of Narakāsura. When Narakāsura was killed Aruṇa along with his six brothers fought against Śri Kṛṣṇa and was killed.

ARUṆA I. An Apsarā woman born of Pradhā, wife of Kaśyapa. Pradhā and Kaśyapa had the following children: Alambūṣī, Mārakeśī, Vidyutparnā, Tilottama, Rakṣitā, Rambhā and Manoramā. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verses 50, 51).

ARUṆA II. A tributary of the river Sarasvatī. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 15).

ARUṆASAMGAMAM. The place where Aruṇā falls into Sarasvatī. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 43, Verses 30-45).

ARUNDHATI I. Wife of Sage Vasiṣṭha. (1) Birth. She was born as the daughter of Karadhama Prajāpati and Devalhuti. (See Vasiṣṭha).

(2) Other information. (1) Once Arundhati got suspicions about the character of Vasiṣṭha and as a result of misunderstanding her chaste husband her beauty suffered a set-back. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 232, Verses 27-29).

(2) Arundhati shone forth in Brahmā's assembly with other Devis like, Pr̄thi, Hṛtī, Svāhāśikāritī, Śūrdī and Sačī. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 41).

(3) She outshone all other chaste women in devotion to her husband. She owed her great power to her chastity and service of her husband. (M.B., Aranyā Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 15).

(4) The seven great R̄ṣis once offered her an honourable seat. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 226, Verse 8).

(5) There is a story in the Mahābhārata of how Śiva once blessed Arundhati. While the seven great R̄ṣis were staying at the Himālayas it did not rain consecutively for twelve years, and the Munis suffered much without either roots or fruits to eat. Then Arundhati began a rigorous tapas, and Śiva appeared before her disguised as a brahmin. Since, due to the failure of rains, Arundhati had no food with her. She cooked food with some cheap roots and served the guest with it, and with that it rained profusely all over the land. Śiva then assumed his own form and blessed Arundhati, and from that day onwards it became a sacred spot. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 48, Verses 38-54).

(6) Arundhati once pointed out to Vṛṣṇabarhi the evils of receiving remuneration (fee). (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 45).

(7) On another occasion she spoke about the secret principles of ethics among others. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 130, Verses 3-11).

(8) Once all the Devas eulogized Arundhati and Brahmā blessed her. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 130, Verses 12 and 13).

(9) Arundhati and Vasiṣṭha did tapas at the sacred Sarasvatī tīrtha and entered into Saṃdāhi. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 17).

ARUNDHATI I. A wife of Kāla (God of death). Arundhati, Vasu, Yāmī, Lāmbā, Bhānu, Murtvati, Saṁkpalā, Muhurtā, Sādhyā and Viśā are the ten wives of Kāla. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 15).

ARUNDHATIVAṬAM. A holy place. If one takes one's bath during three days in the Sāmundraka tīrtha nearby and also staves one will get the results of Āṣvamedhā yāga. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 41).

ARUṆI. Name given to Aruṇa when he attended Indra's assembly disguised as female. (See Aruṇa).

ARUṆODA. A river flowing through the island of Plakṣa, one of the seven islands of ancient times. The wind around ten yojanas of Plakṣa is very fragrant because it carries the divine fragrance being emitted always from the bodies of Pārvati and her attendants, who drink water from river Aruṇodā. (Devī Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

ARUṆA. One of Dakṣa's daughters. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 46).

ARUPATTIMUVAR. (The sixty-three's). In ancient times there were sixty-three devotees of Śiva in the south. They were called Nāyanāras and they have composed many famous sacred songs. Prominent among them were Tiruvñānasambandha, Tiruvñūkkaraāsa and Sundaramūrti.

ARVA. The son of Ripunjaya. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

ARVĀVASU. An ancient Ascetic who had been a luminary in the Durbar hall of King Yudhiṣṭhir. There is a story in the Mahābhārata showing the merits of penance of Arvāvasu. This story was told by the hermit Lomaśa to the Pāṇḍavas, when they arrived at the holy bath Madhugilasamanga, during their exile in the forest. "Long ago two ascetics Raibhya and Bharadvaja had built their hermitages and lived here. A son named Yavakrlta was born to Bharadvaja. To Raibhya, two sons called Arvāvasu and Parāvasu were born. Raibhya and his sons were learned men. Bharadvaja and Yavakrlta became ascetics. Yavakrlta started doing penance with a view to get the boon of learning coming to him automatically without getting it directly from Brahmīns. When his penance became severe Indra appeared and told him that the boon he asked for was an impossibility and tried to dissuade him from his attempt. Yavakrlta was not willing to give up penance. Later Indra came in the guise of a Brahmīn to the Banks of the Ganges and began to build a dam with sand particles. Yavakrita said that it was an impossible task. Indra said that the desire of Yavakrita was as impossible as that. Still Yavakrita did not show any intention of drawing back. Finally Indra granted him the boon. Yavakrita returned to the hermitage. Full of arrogance, he hankered after the daughter-in-law of Raibhya. Raibhya plucked a tuft of hair from his head and put it as oblation in fire and created a giant who killed Yavakrita. Bharadvaja felt sad and cursed Raibhya that he would be killed by his son. Then with Yavakrita he jumped into the fire and died.

At that time Bhaddyumna, a Brahmin performed a sacrifice. He invited Arvāvasu and Parāvasu as helpers. As Parāvasu was going along the forest he saw his father covered with the hide of a deer and shot at him thinking him to be a deer. He stealthily informed the matter to Arvāvasu. Arvāvasu went to the forest completed the funeral rites of his father and returned. Parāvasu spread the rumour everywhere that Arvāvasu had murdered his father. In the innocence of Arvāvasu, nobody believed. Even the avoid him. He became sad and forlorn and went to the forest and did penance to the Sun. The Sun appeared before him and blessed him. He returned and brought Yavakrita, Bharadvaja and Raibhya to life again.

All these occurrences happened in this bath called Madhubilasānga-ma. (Mahābhārata, Aranyā Parva, Chapters 135, 136, 137, 138).

The report of a conversation between this hermit, and Śrī Kṛṣṇa who had been on his way to Hastināpura, is given in the Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 336, Stanza 7. Arvāvasu also is counted among the hermits who possessed theBrightness of Brahmā like Rudra.

“Hermit Vasiṣṭha! Now I shall give their names in order. Yavakrita, Raibhya, Arvāvasu, Parāvasu, Kakṣivān, Ayurija, Bala, Anīgas, Rṣīmedha, Tithisuta, Kanya, these are the Bright hermits, having the brightness of Brahmā, lauded by the world and as bright as Rudra, Fire and Vasu”. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 150, Stanzas 30, 31 & 32).

Arvāvasu did penance to the Sun for getting children. The Sun-God came down from his way in the sky and gave him through Aruṇa directions mentioned in the Kalpa (one of the six Sāstras or Sciences) regarding Saptami rituals. Arvāvasu observed them strictly and as a result he got children and wealth. This story is given in Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Brahma Parva).

ARYAMĀ. One of the twelve Adityas born to Kaśyapa and Aditi. (Adityas=sons of Aditi). The twelve Adityas are, Dhiḥti, Aryamā, Mitra, Śakra, Varuṇa, Aiṃśa, Bhaga Vivasvān, Pūṣi, Saviṭā, Tvāṣṭa and Viṣṇu. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 15).

Aiṃśa is sometimes called AMSU.

ARYASVA. A King of the Sūrya varṇa (Solar dynasty). See the word VAMSĀVALI (Genealogy).

ASAMĀṆJASA (ASAMĀṆJA). A King of the Solar dynasty born to Sagara. For genealogy see under SAGARA.

1) Birth. There is a story about his birth in the Rāmāyaṇa. Once there was a king called Sagara in Ayodhya. He married two women named Keśiṇi and Sumati. For a long time they had no sons and so they went to the Himālayas and started penance there in the mount of Bhṛguprasrāvaṇa. After a hundred years Bhṛgumaharṣi appeared before them and pleased them thus: “Your elder wife Keśiṇi will give birth to a son who will continue your dynasty and your second wife will give birth to sixty thousand children”. After a few years Keśiṇi gave birth to AsamāṆjas and Sumati to a big ball of flesh. That ball broke and sixty thousand babies came out from it. (Vāñiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākāṇḍa, Sarga 83).

2) Character of AsamāṆjas. He was a very cruel man always tormenting people. He used to throw little children into the Sarayū river and stand on the banks of the river enjoying the sight of the children dying drowning. People hated him. His father, therefore, drove him out of his palace. To this bad man was born Aṃśumān, a King who became the favourite of the people. (Vāñiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākāṇḍa, Sarga 38).

ASAMPREKSYAKĀRTVA. See under DEVASARMA IV.

ASANĪ. A holy hermit. While Śrī Kṛṣṇa was going to Hastināpura this hermit met him on the way. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83).

ASIDDHĀRTHA. A minister of Daśarathśī. (Vāñiki Rāmāyaṇa, Śloka 3, Sarga 7, Bālākāṇḍa).

ASIKNI I. A river flowing through the Punjab in India. This is called Candrabhāgā and also Cina (Cīnā). The Rgveda also mentions about this. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva).

ASIKNI II. A wife of Dakṣa. Dakṣaprajāpāti, son of Brahmā, commenced creation with his own mind. When he found that it was not conducive to the propagation of the species he pondered over the subject once more and decided to effect it by the sexual union of the male and the female. He, therefore, married Asikni daughter of Viranaprajāpati. There is a version in the seventh Sandhā of Devī Bhāgavata that Vīraṇi was born of the left thumb of Brahmā.* Then the virile Dakṣaprajāpati begot by Asikni five thousand Haryaśvas with a view to propagating his species and the Haryaśvas also evinced great desire to increase their number. Knowing this devarī Nārada of enchanting words approached them and said “Oh, Haryaśvas, I understand you, energetic young men, are going to continue creation. Pshaw! You are children who have not cared to understand the ins and outs or ups and downs of this earth and then how do you think you can create people? You are all endowed with the power to move about on all sides without any obstruction and you are only fools if you do not attempt to find out the limits of this earth”. Hearing this they started on a tour to different sides of the earth to find out its boundaries. Just like worms fallen into the ocean the Haryaśvas have never returned so far.

When he found that the Haryaśvas were lost the mighty Dakṣa begot in the daughter of Vīraṇi a thousand sons called Saṭalāśvas. They were also desirous of propagation but were also persuaded by the words of Nārada to follow the footsteps of their elder brothers. They discussed it among themselves and said “The words of the Maharṣi are right. We must also follow the course taken by our brothers. It is wise to commence creation after knowing the size of the earth.” They also went to different sides and never returned just like rivers falling into the ocean. The loss of the Sābalāvās infuriated Dākṣa and he cursed Nārada.

Again to commence creation Dākṣa got of Asīkni sixty girls. Of these ten he gave to Dharmadeva, thirteen to Kaśyapa, twenty-seven to Soma and four to Arīṣṭanemi. Two were given to Bahuputra, two to Aṅgiras and two to the kṣrāṣṭa. Dharmadeva’s wives were Arundhati, Vasu, Yami, Lamba, Bhānu, Marutati, Saṅkalpa, Muhurta, Śadyā and Viśvā. Of Viśvā were born Viśvedevas. Śadyā delivered the Śādhyas, Marutva, the Marutvans and Vasu, Vasus. Bhānu were born of Bhānu. From Muhurta came Muhurtabhimānī and from Lamba, Ghoṣa and from Yami, Nāgavēti. (Chapter 15, Anuṣāsana Parva, 1; Viṣṇu Purāṇa and Skandha 6, Bhāgavata).

Asīkṣṇa. Son of Aśvamedhas, a King of the Lunar dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

Asīloma. Prime Minister of Mahiṣāśva. (Devi Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

Asipatravana. One of the notorious twenty-eight hells. If you destroy forests without purpose you will go to this hell. (Chapter 6, Anuṣāsana Parva 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa). The Devi Bhāgavata describes Asipatavana like this: “Those who forsake their own natural duty and go in for that of others are thrown into this hell; they die by the orderlies of Yama, the King of Death. There they will be whipped by a whip made of thriny herbs and as they run about with pain they will be followed and whipped. Crashing against the big stones there they will fall fainting and the moment they wake up from the faint they will be stabbed again. This will be repeated. (Aṣṭama Skandha, Devi Bhāgavata).

Asitā. A celestial maiden. She had taken part in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Śloka 63, Chapter 122, Ādī Parva, M.B.).

Asita I. One of the Rtvikṣ of the Sarpastra of Jana-mejaya.

Some details. (1) The prominent Rtvikṣ were Bhāgava, Kautsa, Jaimini, Sāṅgarava, Pingala, Viṣṇa, Uddālaka Pramattaka, Śvetaketu, Asita, Devala, Nārada, Parvata, Atreyā, Kundajāra, Kālaghāṭi, Vāṭsya, Kuhala, Deva-sarmā, Maudgalyā, Samasaurabha. (Chapter 53, Ādī Parva, M.B.)

(2) Asita, Devala, Vaśiṣṭapāyana, Sumantu and Jaimini were disciples of Viṣṇa. (Prathama Skandha, Devi Bhāgavata).

(3) Asita, the sage, got by the blessing of Śiva a son named Devala. (Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa).

(4) Once Asita muni explained to King Janaka the philosophy of rebirth. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 47).

Asitadevala.

Main details. (1) He is one of those who spread the story of Mahābhārata to the public. Viṣṇa wrote the Mahābhārata into a lakk of books and first taught the great epic to his son, the sage Śuka. He later expounded it to many other disciples. Nārada spread the story among the devas, Devala among the Pīṭḥs, Śuka among Gandharvas and Vaśiṣṭ and Vaśiṣṭapāyana among men. (Ślokas 107 & 108, Chapter 1, Ādī Parva, M.B.).

(2) He was present at the Śarpastra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 8, Chapter 53, Ādī Parva, M.B.).

(3) He attended the coronation of Yudhiṣṭhira along with Nārada and Viṣṇa. (Śloka 10, Chapter 53, Śabhā Parva, M.B.). See under Deva for more information.

Asitadhana. A king of Vedic times. Sāṅkhyaṇā Sūtra states that the Veda of Asuraṇidyā was written by this King.

Asitadhava. Son of Kaśyapa and Vinatā. He was present at a birthday celebration of Arjuna. (Śloka 72, Chapter 122, Ādī Parva, M.B.).

Asitākaśyapa (Devala). For details see under Jaigīṣayya and Deva.

Asitaparvata. A mountain situated on the banks of the river, Narmadā, in the country of Anarta. (Śloka 11, Chapter 89, Vana Parva, M.B.).

Asmaka I. Son born to Vasiṣṭha by the wife of Kalmāśapāda the King of Ayodhyā. (See Ikṣvāku vanśa) while the King Kalmāśapāda was walking through the forest hunting he saw Sakti the son of Vasiṣṭha. As Sakti did not care to give room for the King, Kalmāśapāda wounded Sakti, who cursed the King and changed him to a Rākṣasa (giant). The giant immediately killed Sakti. After many years Vasiṣṭha blessed the King and changed the form of the giant and gave him back his former shape. The King was delighted at having recovered his former shape. He took Vasiṣṭha to his palace. Madayanti the wife of the King with his permission went to Vasiṣṭha and got with child. Vasiṣṭha returned to the forest. Even after the lapse of a long period she did not give birth to the child. Madayanti who was miserable at this, took an ‘aśma’ (a small cylindrical piece of the granite used to crush things placed on a flat square piece of granite) and crushed her stomach with it and she delivered a son. As he was born by using ‘Aṣma’ he was named Asmaka. This King had built a city called Paudhanyā. (M.B., Ādī Parva, Chapter 176).

Asmaka II. Asmaka (m) is a place between the rivers Godāvāri and Mahiṣmati. Asmaka was a king of this land. He fought against the Kauravas on the Pāṇḍavā side. (Karna Parva).

Asmaka III. A sage. (M.B., Śaṅti Parva, Chapter 47, Śloka 5).

Asmakādāyā. Son of the King Asmaka. He was a soldier of the Kaurava army. He was killed in the battle by Abhimanyu. (Ślokas 22 and 23, Chapter 37, Draupā Parva, M.B.).

Asmaki. Wife of Prācinvā. Kaśyapa was born to Marici, son of Brahmā. To Kaśyapa was born of his wife Aditi, daughter of Dākṣa, Vivasvān. Descending in order from Vivasvān were born Manu, Ilā, Purūravas, Ayus, Nahuṣa, Yayāti. Yayāti had two wives, Deva-yāni and Sārmiṣṭhā. The first was the daughter of Śukra and the second the daughter of Vṛṣaparvā. To Deva-yāni were born two sons, Yadu and Turvās and to Sārmiṣṭhā were born three sons, Druhyu, Anu-duhyu and Puru. From Yadu came the dynasty of Yādavas and from Puru came the dynasty of Pauravas. Kauśalyā was the wife of Puru and her son was Jana-mejaya. Puru conducted three Aśvamedhas and secured the title of Viśvajita (conqueror of the world) and then accepted the ascetic life and went to the forests. Jana-mejaya married Anantālīs Mādhavī and got a son named Prācinvā. Because he conquered all the land extending to the eastern horizon he got the name Prācinvā. Prācinvā married a yādava girl of name Asmaki and got a son named Sainīyātī. (Ślokas 6 to 13, Chapter 95, Ādī Parva, M.B.).
AŚMANAGARA. A city of the nether world. The Uttara Rāmāyana states that Rāvana entered this city when he was going home in the Puspaka Vimāna (the aeroplane of ancient times) stolen from Kubera.

AŚMAPRŚTA (M). The sacred pond near Gayā known as Pṛetaśilā. It is believed that if you perform obsequies here even the sin of killing a brahmin would fade away.

AŚMA. An ancient sage.

ASMAPĀKYĀNAM. This is called Aśmagīta also. After the great Kurukṣetra battle Vyāsa spoke to Dharmaputra to console him and the philosophy he then expounded is called Aśmapākyānanam. Once King Janaka asked the great scholar Aśma on the changes that occur in Man as wealth comes and goes. Aśma then gave the King the same philosophy which Vyāsa gave to Dharmaputra and Aśma's oration to King Janaka came to be known as Aśmagīta. (Chapter 28, Sānti Parva, M.B.).

AŚOKA I. The charioteer of Bhīmasena. When Bhīmasena was fighting a battle with Sṛutūya the King of Kalñga, this charioteer brought the chariot to him. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Stanza 70 and 71).

AŚOKA II. A minister of King Daśaratha. Daśaratha had eight ministers. They were Jayanta, Dhṛṣti, Vījaya, Asiddhārtīla, Arthasaādhaka, Aśoka, Mantrapāla and Sumantra. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Bālakanda, Sarga 7).

AŚOKA III. A King of the family of the famous Asura Āśva. This king had been ruling over Kalñga. (Āḍi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 14)

AŚOKADATTĀ. Once the Vidyādhara (a class of semi gods) named Asokavega was going through the sky, when the hermit maids of Gālavārama (the hermitage of Gālava) were bathing in the Ganges. He hankered after them. So the hermits cursed him and changed him to a man. The name of Asokavega in his human birth was Aśokadatta. The story of Aśokadatta in the-Kathāsārīṭāgāra is as follows:

Long ago there lived a Brahmin named Govindavāmi, near the river Kalíndi. He had two sons, Aśokadatta and Vijayadatta. They were good men like their father. Once there occurred a great famine in the country. Scarcity prevailed everywhere. Govindavāmi told his wife, “I cannot bear to see the difficulties of our people. So let us give everything we have for famine relief and then go to Kāśī and live there.” His good-natured wife agreed to it and giving everything for the relief work, Govindavāmi with his wife and children started for Kāśī. On the way he met a hermit sage who had denounced the world. He had his whole body besmeared with ashes. With his tuft of hair and garment made of the barks of trees, he seemed to be Śiva. Govindavāmi bowed before him, and asked about the future of his children. The Yogi (hermit) said, “the future of your two sons is good. But this Vijayadatta will go away from you. Reunion will become possible by the goodness of Aśokadatta.” Govindavāmi felt glad and sad at the same time. Leaving the hermit they proceeded to Kāśī. They reached Kāśī. There was a temple on the way. They stayed there and conducted worship in the temple and took shelter for the night under a tree outside the temple. Other travellers also were there. Being tired of walking all went to sleep. Vijayadatta the second son of Govindavāmi caught cold. So he woke up in the night. When he began to shiver, because of cold, he called his father and said, “Father, it appears that I have caught cold and I am shivering. I would grow better if I could get some fire. So please get some twigs and make a fire. I don’t think I may complete this night otherwise”. They saw a fire close by. It was in a burial-ground. Govindavāmi took Vijayadatta to that place where a dead body was burning. Vijayadatta sat near the fire and warmed himself. In the meanwhile he was talking to his father. He said, “Father, what is that round thing seen in the middle of the fire?” “That is the head of a dead body burning” said his father who was standing close by. He took a burning faggot and hit at the head. The head broke into pieces and some viscous stuff from the head fell into his mouth. There occurred a sudden change in Vijayadatta. He became a fearful giant with huge tusks and hair standing erect on the head. Somehow or other he got a sword also. That giant took the burning head from fire and drank up all the viscous liquid in it. With his tongue which looked like blazing fire he licked the bones. Then he threw away the skull. Then he approached his father with open mouth to swallow him. “You! giant, Don’t kill your father, come here!” a voice shouted to him from the burial-ground. Thus Vijaya became a giant and disappeared. “Oh dear! my child! my son! Vijayadatta” cried his father and came away from the burial-place, and went to the shelter of the tree and told his wife, son and others everything that had happened. Stricken with grief they all fell on the ground. All those who came to worship in the temple gathered round them and tried to console them. Among them was a merchant named Samudradaṭṭa, a native of Kāśī. He consoled Govindavāmi and his family and took them to his house in Kāśī. He showed hospitality and gave them a separate place to live in. Noble men are kind to those who are in distress. The great hermit had said that their son would come back in due course. Hoping that such a time would come soon Govindavāmi and his family dragged on their time. At the request of that wealthy merchant they stayed there on. Aśokadatta got his education there. When he grew up to a youth, he got physical training. He became such an expert in wrestling and other modes of fighting that nobody on earth could overcome him. During a festival there was a contest in wrestling. A renowned wrestler had come from the south to take part in the contest. In the contest which took place in the presence of Pratūpakmuṭṭa, the King of Kāśī, the wrestler challenged every wrestler in the country and had overthrown each one of them. Having heard from the merchant Samudradaṭṭa, the King sent for Aśokadatta and put him against the wrestler from the south. A very serious fight began between the two. They grappled each other with firm and resolute grips. The audience was struck with wonder at the variety of the modes of grappling and twisting and turning they exhibited. Applause came from everywhere. The fight lasted for a very long time. Finally Aśokadatta threw the other to the ground, and got much presents from the King. Gradually he became a favourite of the King, and consequently became wealthy. One day the King went to a temple of Śiva, a little away from the capital to observe fast on the fourteenth night of the Moon and while returning he passed by a burial-ground and heard a voice saying, “Oh Lord! The judge had ordered me to be hanged, for a charge of murder, merely out of personal grudge and without any proof, and this is the third day since I was put on this scaffold. My life has not yet departed from the body. My tongue is dried of thirst. Have the kindness to give me a little water.”

“Punished without proof! It will appear only so to him who is punished”. Thinking thus the King asked Ašokadatta to give the man some water. “Who will go to a burial-ground in the night? I myself shall take water to him”. Saying so Ašokadatta took water and went to the burial-ground and the King went to the palace. The world was in darkness. With here and there a spark of fire and light of fire-flies and lightning mingled with the shouting of ghosts and the roaring of the demons and occasional cries of birds and animals the burial-ground was a dreadful place, where Ašokadatta came and asked, “Who asked the King for water?” He heard a voice saying “Myself” and he went to the place of the voice and saw a man lying on a scaffold. An extremely beautiful woman also was lying under the scaffold crying, and getting ready to jump into the burning fire since she could not bear the separation of her husband on the new moon day. She had plenty of golden ornaments on her body. Ašokadatta asked her, “Madam! who are you, why are you crying here?” She replied, “I, an unfortunate woman, am the wife of the man on the scaffold. My intention is to burn myself along with his body. I am waiting for his life to depart. Because of my sin he is not dying. This is the third day since he is lying like this. He will be asking for water now and then. So I have brought some water. But his face being high I cannot reach it and I am seeing him burning with thirst, and am swallowing the grief.” Ašokadatta said, “See! The King has sent this water for him. Now climb on my back and you yourself give him this water.”

The woman instantly took the water and got on the back of Ašokadatta who had stooped down for her to climb on his back. After a while he felt drops of blood falling on his back and looking up he saw her cutting flesh from the body of the man on the scaffold and eating it. He got wild with anger and catching hold of her legs he was about to strike her on the ground, when she shook her legs free and ran away and disappeared. Because she dragged away her legs with force one bangle came off from her leg and was left with Ašokadatta. Her behaviour aroused in him at first compassion, detestation in the middle stage and fear in the final stage, and when she had disappeared from his sight he looked at the bangle she had left behind with astonishment. When he reached home it was dawn. After his morning ablution he went to the palace. “Did you give him water yesternight?” asked the King and he replied “Yes”, and placed the bangle before the King. “Where did you get this from?” the King asked and in reply he said everything that had happened in the night. The King thought that Ašokadatta was an extraordinary man and calling his queen showed her the ornament and told her everything. She was filled with joy and wonder. She praised Ašokadatta a good deal. The King said, “Dear queen! This Ašokadatta is a young man of greatness, learning, bravery, truth and of good birth. He is handsome too. If he would become the husband of our daughter what a good thing it will be? I have a desire to give him our daughter Madanalekha”.

The queen also said that the thought was pleasing to her. “This youth is the most suitable person to be her husband. Some days ago Madanalekha had seen him in Madhu garden and from that day a change is visible in her. All laughing and playing is gone from her, and she spends time in loneliness and thinking. I knew this from her maids. Because of my thought about her I did not sleep last night and only just closed my eyes in the dawn. Then it seemed to me that a divine woman appeared and said to me, “My daughter, Don’t give your daughter Madanalekha to anybody else. She had been the wife of Ašokadatta in a previous birth”. I woke up immediately. Believing in the dream I consolated our daughter. I am glad that now you also think so. Let the Jasmine creeper entwine round the Mango tree.”

When the King heard these things from his queen, without wasting more time he gave his daughter Madanalekha in marriage to Ašokadatta. They suited each other so much that not only their relatives, but the others also were delighted. Brahmâ is well experienced in joining suitable things together. As they were all getting on well one day the queen said to the King, “My lord! this Bangle being single doesn’t shine well. We must have another bangle made in the same shape and design.”

The King immediately had some goldsmiths brought before him. He showed them the bangle and asked them to make one of the same pattern. They turned it on all sides and looked at it and said, “Please your highness! This is not man-made. It is not possible for us to make one of this kind. Precious stones like these are not available in this earth. So the only possible way is to search for its mate in the place where this was found. On hearing these words the King and the queen were crestfallen. Seeing this Ašokadatta said that he would bring the mate of the bangle. Fearing danger the King tried to dissuade him. But Ašokadatta was not prepared to change his decision. He took the bangle and went to the burial-ground that night. To get the bangle he had to meet the same woman who had left the bangle. He began to think of a means to find her out. He procured a corpse took it on his shoulder and walked about calling out “Do you want flesh?” He heard a voice say “Bring it here”, and he walked in that direction. He saw a beautiful woman who appeared to be the mistress, sitting in the midst of so many servant maids on a tree. He called out “Take the flesh”. She asked “How much will it cost?” Ašokadatta said, “There is a bangle with me. If you will give me another bangle like this you shall have the whole body”. Hearing the words of Ašokadatta the beautiful woman laughed and said, “That is my bangle. I have its mate with me also. I am the same woman you saw when you came to give water to the man on the scaffold. Now the situation is changed. So you do not recognize me. Tonight is the fourteenth lunar night too. It was good that you thought of coming to night. Otherwise you would not have seen me. Now see; let the flesh be there. If you will consent to do what I say I shall give you the other bangle also.” Ašokadatta promised to do what she required. Then she began, “There is a city in the Himalayas known as Trigandha. There lived a giant in that city. His name was Lambajihva. I hearing the name Vidyumchikha, am his wife. Only one daughter was born to me. Then my husband was killed in a fight with his overlord Kapālasphota, who being kind did not do us any harm; and I live in my house now. My daughter is now a young woman. I was roaming about thinking of a way to find out a man of might and bravery as husband for my daughter. Then I saw you going this way with the King. The moment I saw you I knew you to be the man I was searching for and I decided to give you my daughter in marriage. What you heard as the words of the man on the scaffold was a trick played by me. You brought water to the scaffold and nobody needed water then. With the knowledge I have in Sorcery and witchcraft I put you into a little confusion. I gave you that bangle to bring you again to me and it has served the purpose today. Let us go to my house. It is my earnest wish that you should be the husband of my daughter. And I shall satisfy your immediate need also."

The brave Asokadatta agreed to the request of the giantess. She, with her power, took him to their city through the sky. Asokadatta saw the golden city and wondered if it was the sun taking rest after its tedious journey. There he saw the daughter of the giantess and thought her to be the incarnation of his adventurous spirit. She was beautiful in every part of her body. She was called Vidyutprabhā. He married her and lived with them for a while. Then he said to his mother-in-law "Mother! now give me the bangle. I must go to Kāśī. I have promised the King to get the mate of this bangle," Vidyucchikā gave her son-in-law her bangle and a golden lotus flower which he accepted with great joy. As before he came with the giantess to the burial-ground through the sky. Then she said "I shall be here on every fourteenth lunar night on the root of this tree in the burial-ground. If you want to see me come on that day," "I shall do so," so saying Asokadatta came away and went to his parents. They were stricken with grief at the departure and exile of their remaining son. They were overcome by joy at the return of their son. Not waiting long he went to the King, his father-in-law, who embraced him with joy. Asokadatta gave him the two bangles. He presented the golden lotus flower also. The King and the queen were amazed at the daring spirit of Asokadatta who told them in detail everything that had happened to him. The fame of Asokadatta grew higher and higher. The King and the queen thought it a blessing that they got so adventurous a son-in-law. Next day the King got a casket made of silver and placed the golden lotus at the mouth of the casket and placed it on the step of his own temple for everyone to see. The white casket and the red lotus were very charming to look at and they glistened as the fame of the King and of Asokadatta. One day the King looked at it with pleasure and said "If we could get one more lotus like this, we could make another casket and place it on the left side of this". As soon as he heard it Asokadatta said "If the King orders it shall be brought". But the King said "Ho! you need not go anymore on errands like this. This is not such an urgent need". After a few days the fourteenth lunar night came. Leaving his wife the princess sleeping in the bed he left the palace and reached the burial-ground. He saw his mother-in-law the giantess and went with her to the city of the giant and lived there happily for a while with his wife Vidyutprabhā. When he was about to return he requested Vidyucchikā to give him one more golden lotus. She said that there was no more lotus with her and that they grew in the lake of the giant King Kapālasphota. Asokadatta requested her to show him that lake. At first Vidyucchikā dissuaded him from this attempt. But he was stubborn. So she took him to a place away from the lake and showed it to him. The lake was full of golden lotus flowers. It was a pleasing sight. Asokadatta immediately got down into the lake and began to pluck the flowers. The guards came and opposed him. He killed a few of them. The others went to their master and informed about the theft. Kapālasphota with his weapons came shouting and roaring and saw his elder brother Asokadatta. He was overpowered by joy and wonder. Throwing away his weapons, with love and devotion towards his elder brother he bowed before him. "My brother! I am Vijayadatta your younger brother. By the will of God I lived as a giant so long. You might have heard this from father. Because we have met now by good luck I remembered that I was a Brahmin. My giantness is gone. On that day something obscured my mind. That is why I became a giant". When he heard the words of his younger brother Asokadatta embraced him. Both shed tears of joy. At that time Prajñapti Kausika the teacher of the Vidyaadhāras came to them and said, "You are Vidyaadhāras. All this happened due to a curse. Now you and your people are liberated from the curse. So learn the duties and functions of your class and with your people take your proper place in the society." Having taught them everything they required he disappeared. Thus the Vidyaadhāra brothers, having plucked golden lotus reached the peak of the Himalayas through the sky. Asokadatta went to Vidyutprabhā who also having been liberated from curse became a Vidyaadhāra girl. With that beautiful girl the two brothers continued their journey and reached Kāśī where they bowed before their parents. That reunion appeared to be a dream or something nearing madness to their parents. They could not believe their eyes. Asokadatta and Vijayadatta each saying his name bowed before them. Their parents lifted them up and embraced them and kissed them on the head, and cried for joy. They did not know what to do or what to say. Their minds were incapable of thinking. Everybody heard this and was amazed at it. The King was also filled with joy. He came there and took them to the palace. Asokadatta gave all the lotus flowers to the King, who was happy and joyful at the achievement of more than he had hoped for. Everybody appreciated them. Govindaśāmi, in the presence of the King asked Vidyutprabhā to tell his story from the moment he turned a giant in the burial-place; "We are very curious to hear it" he said. Vidyutprabhā began to say "Father, you have seen how because of my mischief, I had broken that skull and some viscous liquid fell into my mouth and I changed to a giant. After that the other giants gave me the name Kapālasphota. They invited me into their midst. We lived together. After a few days they took me to the presence of the King of the giants. As soon as he saw me he was pleased with me and appointed me as the commander-in-chief of the army. He who was overconfident in his power went to war with the Gandharvas and was killed in the fight. From that day onwards all the giants came under my control. Then I met with my brother who came to pluck the golden lotus flowers from my lake. With this all the previous conditions of my life had vanished."
My brother will say the rest of the story. When Vijaya-datta had finished saying Aṣokadatta continued the story.

Long ago when we were Vidyādhāras both of us were going through the sky and we saw the hermit maids of the hermitage of Gālava, bathing in the Ganges. We wished to get those girls. The hermits who saw this with their divine eyes cursed that we would take birth as men and in that birth we would be separated in a wonderful way and both of us would unite again in a place where man could not reach and we would be liberated from the curse and learn everything from the teacher, and would become the old Vidyādhāras with our people. And according to this curse we took birth as men and separation was effected. You all have heard it. Today I went to the lake of the King of the giants, with the help of my mother-in-law the giantess for plucking the golden lotus flowers and recovered my brother, this Vijayadatta. There we learned everything from our teacher Prajñāpati Kauśika and became Vidyādhāras and have arrived here as fast as we could." Thus he informed them everything that had occurred. Afterwards by the learning he received from his teacher he changed his parents and the daughter of the King into Vidyādhāras and then bidding adieu to the King Aṣokadatta, with his two wives, parents and brother went to the emperor of the Vidyādhāras through the sky. When they reached there Aṣokadatta and Vijayadatta changed their names into Aṣokavega and Vijaya-vega. According to the orders of the emperor those Vidyādhāra youths went to the mountain of Govinda-kūṭa with their people as it was their abode, and lived with happiness and joy. King Pratāpa-muṇuṭa with wonder took one of the golden lotus flowers and placed it in the temple and with the rest he made oblations to god and considered his family to have made wonderful achievements. (Kathāsārisagara, Caturdārikālamba, Tarāṅga 2).

AṢOKASUNDARI. See the word Nahusa.

AṢOKATIRTHA. A holy place near the temple of Sārpa-raka. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 88, Stanzas 13).

AṢOKAVANIKA. A famous park in Lankā. It was in this park that Rāvaṇa kept Śītā having stolen her from Śrī Rāma. It is described in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundarakānda, Sarga 14 and Aranyakānda, Sarga 56 and in Mahābhārata also:—

"Thinking of her husband alone, clad in the garments of a hermit woman, eating only roots and fruits, in prayer and fast, in sorrow and sadness, she of the wide eyes lived in the Aṣoka park which seemed as a hermitage." (Bhāṣā Bhārata, Aranyā Parva Chapter 280, Stanzas 42 and 43).

AṢṬABANDHA. A kind of plaster used for fixing idols in temples. The following eight things are mixed and ground consecutively for forty-one days and made ready to be put in the cavity around the idol when it is fixed there finally: (1) conch-powder (2) powdered myrobalam (3) resin (4) Koli-paral (a kind of rock) (5) river sand (6) powder of emblic myrobalam (7) lac and (8) cotton.

AṢṬACŪRṇa. A mixture of eight powders. The eight things are: Cukku (dry ginger), Mulaku (chilli) Tippi (long pepper) Ayamodaka (celery seed) Jiraka (baraway seed) Karinijiraka (black caraway seed) Intuppu (sodium chloride) and Kāyam (asafoetida).

AṢṬAḌĀṢAＰURĀṆA(S). The eighteen purāṇas. See under Purāṇa.

AṢṬAḌHARI-MMARDGA(S). Eight ways of attaining mokṣa: Yāga, Vedābhayahāsa, Dāna, Tapas, Satya, Kāmā, Dayā, lack of desire.

AṢṬAḌHĀTU(S). Eight minerals: gold, silver, copper, tin, zinc, black lead, iron and mercury.

AṢṬAḌIGGAS and AṢṬAḌIKKARINIS. There are eight male and eight female elephants standing guard over the eight zones. They are:

Besides these, there are four diggajas (elephants of the universe) who bear the earth standing below in the nether world. It is stated that the sons of Sagara who went into the nether land in search of the lost horse of his father saw these elephants. As they went to the east they saw the huge elephant Virūpākṣa, holding the earth on its head. It is said an earthquake occurs when for a change it shakes its head. Going to the left of it they saw the elephant Mahāpādmasama holding the earth on its head on the south. Going again to the left of it they saw Saunmanasa holding the earth on its head on the west and going to the left of it on the north they saw Bhradra holding the earth on its head. AṢṬADIK(S). (Eight zones). East, South-east, South, South-west, West, North-west, North and North-east.

AṢṬADI(KPĀLA(S). The Devī Bhāgavata states like this about the eight zones and their guardians. Situated in the eight different zones of the Brahmāloka are eight big cities of the eight guardians of these zones each covering an area of 2500 yojanas. All these are on the top of Mahāmeru and Brahmā sits in the centre in his city called Manovatī. Around his city are the others as follows:

(1) On the east is Amarāvatī, city of Indra.
(2) On South-east is Tejovatī, city of Agni.
(3) On the South is Śaṅyamanī, city of Yama.
(4) On the South-west is Kṛṣṇājanī, city of Nirṛti.
(5) On the West is Śraddhāvatī, city of Varuṇa.
(6) On the North-west is Gandhavatī, city of Vāyu.
(7) On the North is Mahodaya, city of Kubera.
(8) On the North-east is Yāsovatī, city of Śiva.

(Aṣṭama Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

AṢṬADRavya(S). Eight substances of great medicinal value.

AŚTADŪTAGAṆA(S). The eight qualities of a good messenger. (1) He should not stand perplexed when he is being given the message to carry. (2) He must be smart and enthusiastic. (3) He must have compassion for those in distress. (4) He must run his errand quickly. (5) He must be mild. (6) He should not be duped by the cunning words of others. (7) He must be healthy. (8) He must be able to talk convincingly.

AŚTAGANDHA. Aki (Eaglewood), Candana (Sandal), Guggulu (Indian Bcllum), Maṅci (Jatamansi-Spikenard) Kuṅkuma (saffron), Koṭṭa (Kuṭṭa-bosust root), Rāmaec (Uśīram-Sweet rush), Irului (Vālaka).

AŚṬAJIḤVYA. One of the soldiers of Skanda Deva. (Sloka 62, Chapter 45, Salya Parva, M.B.).

AŚTAKA. See under Aṣṭika.

AŚTAKA I. A King of the Pāṇḍu dynasty. Genealogy. Descended in order from Vivas as follows : Brahmā-Atṛi-Candra - Budha-Puruṣavas-Āyuś-Nahuṣa- Yaśāṭi-Puru-Janamejaya-Prācinā - Pravirā-Namasyu-Viṭabhaya - Śuṇḍu - Bhūvindha - Saṅyāti - Rauḍrāshā - Raudrāśa - Matināra - Santurdoṣha-Duṣyanta-Bhara-Bhutotpura-Ajāmilha-Aṣṭaka. (This Aṣṭaka was the brother of Sunaśepha).

AŚTAKA II. A Rājaṛṣi born to Viśvāmitra of Mādhava, wife of Yayāti. (Sloka 18, Chapter 119, Udyoja Parva, M.B.). See under Gālava.

1) How Aṣṭaka went to heaven. This story was told to the Pāṇḍavas by the sage Mārkaṇḍeya. “Aṣṭaka, son of Viśvāmitra, performed an Āvāmedha Yāga. All the kings took part in this. Pratardana, Vasumanas and Aśvinara Śibi, and all the brothers of Aṣṭaka attended the function. After the yāga Aṣṭaka took his three brothers for an air travel and on the way met the great sage Nārada. Nārada was also taken in and as they continued their flight; Aṣṭaka asked Nārada who should step down from the aeroplane if only four were allowed to go to heaven. "Aṣṭaka", replied Nārada and explained the reason also. Once when Nārada stayed at the āśrama of Aṣṭaka the former found many varieties of cows there and asked Aṣṭaka whose they were. Then in self praise Aṣṭaka had said that all those were cows which he had given away as gifts. Aṣṭaka then asked who should get down if only three were allowed to go to heaven. "Pratardana", said Nārada and explained the reason also. Once when Pratardana was taking Nārada in the former’s chariot four brahmins one behind the other approached him and begged for a horse each. When Pratardana asked for some time the brahmans were not prepared to wait and so he gave all but one of his four horses and asked the fourth to wait. As he was also found to be persistent he gave the one drawing his chariot also and dragged the chariot himself but abusing the brahmans all the way. It was that abuse that gave him the slur. Then Aṣṭaka asked Nārada who should get down if only two were permitted to enter heaven. "Vasumanas", said Nārada and explained the reason. Nārada went to the house of Vasumanas three times and each time the latter spoke highly of his chariot. Nārada also joined in praising his flower-chariot and the brahmans present there also followed suit. Pleased at this Vasumanas became proud of his possession and his vainglorious talks made him unlit. Then Aṣṭaka asked if only one were allowed to go to heaven who should go. "Śibi", said Nārada immediately. Even Nārada would be only next to Śibi and Nārada explained the reason thus. Once a brahmin went to Śibi for food. Śibi asked him what food he relished most and the brahmin said that he would like to have the fresh flesh of Śibi’s only son, Brhadgarbha. Without even the slightest hesitation Śibi killed his son and cooked his flesh and when the food was ready he went out to invite the brahmin. But on going out the King saw the brahmin setting fire to his palace, treasury, armoury, stables, harem and elephant-sheds. Without even a quiver on his face, the king respectfully took the brahmin inside and gave him food. The brahmin was amazed at the patience of the King and sitting before his food for some time told the King that he would be satisfied if the King himself ate that food. Respecting the request the King was about to eat the flesh of his own son when the brahmin who was no other than Brahmā in disguise praised him for his devotion and gave him back his son adorned with sweet smelling flowers and disappeared blessing them. When his ministers questioned him about this Śibi said, “I do not give for a name or fame. Neither do I give for wealth and happiness. I do it because it is the only way to be rid of sins". (Chapter 168, Arṇya Parva, M.B.).

2) Other details. (1) Aṣṭaka was a Rājaṛṣi. (Sloka 5, Chapter 86, Ādi Parva, M.B.). (2) Aṣṭaka gave away all the puṇya (goodness) he earned to Yayāti. See under Yayāti. (Slokas 13 & 14, Chapter 122, Udyoja Parva, M.B.).

AŚTAKALĀṢYA. This is a gesture in the Kathakali dance. In the play ‘Kalyāṇasaugandhika’ the character of Hanumā and in the play ‘Kālakayeavadha’ the character of Arjuna do enact this. Increasing step by step the gesture takes eight forms in combination before it is finished accompanied by background drumming and music. (Kathakali).

AŚTAKAPĀLM. Puṇḍāsa prepared out of eight Kapālas. (Sloka 24, Chapter 221, Sānti Parva, M.B.).

AŚTAKARAN(S). Manas (mind), Buddhī (intelligence), Citta (thought), Māhākāra (egotism), Samkalpa in the mind (imagination), determination, pride from egotism and Avadhāraṇa in Citta.

AŚTAKAS̄Ṭ(S). Kāma (lust), Krodha (anger), Lobha (greed), Moha (delusion), Mada (arrogance), Mātrasya (rivalry), Dambha (pride) and Asūya (jealousy).

AŚTAKOPAVASANA(S). (1) Paṅsuna (2) Sāhasa (3) Droha (4) Irya (5) Asūya (6) Ardhaṣuṇa (7) Vāganda and (8) Pāruṣya.

AŚTAKUMBHA(S). Śuryabheda, Ujjayi, Silkkāri, Śitali, Bhāstikā, Bhrāmāri, Mārchā and Plavini. All these have to be practiced by students of Yoga. (Mokṣa-pradīpam).

AŚTALOHAY(G). Eight metals.

1. Suvarṇa Gold.
2. Rajatam Silver.
AŚṬAMĀNGALA

3. Tāmram Copper.
4. Ssakam Lead.
5. Kāntikam Mercury.
7. Lauham Iron.
8. Tikṣṇalauham Steel.

AŚṬAMĀNGALAH. Brahmins, bow, Fire, gold, ghee, Sun, water and King.

AŚṬAMANTRI(S). The eight ministers of the kings of Iksvāku dynasty are: (1) Jayanta (2) Dṛṣṭi (3) Vijaya (4) Siddhârtha (5) Arhasadâhaka (6) Âsoka (7) Mantrapāla (8) Sumantra.

AŚṬAMÂRÂS. Sânyâgdrtri, Sanyâsakâlpa, Sanyâg-vâk, Sâmyakkarma, Sâmyagjîva, Sâmyagvyâyâma, Sâmyaksmiit and Sâmyaksamâdi. The Buddha Sannya-sins have to live according to these eight directives of life.

AŚṬAMBÂ(S). See the sixth Khândika under Devi.

AŚṬAMI. The three skandha of Devi Bâghavata states that the goddess, Bhadrâkâli, came into life on an Aṣṭami day to block up the yâga of Daksâ. That is why the day is considered to be holy and important.

AŚṬÂNGÂSA. Eight snakes. Vâsuki; Takâ, Karkoṭaka, Saṁkha, Gûlika, Padma, Mahâpadma and Ananta.

AŚṬÂNGÂHRDAAYA. The medical science which deals in eight separate division the treatment of the human body. (1) Sârîra (2) Bâla (3) Graha (4) Urdhâvânga (5) Sâlya (6) Damâstra (7) Jara (8) Vîsa. Bâla—Body which has not attained maturity; Graha—External element which damage the health of infants; Sâlya—extraordinary substance lodged in the body; Vîsa—The seminal fluid. (Directions of treatment.

AŚṬÂNGÂYOGA(S). Yama, Niyama, Āsana, Prâñâyâma, Pratyâhâra, Dhyâna, Dâhâna and Samâdhi.

1. Yama. That which prevents the yogis from doing prohibited things. Ahuṁsi, Satya, Åṣeya, Brahmacarya and Aparigraha are yamas.

2. Niyama. Actions leading to Moksâ. They are: (1) SÂUCA—Cleanliness of the mind—cleaning of such bad qualities like jealousy. (2) TAPAS—indifference (Samatvabhâva) to the pairs of opposites like pleasure and pain, heat and cold etc. (3) Svâdhyâya—pursuit of the science of salvation chanting of OM. (4) SÂNTOSA—remaining happy and contented. (5) IŚVARA-PRAŅIDHÂNA—surrendering all actions to God.

3. Āsana. Postures of sitting firmly and comfortably. Of the many āsanas the very prominent ones are: Svasi-kâsana, Virâsana, Padmâsana, Siddhâsana, Vastraâsana, Vâyagrâcarnâsana, Vakkalâsana, Kuśâsana, Krṣṇâsana, Viṣṭârâsana, Mayûrâsana and Kûmâsana. Of these Siddhâsana is considered to be the best of the lot. This āsana strengthens the 72,000 nerves of the human system and all the yogis prefer this to any other. “Kîmânyâlaṁ bhuhubhîḥ pîthâlaṁ pîthê Siddhâsanâ sati” (of what use are the others when there is Siddhâsana).

4) Prâñâyâma. Control of Prâna (Prâna is the life giving breath and âyâma is the checking of it). Select an airy place and be seated in an ordinary āsana facing north or east after taking your early morning bath. Sit erect with your breast slightly pushed forward and your head slightly drawn back. Then complete one Prâñâyâma doing Pûraka, Kumbhaka and Recaka. The Rudrayâma states thus about Prâñâyâma, Dakṣâṅguṣṭhena dakṣâni ca.

5) Ghrânam sampiḍya manavitr Ijâyâ pûrayedvâyûn Mâtrâ śoḍasâbhâḥ kramât Anguṣṭhânâmikhâyaṇâ Dhrâtvâ nâsâvayâmatah Tatatast kampayedvâyûn Pûrakâpām caurguanaî Anâmâyâ tathiâ vâma- Nâsâm dhrâtvâ tu dakṣine Dvârtimâdibhistu mâtrâbhîr Vyâurecanamâcâret.

Closing the right nostril by the thumb of the right hand and inhaling air inside through the left nostril taking 16 seconds is called Pûraka. Closing the nostrils by the thumb and ring-finger and keeping the breath for 64 seconds is called Kumbhaka. Closing the left nostril well and then exhaling through the right nostril taking 32 seconds is called Recaka. Pûrâkas should be done through the same nostril through which you have done Recaka. (You must do at least ten Prâñâyâmas at a time).

6) Dhyâna. Withdrawing the mind from worldly objects and sensuous pleasures.

7) Dâhâna. Keeping your mind fixed on the tip of your nose. Meditation.

8) Samâdhi. The union of mind with God. This is a blissful suprasensible state in which one perceives the identity of the individualised soul and cosmic spirit. (Yogâbhîṣyâ).

AŚṬÂTARÂNâ. Eight names of Târanâdevî. They are: Târâ, Ugrâ, Mahâgrâ, Vajrâ, Kâlî, Sarasvatî, Kâmēvari and Caîmūndâ.

AŚṬÂVAKRA

1) Birth. The sage Uddâlaka had a disciple named Kaghodara (Kahodara) and a daughter named Sujâtâ. Appreciating the devotion and good conduct of his disciple, Uddâlaka gave his daughter Sujâtâ in marriage to him. Sujâtâ became pregnant. When once Kaghodara was reciting from the Vedas the babe in the womb of Sujâtâ said, “I have learnt the mantra you are chanting but the way you chant it is wrong”. (The vibrations of sound created by the utterance of each word is important). Kaghodara was angry and he cursed his babe in the womb thus “Since your mind seems to be crooked let your body also be of that type, with curves all over”. When Sujátā delivered the child it had eight bends and light curves and so the boy was named Astāvakra, meaning one with eight bends. (Chapter 132, Vana Parva, M.B.).

2) Father died before he was born. When Sujátā was pregnant they suffered much from poverty and at the insistence of Sujátā, Khagodara went to the King Janaka, to beg for some money. Janaka was performing a yāga then and so Khagodara had to wait. When at last he went to the royal assembly he was asked to enter into a polemical contest with Vândina, the court scholar and having been defeated by him was asked to drown himself.

Uddālaka got a son named Śvetaṇetuk and Sujátā delivered Astāvakra. Both the boys grew in the āśrama on great intimacy and Sujátā withheld the news of the death of her husband from the boys. (Chapter 132, Vana Parva, M.B.).

3) How Khagodara was got back. One day the two boys went to bathe in the river and during a controversial talk Śvetaṇetuk said that Astāvakra had no father. This teased him much and Astāvakra went to his mother and gathered all the facts about his father. He went, then, straight to the royal assembly of King Janaka. He was not allowed inside. The gate keeper said that he was only a boy and only learned men could go inside the sacrificial hall. Astāvakra contended that neither size nor age was any indication of one’s knowledge or worth and got himself admitted into the hall. There he entered into a polemical contest with the same court scholar, Vândina, who had killed his father. Vândina was defeated and was thrown into the same river in which his father had drowned himself. The moment Vândina fell into the river Khagodara rose up from there and the father and son along with Śvetaṇetuk returned to the āśrama. Khagodara then took his son for a bath and when it was over Astāvakra became a bright boy without crooks. (Chapter 133, Vana Parva, M.B.).

4) Marriage. Astāvakra wanted to marry Suprabhā, the daughter of a sage named Vādānya. When Vādānya was approached for this the Sage decided to test the love which Astāvakra had towards his daughter and said: “I am going to test you. You go to the north to the Himālayas. Pay homage to Śiva and Pārvatī and go further north. There you will find a very beautiful damsel. You talk to her and return and when you come back I shall give you my daughter.”

Accepting this challenge Astāvakra went north. When he went to the Himālayas Kubera entertained him. He remained there for a year enjoying the dances of celestial maidens and then, after worshipping Śiva and Pārvatī went further north. There he came across seven very attractive women. At the command of Astāvakra the eldest of the lot, Uttarā, remained with him; all the rest left the place immediately she started making love with him and requested him to marry her. But Astāvakra did not yield and told her about his promise to Vādānya. Pleased at this reply Uttarā revealed that she was the queen of the north in disguise and was testing him. She then blessed Astāvakra who fulfilling his mission successfully, returned and married the girl he wanted. (Chapter 19, Anuśasana Parva, M.B.).

5) Another version of how the body became crooked. There is another story also about Astāvakra. Once there lived a sage named Asita. He did great penance to please Śiva to bless him with a child. Śiva blessed him and he got a son named Devala. Rambhā, the queen of devaloka, fell in love with him but Devala did not yield to her wishes. Then Rambhā cursed him and made him into one with eight crooks. Thus Devala came to be called Astāvakra. He then did penance for six thousand years and Bhaga-vān Kṛṣṇa accompanied by Rādhā appeared before him. Rādhā was shocked by the ugliness of the sage and did not relish his sight. But Kṛṣṇa asking her to remain quiet went and embraced him. At once Astāvakra lost all his crooks and became a beautiful man. At that time a chariot descended from heaven and all of them went to heaven in it. (Brahma vaivartta Purāṇa).

6) Other information. (1) Astāvakra was also present among the rīś who partook in the coronation ceremony conducted after Rāma’s return to Ayodhya from Lāṅkā. (Uttarārāmāṇa).

(2) Astāvakra cursed those celestial maidens who rebuked him for his ugliness and they were born on earth as the wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. When after the death of Kṛṣṇa they were being taken by Arjuna to the north they were forcibly taken by some of the shepherds. (Chapter 15, Agni Purāṇa).

AṬṬAVAKRATIRTHA. If one observes complete fasting for twelve days doing tarpana in this sacred pond it is said that he gets the benefit of doing of Naramedhayajna. (Ślokas 41, Chapter 25, Anuśasana Parva, M.B.).

AṬṬAVAKTRA. See under Astāvakra.

AṬṬAVARGA(S). Meda, Mahāmeda, Kākoli, Kṣirakākoli, Jivaka, Ītavaka, Rddhi, Vṛddhi (These are used in infusions for treating rheumatism).

AṬṬAVASU(S).

1) Origin. Gana devatās are called Aṭṭavasus. They were born to Dharmadeva of his wife Vasi, daughter of Dakṣa. They are : Dhara, Dhruva, Soma, Ahar, Anila, Anala, Pratyūṣa and Prabhāṣa. (Ślokas 17 and 18, Chapter 66, Adi Parva, M.B.). There is a version in certain purāṇas that the Aṭṭavasus are the sons of Kaśyapa.

Different purāṇas give different names to these Aṭṭa-vasus. According to Viṣṇu Purāṇa they are : Āpa, Dhruva, Soma, Dharmā, Anila, Anala, Pratyūṣa and Prabhāṣa. (Chapter 15 of Aniśaṁ 1). In Bhāgavata they are Deona, Prāṇa, Dhruva, Arka, Agni, Doṣa, Vasu and Vībhāvās. In Harivamśa they are : Akha, Dhara, Dhruva, Soma, Anila, Anala, Pratyūṣa and Prabhāṣa. This only indicates that some of these have two or more names for them.

2) Curse of Vasiṣṭha. Once the Aṭṭavasus were enjoying a picnic with their wives and they happened to go to the āśrama of Vasiṣṭha. One of the wives got ennourished over Nandini, Vasiṣṭha’s beautiful cow and wanted it. The Vasu to please his wife took the cow by force and left the place. When the sage found his cow missing after some time he understood by his divine powers who stole the cow and so he cursed the Aṭṭa-vasus saying that all of them would be born on earth as men. The Aṭṭavasus were greatly worried and approached the sage apologising and craving for pardon. The sage relaxed the curse and declared that their life on earth would be only for a very short time maintaining that the particular Vasu who committed the theft would live for a long time as man. It was this Vasu, Āpa (Dyau) who was born as Bhīṣma.

3) Rebirth of Aśvāsas. The Aśvāsas were pondering over the curse and were thinking of how to bear it without hardship when Gaṅgādevī appeared before them and then appealed to her: “Devī, if you become the queen on earth of some noble King we shall be born as your sons and you must throw us into the river as soon as we are born”. Gaṅgādevī accepted their request. Once there was a King called Pratīpā in the Candra dynasty. One day when this ascetic King was worshipping Ṣārva on the banks of the river Gaṅgā a beautiful damsel arose from the waters and sat on the right thigh of the King. Surprised the King told her thus, “Oh beautiful maiden, who are you? Do you realise what unrighteous thing you have done? I am not one who goes after women and it was a bit daring of you to have taken me as a beau. Please understand that the right thigh is intended for a daughter and daughter-in-law. You can claim this right when you become the wife of my son.” The beautiful girl was none other than Gaṅgādevī herself and she disappeared soon on receiving the rebuke.

Pratīpā got a son named Śāntana and Gaṅgādevī became the wife of Śāntana. (For more details about this see under Gaṅgā). When Gaṅgādevī became the wife of Śāntana she made a condition to be his queen. “Whether good or bad you should not obstruct any action of mine. You must never give me any opinion of yours on any matter. You must obey what I order. If at any time you break any of these promises I will leave you that instant.”

It was while Gaṅgādevī was living on earth as the wife of Śāntana that the Aśvāsas were born to her. One after the other she threw into the river seven sons but when she was about to throw the eighth the King objected to it and Gaṅgā disappeared immediately. That son was Bhiṣma, who was none other than Dvārak born on earth by the curse of Vasiṣṭha. All the others, released from the curse, went to heaven. (More details under Bhiṣma).

4) A missile to Bhiṣma. When Bhiṣma had to fight against his guru, Parasurāma, the Aśvāsas gave him the missile, Prasvāpā. (See Ambā) (Ślokas 11 to 13, Chapter 183, Udōga Parva, M.B.).

5) Sons of Aśvāsas. The sons of Āpa, the first of the Vasus, are: Vaidantha, Śrama, Śanta and Dhvani. Kāla, the destroyer of all, is the son of Dhrūva. Varca is the son of Soma. Dharma got of his wife Manohari five sons Draviṇa, Hutaḥavavāhā, Śīrṣa, Prāṇa and Varuṇa. Śivā was Anila’s wife and she got two sons, Manojva and Avijñātata. Agni’s son Kumāra was born at Sarasambha. Kumāra got three brothers, Sākha, Viśākha and Naigameya. Kumāra is known as Kaṭṭikikya because he was born of Kaṭṭikas. The sage, Devala, is the son of Pratyāşa. Devala got two sons of great intelligence and forbearance. Varāṣṭri, sister of Bṛhaspati and a woman of great yogic powers and world-wide travels became the wife of Prabhāṣa. She gave birth to the famous Viśvakarma Prājapāti. He was the inventor of a great many handicrafts and ornaments. He became the consulting architect of the devas and ranked first in that art. The aeroplanes of the devas were designed by him. Men on earth depend on his art even now. That architect had four sons: Ajīkā-pāt, Ahiṅbudhnyā, Vaṭṭā and Rudra, the bold. The great ascetics, Viśvarūpā, Hara, Bahuṛūpā, Tríyambka, Aparājita, Vṛśākapi, śambhu, Kapardi, Raivata, Mṛgavādha, Śarva and Kapāli were the sons of Vaṭṭā. These are known as the twelve Rudras. Purāṇas say that there are a hundred Rudras like this. (Chapter 15, Ahūśa, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

AŚTVADIHAṆAYIKĀ (S). Eight kinds of heroines of the stage:
1) Śūdrāpatikā. Fit to be a counterpart in a love scene and play the role of any one who is always fondled by her husband.
2) Vāsakasajjikā (Vāsakasajjā). Adorning herself well and waiting for her lover in a well decorated bedroom.
3) Virahotkāṣṭhā. Exhausted by the sorrow of separation from her lover.
4) Viṭralabdha. Cheated by her lover after fixing a date and a rendezvous.
5) Khaṇḍītā. Angered at the arrival of the husband in the early hours of the morning with suspicion about his character.
6) Kalahantarītā. Repenting after having arrogantly disobeyed her husband.
7) Prisītabharītā. One who has gone weak and moody thinking about her husband in a foreign place.
8) Abhiśāt-kā. One who approaches her husband with great passion. (Nātyaśāstra).

AŚTVADHIHAPRAKYAVASTHĀ (S). Earth, Water, Agni, Air, Ether, Mind, Intelligence and Egōtism.

AŚTVADHAPRATIMĀ (S). Śālāmayī, Kṛṣṇamayī, Lepyā, Lekhyā, Mṛtyumayī, Maippayi and Manomayi.

AŚTVADHAKUŚTHA (S). Vimarcika, Bhadra, Maṇḍala, Śukti, Sīdhdhama, Kṛṣṇa, Śukla and Tārūṇa. (Aśṭāṅgāyadraya).

AŚTVĀVĀ (S). Eight kinds of marriage. (1) Brāhma (2) Daiva (3) Arṣa (4) Prājapāta (5) Gāṇḍhara (6) Āsura (7) Rākṣa (8) Paścā. Brāhma is the one where the father gives his daughter with sacred water to a bachelor without accepting anything in return. When the father gives his daughter to the priest at the time of a yāga it is called Daiva. It is Arṣa if the father gives the daughter and gets in return a cow or bullock. When the father gives the daughter with her blessings it is Prājapāta. The marriage between two lovers is Gāṇḍhara. It is Āsura when the male takes his mate by force and it is Paścācika (most cruel and mean) when the girl is taken as his wife when she is in a state of unconsciousness.

AŚTVAYOGINI (S). The eight hermit-maidens who are the attendants of the goddess, Durgā. (1) Mārjīti (2) Karpūrātalikā (3) Malayagandhini (4) Kaumudikā (5) Bheruṇḍā (6) Mātali (7) Nāyaki (8) Jāyā (Śubhācara).

AŚTOPĀYA (S). Eight ways of attaining salvation. Yaṁja, Dāna, Vedādhyayana, Tapas, Dama, Satya, Rjuśila, and Mārdava. These are the qualities required for attaining salvation.

ASTI. Daughter of Jarāsandha, King of Magadha. Kaṁsa married Asti and also another daughter of Jarāsandha. (Ślokas 29 to 32, Chapter 14, Śabhā Parva, M.B.). Chapter 12 of Agni Purāṇa states that Jarāsandha went to war with the Yādavas because of the persuasion of these daughters.

ASTRA. After killing the demoness, Tātakā, Viśāmitha reveals to Rāma and Laksmana the secret of using a great many varieties of Divyāstras (Divyāstra is a missile charged with power by holy incantation). Some of those astras are named below:

1. Daṇḍacakra
2. Dharmacakra
3. Kālacakra
4. Viṣṇucakra
5. Indrācakra
6. Vajrāstra
7. Saivaśāla
8. Āsija
9. Brahmaśāstra
10. Brahmatra
11. Modakśīkharī
12. Dharmapāsa
13. Kālapāsa
14. Vārṇunāstra
15. Vāruṇapāsa
16. Paramāstra
17. Pīnākāstra
18. Nārāyaṇastra
19. Āgniestrā
20. Śikharastra
21. Vāyavāstra
22. Prathanāstra
23. Kauṣāstra
24. Hayaśāstra
25. Kaṇākāstra
26. Mulasāla
27. Kāpālāstra
28. Kaṅkānāstra
29. Māṇavāstra
30. Prasthāpāstra
31. Praśamanāstra
32. Saurāstra
33. Varṣastra
34. Soṣastra
35. Śantānāstra
36. Vīpēnāstra
37. Madanāstra
38. Mōhāstra
39. Saumyastra
40. Saumyastra
41. Saumyastra
42. Māyādārāstra
43. Tejaprabhāstra
44. Saumyastra
45. Śīśāstra
46. Tvaśṭāstra
47. Sudāmanāstra

Śrī Rāma received all these astras standing facing east. (Sarga 27, Bālakāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa)

ASURA. Those born to Kaśyapa of his wife Danu are called Dānavas and those born of his wife Diti are called Dāityas. They belong to the demonica dynasty (Refer under ‘Asursastra’ in the genealogy chart). Known among the asuras were the following:

ASURA. One of the eight daughters born to Kaśyapa of his wife Pradā. (Sarga 41, Chapter 65, Adi Parva, M.B.)

AŚU RBANIPAL. (See under Gilgami, Jalapralaya)

AŚURTARAJASA. A son born to King Kuśa of his wife Vaidarbhī. Kuśamba, Kuśābha, Aṣurārajasa and Vasu are the four sons of Kuśa. (Sarga 32, Bālakāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa)

AŚVA I. A demon. This was the same demon who later on was born as Asoka, King of Kaliṇgi. (Chapter 67, Adi Parva, M.B.)

AŚVA II. A mahārāti. The sage Vaśa is the son of this rśi. (Śūkta 112 of Rgveda)

AŚVA (Horse). Horses and camels were born, in this world, of Tāṁrā, wife of Kaśyapa, grandson of Brahman. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19)

AŚVAGHOSA. A famous Sanskrit poet. He has written many Sanskrit books prominent among which are the two great poems, Buddhacarita and Saundarananda ASVAPATI I. Father of the most chaste woman, Sāvitrī. He was King of Madra. He was without children for a long period and for eighteen years he worshipped the goddess, Sāvitrī and got a maiden from Agnihotra whom and a drama called Śāriputra-prakaraṇa. He lived in the 2nd Century A.D. His history of Buddha (Buddhacarita) was translated into Chinese during the period 414 to 421 A.D. He was known under the following names also: Ācārya, Bhadanta, Mahāvā and Bhikṣu.

ASVAGRIVA. Son born to the Sage, Kaśyapa by his wife, Danu. (Śloka 24, Chapter 65, Adi Parva, M.B.)

ASVAHRDAYA. A mantra (sacred incantation) for controlling the horse. (See under ‘Aksahrdya’).

ASVAKETU. Son of King Gándhāra. He fought on the side of the Kauravas and was killed in the battle by Abhimanyu. (Śloka 7, Chapter 48, Drona Parva, M.B.)

ASVAKRTA. A river. Once a sage called R̄iṇaka went to Gāḍhī and asked for the hand of his daughter, Sāyavati, in marriage. He demanded as dowry a thousand horses black in colour and with only one ear for each. R̄iṇaka prayed to Varuṇa and he gave him the horses required. The river Aṣva-kṛta (created by horse) was made by the flow of urine from these horses. (Chapter 57, Bṛhmaṇḍa Purāṇa)

ASVAMEDHA I. A country of ancient India which was ruled by a King named Rocamān. Bīhāmasena conquered him during the world-wide conquering campaign. (Śloka 8, Chapter 29, Sāhā Parva)

ASVAMEDHA II. A yāga. Kings used to conduct this in order to get absolved of all sins. Fixing a victory card on the head of a horse it is allowed to roam about freely. If anybody stops the horse and ties it, the King should go and defeat him in battle and bring back the horse. If you do a hundred such yāgas you can become Indra.

ASVAMEDHA. Son of King Saḥasarānika (Refer under Sahasrānika)

ASVAMEDHADATTA. Son born to Śatānika of the princess of Videha. (Śloka 86, Chapter 95, Adi Parva, M.B.)

ASVAMEDHAPARVA. A parva of the Mahābhārata. See under Bharata.

ASVANADI. A river in the country of Kuntibhoja. Aśvanadi joins Carmanvī and the latter joins the Yamuna and the Yamuna joining Gaṅgā falls into the ocean. It was through this river that Kuntidevi floated in a box the infant Karna. At night accompanied by her maid, Kunti floated the box containing her illegitimate son and stood on the banks of Aśvanadi weeping bitterly. Then thinking that her father would notice her absence from the palace she returned home soon. The box floated and reached the country, Campāpurī, ruled by a charioteer. (Ślokas 22 to 26, Chapter 308, Aroha Parva, M.B.)

ASVARATHĀ. A river in the Gandhāmādana valley flowing near the Ārṣama of the sage Arṣīṭeṇa. Many kings of the Candra dynasty used to come and stay in this ārṣama. (Śloka 10, Chapter 160, Vana Parva, M.B.)

ASVAŚANKU. Son of Kaśyapa born of his wife Danu. (Śloka 21, Chapter 67, Adi Parva, M.B.)

ASVAPATI II. Father of the most chaste woman, Sāvitrī. He was King of Madra. He was without children for a long period and for eighteen years he worshipped the goddess, Sāvitrī and got a maiden from Agnihotra whom... he named as Sāvitrī. For more details see under Sāvitrī. (Chapter 293, Vana Parva, M.B.).

ASVAPĀTI II. The son born to Kaśyapa of his wife Danū. (Sloka 21, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ASVĀSENA. A serpent which lived in the forest of Khāṇḍavā. This was the son of Taṅkaka and he tried his best to escape from the fire that burnt the forest. (Sloka 5, Chapter 239, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

Once when Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa were sitting on the banks of the river Yamunā, Agni approached them and requested them to help him to burn the forest of Khāṇḍava (see under Khāṇḍavādāhā). They agreed to help him and Agni started burning the forest. Indra poured rains over the fire; Arjuna created a canal of arrows and prevented the rains from falling down. Āsvasena, son of Taṅkaka tried to escape from the fire but Arjuna obstructed his way by arrows. Then Āsvasena’s mother swallowed him and kept him in her stomach. Arjuna cut off her head. Seeing this Indra sent a cyclone to smash the canal of arrows and Arjuna fell fainting. Taking the opportunity Āsvasena escaped. When Arjuna woke up from his unconscious state he found Āsvasena missing. Then Arjuna cursed him thus: “Let not you get refuge anywhere.” (Chapter 226, Ādi Parva, M.B.). Āsvasena kept his grudge against Arjuna till the end. In the great battle Arjuna and Karna met for a fight and when Karna sent his Nagāstra (serpent missile) against Arjuna, Āsvasena hid himself in that missile and burnt the beautiful headwear of Arjuna. But Karna did not like this foul play and refused to accept him when he came back. Enraged at this the serpent attacked Arjuna directly and was killed. Before his death he got acquainted with Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 96, Karna Parva, M.B.).

ĀSVĀṢIRAS I. A son born to Kaśyapa of Danū. (Sloka 23, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ĀSVĀṢIRAS II. Bhagavān Hayagriva who was teaching the Vecdas at Vaihāśyasakunḍa near Naranārāyaṇapārama. (Sloka 3, Chapter 127, Śantā Parva, M.B.).

ĀSVĀṢIRASTHĀNA(M). A sacred place in ancient India. Arjuna dreams of going to Śiva with Kṛṣṇa and in that dream they visit this place also. (Chapter 80, Dronā Parva, M.B.).

ĀSVĀṬAKA. A country of ancient India. (Sloka 15, Chapter 51, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

ĀSVĀṬA. A serpent. A sacred pond built in Prayāga also carries this name. (Sloka 76, Chapter 55, Vana Parva and Sloka 10, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ĀSVĀṬĪRTHA. An ancient holy place on the banks of the river, Ganges, near Kanauj. It was at this place that the horses rose from the earth at the request of Reka Rśi to Varuna. (See under Āsvāṭra). (Sloka 17, Chapter 4, M.B.).

ĀSVĀṬṬĀMĀ.

1) Birth and genealogy. The semen of Bharadvāja Rśi fell into the hollow of a bamboo and from there was born Drona. As per the instructions of his father Drona married Kṛṣṇa, daughter of the sage, Sāraddvata. The good-natured Kṛṣṇa gave birth to Āsvāṭṭāmā. (See under Drona for genealogy). (Chapter 130, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

2) How he got his name. The moment he was born he made a loud hoot like Uccāśiras and the sound resembled the braying of a horse. Immediately a voice from heaven said that the boy should be named Āsvāṭṭāmā.

The boy was, therefore, named so. (Slokas 48 and 49, Chapter 130, M.B.).

3) Training in archery. Āsvāṭṭāmā took his lesson in archery from his father Drona. At that time Drona got new lessons from Paraśurāma and they were also imparted to Drona’s disciples. When Drona became the preceptor of the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas Āsvāṭṭāmā also went with him. (Slokas 52 to 64, Chapter 130, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

4) Drona’s affection for his son. Drona was very affectionate to his son and wanted to teach him something special in archery. So he used to instruct him during the time the other disciples went to fetch water for the āśrama. Arjuna came to know of this and he, there after, started bringing his quota of water quickly enough to join the special class of Drona. Thus Arjuna and Āsvāṭṭāmā learned a lot more than the others in the military art. (Slokas 17-19, Chapter 132, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

5) The Mahābhārata Battle and Āsvāṭṭāmā. In Sahbh Parva we find Āsvāṭṭāmā participating in the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhīra. After that we meet him only at the Kurukṣetra war. Fighting on the side of the Kauravas he played a very important role in that war. He killed many veteran warriors and kings including the following: Nila, Anjanaravpav, Suratha, Satrughnaya, Balānika, Jayānike, Jayāśva, Sruṭāśva, Hemamālī, Viṣṇudhara, Candrasena, the ten sons of Kuntibhoja, Sudarśana, Vṛdhadhākṣṭra, Cedirājā, Malayadvayāja and Sura-tha. He defeated many including Sīkhandi, Abhimanyu, Virāta, Sātyaki and Vindhya. By using Agneyāstra (the arrow of fire) he made Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna fall fainting in the battle-field. He commanded the Kaurava army once. He killed many Pāṇcālas and Somakas while they were sleeping. In Chapter 139 of Drona Parva we read about Arjuna defeating Āsvāṭṭāmā in a single combat one day.

6) Āsvāṭṭāmā sees a ghost. Dhṛṣṭadyumna, son of King Pāṇcāla, killed Drona. When Āsvāṭṭāmā heard of his father’s death his rage knew no bound. He immediately went to the heart of the military camp of the Pāṇḍavas, Kṛṣṇa and Sātvata following him. There at the gate of the camp he beheld a ghostly apparition. It is described in the Bhāṣa Bhārata (Malayālām version of M.B.) as follows: He saw a huge figure standing at the door with a body blazing like the Sun and the Moon. Bathed in blood and wearing a tiger’s skin in the loins the figure wore a snake as his sacred thread and covered his upper body with a deer-skin. There were innumerable hands for this ghost and in each hand adorned with snake-bangles he held a deadly weapon. With crooked teeth and a ghastly face the ghoblin gave a shiver to those who saw him. Flames bursting forth from his eyes, ears, nose and mouth he barred the way of Āsvāṭṭāmā. Undaunted the son of Drona showered divine arrows on the figure. But the ghost by his supreme powers absorbed the arrows to his body the moment they touched him. In despair Āsvāṭṭāmā meditated on Śiva and the latter appearing before him in person gave him a divine dagger. With that he entered the bed-chamber of Dhṛṣṭadyumna, woke him up by striking him with his foot, caught hold of him by the hair on his head and killed him.

7) Āsvāṭṭāmā and his jewel. The anger of Āsvāṭṭāmā did not abate even after killing Dhṛṣṭadyumna, the butcher of his father. With a view to destroying the whole Pândava dynasty he sent against the Pândavas the all-powerful Brahmarāstra (a missile charged with great power by a holy incantation). But Dronâja, having given the same type of missile to Arjuna also and so he sent forth his allies to meet the other. It created such a great explosion that all the elders on both the sides joined together and requested them to withdraw the missiles. Arjuna demanded the jewel on Āśvatthāmā’s head to withdraw his missile. But Āśvatthāmā refused to part with it. He said, “This jewel of mine is more valuable than all the wealth of both Pândavas and Kauravas put together. If you wear this you need not be afraid of your enemies, disease, hunger and thirst. No harm will come to you from Yakṣas, Nāgas or thieves. I will never part with such a jewel”. (Ślokas 28-30, M.B., Chapter 15, Sautika Parva). After great persuasion Āśvatthāmā surrendered his jewel but without withdrawing the missile directed it towards the womb of Uttārā who was bearing a child then. We are reminded of an incident which happened when the Pândavas were residing in Upaplāvya; a poor brahmin looking at Uttārā said, “When the Kauravas will be weakening in power a child will be born to you. The boy will have to bear a test even while in the womb and you must name the child Parikṣit (One who has been tested)”. When the powerful missile was flying straight towards Uttārā’s womb Śrī Kṛṣṇa said, “Even though the child in the womb will die of this arrow it will be reborn. Oh, Āśvatthāmā, you will be denounced by all as a sinner for killing this unborn babe. To suffer for this evil deed you will roam about in the earth for three thousand years. Nobody will associate with you; you will be shunned by society. You will be tormented by all diseases on earth. But the babe which you have now killed will be a famous scholar and brave King. He will rule this country for sixty years. He will be known as the next Kururāja. Look, I am giving life to the babe you have killed”. Vvāsa supported Kṛṣṇa, and Āśvatthāmā repenting on his hasty action gave the jewel to the Pândavas and left for the forest with Vvāsa. (Sautika Parva, M.B.).

8) Synonyms of Āśvatthāmā. The Mahābhārata has used the following names also for Āśvatthāmā: Ācāryananda, Ācāryaputra, Ācāryasuta, Ācāryatanaya, Ācāryasattama, Draupi, Draupiyan, Droṇaputra, Droṇasūtu, Gurusūtra, Gurusūtra and Bhāratacāryaputra.

ĀŚVATTHĀMĀ II. Indravarmā, King of Mālava, had an elephant of this name and it was killed in the battle by Bhimasena. (Śloka 15, Chapter 190, Droṇa Parva, M.B.)

ĀSVATTHĀMĀ I. A river. It is believed that if one just thinks about it at daybreak, midday and sunset one will get salvation. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Śloka 25).

ĀŚVĀVAN. The first child of King Kuru. (See under genealogy of Kuru). His mother was Vāhini. He is known as Avikṣit also. He got eight sons; Parikṣit, Śabālaśva, Ādīrāja, Viraṇa, Sālma, Uccaiḥśravas, Bhayānkara and Jitārī. (Ślokas 50 to 53, Chapter 94, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ĀSVINIKUMĀRA(S) ĀSVINIDEVAS. Satya and Daśra, the two sons of Sūrya (The Sun) are called Āsvinikumāras. (Ślokas 17 and 18, Chapter 150, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.). They are also known as Āśvinis, and Āśvinīdevas. These two are the physicians of the devas. (Śloka 12, Chapter 123, Aranyaka Parva, M.B.).

1) Genealogy. Descending from Viṣṇu in order are: Brahmā, Marici, Kaśyapa, Vivasvan (the Sun), Āsvinikumāras.

2) Birth. The Viṣṇu Purāṇa describes the birth thus: “Sānjīvī, daughter of Viśvakarmā, was the wife of Sūrya. She got three children: Manu, Yama and Yami. Once finding the effulgence of Sūrya unbearably she engaged Chāyā to look after Sūrya and left the forests to do penance there. Sūrya took Chāyā to be Sānjīvī and got three children of her: Sanaīscara, (another) Manu and Tapati. Once Chāyā got angry and cursed Yama. It was then that Sūrya and Yama came to know that she was not Sānjīvī, getting more details from Chāyā, Sūrya found out by his Jñānadrśti (a power of sight developed by Yoga by which one could see things far beyond the limits of his vision) that Chāyā was practising austerities taking the form of a mare. Then Sūrya went to her disguised as a horse and with her co-operation produced three children of which the first two became known as Āsvinikumāras. The third son was called Revanta. Then Sūrya took Sānjīvī to his place (Chapter 2, Anuśāsā 3, Viṣṇu Purāṇa). Śloka 35 of Chapter 66 of Ādi Parva states that Āsvinikumāras were born from the nose of Sānjīvī.

3) How Āsvinikumāras tested Sukanyā. The Devī Bhāgavata contains a story of how the Āsvinikumāras tested the fidelity of Sukanyā, daughter of Saryatī and made her old and senile husband into a young and virile one. Saryatī, son of Vaivasvata manu, had four thousand beautiful princesses as wives. But none had any children. When they were lamenting over this misfortune one of the wives gave birth to a girl and she was called Sukanyā. The father and all his wives together brought up this daughter with great affection. In the neighbourhood of the palace of Saryatī there was a tapovana as good and grand as Nandavavana and it contained a lake similar to the Mānas lake. In one corner of this tapovana a sage named Cyavana was doing penance. He had been sitting there for so long a period without food meditating on a goddess that he was covered with plants and shrubs had grown over him. He was unaware of the growth around him. Once at this time Saryatī with his wives and child and followed by a large retinue entered the tapovana for recreation. The King and his wives entered the lake and Sukanyā with her friends moved about in the garden plucking flowers and playing. Moving about thus aimlessly Sukanyā and party reached the place where Cyavana was doing penance. She saw the huge shrubby growth and while looking at it saw two gleaming points inside the shrubby heap. She was about to break open the thing when from inside she heard somebody addressing her thus: “Oh, innocent girl, why do you think of doing this mischief? Please do go your way. I am an ascetic. What wrong have I done to you for you to disturb me like this?” But Sukanyā brought up as she was, as a very pet girl did not like anybody advising her like this and so taking a pointed stick gave two pricks at the site of the gleam-points and left the place arrogantly. The gleam-points were the eyes of Cyavana and so he lost his eyes and suffered much from the pain. Though he felt angry he did not curse anybody. But slowly the country began to witness the evil effects of this cruel deed. People stopped passing urine or faeces. Even animals were affected. The King and his ministers were worried. People came on deputation to the King to describe the disaster that had gripped the state. The King began to doubt that somebody must have done some great injury to the sage, Cyavana. He started enquires asking his subjects one by one about this. But everybody replied in the negative. He bribed, he threatened. The result was the same. Then one day while the King and his courtiers were sitting despondent Sukanyā approached her father and confessed what she had done. She said: “While I was playing with my friends in the tapovana I saw this huge shrub-heap and two points gleaming from inside. I took a pin-stick and pricked them both and on drawing it out I found it wet also. But I left the matter there and never made any enquiries thereafter”. Saryāti now knew the cause of this national disaster and so immediately rushed to the sage for forgiveness. Prostrating before the rśi the King pleaded “Oh, best of rśis, forgive us for this injury done unknowingly. My daughter who is only an innocent child did this playfully while she was playing in this garden with her friends. She never knew what she pricked for a fun were your eyes. Oh, the best of sage, thou art rich in forgiveness and so please do condone this mischief and bless us.” Cyavana replied that he would forgive if he gave Sukanyā in marriage to him. Saryāti was depressed. How could he give his only and beautiful daughter to this aged senile ugly and blind rśi? While the King was thus pondering over this, Sukanyā herself came to him and said, “Oh, dear father, please do not worry on my account. I shall go as his wife. If he is satisfied the nation would be saved from a calamity and I am prepared to sacrifice my happiness for the sake of the country. I will be only too glad to do so.” With suppressed unwillingness the King gave his daughter in marriage to Cyavana.

Sukanyā after her marriage engaged herself fully in the service of looking after the welfare of her husband. She gave her husband healthy and tasty fruits and vegetables, bathed him daily in hot water, placed before him all the materials for his pūjā and when the time came for his meals gave him his food sitting by his side. After the meals she gave him tāmbūla and only after putting him on a bed would she go to attend to her own affairs. After finishing her meals she would come again to her husband and sit by his side massaging him. In the evening she would make ready all the things required for the pūjā and after the pūjā feed him with nourishing food. Whatever remained after his feed would be taken by her. At night she would be at the foot of her husband and take a nap. In the morning she would attend to all the details of the ablations of her husband. Thus Sukanyā lived true to her husband always anxious to please him. Then one day the Aśvinikumāras saw her going to the āśrama after her bath. They were very much attracted by the stunning beauty of the maiden that they approached her and asked: “Oh, beautiful maiden, who are you? We are Aśvinikumāras. You seem to be alone. How did you happen to come to this place? You are one who should always move about with friends and courtiers and what is the reason for your living like this?” Sukanyā replied, “Revered Devas, I am the daughter of Saryāti and wife of Cyavana. Forced by certain circumstances my father gave me in marriage to this sage who is very old and blind. He is living in the āśrama nearby. I am living with him looking after his comfort. If you think it convenient you can come and accept our hospitality.” Hearing this the Aśvinikumāras told her thus: “Sweet girl, you are fit to be the wife of one who is better than this blind old ascetic. So please do accept one of us as your husband”. Sukanyā did not relish this talk and threatening them that if they did not withdraw stopping such blabbering she would curse them to ashes. The Aśvinīdevas were a bit surprised and also frightened at the attitude of Sukanyā. “Oh, Princess, we are immensely pleased at your sense of righteousness and chastity and you can ask of us a boon. We are physicians of the devas and can give your husband his sight and can also make him young and virile. But there is a condition for this. As soon as your husband becomes young and handsome we will also become like him and then you can select one among us. Are you willing? If so we will make your husband charming and handsome at this instant.

Sukanyā was well pleased with this offer but the condition placed did not satisfy her. So she ran to the āśrama and told her husband thus: “Lord, I met the Aśvinīdevas on my way from the river after my bath and enamoured of my beauty they have made this offer. We will make your husband young and beautiful giving him back his eyesight and then we will change ourselves to resemble him. You have then to select one of us as your husband. I am not able to understand their cunning and so I have come to you to get from you the answer for their question. I am anxious to see you young and handsome with your eyesight regained. I shall do as you direct.”

Cyavana said: “There is nothing in this for great thinking. You go and tell them that you would do as they wish and bring them down here. On hearing this Sukanyā went to the Aśvinikumāras and took them to the āśrama. They asked Cyavana to take a dip in the lake nearby and as he entered the lake the Aśvinīdevas also entered it and took a dip in its waters along with Cyavana. Lo! As they rose from the waters all the three became young and handsome looking alike. The Aśvinīdevas then requested Sukanyā to select one among them. Sukanyā was in a fix and she prayed to her goddess to give her power to identify her husband. She was blessed with that power and she selected Cyavana from the lot at which the Aśvinīdevas were also pleased. (Seventh Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

4) Cyavana’s gratitude. Cyavana who got back his eyesight and youth asked the Aśvinikumāras what boon they wanted. They then told him thus: “We are the physicians of the devas. Devendra has unnecessarily put a ban on our drinking Soma (juice extracted from the creeper Soma). When Brahmā performed a yāga at Mahāmeru this leader of the devas did not allow us to take a soma drink. If you are capable of doing it you should get us the right to take this celestial drink.” Cyavana promised to do that.

Before long, King Saryāti and his wife came to the āśrama to enquire about the welfare of their daughter. To their great amazement they found a young and handsome ascetic at the āśrama and were a bit suspicious of the character of their daughter. But soon all doubts were cleared and they were immensely pleased. Cyavana then told the king the request of the Asvinīdevas and Sāryāti also promised his help on this matter.
On their return to their palace Sāryāti decided to perform a big yāga to which all the devas were also invited.
Cvāvana officiated as priest. The Asvinīdevas were also present quite to the dislike of Indra. The time came for distributing soma, and when Cvāvana called the Asvinīkumāras to take their share Indra objected saying that since they were physicians of the devas they could not be given that drink. Cvāvana argued against that and after a great verbal combat Cvāvana succeeded in making the Asvinīkumāras take the drink. For more details look under ‘Cvāvana’. (Seventh Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).
5) Other information regarding Asvinīkumāras.
(1) How they tested Upamanyu. This story is given under the word Āpodadhaumya.
(2) Birth of Nakula and Sahadeva. Kuntī, wife of Pāṇḍu, had obtained from Sage Dvīravāsī five sacred mantras, the chanting of each of which would give her a child. Even before her marriage Kuntī tested the power of the mantras by chanting one of them. Sūrya appeared and she had to take a son from him who became the famous Karna later. By chanting the second, third and fourth meditating on Yama, Vāyu and Indra, Kuntī got respectively the sons Dharmaputra, Bhima and Arjuna. The fifth mantra she gave to Mādri and she meditated on the Asvinīdevas and got Nakula and Sahadeva.
(3) The Asvinīdevas were present for the marriage of Pāṇcālī. (Śloka 6, Chapter 196, Adī Parva, M.B.).
During the burning of the forest Khāṇḍava the Asvinīdevas stood on the side of Arjuna.
(4) Kṛṣṇa Vyanāvāsa became pregnant and bore a child. It was the Asvinīdevas who took the child out by surgery. The boy became known as Māṇḍhātā later. (Śloka 3, Chapter 62, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).
(5) During the Mahābhārata battle the Asvinīdevas handed over some Pārāsadas to the god, Skanda. (Śloka 38, Chapter 43, Salya Parva, M.B.).
(6) The Asvinīdevas like very much oblations of Ghee. The others who like it are Brhaspati, Pūṣan, Bhaga and Pāvaka. (Śloka 7, Chapter 65, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).
(7) The month of Āśvin (October-November) is the month of Asvinīkumāras and if a man gives ghee to the Brahmmins freely in that month he will acquire more physical beauty. (Śloka 10, Chapter 65, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).
(8) One who offers Ghee as oblation to the fire for twelve months in succession will reach the country of the Asvinīkumāras. (Śloka 95, Chapter 107, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).
(9) The great poet of Kerala, Vallathol, in his commentary on the 93rd Śūṭka of the Rgveda states that there is a belief that the Āśvins and Čandraśūryas (the Sun and Moon) are one and the same.
(10) Dirghāstra's son of Dirghatamas once prayed to the Asvinīdevas to get rains and it is said that they gave a downpour of sweet water. (Rgveda, Śūṭka 112, Rk 11).
(11) Once a sage named Gotama was lost in a desert and craved bitterly for drinking water. He prayed to the Asvinīdevas for water and they dug a well itself in the desert and quenched the thirst of the sage. (Rk 9, Śūṭka 16, Rgveda).
(12) The sage Dādhyāṅga taught the Asvinīdevas the technique, Madhuviḍyā. There is an interesting story about it. It was Indra who taught this to Dādhyāṅga and while teaching him he had threatened that if he gave away that secret to anybody else his head would be cut off. Asvinīdevas found a way to tide over this difficulty. They at first cut off his head and fixed the head of a horse on him. It was with the head of a horse that Dādhyāṅga taught them Madhuviḍyā and as soon as the teaching was over his horse-head was cut off and the real head placed in its place. (Rk 22, Śūṭka 116, Rgveda).
(13) The vehicle of the Asvinīdevas is a donkey. Once this donkey in the disguise of a wolf went and stayed with Pṛṛṣāva, son of the Rājarṣi Vṛṣaṅgī. Pṛṛṣāva gave the wolf to eat hundred goats belonging to the people of the place. Vṛṣaṅgī got angry at this act of his son and cursed him. The son became blind and he got back his eyesight by pleasing the Asvinīdevas by prayer and offerings. (Rk 16, Śūṭka 115, Rgveda).
(14) Once Sūrya decided to give his daughter in marriage to the owner of the horse which would win a horse-race which Sūrya would conduct. In the race the horse of the Asvinīdevas won and they thus married Sūrya's daughter. (Rk 17, Śūṭka 117, Rgveda).
(15) The Asvinīkumāras killed an asura of name Viṣvaṅk and destroyed his dynasty also. (Rk 16, Śūṭka 117, Rgveda).

ASVINIKUMĀRATĪRTHA. It is believed that the physical beauty of man would be increased if he bathes in this lake. (Śloka 17, Chapter 83, Vana Parva, M.B.).

ASVINISUTA. A son born to Sūrya of the wife of Sutapas. There is this story about it in Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa. Once when the wife of Sutapas was on a pilgrimage Sūrya happened to see her. The beautiful and venerable lady refused to accede to the desire of Sūrya and so the latter used force and took her. They had a son who was named Asvinisuta. On her return after the pilgrimage with her son she explained all that happened and the sage sent both of them out. Sūrya taught his son Asvinisuta astrology and made him a master in that science. Knowing that, Sutapas cursed him and said he would turn to be one very diseased. Later the sage amended his curse and added that he would be free from disease if he worshipped the sun.

ASVINTĪRTHA. Promises bodily splendour if one takes a bath in this lake. (Śloka 21, Chapter 25, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

ATALA. This is one of the seven sections of Pātalā. The seven sections are: Atala, Vitala, Sutala, Talātāla, Mahātāla, Raśātāla, Pātalā. Of them Atala has been described as follows: Atala is the first world of Pātalā. There reigns Bala, the son of Maya who is the famous but haughty magician. He has created 96 Mayas who are capable of granting all kinds of desires. Even now certain persons who are interested in the practice of Black magic, learn some of these 96 arts and practise them. When this mighty fellow opens his mouth for yawning, three groups of women known as Puriścalis, Śvairīṇis and Kāminīs emerge from his mouth. He has with him a raśāyana called hātaka with which he can easily entice and seduce all who enter Atala and to strengthen them for satisfying his lust. After enticing them with it, he enjoys uncontrolled pleasure with them, showering on them his amorous glances, bewitching smiles and embraces. (Devī Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

AṬAVIṢIKHARA. Name of a village in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 48).

ATHARVA (M). Among the Vedas, this has the fourth place. It comprises different kinds of incantations of occult powers for the destruction of enemies. Atharvan the son of Vasiṣṭha was the author of this Veda. In Chapter 6 of the third section of Viṣṇu Purāṇa the following reference is made to Atharvaveda: “Sumantu Mahārṣi who was of infinite glory, first taught this Atharvaveda to his disciple Kabandha. (Sumantu Mahārṣi was the son of Jāmīni, who was the disciple of Vedavyāsa.) Kabandha divided Atharvaveda into two parts and communicated them to two Mahāris named Devadarśa and Pathya. Devadārśa’s disciples were: Medhā, Brahmabali, Sautkāyani and Pippalāda. Pathya had three disciples named Jābali, Kumudā and Sānukaka. They also made Atharvaveda compositions. Sānukaka divided his composition into two and gave one part to Babhru and the other to Saindhava. Miṅjikeśa learnt it from Sāndhava and divided the composition first into two and later into three parts. The five divisions of the Atharvaveda—Nakṣatrukakāla, Vedākakāla, Samhitākakāla, Āṅgirasakāla and Sānti-kakāla, were made by Miṅjikeśa. Nakṣatrukakāla contains Brahmā’s works: Samhitākakāla contains Mantra Vidhi; Āṅgirasakakāla contains ābhicāra and Sānti-kakāla contains taming of horses, elephants etc.

The mantras (incantations) in Atharvaveda and their uses are given below:—

When these mantras are chanted several obligations are made to the sacrificial fire. Substances like Camatā, ghee, rice, milk are thrown into the fire as offerings. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 282).

ATHARVĀ I. This muni is referred to in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 50, as a professional chanter of Chandave. Once under the curse of Bṛhgu Mahārṣi, Agni hid himself under the sea. (See “AGNI”). At that time, it was Atharvā who, at the suggestion of the Devas, went under the water and discovered Agni. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 8).

Atharvā recovered Agni, and re-created the worlds which were lying dormant owing to the absence of fire. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 19).

Atharvā was born from Brahmā’s face. His wife was Śanti, the daughter of Kardama. Citti was another name for Śanti. But there are some Purāṇas which refer to Citti as another wife of Atharvā. Also, there are Purāṇas which say that Atharvā was Āṅgiras himself.

ATHARVĀ II. This name has been used as a synonym of Śiva. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 91).

ATHARVĀ III. In Rgveda another Atharvā may be seen. It is said that he was the author of the Atharvaveda. After learning Brahmagīryā from Brahmā, it was this Atharvā who first brought fire to the earth from heaven. Atharvā had two wives named Śanti and Citti. This Atharvā was the same person as Atharvāṇa, the son of Vasiṣṭha. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha, Chapter 1).

ATHARVĀṅGIRAS. See ĀNGIRAS.

ATHARVĀṆA. A son of Vasiṣṭha. (Bhāgavata, Fourth Skandha, Verse 42).

ATHIMALI (M). Name of a Janasthāna (Town) in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 64).

ATīBAH. He was a Gandharva born to Kaśyapa by his wife Pradhā. He had three brothers: Hāhā, Hūhū and Tumburu. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 51).

ATĪMĀLA. A mantra. Viśvāmitra who took the boys Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa to the forest taught them two mantras, Bala and Atīmbala, to liberate them from hunger and thirst. Viśvāmitra returned with Lakṣmaṇa, Bālākande, Sarga 22)

ATĪMĀLA. The Maharāṣṭrī Atīmbala was the cause of the death of Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa. After the war with Rāvana, Śrī Rāma returned to Ayodhyā with his retinue and began his reign. After announcing Sītā while Śrī Rāma was living in the palace with Lakṣmaṇa, Śatrughna and their families, one day Brahmā summoned Yama and said: “Śrī Rāma is the incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu. He has fulfilled all the purposes of the incarnation. Now Viṣṇu has to be recalled to Vaikuṇṭha”.

On hearing this, Yama assuming the guise of a Sannyāsī named Atīmbala appeared before Śrī Rāma. He said he had to tell a secret to Śrī Rāma. Accordingly Śrī Rāma sent everyone else out of the audience chamber.
Lakṣmaṇa was asked to guard the entrance. It was announced that if anyone entered the hall, Lakṣmaṇa would be killed.

At this stage, Mahārṣi Durvāsas arrived at the entrance accompanied by many of his disciples. He had come after having performed penance for a thousand years and in great hunger and thirst. He wanted to see the King to ask for sumptuous food. Lakṣmaṇa requested him to wait a little but Durvāsas refused to do so. He even threatened that he would reduce all of them to ashes by his curse. Finding no alternative, Lakṣmaṇa entered the hall and informed Śrī Rāma of the situation.

Durvāsas was given a sumptuous meal. But for the fulfilment of the condition Lakṣmaṇa's death became necessary. Śrī Rāma cried with a broken heart. The honest Lakṣmaṇa went alone to the Sarayū river and drowned himself in its depths. Soon after, Śrī Rāma entrusting the affairs of the state to others and in the presence of thousands of spectators plunged into the Sarayū river and renouncing his earthly life, returned to Vaikuntha.

(Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

ATIBALA II. The name of a follower given to Skanda by god Vāyu on the battle-field. (M.B., Sālya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 44).

ATIBALA III. There was another King named Atibala who was a great scholar in Nitiśāstra. From the time of his accession to the throne, he began to lead a vicious life. This Atibala's father was a King named Anāgī. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 92).

ATIBHIMA. One of the sons of the Agni, Tapa. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 11).

ATIKĀYA. One of the sons of Rāvana.

1) Previous Birth. This is a story concerning the initial stage of the creation of the Universe. After completing the task of creation Brahmā, in his pride fell into a sleep. In order to slight Brahmā a little, Mahāviṣṇu produced two Rākṣasas called Madhu and Kaīṭabha from his ears. Hearing their terrible roar Brahmā woke up in fear and fled to Mahāviṣṇu seeking refuge. Viṣṇu called Madhu and Kaīṭabha and asked them what boon they would like to ask. They proudly replied that they would grant a boon to Viṣṇu. In that case Mahāviṣṇu wanted them to grant him leave to kill them. They answered: “We will not break our promise about granting the boon. But since our passion for fighting has not been abated, you must fulfill our eager desire.” Mahāviṣṇu said: “I agree. But let my boon be carried out first. After that I shall see that your wish is properly fulfilled. After your death, one of you will be reborn under the name of Krāha and the other under the name of Atikāya. In the Tretāyuga I shall kill Krāha in single combat after allying his passion for fighting. Lakṣmaṇa who is the incarnation of Ananta will fight with Atikāya to his full satisfaction and kill him. Thus both of you get Virakti and Mukti.”

After saying this, Mahāviṣṇu made the two asuras stand on each of his thighs and killed them with his Suraśāna Cakra. They were born again as Krāha and Atikāya. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

2) Birth. There is a story about the birth of Atikāya in the Yuddha Kāṇḍa of Kamba Rāmāyaṇa: After his victory over Kubera Rāvaṇa was returning in his Puspaka Vimāna. On his way he saw some beautiful Gandharva women playing in the valley of Mayuragri. Their leader was Citrāṅgi, the wife of Citrāṅgada. Rāvaṇa seduced her and had a secret union with her. At once she became pregnant and gave birth to a dazzlingly bright baby. The mother handed over the child to Rāvaṇa and returned to the world of the Gandharvas. Rāvaṇa, in his paternal love, took the child into the Vimāna and proceeded. On the way, the Vimāṇa knocked against a mountain peak and the baby was thrown overboard and fell in the forest. Rāvaṇa stopped the Vimāna and made a search for the baby in the forest. He found the child without the slightest injury, smiling and lying on a flat rock in the deep woods. He failed in his attempt to take it up even though he used ten of his hands. The child began to grow steadily in size. Then he tried again to lift the baby up using all his twenty arms. The boy, who had by this time grown into enormous size, suddenly sprang up and getting into the Vimāna took his seat in it. Rāvaṇa gave him the name Atikāya. On his arrival in Lāṅkā, he presented him as adopted son to the barren Dhanayamāla. Atikāya was brought up by Dhanayamāla.

3) The Boons. Atikāya went to Gokarna and did penance to please Brahmā. Brahmā appeared, but being fully absolved in Samādhi, Atikāya was not aware of his presence. Even his life-breath had been stopped. Brahmā, by his power, instilled life-breath into him and restored him to consciousness. He granted Atikāya all the boons he asked for. They were three in number. The first was the gift of Brahmāstra which could smash anyone. The second was the gift of an armour which was unassailable by anyone. The third was absence of thirst, desire and other cravings.

4) Education. Atikāya went to Kailāsa and received his education from Śiva. He learnt all the sciences, Arts, Śrutis, Śr̥ṇ̥iṇi etc. from there. On the completion of his course he asked what Gurudakṣiṇā he should pay. Śiva made him promise that he would never practise Black magic. Pleased with him, Śiva awarded him the Pāśupatāstra.

5) Victory in Battle. Atikāya had an uncle, a Rākṣasa named Candra. Once he was defeated by Indra. It was at this time of chagrin that he came to know that Atikāya had reached Lāṅkā with the Pāśupatāstra. Candra Rākṣasa ordered Atikāya to bring Indra as a captive. Atikāya went to Svarga (Heaven) and began a war with Indra. Mahāviṣṇu who came to help Indra used his Suraśāna cakra. Atikāya shot his Pāśu-patāstra. Knowing Atikāya's history well, Mahāviṣṇu brought the battle to a close. Both parties accepted the position that Devendra had lost the battle and Atikāya had won.

6) Death. In the Rāmāyaṇa battle Atikāya fought on the side of Rāvaṇa. After a most terrible conflict, Lakṣmaṇa killed Atikāya. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

ATILOMĀ. An Asura who was killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

ATIMANYU. He was one of the ten sons of Manu.

ATIRATHA. There was a King named Matināra in Puruvaśīra. (See PŪRVASŪRA). Four sons were born to him: Taṁśu, Mahān, Atiratha and Druhyu. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 14).

ATIRĀTRA. He was one of the ten children born to Manu by Nadvāla. (See MANU VAMŚA). Kuru, Pāuru, Sātaṇyumna, Tapasvī, Satyavān, Suci, Agniṣṭoma, Atirātra, Sudyumna and Atimanyu were the names of the ten brilliant sons of Naḍvalā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 13).

ATIŚANDA. After his death Balabhadrā Rāma went to Pātañ in the guise of Ananta. All the serpents worshipped him. Among them was a serpent named Atiśanda. (M.B., Manusala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

ATIS & NGAVindhya Present two Pārṣadas to Skanda on the battlefield. They were Atiśruga and Ucchṛṣu. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verses 49, 50).

ATISHTRA. Mahāmeru presented two Pārṣadas named Atishtha and Śhīra to Skanda on the battlefield. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 48).

ATITHI (guest). In ancient Bhrata Atithi-satkāra (hospitality to a guest) was considered as a yajñī. In Manusmrtha, Chapter 100, Verse 3, it is said that even if one lives on the scattered grains in the fields after harvest, and even if penance is offered in the midst of Pasčigati (five fires) unless the Brahmin who comes as a guest is fed, all virtuous deeds would be useless. Besides, Manu has made the following remarks about the Atithi (guest).

“A new visitor at night must be treated as an Atithi. An Atithi is one who comes occasionally, not daily. But one who lives in your village and goes about as a vagabond for a living, does not deserve to be treated as an Atithi. The guest who comes either before or after mealtime should not be sent away without being fed. Even a Vaiśya or Śūdra who comes as a guest to a Brahmin’s house has to be given food when the servants are given food.”

ATITHVGA. He was a King referred to in the Rgveda. He had another name, “Divodāsa”. This King had fought several battles against Asuras with the help of Indra. It is said that once, being afraid of the Asuras, he tried to hide himself under the water. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 10, Sūkta 53; Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 112).

ATIVARCAS. Himavān gave Skanda two Pārṣadas on the battlefield. They were Ativarcas and Suvarcas. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 46).

ATIYAMA. God Varuṇa gave Skanda on the battlefield two Pārṣadas (attendant soldiers). One of them was Yama and the other was Atiyama. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 45).

ATRI I

1) The son of Brahmā. Atri Mahārṣi was one of the maṇḍaputra of Brahmā. The maṇḍaputra were: Mārici, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha, and Kratu (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 10).

2) One of the Saptarṣis. Brahmā’s sons, Mārici, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu and Vasiṣṭha are known as the Saptarṣis (seven sages). (M.B., Śaṅti Parva, Chapter 208).

3) Creator of the prācētases. The sage Prācinabarhish was born in the family of Atri Mahārṣi. Ten Prācētases (Prājāpatis) were born as the sons of this Muni. (M.B., Śaṅti Parva, Chapter 208).

4) Gitra Śikhānti. Among the seven Munis known as Gitra Śikhānts, we see Atri Mahārṣi as one of the Aṣṭāpракṛitis which form the basis of the Universe.

5) Important events. (1) How Mahāviṣṇu became Atri’s son. Kaśyapa had a son named Kaśipu. He was a very mighty ruler and carried on his reign in an ungodly manner. In a terrible battle which took place at that time between the Devas and Asuras Kaśipu was killed. Prahlāda became the Asura King. Then there was a battle between Indra and Prahlāda. After six years’ war, Prahlāda withdrew, defeated. Later Mahābali, the son of Viśvacana (grandson of Prahlāda) became emperor of Asuras. War broke out again between Mahābali and Indra. In this war, Mahāviṣṇu helped Indra. The Asuras were utterly defeated. They sought refuge with Sukra, the Asura guru. Sukra promised to help them. He set out to the Himālaśayas to receive a powerful mantra from Śiva. The Asuras kept waiting for Sukra’s return.

At this stage, Mahāviṣṇu who was the protector of Indra, came to Sukra’s āśrama and killed Sukra’s mother, Kāvyamātā. Seeing this impudence of Mahāviṣṇu, Bṛgu Mahārṣi was enraged and cursed him that he should be born many times in human wombs. It is on account of this that Mahāviṣṇu had to take many avatāras (incarnations). It was in this way that Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as Dattātreya, the son of Atri. (Devī Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

(2) Atri and Parāśara. It was a time when Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra were in a state of mutual ill-will. Once King Kalmāśāpada was going about in the forest on a hunting expedition. He met Śakti, the eldest son of Vasiṣṭha in the forest. The King did not respect him properly. Śakti transformed Kalmāśāpada into a Rākṣasa by his curse. The Rākṣasa who was also a cannibal, first swallowed Śakti himself. Viśvāmitra offered whatever help he could, to destroy Vasiṣṭha’s family. Kalmāśāpada ate successively all the 100 sons of Vasiṣṭha. Vasiṣṭha, in great sorrow and Śakti’s wife, Adṛśyantī lived in an āśrama. Adṛśyantī was pregnant at the time of Śakti’s death. In due course she gave birth to a boy who was called Parāśara, who later on became the father of Vyāsa. When Parāśara grew up, he came to know that his father Śakti was eaten by the Rākṣasa. Enraged at this, he started a yajñī to annihilate the whole race of Rākṣasas. As the yajñī gained intensity and force Atri Muni arrived there with certain other Mahārṣis and dissuaded Parāśara from the yajñī. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 181).

(3) Atri’s dispute with Vainya. Atri Mahārṣi and his wife once got ready to go to Vanavāsa. At that time the poor Mahārṣi’s wife was in great distress because they had no money to be distributed to their disciples and children. She requested her husband to go to King Vainya and to beg for some money. Accordingly the Mahārṣi visited King Vainya at his yāgaśāla (The shed where a yāga is held). He began to flatter Vainya by saying that he was the first among kings and so on. Vainya did not like it. He began to dispute with Atri. Vainya remarked that Indra was the first King. To settle the dispute they went together to Sanatkumāra Muni. Sanatkumāra sent them away reconciled. After that Vainya gave Atri much wealth. After distributing all this wealth among their sons and disciples Atri and his wife set out to the forest to perform penance.

(4) How Atri became Sun and Moon. Once there was a fierce battle between Devas and Asuras. Owing to the shower of arrows from the Asuras, the Sun and Moon became dim. Darkness spread everywhere. The Devas began to grope in the dark. They requested Atri Mahārṣi to find a remedy for this. Moved by their distress, Atri suddenly transformed himself into the Sun and Moon. The Moon gave light to the Devas. The Sun burnt up the Asuras by his intense heat. Thus the Devas were saved. This story was told by Vāyu Bhagavāna, to Arjuna. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 156).
(5) Atri and Vṛṣādārbi. In the Mahābhārata we find a story about a difference of opinion between King Vṛṣādārbi and some Mahārṣis. This story was told by Bhīṣma to Yudhīśthīra about the kind of persons from whom Brahmās may accept gifts. Once the Munis, Kaśyapa, Atri, Vasīṭṭha, Bharadvāja, Gautama, Viśvāmitra, Jamadagnī, and Paśusākhā, with Arundhāti and Gaṇḍā, who were the wives of two Munis, travelled round the world. Their object was to go to Brahmaloka. At that time there was drought in the world. King Vṛṣādārbi, the son of Sibi, suggested that the above-mentioned Munis should be called and given wealth. They refused to accept it. Vṛṣādārbi became angry. He performed Homā in Āhavanīyāgni and from the agnikūṇḍa, the Rākṣasī Yātudhānī (Kṛtyā) arose. Vṛṣādārbi sent Yātudhānī to destroy Atri and all other Munis. As Yātudhānī was guarding a lotus pond in the forest, the munis led by Atri happened to come that way. The Mahārṣis were able to recognize Yātudhānī. They beat her with their trisindhu (Trident or a kind of magic wand) and reduced her to ashes. After satisfying their hunger by eating the lotus flowers the Mahārṣis went to Brahmaloka. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 93).
(6) Atri and Śrādātha. There is a passage in the Mahābhārata in which Atri gives advice to the emperor Nimi who belonged to Atri's family. The story of how Śrādātha originated in the world which Bhīṣma had told Dharma-putra was retold by Atri. A son named Dattātreya was born to Atri, the son of Brahmā. Dattātreya became King. Nimi was his son. Nimi's son died after one thousand years. Nimi who was in deep grief at the death of his son, ordained a Śrādātha in memory of his son. On that occasion Atri Mahārṣi came there and explained to Nimi the importance of Śrādātha. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verses 20-44).
(7) How Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Mahēśvara (Śiva) were born as sons of Atri. There is no other woman in the Purāṇas who surpasses Śilāvati in her fidelity to her husband. To enable Ugraśiras, her husband, to satisfy his passion, she once carried him on her own shoulders to a prostitute's house. On the way, Māṇḍayā Muni pronounced a curse that Ugraśiras should die before sunrise. The grief-stricken Śilāvati pronounced a counter curse that the sun should not rise on the next day. As the sun failed to rise, the Trimūrti (Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva), accompanied by Anasūyā, Atri's wife, went to Śilāvati. Anasūyā persuaded Śilāvati to withdraw her curse. The Trimūrti who were happy at the success of their mission (of bringing about the Sunrise) asked Anasūyā to demand any boon she wanted. Anasūyā expressed her wish that the Trimūrti (Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva) should be born as her sons and they agreed. Mahāviṣṇu, under the name of Dattātreya, was born as the son of Anasūyā. Śiva was born to her under the name of Durvāsas. There is a story about it in the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa. Once Śiva got angry with the Devas. They began to flee for life. But Brahmā alone did not run away. Śiva who became more furious at this, pinched off one of the heads of Brahmā. Still he was not pacified. Pārvatī who was alarmed, approached Śiva and begged him to suppress his anger. At her request, Śiva's fury was transferred and deposited in Anasūyā, Atri's wife. Durvāsas is the embodiment of that element of Śiva's fury.
According to the promise, Brahmā also took his birth as the moon from Anasūyā, the wife of Atri. (For that story, see PURUŚRAVAS). There is a story about that also in the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa. Once when Brahmā was performing the task of creation, he experienced carnal passion. Sarasvatī was the offspring of that passion. When Brahmā saw her, he fell in love with her also. This made him feel angry towards Kāmadeva. He pronounced a curse that Kāmadeva should be burnt up in the fire from Śiva's eye. (This is why Kāmadeva was later burnt to death by Śiva). Although Kāma had retreated from Brahmā his passion had not been suppressed. Brahmā transferred his passion to Atri Mahārṣi. The Mahārṣi gave it to Anasūyā, his wife. Since she was unable to bear such a violent passion, she gave it back to her husband. That passion emerged from Atri's eye in the form of the Moon. This is why lovers experience strong passion for each other at the time of the rising of the moon. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 39-43).
(8) Atri and Gaṅgā Devī. Once, while Atri Mahārṣi was performing penance in Kāmadeva forest, there was a terrible drought in the country. At that time, his wife Anasūyā made a Śivalīṭga of sand and offered worship to it. Then Atri asked her to give him a little water. There was no water anywhere. Suddenly Gaṅgā Devī appeared there and said to Anasūyā: “There will be a hole here. Water will come out of it in a torrent.” Pure water began to flow from the place pointed out by Gaṅgā Devī. Anasūyā begged Gaṅgā Devī to stay there for a month. Gaṅgā Devī agreed to do so on condition that Anasūyā would transfer her Tapasā to her for one month. Atri was pleased by drinking the water. He asked Anasūyā where she got such nice fresh water. She explained to him all matters. Atri expressed his desire to see Gaṅgā Devī. She appeared before him at once. Anasūyā prayed to her that Gaṅgā should continue to exist in the world always. Gaṅgā Devī answered that she would do so if Anasūyā was prepared to give her the fruit of one year's Tapasā and of devoted service to her husband. Anasūyā agreed to that condition. Suddenly Śiva appeared there in the shape of a Linga. At the request of Atri and Anasūyā Śiva took his seat there permanently assuming the name of “Atriśvara”. (Śiva Purāṇa).
(9) Other Details. 1. Besides Dattātreya, Durvāsas and Candra, Atri had another son, Prācinabharīs. (M.B., Śanti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 6).
2. Many Pāvakās had been born in Atri Vamā. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verses 27-29).
3. When the Kaurava-Pāṇḍava war was raging with great fury, many Mahārṣis went to Droṇa and advised him to stop the battle. Atri Mahārṣi was one of them. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 190, Verse 35).
4. On another occasion, a king named Soma performed a Rājasūya (Royal sacrifice). Atri Mahārṣi was the chief priest at this yāga. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 47).
5. Atri was also among the Mahārṣis who had gone to witness Paraśūrāma’s tapas. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 64).
6. Sūtra, 5th Maṇḍala was composed by Atri. (Rgveda Sūtras, Preface).

7. Once the Asuras put Atri Maḥārṣi into the Śata-

8. The Asuras at another time made Atri lie down in a machine with a large number of holes and tried to burn him alive in it. At that time he prayed to the Åśvin and they liberated him. (Rgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 16th Anuvāka, Sūkta 112).

9. Atri was among the Mahārṣis who visited Śrī Rāma, on his return to Ayodhyā after the war with Rāvana. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

10. Atri begot by Anasūya, Soma, Durvāsas and Dattā-

3) The effulgence of Åurva. Åurva was born with fiery radiance and the sudden effulgence made the Kṣatriya Kings blind. Frightened they caved for pardon and praised him. They got back their eyesight then.

4) Åurva and Baḍavāgni. Åurva bore a deep grudge against the Kṣatriyas who had massacred his fore-fathers. Åurva started doing rigorous penance and by the force of his austerities the world started to burn. At that stage the Pītris appeared before him and persuaded him to withdraw from his penance. Åurva then told them thus: “Pītris, while I was lying in the thigh-womb of my mother I heard hideous groans from outside and they were of our mothers when they saw the heads of our fathers being cut-off by the swords of the Kṣatriyas. Even from the womb itself I nursed a fierce hatred towards the Kṣatriyas. No helping hand was raised before the pitiful wails of our mothers”.

5) Åurva and the birth of Sagara. Ayodhyā was once ruled by a celebrated King of Iksvāku dynasty named Subhāva. He had as his wife Yādavī a good natured and well behaved woman who was a gem among queens. One day Tālājamagha a King of the Hehaya line of rulers who was then the King of Māhiṣmati defeated Subhāva in a battle. Yādavī was then pregnant. Jealous co-wives poisoned her; Yādavī did not die but the poison affected the child in the womb. After the defeat, Subhāva and Yādavī went and stayed with Åurva in his Āśrama. For seven years they lived there and then Subhāva died. Grief-stricken Yādavī was about to jump into the funeral pyre and end her life when Åurva stopped her from the act pointing out that she was soon to deliver a child. After a few months she delivered a son and Åurva called him ‘Sagara’ meaning one with ‘gara’ (poison) in him. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 16, 17).

6) Åurva and the sister of Garuḍa. Garuḍa, son of Vinatā, had a sister named Sumati. Upamūrya, a sage, wanted to marry her but neither she nor her relatives liked it. Enraged at this the sage cursed Sumati saying that the brahmin who married her would have his head burst. The marriage of Sumati thus remained a problem for her parents. There was a friend of Vinatã, a sannyâsinî, living in a forest and to find a way to escape from the curse Vinatã sent Garudã to her. The sannyâsinî advised Garudã to approach Aurva to find a solution for the problem and Aurva was therefore approached for advice.

It was at this time that the people of Ayodhya came in search of Subhã and Yãdavã who had left them years before. When they knew of Subhã's death they were plunged in sorrow but were glad to know a son of Subhã, Sagara, had grown up to be a successor to Subhã. When Garudã made Aurva acquainted with the pitiable tale of his sister Aurva decreed that Sumati should marry a Ksatriya instead of a brahmin and thus tide over the curse. He then asked Sagara to marry Sumati and blessed them saying that Sagara would one day become an emperor and perform an Avamedha yagna. Aurva then sent Sagara along with the people to Ayodhya where Sagara after defeating all his enemies became the emperor of Bhrãaravâr. (Brahmãna Purãna, Chapters 18-21).

7) Sagara's sons and how Aurva helped in getting them. Sagara ruled the land for three thousand years. He had besides Sumati another wife, Keśinî. Both of them bore no sons for Sagara. Dejected he entrusted the administration of the state with his ministers and left for the âśrama of Aurva. Aurva blessed them and prophesied that Keśinî would deliver a son to continue the dynasty and that Sumati would deliver sixty thousand sons of no great use at all. Sagara and his wives, returned to the palace and very soon both his wives became pregnant. In due time Keśinî delivered a son who was named Asamañjas. But Sumati gave birth to a lump of flesh. Greatly pained the King was about to throw it away when Aurva appeared there and stopped him from doing that. He directed him to cut the piece of flesh into sixty thousand pieces and put one piece each in a jar of ghee. Every year one prince would be born from one of them. Thus Sumati got sixty thousand sons. (Brahmãna Purãna, Chapter 92).

8) Teaching of Aurva. In the evening of his life Sagara went and stayed in the âśrama of Aurva. Aurva gave him instructions on many a divine subject. He taught him about the importance of the four âśramas, the rituals to be practised by the different castes of Brâhma, Ksatriya, Vaisyã and Sûdra and many such other things. Finally Aurva gave Sagara Brahmajñâna. (Chapter 8, Anûsãm 3, Viṣṇû Purãna).

9) Aurâvârama. All the Bhãrava ējis together once stayed in the âśrama of Aurva. Parasûrâma visited the âśrama one day during that time and paid respects to Bhûrgu, Khyâti, wife of Bhûrgu, Cyavana, son of Bhûrgu and Aurva, son of Cyavana. (Brahmãna Purãna, Chaptre 63).

AURVA II. A brahmin living in the country of Mâlava. This brahmin got a daughter named Sâmika by his wife Súmedha. She was married very early to Mandarã, son of Dhaunyaka and disciple of Saunaka. After some days when Mandarã found his wife fully grown he went to Aurva to bring his wife home. Aurva sent them both to the house of Mandarã with his blessings. On their way home they met the Mahârshi Bhûshundhi and burst into laughter at his sight. The sage cursed them and made them into two trees. When Aurva found his daughter and son-in-law missing he started a search for them. Then he came to know that both of them had changed into trees by a curse. Aurva and his wife then prayed to God for help. Aurva then lived in the tree of Sâmä in the shape of Agni and Saunaka made an idol of Gañasati with the root of the Mandarã tree and worshipped him. Gañasati was pleased by the devotional deeds of Aurva and Saunaka and changed the trees again into Sâmika and Mandarã. (Gañça Purãna).

AUSANAS (Kapâlamocana). A holy place on the banks of the river, Sarasvatî. Brahmã, the devas and many mahañris lived here once. (Chapter 83, Vâna Parva).

This place is called Kapâlamocana also. There is a story behind the place getting this name.

At the forest of Dañçaka Śrî Râma killed many demons. The force of the arrows took the skulls of the demons to far off places in the forest. One of the skulls thus sent fell on the feet of a sage named Mahodarâ who was then going that way. The skull went deep into his foot and not only did it wound his foot but it stuck to his foot so hard that it could not be drawn out also. With his foot in pains the sage visited all the holy places but with no relief to his pain. At last Mahodarâ came to Ausanasa and to his surprise the skull came off from his foot healing his wound. He remained there for some time and obtained many divine attainments. From then onwards the place was called Kâpâlamocana. After this incident Brahmã, Viśvãmitra, Balabhadraśrâma and many such divine persons visited the place. (Chapter 39, Sâlyâ Parva, M.B.).

AUSIJA I. A King of ancient India. He equalled Indra. (Sloka 226, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AUSIJA II. An ancient sage. There is a reference to this sage who is the son of Āngiras in Rgveda. This rishi was a brilliant member of the royal council of Dharmaputra. (Chapter 206, Śánti Parva, M.B.).

AUSINARA (AUSINARI). Sibi, son of the King of Uṣñara. See under Sibi.

AUSINARI (USINARÄ). A Śûdra girl born in the country of Uṣñara. Gautama Muni got his sons Kakşvãn and others of this girl. (Sloka 5, Chapter 21, Śahlã Parva, M.B.).

AUSNIKA(M). An ancient place in India. The King of this country paid respects to Dharmaputra offering him several gifts. (Sloka 17, Chapter 51, Śahlã Parva, M.B.).

AUTATHYA. Son of Utathya (Sec under Utathya).

AVUVAYĂR. A celebrated Tamil poetess. She was born in a Parava (lowest of the Hindu castes) family. Her mother left her as soon as she was delivered and a low caste Śûdra brought her up. She lived for 240 years before she left on a long journey never to return. She wrote several books in Tamil. The important ones are Āticiti, Kontaiventa, Mutturai, Natvali, Kâtvâlili, Nânmukkova, Nantaniâlava, Aruntamilmâla, Daršanappatu, and Jñânakurul. She has made a dictionary in verses also.

AVABHRTHAM. The bath taken at the end of a sacrifice.

"Then all the Kṣatriya Kings approached Dharmatani (Dharmaputra) who had completed successfully, under the protection of the Mighty Lord of the bow, the cudgel and the wheel, the great sacrifice of the Raja-suya (imperial inauguration) and taken the avabhrtasnana (the bath at the end of the sacrifice)."

(Mahabharata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 43, Stanzas 40, 41).

AVACINA. The son born to Jayatsena, a King of the Puru dynasty, by his wife Suvarāva the princess of Vīdarbha. To him was born Ariha of Maryādā the princess of Vīdarbha. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanzas 17 and 18).

AVADHUTESVARA. An incarnation of Siva. Once Indra and Bhhaspati went to Kailāsa to do homage to Siva who clad in air only hindered their way. Indra requested that person to get out of the way. He requested repeatedly several times but in vain. Indra who got angry took his weapon of Vajra. But Siva froze it. Moreover fire emanated from his eye on the forehead. At the request of Bhhaspati Siva turned the fire from his eye towards Lavaṇa Samudra (the sea of Salt). Jalandhara who was killed by Siva had his origin in this fire. (Siva Purāṇa).

AVAGAHA. A warrior of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. (Mahabharata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 27).

AVAIŠAKHA. (See Dhanasārmā).

AVAKIRSA(M). A holy place on the bank of the river Sarasvati. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 41).

AVANTI. A country called Mālava in ancient India. The famous Ujñavini was the capital of Avanti. This city is situated on the bank of Śīrā. The renowned poets such as Kālidāsa and others, lived in this city. This is one of the seven cities considered to be capable of giving Mokṣa (heavenly bliss). (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 43).

AVANTI VAMSHA. (The Dynasty of Avanti). The dynasty of Avanti Kings had its origin in the Yadu dynasty. Candra was born to Atri the son of Brahmā. Budha was born to Candra, Pururavas to Budha, Āyus to Pururavas, Nahuṣa to Āyus, Yayāti to Nahuṣa and Yadu to Yayāti. Yadu had five sons, the eldest of whom was known by the name Sahasrajit. The rest of them were known as Niśājika, Raghu, Kroṣṭha and Śatajit. Sahasrajit had three sons called Śatajit, Haimaya and Reṇuhaya. Dharmarṣaṇa was born to Haihaya, Sahana to Dharmanetra, Mahimān to Sahana, Bhadrakāla to Mahimān, Durgama to Bhadrakāla and Kanaka to Durgama. From Kanaka were born the four sons Kṛtavrīra, Kṛttāgni, Karavrīra and Kṛtavrījata. Arjuna (Kārttavrīṛjuna) was born as the son of Kṛtavrīra. Arjuna renowned as Kārttavrīra became the supreme lord of the earth comprising the Saptadvipa (Seven Islands) by the merits of his penance. He got invincibility and thousand hands in battles, as Boons. He performed ten thousand sacrifices all in conformity with the rules and regulations. To escape from loss of wealth one had only to remember his name. It was ordered that Kings other than Kārttavrīra, however great the extent of their might and prowess, and the number of sacrifices, offering of alms and penance done be, would not stand on a par with him. Kārttavrīra had a hundred sons, of whom the most famous were Śrirasena, Śūra, Daśa, Kṛṣṇa, and Jayadhvaja. Jayadhvaja the most renowned of these five ruled in Avanti as King. Tālajāngha who had several sons, was born from Jayadhvaja.

The family of the Haihayas was split into five. They were the Bhogas, the Avantii family, the Vithihotra family, the Śrayamātā family and the Śauṇḍikėya family. (Āgni Purāṇa, Chapter 275).

AVARODHA. A King of the family of Bharata.

AVASĀNAM. An ancient Bath in Bhārata. One could attain the merits of Sahasrāgadāna (giving a thousand cows as alms) by bathing in this holy bath. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 128).

AVATĀRA. (Incarnation). The incarnations of Mahāviṣṇu:—

1) General information. God takes three kinds of incarnations such as avatāra, āveṣa and aṁśa. That which has full power is avatāra; that which has power only for the time being is āveṣa and partial incarnation in aṁśavatāra.* The incarnations of Viṣṇu are countless. Hermits, Manus, Devas (gods) and sons of Manus are incarnations in part (aṁśavatāras) of Viṣṇu. Complete avatāras are ten in numbers of which Balabhadra Rāma is not considered as an avatāra by some. Instead of him they place Bhuddha.

b) Reason for the incarnations. Mahāviṣṇu has taken so many incarnations in the world. In the Śri Mahādevi Bhāgavata a story occurs to the effect that Mahāviṣṇu was forced to take so large a number of incarnations due to the curse of the great hermit Bhṛgu. The story is as follows: Kaśyapa had a son named Kaśipu. He was daring and brave and ruled the country as an enemy of the Gods. There arose a severe battle between the gods and the Asuras. Kaśipu was killed in that battle. After Kaśipu his son Prahāda became King. He too was an enemy of the Gods. So there was a battle between Indra and Prahāda. The battle continued for a hundred years. At last Prahāda was defeated. He felt very sorry at the defeat. So he anointed Bali, son of Virocana, as King and leaving the Kingdom he went to the Gandhamādana and began to do penance. The fight continued between Bali and Indra. In this fight Mahāviṣṇu helped Indra. The Asuras were completely destroyed. The defeated Asuras went to their teacher Śrīka who promised to protect them by spells and incantations and herbs. The Gods knew that Śrīka had undertaken to protect the asuras. Leaving the asuras behind, Śrīka went to Kaśī to get more power of spells and incantations from Śiva. Before going to Kaśī Śrīka had asked the Asuras to wait for him with faith. After this the Asuras sent Prahāda to the Gods for a truce. Prahāda, though an Asura was in good favour with the Gods. He reached the court of Indra and said, "Gods, we have no desire at all for war. We have decided to spend the remaining period in penance wearing barks of trees and tufts of hair. How wicked a deed is battle and how delightful it is to become a devotee of God! So hereafter you will not be troubled by us. Likewise I hope you will not do us innocent people any harm."

The gods believed Prahāda. The Asuras, in the guise of hermits waited for Śrīka in the hermitage of Kaśyapa. Śrīka reached Kaśī and bowed before Śiva and requested that he might be given the power of defeating the Gods by some means quite unknown to Bhāspati the teacher of the devas (Gods). Śiva was in trouble. He could refuse neither Sukra nor the Gods. At last he told hermit Sukra that to come by such a spell he had to stand head downwards, inhaling smoke for a thousand years. Siva said so thinking that when the dreadful nature of the feat was considered, Sukra might desist from the attempt. But Sukra began that penance instantly.

The Gods understood everything. The deceit of the Asuras, the crookedness of Sukra all were now clear to them. They trembled with fear and began to consult how to get over the difficult situation. Finally they decided to go to war with the Asuras. The gods did accordingly. The Asuras were in trouble. They were not strong enough to face the Gods. So they all went to Kávýamáti, the mother of Sukra. The devas (gods) with Maháviśnú at their head chased the Asuras. Kávya-máti, by the merits of her devotional meditation petrified Maháviśnú and Indra. Maháviśnú thought of his Súdrášana (wheel-weapon of Viṣṇu) which instantly made its appearance and cut off the head of Kávýamáti. The great hermit Bhṛgu got angry because Mahá-viśnú committed woman-slaughter, and cursed him thus: “You are a crooked being, a vaper, a deceit. The hermits who adore you as the seat of all that is good are mere fools; you are wicked, of a black character, and I curse you to take countless incarnations in the world, and painful confinement by and because of your sins.” (Śrī Mahádeví Bhágavata, 4th Skandha).

Thus having cursed Viṣṇu, the hermit Bhṛgu took some water from his water-pot and sprinkled it on the face of Kávýamáti, who woke up as if from sleep. (For the remaining portion of the story see Sukra).

2) Daśāvatāras. (The ten incarnations). Owing to the curse of Bhṛgu, mentioned above, Maháviśnú had to undertake so many incarnations, complete as well as partial. Complete incarnations are ten in number. They are called Daśávatāras (The Ten Incarnations).

Matsya (Fish), Kúrma (Turtle), Varáha (Pig), Narasinha (Lion-man), Vámana (Dwarf), Páruṣa-ráma, Ráma (Śrī Ráma), Ráma (Balabhadra-ráma), Krṣṇa (Śrī Krṣṇa), Kalki (Yet to come). These are the ten incarnations of Janārdana.

The daśávatáras are described one by one below.

1) Matsyavatára. (Fish Incarnation). To Kaśyapa, the son of Marici, and the grandson of Brahmá a son was born, by his wife Aditi. He was called Vivasván and the Manu who was the son of Vivasván is known as Vaiśvāvata Manu or Satayāvata Manu. It was during the time of this Manu that Viṣṇu incarnated as a Matsya (Fish).

Once, while Brahmá was reciting the Vedas (the Scriptures) Hayagrīva, an asura, stole the Vedas from the side of Brahmá and with them he went under water to the bottom of the ocean and hid himself there. So Maháviśnú decided to take the form of a fish to recover the stolen Vedas.

Vaiśvāvata Manu, the first and foremost of the godly-ness, was once doing penance in a place known as Badari. He got down into the river Krtamāli to take a bath. Then a small fish said to the Manu: “Oh King, I am afraid of large fishes. So please don’t forsake me”. Hearing this the Kind Manu took the fish in his hand and put it in an earthenware pot and brought it up. In a few days the fish began to grow. When the pot became insufficient the King put it in a larger pot. When that also became too small, the King put the fish in a pond. When the pond could not hold the fish any longer the King put it in the Ganges at its request. After a few days the Ganges also became too small for the fish. Finally the fish told the King: “Oh, King, within seven days there will be a great flood in the world. You should make a boat and take the seven hermit-sages with you in the boat and escape. I will help you.”

Hearing this he got an immensely large boat ready and obeyed the instructions of the fish. Within seven days rain started in torrents. Everything in the world, the moving and the not moving, were under the flood. A horn began to sprout from the head of the fish. Manu tied his boat on that horn. The fish reached the summit of the Himalayas with the boat, which was tied to the highest peak. Since the peak came to be called Naubandhana Śṛīga (The peak to which boat is tied). The rain ceased to pour. It was seen that everything in the world had been destroyed except the Manu and the seven hermit-sages and some of the germs, saved in the boat. (This story occurs in the great Hindi work ‘Kámâyani’ of Jayašanika Prasād). (M.B., Aranya Parva, Chapter 187; Agni Purāña, Chapter 2; Bhágavata 8th Skandha, Chapter 24).

This story of the incarnation of Viṣṇu as fish is seen in the Bible figuratively. “In the order of the generations of Adam, the first creation of God, Seth, Eno; Cain, Mahalil, Jâred, Enoch, Methuselah, Lamech and Noah were born. When Noah was five hundred years old he begot Shem, Ham and Japheth.

There was a great flood during the time of Noah. God said to him; “The end of all flesh is come before one; for the earth is filled with violence through them, and behold, I will destroy them with the earth. Make thee an ark of gopher wood; rooms shalt thou make in the ark and shalt paint it within and without with pitch. And this is the fashion which thou shalt make it of. The length of the ark should be three hundred cubits, the breadth of it fifty cubits, and the height of it thirty cubits. A window shalt thou make to the ark and in a cubit shalt thou finish it above and the door of the ark shalt thou set in the side thereof, with lower, second and third stories shalt thou make it. And behold, I, even I, do bring a flood of water up on the earth, to destroy all flesh wherein is the breath of life from under heaven and everything that is in the earth shall die. But with thee will I establish my covenant, and thou shalt come into the ark, thou and thy sons and thy wife and thy sons’ wives with thee, and of every living thing of all flesh, two of every sort, shalt thou bring into the ark to keep them alive with thee; they shall be male and female. Of fowls after their kind, and of cattle after their kind, and of every creeping thing of the earth after their kind, two of every sort shall come unto thee to keep them alive. And take thou unto thee of all food that is eaten and thou shalt gather it to thee, and it shall be for food for thee and for them.” Thus did Noah according to all that God commanded him, so did he. And the Lord said unto Noah, “Come thou and all thy house into the ark, for thee and Have I seen righteous before me in this generation. Of every clean beast thou shall take to thee by sevens the male and his female and of beasts that are not clean by two the male and his female. Of fowls also of the air by sevens the male and the female to keep seed alive up on the face of all the earth. For yet seven days and I will cause it to rain up on the earth forty days and forty nights, and every living substance that I have made will I destroy from off the earth.” And Noah did according unto all that the Lord commanded him.

And Noah was six hundred years old when the flood of waters was up on the earth. And Noah went in, and his sons and his wife and his sons’ wives with him into the ark because of the waters of the flood. Of clean beasts and of beasts that are not clean and of fowls and of everything that creepeth upon the earth. There went in two and two unto Noah into the ark the male and the female as God had commanded Noah. And it came to pass after seven days that the waters of the flood were upon the earth. In the six hundredth year of Noah’s life in the second month on the seventeenth day of the month the same day were all the fountains of the great deep broken up and the windows of heaven were opened and the rain was up on the earth for forty days and forty nights. In the self-same day entered Noah and Shem, and Ham and Japheth the sons of Noah and Noah’s wife and the wives of the sons with them into the ark. They and every beast after his kind and all the cattle after their kind and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth and every fowl after his kind, every bird of every sort. And they went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh wherein is the breadth of life. And they that went in, went in male and female of all flesh as God had commanded him and the Lord shut him in. And the flood was forty days upon the earth, and the waters increased and bore up the ark and it was lifted up above the earth. And the waters prevailed and were increased greatly upon the earth and the ark went up on the face of the waters. And the waters prevailed exceedingly upon the earth and all the high hills that were under the whole heaven were covered. Fifteen cubits upward did the waters prevail and the mountains were covered. And all the flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl and of cattle and of beast and of every creeping thing that creepeth up on the earth, and every man. All in whose nostrils was the breadth of life, of all that was in the dry land, died. And every living substance was destroyed which was up on the face of the ground both man and cattle and the creeping things and the fowl of the heaven, and they were destroyed from the earth. And Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark. And the waters prevailed upon the earth for hundred and fifty days.

And God remembered Noah and every living thing and all the cattle that was with him in the ark and God made a wind to pass over the earth and the waters became calm. The fountains also of the deep and the windows of heaven were stopped and the rain from heaven was restrained. And the waters returned from off the earth continually and after the end of the hundred and fifty days, the waters were abated. And the ark rested in the seventh month on the seventeenth day of the month upon the mountains of Ararat. And the waters decreased continually until the tenth month.

In the tenth month on the first day of the month were the tops of the mountains seen. And it came to pass at the end of forty days that Noah opened the window of the ark which he had made. And he sent forth a raven which went forth to and fro until the waters were dried up from off the earth. Also he sent forth a dove from him to see if the waters were abated from off the face of the ground. But the dove found no rest for the sole of her foot and she returned unto him into the ark for the waters were on the face of the whole earth. Then Noah put forth his hand and took her and pulled her to the ark. And he stayed yet other seven days. And again he sent forth the dove out of the ark. And the dove came in to him in the evening, and lo, in her mouth was an olive leaf plucked off. So Noah knew that the waters were abated from off the earth. And he stayed yet other seven days and sent forth the dove, which returned not again unto him anymore. And it came to pass in the six hundredth and first year in the first month, the first day of the month the waters were dried up from off the earth and Noah removed the covering of the ark and looked and beheld the face of the ground was dry. And in the second month on the seventh and twentieth day of the month was the earth dried. And God spake unto Noah saying: “Go forth of the ark, thou and thy wife, and thy sons and thy sons’ wives with thee. Bring forth with thee every living thing that is with thee, of all flesh both of fowl and of cattle and of every creeping thing that creepeth up on the earth, that they may breed abundantly in the earth and be fruitful and multiply up on the earth. And Noah went forth and his sons and his wife and his sons’ wives with him. Every beast, every creeping thing and every fowl and whatsoever creep up on the earth after their kinds went forth out of the ark. And Noah built an altar unto the Lord and took of every clean beast and of every clean fowl and offered burnt offerings on the altar. And the Lord smelled a sweet savour and the Lord said in his heart: “I will not again curse the ground anymore for man’s sake. For the imagination of man’s heart is evil from his youth. Neither will I again smite anymore every thing as I have done. While the earth remaineth seed time and harvest and cold and heat and summer and winter and day and night shall not cease.” (Holy Bible, Genesis, Chapters 6, 7 and 8).

2) Kārnācatāra. (Incarnation as a tortoise). Long ago when Durvāsas visited the realm of Gods he presented Devendra with a garland made of flowers of exquisite fragrance. Indra tied it on to the tusk of Airāvata (the elephant of Indra). When the beetles which gathered on the garland for honey became a nuisance, Airāvata destroyed that garland. Durvāsas who got angry at this cursed the gods as a whole that they would get wrinkles and grey hair. The gods were advised by Mahāvisṇu that if they got Ambrosia (Amrta—celestial honey) from the sea of Milk by churning it they could escape from this. Accordingly the Gods called the asuras for help, and they approached the sea of Milk. They made use of the Mountain of Mandara as churn-drill and the huge snake Vāsuki as churning rope, and the churning commenced. The gods took hold of the tail of the snake and as the churning was proceeding the churn-drill, the mountain of Mandara, having no fixation at the bottom sank down. Then Mahāvisṇu took the form of a turtle, and got under the Mandara mountain and lifted it up on his back. By the force of lifting it went higher and higher up. Then Mahāviṣṇu took the form of an eagle and sat on the top of the mountain and it came down a little and placed itself in the right position. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8, Chapter 7; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 3; Vālmiki Rāmayana, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 45).

3) Varāhavatāra. (Incarnation as a Pig). Jaya and Vijaya were the two watchers who stood at the gate of Mahāviṣṇu. Once the great hermit-sages Sanaka and others reached Vaikuṇṭha to visit Mahāviṣṇu. Then Jaya and Vijaya treated the hermits without respect. The hermits cursed them that they would become Dānavas (Asuras or giants). They also said that when they were slain thrice by Mahāviṣṇu they would reach heaven. At that period when hermit Kaśyapa was carrying on his evening prayer and devotional rites, his wife Diti approached him with lustful desire. Kaśyapa told her that as he was engaged in prayer and meditation it was not proper on her part to select that particular moment for her lustful desire. But she persisted and the sage yielded and out of that union two sons were born. They are the two asuras Hiranyakaśa and Hiranyakāśiṇī. Of these Hiranyakaśa was the incarnation of Jaya and Hiranyakāśiṇī that of Vijaya.* With the birth of these two the whole world began to tremble. These two asura brothers began to terrorize the world. They wandered about causing destruction and devastation wherever they went. Once Hiranyakaśa got down into the ocean and began to beat the waves in the ocean with his cudgel. The ocean began to sway and surge. Varuṇa (the Lord of water) was terrified and he ran to Mahāviṣṇu and sought protection. Mahāviṣṇu took the form of a Pig and came to the ocean. When Hiranyakaśa saw Mahāviṣṇu he took the earth in his hand and ran to Pātalā (the nether world). Mahāviṣṇu followed him and killed him and recovered the earth. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 3, Chapter 18; Bhāgavata, Skandha 2, Chapter 7 and Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 4).

4) Narasimhavadāra. (Incarnation as lion-man). With the death of Hiranyakaśa, his brother Hiranyakāśiṇī became furious more than ever. He wanted to avenge the death of his brother. His fury was turned towards Mahāviṣṇu. So he got on the top of the Mountain of Mandara and did penance before Brahmā and Brahmā appeared and granted him boons, one of which was that nobody but Viṣṇu should be able to kill him. He returned with gladness and began to roam about torturing devotees of Viṣṇu everywhere. A son named Prahlāda was born to him. He was a god-fearing child and from birth an ardent believer in Viṣṇu. Hiranyakāśiṇī tried his utmost to change his son to a hater of Viṣṇu. He got a special teacher for the purpose and Prahlāda was taken to the house of the teacher to live with him until he changed his mind. The result was that the teacher and all others who advised him ultimately became believers in Viṣṇu. Anger overpowered Hiranyakāśiṇī. Prahlāda was thrown before mad elephants. But the tusks of the elephant missed the aim and were driven into the earth and broken. Venous snakes were employed and those which bit him had their fangs broken. Finally the child was put in blazing fire. But the child felt the fire to be cool and soothing. From that fire a ghost arose and tried to kill Prahlāda. Instantly the Sudarṣana, the wheel-weapon of Viṣṇu came down and cut off the head of the ghost. Hiranyakāśiṇī jumped with anger and called out, “Where is your Viṣṇu?” His son replied that his Viṣṇu dwelt in every movable and immovable thing. Hiranyakāśiṇī kicked at a stone pillar close by and asked him, “Is your Viṣṇu in this pillar?” Prahlāda replied, “My Viṣṇu is in Pillar and in fibre”. Before he had finished, the Pillar broke open and a monster as horrible as the Destroyer Śiva, in the shape of a lion-man made its appearance.

Kumbhakarṇa and during the third birth they were Śiśupāla and
5) Vāmanāvatāra. (Incarnation as a Dwarf). It was to expel the Emperor Mahābali, that Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as a dwarf. To Kaśyapa, the son of Marici and the grandson of Brahmā, was born Diti, Hiranya-kaśipu. And from Prahlāda the son of Hiranyakashipu was born Virocana and Bali was the son of Virocana. Bali got the name Mahābali because of his prowess. He was the emperor of the Asuras. A fierce battle began over the Ambrosia got from charming the sea of Milk, between the Asuras and the gods. In the battle Indra cut Mahābali down with his Vajrāyudha. The Asuras took the body of Mahābali to Pātāla (the nether world) where their teacher Sukra brought him to life again. Then Mahābali worshipped the Bhārgavas and became more powerful than before and went to heaven again and renewed the battle. This time he defeated the gods altogether and subjugated the realm of the gods who were scattered to all sides. The devas or gods are the sons of Kaśyapa born by his wife, Aditi. She felt very sorry at the defeat of the gods. Seeing that she was silent and sad Kaśyapa asked her the reason. She replied that she was thinking of ways to enable the gods to recover their lost power and position. Kaśyapa advised her to please Mahāviṣṇu by observing Dvādaśī vrata (fast of the twelfth lunar night). Aditi did so and Viṣṇu appeared before her and asked her what she desired. Her request was that Viṣṇu should take birth in her womb and recover Indra to his lost power and position. Thus Viṣṇu took birth as the younger brother of Indra in the shape of Vāmana (dwarf).

At this time Emperor Mahābali was celebrating a sacrifice on the bank of the River Narmadā after having subjugated the whole of the world. A large number of hermits gathered there. Vāmana also was among them. He requested Mahābali to grant him three feet of ground as alms. The teacher Sukra warned Mahābali against granting the request. But the emperor granted the request and asked Vāmana to measure the ground. Vāmana immediately enlarged his body and measured the heaven, the earth and the Pātāla (the upper realm, the earth and the lower realm) in two steps and asked for place for the third step. The honest Mahābali showed his head and requested to complete the three steps. Vāmana put his step on the head of Mahābali and pushed him down to Pātāla. Thus the gods regained their lost places. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8, Chapter 19).

A description that by the toe of Vāmanas' raised foot (raised for measuring the third step) the testicle of Brahmā was cut open where from the Ganges originated, is seen in the Bhāgavata, Skandha 5.

When Viṣṇumitra took Rāma and Lakṣmanā to the forest they entered a holy hermitage and Viṣṇumitra told the boys that it was the hermitage where Aditi, long ago had observed Dvādaśī fast. It was in that same place that Vāmana incarnated and placed his step on the head of Mahābali.

"The brightMahāvata took birth in Aditi as Vāmana and went to Mahābali, requested for three feet of ground and brought under control the three worlds for the good of all. By binding Bali by might, he gave to Indra the three worlds and this hermitage is the place where He once placed his steps. I am a devotee of that Vāmana."

(Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kanda, Sarga 29).

6) Parāsūrāmavatāra. (Incarnation as Parāsūrāma). Once Kārttavyārjuna pleased the hermit-sage Dattātreyā the son of Atri, by doing penance and got the boon of one thousand hands. One day he went to the forest for hunting and entered the bank of Narmadā. The hermit Jamadagni had been living there with his wife Renukā and sons Parāsūrāma and others. The King being tired of hunting got into the hermitage. Parāsūrāma was not there. The hermit called his divine cow Kāmadhenu, which provided the King and his followers with a very good supper.

When the King departed he asked for the wonderful cow. The hermit did not consent. The King caught hold of the cow by force and went to his city. Parāsūrāma went to Māhiṣmatinagar the capital of Kārttavyārjuna, killed the King and took Kāmadhenu back. From that day onwards the sons of Kārttavyārjuna were waiting for an opportunity to take revenge.

Once Renukā went to the river to bring water. A gangdharva (semi god) named Citaratha was bathing in the river. She happened to look at him for a little while. When she returned the hermit was very angry and asked each of his sons to cut off the head of their mother. They all refused. But Parāsūrāma immediately obeyed his father and cut off her head. His father was pleased and said that he might ask any boon. He requested his father to bring his mother back to life. Accordingly Renukā was brought back to life.

Once the sons of Kārttavyārjuna got into the hermitage, at a time when Parāsūrāma was away and cut off the head of the hermit Jamadagni and took it off. When he returned his mother told him how his father was killed. She cried and beat her breast twentyone times. Parāsūrāma became an incarnation of revenge, and travelled over the world twentyone times and killed every Kṣatriya King. The blood of all those Kings flowed into one channel and gathered in a holy Bath called Syamanta-pāñcapakā. Thus Mahāviṣṇu took his sixth incarnation as Parāsūrāma and fulfilled his duty of destroying the wicked Kṣatriya Kings (For details about Parāsūrāma see under Parāsūrāma and Kārttavyārjuna). (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, Chapter 16).

7) Śrī Rāmāvatāra. Mahāviṣṇu took the incarnation of Śrī Rāma to kill Rāvana. (For further information see the words Śrī Rāma and Rāvana).

8) Balabhadradarāmavatāra. (The incarnation of Balabhadra). (See the word Balabhadradāma).

9) Śrī Kṛṣṇāvatāra. (The incarnation of Śrī Kṛṣṇa) (See the word Kṛṣṇa).

10) Kalkyavatāra (The incarnation as Kalki). At the end of Kaliyuga (the Age of Kali) all the people would become atheists and sceptics. Rewards will be received from the depraved. The classes will be mixed. People would become degenerate having no good qualities. A religion called 'Vājasaneyam' with its fifteen doctrines only will be acceptable. People would become irresponsible wearing the garment of duty. Lawless people would take the form of Kings and will begin to eat men. In those days Lord Viṣṇu will incarnate as Kalki, the son of Viṣṇuyaśas and the priest of Yājñavalkya and learn the arts of wielding weapon and handling missiles and destroy all lawless ones. The subjects will be brought back to the four classes and the four āśramas or stages of life and the doctrines and directions of the long-established religion and peace and order will be restored. Then the Lord will cast away the form of Kalki and go to heaven. After that, as of old, Kṛtayuga (the first age) will begin class distinctions and the four stages of life and such other establishments will once more prevail. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 16).

3) The Incarnations of Mahāviṣṇu.

It is mentioned in Śrī Mahādevi Bhāgavata, Skandha 1, Chapter 3 that Mahāviṣṇu had taken the twentiesix incarnations given below:

1) Sanaka 2) Sananda 3) Sanātana 4) Sanatkumāra
13) Matsya (fish) 14) Mohini 15) Kūrma (turtle)
16) Garuda (eagle) 17) Dhanvantari 18) Narasiṁha (Lion-man) 19) Vāmana (dwarf) 20) Parāśurāma
21) Vyāsa 22) Śrī Rāma 23) Bālabhadra 24) Śrī Kṛṣṇa 25) Buddha 26) Kalki. (Information about Matsya, Kūrma, Vārāha, Narasiṁha, Vāmana and Parāśurāma, are given under the word Avatāra and for the rest see the same words).

In the first Skandha of “Bhāgavata Kalipattu” the incarnations are exhaustively dealt with as follows:

“And after that to make it possible for the Lord with four faces to rule his subjects justly and well. He took various incarnations with his portions, the first four of which are four persons, Sanaka, Sananda, Sanātana and Sanatkumāra, in the order given, four or five-year old children, well-versed in the four Vedas, the four always inseparable wandered everywhere come to the world to show the merits of Brahmacarya (the vow of celibacy). To kill Hiranyakāśa and to lift up the earth He took the form of Śiṅkara (Śiṅkara) 12. To show the world the tattva (essence) of Sat (good) and tama (darkness) He took the form of hermit Nārada. To show the merits of penance He became Nara and Nārāyaṇa. To impart to the world the meaning of Sāṅkhya Yoga (Indian Philosophy dealing with evolution and union with the Supreme Spirit) He came as Kapila the learned. To teach the world the laws of chastisement He was born as Datta of the wife of Atri. Then He came as Yajñadeva to become Indra. The next incarnation He took was Rṣabha, the noble King. To shorten and flatten the earth He came as Pṛthu. To recover the Vedas He took the form of Matsya (fish). To remove wrinkles and grey hair the gods had churned the sea of Milk and then to lift the mount Mandara He went under it and as a bird He got up on it. To give the world Ayurveda (the scripture of medicine) He came as Dhanvantari. To entice Asuras and to recover Ambrosia from them He took the form of Mohini. To save the devoted Prahlāda and to slay his father He came in the form of Narasiṁha. Then as Vāmana the younger brother of Indra to deceive Mahābali and to recover the lost worlds for the gods He came. To destroy the Kings who were haters of Brahmā He came as the son of Jamadagni. Then he took the incarnation of Veda Vyāsa. And to slay the giant Rāvaṇa He became Śrī Rāma. Next we see Him as Balabhadrarāma. Then He came as Devakiya (son of Devaki [Kṛṣṇa]). Next He came in the Kaliluga as Śrī Buddha and at the end of Kalilyuga He will come as Kalki. And there are many incarnations still to speak of.”

AVICI. One of the twentyeight hells. The following are the twentyeight hells:

The hell called Avici is described thus: “This is the hell meant for those who stand false witness, who take false oath and false name. The soldiers of Yama will push these false people into the hell of Avici, from the top of a mount which is a hundred yojanas (league) high. The place of Avici, like the waves of the ocean, is swelling and falling and swaying and surging always. When sinners fall there their bodies will be crumbled to pieces. Their life will enter into new bodies and then the punishment will be repeated again and again.” (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

AVIJNĀTAGATI. Two sons were born to Anīla, a vasu by his wife Śivā. They were called Avijñātāgati and Manojava. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 25).

AVIKAMPAŅA. This ancient King got from the hermit Jyestha Sāvatathadharma (righteousness). (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 384, Stanza 47).

AVIKŚIT I. A famous King. The son of Karandhama and father of Marutta. He was honoured even by Brhapaṭi, having performed a hundred horse sacrifices. Mention is made in the Mārkendeya Purāṇa that Avikṣit had seven wives: Vāra, Gaurī, Subhadra, Līlāvati, Vibhā, Maniṅgati, and Kumudvati. Besides them Vaiśālīni the princess of Viśālā also was his wife. He had taken this Vaiśālīni from her Svayānvara dais (the bride herself selecting a husband from those who are present), defeating the Kings who were present there. Those defeated Kings, later, joined together and defeated Avikṣit and took him a prisoner. Finally Karandhama rescued him. His greatness is described as follows:

“The righteous man Avikṣit is equal to Indra in prowess. This austere and righteous man has become a great sacrificer. In brightness he is equal to the Sun, as forgiving as the earth, in intelligence equal to Brhapaṭi and as firm as the Himalayas. By his thought, word, and deed and self control and noble actions he kept his subjects in peace and prosperity.” (Bhāṣā Bhrāta, Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 4, Stanzas 19-21).

AVIKŚIT II. Five sons were born to King Kuru by his wife Vāhini. Avikṣit was one of them. [See the word Vamsiśāvali (Genealogy)].

AVIMUKTA(M). The middle part of the city of Kaśi. There is a holy temple here. It is said that those who commit suicide in this temple would attain heaven. (Vana Parva, Chapter 64, Stanzas 78 and 79). For more information see the word Divodāsa.

AVINDHYA. A giant in whom Rāvana had confidence. But he held the opinion that Sītā should be returned to Rāma.

“The aged giant and noble leader Avindhya, who had earned the confidence of Rāvana, brave, learned and of good qualities, pleaded with Rāvana and said that Rāma would exterminate the entire race of the giants, but the wicked Rāvana would not pay heed to his words.

(Sṛi Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kānda, Sarga 37, Stanzas 12 and 13). This aged giant had sent Trijāṭa to the Aśoka park to console Sītā. Hear what she says: “The famous giant leader, the noble aged well-wisher of Rāma, Avindhya, had told me about you.”

“(M.B., Aranya Parva, Stanza 56). There is a situation in Vana Parwa when this noble giant prevented Rāvana from his attempt to kill Sītā.

“When he saw the decision of Rāvana to kill Sītā, Avindhya pacified Rāvana” and said, “you, a great King of a great kingdom should not deteriorate to the level of killing a woman. A woman who is in prison and at your disposal is as good as dead. But in my opinion, even if you cut her body into pieces she would not die and if she must die you will have to kill her husband.”

(M.B., Aranya Parva, Chapter 289, Stanzas 28 to 30). From this statement the wonderful intelligence of Avindhya could be understood. It is seen in stanzas 6 and 7 of Chapter 291 of M.B., Vana Parwa that it was Avindhya who had taken Sītā before Sṛi Rāma when he had captured Lāṅkā.

AVIRATHA. A hermit of the family of Kardama.

AVIRATHA. A hermit of the family of Kardama.

AVIVĀHITA. (Spinster). In the Mahābhārata a statement regarding spinsters and widows is seen.

“Place meat on the ground and many birds will come to it. So also men will gather round the woman who has no husband.” (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 12).

AVYAYA. A serpent of the Dhṛtarāṣṭra family. This serpent fell in the sacrificial fire meant for serpents, prepared by Janamejaya. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 16).

AYASANKU. A great Asura. He was born as a Prince of the Keśiya kingdom. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 10).

AYASIRAS. A son of Kaśyapa by his wife, Danu. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 23). He was born as a Prince of KeśiYa. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 10).

AYATAYAMA (S). See Guruparamparā.

AYATI. Son of King Nahuśa and brother of Yayāti. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 30).

AYAVAHAM. A place in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 5).

AYODHDAHAUMYA (AYODHDAHAUMYA). Apodadhaua, Apodadhauya, Dhaumya. A great Muni (sage). He had three disciples, Āruṇi, Upamanyu and Veda.

1) Disciple Āruṇi. He belonged to Pāñcāla, and once his guru deputed him to construct embankments in the field. But, his attempts to construct embankments did not succeed. Finally he lay himself in the field where the embankment was required, and then the flow of water stopped. The guru enquired about Āruṇi, who was thus lying in the field. Then only he knew the reason for Āruṇi’s absence. The guru went to the field and called Āruṇi. Then the embankment burst open and Āruṇi came out, and because of that Āruṇi got the name Uddālaka. (M.B., Chapter 3, Verses 21-33).

2) Disciple Upamanyu. Once Dhaumya (the guru) asked his second disciple Upamanyu to tend the cows. He used to take care of the animals grazing in the woods during daytime and return home at dusk and prostrate before the guru. Looking at the plump and healthy body of Upamanyu the guru asked him how he was feeding himself. His reply was that he was begging alms and feeding himself with what he got thus. Then the guru asked him to hand over to him (guru) all alms got in future. After that he used to give everything he got by way of alms to the guru. And, he continued returning to the Gurukula at dusk and prostrating before the guru. Finding Upamanyu even then as plump and healthy as he was formerly, the guru said: My son Upamanyu, you hand over to me all the alms you get, and yet your body looks as trim as of old. How happens it so?”

Upamanyu replied: “After giving the alms I get first to you, my guru, I do again beg for alms and feed myself”. To this the guru reacted thus: My boy, what you do is not the proper thing. By the second course of alms-taking you stand in the way of other people getting their food. It is gross injustice to do so.”

Upamanyu, from that day onwards strictly followed his guru’s instruction, and continued returning at dusk to the guru and doing obeisance to him. Even then finding Upamanyu to be quite plump and healthy the guru told him: “Well, now you hand over to me all the alms you get, and you do not take alms a second time the same day. Yet you are quite fit and fat. How is it so?”

To this Upamanyu’s reply was that he was feeding himself on the milk of the cows he tended. The guru told him that this too was not just and proper on his part. The guru had not permitted him to drink milk thus. Upamanyu agreed to obey his orders. And, as usual he continued tending the cows and returning at dusk. Even then he maintained the same plump and healthy physique. And the guru told him as follows: “You do not eat the food you get at the first alms-taking, you do not go in for alms a second time the same day, nor do you drink milk. Yet, how is it that you maintain the same fat and healthy physique as in former days?”

Upamanyu’s reply was that he was feeding now-a-days on the foam of milk bristling at the mouth of the calves when they had fed on their mother’s milk. And, the guru said: “if that is so the calves will be, out of kindness and sympathy for you, releasing much foam of milk out of their mouths. That will affect them. So, do not repeat the process. Since the guru forbade him to have food in any manner as detailed above, Upamanyu, while tending the herd of cows in the forest, ate the bitter and poisonous leaves of a tree one day to satisfy his burning hunger. The leaf was bitter in taste and injurious in its properties. Therefore, this new way of satisfying hunger affected the health of the eyes of Upamanyu and he became blind. Moving about in this condition he fell into a neglected well in the woods.

When, even after the sun had set, Upamanyu did not, as usual, return, the guru enquired about him from other disciples. Naturally, they told the guru that Upamanyu was out in the forest with the cows. As the guru felt that Upamanyu was staying away late in the forest since he had been prevented from doing everything he (guru) went to the forest accompanied by other disciples and called out for Upamanyu, and Upamanyu responded from deep down the well. He also told the guru how he happened to fall into the well. After telling him that if only he would pray to the Aśvīnīdevas they will cure his blindness the guru returned to the Aśrama with other disciples. Upamanyu, accordingly offered praises and prayed to the Aśvīnīdevas, who were so pleased with him that they appeared before him and gave him a bread. Upamanyu refused to eat the bread without giving it to the guru. Then the Aśvīnīdevas told him thus: “In the past when we gave your guru a bread like this he ate the same without giving it to his guru. You may just imitate him and eat the bread yourself." Even then Upamanyu did not eat the bread. The Aśvīnīdevas were so much pleased at this that they blessed Upamanyu thus: "The teeth of your guru will turn into hard iron and yours into pure gold. Your blindness will be cured and all happiness and prosperity will be yours."

The blessings of the Aśvīnīdevas took full effect, and Upamanyu hurried to his guru and prostrated at his feet. Dhaumya and the other disciples of his congratulated Upamanyu. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Verses 34-77).

3) Disciple, Veda. Ayodhādhaumya one day said to Veda, his third disciple: "You stay with me for sometime serving me. That will bring you all prosperity in life." Veda agreed, and stayed for a long time in the Aśrama in the service of the guru. Without even the slightest murmur he put up with every discomfort and hardship, be it acute hunger and thirst or extreme cold or heat, and gladly performed all the work and duties the master imposed on him. The guru was absolutely pleased and his blessings resulted in all prosperity and omnipotence for the disciple. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Verses 76-80).

AYODHYĀ. A city in North India which enjoyed great importance and reputation for many years as the capital of the Kings of the solar dynasty. (See Iksvāku dynasty). All the Kings of this dynasty ruled the country from this city as their capital. Vasiṣṭha, the great preceptor of the Iksvāku Rājas, came to Ayodhya during the period of the reign of Kalmāśapāda, who was the thirty-fifth ruler in succession to Iksvāku. A quarrel broke out between Kalmāśapāda and Vasiṣṭha during a hunting expedition, and Vasiṣṭha cursed the King and as a result the latter became a Rākṣasa. After regaining his former form as King, he apologised to Vasiṣṭha and they became friends again. At the request of the King in the interests of his dynasty Vasiṣṭha came to Ayodhya, and the people were greatly elated. A son was born to Vasiṣṭha by Kalmāśapāda’s wife and that son was Aśmaka. After that Vasiṣṭha used to go to Ayodhya frequently and was installed as family preceptor of the Iksvākus. Till the time of Śrī Rāma the city of Ayodhya maintained its pomp and glory, and after that gradually its decay and fall set in. Laudatory references to the city are found in most of the Purāṇas like the Mahābhārata, Brahmān ād Purāṇa etc. (See Kosala).

AYOMUKHĪ. A Rākṣasa woman. She met Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmāṇa on their way to Mataṅgāśrama in search of Sītā, and requested Lakṣmāṇa to marry her. Lakṣmāṇa, as in the case of Śūpanakha cut off her nose and breasts and drove her away. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kānda, Chapter 69).

AYUTANAYI. A king of the Puru Vaisādha; he was the son of Mahārāja Bhauna. Suyajñā, Kāmā and Akrodha were the names respectively of his mother, wife and son. He came to be known as Ayutaniyai because of his having performed 10,000 Puruṣamedhas. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verses 19-20)

AYUTAYU. A king who ruled his state for 1000 years. The Purānas like Bhaṅgavata, the Matsya and the Vāyu refer to him as the son of Śrutāravas.

AYUTAYUS. Father of King Rūtprarna. (Bhaṅgavata, Navama Skandha). For genealogy see Iksvāku dynasty.

A. (wi) This word means Brahmā and also anādara-vākya (a word showing disrespect). In the indeclinable form it means limit, anger and pain.

ĀBHIRAS.

A few details: 1) A low-caste people. People living in the estuary of the rivers of Sindhu and Sarasvati were generally called Ābhīras. In the Sabhā Parva of Mahābhārata we find Nakula defeating these people during his victory march after the great Mahābhārata battle.

2) Once Ābhīras went to Dharmaputra with many gifts. (Slokas 11-13, Chapter 51, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

3) Once it was prophesied by Mārkandeya Rṣi, that low-caste people like Ābhīras and Sakas would become rulers of states in different parts of Bhrātā during Kалиyuga. (Slokas 35-36, Chapter 186, Vana Parva, M.B.).

4) In the Garudavyāha (Battle array named after Garuḍa) which Droṇa created during the Kurukṣetra battle he included Ābhīras also. (Sloka 6, Chapter 20, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

5) Because of the hatred of Śūdras and Ābhīras a sacred lake named Vinasāna disappeared from the river, Sarasvati. (Slokas 1 and 2, Chapter 37, Salya Parva, M.B.).

6) Ābhīras were Āśvātthas formerly. Afraid of Parasurāma they fled and lived in mountain-caves not continuing their hereditary work and thus became Śūdras. (Sloka 16, Chapter 29, Āsvamedhika Parva, M.B.).

7) When Dvārakā was destroyed by floods and all the Yadavas were killed Arjuna went north taking along with him the wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. At that time Ābhīras were among those who attacked and carried away the women. (Slokas 47-63, Chapter 7, Mausalya Parva, M.B.).

ĀCAMANA. First drink water three times accompanied by incantations and then with water wipe your face twice and your eyes, ears, nose, shoulders, breast and head once. This act is called Ācamana.

"Trirāgamedapādā pārvān
Dviḥ pramjñātata mukham
Khāṇī caiva spṛṣedādhīn
Ātmānāṁ śīrā eva ca"

(Manusmṛti, Sloka 60, Chapter 2). Devi Bhaṅgavata in its eleventh Skandha says about Ācamana like this: "Drinking water by your right hand is called ācamana. Curve your palm into the shape of a spoon, hold water in it and drink. There must be enough water in the palm to cover a green-gram seed, not less nor more. If it falls short or exceeds the measure it is considered to be like drinking alcohol. While shaping your palm neither your little finger nor your thumb should touch the other fingers. At the time of ācamana you should support your right hand by your left hand. Otherwise: the water will turn impure."

ĀCĀRAMARYĀDAS. See under Pājāvīdhī.

ĀDAMBARA. One of the five Pārśadas whom Brahmā gave to Skandadeva. Brahmā gave Kunda, Kusuma, Kumuda, Damba and Ādambara.

ĀDĪ. A mighty son of the demon, Andhakāsura. He did penance to please Brahmā and obtained from him a boon to seek vengeance on Śiva who had murdered his father. The boon was that Ādī would die only when he left his present form and took another form. After obtaining the boon Ādī went to Kālāśa and outwitting the sentries entered the abode of Śiva in the shape of a serpent. After that he disguised himself as Pārvatī and went near Śiva. But Śiva knew the trick and killed him. (Śrīśī Khaṇḍa of Padma Purāṇā).

ĀDĪBĀKA. A combat without serving any useful purpose and conducted out of sheer spite between two people to the surprise of others. The fight between Vasīṣṭha and Viśvāmitra was of this kind. (Skandha 6 of Deivi Bhāgavata).

ĀDĪGADĀDHIRĀ. It was with the bones of an asura (demon) named Gada that Mahāviṣṇu made the first gadā (mace). By that mace Viśuṇ killed Hetti and other asuras of that lot and got the name Adichādāhirā (He who first handled the mace). (See under Gadā).

ĀDIKŪRMA. The mountain of Mandara which was used as a churn-stick to churn the great milky ocean, Kṣīrāśiṇi went down the ocean. Then Mahāviṣṇu took the shape of a tortoise to lift it up and this first tortoise was called Ādikūrma. (Śloka 12, Chapter 18, Ādī Parva, M.B.).

ĀDĪPARVA. One of the parvans of the epic Mahābhārata. It is the first parva. (See under Bhārata).

ĀDĪPARVATA. The place of abode of Śiva in the Himalayas. (Śloka 22, Chapter 327, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

ĀDIRĀJA. The son of Kuru who was a king of the Pūrṇa dynasty. (See under Pūru).

ĀDISISIRĀ. One of the disciples of Śākalya. Vyāsa, made the Vedas and taught his son Śākalya a portion of it. Śākalya divided his portion into five different and equal divisions and taught each of his five disciples, Vāṭśyāyana, Maudgalya, Śāli, Ādīśiśira and Gokhaḷi a division. (Skandha 12, Bhāgavata).

ĀDIṢṬI. The disciple who was ordained by his preceptor to observe celibacy for a stipulated number of years.

ĀDIṬYA. The twelve sons born to the sage Kaśyapa of his wife Āditi are known as the twelve Ādityas. They are the following : Dhatā, Mitra, Aryama, Rudra, Varuṇa, Śūrya, Bhaga, Vivasvān, Puṣā, Savitā, Tvāṣṭrā and Viṣṇu. Besides these Āditi had twentyone children including Indra. All of them are called Ādityas meaning children of Āditi. From the thirtythree sons of Āditi were born the thirtythree crores of devatās. Of these the eldest is Indra and the youngest, Vāmanā. (Śloka 36, Chapter 66, Ādī Parva, M.B.). (There is corroboration for this in Śloka 14, Sarga 14, Aranyā Kāṇḍa, Vālimki Rāmāyaṇa).

Sirdar K.M. Panikar in his preface to the book “Rgveda-sāhíhitā” writes thus about Ādityas: “Generally we think of Śūrya (the Sun) when we hear the word Āditya. But there are many different Ādityas in Rgveda, chief of them is Varuṇa. Though Savitā, Puṣā and Mitra are all synonyms of Śūrya in Rgveda they are all separate devas. There is no end to the varieties of Ādityas and their prominence in the Vedas. Summarising we can say thus. The familiar devas like Indra, Agni, Varuṇa and Śūrya are not found in the same form or power as we are taught to believe. Those whom we have lowered down to the posts of the eight sentries of the universe are very prominent devatās in the Vedas. Many Ādityas have merged in Śūrya and winds in the god of Vāyu. Rudra has merged in Śiva. Who will believe that the all-powerful Deva of the Rgveda and the vainglorious Indra who lives in fear of men doing penance are one and the same person?”

ĀDITYAHRĪDAYA. A mantra (incantation) of great power to destroy all enemies. During the combat with Rāmaṇa at one time Rāma fell exhausted in the battlefield. Seeing this the sage Āgastya rushed to him and taught him this mantra. (Sarga 107, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Vālimki Rāmāyaṇa).

ĀDITYAKETU. One of the sons of Bhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhima scena killed him in the great battle of Kurukṣetra. (Śloka 102, Chapter 67, Ādī Parva and Śloka 28, Chapter 88, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

ĀDITYASENA. A very brave King. Stories about this King are found in Kathāsārītāgāra. (Taraṅga 4, Kathāpīṭhalambaka).

ĀDITYATIRĪTHA. An ancient holy place on the banks of the river, Sarasvati. (Śloka 17, Chapter 99, Śālya Parva, M.B.).

ĀDITYAVARNA. A king who always ordered without thinking and repeated later. The book Kathāsārītāgāra tells the story of this King in the fifth taraṅga of its part, Kathāpīṭhalambaka.

ĀDYAKĀTHA. A sage of old. He attended the sacrifice conducted by the King Uparicara. (Śloka 9, Chapter 336, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

ĀGNEYAPURĀṆA. See under Agnipurāṇa,

ĀGNEYĀSTRA. A powerful weapon or missile. One night Arjuna fought against a gandharva, Angaraparṇa, on the banks of the river Ganges. Arjuna then described to him how he came into possession of this missile. This powerful missile was given first to Bhāradvāja by Bhṛhaspati and Bhāradvāja gave it to Āgneyaśī who in turn gave it to Draṇa and the latter gave it to Arjuna, his most favourite disciple. (Ślokas 29-30, Chapter 170, Ādī Parva, M.B.).

ĀGNEYI. Wife of Kuru, son of Manu. Šambhu wife of Dhuṣruva gave birth to two sons, Śiṣṭi and Bhavya. Succhāya wife of Śiṣṭi gave birth to five sinless sons Ripu, Rupūpājya, Vipra, Vṛkāla and Vṛkṣajā. Čaṇḍu was born of Brhati, wife of Ripu, Manu was born to Čaṇḍuṣa of his wife Puṣkarini, daughter of the great Vṛāṇaprajāpati. Puṣkarini hailed from the dynasty of Marutta. To Manu were born of Nadvāla ten sons, Kuru, Puru, Śatadymuna, Tapasvi, Satyavān, Śuci, Aṅgīṣṭoma, Atriāra, Sudāyūna and Abhīmanu. Of these, Kuru got his wife Āgneyi six sons: Āṅga, Sumanas, Khyāti, Kratu, Aṅgiras and Śibi. Vena was born to Āṅga of his wife Sūnithā. (Chapter 13, Āṇīṣam I, Viṣṇu Puṇāṇa).

ĀGNIDHRA. See Agnidhāra.

ĀGNĪVEŚYA (ĀGNĪVEṢA). An ancient sage who received an armour and the sacred mantras associated with it from Bhṛhaspati. He was the Ācārya of Dhanurveda and the revered preceptor of Dronā. (Ślokas 67 and 68, Chapter 94, Dronā Parva, M.B.).

ĀGRĀYAṆA. The fourth son of the Agni, Bhānu. (Śloka 13, Chapter 221, Vana Parva, M.B.).

ĀGREYA. A country conquered by Karna. (Ślokas 19-21, Chapter 254, Vana Parva, M.B.).

ĀHAVANIYA. An agni. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 67).

ĀHUKA. A king of Yadu Vamsa. He was the father of Ugrasena, the father of Kaṁsa. (Some Purāṇas say that Āhuka and Ugrasena were the names of the same person). For genealogy, see “YADU VAMSĀ”. In M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 33, we find that Akṛūra had married Sutānū, the daughter of Āhuka. Āhuka had a hundred sons. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 56). There were constant quarrels between Āhuka and Akṛūra. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 81, Verses 8-11).

ĀHUTI. A Kṣatriya King. Śrī Kṛṣṇa defeated this King in the city called Jārūḍhī. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 30).

ĀJAGARA. An ascetic. Sānti Parva of Mahābhārata in its 179th Chapter states that Prahlāda conversed with this sage.

ĀJAGARA PARVA. A sub-division of the Vana Parva of Mahābhārata. (See under M.B.).

ĀJAGARAṆA. The vrata practised by the sage, Ajagara. (A vrata is a predetermined course of action which is followed with continued persistence). In his own words it is the following: “If I get a grand feast I will accept it but I will go without food for days together if I do not get any food at all. People used to feed me well sometimes, sometimes a little and sometimes not at all. I will eat vegetables and cakes sometimes. I will eat meat and any kind of food. I will lie on soft bed or on bare earth sometimes in big houses if I get the chance. I will wear costly clothes if I get them or I will wear dried leaves and animal skins. If I get food from yāgaśālas I will never refuse it, but I will never go seeking for it.” (Ślokas 19-25, Chapter 179, Sānti Parva, M.B.).

ĀJAGAVĀ. The bow of Māndhātā and Prthu and the Gândiva of Arjuna bear the name Ājagava. (Ślokas 33 and 34, Chapter 126, Vana Parva; Śloka 94, Chapter 145, Dronā Parva, M.B. and Chapter 13, Anuśāna 1 of Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

ĀJAMIDHA. A king born of the family of Ajāmīḍha.

ĀJĀNEYA. A species of good horses. (Śloka 10, Chapter 270, Vana Parva, M.B.).

ĀJYAPA (S). A community of Pitṛs belonging to the dynasty of Pulaha. They are called so because they drink during yāgas the ghee made out of goats milk (Āyam) (Matsya Purāṇa). They live in the land of Kardama Prajāpati. Their daughter Virājā is the wife of Nahaṣu. (Śrī Ṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

ĀKARA. People living in the land named Ākarsa are called Ākarṣas. (Śloka 11, Chapter 34, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

ĀKĀSAJANANI. Holes made on the walls of a Fort. Bullets are sent out from the fort through these holes.

ĀKATHA. Son of Maṅkana. He was a great devotee of Śiva and once when his house was burnt completely the idol of Śiva inside his house was partially destroyed. Worried much over this loss Ākatha was about to give a portion of his body also to the flames when Śiva appeared before him and blessed him. (Pāṭala Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

ĀKROSA. A king of ancient Bhārata. He was king over the land of Mahottaka. Nakula conquered him during his victory march. (Ślokas 5 and 6, Chapter 32, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

ĀKRUTI. A king of ancient Bhārata. This king ruled over the land of Saurāstra. (Śloka 61, Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

ĀKRUTIPUTRA. Ruciparvā, son of Ākrutī. He fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas and was killed by Bhagadatta. (Ślokas 40 to 47, Chapter 27, Dronā Parva, M.B.).

ĀKUTI. Wife of Ruciprajāpati. Brāhmaṇa’s son Śvīyambhuva Manu got of his wife Satarūpā two sons Priyavrata and Uttānapāda and two daughters Prasūti and Akūti. Prasūti was married to Dakṣaprājāpati and Akūti to Ruciprajāpati. Akūti delivered twins named Yayā, a son, and Daksīṇa, a daughter. (Chapter 7, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

ĀLĀJALĀ. See under “YAMAṆIHA”.

ĀLAMBA. An ancient sage. He flourished in Yudhiṣṭhira’s court. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 5).

ĀLAMBĀYANA. A comrade of Indra. (M.B., Anuśāna Parva, Chapter 13, Verse 15).

ĀLVĀR. See the word NAMMALVAR.

ĀMA. See under AVATĀRA.

ĀMARATHA. A place in ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 54, Chapter 9, Bhiṣma Parva, M.B.).

ĀNA I. (A Malayalam word meaning elephant). Bhāgavata relates the story of how Indradyumna became an elephant by the curse of Agastya. (See under Indradyumna).

ĀNA II. (Elephant). Vālmīki Rāmāyana narrates the origin of elephants thus: “Kaśyapa was born to Marici, son of Brāhmaṇa. Kaśyapa married the daughters, Aditi, Ditī, Danu, Kālikā, Tamrā, Krodhavāsa, Manu and Analā, of Dakṣaprājāpati. Of these Krodhavāsa gave birth to ten girls, Mrgī, Mrgamadha, Hari, Bhadratā, Mātāṅgi, Sārdūlī, Svētā, Surabhī, Surāsa, and Kadrā. Elephants were born as the sons of Mātāṅgi. (Sarga 14, Aranyā Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyana). There is a story in the Mahābhārata to explain why the tongue of the elephant is curved inside. Bṛhgu Mahārsi cursed Agni and greatly dejected over this he disappeared from public and hid somewhere. The Devas started searching for him and it was an elephant that showed the devas the hiding place of Agni. Agni then cursed the elephants and said that thereafter all the elephants would have their tongues curved inside. (Ślokas 36, Chapter 85, Anuśāna Parva, M.B.).

The signs of good elephants and the treatment to be accorded to sick ones are detailed in Aghni Purāṇa. “Elephants with long trunks and heavy breathing belong to the top class and they will possess great endurance power. Those who have nails eighteen or twenty in number and who became turbulent during winter belong to a superior class. Those ones whose right tusks are a bit raised, whose cry is stentorian as that of thunder whose cars are very big and whose skins are spotted are the best of the species. Other varieties especially the dwarfish type and she-elephants in the early stage of pregnancy are not good and not fit to be tamed. Elephants which have Varna, Sattva, Bala, Rūpa, Kānti, Sarīraguna and Vega will conquer enemies in a battle; there is no doubt about it. Elephants are an ornament for any battle-array. The victory earned by a King with his elephants is more respected.

For all diseases of an elephant Anuvāsana or Snehavastī is recommended. A bath after anointing it with oil or ghee is good. For skin diseases the ghee may be combined with Mañjal (Turmeric), Maramanjal or gomūtra (cow urine). If it suffers from enlargement of the belly, giving it a bath with sesame oil is good. It can be given with Pācālavaṇas and Vārṇumadya to drink. If there is fainting it must be given rice mixed with Vlālari, Triphala, Cukku, Mulaku and Tippali and water mixed with honey to drink. If there is headache anointing the head with sesame oil and inhalation of the same is good.

For diseases of the foot, treatment with Snehaputras is prescribed. To get motion of the bowels Kalkanṭa Kaśāya (infusion of sugar candy) is good. To those who have shivers should be given the flesh of peacock, Tittiri bird and Lāva bird mixed with Tippali and pepper. For dysentery the tender fruit of Kāvala, skin of Pāccotti, flower of Tātirī should be dried and powdered and be given mixed with sugar along with rice. For Karagrahā (pain inside the trunk) Nasyam of ghee with Intāppā mixed in it should be done. It must be given “Muṭṭaṅga Kaṇcī with tippali, Cukku and Jiraka in it. For Utkāṇṭaka (pain in the car) flesh of pigs should be given. For Galagrahā (pain in the neck) a liniment made of Daśāmūla, Mutirappuli and Kākkappancci in oil should be rubbed at the site of pain and the elephant kept under chains. If there is difficulty in passing urine light liquor containing powdered Aṣṭalavaṇas should be given. For all skin diseases use Vep oil as an ointment and give the infusion of Aṭatalotaka to drink. For worms (inside the stomach) give cow’s urine with powdered Vlālari in it. If the elephant is weakened and weak it should be given milk or meat soup with Cukku, Tippali and grapes well mixed in it. If there is lack of appetite it is to be given Mulagadana (rice boiled along with Cerupayar) to which is added Cukku, Mulaku and Tippali. If it is Gulma it should be given sesame oil boiled with the following: Trikotpakkonna, Cukku, Mulaku Tippali, Kōtvuvelikilaṅgu, Nāgadantiveru, Erikkinveru, Nātkotpakkonna, Milk and Attittippali.

Navara rice with sort of cerupayar can also be given. For swellings on the face, a paste made of tender Kāvala fruits can be rubbed at the site of the swelling. For all sorts of pains in the stomach rice well mixed with the powder made by grinding together Vlālari, Kutakappalayari, Asaloetida, Carala, Mañjal, Maramanjal may be given.

The best food for elephants is the rice of Navara, Vrīhi and cennellu. Yava and wheat are next to the above. Any other food is inferior to these. Yava and sugarcane will give strength to elephants. Dry yava, rice is not good. Milk and meat cooked with carminative ingredients are good for elephants who have gone lean.

If the elephants receive great injuries in a battle the meat of birds like crow, fowl, cuckoo and Hari mixed with honey is good. Fumigation by the burning of chilli, fish, Vlālari, caustic soda, Puttal, Piram and maramanjal mixed together is effective. Dropping honey medicated with tippali tundula, sesame oil, and fruit honey in the eyes is not only good for the eyes but is also inductive of digestion. Make an ointment with the faces of the birds cītaka and Pāravaṇa mixed with the burnt skin of Nāṭpāmara dissolved in light spirit. If this ointment is applied, the elephant would defeat all enemies in a battle. Powder Nilotpala, Muṭṭaṅga and Takara and make an ointment using rice gruel. Applying this ointment in the eye is excellent.

If the nails grow they should be cut at least once a month. Once in a month an oil bath is good for the elephants. Elephant sheds should be spread with cow dung discs and dust. Doing Seka with ghee during autumn and summer is advisable. (Chapter 287, Agni Purāṇa).

1. Vlālari—The grain of Vlal—Viḍaṅga (Babreng)
2. Triphala—A combination of the three fruits:
   a) āmalaki (Emblic Myrobalan)
   b) Vibhūti (Beleric Myrobalan)
   c) Haritaki (Myrobalan)
3. Cukku—Sūṭhi (dry ginger)
4. Mulaku—Raktaśāra (chilli)
5. Tippali—Pippali (long pepper)
6. Kāvala—Vīva (Bengal ginseng)
7. Pāccotti—Lodiṭa (Symphloccus Racemosa)
8. Tātirī—Dhātaki (Grislea Tomentosa)
9. Nasyam—A method of introducing medicine through the nose
10. Intāppā—Sālakī Puspa (Flower of Boswellia Thurjerā)
11. Muṭṭaṅga—Mustā (Gyperus Rotundus) Kaṇcī means rice boiled with water and Muṭṭaṅga Kaṇcī means rice and muṭṭaṅga boiled together.
12. Jiraka—Jiraka (cumin seeds)
13. Daśāmūla—A combination of ten herbs
14. Mutirappuli
15. Kākkappancci—Kākatindu
16. Aṣṭalavaṇa—Eight salts like common salt, rock salt, magnesium sulphate etc.
17. Aṭatalotaka—Aṭarūta (Vasaka)
18. Cerupayār—Mudga (green grain)
19. Gulma
20. Trikotpakkonna—Trīrūṭ (Turbithroot)
21. Kōtvuvelikilaṅgu—Girakā (Plumbago rose)
22. Nāgadantiveru—Root of Nāgadanti (Glaneous leaved Physicnut)
23. Erikkinveru—Root of Arka (Gigantic swallow wort)
24. Nātkotpakkonna—Krśva Trīrūṭ
25. Attittippali—Hastipippali
27. Carala—Saraḷa (long leaved pine)
28. Mañjal—Haridrā (Turmeric)
29. Maramanjal—Dāvī
30. Vrīhi—Cīnāḥ (A kind of paddy)
ANAKA. A person of the Yādava dynasty. (See under YĀDAVA-VAMŚA).

ANAKADUNDUBHI. An epithet of Vasudeva, father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

ANĀND. A forest on the top of the mountain Mahāmeru. It was inhabited by celestial daimons, devas, gandharvas and Maharśis. (Chapter 93, Bhūmi Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

ANĀND (CĀKSUṢA). Son of Maharśi Anamitra. It was he who was born as Cāksuṣa, the sixth Manu. There is a story behind his birth. One day, while his mother was keeping him in her lap and caressing him the baby laughed and questioned "Oh mother why are you caressing me, but look at those two cats. They consider me as their food". After some time one of the cats took the child away and put it in the cradle of the child of King Vikrānta. Vikrānta took the child as his forgranted and reared him. At the time of Upanayana the King asked the boy to prostrate before his mother at which the boy exclaimed "Oh King, I am not your son. Your son is at some other place. By births and rebirths all of us have many mothers and so it is better to be above rebirths". After having said so much Anānda went to the forest and started doing penance. Brahmā appeared before him and blessing him said that he would become the sixth Manu and lead the world to righteousness. By the blessing of Brahmā Anānda was reborn as Cāksuṣamaṇu. (See under Cāksuṣa). (Mārkaṇdeva Purāṇa).

ANĀNDAVARDHANA. A great critic of Sanskrit literature. He lived in the 9th century A.D. He expounded his theory of Dhvanivāda by 120 Kārikās. His own commentary of the Kārikās is the book called Dhvanyālōka. There are four parts for Dhvanyālōka and each part is called an Udyota.

There is a belief among a few that the Kārikās were written by another scholar, Saḥrdaya, and that Anāndavardhana had written only a commentary on it. He was a member of the royal council of Avantivarmā who ruled Kashmir during the period 854-884 A.D. It is believed that he wrote Dhvanyālōka in 850 A.D. Many commentaries have been written of Dhvanyālōka of which the one written by Abhinavagupta is considered to be the best.

ANĀRTTA. Grandson of Vaivasvatamana. He was a king, son of Sārīyāti.

Sixteen sons were born to Vaivasvatamana: Manu, Yama, Yaṃi, Aśvinikumāra, Revanta, Sudyumna, Iksvākū, Nṛga, Sārīyāti, Diśa, Dhṛṣṭa, Kārśa, Nārisyanta, Nābhaga, Pṛṣadha and Kavi. Of these Sārīyāti got two children, Sukanyā and Anārtta. Sukanyā became the wife of Cyavana.

2) Other details. It was this king who built the fortresses at the town of Kusāthali (Dvārakā). Varuṇa submerged in the ocean all the fortresses built by him and the place for some time remained as a forest-land. (Daśama Skanda, Bhāgavata Kalpāṭṭu). It was after that that Śrī Kṛṣṇa made that land beautiful and called it Dvārakā. The country ruled over by Anārtta was called Anarattam. During his regime there lived in his land a very great scholar named Vedaratha. (Umeśānavrata, Śiva Purāṇa) See under Vedaratha.

ANĀRTTA (M). A place in ancient Bhārata. Arjuna conquered this place. (Slokas 4, Chapter 26, Saḥbhā Parva, M.B.).

ANDHRA. The present Andhra Pradeśa. It was famous even from purānic times and it was annexed by Saha-deva by defeating its ruler in a game of dice.

ANĀRASAKALPA. A saṁhitā division of Atharvaveda. The five saṁhitā divisions of Atharvaveda written by Muṇjikēsa are the best. They are: The Nakṣatrā Kalpa dealing with the pūjā rites of the stars; The veda Kalpa dealing with the rites associated with Brahmā, the Rtvik; The Saṁhitā Kalpa, dealing with the use and practice of Mantras; The Āṅgirasa Kalpa dealing with sorcery; and the Śanti Kalpa dealing with matters relating to the welfare and control of animals like horses and elephants. (Chapter 6, Aniśam 3 of Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

ANĀRASI. A very chaste wife of a Brahmin. By the curse of Śakti, son of Vasiṣṭha Kalmāsapādā, a king of the Iksvākū dynasty became a demon. That demon killed and devoured the husband of Anārasi. Enraged at this the Brahmin lady cursed Kalmāsapādā saying that if he touched his wife thereafter he would die. That was why Vasiṣṭha had beget a son for Kalmāsapādā of his wife. (Slokas 16-22, Chapter 181, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ANĀHRKĀ. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra who were Brahmanavādins. (Slokas 54, Chapter 4, Anušāsana Parva, M.B.).

ĀNJALI. A sage who was a classmate of Saumaka. (Skanda 12, Bhāgavata).

ĀNJANA KULA. A division of elephants (in the army). (Slokas 17 and 18, Chapter 112, Dṛṇa Parva, M.B.).

ANUŚĀSANIKA PARVA. One of the Parvans of the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata).

ĀPA. One of the Āṣṭavas. The Āṣṭavas are Āpa, Dhruva, Soma, Dharmā, Anila, Agni, Pratyūṣa and Prabhā. The sons of Āpa are Vaiṣāṇa, Śrama, Śanta and Śvāni. (See under Āṣṭavas). (Chapter 15, Aniśam 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

APAGĀ. A sacred river. It is said that if one gives food to one brahmin on the banks of this river it will be equivalent to giving food to a crore of brahmins elsewhere. (Slokas 68, Chapter 83, Vana Parva, M.B.).

31. Cennellu—Śāli (Red rice)
32. Yava—yava (Barley)
33. Puttal
34. Pīram
35. Taṇḍula—same as Vilā
37. Nīloṭpalā—Nilapadma (Blue water-lily)
38. Taķara—Taķara
APASTamba. An ancient sage. He once consoled King Dyumaisena. (Sloka 18, Chapter 298, Vana Parva, M.B.). 1) How he got his name. Once a brahmin did not get a suitable man to officiate as priest for a śraḍḍha ceremony. He then prayed to his ancestors, Viśvedvas and Mahāviṣṇu for help and then Āpastamba appeared before him. The brahmin gave him food to his heart's content and asked him how he felt. To the surprise of the brahmin Āpastamba replied, he wanted some more and thus made the Śraddha ineffective. The brahmin got angry and cursed him by sprinkling on his face water taken in his palm. But before the water-particles reached his face Āpastamba ordered the water-drops to remain still. Water stopped stiff and still midway by the power of the sage. Because water (Āpa) became stiff (Śtimba) the āśra was named Āpastamba. (Brahma Purāṇa). 2) How Āpastamba tirtha came into existence. Once he met Agastya Muni and asked him who was superior among the gods Brahma, Viṣṇu and Śiva. Agastya declared that Śiva stood supreme of the lot and gave him advice as to how to please Śiva. Following his instructions Āpastamba did penance on the banks of the river Gauṭamī and Śiva appeared before him, blessed him, and made that place a holy one. Śiva declared that those who, bathed at that place would obtain 'Divyāśrāma' (Divine knowledge enabling one to know the past, present and future). From then onwards that place was known as Āpastamba tirtha. 3) Other details. Āpastamba had a very chaste and humble wife named Aśaṣūtrā. Their son was Gārki, 'Gṛhyasūtrasanigraha' containing a prayer and two mantras is a contribution to the holy science by Āpastamba. Many Hindus follow it even now. He had stated that in the number of great sages was because of the fact that people were not practising the control of the senses as before.

ĀPADDHARMA PARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata). ĀPAVAN I. Another name of sage Vasiṣṭha. (Sloka 5, Chapter 99, Ādi Parva, M.B.). ĀPAVAN II. An ancient sage. Kārttavīryājūna once burnt the āśrama of this rishi and he cursed Agni and Kārttavīryājuna. (Slokas 42 and 43, Chapter 49, Sānti Parva, M.B.). ĀFODADHAUMYA. (See Ayodhadhaumya). ĀPTA. A well-known serpent of the Kaśyapa dynasty. (Sloka 8, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva, M.B.). ĀPRĀNA. A well-known serpent of the Kaśyapa dynasty. (Sloka 6, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva). ĀR. The significance of the number six among the ancients, is given below. (In Malayālam Ār means six). 1) Six factors which reduce the span of life. Eating dry meat, Drinking curd at night, Sleeping at dawn, Drinking impure water, Exposure to sun's heat in the morning. Inhaling fumes from dead body. 2) Six divine qualities. Omnicience, Omniporesize, Omnipotence, Sarvakāraṇātva (being the cause of everything); Sarvānityatva (immortality) and Sarveśvaratva (having domination over everything). 3) Six noblest qualities. Truth, Wisdom, Mercy, Justice, fortitude in grief, control of anger. 4) Six Rṣi Dharmas (Duties of sages). Brahmacarya, Absolute truth, Japa, Jñāna (wisdom), Niyama, Sense of Justice. 5) Six qualities of noble wives. A minister in business, a servant-maid in action, the goddess Lakṣmi in appearance, the Earth in patience, a mother in love and a prostitute in bed. 6) Six qualities of a bad wife. Habit of dispute, stealing of money, showing favour to strangers, scandal-mongering, taking food earlier than the husband, spending most of the time in other houses. 7) Six Vedāgas. Śīkṣā, Kalpa, Vyākaraṇa, Nirukta, Jyotiṣa, Chandas. ĀRĀLIKĀ. A mahout who could control elephants that had gone mad temporarily. (Sloka 9, Chapter 2, Vīrāṭa Parva, M.B.). ĀRĀNEYAPARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata). ĀRCOKA. A mountain in front of the forest Saindhava inhabited by Manisipuruṣās. (Sloka 16, Chapter 125, Vana Parva, M.B.). ĀRJAVA. Son of Subala and brother of Śakuni. He was killed by Irāvān son of Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.). ĀROCAKA(M). A country of ancient Bhārata. The people of this place are called Ārocakas. (Sloka 7, Chapter 51, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.). ĀRṢA(M). A form of marriage. Brāhma is the form of marriage in which the bride is given to a man of good ancestry and fine character. Marriage by giving the bride after receiving a pair of cows from the bridegroom is called Ārṣa. Prājāpatya is the form of marriage in which the bride is given to the man who asks for her. When the bride is given with dowry, the marriage is known as Āṣura. Marriage with the mutual love and consent is Gāndharva. Capturing the bride after a fight and marrying her by force is Rākṣasa. Marriage after deceiving the bride is called Paśiṣa. These are the seven types of marriage. According to the author of the Śruti another form of marriage known as DAIWA is also mentioned. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 154). ĀRŚĪṢENA. A Maharṣi. In the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 159 there is a reference to the Pāṇḍavas visiting this sage during their life in the forest. Ārṣīṣena's āśrama was midway between Badaryāśrama and Kubera's capital. Power of Tapas. In Kṛta yuga this sage did rigorous tapas in Pṛthūdakārthra. Owing to the rigour of the tapas he obtained all the chief vedas. He gave three boons to that sacred tirtha:— 1. Those who bathe in this tirtha will get the benefit of Aśvamedha yāga. 2. There will be no fear of snakes in this tirtha. 3. A slight effort made here, will be rewarded with greater results. After giving these three boons to the river Sarasvatī which is Pṛthūdakārthra the sage attained Brahmānhood and entered Devaloka. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 40, Verses 3-9). ĀRṬṬĀYANI. Salya, son of Rāya. He was noted for his great honesty and love of truth. (Sloka 56, Chapter 32, Salya Parva, M.B.). ĀRṬIMĀN. A mantra which eliminates all kinds of fear. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 50, Verses 23-26). ĀRUṆI I. A disciple of the sage Ayodhadhaumya. (For details see under Ayodhadhaumya).
ARUNI II. A cobra born in the family of the serpent, Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This cobra fell dead at the Sarasvatī of Janamejaya. (Slokā 19, Chapter 57, Adi Parva, M.B.).

ARUNI III. A son born to Kaśyapa of his wife Vīnaṭā. (Slokā 40, Chapter 63, Adi Parva, M.B.).

ARUNI IV. A soldier of the Kaurava army. He fought against Arjuna along with Sakuni. (Slokā 122, Chapter 156, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

ARUNI V. One of the one hundred and eight Upāṇiṣads.

ARUSI. A daughter of Manu. Cyavana Mahārsi married her. They got a son named Arvura. The child was taken from the thigh of Arusi. Rekha was the son of this Arvura. Rekha was the father of Jamadagni, father of Parasurāma. Even from childhood Arvura was a bold, bright and good boy. (Slokas 47 and 48, Chapter 66, Adi Parva, M.B.).

ARYAS. The Rgveda gives us most of the information regarding the Āryas who came to the north of India during the times of the Vedas through the passes on that north-western side of Bhārata. Sīdar K.M. Panikar writing in his preface to the ‘Rgvedadarśīhita’ by Poet Vallathol summarizes the information available in the Rgveda about Āryan culture and says: “When the Āryans first entered India they were rich in cattle. They used to breed goats, dogs, donkeys, and horses. The elephant was unknown to them. In the Vedas the vehicle of Indra is a horse and not an elephant. When hunting Indra they shout ‘come, come on your horse-back’. The Veda does not say anything about how Indra got the elephant, Airāvata, as his vehicle. Sing to the glory of Indra against whom in his chariot driven by two horses no enemy would dare to face.

The Rgveda gives great importance to agriculture. Areas under cultivation were called Urvāra and ‘Kṣetra’. Fields were ploughed by attaching six, eight and even twelve bullocks to the plough. Water was taken from hradas and Kulyakas (ponds and tanks) for the purpose of irrigation. Agriculture was a very familiar art to them. They used to cultivate all sorts of grains and grains including yava. They conducted trade by the exchange of goods generally. There is a reference in one place of the use of a coin ‘Nīṣka’.

The Āryas were clever in the art of leather work, woodwork and metallurgy. They were well versed in medicine also. In a sūkta of the ninth maṇḍala it is stated that the father of a rṣi was a medical practitioner. There are references to many industries also. Weaving was a very important industry at that time. Cotton cloth and woollen blankets were made by them on a large scale. Iron was used by them with great skill. The manufacture of armours and the descriptions about them in Rgveda are ample evidence of the proficiency of the Āryas in ironmongery and blacksmithy. Sea voyage was not familiar to them. References to traders cruising in boats on the Sindhu river do not give much importance to the cruising. In food rice and ghee were important. Meat was also relished. Rṣis wore animal skins but others wore dhotis and shawls.

During the Rgvedic times their social structure was divided into four stages: Grāma was a colony of families and was the nucleus of the society. A number of grams formed into a place called Viśaya. A number of Viṣayas became what was known as ‘Janam’. The importance of Janas can be understood by the statements made about Pañcajananas and the existence of special Janas like Yādava Jana and Bhārata Jana. There is no wonder why the Āryas who had to live among enemies accepted kingship. The Rgveda narrates the difficulties people would have to encounter if they were left to fight their enemies without a proper leader and so advocates Kingship and gives it an exalted position in their social structure. Sūkta 22, Anuvāka 12 of Mandala 10 describes the coronation of a King thus: “I do hereby crown you as King. Come to our midst. Rule us with courage and an unswerving mind. Let all your subjects love you. Let thy kingdom remain with you for ever”. The next mantra is also of the same idea. A King is above punishment. The veda speaks about many famous kings of which the following are worth mentioning. Divodāsa, Sud’s, Ambarśa, Nahuṣa and Purūravas.

The chief priest was always the political advisor also. Viśvāmitra and Vasiṣṭha were two great priests of the Bharata dynasty. There were other priests also. Mention is there about a Rājasabhā though nothing is said about their powers or functions. It can be surmised that the Sabhā was constituted of only men of character and learning.

It is interesting to note the type of domestic life in vogue then. A father had the right, to sell his children, To cite an example is the story of Sunaśēpha who was made into a cow and sold to Viśvāmitra who looked after him well. The father had the right to make his children lose all rights over his properties. Viśvāmitra sent out from his family fifty sons who refused to obey him. Dowry was current then. Sūkta 11, Anuvāka 3, Maṇḍalam 10 ordains that the bride should go to the house of her husband after the marriage. Polygamy was not objected to. There is a mantra to harass the co-wife and its purpose is to make the husband more attached to her who hates the co-wife. The originator of this mantra was Indrāṇi, the queen of Indra. Indra had many wives. Marriage was considered as a necessary duty. Widow marriage was allowed.

The Rgveda gives the picture of a society of people who were always at war with each other. “We are surrounded by mighty enemies. Help us”. This is the slogan that rings out from the Rgveda.

The Rgveda is a history of the Āryas. The march from Kubhāṭa (Kubul) to the banks of Yamunā is depicted there. It was at Kubhāṭa that the mantras were first made. When they reach the banks of the Gaṅgā the period of Rgveda ends. The crossing of each of the five rivers of Pañcapanada is treated as a big event by the rṣis. When they saw the huge and deep river, Sindhu, they were amazed. The wonder is reflected in a lovely mantra. It was after crossing Sindhu that they had to oppose the ‘Dasyus’. The Rgveda itself records that the Dasyus were more cultured than the Āryas. Saṁbara, a Dasyu King, was the ruler of a hundred cities. Their fortresses were strong. They have been described in the Rgveda as Śvamayi, Āyasi and Satabhujā.

The chief opponents of the Āryas were a tribe of people called Pañjis. From the Nirukta of Yāṣka we are given to understand that the Pañjis were mainly engaged in trade. The Rgveda names many Dasyu kings of which the following few were more daring and brave and the Āryas acknowledged their superior strength and courage: Dhuni, Camuri, Vipru, Varci and Saṁbara. Among the several divisions of the Dasyus, the Śimyus, Kīkāṭas, Sigrus and Yaśus ranked foremost in power. They are described as having black colour and flat noses and speaking a language different from that of the Āryas. We may surmise from these facts that they belonged to the Drāvida class of people. They never conducted yāga nor did they worship gods like Indra. They were idol worshippers for they have been described as Śiśapānas. Later the Āryas learnt from the Dasyus the worship of Siva, Devi and Liṅga.

Conquering these daring and cultured enemies the Āryas reached the banks of the Yamunā to find to their pleasant surprise a radical change in themselves. The Bharatas settled themselves in the land between the Yamunā and Gaṅgā and remained friendly with the Dasyus living to the east of Gaṅgā. The Āryas who settled down in Pañcañada were strong and to prevent them from coming and conquering them Bharata tried to keep them remain on the other side of Śutudri (Sutlej). This led to a war called Dāśarāja. This war is to be considered as one of the most important of wars in the world. Those who opposed Sudās were Āryas though among the supporters of Sudās were also Āryas. It was the people under Sud is who came out victorious in that war and put a stop to further conquests by the Āryas. From thereafter the Āryas joined hands with the aborigines and laid the foundation for the great Hindu civilization. Thereafter the Rgveda states about prayers for help to combat ‘our enemies of Āryas and Dasyus’. The gods who were recognised later were those who were not found in the vedas of the Āryas. The worship of Mahāyogi and Devi found in Mohenjodaro is an evidence of this change.

ĀRYY. One of the seven mothers who were present at the birth of Subrahmanya. (Śloka 13, Chapter 228, Vana Parva, M.B.)

ĀRYAKA. A famous serpent. (Śloka 7, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva, M.B.) Āryaka is associated with Bhūmasena in the following story. Once Duryodhana gave snake poison in his food to Bhūmasena. Unaware Bhūma took his food as usual and went to bathe in the river. After some time Bhūma became unconscious due to the effect of the poison and fell flat in the river. Immediately Duryodhana bound him by ropes and put him in more deep waters. Bhūma reaching the bottom was bitten by all the snakes there. This fortunately served as an antidote and the poison in Bhūma’s body was neutralized and Bhūma became his old self again and killed all the serpents. Those serpents who escaped went and brought their chief, Vāsuki. At that time it was Āryaka who advised Vāsuki to give him ‘rasāpāna’. (Ślokas 64-68, Chapter 127, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ĀRYAKU. Another name for Durgādevī. (Chapter 12, Agni Purāṇa).

ĀRYAVARTA. Another name for Bhārata. There is also a place of that name. According to Smṛti the land lying between the Himalayas and the Vindhayas is called Āryavarta. (Śloka 15, Chapter 325, Sānti Parva, M.B.).

ĀRYAVARTA. A king of the dynasty of Viśvakarmā.

Genalogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu are Brahmā, Dharma, Prabhāsa, Viśvakarmā, Priyavrata, Agnīdhra, Nabhi, Rṣyabha and Āryavarta. Of these Rṣyabha got of his wife Jāṇantī twenty sons: Bharata, Kuśīvarta, Ilīvarta, Brahmāvarta, Āryavarta Mālaya, Ketu, Bhūdrasena, Indrāspṛk, Vidrībha, Kīkata, Kavi, Hari, Antarikṣa, Prabuddha, Pippalāyana, Āvirhotra, Drāminiḍa, Camasa and Karabhājana. Of these Bharata ruled over this land and gave it the name Bhārata. Brothers of Bharata ruled different parts of this land. Drāminiḍa’s land became known later as Dravida (Dakṣinābhārata).

AŚDHA I. A Kṣatriya King. He was the incarnation of a Rākṣasa called Krodhavās. Kaśyapa was the son of Marici, Brahmā’s son. Kaśyapa married Krodhavās, daughter of Dakṣa. The Rākṣasa group called Krodhavās were the children of Krodhavās. Many Kṣatriya kings trace their descent from this group of Rākṣasas. The names of such Kṣatriya Kings are given below: Madraka, Karpaveṣṭha, Siddhārtha, Kītarāddhā, Subāhu, Bālīhika, Kratha, Vīcītra, Suratha, Giravāsas, Kaurvākta, Dantavakta, Durjaya, Rukmi, Janamejaya, Asadhā, Vāyuvega, Bhūritejas, Ekalavya, Sumitra, Gong♠iska, Vātālīna, and Ksemadhurti. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 6, Verses 59-64).

AŚDHA II. Siva. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 121).

AŚDHAHOTI. See under Pañcatantra.

AŚDHA. Name of a month. By feasting in this month, one will have many sons and much wealth. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 26).

AŚDHA. Name of a star. After observing a fast on the day of this star, if curd is given to a Brahmin of noble birth, one can take rebirth in a family having many cows. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 61, Verses 23-26).

AŚDHAKĀ. A mahout in the Udayana story. In Kāthāśārīṛtāsāgara, Kāthāmukhalambaka, 5th Saraṅga, we find a reference to an elephant called Bhadravatī and a mahout named Aśdhaṅkā in the palace of the heroine, Vīsavadattā.

AŚAMGA. See under ANASA.

AŚAMGAPŁAYOGI. A King, who was generous by nature. In the Rgveda, there is a reference to this King who once lost his masculinity and was transformed into a woman but was restored to manhood by a Muni named Medhīyāthī.

ĀSANA. Posture in Yoga. Asanas. There are different types of āsanas. The chief of them are given below:

1) Bhujāṅgāsana. Lying flat, face downwards on a sheet with hands placed close to the body on either side. After relaxing all the muscles of the body, concentrate the mind on health. Keeping the feet close together and pressing the knees against the ground, raise the soles upwards to the sky. Place both palms, pressing against the ground, touching the shoulders on both sides. Then raise the head and bend the neck backwards as far as possible. At this time, the trunk and legs should be in close contact with the ground. Gradually raise the chest, supported by the hands on the ground. Bring the head down in the same way as it was raised and restore the body to its former position. This āsana strengthens the backbone.

2) Sūlabbhāsana. Lie flat on the sheet, face downwards. Keep the legs close together and raise the feet up with the heels touching each other. Place the hands close to the body on either side and close the fists upwards. Place the fists and shoulders close to the ground and make the whole body stiff after inhaling the breath. Then try to raise the legs. Support the weight of the body with the breast and hands. This is possible by pressing the fists, firmly against the ground. Until the āsana is completed, do not send out the breath. Keep the legs straight and stiff. The lower abdomen and legs may be raised slightly. This makes the āsana complete. On feeling suffocation, the legs must be brought down slowly.

Besides these, there are many other āsanas like Dhanur-āsana, Paścimātānāsana, Halāsana, Mayūrāsana, Sarvāngāsana, Matsyāsana, Sīrṣāsana, Ardhamatsyendrāsana, Pādhahastāsana, Trikoṇāsana, Udāyāsana, Nauli, Viparitkaraṇa, Yogamudrā, Śavāsana, etc. (See under Yoga).

ĀŚAVAHA I. A son of Kaśyapa and Aditi. From Viṣṇu Brahmā, from BRAHMĀ Marici and from Marici Kaśyapa were born. Kaśyapa married Aditi, daughter of Dakṣa. Aditi gave birth to ten sons: Brāhma, Cakṣurātma, Vibhavasu, Rcika, Savitā, Arka, Bhānu, Aśāvala, Ravi and Yīvasvān. Vaivasvata Manu was the son of Vivasvān. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter I, Verse 42).

ĀŚAVAHA II. A prince of the Viṣṇu dynasty. He was present at the Svayambhūva of Draupadī. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 19).

ĀŚRAVYA. Āśramites (Inmates of an Āśrama) have to pass through four stages. The four stages of Brahmācārya. Gārhaṣṭha, Vānaprastha, and Sannyāsa are known as the four Āśramas. Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part III, Chapter 9 describes each of the Āśramas as follows:

1. Brahmacārya. “After Upāpanayanam a boy should maintain a Brahmācāri’s vrata, engage himself in the study of the Vedas, suppress his indriyas (the five senses) and live in the house of the preceptor. Living there with proper observance of śauca, customs and vrata he should serve and attend on the Guru. The study of Vedas should be with proper observance of Vratas and steady attention. A Brahmācāri should worship with concentration, the Sun and Agni at the time of the two sandhyās (dawn and dusk) and after that he should do obeisance to the Guru. When the Guru stands, he should also be standing. When the guru walks, he should walk behind him and when he sits, he should sit in a lower position. The Śiṣya (disciple-pupil) should not do anything against the guru. When the guru himself asks, the Śiṣya should sit in front of him and recite Vedas without attending to anything else. After that, with his permission he may eat food which has been got by begging. The Śiṣya may take his bath in the water only after the Ācārya (guru) has taken his bath in it. Everyday the Camata, durbha, water and flowers which the guru needs, must be brought and supplied (by the Śiṣya).

2. Gārhaṣṭha. After the study of the Vedas the intelligent Śiṣya gives Gurudaksina (Payment to the preceptor) and with the consent of the Guru, enters into Gṛhaḥśārama. Then he is to marry and by earning money from a suitable occupation, should fulfil all obligations of a Gṛhaḥ according to his capacity. The Gṛhaḥ who worships the Pīṭhas with Pindādhi (offerings of rice balls), Devas with Yāgas (sacrifices), Rjīs with Śvādhyāya (self discipline), Prajāpatis with begeting of children, spirits with ball (offering of food etc.) and the whole world with love, attains the holy world by his own virtuous deeds. Gṛhaḥśārama is the only source of support for sannyāsīs and brahmācāris who beg their food. Therefore feeding them is an act of nobility. Brāhmaṇas travel from country to country to study Vedas, for pilgrimage and for seeing the places. The Gṛhaḥ is the only refuge and support of those who are homeless, who do not carry their food with them and those who spend the night wherever they reach. If such people come to his house, the Gṛhaḥ should welcome them with kind and loving words, and give them bed, seat and food. The guest who leaves a house disappointed, is really departing after transferring his own sins to that householder and taking away all the virtuous deeds of the householder. It is not proper for the Gṛhaḥ to treat a guest with disrespect, to behave rudely or treacherously towards him, to regret what has been given to the guest, or to obstruct or rebuke him. The Gṛhaḥ who performs the supreme duty of Gṛhaḥśārama in this way properly, is liberated from all secular bonds and reaches the noblest worlds.

3. Vānaprastha. After having finished all his duties in this way, to his satisfaction, the Gṛhaḥ, with the commencement of old age, should go to the forest, either after entrusting his wife to his sons or taking her also with him. There, he should use leaves, roots and fruits for his food, grow hair and beard, sleep on the bare ground, lead the life of a tāpasa and receive and honour all classes of guests. His clothes, sheets and blankets should be of deer-skin and darbha grass. The rule is that he should bathe three times a day. Worship of gods, performing homas, hospitality to all guests, mendicancy—all these are the laudable features of Vānaprastha. Any oil that is available in the forest is to be used for his oil bath. Enduring heat and cold, performing tapas, are also his duties. The Muni who observes this rule in Vānaprastha with due austerity, burns up all his evils as with fire and attains the eternal worlds.

4. Sannyāsa. The fourth Āśrama is that of the Sannyāsa. Before entering upon the fourth Āśrama one has to renounce the love of travel, wealth and wife and also give up all spirit of rivalry. One who embraces sannyāsa should abandon completely the efforts for the three Puruṣārthas of Dharma, Artha and Kāma, treat friends and foes alike and continue to love all living beings. Not even a single creature should be offended by thought, word or deed. Conquering all passions, the Sannyāsa should renounce all bonds and attachments. He should not stay in a village more than one night and in a town more than five nights. Even that should be in such a way that no one feels any love or hatred towards him. For sustaining life, he should go about begging food from the houses of the people of the three castes—Brahmins, Kṣatriyas and Vaiṣṇyas. It should be after all people have taken their food and put out the cooking fire. The Sannyāsī should cast away all vices like Kāma, Krodha, Garva, Lobha, and Moha and should not have any thought of self in anything. The Muni who goes about giving shelter to all creatures will not have to fear any creature. The Brāhmaṇa who follows the Sannyāsārama as described above with a pure heart and without difficulty will shine like fire without fuel and attain Brahmaloka in peace.

ĀŚRAMAVĀSA PARVA. One of the Parvas in the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata).

ĀŚRAMAVĀSIKA PARVA. One of the Parvas in the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata).

ĀŚRAVYA. A muni (sage) in Indra’s assembly. (M.B., Sābhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 18).
ASTIKA

ASTIKA. The son of the Maharśi Jarakāru and his wife, also named Jarakāru. He stopped King Janamejaya's Sarpasatra and saved the nāgas.

1) Birth. There is a story about Āstika's birth in the Devī Bhāgavata. Long ago the people of the world were so much troubled by the serpents, that they sought protection from Kaśyapa Prajāpati. To find a remedy for this, Kaśyapa discussed the matter with Brahmā. To put an end to the troubles from the serpents, Brahmā suggested that a number of mantras and a deity as the basis of those mantras should be created. Accordingly Kaśyapa created many mantras and Manasa Devī as the basic deity of those mantras. She is named "Manasa-devī" because Kaśyapa created her by his mental power. Manasa-devi has eleven other names also, namely Jarakāru, Jagatgauri, Siddhayogini, Vaiśnavi, Nāgabhagini, Śaivi, Nāgēsvari, Jarakārupriyā, Āstikamātā, Viśajarā and Mahājñanjayatā.

Manasa-devī (Jarakāru) when quite young, went to Kailāsa for doing tapas (penance). There she did tapas to Siva for a thousand years. At last Siva appeared and blessed her with divine wisdom. She returned with great learning and devotion. (Devī Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

At that time, a Muni (sage) named Jarakāru, when travelling through the forest happened to see his pitṛs (souls of forefathers) hanging over a precipice at the end of a blade of grass. They were hanging precariously at the end of a reed grass, head downwards, about to fall into the abyss. Jarakāru enquired why they were lying in that condition. They explained that they were in that plight because their descendant Jarakāru had no children. As he is a bachelor there is no hope either, of his having any issue. Since he has no children, we will not get to heaven, they added. To save the Pitṛs from their predicament, Jarakāru decided to marry. But he wished to marry a woman who had the same name as his. Once Vāsuki met Jarakāru and told him that he had a sister named Jarakāru and that he would be very happy if Jarakāru married her. Jarakāru accepted the offer readily and married Jarakāru.

After their marriage, while they were living together in a place called Puṣṭara tirtha, an unexpected event happened which interrupted the happy course of their life. One evening, the husband was sleeping with his head in the wife's lap, under a tree. The sun was about to set. As the Maharśi did not wake up before sunset, the wife became anxious. It is believed that he who does not wake up before sunrise and he who does not offer prayers at dusk will be guilty of the sin of Brahmātā (killing a Brahmin). Nor was it proper to wake him up from a sound sleep. But in the end, she did wake him up. The husband sprang up in great fury. He denounced the wife and there. Weeping bitterly, she begged for his forgiveness. At last Jarakāru relented and told her: "You will have a very noble, brilliant, renowned, virtuous, scholarly and devout son who will be a devotee of Viṣṇu and a preserver of the family".

After this Manasa-devī set out to Kailāsa. When she reached there Parama-Siva and Paśvati comforted her. Manasa-devī was pregnant. The precepts and spiritual advice given by Jarakāru, Parama-Siva and Paśvati were heard by the child in the womb and so even before his birth he became a Jānī and a yogī. In due course Manasa-devī gave birth to a son who was a part of Nārāyana (Viṣṇu). Since he was the son of Manasa-devī who had deep devotion to the Guru and to the Gods, the boy was named Āstika.

The Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, gives another reason for giving this name to the boy. When the sage Jarakāru abandoned his wife, he had blessed her saying that the child in her womb would be a brilliant and devoted son. That is why this boy came to be called Āstika.

2) Boyhood Āstika was taught Veda, Vedāṅgas etc. by Parama-Siva himself. After receiving the blessings of Parama-Siva, Āstika went to Puṣṭara tirtha and did tapas to Viṣṇu for many years. Having received Viṣṇu's blessings also, he returned to Kailāsa. After living there happily with his mother for some time, one day they started to the Aśrama of Kaśyapa Prajāpati, the father of Manasa-devī. Kaśyapa was very much pleased to see his noble-hearted daughter and her brilliant son. To enhance the fame and accomplishments of the boy Kaśyapa gave a sumptuous feast to ten crores of Brahmins. (Devī Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

Vāsuki was Manasa-devī's brother. Āstika grew up there under the care of Vāsuki. It was Cāyana Muni who taught Śāṅgavedas to Āstika, at this time. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 18).

3) Āstika at the Sarpasatra. Once King Parīkṣit, the son of Abhimanyu was travelling through the forest for hunting animals. He picked up a dead snake with the tip of his bow and put it on the shoulder of a sage named "Śāṃkīa". Śāṃkīa's son, Śrīgī came to know of this. In his anger, Śrīgī pronounced a curse that King Parīkṣit should die within seven days by the bite of Taksaka. When Parīkṣit heard of this, he had a palace built on a single pillar in the middle of the ocean, quite inaccessible to Taksaka and took shelter there. The most famous physicians and wizards were engaged to ward off the approach of Taksaka to that place. Six days passed like this. On the seventh day, determined to make a final attempt, Taksaka disguised himself as an old Brahman and set out to the King's place of shelter. On his way he met Dhanvantari who was proceeding to Parīkṣit to protect him. They became friends and as a result of it, Dhanvantari returned after receiving a large number of rare precious stones given to him by Taksaka. Assuming the form of a small worm, Taksaka secretly entered into a fruit which was to be presented to the King. As soon as the King took that fruit in his hand, Taksaka took his own shape and size and bit the King who died immediately. Janamejaya was the son of this King Parīkṣit.

Janamejaya performed all the obsequies of his father. After that, in a spirit of revenge, with the object of annihilating the whole race of serpents, he summoned Brahmaṇas to conduct a sarpa satra (snake sacrifice). In the sacrificial fire specially prepared at that yāga, many serpents were being burnt up. It seemed that the whole race of serpents would shortly be wiped out. But Taksaka alone was not to be seen. The officiating priests were beginning to get angry. Impatient cries of Where is Taksaka rent the air. The frightened Taksaka fled for life to the palace of his friend Indra and there lay down, curling round Indra's cot. When the priests understood this they decided to use their charms and mantras which would bring Indra, his bed, cot and all, along with Taksaka to the sacrificial fire.
At this stage, all the gods rushed to Manasadevi and fell at her feet and begged her to save the situation. The kindhearted Devi called her son Aṣṭika and advised him to persuade Janamejaya to stop the sarparasatras. Aṣṭika went to Janamejaya and requested him to give him the lives of Taksaka and Indra as a gift. Janamejaya, after consulting the munis and priests and at their advice, agreed to do so. In this way, the Sarparasatras was stopped and the remaining serpents escaped with their lives. (Devi Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha, M.B., Ādi Parva).

AṢṬIKA PARVĀ. One of the Parvas in the Mahābhārata. See Mahābhārata.

ĀSURĀYANA. A form of marriage. (See VIVĀHA).

ĀSURĀYANA. A son of Vīśvāmitra. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 56).

ĀSURI. An ancient Mahārṣi. He was the acārya of Kapila Sāṁkhya-dārśana and the guru of the mahārṣi Pañcaśikha. Once Āsuri had a full vision of God. He gave many precepts on spiritual matters to other Mahārṣis. The Bhāgavata says that Āsuri received his spiritual enlightenment from his wife, Kapilā. (M.B., Śaṅti Parva, Chapter 218, Verses 10-14).

ĀŚVALĀYANA I. A son of Vīśvāmitra. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 54).

ĀŚVALĀYANA II. An Acārya. He was a disciple of Saunaka. Āśvalāyana composed three famous works: Āśvalāyana Gṛhya-sūtra, Āśvalāyana Śrautasūtra and Āśvalāyana Śūti.

ĀTAKA. A serpent born of the Kaurava dynasty. This serpent was burnt at the Sarparasatras of Janamejaya. (Śloka 12, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

ĀṬAṆIṆUṆIṆ. An ancient city in India. Sahadeva conquered this city. (M.B., Śaṅhi Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 72).

ĀṬHARVĀṆA. A sage. When Arjuna dreamed of going to Śiva accompanied by Kṛṣṇa they visited in the dream the Āṭrama of this sage also.

ĀṬMADĒVĀ. See under Gokarna.

ĀṬREYA. A sage. This sage had acquired the power to go from one planet to another. Once this rṣi went to devaloka as the guest of Indra and there lie drank Amṛta (the celestial elixir) and enjoyed the dances of the celestial maidens A desire to have a similar heaven of his own budded in his mind and he approached Vīśvakarṇā who gave him a new heaven of his own. But before long the demons took over this heaven from him. Though Vīśvakarṇā took back the same from the demons, Āṭreya did not go back but returned to his old āśrama on the banks of Gomati and doing penance there for a long time attained salvation (Brahma Purāṇa).

More details. Āṭreya was also present among the ascetics who assembled at the sarparasatras of Janamejaya. (Śloka 8, Chapter 55, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

2) Āṭreya was a disciple of Vāmadeva. (Śloka 6, Chapter 192, Vana Parva, M.B.).

3) This rṣi taught his discipes about Nṛguṇapābrahma. (Śloka 7, Chapter 137, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

ĀṬREYA(M). A place of ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 68, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

ĀṬREYI. I. Wife of King Ur. Svaṁyambhuva Manu got of his wife Satārūpā two sons, Priyavratra and Uttānapāda. Uttānapāda got a son name Uttama of Suruci and one of name Dhruva of Suniṭi. Dhruva got three sons, Śiṣṭi, Bhava and Śambhu. Śiṣṭi got five sons, Ripu Ripuṇīṭa, Śpra, Vṛkala and Vṛkatejas. Cākṣuṣa was born to Ripu of his wife Bhāti. Manu was born to Cākṣuṣa of his wife Vrāṇi. Ur was the son of Manu. Ur got of Ātreyi Aṅga, Sumanas, Śvāti, Kraṭu, Aṅgiras and Gaya. (Chapter 17, Agni Purāṇa).

ĀṬREYI II. A river. (Śloka 22, Chapter 9, Sābhā Parva, M.B.).

ĀṬREYI III. Anasūyā, wife of Atri is also called Ātreysi.

ĀṬREYI IV. Daughter of Mahārṣi Atri. She was married to Aṅgiras, son of Agni. Aṅgiras always spoke rudely to her and pained at this she once approached her father and told him about this. Her father told her thus: "Your husband is the son of Agni. That is why he appears unbearable to you. Therefore give him a cold bath always and he would gradually become mild." Hearing this the devout Ātreysi transformed herself into a river and started to cool him down by constant showers. This river later on became the famous Paruṣāti Nadi. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

ĀVĀḤA. A Vāyu. (M.B., Śaṅhi Parva, Chapter 328, Verse 37).

ĀVANTIKĀ. Daughter of Yaugandharīyāṇa, a famous character in the story of Udayāna. (See under Yaugandharīyāṇa).

ĀVARAṬA. A King of Vīśvakarṇī's dynasty. Genealogy. From Viṣṇu were born in the following orders: Brahmā - Dharma - Parbhāṣa - Vīśvakarṇā - Priyavratra - Āgni-dhīra - Nābhi-ṛṣabha - Bharata - Āvāraṇa. Bharata married the world-beauty, Pañcaśi, five children, Uṣmati, Rāṣṭrabhī, Sūdārśana, Āvāraṇa and Dūrākṛtucu were born to her. (Bhāgavata, Dāśama Skandha).

ĀVARTANANDA. A sacred Tirtha. One who bathes in this tirtha will be able to enjoy life in Nandavanā. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 45).

ĀVASTHYA. An Agni. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 5).

ĀVIRHOTRA. A king of Vīśvakarṇā's dynasty. Genealogy. From Viṣṇu were descended in the following orders: Brahmā - Dharma - Parbhāṣa - Vīśvakarṇā - Barhiṣmati - Priyavratra - Āgni-dhīra - Nābhi-ṛṣabha - Āvīrohtra. Jayanti, Ṭabha's wife bore to him twenty children who were: Bharata, Kuṭvarta, Ilīvarta, Brahmāvarta, Arīvarta, Mālaya, Ketu, Bhradrasena, Indraskṛ, Vīdhīrtra, Kikaṭa, Kavi, Hari, Antarkī, Prabhuddha, Pippalīyana, Āvīrohtra, Darmidā, Camasa and Kāra-bhījana. The eldest of them, Bharata, became the ruler of India. From him this country came to be called "BHRĀRATA". All the younger brothers ruled over the different parts of this country.

ĀYATI. A daughter of Mahāmeru. Two daughters were born to Mahāmeru, Āyat and Niyati. Āyat was married by Dūtā and Niyati by Vīdhīṭā. Dūtā and Vīdhīṭā are the two sons born to Bṛgū Mahārṣi of his wife Khyāṭi, Dūtā got a son, Prāṇa, of Ā yat and Vīdhīṭā, a son, Mṛkandu of Niyati. Prīṇa got a son Dyutimān and he got a son Rājāvān. (Chapter 10, Anśīma 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

ĀYAVASĀ. A King. There is mention about this king in Śakta 128, Maṇḍala 1 of the Kgveda.
BABHRAVYA. An author of the 'Science of Love'. Śvetaketu was the first of the authors who had written on the Science of amour (Kāma-śīstra). Bābhraavya made only a condensation of the work of Śvetaketu.

BĀBHRAVYAM. A clan or gotra of Brāhmaṇas in Ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 342, Stanza 103 that the hermit Gālava belonged to this clan.

BABHRI I. A mahārāṣṭ of the line of preceptors from Vyāsa. (See Guruparamārā).

BABHRI II. A Yādava of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. He was one of the ablest of Yādava warriors. (Chapter 14, Dākṣiṇāyaka Pātham, M.B.). Even in his old age he used to do penance. Śīfūpāla carried away his wife when once he was away in Dvārakā. He was a friend of Śrī Krṣṇa. He died when hit by an arrow from Vyāsa. (Chapter 4, Mausala Parva, M.B.).

BABHRI III. A king of Kāśi. By the help of Śrī Krṣṇa he attained Rījyālakṣaṇ. (Chapter 28, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

BABHRI IV. A son of King Virāja. (Śloka 33, Chapter 57, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

BABHRI V. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra who were Brahmadevī. (Śloka 30, Chapter 4, Anuśasana Parva, M.B.).

BABHURUDAIVÅRDHA. A Yādava king. The information from Purāṇas available about him is given below:

1) This Rājarṣi was an adept in the art of yajña. He was a disciple of Nārada and Parvata Mahārāṣṭ. (Aitārya Brāhmaṇa 7.34).

2) He was a Yādava of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty and one of the seven noted ministers of the Yadu line of Kings. (Subhā Parva, M.B.).

3) At the time of the kidnapping of Subhadra Bābhurudāvṛdha was partaking in a grand festival at the mountain of Raivataka, (Chapter 211, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

4) When once this Rājarṣi went on a visit to Krṣṇa, Śīfūpāla carried away his wife. (Chapter 42, Subhā Parva, M.B.).

5) When in the end the Yādavas in Dvārakā quarrelled with each other and were destroyed, the plight of the Yādava ladies became miserable. Then Śrī Krṣṇa entrusted Dvāraka and Bābhurudāvṛdha with the task of taking care of them. But in the battle of the maces he was killed with a mace thrown at him. (Chapter 5, Mausala Parva, M.B.).

BĀBHURUMĀLI. A sage. He was a lively member of the Subhā of Yuddhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 16, Chapter 4, Subhā Parva, M.B.).

BĀBHRUSETU. A Gāndhāra king. He was the brother of Druhyu and father of Purovasu. (Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa).

BĀBHURUVAHANA. A son of Arjuna.

1) Birth. When the Pāṇḍavas were residing in Indraprastha after marrying Pāṇcāli, Nārada went to see them once. With a view to avoiding any quarrel between the Pāṇḍavas over the one wife they jointly possessed, Nārada suggested that each should take Pāṇcāli for a year in turn and he who violated the arrangement should go to the forest for a year. Once Arjuna went to the house of Yuddhiṣṭhira who was with Pāṇcāli and for thus violating the arrangement Arjuna had to go to the forest for a year. During this exile while he was staying at Gaṅgādvāra he married the serpent girl, Ulāpi and got a son called Irāvān of her.

After that he went to a country called Manalūr. At that time that country was being ruled by a king called Cītrāṅgada. Prabhājana one of the forefathers of Cītrāṅgada had, by hard penance for a progeny, acquired from Śiva a boon and each of his successors got a son each to maintain the line. But when it came to Cītrāṅgada to his surprise he got a girl instead of a son. But he got her up as a son and named her Cītrāṅgada. It was when she was ready for marriage that Arjuna went there. The king received Arjuna with respect and after enquiring about his welfare requested him to marry his daughter. Arjuna married her and stayed there for three months. Leaving that place Arjuna went to Paścatirtha and there he gave salvation to the celestial maidens who were lying in the tīrthas as crocodiles. When he went back to Manalūr Cītrāṅgada had delivered a son whom he named Bābhuvāhana. Promising them that he would take them later to Hastinapura, he left the place.

2) His fate to kill his own father. It was by a ruse that Arjuna made Bīśma fall. Arjuna put Śiṅkhaṇḍī before his chariot and Bīśma refused to take arms against a eunuch and accepted defeat. But Gaṅgādevī witnessing the battle between Bīśma, her son, and Arjuna from above could not bear this foul play and so cursed that Arjuna would die at the hands of his son. Ulūpi the serpent wife of Arjuna heard this curse and went to her father Kauravya who in turn went to Gaṅgā and begged for a relief from the curse. Gaṅgādevī then said that Arjuna would be killed by Babhrvāhana but would be brought to life by Ulūpi by placing the Mṛtasāṅjivani stone on the dead man's breast.

3) The killing of Arjuna. The Mahābhārata battle was over. When Yudhiṣṭhira was performing the Āśvamedha yāga Arjuna conducted a victory march with the yāga horse. On his way he reached Manālīr. At once Ulūpi called Babhrvāhana and asked him to challenge Arjuna. Babhrvāhana with his bow and arrows attacked Arjuna and in the grim battle that followed Arjuna fell dead. Seeing this Citrāṅgadā came to the place of battle weeping and abused Ulūpi for persuading Babhrvāhana to kill his own father. Ulūpi immediately went to the serpent world and brought the Mṛtasāṅjivani stone and as she placed it on Arjuna's breast he came to life as if waking up from a sleep. When he saw Citrāṅgadā, Babhrvāhana and Ulūpi he smiled and asked them why they had all come there. Ulūpi then explained to him the story of the curse and extremely pleased over the end of the curse Arjuna took them all to Hastinapura. (Chapters 218 to 210 of Ādi Parva and Chapters 79 to 82 of Āśvamedha Parva, M.B.).

4) Other details. (1) On reaching Hastinapura Śrī Kṛṣṇa gave Babhrvāhana as a present a chariot drawn by divine horses. (Śloka 6, Chapter 88, Āśvamedha Parva, M.B.).

(2) The different names given to him in the Purāṇas are as follows: Citrāṅgadasuta, Maniśūrupati, Dhanāṇjaśuta and Maniśūriśvara.

BADARIKĀŚRAMA. (BADARYĀŚRAMA). A very holy place in the Himalayas. It was here that Nara and Nārāyaṇa did penance for thousands of years and the Purāṇas, therefore, give it a very prominent place in them.

BADARIPĀCANA TĪRTHA. (BADARAPĀCANA). A sacred place in Kurukṣetra. If one lives here fasting for twelve years eating dates only, one will become as great as Vasiṣṭha. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BADARIVANA. A sacred place. Viśālputri an ancient city of purāṇic fame is near this place. The Badarikāśrama comprises Badarivana and Viśālputri also.

BADAVĀNGI. See under Aurov.

BĀDHIRA. A serpent of the Kaśyapa dynasty. (There is a reference to this serpent in Śloka 16, Chapter 74, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

BĀDULI. A son of Viśvāmitra. He was a follower of the Brahma cult. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 53).

BAHIRGIRI. A mountainous region of ancient Bāharata. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 3 that this country lying in the vicinity of the Himālayas had been conquered by Arjuna during his conquest of the North.

BĀHU I. A king of the Sūrya-varśa (solar dynasty). He was the father of Sagaras. He is known by the name Subhū also. This king was once defeated in a battle and being weary and sad he entered the hermitage of Aurov. His queen was given poison by another wife of the King. But the child in her womb did not die. The queen wanted to jump into the fire in which the body of her husband was to be burned. But Aurov told her that her son would become a famous king and that she should not commit suicide. Thus she desisted of committing suicide. A son was born to her. As she had been poisoned when the child was in her womb the son was given the name Sagaras (with poison). It is said in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva that this prince became a famous king later.

BĀHU II. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 22, that the Pandavas thought of sending an invitation to a king named Bāhu for the battle between the Kurus and themselves.

BĀHU III. A king of the Sundara dynasty. Mention is made about this king in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74.

BAHUBHĀRYĀTVĀ. (Polygamy). Polygamy was a custom in view of ancient India. It was not prohibited for a man to have more than one wife. It was customary to give dowry also. It is said in the Rgveda, Manḍala 10, Anuvaṅka 3, Sūkta 11 that the bride should proceed to the house of the husband, after the marriage. A spell (mantra) meant for keeping down one's co-wife, is seen in the Rgveda, Manḍala 10, Anuvaṅka 11, Sūkta 17. It is a prayer to destroy the love of husband for a co-wife and to direct that love towards oneself. The deity of this spell is Indraṇī the wife of Indra who was a polygamist. In those days marriage was an essential duty. Widow marriage was not forbidden.

BĀHUDĀ. A holy bath. If one stays in this place for a night in celibacy and fast, one will get the fruits of performing a sacrifice to devas (gods). The modern investigators say that this place is on the bank of river Dhavala which flows near Avadhī. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śanī Parva, Chapter 23 that the hermit Likhita had recovered his lost land, by bathing in this holy place and giving oblations to his ancestors.

BĀHUĐĀMA. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B., Sārya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 10).

BAHUDANTAKA. A book on the science of Ethics (Nitiśāstra), the work of Bṛhamā. It contains ten thousand chapters. This book was abridged into five thousand chapters by Purandara. (M.B., Śanī Parva, Chapter 69, Stanza 83).

BAHUĐANTI. Mother of Purandara who was the Indra during the Manvanta. (Period of a Manu) of Manu Vaivarvata. (See the word Purandara).

BAHUĐASUYĀŚA. The wife of Parikṣit, a King of the Kuru dynasty. A son named Bhīmasena was born to her. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 95).

BAHUĞAVĀ. A king born of the family of Yayāti. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

BAHUKE I. A serpent born in the family of Kauravyas. This snake fell in the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya and was burnt to death. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 13).

BAHUKE II. The pseudo-name assumed by Nala when he was living in the palace of Rūpārṇa in disguise.

For further information see the word Nala.
BĀHUṬA III. A mighty hero of the family of the Vṛṣṇis. About this bāhuṭa, mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 129, Stanza 19.

BĀHULĀ I. A river. In Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 29, mention is made about this river which is famous in the Purāṇas.

BĀHULĀ II. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 3).

BĀHULĀ III. Wife of Vidura a Brahmin, who frequented the houses of harlots. Bahulā was in the habit of going to the temple of Gokarna and hear Purāṇas, after the death of her husband. By this good deed Vidura got deliverance from sin. (Skanda Purāṇa 3.3.22).

BĀHUṬAŚVAṈ Ā. A king of the family of Śrī Rāma.
(Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

BĀHUṬAŚVAN Ā. A king of Mithilā. He was god-fearing. Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa visited his palace. At that time he received much good advice from Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgā-vata, Skandha 10).

BĀHUMŪLĀKA. A serpent born to Kaśyapa Prajāpati of his wife Kadru. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 16).

BĀHUPUTRĀ. A Prajāpati (creator). He was one of the spiritual sons (Mānasaputras) of Brahmā. (Vāyu Purāṇa 63.53).

BĀHUPUTRĪKĀ. An attendant (female) of Subrah-manya. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 3).

BĀHURĀTHA. A king of the family of Bharata.
(bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

BĀHURŪṆA. One of the eleven Rudras. Eleven
Rudras were born to Kaśyapa by his wife Surabhi.
Surabhi, who had been purified by Mahēṣvara whom she had pleased by her penance, got as sons, Aja, Ekapādī, Ahiṛbudhyāna, Tvaṣṭr and Rudra. The renowned Viśvarūpa was the son of Tvaṣṭr. The seven Rudras are Hara, Bāhurūṇā, Tṛyambaka, Aparājīta, Vṛṣṇi, Kapardin, Raivata, Miśrayādha, Sarpa and Kapālin. The number of the Rudras is one hundred lakhs. They pervade everything moving and not moving. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

BĀHSULĀ. A prince of Avanti. He was a friend of Śrīdatta. (For further information see the word Śrīdatta.).

BĀHSUVARAYAKA. An ancient city on the bank of the Ganges. (Kaṭhāsarīgāra).

BĀHUṆAADYA. A country in ancient India. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 55.

BĀHUVIDHA. A king of the family of Áṅga. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

BĀHUJOJĀṆA. An attendant of Subrahmanya.
(M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 9).

BĀHIṆŚI. One of the hundred sons of Dhrtrāśṭra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Bīṣma Parva, Chapter 28 that he was killed by Bhimasena in the battle of Mahābhārata.

BĀHYYAKARĀ. A serpent born to Kaśyapa Prajāpati of his wife, Kadru. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 9).

BĀHYAKUNDA. A serpent born in the family of Kaśyapa Prajāpati. Mention is made about this serpent in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103.

BĀHYĀSVAN. A king of the Fura dynasty. He was the son of King Purujātī. Five sons were born to Bāhyāśvan called Mukula, Śrījaya, Bṛhadīśa, Yāvinara and Krīmila. These five sons became famous as Pāṇcālas.
Of these, the family of Mukula became the Maukulyas, who were having temples and were of two classes.
A son named Paṇcāśva was born to Mukula. A son named Divodāsa and a daughter named Ahalāyā were born to Paṇcāśva. Ahalāyā got with child from the hermit Sārdvata and gave birth to a son named Śatānanda. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

BĀKĀ. Daughter of the demon, Sūnāli. He had four daughters : Bakā, Puspotkātā, Kaikāsī and Kumbhi-nādi. Rāvana is the son of Kaikasi. (Uttara Rāmāyāna).

BĀKĀ I. A demon. The Pāṇḍavas escaping from the trap of Arakikā (lacy-house) through a secret tunnel got to the village Ekeakārā on the banks of the river Gaṅgā and stayed there in the house of a brahmin.
Baka was a demon who was terrorising the villagers there. He used to come to the village freely and carry away people for his food. Because of this nobody lived in peace and so they all joined together and decided to send one man daily with plenty of other eatables to the demon in this cave. Days went by like that and one day the turn came to the brahmin who was sheltering the Pāṇḍavas. That brahmin had besides his wife one son and a daughter. The problem arose as to who should go to the demon. The father was willing but the wife did not want him to go and vice versa. The children began to cry and hearing the noise Kunti, mother of the Pāṇḍavas, went there to enquire and learned the tragic story of the family. She immediately went to Bāhima and acquainted him with the problem before the brahmin. Bhima at once volunteered to go to the demon deciding to kill the man-eater and thus putting an end to his depredations.

Bīṣma started on his journey to the demon carrying a cartload of rice and curry. Deliberately Bīṣma arrived at the place of the demon very late. Baka rolled his eyes in anger at the sight of the late-comer. But Bīṣma without heeding him sat in front of the demon and started eating the rice and curry. Baka charged at Bīṣma with fury but Bīṣma defended and a battle ensued in which Baka was killed and he fell dead like a mountain-head dropping down.* (Chapters 157-164, Adi Parva, M.B.).

BĀKĀ II. A demon. As young boys Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balarāmabhadrā were once playing in Ambādi (Goku-la) on the banks of the river Yamunā when the demon, Baka, despatched by Kaṁśa, went to them in the form of a huge terrible-looking stork. In no time opening its ferocious beak the stork swallowed Kṛṣṇa.
But the touch of Kṛṣṇa burnt the throat of the bird and vomiting Kṛṣṇa the bird fell dead.

*Kṣirāṣṭra, a demon, was the brother of Baka. (Śloka 23, Chapter 11, Arṇya Parva, M.B.).
After the death of Balasura his wife Prabhāvatī went to their preceptor (Kulaguru) Sukrācārya and told him all that took place and requested to bring back to life her lost husband. But Sukrācārya regretted that he could not give life again to her dead husband but could by his powers make her hear his voice again. Prabhāvatī agreed to that and then she heard her husband say “Leave your body and join me”. Prabhāvatī immediately courted death and joining Bala became a river.

(Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 6).

BALA (M). To know what are Daśābalas see Patu.

BALABANDHU. A king of ancient Bhrārā. There is a reference to him in Sūloka 236, Chapter 1, Adi Parva, M.B.

BALBHADRA. (Balabhadrārāma, Balarāma, Baladva). The elder brother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the eighth incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu.*

1) Birth. When the number of wicked kings increased Bhūmidevi (goddess of Earth) turned herself into a cow and took refuge in Mahāviṣṇu. Mahāviṣṇu then promised to be born as the sons of Vasudeva named Balabhadrārāma and Śrī Kṛṣṇa and destroy the wicked. Vasudeva was the son of the Yādava, Śūrasena. King of Madhura. To Devaka the brother of another Yādava King. Ugrasena, was born a daughter Devaki. The marriage of Devaki with Vasudeva was celebrated but on the same day a Āśārāṇi (a heavenly voice from above) said that the eighth child of Devaki would kill Kaṁsa. Instantly Kaṁsa put both Vasudeva and Devaki in jail. The first six sons born to Devaki were killed the moment they were born by striking them against the ground. Devaki became pregnant for the seventh time. The babe in the womb was Ananta incarnate by Viṣṇu’s directive to be of help to him when he would also be born soon as Kṛṣṇa. Therefore it was necessary to save the child from the cruel hands of Kaṁsa as it was certain he would kill the babe the same way he had killed all the others before. So he ordered Māyādevi to take the child from the womb of Devaki and place it in that of Rohini, another wife of Vasudeva. Māyādevi did so and the boy got the name Saṁgharṣaṇa, also because of this. The news spread that Devaki aborted. Rohini delivered a boy and was named Saṁgharṣaṇa alias Balabhadrārāma. (Daśāma Skandha, Bhāgavata).

2) The colour of Balarāma and Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Śrī Kṛṣṇa is the eighth child of Devaki. The elder brother Balarāma is white in complexion while the younger, Śrī Kṛṣṇa is black in complexion. There is a story behind this. The devas decided to be born as Gopālas (shepherds) in the earth to be of help to Kṛṣṇa in his duty of killing the wicked. They informed Mahāviṣṇu of their decision and the Lord was immensely pleased. He then took one white hair from his head and said that it would go to Rohini’s womb and change into Balarāma and

*Since the life of Balabhadrā is so mixed with that of Kṛṣṇa a complete life story of Balarāma could be had only if it is read along with that of Kṛṣṇa.
taking a black hair said that it would go into Devaki's womb and change into Sri Krsna. It was thus that Balabhadra became white and Sri Krsna black. (Chapter 199, Adi Parva, M.B.).

3) Brothers. Balabhadrarāma had six brothers born of his mother Rohini. They were: Gada, Sārana, Durdamana, Vipula, Dhruva, and Krta. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

4) Till their marriage Sri Krsna spent his childhood in Ambara and Balarāma, in Madhurā. Once the sage Garga went to the house of Vasudeva and it was he who then told the story behind the births of Balarāma and Krsna. Hearing this Vasudeva went to Madhurā and brought Balabhadrarāma also to Ambara. Gargamuni then performed all those sacred rites which were usually done to boys of that age and both of them then remained in Ambara. Several important events happened during their stay here, notable among which are: Pūtāmokṣam (killing of the demoness Pūtā and giving her salvation). Śakātāsūravadvaha (killing the asura, Śakata), Trāṇavarttavadvaha (killing the asura, Trāṇavarta), Vatsāsūravadvaha (killing the asura, Vatsa), Bakavadha (killing the demon bird, Baka), Aghāsūravadvaha (killing the asura, Agha), Dhenukāsūravadvaha (killing the asura, Dhenuka), Kālīmartana (beating the snake, Kālia) and Pralambavadvaha (killing Pralamba). (See under Kṛṣṇa for more details).

Kārṣṇa conducted a Cānapūjā (worship of the bow) to kill Kṛṣṇa. It was on a festive scale and both Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma went to Madhurā to attend the same. There they killed Kārṣṇa and after that went to the aśrama of Sāndipani Mahāraṣṭi for education. When they completed their education they at the request of the preceptor gave as Gurudakṣiṇā (The fee you pay in the end for the instructions given) the lost child of the guru. Then they went to Madhurā and there several events took place, important among which was the fight between Kṛṣṇa and Jārāsandha. By this time the Yādavas were becoming lean financially and so to make some money Kṛṣṇa and Rāma went to the diamond-infested mountain of Gomantaka. On their way they met Paraśurāma doing penance under a Banyan tree. On the advice of Paraśurāma they killed Śrīgālavarudeva and got immense wealth. On their return Rāma and Kṛṣṇa along with many Yādavas went and settled down in the island, Dvārakā, in the western ocean. (Daśama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

5) Marriage. Before the advent of Balarāma and Kṛṣṇa the island Dvārakā was known as Kuśasthali. It was ruled over by a famous Rājarṣi, Revata. This king was the son of King Anartta and grandson of emperor Śaryāti. Revata got a hundred sons, Kuukudmin being the first and a daughter named Revati. When the time for marriage of his daughter came the King was anxious to find out a fitting husband for her and he went to Brahmāloka to take the advice of Brahmā. Revati also accompanied him. There stupefied he saw Vedas, Yajñās, mountains, rivers, oceans, Ṛtus, all in divine figures standing before Brahmā, worshipping him. The sweet celestial songs gave them both untold happiness. He then told Brahmā the purpose of his visit and Brahmā meditating for some time told him that Balabhadrarāma, son of Vasudeva, was the only one person suited for her. The king returned to Dvārakā and gave his daughter in marriage to Balarāma. (Saptama Skandha, Devi Bhāgavata).

6) A pilgrimage. When the great Pāṇḍava-Kaurava battle started Kṛṣṇa became the charioteer of Arjuna and Balarāma went to the forest, Naimiṣa. He was not much interested in the battle. At the forest of Naimiṣa he saw Śūta telling Purānic stories to the several sages assembled there before him. Śūta did not rise up when he saw Balarāma and the latter moved to anger very soon cut off the head of Śūta. The sages assembled there decreed the act of Balarāma and lamented deeply over the incident. At this Balarāma promised that he would give birth, from the dead body of Śūta, to one who will be well versed in all the Vedas, śāstras and sciences. The sages then blessed Balarāma.

During that time there lived in the vicinity of Naimiṣa forest a demon called Balvala (Vatka). He used to annoy the sages there and the sages requested Balarāma to put a stop to the atrocities of that demon. He immediately killed the demon by his weapon, Hala, and then raised from the dead body of Śūta a pāṇḍita of great erudition. Later, to remedy the sin of killing Śūta, Balarāma, repentant, visited all the sacred places in Bhārata. Once when he heard about the grim battle between Duryodhana and Bhīmasena, he went to the battle-field and tried his best to stop the war. Disappointed he returned to Dvārakā. (Daśama Skandha, Chapter 79, Bhāgavata).

7) Death. Once the rishis Nārada, Kaṇva and Vīśvamitra came to Dvārakā. To make fun of them some of the Yādavas dressed a Yādava like a pregnant woman and producing her before the sages asked them what child she would deliver. Enraged at this the munis said in one voice that she would deliver a mace and that iron mace would be the cause of the end of all Yādavas.

After the Mahābhārata battle the Yādava dynasty remained alive only for thirty-six years. After that by the curse of the brahmīn the Yādavas were all killed in a drunken brawl between themselves in the very presence of Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadhra. This happened on the shore of Prabhāṣa tīrtha and Balarāma was sitting there then in deep meditation. Suddenly the soul of Balarāma went out from his mouth in the shape of a white serpent and the serpent entering the nether world was given a warm welcome by the prominent serpents there. (Mausala Parva, M.B.).

8) Other details.

(1) It was Balabhadrarāma who taught Bhīmasena the mace-fight. (Śloka 4, Chapter 138, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(2) Balabhadrarāma was present along with Śrī Kṛṣṇa at the marriage of Pāñcāli. (Śloka 17, Chapter 185, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(3) Balabhadrarāma became very indignant when he heard about Arjuna carrying away Subhadrā and it was Kṛṣṇa who pacified him. (Chapter 22, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(4) He was present at the marriage of Abhimanyu conducted at the city of Upālāvya. (Śloka 21, Chapter 72, Viśrava Parva, M.B.).

(5) He was very insistent that the Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas should come to a truce. (Chapter 2, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

(6) He witnessed the battle of maces between Duryodhana and Bhīmasena at Kurukṣetra. (Chapter 34, Salya Parva, M.B.).
(7) Balarāma conducted a pilgrimage and visited all the holy places of Bhārata at a time when the Pāṇḍava-Kaurava war was in full swing. (Chapter, 35-54, Śalya Parva, M.B.)

(8) Balarāma was of opinion that it was unjust of Bhīmasena to have killed Duryodhana and was about to kill Bhīmasena. (Śloka 4, Chapter 60, Śalya Parva, M.B.)

(9) Once Balarāma spoke in exulting terms about the secrets of Dharma. (Chapter 17, Chapters 126, Śalya Parva, M.B.)

(10) It was Balarāma who performed the obsequies of Abhimanyu. (Śloka 6, Chapter 62, Aśvamedha Parva, M.B.)

(11) He went to Hastināpura when Yudhiṣṭhira performed the Aśvamedha yāga. (Śloka 4, Chapter 66, Aśvamedha Parva, M.B.)

(12) Balarāma introduced prohibition in Dvārakā. (Śloka 29, Chapter 1, Mausala Parva, M.B.)

(13) Once he made dry the river Kālindī. (See Kālindī).

BALABHADRARAMA II. A very mighty serpent. (Śloka 37, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

BALADA. The first son of the Agni, Bhānu. It is this Agni which gives life and strength to all living beings. (Śloka 10, Chapter 221, Śanti Parva, M.B.)

BALANDHARA. A daughter of the king of Kāśī. Let the mightiest of men marry her, said her father. Defeating all the kings who tried to take her Bhīmasena married her and Sarvaśā was the son born to Bhīmasena of Balandharā. (Śloka 70, Chapter 95, Aśvamedha Parva, M.B.)

BĀLADHI. An ancient hermit. He was powerful. He performed a severe penance for getting sons. The Devatās appeared and granted him a boon. Accordingly a son called Medhāvin was born to him. Once Medhāvin teased the great hermit Dhanuśākṣa, who cursed him to death. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 135).

BALĀHAKA I. (VALĀHAKA). A serpent famous in the Purāṇas. This serpent stays in the durbar hall of Varuṇa, worshipping him. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 9).

BALĀHAKA II. (VALĀHAKA). A brother of Jaya-dratha the King of Sindhu. He helped Jayadratha in kidnapping Draupadi. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 265, Stanza 12).

BALĀHAKA III. (VALĀHAKA). A famous horse yoked on the right side of the chariot of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Mention is made about this horse in M.B., Vīrāṭa Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 23.

BALĀHAKA IV. A king. Once Śiva gave this king a vision of him in the shape of a cow-calf. After that in the place where Śiva appeared as calf a Śivalinga arose. It began to grow to the extent of an atom daily. But the growth ceased, when an outcaste who became so by Karma (action) visited it. (Skandha Purāṇa 3-2-27).

BALĀKA (VALĀKA). A forester. This forester used to go for hunting and he gave everything he got to his old parents without reserving anything for himself. One day he did not find any animal even though he had made a thorough search in the forest. He was much worried. At last he reached the bank of a river. He saw an extraordinary animal drinking water. He had never seen such an animal before.

It was a peculiar creature. That creature had done penance before Brahmā, from its young age with the view of destroying everything. Brahmā appeared before the creature and granted it the boon that it would have the power to make anything blind. Brahmā also said that anybody who killed the creature would be given a place in the realm of Gods. The creature had been wandering in the forest making blind every creature it met, and one day it was drinking water and it was then that Valāka shot it down. As soon as the creature fell down the gods showered flowers, and took him to the realm of Gods in a divine chariot. (M.B., Kaṁsa Parva, Chapter 69).

BALĀKATĪRTHA. (VALĀKATĪRTHA). A holy place near the mountain of Gandhamādana. Those who bathe in this holy bath would become as bright and famous as devas (gods). It is mentioned so in the Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 19.

BALĀKASVA. (VALĀKASVA). He is the grandson of the hermit Jahnū and the son of Aja otherwise called Sindhudvīpa. Balākāsā had a son called Kuśika. (M.B., Śanti Parva, Chapter 49, Stanza 3).

BĀLAKHILYA(S). (VALĀKHYILYAS). A group of hermits. 1) Origin. Sixty thousand hermits were born to Kraṭu, one of the Saptarṣis (seven hermits), by his wife, Santati. They are called Bālakhilyas. Every one of them was only the size of half a thumb, but they were as bright as the blazing sun and had attained control over their senses. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṛiṇa 1, Chapter 10). 2) Garuda (Eagle) and Bālakhilya(s). A story connecting the birth of Garuda with Bālakhilyas occurs in the Purāṇas. Once Kaśyapa Prajāpati performed a sacrifice to obtain children. The work of bringing firewood for the sacrifice was entrusted to Indra and the other devas (Gods) and the Bālakhilyas. When Indra was heaping up on heaps pieces of big logs the Bālakhilyas who were very small were bringing in chips of wood. Seeing this Indra laughed. The Bālakhilyas got angry and stopping the work entrusted to them began to do penance with a view to create another Indra. Knowing this Indra was much flurried. He went to Kaśyapa and told him everything. Kaśyapa went to the Bālakhilyas and pacified them. At this time Vinatā, a wife of Kaśyapa, was doing penance to obtain a son. Kaśyapa said that the penance of the Bālakhilyas would not be fruitless and that as a result of their penance a son who would overpower Indra would be born to Vinatā. Accordingly a son was born to her. Garuḍa was that son. The fact that Garuḍa overthrew Indra when he went to heaven for ambrosia, is well known. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 51).

3) Routine of life. The Bālakhilyas live in the maṇḍala of Sārya (solar region). They travel in front of the sun in the shape of birds. They wear hides of animals. They are righteous and are only as big as a thumb. They are very ardent in doing the works of devas (Gods). They are sinless. There are Bālakhilyas living in the lunar region also. They worship the Sun daily. All the world stand firm in truth because of the penance of the Bālakhilyas. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 141).

*In some other Purāṇas the mother of Bālakhilyas is given the name ‘Sannatī’. This may be a mistake in the manuscript.
4) Other information. (1) Garuḍa (Eagle) who went to the realm of devas (gods) for Amṛta (ambrosia) took rest on the branch of a banyan tree, and that branch was broken from the tree. Sixty thousand Bālakhyas were doing penance hanging head downwards on that branch, Garuḍa knew this only after the branch was broken. Fearing the curse form them he took the branch in his beak and flew about here and there. At last, according to the advice of Kaśyapa, he took the branch to the mount Gandhamādana and without causing any harm to the small hermits placed it there. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 30).

(2) When Dusyanta entered the hermitage of Kaṇva he saw the Bālakhyas doing penance, hanging down on the trees in the vicinity. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 7).

(3) In Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākāṇḍa, Sarga 51, it is mentioned that the Bālakhyas were engaged in prayer and meditations and offering oblations to fire in the hermitage of Vasīṣṭha.

(4) It is mentioned in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākāṇḍa, Sarga 51, that in the period of the Rāmāyaṇa, in South India, when Rāvana was going to the house of Mārīca, he saw the Bālakhyas doing penance.

(5) The Bālakhyas learned the Vedas and Śāstras (scriptures) sitting in the chariot of the sun. (Kama Rāmāyaṇa, Pārvakāṇḍa).

BĀLAKHYA SAMHİṬĀ. See the word Guruparamparā.

BĀLĀKI. (VALĀKI). One of the hundred sons of Dhrtaraṣṭra. Mention is made in the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 2, that Valāki had been present on the occasion of the swayānvara (wedding) of Draupadi.

BĀLĀKI. A hermit. He is called Gārgya also as he is a son of Garga. He acquired much knowledge and so he became arrogant. Because of this some called him Deptabālāki.

Once the hermit went to the King of Kaśi and told him that he would impart to him the knowledge of Brahma. The King replied that he would give thousand cows in return. Bālāki declared that the sun-god was Brahma. The King said that he had known it. Everything that Bālāki said had been known to the King earlier. So, in the end Bālāki had to become the disciple of the King. Then the King took him to a man who was sleeping. The King called the sleeping man. But he did not wake up. The King woke him up and then asked the hermit, where he had gone when he was sleeping. Bālāki could not say where men go when they are sleeping and where they return from when they wake up. The King said “In our sleep we attain Sārūpya (assimilation to god). But we are not aware of it. Though we get eternal bliss we do not know it. If we can get eternal bliss when we keep awake that is Atmajñāna (knowledge of Supreme Soul). As the flames emanate from fire, and as the spider weaves its net and sits in its centre, the soul creates everything, controls everything and pervades everything.” (bhādāraṇyakopaniṣad).

BĀLĀKSA. An ancient king of Bhārata. While the Pāṇḍavas were living incognito in the kingdom of Virāṭa, Duryodhana and his brothers stole the cows of Virāṭa, in consequence of which there was a battle. The devas (gods) came in planes to see the fight between Arjuna and the teacher Kṛpa. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, that the King Bālakṣa was there with the gods when they came to see the fight.

BĀLĀMITRA. A king. Satruighna who led the yāga horse of Śrī Rāma fought with Virāṅan and at that time Bālāmitra fought on the side of Virāṅan. (Chapter 40, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

BĀLĀMODAKA. The son of Suratha, the King of Kujulanaogari. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 40).

BĀLĀNIKA (VALĀNIKA) I. A son of the King Drupada. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Drōṇa Parva, Chapter 156, that Aśvatthāmā killed him in the battle of Kurukṣetra.

BĀLĀNIKA (VALĀNIKA) II. A brother of Matsya. The King of Virāṭa. During the battle of Kurukṣetra he had taken the side of the Pāṇḍavas and had fought against the Kauravas. (M.B., Drōṇa Parva, Chapter 158).

BĀLĀSVĀMI. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B., Sāla Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 74).

BĀLĀVATI. The daughter of hermit Kaṇva. She did penance to please the Sun to obtain a husband of a very good nature. The Sun appeared before her and gave her some dates and asked her to prepare food with them and bring them back. Bālavati began to cook the dates. Though all the faggots she had gathered were consumed it was not properly boiled. As there was no firewood she put her leg into the oven. Seeing this the Sun-God was pleased and said “All your wishes will be realized”. From that day onwards that place was called by the name Bālāpa. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 152).

BĀLĀVINĀṢṬAKA. The hero of a story, given in Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāmukhalambaka, Tarāṅga six, to show that it is not good to make others angry. The story is as follows:—

Long ago there was a Brahmin named Rudra Śarman. He had two wives. Both gave birth to a son each. The elder wife died and her son also was brought up by the younger wife. Being jealous she fed the child with food too hard for the child and it became lean with stomach swollen and the bones projecting. It looked an uncouth figure. Seeing him like this Rudra Sārman called him Bālāvināṣṭaka (one who is lost when he is a boy). He gradually grew up. When he was only five years old he showed extraordinary intelligence. One day he decided to teach his foster-mother a lesson. On that day he was sitting alone on the lap of his father. He said to his father, “Father, I have two fathers”. Thenceforward the father began to doubt his wife, that she was having a lover. He grew jealous. He would not talk to her. The foster-mother thought Bālāvināṣṭaka was the cause for this change in her husband’s behaviour. One day she called the boy to her modestly and asked him for the reason for the change in the behaviour of his father towards her. He said that he would bring about a change in the behaviour of his father if he would be cared for properly. She agreed. Then he took a mirror and held it before his father and when the reflection of his father fell in the mirror he said, “Father, I have two fathers”. Immediately the doubt of his father was removed. It is not right to make even a boy angry.

BĀLĀYANI. An ācārya (Teacher). In Bhāgavata, Skanda 10, it is seen that Bālāyani was taught Bālakhilya samhīṭā by Bāskala.
Bālayogi. A king of the Aṅga dynasty. He was the son of Virocana and the grandson of Prahlāda. 1) Genealogy and Birth. The Asuras or the Daityas are the sons born, of his wife Diti, to Kaśyapa Prajāpati, son of Marici and grandson of Brahmā. There were so many Asuras born as the sons of Diti. But among them Hiranyākṣa, Hiranyakaśipu, Śrīpadmā, Śimhihavaktra, Tārakāṣura and Gomukha were notorious. Of their sisters Śimhihā and Ajamukhī were famous.

Four sons born Prahlāda, Samhṛāda, Hṛāda and Anuhṛāda were born to Hiranyakaśipu. Virocana was the son of Prahlāda and Mahābali was the son of Virocana. Bāṇa was born from Mahābali and four crores of Asuras called Nivātakavacas were born from Bāṇa.

2) The churning of the ocean. Once Mahābali had stolen the wealth of Devendra. While he was carrying it to his house, it all fell in the ocean. Mahāviṣṇu ordered the devas (gods) to recover the lost wealth from the ocean. It was impossible to churn the ocean without the help of Mahābali. So the devas went to Mahābali and sought his help. Mahābali agreed to help them. The real aim of the devas was not to regain the lost wealth but to obtain the celestial nectar known as Nectar of Immortality (Amṛta) and to defeat the Asuras in battle. On the side of the Asuras there was the knowledge of the Mṛtaśaṅkivāni (life-restoring remedy). So the dead were being brought to life. But it was not possible for devas to do so. It was to make up this deficiency, by obtaining Ambrosia from the sea, that the devas tried to churn the sea, under the pretence of recovering the lost wealth. Mention is made in the Viśu Purāṇa, Amśa I, Chapter 9 and Matsya Purāṇa, Chapters 250 and 251 that these events took place during the period of the Indra named Mantradruma in the Cākṣuṣamanvantara (the period of the manu named Cākṣuṣa).

3) War with Indra. The great teacher Sukra again anointed Bali, who was brought to life again, as Indra. After that he performed the sacrifice of Viśvajit (conqueror of the world) on behalf of Bali. Assuming the responsibilities of government, Bali performed one hundred Aśvamedha yāgas (Horse sacrifices) (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

After the Viśvajit sacrifice, Yajiñadeva (god of sacrifice) who was greatly pleased at the sacrifice, presented Bali with a divine chariot, equal in all aspects to that of Indra, a golden bow, two quivers, which would never become empty and a divine armour, and his grandfather gave him a garland that would never fade, and the teacher Sukra gave him a divine conch, and Brahmā presented a garland. (M.B., Śanti Parva, Chapter 216).

4) Attainment of the Position of Indra. Mahāviṣṇu had not been on good terms with the devas, for a time. Taking this opportunity, Śukra to the teacher of the Asuras, persuaded Bali to engage the devas in a battle. Bali defeated the devas completely in a pitched battle. Thus the realm of the gods came under the sway of Mahābali. Once, during that period Bali invited his grandfather Prahlāda to heaven and requested him to accept the most honourable seat there. Prahlāda accepted his invitation and anointed Bali as Indra. Bali enquired of Prahlāda as to the method of carrying on the government of heaven. Prahlāda said thus in reply: “Only virtue will always win. Rule the kingdom without deviating from virtue.” (Vāman Purāṇa, Chapter 74).

Because Bali had ruled his kingdom according to the advice of Prahlāda, he became famous in the three worlds. (Vāman Purāṇa, Chapter 75).

According to the version of Bhāgavata, Prahlāda when he grew old, left his kingdom in the hands of his son Virocana and went to the forest for penance. Virocana was not as famous as Prahlāda. After the period of Virocana, Mahābali came to the throne. He was a mighty king. Within a short time he became the emperor of the Asuras. It was during this period that the churning of the Milk Sea took place. The Asuras and the Devas (gods) sat on either side and using the mount Mandara as churn-drill, churned the Milk Sea and obtained Amṛta (the celestial nectar of immortality). A battle took place between the Asuras and the Devas for the possession of Amṛta (the Ambrosia and the container) and the emperor Mahābali was killed in the battle. The Asuras carried the dead body of Mahābali.
bali to his capital, where Sukrācārya (their teacher-priest Sukra) brought him to life again by the help of sacred herbs. Mahābali instantly waged another war, fiercer than the previous ones, with the devas, and having defeated them, he drove them out of their realm and brought it under control. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 8).

5) The curse of Prahlāda. As the whole of heaven came under the sway of Bali, the devas began to leave the country one by one. Everybody was happy and comfortable under the rule of Bali. But the devas and Brāhmaṇas were denied the privileges they deserved. They approached Viṣṇu and represented their grievances. Viṣṇu told them thus: “Bali is devoted to me. Still, to redress your grievances I shall take the incarnation of Vāmana shortly.”

In course of time the Asuras and their countries began to be weakened. Seeing the approach of destruction emperor Bali became thoughtful. He approached Prahlāda to learn the reason. Prahlāda told Bali thus: “Lord Viṣṇu is now staying in the womb of Aditi for his incarnation as Vāmana. That is why the country and the Asuras are subjected to destruction. Hearing this Mahābali said: “Our Rāksasas are more powerful than that Viṣṇu.” Hearing these haughty words of Bali, Prahlāda got angry and cursed Bali “Let your country be destroyed.” Bali requested Prahlāda to pardon him. Prahlāda advised Bali “You will get salvation only by relying on Viṣṇu”. (Vāmana Purāṇa 77).

6) Defeated by Vāmana. The defeated devas had taken refuge in forests. Aditi the mother of the devas was very sorry at this. She shed tears before her husband Kaśyapa Prājapati, who advised his wife to take a fast of twelve days, and taught her the rules and rituals of the fast. Accordingly she took the fast, Viṣṇu appeared before her and asked her what boon she wanted. She requested Viṣṇu to take birth as her son, to drive away Bali and to restore her sons, the devas (gods), to their kingdom of heaven. Mahāviṣṇu agreed.

Aditi became pregnant and gave birth to the son Vāmana. He was an incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu. [The 5th incarnation (avatāra) of Viṣṇu]. At this time Mahābali was performing a sacrifice on the bank of the river Narmadā. Vāmana came to the place of sacrifice in the dress of a hermit boy and told Mahābali that he was a helpless hermit boy and requested that he might be given three steps of ground. Mahābali was pleased with the boy and told him that he was willing to give the boy even the country called Bhṛgūraka and that he was prepared to forego the kingly pleasures for the boy. The hermit boy did not show any desire for them. So many gathered round them to witness this sight. The teacher Sukrācārya called Mahābali and said that the boy was a cheat and that his request should not be granted. But Mahābali decided to grant the wish of the boy and as a token of his gift he began to offer the boy water from a waterpot. Then the teacher got into the mouth of the pot in the shape of a motc and water would not flow freely out of the mouth of the pot. Knowing this Vāmana took a grass of Darbha and pushed it at the mouth of the pot. The grass pierced one eye of Sukrācārya. From that time onwards Sukrācārya had only one eye. Water flowed freely into the hands of Vāmana. Sukra got angry and cursed Bali. Vāmana began to measure the ground and simultaneously began to grow. The asuras who were horrified at this, began to attack Vāmana with anything they could lay hands on. Still Vāmana was growing. Finally he became an immensely large being. With one step he measured the whole of earth and with the second step he took the whole of heaven. Then he asked Bali, where to place the third step. Mahābali said that he had only his body left, as his own, and that Vāmana might take it and complete three steps. Vāmana placed his foot on the head of Bali and pushed him down to Pātāla (the Netherworld). Thenceforward the asuras became the inhabitants of Pātāla. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 8).

7) Bali and Rāvana. Once Rāvana visited Bali who was under custody in Pātāla, and said to him, “I have come to save you from here. So get yourself free from the custody of Mahāviṣṇu, with my help.” Hearing this, Bali asked Rāvana to fetch the two earrings of Hiranyakāśipu, which were shining like blazing fire a little away from them. Rāvana moved forward to take them. But he fell unconscious. Bali caused him to recover and said: “These earrings were worn by my great grandfather Hiranyakāśipu. How could you, who are not even capable of taking his earrings, save me from his slayer, Viṣṇu? Viṣṇu is Almighty and All-powerful and Supreme Lord of everything.” Hearing this, Rāvana was filled with shame and he returned. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Uttara Kāṇḍa, Prakṣipta Sarga).

8) Bali born as a Gardabha (Ass). Bali, who was fallen from power took birth in the womb of an ass and roamered about. Brahmā instructed Indra to find out Bali. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapters 216-218).

9) Other information.

(1) Mahābali shines in the durbar of Varuṇa. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 12).

(2) Once Mahābali went to Prahlāda and repented of his sins and begged for pardon. Then he began to make enquiries on spiritual matters. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 28, Stanza 3).

(3) From his childhood Mahābali was a hater of the Brāhmaṇas. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 90, Stanza 24).

(4) Once Mahābali was engaged in a serious contest with Indra. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 223).

(5) After having lost his kingdom Mahābali ridiculed Indra in various ways. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 225, Stanza 30).

(6) Once Mahābali talked with Sukrācārya about giving gifts of flower, smoke and light. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 98, Stanza 15).

(7) Lakṣmi Devī had forsaken Mahābali because he behaved haughtily towards Brāhmaṇas. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapters 216-218).

(8) In the religious Books such as Yogavāśiṣṭha the story of Mahābali is given to illustrate disinterestedness (Anāsakti).

BALI II. A hermit. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 10, that this hermit lived in Hastināpura.

BALI III. An incarnation of Śiva. Śiva incarnated in the hermitage of the Bālakhilyas in the mount of Gandhamādāna during the period of Varāha Kalpa (Kalpa—one day of Brahmā or the period of 14 manus). It is seen in Śiva Purāṇa, Satapatha Brāhmaṇa that Bali had four sons, called Sudhāmā, Kaśyapa, Vasiṣṭha and Virāja.
BALI IV. A king of the Yādavas. He was the son of Kṛta-varma. Bali married Cārumati, the daughter of Rukmiṇī. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

BALI V. A famous monkey-king of the country of Ānava. This King who was the son of Sutapa as was contemporary of the great King Sagara.

Bali did penance and Brahmā appeared before him, and blessed him and said, “You will become a great sage and will live till the end of the Kalpa (a period of world age). Your power will be inimitable. Nobody will overthrow you in battle. You will be loved by your subjects and they will obey you. You will be well-versed in the knowledge of law and its observance and the learned will recognize your knowledge. You will re-establish caste system in your kingdom.” (Harivarāṇa, 1, 31.35.39).

Sudeśāṇa was the wife of Bali. The couple had no children. At last they appealed to Dirghatarmas a hermit, from whom they got five sons called Ānga, Vanga, Kaliniga, Pāṇḍu and Suhma (Brahma Purāṇa). In Bhāgavata it is mentioned that he had one more son called Anhara.

Bali left his body at the end of the Kalpa and entered heaven. Before his death he had divided his kingdom equally among his sons. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9, Mahā-bhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 92).

BĀLI. A mighty monkey-king.

1) Birth. Bali is the son of Indra. There is a story about the birth of Bali as follows:—

Śilavatī who was devoted to her husband once carried him to the house of a harlot one night. On the way they saw the hermit Animāndavaya, who had been placed on a trident by the order of the King, beating his limbs with agony. Lying on the trident he saved Ugratapas. Seeing the amorous nature of Ugratapas Animāndavaya cursed him that before sunrise he would die. Śilavatī who was a woman of great purity and loyalty hearing the curse said, “Let the Sun not rise tomorrow.”

Next day, though it was time the sun did not rise. The night prolonged. Aruṇa the charioteer was ready at the usual time but saw the Sun sitting motionless. Wast- ing time was intolerable to the charioteer. So he decided to make the best use of the time at his disposal by witnessing a little of the dance of the celestial beauties in the realm of the devas. But males had no admittance there. So Aruṇa took the shape of a beautiful woman and got in. Seeing a new person, very beautiful to look at, sitting in the midst of the celestial maids Indra grew amorous. He secretly took her to a dark place and a son was born out of that coition. That son is Bali. Bali was the son born to an anointed. While Aruṇa returned the Sun was standing full of anger. Being afraid of him Aruṇa confessed everything to the Sun. When he heard the whole story the Sun expressed his desire to see that figure which Aruṇa had adopted. Accordingly Aruṇa again became a woman. The Sun also had coition with her and Sugrīva was the son born out of this coition. Bali and Sugrīva were brought up by Ahalyādevī in the hermitage of Gautama.

At that time a monkey-king named Rksarāja had been ruling over the forest with Kīṣkindhā as his capital. He had no sons and so he approached Indra and placed before him his grievances. Indra brought Bali and Sugrīva from the hermitage of Gautama and handed them over to Rksarāja. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 107; Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 42; Uttarā Rāmāyaṇa and Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Purvakāṇḍa).

2) Marriage and Kingship. Owing to difference of opinion, Bali defeated the asuras who came for the churning of the Sea of Milk. The devas who were pleased at this, gave Bali, a woman named Tārā, derived from the Sea of Milk. Thus Tārā became his wife and he got a son by her, named Anigoda who became famous as a mighty warrior-prince. Sugrīva married Rumā. At that time Rksarāja died and Bali became King. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Purvakāṇḍa).

3) Enmity with Hanumān. It was during this period that Hanumān was born. While Śiva and Pārvatī were living in the forest as monkeys Pārvatī got with child. The child was given to Bhagavān Vāyu (Wind-God) with the womb. Vāyu placed the womb with the child in Anjanadī's stomach. Nārada informed Bali all these things. Bali thought that his position would be lost, if a being born of Śiva, grew up in the form of a monkey. In accordance with the advice of Nārada, Bali melted Pañcaloha (five metals) and passed it into the womb of Anjanadī. Still the child in the womb was not killed as it was the sperm of Śiva. The molten metals became earrings of the child in the womb. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Purvakāṇḍa).

4) Sugrīva separated. Once, the son of Māya, the carpenter of the asuras, wanted to defeat Bali by a combat or cunning sleights as he was an expert wrestler and magician. He came to Kīṣkindhā in the midnight and standing before the palace, challenged Bali, who getting angry came out followed by Sugrīva. Seeing the two of them the magician began to run. Bali and Sugrīva chased him to a cave. Placing Sugrīva at the mouth of the cave Bali followed the magician. Before going, Bali said to Sugrīva: “Brother, I will go in and kill the Magician and return. Be brave and stay here. If the asura dies milk will appear at the mouth of the cave and if he kills me blood will be seen. If the latter happens close the mouth of the cave firmly and return to Kīṣkindhā and live happily there.”

Bali did not return even after a year. Finally the asura was killed. But by the cunning sleights of the magician it was blood that appeared at the mouth of the cave. Thinking that his brother was slain by the magician Sugrīva felt sorry. Then he closed the mouth of the cave firmly with stone and returned to Kīṣkindhā. Hearing about the death of Bali the monkeys anointed Sugrīva as King. After a time Bali returned stronger than before and saw the mouth of the cave closed. He thought that Sugrīva had closed the mouth of the cave deliberately to kill him and to usurp his throne. Bali reached Kīṣkindhā and drove Sugrīva away. Sugrīva fled to Mount Rāyamūkacala which was prohibited area for Bali due to a curse. Mātaṅga had cursed him that if he entered that mountain his head would be broken. So Sugrīva was safe in that mountain.

The desire of Bali to take revenge on Sugrīva increased everyday. Everyday he used to go to the four seashores and conduct bath, prayer, meditation etc. and return to Kīṣkindhā within a short time. With one jump he will reach one place from another, and in each jump he would put one step on the head of Sugrīva in the Rāyamūkacala. Hanumān was the Kiskindha, the minister of Sugriva. He was much annoyed at this habitual torture of Sugriva. One day as usual Bālī was stepping on the head of Sugriva to jump to another place, when Hanumān caught hold of Bālī by his waist. Hanumān thought that if Bālī was dragged down on the mountain somehow or other, his head would break and there would be an end of his wicked deeds. Bālī thought that if he could jump into Kīśkindhā with Hanumān it would be easy for him to destroy Sugriva. But both were of equal strength. So Bālī did not jump with Hanumān to Kīśkindhā and Hanumān did not drag Bālī to the ground. Both did not know how to stop the fight. At last they made a treaty. Bālī agreed to stop torturing Sugriva and Hanumān agreed not to cause any trouble to Bālī. Both returned to their own places. After that Sugriva lived in Rāyamūkācala with his ministers and Bālī in Kīśkindhā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kīśkindhā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 10; Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Pārvakāṇḍa).

5) Bālī was cursed by Mātanga the great hermit. See the word Dūndubī para 4.

6) Defeating Rāvana. Bālī had got a boon from the Gods that he would get half the strength of his opponent who stood face to face with him in fight. This power enabled Bālī to defeat all his foes and bring the countries in all directions under his sway. Rāvana heard about this and decided to overpower Bālī somehow or other and approached Kīśkindhā. Bālī knew this. His minister, Tārān, went to Rāvana and told him about the power of Bālī and of the boon by which Bālī got half the strength of his opponent. When Rāvana heard of this peculiar boon he decided to kill Bālī. His idea was to kill Bālī by going behind him when he went to the sea-shore to take bath in the morning.

Next morning Bālī went to the eastern sea-shore and began his prayer and meditation. Rāvana approached Bālī from behind and sat close to him. Perhaps the idea of Rāvana might have been to take Bālī by his tail and beat him on the ground. Bālī knew that Rāvana was sitting behind him. But pretending that he knew nothing put his long tail on the body of Rāvana, and passed it lengthwise and breadthwise through every part of his body and tied him like a bundle of faggots, and made a jump into the air. Within a short time he visited all the usual places and reached Kīśkindhā. Seeing Rāvana hanging by the tail of Bālī, even the women folk laughed. Thus Rāvana admitted defeat. Bālī let him go unhurt. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

7) Death. After Sītā had been stolen away Rāma and Lakṣmana wandered about in the forest. Then they met with Hanumān, who took them to his King Sugriva. Śrī Rāma and Sugriva entered into a treaty, by which Śrī Rāma was to kill Bālī and to restore to Sugriva his wife who was under the custody of Bālī, and to make him the King of Kīśkindhā, in return for which Sugriva and his men had to help Śrī Rāma to find out and recover Sītā. In accordance with the conditions of the treaty, Śrī Rāma and Sugriva reached Kīśkindhā, to confront with Bālī. Śrī Rāma and Sugriva had hit up on a plan, by which Śrī Rāma was to shoot Bālī down, when Sugriva was engaged in boxing with Bālī. Sugriva challenged Bālī to a single combat. Bālī came out and a horrible boxing began between the two. But Śrī Rāma could not distinguish one from the other. Thier faces were so alike. Sugriva, being defeated, receded from fight. Śrī Rāma and Sugriva returned to Rāyamūkācala. Sugriva spoke ill of Śrī Rāma. But Śrī Rāma revealed the truth, and Sugriva believed it. Next day morning both of them started for Kīśkindhā to kill Bālī. Śrī Rāma had put a flower garland around the neck of Sugriva to distinguish him from Bālī. This time Tārā tried to the utmost to dissuade Bālī from fighting. But without paying any heed to her words Bālī engaged Sugriva in fighting. Śrī Rāma, sitting in ambush, instantly sent an arrow to the breast of Bālī who looked to the side from which the arrow came. Before falling down, looking at Śrī Rāma Bālī said "It is not right on the part of the King of Ayodhya to have shot an arrow from ambush". Hearing that Śrī Rāma said, "If you see me face to face you will become devoted to me. It is not right to kill one's devotee. You are a friend of Rāvana, who as you know, is my foe. If I let you alone Rāvana is likely to get your help. Besides, you have a boon that you will get half the strength of the foe who faces you, and as such you cannot be killed by anybody in direct fight. It is unavoidable for the safety of Sugriva, for my interest, for the protection of the world at large, and for the preservation of law and order that you should be killed. Was it not a violation of duty on your part to steal the wife of Sugriva?" Bālī fell down. Immediately Tārādevī and Aṅgada arrived there. Tārā spoke very harsh words to Śrī Rāma. At last Bālī entrusted Tārā and Aṅgada with Śrī Rāma and then he died. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Kīśkindhākāṇḍa).

BĀLĪHĀM. A dynasty of Kṣatriyas. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 14 that there was a king named Arkaṇa in this dynasty.

BĀLĪŚIKHA. A serpent born to Kaśyapa prajāpati of his wife Kadru. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 8).

BĀLIVĀK. A hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 14 that this hermit had been a member of the durbār of Yudhiṣṭhira.

BĀLLĀLA. Son of a Vaiṣya named Kalyāṇa. From childhood Ballāla was an ardent devotee of Gaṇapati. When he was a child he used to gather pebbles and make a heap and then worship it, imagining it to be Gaṇeṣa (Gaṇapati). His parents did not like this. They tried their best to dissuade him from this habit. Once they tied him to a tree and gave him severe cuts. But their attempts were futile. One day an image of Gaṇapati arose in the place where the child used to worship. (Gaṇeṣa Purāṇa 1:2).

BĀLLAVA (VALLAVA). A country in Bhārata. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9.

BĀLLAVA (VALLAVA). This is the pseudo-name assumed by Bhumasena, while the Pāṇḍavas were living in pseudonymity in the kingdom of Vīraṭa. In some Purāṇas this name is shown as 'Valala'. (M.B., Viśvā Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 1).

BĀLOTKAṬĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 23).

BĀLVALA (VALAKALA). An asura. This asura had been tormenting the hermits of the forest of Naimiśa.
BANA (BANABHAṬTA) I

This asura was killed by Balabhadrarāma.* For detailed story see para 6 of the word Balabhadrarāma.

BANA (BANABHAṬTA) I. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 7th century A.D. He was a member of the assembly of emperor Harṣavardhana. ‘Harṣacarita’ (prose) is the most important work of Bāṇa. Though many of the descriptions in this book contain exaggerations it affords plenty of scope for investigation into the features of ancient Sanskrit literature. He has mentioned about Vyāsa, Bhāṭṭāra-hariścandra, Sātāvahana, Pravarasena, Bhāsa, Kālidasā and such others. Harṣacarita, in a sense, is a Romance. It is divided into eight Ucchāvasas. From the first two or three chapters informations could be had of Bāṇabhāṭta. His mother Rājyadevi died when he was a little boy. At the age of fourteen his father also died. After that he arrived at the palace of Harṣa. The story of Harṣacarita begins with the death of Prabhākara-Vardhana, father of Harṣa. The Book ends with the story incomplete! Harṣacarita is the only historic prose work available in Sanskrit.

BANA II. A mighty and powerful Asura.
2) Getting a boon. Bāṇa began his reign with the city of Śoṭapurā as his capital. Then he went to the vicinity of the Himalayas and began to do penance thinking of Siva. Siva made his appearance and asked him what he wanted. He should be considered as the son of Pārvatī and that he should be given thousand hands so as to destroy all his enemies. Siva granted him the boon. From that day onwards Pārvatī considered him as the younger brother of Subrahmanyā. He returned to his Kingdom and began to reign.
3) Battle with Śrī Kṛṣṇa and his fall. (See the word Aniruddha).
4) Other information. 1) In the Purāṇas Bāṇasura is often called by the name Mahākāla, which is the name of an attendant of Śiva. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 20).
   2) Sukrācārya (the teacher of the Asuras) always worked for the uplift of Bāṇa. (M.B., Śabhā Parva, Chapter 38, Stanza 29).
   3) In the Battle with Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Bāṇa was helped by Śiva, Subrahmanyā, and the Gods like Agni (fire) and others. (M.B., Śabhā Parva, Chapter 38).
   4) Śrī Kṛṣṇa cut down the thousand hands of Bāṇa with his Cakrāyudha (the wheel weapon). (M.B., Śabhā Parva, Chapter 38).
   5) Bāṇa often stood under the cover of the mountain of Krauṇḍa and attacked the devas (gods). So once Subrahmanyā had to cut the mountain Krauṇḍa with his arrows. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 82).

BANA III. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. Mention is made about this bāṇa in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 67.

BANA IV. An asura. During the regime of Śrī Rāma this Asura fought against the King and his brothers. A Śivalīṅga had been consecrated in the throat of this asura. So it was not possible for Lakṣmaṇa to defeat him though he had fought with him for so many days. Lakṣmaṇa heard an ethereal voice saying, “Unless and until the image of Śivalīṅga is removed from his throat Bāṇa could not be killed.” By the operation of arrows Lakṣmaṇa smashed the image of Śivalīṅga in his throat. With the same arrow he cut the throat of the asura also and thus Bāṇa was killed. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Uttara Kāṇḍa).

BANDHUDAYĀDA. A son who can claim to be a heir. The Purāṇas state about six different kinds of Bandhudayādas.
1) Soonyājata. A son born to one’s wife without a progenitor.
2) Prautā. A son born to one’s wife by the blessing of any holy man.
3) Putrikāputra. Son of one’s daughter.
4) Paunarbhava. A son born after a re-marriage.
5) Kāśī. A son born before marriage.
6) Bhāṣā. Son of one’s sister. All these sons are heirs. (Chapter 119, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

BANDHU MAN. A king of the country of Videha. (Chapter 6, Brahmāsāda Purāṇa).

BANDHUMATI. A lady attendant of Vāsavadattā, wife of Udayana. (See Vāsavadattā).

BARBARA. A country of purāṇic fame. The people living there were called Barbaras. They were considered as low caste people. There is also a statement that these people were born of the sides of the cow, Nandini. (Śloka 37, Chapter 174, Ādi Parva, M.B.). During the victory march of the Pāṇḍavas Bhīmasena conquered the Barbaras. Nakula also conquered these people. (Chapter 32, Śabhā Parva, M.B.). In the Rājasūya yajña of Dharmaputra the Barbaras were present with gifts.

BARBARIKA. Son of Maurī born of Ghatotkaca, son of Bhīma. Skanda Purāṇa gives the following details about him.

Barbarika was a Yakṣa in his previous life. Once the devas unable to bear the insufferable harm done to them by the Dānavas approached Lord Mahāviṣṇu for help and then the Yakṣa who was present there at that time said with arrogance. “There is no need for Viṣṇu to curb the activities of the Dānavas. I shall do it myself.” Hearing those arrogant words Brahmī cursed him saying that in his next life he would be killed by Viṣṇu.

True to the curse the Yakṣa was born in his next life as Barbarika, son of Ghatotkaca. To lessen the force of the curse Kṛṣṇa advised him to worship Devī. At last pleasing the goddess by the kindly help of a brahmin named Vījaya Barbarika killed a demoness called Mahājīvha and a demon of name Repalendra. The brahmin further gave him a weapon named Vibhūti which could split the vital centres of the body of an enemy and said, “Use this weapon against the Kauravas who oppose the Pāṇḍavas.”

Once Barbarika defeated his grandfather Bhīma in a battle and greatly grieved over the injury done started to commit suicide. Then Devī appeared before him and reminded him thus, “You will get salvation only if you are killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and so desist from committing suicide.”
The great war started and Barbarikā fighting on the side of the Pāṇḍavas started using his weapon Vībūtī. He sent it against all excepting the Pāṇḍavas, Kṛpā-cārya and Aśvatthāmā. He did not leave even Kṛṣṇa alone and the weapon fell on the feet of Kṛṣṇa also. Enraged at this Kṛṣṇa used his Sudarsana Gakra and cut off his head; at once Devī appeared and brought him to life. After the great battle on the advice of Kṛṣṇa Barbarikā went and lived in Guptakṣetra.

BARIṬANŚVABA. A king born of the dynasty of emperor Pṛthu. Descending in order: Pṛthu-Visvarāndhi-Gandarvā-Visvakarmaprajāpati. (Barhisado’trijah). (Manusmruti, Sloka 196, Chapter 3).

BARIṬSAD (S). A class of Manes. It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20 that some classes of manes such as Aṇgīni, Aṅgīni, Aṅgīni, Sāṅgīnī are said to have derived from Brahmā. Brahmā created two different sets of Pitras, Aṅgīni and Barhisā. (Chapter 10, Anīśam I, Viśu Purāṇa).

These Barhisās were members of the Yamasabha (council of the God of Death) to perform the mantric rites for the dead. The name brings into its fold the world of the seven sacred sages also. (Chapter 208, Sānti Parva, M.B.). It was through these Barhisās that Brahmā taught Śāvatradharma to a Brahmin who became well-known later as Jyeṣṭha. (Chapter 34, Sloka 45, Sānti Parva, M.B.).

Manusmruti states that the Barhisās are the sons of the Māhārṣi Atri and the Pitṛs of all the Dāsya, Dānavas, Yākṣas, Gandharvas, Uragas, Rākṣasas, Suvarṇas and Kinnaras.

- Dāsya-Sāvatradharma
- Dāsya-Dāsavṛṣṭha
- Dāsya-Suvarṇa-Sāvatradharma
- Dāsya-Gandharva-Suvarṇa-Sāvatradharma
- Dāsya-Kinnara-Sūrya-Sāvatradharma

BARIṬSAYATI. Wife of Priyavrata, son of Śvayambhuva Manu and brother of Uṭṭānapāda. She was the daughter of Viśvakarmaprajāpati. Priyavrata married another daughter of his named Surūpā. Surūpā delivered ten sons and a daughter. They were: Agnīdhra, Iḍhama-jīva, Yajñabāhu, Mahāvīra, Rukmaśukra, Ghṛtā-prṛṣṭha, Savana, Madhūṭthi, Vitihotra, Kavi and a daughter Urjjasvati. Priyavrata got of his wife Barhisāmati three sons, Uțta, Tamas and Raivata. These sons became in due course the Manvantarādhipatīs. (Aṣṭama Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

BĀRHAŚPATYA. The Nitiśāstra of Brahmā. Bryhaspati condensed and codified the laws of Ethics by Brahmā. It was compiled by Bhārhaspati. This book contains three thousand chapters. Mention is made about this Book in Mahābhārata, Śaṅti Parva, Chapter 59, Stanza 84.

BAṢKALA I. A king of the asuras.

1) Birth. Two sons, Hiranyākṣa and Hiranyakaśipu and a daughter Sīnihikā, were born to Kaśyapa prajāpati of his wife Diti. Sīnihikā became the wife of Vipracitti. Four sons, Anurāda, Hrāda, Prahlāda and Sāìnḥlāda, were born to Hiranyakaśipu. Hrāda was the son of Hrada. Three sons Āyuṣmān, Śibi and Bāṣkala were born to Saṅbhṛāḍa.

2) Later history. Bāṣkala became one of the ministers of the famous and mighty hero Mahīśāsura. Cikṣūra was the minister of law and order. Tāmra was the Finance Minister. Asīlōma was the Prime Minister and Bīṭāla the minister of foreign affairs. Udārkkā was the general of the army. Bāṣkala, Trinetra and Kālābandha were members of the administrative council. Sukrācārya was the minister of education. Bāṣkala played an important part in the battle between Mahīśāsura and Indra. When soldiers were killed by thousands, Mahīśāsura sent lastly, Bāṣkala and Durmuḥa. Bāṣkala engaged himself in a combat with Devī who fought on the side of the Devas. Bāṣkala became angry and aiming at the breast of Devī he gave a severe blow with his club. But Devī evaded him with her club and gave him a severe thrust with her trident at his breast and Bāṣkala fell dead. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19; Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

BAṢKALA II. One of the disciples of Vyāsa. (See the word Guruparampara).

BAṬU (VATU). A brahmin who reads the Gitā daily. Because in life he held fast to duty he was carried to heaven after death. The dead body was eaten away by birds and the bony skeleton remained. When rains started the empty skull was filled with water and a sinner passing that way touched the skull and the sinner got salvation. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttaṛa Kaṇḍa).

BAUDHĀYANA. A teacher-priest who acted according to Kalpa Śāstras (rituals of sacrifices).

BHADRA I. A king of Cedi who fought on the Pāṇḍava side. Karṇa killed him. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 48).

BHADRA II. One of the four elephants which, from Pāṭala, support the world. (See Aṣṭadīggajas).

BHADRA III. Son of Sraddhā, daughter born to Śvayambhuva Manu by his wife Satarūpā. Sṛaddhā had the following sons: Subha, Praśāda, Maitriputra, Abhaya, Dayātma, Sāntīja, Bhadra, Muda, Tūṣṭīja, Smaya, Purīṣṭa and Yoga. (Bhāgavata, Caturtha Skandha).

BHADRA IV. A yakṣa, one of the ministers of Kubera. He had to be born as a lion on account of the curse of sage Gautama.

BHADRA V. People of the kingdom of Bhadrāgaṇa are generally called Bhadras. It is stated in the Sābhā Parva that the Kṣatriya princes of Bhadrāgaṇa presented lots of money in connection with the Rājasūya yajña of Yuddhiṣṭhira.

BHADRA VI. A māhārṣi, son of Pramati, and father of Upamanyu.

BHADRA VII. A son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa of Kālindī. (Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha).

BHADRA I. See Bhadrakīlī.

BHADRA II. The beautiful daughter of King Kakṣīvān. She was married to King Vyūṣṭāsva of the Puru dynasty. When Bhadrā, in unbearable grief lamented the death of her husband his soul appeared on the skies and blessed her. Accordingly she got pregnant by the corpse of her husband and delivered six sons. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 120, Verse 38).

BHADRA III. One of the wives of Kubera. Kuntī once related the story of Bhadrā to Pāṇcālī and exhorted her to live like Bhadrā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 198, Verse 6).
BHADRA IV. The word Bhadra is used as another name of Subhadra, sister of Sri Kṛṣṇa in Verse 14, Chapter 218 of Adi Parva.

BHADRA V. Yet another Bhadra, daughter of the King of Viśālā is mentioned in Chapter 45 of the Mahābhārata. She did penance for getting the kingdom of Karuṣa, when Siśupāla, disguised as King Karuṣa appeared on the scene and carried her away.

BHADRA VI. There is reference to another Bhadra, daughter of Soma in Chapter 154 of the Anuśāsana Parva. She once did intense penance to secure Utathya as her husband. Athi maharsi, father of Soma, came to know of the desire of his granddaughter, and got her married to Utathya. Varuṇa once fell in love with Bhadra, who was an exceptionally beautiful woman, and abducted and concealed her in the sea. When Utathya returned to the Aśrama, his wife was missing. He understood what had happened to Bhadra by the light of his divine knowledge (television of mind). Burning with anger he drank up the sea completely dry, and Varuṇa shuddering with fear returned Bhadra to Utathya and profusely apologised. Thus ended the problem.

BHADRA VII. Verse 24, Chapter 7 of the Mausala Parva, states that Bhadra, one of the four wives of Vasudeva, father of Sri Kṛṣṇa died by jumping into the funeral pyre of her husband.

BHADRA VIII. A daughter of the King of Kāśi. The grandson of Sagara, a king of the Solar dynasty married Bhadra, daughter of the King of Kāśi. (Brahmanda Purāṇa, Chapter 96).

BHADRA IX. One Bhadra, daughter of Meru was married by King Agni inhra. She had eight sisters, viz. Meru Devī, Pratirūpā, Ugradamśī, Latā, Ramyā, Sāyāmā, Nāri and Devavītī. (Bhagavata, Pañcama Skandha).

BHADRA X. See Vīḍūṣaka.

BHADRA (M). A kingdom in ancient India. The Kṣatriya princes of Bhadram gave costly presents to Dharmaputra at the Rājasūya Yāga (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 14). Karṇa, in the course of his digyāvaya (conquest of countries) subjugated this kingdom. (Vana Parva, Chapter 254).

BHADRAĀHU. A king of Puruvaśīna. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata); BHADRAČĀRU. A son of Pradyumna. (Bhāgavata, Daśaṇa Skandha).

BHADRADEHA. A king. According to the Viṣṇu Purāṇa he was one of the sons of Vasudeva by Devakī.

BHADRAKA I. A king belonging to the Anga dynasty. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

BHADRAKA II. A brahmin outcaste. This brahmin, who spent his whole life in committing sins, by chance, took māgha bath for three days at Prayāga, and thus got himself sanctified.

King Virasena, who was then ruling the Avanti kingdom had earned ample sanctity by the performance of seventeen Aśvamedha yāgas. The Deaths of King Virasena and Bhadrika took place on one and the same day. Though Bhadrika was immortal in his life, he went to heaven along with Virasena after death as he had taken the māgha bath. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttarakaṇḍa).

BHADRAKĀLI. Another form of Pārvatī.

1) General. Lord Śiva, on hearing about the self-immolation in fire of his wife, Śatī at the famous yajña conducted by Dakṣa rushed in all anger to the spot, and beat the earth with his matted hair, and there ensnared two forces called Virabhadra and Bhadraḍāli. This Bhadraḍāli was really Śatī or Pārvatī in another form.

2) Bhadraḍāli and Kaviṣa. There is a story in the Daśama Skandha of Bhagavata that Kaviṣa took away from the room in which Devaki had delivered Śri Kṛṣṇa the child of Yaśodā by whom Kṛṣṇa had been replaced, and dashed the child against a rock, and that the child then escaped from his clutches and rose up to the sky. That child was Bhadraḍāli in another form. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 12).

3) Kampa, Laṅkālakṣṇi and Bhadraḍāli. Laṅkālakṣṇi, who was guarding the city of Laṅkā, was the first to prevent Hanumān from entering the city. Tamil Purāṇas aver that this Laṅkālakṣṇi was an incarnation of Bhadraḍāli. Hanumān thrashed Laṅkālakṣṇi with his left hand at which she vomited blood and fell down unconscious. On regaining consciousness remembrance of the past occurred to her, and after thanking Hanumān, who restored her to her former form she returned to Kaśṭi. She complained to Śiva that she could not witness the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war. Then Śiva told her thus:

'You go to the Drāviḍa country and be put up in the 'Svayambhūlinga' temple there. I shall be born there as Kampa, compose the Rāmayaṇa in Tamil and get conducted the dolls-play. Then you would be able to enjoy the story of Śri Rāma, especially the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war, both by hearing and seeing the same in better manner than by actually seeing the war.

Bhadraḍāli acted according to this bidding of Śiva. There lived a great scholar named Saṅkaranārāyaṇa close to the temple. His wife was Ciṅkāraṇavalli. Lord Śiva, as decided upon previously was born as the son of Ciṅkāraṇavalli, who had become a widow while she was worshipping 'Svayambhūdeva' for the gift of a child. But, Ciṅkāraṇavalli, who feared scandal in her, a widow, becoming a mother, for sook the child in the temple precincts and left the place. One Gaṇeṣaakaunta sighted the orphan child, and took it to Jayappavallan, the Kaunta chief. The Kaunta chief, who was without children brought up the orphan child as though it had been his own child. Since the child was recovered from the foot of the flagstaff it was named Kampa. Kampa, who was very intelligent even in his infancy, but lazy by nature turned out to be a great scholar and good poet in Tamil by the time he grew up to be a youth, and he became, consequently a prominent member in the 'poets' assembly' of King Cola. When his name was added the plural suffix 'r' as a token of great respect he came to be known as Kampar.

Once King Cola asked Kampar and Oṭṭakkūṭṭa another member of the poets' assembly to compose in Tamil poetry the story of Śri Rāma. The King's direction was that. Oṭṭakkūṭṭa should compose his poem up to the incident, Setubandhana (building a bridge in the sea up to Laṅkī) and Kampar should write the story of the war in his poem. Oṭṭakkūṭṭa completed the task allotted to him within six months. But Kampar had not attempted to write even a single line. Having been informed about the matter the King ordered that the poem, Rāma-yaṇa should be recited in the assembly the very next day itself. Kampar, who began writing his poem the same day with the object of completing it in the night itself fell asleep without writing anything at all.
Kampar awoke early in the morning and saw a divine form disappearing from his room, and exclaimed, "Oh! mother! you have slipped away!" To this the divine form replied, "Oh Kampar! I have finished writing." And, then the divine form vanished completely.

When Kampar got completely out of sleep and looked about he found the Rāmāyaṇa story fully written in verse on his desk. Kampar inferred that the poem was composed by Śāradābhagavatī, the presiding deity of learning and literature, and he was wonder-struck. He recited the poem in the royal assembly, and the King and others too were wonder-struck. And, afterwards, according to the orders of the King the story of the war (Yudhākaṇḍa Kathā) began to be exhibited as doll-play in the presence of the idol of the Devī in the temple. Thus Śiva incarnated himself as Kampar, recited the story of the Rāma-Rāvanā war in the temple, and hearing it Bhadrakāli danced.

The above is the chief legend about Kampar.

BHADRĀKALIPPTU. (Pāṭṭu-Song). Folk song very popular in Kerala temples. The practice is to sing songs in praise of Bhadrakāli.

BHADRĀKĀRA. A king of ancient India; he once left his kingdom, in fear of Jārasandha, and took refuge in South India. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 26).

BHADRĀKARNEŚVARA(M). A sacred place. He who visits this place conducts worship will never have to face ill fate. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 39).

BHADRĀMATĀ (BHADRĀMĀNA). Daughter born to Kaśyapa prajāpati of his wife, Krodhavās. The ten daughters of Krodhavās are: Mrgi, Mrgamandā, Hari, Bhadrāmatā, Mātaṅgi, Sārdudū, Śvetā, Surabhi, Surās and Kadru. (Sarga 14, Arānyaka Kāṇḍa, Vāmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

BHADRĀMATI. A very poor brahmin. This brahmin had six wives and two hundred and forty-four daughters. (Nārada Purāṇam).

Once, hearing the glory of Bhūdāna (giving away land free to the undeserved) he was much impressed and from then onwards he became filled with a strong desire to give land free to the poor. He had no land of his own. But he went to the king of Kausambi and begged for some land which when received was immediately given as gift to poor brahmans. After that he went and bathed in the Pāpānasana tirtha situated in the mount of Veṅkaṭala. Bhadrāmati got salvation by this good deed. (Skanda 2,1,10).

BHADRĀSSĀKA. A name of Subrahmanya. It is the figure of Subrahmanya in the shape of a goat that is known as Bhadrāssāka. (Śloka 4, Chapter 228, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHADRĀŚALĀ(M). A forest on the top of the Mountain Bhadrāśavārṣa which lies to the east of Mahāmeru. There is a tree called Kālāmra in this forest. This is a very sacred tree standing miles high above other trees and is being worshipped by the Vṛddhācāraṇas. By worshipping this tree the men have become white and majestic and by drinking a juice prepared from its leaves the women keep themselves eternally young. Chapter seven of Bhīṣma Parva says like this about this tree: "Kālāmra stands towering miles high bearing flowers and fruits at all times of the year. The Vṛddhācāraṇas worshipping it are white, strong and majestic. The women drinking its juice are lotus-complexioned, beautiful, Moonfaced, well versed in music and dance and having a life-span of over a thousand years, remaining young all the time."
enquired about the incident. On hearing the story from the woman Śyāmabālā got instructions regarding that Puyavatra from the old woman and started observing it. Within four weeks she got married and went to her husband’s house. After Śyāmabālā’s departure from the palace the wealth of the King began to wane and they became so poor that at the request of the queen the King Bhadrāśrāvā went to his daughter to ask for help. The daughter gave his father a block of solid gold draped in a paper. But on his return to the palace when he opened the bundle he found there a block of charcoal instead of gold. On seeing the mishap the king burst into a cry.

Suratīcandrikā then went to her daughter and was well received and attended to. During her stay there the Puyavatra day of the month came and the daughter tried her best to make her mother also observe the same. But the poverty-stricken queen broke the fast without her daughter’s knowledge by eating what remained in the dishes of the children. But the next month Śyāmabālā compelled her mother to observe the fast strictly and so Suratīcandrikā took the Vrata successfully. A few days after that Suratīcandrikā returned home and to her amazement found everything in plenty there once more. (Chapter 11, Bhaga 2, Padma Purāṇa).

BHADRASṆEṆYĀ. A Hehaya King who was ruling a state with Māhiṃsati as capital. He had fought many wars with Divodāsa, king of Kāṣī. (See under Divodāsa).

BHADRASṆAYA I. A king of Pūruvaṇa. He was the son of Rāhovalī. Bhadrāśva had ten sons: Rāṣeyu, Kṛṣeyu, Sannateyu, Hṛtyeyu, Citeyue, Shanditeyue, Dharmeyu, Sammiteyu, Kṛteyue and Matināra. (Chapter 278, Agni Purāṇa).

Once Agsaya went and stayed for seven days in the palace of Bhadrāśva and his wife Kāntimati. Every day Agsaya used to speak in glowing terms about Kāntimati and asked about the reason for it he replied: “In her previous birth Kāntimati was a servant girl in a wealthy house. The master of the house once entrusted her with the task of seeing that none of the temple lights went out on the night of Dwādaśī in the month of Tulā (Āsvina—October). She did her duty so willingly and sincerely that she was born as a queen and you a King”. Then Agsaya gave them instructions about that Vrata which both Bhadrāśva and Kāntimati observed sincerely, receiving as a result benediction from Viṣṇu. (Vaiṣṇu Purāṇa).

BHADRASṆAYA II. Agnīdhra, son of Priyavatra and grandson of Manu got nine sons of his wife Purvaciti, a celestial maiden. One of the sons was Bhadrāśva. His brothers were Nābhi, Kīnkapuruśa, Harī, Ilāvṛta, Ramyaka, Hīrṇmaya, Kura and Ketumāla. The country ruled by Bhadrāśva was called Bhadrāśva lying to the east of the mountain Gandhamādāna. (Pañcarāma Skandha, Bhāgavata).

BHADRASṆVĀ. An island near the mountain of Meru. Dharmanruta was ruling this land and Saṅjava once described this land to Dvītrastra. (Chapter 14, Sānti Parva and Chapter 7, Būmśa Parva).

BHADRATANAV. An immoral brahmin. On the advice of Danu he became a devotee of Viṣṇu and attained salvation. (Padma Purāṇa, Kriya, Chapter 17).

BHADRATUNGA. A sacred place; a dip in the holy waters of this place would entitle one to Brahmaloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 80).

BHADRAVĀṬA. The abode of Pārvaṇi and Pārvaṇavā. The glory of it is described in Chapter 82, Vana Parva, M.B.

BHADRĀYU. A king who was a devotee of Śiva. He was a leper and in his life he suffered much, even the pangs of death. His wife was the dutiful and good natured lady, Kirtimālī. On the sixteenth birthday of Bhadrāyū Śiva appeared before him in the name of R̥ṣabha and blessed him after instructing him on the precepts of R̥ṣadharma. He further gave him a dagger and a conch as weapons and twelve thousand elephants. With the might of all these, Bhadrāyū became unconquerable. (Śiva Purāṇa, Satarudrārasaṁhitā).

One day, while Bhadrāyū was ruling the country, Śiva came in the guise of a tiger and carried away the wife of a brahmin. Bhadrāyū, a firm protector of his subjects gave his own wife to the brahmin and prepared himself to give up his life in fire. Śiva greatly pleased at this selfless act of Bhadrāyū befitting a true King appeared before him and blessed him and gave back the brahmin his wife.

Bhadrāyū in his previous birth was a King called Mandara and Kirtimālī in her previous birth was Piṅgalī, queen of Mandara. (Skanda Purāṇa, 3.3.12; 9.14).

BHAGA I.

1) General. One of the twelve Ādityas born as sons of Kaśyapa praJayati by his wife, Aditi. Viṣṇu, Śakra, Arjaman, Dhātā, Varuṇa, Puṣa, Vivasvān, Savitṛ, Mitra, Varuṇa, Viṣṇu and Bhagā—these are the Dvādaśādityas, and they were Devas famous as Tuṣṭas in the last Cākṣuṣamanvantara.

2) Other information. (1) Bhaga married Siddhi, and the couple begot three sons called Mahimman, Viṣhup and Prabhup and three daughters called Suvratā, Varārōhā, and Aśīs.

(2) Bhaga participated in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (M.B., Aśī Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 66).

(3) At the time of Khāṇḍavāda (burning of the Khāṇḍava forest) Bhaga, as a supporter of Indra, was fighting Arjuna and Śrī Kṛṣṇa, sprang upon the enemies with sword in hand. (M.B., Aśī Parva, Chapter 236, Verse 36).

(4) Bhaga shines forth in Indra’s assembly. (M.B., Sābhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 22).

(5) Bhaga was also present at the installation of Subrahmanya as commander of the fighting forces. (M.B., Sālya Parva, Chapter 45).

(6) After Devayūga (Dev age), the Devas assembled together and decided upon the share of vajaṇas due to each of them, and in thus fixing shares they left out Rudra. Enraged at this neglect Rudra made a bow and fought against the Devas. During the fight Rudra, with the point of his bow, extracted the hands of Savitṛ, the eyes of Bhaga and the teeth of Puṣa. Ultimately the Devas satisfied and pleased. Rudra, who returned to Bhaga and others the eyes etc. which had been extracted. (M.B., Saupitka Parva).

BHAGA II. Certain Purāṇas refer to Bhaga as one of the eleven Rudras. But, this view is not universally accepted.
BHAGA III. A vedic god considered to be the lord of wealth, prowess and happiness. Bhaga is also one of the six Adityas mentioned in the Rigveda, viz. Bhaga, Mitra, Aryaman, Varuna, Daksha and Aina. (Rigveda, 2.27.)

BHAGADĀ. An attendant (woman) of Subrahmaṇya. (Saḷyavan Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 26.)

BHAGADATTYA. Bhagadatta was King of Prājyotisapura. Mahābhārata furnishes the following information about him.

1) Bhagadatta was born from a limb of the asura called Bīṣkala. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 9.)
2) He was present at the wedding of Pāncalī. (Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 12.)
3) Known also as lord of the Yavanas (Yavanādhīpa). Bhagadatta was a friend of Pāṇḍu, and that friendship was transferred to Yudhiṣṭhira too. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 14.)
4) The triumphal tour of Arjuna in connection with the Rājaśya yajña performed by Yudhiṣṭhira evoked feelings of jealousy in the heart of Bhagadatta, and he fought against Arjuna. The courage and prowess Arjuna exhibited in the fight astonished Bhagadatta, who congratulated Arjuna on his supreme courage and admitting defeat yielded to Arjuna. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 7.)
5) Bhagadatta, along with the Yavanas was present at the Rājaśya of Yudhiṣṭhira. He also made presents of horses of very high pedigree and very costly gems etc. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 14.)
6) Karna once defeated Bhagadatta in fight. (Vana Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 5.)

BHAGAVAD GĪṬĀ.

1) General. The Bhagavad Gīṭā is a poem consisting of 650 verses divided into eighteen chapters. The Gīṭā covers chapters 25–45 in the Bhīṣma Parva of the Mahābhārata, and it is in the form of a talk or discussion between Arjuna and Lord Kṛṣṇa. The mighty armies of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas were arrayed on opposite sides for mortal combat on the field of Kurukṣetra when Arjuna, overcome by grief at the prospect of fathers, brothers, preceptors and other Kṣitigarbha fighting and killing one another, expressed to his charioteer, Śrī Kṛṣṇa his aversion to fighting. But, the Lord pointed out to the unwilling Arjuna, by unique and various arguments, his imperative duty, under the circumstance, to fight and fight in heroic earnestness with the result that Arjuna shed his disinclination to fight and entered the fray, which ended in the ultimate victory of the Pāṇḍavas. And the dialogue between Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa, and especially the great teaching of Kṛṣṇa on the field form the theme of the Gīṭā. The Gīṭā contains three spheres or fields of teaching; the karma yoga (philosophy of action), jīva yoga (philosophy of knowledge) and Bhakti yoga (philosophy of devotion). The three yogas are treated each in six chapters. The theme of the Gīṭā is philosophy, and it is revered as one of the most sublime philosophical texts of the Hindu religion. Many a great thinker and philosopher like Ācārya Śaṅkara, Rāmānuja and Madhvācārya have annotated, and written commentaries on the Gīṭā. There is a school of thought which believes that the Gīṭā was taught to Arjuna by Kṛṣṇa himself on the battle-field in something like tabloid form and that Vyāsa elaborated the mighty teaching in its present form. The poet, Bāna, who flourished in the 7th century A.D., and the great Saṅkara, who lived in the 8th century believed that the Gīṭā was sung by Kṛṣṇa himself. But there are some modern thinkers, who argue that the Gīṭā was composed some time between the third and fourth centuries B.C. and it was interpolated in the Mahābhārata in the second century A.D.

The Gīṭā has translations in all the languages of the world. The whole world has acclaimed it as a very weighty and valuable contribution in the sphere of philosophy.

2) Theme of the Gītā. It has been mentioned above that the Gītā forms chapters 25-45 in the Bhīṣma Parva of the Mahābhārata. The subject-matter of each chapter of the Gītā is given below.

Chapter 25. Arjuna ṣīṣāda yoga:—Both the armies take positions in Kurukṣetra. At the sound of the conches Arjuna becomes dejected and sorrowful at the prospect of killing relations, preceptors and kinsmen.

Chapter 26. Sāmkhya yoga:—The greatness and majesty of the Sāmkhya and the Karma yogas.

Chapter 27. Karma yoga:—The need for action according to the Jñāna and the Karma yogas.

Chapter 28. Jñānakarma Viśhāga yoga:—Power of Saguo Brahma (Brahma with attributes), Nīkāma-karma yoga (Action without an eye on the result) spiritual greatness of various yajñas.

Chapter 29. Sannyāsa yoga:—Sāmkhya yoga, Nīkāma-karma yoga, Jñāna yoga, Jñāna yoga with Bhakti.

Chapter 30. Atmasamyama yoga:—Nīkāmakarma yoga, Atmahārāna, Jñānayoga.

Chapter 31. Jñāna yoga:—Jñānavijñānas, origin of the world, the Daiva and Asura aspects of Ṣiva, worship of other Devas.

Chapter 32. Tārakabhuma yoga:—Seven questions of Arjuna about Brahma, Ātmatattva and Karma. Śrī Kṛṣṇa’s answers thereinto. Bhakti yoga, the Śukla and the Kṛṣṇa mārgas.

Chapter 33. Rājārāja guhya yoga:—Jñāna and Viṣṇu, origin of the world, Ṣivaraṣṭavīra, Śakānitisikamopāśana, Bhagavadbhakti.

Chapter 34. Viḥūti yoga:—Bhagavān’s Viḥūti (Divine attributes), Bhakti yoga.

Chapter 35. Viṣvarūpa-adāśana yoga:—Arjuna’s prayer to be shown Viṣvarūpa (cosmic form), description of Viṣvarūpa by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Saṁjaya, Śrī Kṛṣṇa reveals Viṣvarūpa to Arjuna; fear-stricken at the sight, Arjuna sings the praise of Kṛṣṇa.

Chapter 36. Bhoktiyoga:—The great benefits of worshipping God with form and without form.

Chapter 37. Keśtrakṣetrajja Viśhāga yoga:—Description of Keśtrakṣetrajja with Jñāna, and of Prakṛti and Puruṣa.

Chapter 38. Gomatrāyavīhāga yoga:—The greatness of Jñāna; world’s origin from Prakṛti and Puruṣa, the three guṇas, sattva, rajas and tamas; means to attain god; marks of Yugaṭīputruṣa.

Chapter 40. Daivāṣa ṣampadviḥāga yoga:—Good actions, evil deeds, scientific actions and unscientific actions.

Chapter 41. Śraddhārāyavīhāga yoga:—Descriptions of Scientific tapas, diet, yajñatapas and dāna. Interpretation of Om.

Chapter 42. Mokṣasanyāsa yoga:—Tyāga, Sāmkhya theory, Vairādhārmas, jñānaniṣṭhā, Nīkāmakarmayoga with bhakti and the greatness of the Gītā.

(Bhagavān and Bhagavati mean Paramātma (universal self) and Prakṛti (Nature and its modifications) respectively. Prakṛti is also called by the name Sakti. The following elucidation once given by Mahāvīra about Bhagavān and Bhagavati is greatly illuminating.

Time, space, atmosphere and the universe (Brahmāṇḍam) are, just like Paramātma, eternal. This is the truth and reality. Below this eternal Gokula exists Vaiṣṇavāloka, which also is, like the former, eternal. Just like this, Prakṛti, which is a sport to Brahmā and is also without beginning or end (Sanātani) too is eternal. In the same manner as flame exists in fire inseparable from it, moonlight in the moon, beauty in the lotus flower and brightness of the sun, so does nature exist in soul inseparable therefrom. In the same way as the goldsmith cannot make gold ornaments without gold and the potter cannot make pots with clay, the Paramātma will not in the least be able to function unaided by Prakṛti. Prakṛti (Nature, Devī) is all powerful. ‘Para’ becomes powerful enough to do everything when he joins the Devī.

The sound ‘Sa’ means welfare and good fortune, and the sound ‘ki’ means prowess. Hence “Sakti” means the embodiment of welfare and prowess or she, who is the giver of welfare and prowess. Bhagavatī combines in herself knowledge, affluence, riches, fame and strength. As the Paramātma is always with and inseparable from such Bhagavatī he is called Bhagavān also. When Prakṛti and Paramātma remain combined it is called Parabrahma, which possesses neither form nor attributes. And, when Prakṛti and Puruṣa separate, of their own accord, they assume forms and attributes.

The above is Śaiva doctrine in a nut-shell. The Vaiṣṇavas do not accept this position. They ask, “How is it possible to have brightness or effulgence without there being an effulgent one?’ Therefore, the Vaiṣṇavas believe in the existence, at the centre of an effulgent sphere, of a thing possessing the utmost effulgence and brightness equal to that of Brahmā. This ‘thing’—Deva—is very efficient and effective to remedy sorrows due to birth, death, disease etc. and to him the life-time of Brahma is just one minute only. This Deva is called Paramātma, Parabrahma and Kṛṣṇa by the Vaiṣṇavas. ‘Kṛṣṇa’ means maximum devotion (love) towards Paramātma, and ‘na’ means he who becomes slave to such devotion. Hence Kṛṣṇa means he who becomes a slave to the love of his devotess. There is another meaning also for the word Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa means all and ‘na’ means seed or root; and thus Kṛṣṇa means he, who is the root of everything. In the very beginning there was only this Kṛṣṇa; and this Lord, subject only to his own will and pleasure, divided himself into two, the left side becoming woman and the right side man. (Devi Bhagavata, Navama Sandha).

BHAGINI. A word used in addressing women. Verse 129 in chapter two of the Manusūtra lays down that the wife of another person and women who are not one’s relatives should be addressed either as Bhavati, Subhage or Bhagini.

BHAGIRATHA

2) Recluse. Many years had not lapsed after his coronation as King when, in the heart of Bhagiratha spiritual thoughts began to crop up. A great sage called Tritula was his guru. Once Bhagiratha asked the guru what was the means to get rid of worldly sorrows, and the guru replied as follows:—
The ego will be annihilated when the tendencies and cravings towards objects of the senses are absolutely suppressed and the whole and perfect truth is realised through knowledge, the practice of concentration etc. The ego will not disappear as long as one does not become one's real self by completely overcoming the sense of pride, shame etc. which form the outer case of worldly life. The egoless state is the ultimate achievement and most supreme state. Oh! Bhagiratha! if you would get rid of sentiments like pride etc., give up all attachment to material objects, become fearless and gift away, with thoughts concentrated on the inner self, all your wealth to enemies, and then move among those enemies, without any sense of ego and pride about this material body, and take alms from them (enemies) and also give up me, who am your preceptor in the matter of knowledge; then you will become the most sublime Brahma. This advice of the guru affected him so much that Bhagiratha, holding his duties firmly in mind, engaged himself in spiritual practices, and after spending some time thus he performed, according to rules, the Agniṣṭoma yajña aimed at gifting away everything. All wealth like cows, land, horses, gold etc. were distributed in gifts to noble brahmins and the poor folk according to their eligibility for the same. Within three days he had gifted away everything except the clothes he was wearing. And, then he invited his neighbouring enemy king and gave to him, without the least hesitation, the kingdom which had been bereft of all wealth. The ministers and other citizens felt very sorry about the whole thing. But, Bhagiratha left the country at once for other places having with him only the clothes he was wearing. He spent his days in various places and forests where he was not known even by name. Ere long, Bhagiratha attained ultimate spiritual solace. And, then he accidentally came to his former kingdom, which was then being ruled by the enemy King. The ministers and other citizens to whose houses he went begging for alms recognised him, and with sorrow unbearable they appealed to him to accept the throne again and rule the country. Bhagiratha rejected their request, and, after staying there for some time, he started for other places. During this wandering of his he met his old preceptor, Tritula, and both of them, in company, toured for some time cities and forests. They felt it very painful to keep on to their body like that. They thought like this: 'Why should the body be kept like this? What if this material object continues to exist or perishes? But let it (the body) continue as long as it exists without in any way being against the order of things and ethical practices'. And, in this frame of mind they traversed the forests. Now, the minister of a distant kingdom who was on the look out for a successor to the King who had died heirless, persuaded Bhagiratha to accept the Kingship of that country. The ministers of Bhagiratha's former Kingdom also now requested him to resume his old kingship, especially since its new ruler had already expired. Bhagiratha obliged them, and became once again King of his own country. (Jāhsāsāyāham).
3) Bhagirathaprayatnam, (Himalayan or Herculean effort).
Sagara, an old predecessor of Bhagiratha had two wives called Keśini and Sumati. Keśini had one son named Asamanjas and Sumati 60,000 sons. Sagara once conducted an Aśvamedha yajña in the Indo-Gangetic plane, when Indra stole away the sacrificial horse and kept it quite near to sage Kapila who was doing tapas in Pātāla. The 60,000 sons of Sagara set out in search of the horse and found it out in Pātāla. At the sight of the horse they shouted themselves hoarse. Enraged at this sage Kapila reduced those sons of Sagara to ashes in the fire which emanated from his eyes.

After entrusting Asamanjas with the duty of performing the funeral rites of his 60,000 sons Sagara expired. Asamanjas transferred that duty on to Aīśumān, and he to Bhagiratha. Bhagiratha did penance on the sea-shore concentrating his mind on Gaṅgādevi. The Devi appeared before Bhagiratha and asked him to choose what boon he would, and he requested the Devi to perform the funeral rites of 60,000 sons of Sagara remaining in the form of ashes in Pātāla. To this Gaṅgādevi replied that the earth will not be able to withstand the impact of her powerful flow, but she shall, if Śiva permits, flow into his matted hair. And, Gaṅgādevi asked Bhagiratha to first get that permission. This did not dishearten Bhagiratha, who went to Mount Kailāśa to do penance so that Śiva might grant him his prayer. He thus did penance for 1000 years. Śiva appeared to him and agreed to receive the rushing flow of Gaṅgā water on his matted head. And, accordingly Śiva stood in position to receive the rushing waters of Gaṅgā, and Gaṅgā flowed on to his head. Even the most powerful flow of Gaṅgā water on his head did not cause Śiva to move from his position even by a hair's breadth. This awakened the conceit of Gaṅgādevi, understanding which Śiva contained her on his head. Without finding any outlet the waters of river Gaṅgā flowed along the matted hairs of Śiva for thousand years. So, Bhagiratha had once again to please Śiva. Thus pleased again Śiva shook his matted head and one drop of water fell on the ground, and that is the river Ganges in North India. The Gaṅgā flowed along plane ground to Pātāla and performed the funeral rites of Sagara's sons. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 108; Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Canto 42; Brahmāṇḍa purāṇa, Chapter 97; Bhāgavata, Navama Skanda, Kampa Rāmāyaṇa (Tamil), Yuddha Kāṇḍa; Padma Purāṇa, Part 4, Chapter 21).
4) Other Information.
(1) Bhagiratha is a member of Yama's assembly and serves him. (M.B., Sābhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 11).
(2) Śiva bestowed boons on him. (Vana Parva, Chapter 180, Verse 1).

*According to verse 12, Chapter 25, of Vana Parva, Bhagiratha is the son of Dīlīta. Pat rest of the Purāṇas refer to him as the son of Aīśumān.
(3) Bhagiratha had faith in the great efficacy of making a gift of cows. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 76, Verse 25).

(4) He married his daughter to Kautsa. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 131, Verse 25).

(5) Once Bhagiratha made a gift of one lakh of cows with calves to Maharsi Kohala, and attained Uttamala. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 27).

BHAGIRATHI. Another name of Gaṅgā. (See under Gaṅgā).

BHAGNARATHA. A synonym of Citraratha. (See Citraratha).

BHAGURU. A man of great erudition, Bhaguri was noted for his proficiency as a Sarvāṣastra Pandit (scholar of all sciences), Vyākaraṇa-पकरा (grammarian), Kośakāra (etymologist), Jyotiṣastraśajña (Astronomer) and Srāṅgikāra (authority on Srāṅgi).

BHAIKAV. One of the eight Asuras. They are: Rudrārṣṭikā, Rudracandana, Chātra, Mahālakṣmi, Siddhācārnupālīka, Brahmāśāstraśajña, Rājaiśāstraśajña, and Rājapaddhāta. All these are the eight different forms of Brahma. (See the word DEVI).

BHAIYAMA. A Yadava King, whose father was Satvata and mother Kausalyā, and they had, beside Bhajamana, another son called Satvata or Andhaka. Bhajamana married the two daughters of Śrījaya, named Bāhyakā and Upābhagyakā by whom he got six sons. (Bhagavata, Navama Skandha).

BHAIYA. An ācārya in the line of the Rāma disciples of Vyāsa. Bhajya studied Vālikhilaśabhīta at the feet of his guru Bīskali. (Bhagavata, Dvādaśa Skandha).

BHAKSAKA. A Śūdra sinner. In Padma Purāṇa the following story is related about this Śūdra. Bhakṣaka who was once going aimlessly somewhere felt extremely thirsty, and quenched his thirst by drinking water which he found near the small platform raised for the holy Tulasi shrub. The sanctity of this platform thus washed away all the sin attached to him. Some time later he was killed by a forest-dweller, and he attained svargaloka (heaven). Bhakṣaka, in his previous birth, was a king who led a voluptuous life, and he, once, robbed a very beautiful woman of her chastity, and it was as a punishment for the sin that the King had to be born, in the next birth, in the womb of a Śūdra woman. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhrāma Kaṇḍa, Chapter 22).

BHAKTI. A Devi born in Drāvīḍa deśa (Southern India). Once Devi, along with her two sons, Jñāna and Vairāgya, started on a walking tour to Gokula and Vṛndāvana via Karnājaka, Mahāśīla and Gūrjara (Gujarat). During the long tour the mother and her sons became aged. But, as soon as they set foot on Gokula and Vṛndāvana old age quitted Bhakti and she became young again. But, her sons remained old. So the mother requested Nārada to turn them young again. Nārada read out to them the Vedas, the Vedānta (Upaniṣad) and the Bhagavat Gītā, all to no purpose. Bhakti’s sons still remained old. Then Sanaka, Sanandā and Sanatkumāra asked Nārada to read out the Bhagavata to them. Nārada did so, and the sons of Bhakti Devi became young again. (Padma Purāṇa).

BHĀ LANDANA. A king. Though by birth he was a brahmin he became a Vaiṣya because of doing things belonging to the Vaiṣya community like trade and commerce. (Mārkandeyā Purāṇa). According to the Bhāgavata, Viṣṇu Purāṇa and Vāyu Purāṇa Bhālandana was the son of Nābhaṅga.

BHALLĀTA. A king of the line of Bharata. He was the son of King Vīvaksena and father of King Bhīṣaṇa. (Navama Skandha, Bhagavata).
BHALLĀTA (M). A place of habitation in ancient India.
Bhimasena conquered this land during his victory march.
(Śloka 5, Chapter 30, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

BHĀLUKI I. A Rāi, who was a member of Yudhiṣṭhira’s assembly.
(Śabha Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 15).

BHĀLUKI II. A mahaṛi. He also accompanied the Pándavas to Dvaitavana.
(Vana Parva, Chapter 27).

BHĀLUKI III. An acārya. He was a disciple of Lāngalī, a member of the Sīma line of disciples of Vyāśa.
(Vāyu Purāṇa).

BHAṂAMA. A critic who lived in the sixth century A.D.
He was one of the top critics in the Sanskrit language.
His important work is ‘Kāvyālāmikāra’. This is also called Bhāmālāmikāra by a few. There are six chapters in this.
The first chapter deals with Kāvyāśārīra, the second and third with Alāṃkāra, the fourth with Kāvyadoṣa the fifth with Nyāya and the sixth with Sadāsvuddhi. As against Danḍī Bhamāma separates ‘Kathā’ from ‘Ākhyāyikā’.
According to him the requisites of a good Kāvyā are sweetness, pleasantness and liveliness. Danḍī prescribes ten attributes for a good Kāvyā.
Bhāṃma is of opinion that Vakroṭṭi is no alāṃkāra at all. In a wider sense it is ‘atīśayoktī’ (exaggeration). But Bhāṃma admits it has a place in Kāvyā.

BHAṂINI. Wife of Avikṣit, King of Vaiśāli.
The famous Marutta is the son born to this couple. The Mīrkaṇḍeyā Purāṇa states that Bhaṃini once went to Nāgaloka to give refuge to the serpents there.

BHĀṆAVI. A river. Śri Rāma and Lākṣmāṇa on their way to the forests from Citrakūṭa crossed this river, Bhāṇavī. (Sarga 32, Ayodhya Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyāna).

BHĀṆAYANI. A mahaṛi. This sage sits in Devaloka and worships Indra. (Śloka 12, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva, M.B.)

BHĀṆDIRA (M). An ancient forest. It was in this forest situated in Anbhādi that Śri Kṛṣṇa with his cowherd chums conducted his childhood exploits. There was a very huge tree of name Bhāṇdira in this forest and it was under this great tree that Kṛṣṇa and his friends met daily for their play. This forest is on the northern bank of Ganges in front of Kesiṅgaṭṭa in Vṛndāvana. The Purāṇas proclaim that it was here that Brahmā conducted the marriage of Kṛṣṇa with Rādhā.
(Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva, Dākṣiṇāyata Pāṭha, M.B.).

BHANGA. A serpent born in the Taksāka dynasty.
Bhanga was burnt to ashes at the Serpent Yajña performed by King Janamejaya. (M.B., Chapter 57, Verse 9).

BHANGAKĀRA II. A king of the Yadu dynasty. He attended the grand celebrations held at Mount Raivata. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 218, Verse 11).

BHANGASURI I. Another name of King Rūtparna.

BHANGASVAN (BHANGASVANA). A king in ancient India. For the story of his transformation into a woman refer to para 42 under ‘Indra’.

BHĀṆU I. A son born to Kṛṣṇa of Satyabhāma. (Daśama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

BHĀṆU II. Son of Dyaus; this Bhāṇu was a guru of Śūrya.
(Śloka 42, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

BHĀṆU III. A devagandharva born to Kaśyapa prajāpati of his wife Pṛithā.
(Śloka 47, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

BHĀṆU IV. He is the son of an agni called Pāncajanya.
He is born of the spiritual essence of Angiras and Cyavana. This Bhāṇu is called Manu and Brhadbhānu. (Chapters 220 and 221, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHĀṆU V. A king of ancient Brāhṛta. This king took a flying tour of Kuruṇa in Indra’s aeroplane to witness the battle between Arjuna and Drona. (Śloka 9, Chapter 56, Virāṭa Parva, M.B.).

BHĀṆU VI. A yādava. He learnt the art of archery from Pradīyuma. Sahadeva married the daughter of this Bhāṇu called Bhānumati. (Vana Parva, 180, 27 and Harivāṁśa 2.20.12).

BHĀṆUDATTA. A brother of Śakuni. In the Mahābhārata battle he fought against Bliṃa and died.
(Śloka 24, Chapter 157, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

BHĀṆUDAVE. A warrior of Pāṇḍḍala state. Karṇa killed him in battle. (Śloka 15, Chapter 48, Karṇa Parva).

BHĀṆUKOṆA. A demon. He fought against Subrahmanyaya. (Asura Khaṇḍa, Skanda Purāṇa).

BHĀṆUMĀṆI. A king of the dynasty of Śri Rāma.
He was the father of a King called Śakradyuma. (Navama Skanda, Bhāgavata).

BHĀṆUMĀṆI. A son born to Śri Kṛṣṇa of Satyabhāma. (Daśama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

BHĀṆUMĀṆI. A prince of Kaliṅga. He fought on the side of the Kaurvas and was killed by Bhīmasena.
(Chapter 54, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

BHĀṆUMATI I. The daughter of Bhāṇu, a leader of the Yādavas. When Śri Kṛṣṇa went with his retinue of Yādavas to visit the holy palace called Piṅḍāraka the Yādavas conducted a wine festival. During that festival a demon of the name Nikumbha carried away Bhānumati. This was because of a curse to Bhānumati from Durvāsas whom Bhānumati did not respect once when they met at the garden of Raivata. Durvāsas had alter the curse consoled her by assuring her that she would be saved and married by Sahadeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas. True to this, Bhānumati was married to Sahadeva in the presence of Nārada and Kṛṣṇa. (Viṣṇu Parva, Chapter 90).

BHĀṆUMATI II. Daughter of Kṛṣṇa. She was the wife of Ahaṁyāti, a king of the Pūru line of monarchs. They had a son named Sārvabhauma.

BHĀṆUMATI III. Daughter of Angiras. She was extraordinarily beautiful. (Śloka 3, Chapter 218, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHĀṆUSENA. A son of Karṇa. He was killed in the battle by Bhīmasena. (Śloka 27, Chapter 48, Karṇa Parva, M.B.).

BHARADVĀJĀ I. Another name of Dirghatamas.”

 Dirghatamas is also called Bharadvājā. But the Bharadvāja of purānic fame is not Dirghatamas. Dirghatamas is the son whom Bhṛṣatā legitimated got of Mamati, his brother’s wife. There was an another legitimate child in the womb of Mamati. Knowing this the devas told her ‘Bharadvāja’ meaning ‘bear the brunt of two’ and so the son of Bhṛṣatā got the name of Bharadvāja also. The real name of this son was Dirghatamas or Vitatha. Dirghatamas is not the son of Atri. Dirghatamas or Vitatha was the adopted son of Bharata, son of Dusyanta. (Bhāgavata and Kamaprāmāyaṇa. For details see under Bharata I and Dirghatamas.
BHARADVĀJA II. The sage Bharadvāja of Purānic fame.

1) General information. Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa of Kampa Rāmāyaṇa states that this sage was the son of Atri Mahārṣi. He lived for many thousands of years. He is connected with Vālmiki and the story of Śrī Rāma. Bharadvāja was for many years a disciple of Vālmiki. He was present with Vālmiki when the hunter killed one of the couple of Kraunca. When Vālmiki and Bharadvāja reached the shores of the river, Tamāsa, that day Vālmiki told Bharadvāja thus: "Look, Bharadvāja, what a clean ghat this is. The water is pure and clear. Place your water-jug here and give me my valkala. We will get down here in this sacred water". Then Vālmiki taking the valkala from the disciple walked along the shore admiring the beauty of the forest trees and found on his way the historic Kraunca couple. (Sarga 2, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

2) Bharadvāja and the study of Vedas. Bharadvāja gave himself untiringly to the study of the Vedas. He obtained from Indra a boon to extend his term of life on earth to many thousands of years by different stages, each stage covering a span of a thousand years of life. All these years he devoted to an incessant study of the Vedas. Finding the term not sufficient for completing the study of the Vedas he appealed to Indra again for extension and Indra appearing in person took him before three mountains and giving him three handfuls of sand told him thus, "What you have studied of Vedas till this time is equivalent to the amount of sand I have now given and what is yet to be studied about the Vedas is as big as the three mountains before you". Any other mortal being would have been disheartened by this revelation made by Indra, but not Bharadvāja. Undaunted he continued his studies. (Bhāgavata).

3) Bharadvāja in the role of a magician. The āśrama of Bharadvāja was in Cītrakūṭa and Śrī Rāma and Lākṣmana in the beginning of their exile went to his āśrama accepting his blessings. Bharata on his return from Keckaya knew about the exile of his brothers and hoping to bring them back to Ayodhyā went in search of them with a big retinue of soldiers and men. Keeping the retinue outside, Bharata went to the āśrama of Bharadvāja. The latter decided to give Bharata and his people a grand reception and calling Viśvakarmā to his side asked him to arrange a royal banquet that night. Devas, Gandharvas, Apsaras, Aṣṭadikpālas and all such people were invited for the night. Renowned dancers from devaloka like Gṛḥṭāci, Hṛmā, Viśvācī Mīrākēśi and Alambus appeared for entertainment. Even Vanaṇābī took part in the dance. Dishes of food came to the guests of their own accord. The night came to an end wonderfully and at daybreak everything vanished and all were amazed at the magic of the sage. (Sarga 91, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

4) Droṇa's origin. Droṇa was the son born to Bharadvāja of the celestial woman, Gṛḥṭāci. (see under Droṇa).

5) How Bharadvāja died once but was born again. See under Arvāvasu.

6) The name Bharadvāja. This is how the connotation of the word is explained:

Bhare ca bhāryāmavāyājād
Bharadvājo' smi śobhane
(I protect even those who are not my sons, I protect my disciples, I protect devas and the brahmans. I protect my wife and all these I do with ease and so I am named Bharadvāja). (Bhāgavata)

7) Other details.

1) Bharadvāja once gave refuge in his āśrama to Manorāmā, daughter of the King of Kaliṅga and her son. (See under Manorāmā).

2) The sixth manḍala of Rṣīveda contains the songs of Bharadvāja.

3) He was among the sages who once went to Dvārakā and cursed Sāṁba. (See under Svāmba).

4) Bharadvāja had a daughter Devavāmśini whom Viśravas married and got the son, Kubera. (See under Kubera).

5) Once Bharadvāja was travelling through an uninhabited forest with his son when he became exhausted by hunger and he then begged of a śādra, Pṛthu, several cows. (Šloka 107, Chapter 1, Manusmrī).

6) This sage took part in a birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Šloka 57, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

7) Because of the blessing of Bharadvāja Bhara- got a son named Bhūmanu. (Šloka 22, Chapter 94, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

8) Bharadvāja taught the secret of the missile Āgnya to Aṅgīva. (Šloka 39, Chapter 129, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

9) He worshipped Brahmā sitting in the council of Brahmā. (Šloka 22, Chapter 11, Śabha Parva, M.B.).

10) This sage came to the battlefield during the Mahābhārata battle and requested Droṇa to lay down his missile. (Šloka 35, Chapter 196, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

11) Once Bhrigu Mahārṣi asked him some questions on the creation of this universe and Bharadvāja gave him satisfactory answers. (Chapter 182, Śaṅti Parva, M.B.).

12) This sage performed the sacrifice Putrakāmesi, and gave a son to Divodāsa. (Chapter 30, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

BHARADVĀJA III. The eldest son of the Agni, Śaṇyu. (Šloka 5, Chapter 219, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHARADVĀJA IV. A renowned sage. Bharata, a King of the Pūru line of kings, had no sons and as he was spending his days in sorrow Marutva gave Bharata this Bharadvāja as his son. Bharadvāja who was by birth a brahmin from then onwards became a Kṣatriya. (Matsya Purāṇa 49, 27-39 and Vāyu Purāṇa 99, 152-158).

BHARADVĀJA V. A maṃarṣi born of the line of Ārjnas. He was the father of Yavakrīta and a friend of Raibhya, son of Viśvāmitra. Once Raibhya created a Kṛitya and that Kṛitya killed Bharadvāja's son Yavakrīta. Unable to bear the loss of his son Bharadvāja was preparing to give up his own life by jumping into the fire when Arvāvasu brought to life Yavakrīta and gave him to the sage. Immensely pleased at the regain of his son Bharadvāja ended his life on earth and went to heaven. (M.B., Vana Parva, 165-168).

BHARADVĀJA VI. A brahmārṣi who lived in the Pūrva-māvanakā. He was living on the shore of Gaṅga doing rigorous penance. One day desirous of conducting a special type of Yajña he went to bathe in the river along with other sages. There he saw the celestial beauty, Ghrūci, standing in all splendour after her bath. Bhāradvāja had seminal emission and from that was born a daughter, Srutavati, to him. (Chapter 47, Salya Parva, M.B.).

BHARADVĀJA VII. A great scholar well-versed in all the Śstras. He is the author of ‘Dharmashastra’ and ‘Śrutasāstra’. (The Viśvavidyālaya of Bombay keeps a hand-written copy of his work Śrutasāstra written in Pāṇdu script).

BHARADVĀJA I. A Mahārṣi. It was he who convinced Dyumatsena, father of Satyavān that he (Satyavān) would be endowed with long life. (Vana Parva, Chapter 288, Verse 16).

BHARADVĀJA II. The collective name of a particular sect of preceptors mentioned in the Upaniṣads. The Bhṛhadāranyaka Upaniṣad refers to this sect of preceptors as disciples of Bhāradvāja, Pārāśarya, Valāka, Kauśika, Aitareya, Āṣūrayaṇa and Bajāvāpyāṇa.

BHARADVĀJA III. A grammarian. According to the Rktantra, prātiśākhyā of Sāmaveda, it was Brahām, who first composed the science of grammar. This science was taught by Brahām to others in the following order : Brahām to Brhaspati, lie to Indra, Indra to Bhāradvāja and he to his disciples.

Pāṇini has discussed the grammatical concepts of Bhāradvāja. Rkprātiśākhyā and Taittiriya have quoted the opinions of this grammarian.

BHARADVĀJA(M). A place of habitation in ancient Bhārata. (Sloka 68, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

BHARADVĀJATIRTHA. One of the five sacred places (bathing ghūts in sacred rivers). (See Varga).

BHARADVĀJ. A famous Indian river mentioned in the Purāṇaśas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 29).

BHARADVĀJIPUTRA. A preceptor, who was a disciple of Pārāśariputra. In the Bhṛhadāranyakopaniṣad he is referred to in many contexts as Vāṭisimāṇḍīvāputra.

BHARANĪ. One of the twentyseven constellations. Pūṇya is assured if one gives as gift a cow to a brahmin on that day. (Sloka 35, Chapter 64, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

2) Birth. Dūṣyanta was once hunting in the forests when he fell into a deep reverie. The arrow of the Kṛṣṇa of Vaiṣṇava fell on the ground. The sage saw the plants helped by his companions Anasūya and Priyavravadā. Dūṣyanta and Sakuntalā fell in love with each other at first sight. Kṛṣṇa was absent from the Aśrama and the 2 married according to the Gāndharva rites and Sakuntalā became pregnant soon. The king gave her his signet ring as a sign of faith and left for his palace. When Dūṣyanta left her she fell into a deep reverie and she never knew about the arrival of the arrogant sage, Dūrvāsas to the Āśrama. Durvāsas mistook her as disrespectful and cursed her saying that she would be forgotten by the man of whom she was thinking then. Sakuntalā never knew about the curse also.

Kṛṣṇa Muni when he returned to the Āśrama and knew everything, sent Sakuntalā to the palace of Dūṣyanta. But King Dūṣyanta never recognised her and when Sakuntalā was returning deeply grieved Menakā her mother, took her and left her in the Āśrama of Kaśyapa. There Sakuntalā delivered a son. The boy grew brave and fearless and he could subdue even the wildest of animals around there. Kaśyapa, therefore, named him Sarvadamanā.

Once when Dūṣyanta was returning home after visiting Indra he saw Sakuntalā, recognised her, and took her and the boy to his palace. This was the boy who later on became known as Bharata. (Chapter 73, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

3) Marriage and reign. Bharata was a partial incarnation of Mahāvīnu. Even while he was young he became a ruler and conquering the world destroyed the wicked. Bharata had three wives. The sons born to them were bad and so the mothers killed them all. Aggrieved over the loss of his sons he worshipped the devas to get a son for him. At that time the great preceptor Brhaspati forcibly married Mamātā the wife of his brother. Mamātā was pregnant then and when she conceived from Brhaspati also she bore two children. On delivery she threw the child of Brhaspati in the forests and went away with the other son.

The Devas took care of the discarded child and named him Bhāradvāja and gave the child to Bhārata. Bharata gave the boy the name Vitatha (Dirghatamas). Bharata ruled over his land for twentyseven thousand years and the land was, therefore, called Bhārata. (Sloka 96, Chapter 2, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

After ruling the land ideally he left for the forests entrusting the land to his son, Vitatha. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

Vitatha also was called Bharata and he had five sons: Suhotra, Suhota, Gayā, Garbhā and Suketu. (Chapter 278, Agni Purāṇa).

2) Birth. Daśaratha, King of Ayodhya, had three wives: Kausalyā, Kaikeyi and Sumitṛā. Kausalyā gave birth to Śrī Rāma, Kaikeyi to Bharata and Sumitṛā to Lukiṣmaṇa and Śatrughna. Kaikeyi, mother of Bharata, was the sister of Yudhājīt, Rājā of Kekeya. Bharata was born on the day of Pāya. (Sloka 14, Sarga 18, Vālmiki Rāmāyana).

Daśaratha remained in sorrow without children for a very long time and then he performed a Putakāmeṭṭī yāga (A sacrificing ceremony to get children) with the Mahārṣi Ṛṣyaṟṅga as the officiating priest. From the sacred fire arose a divine figure carrying a pot of pudding and it was after taking that pudding that the wives of Daśaratha became pregnant. (Sarga 15, Bā lakṣaṇa, Vālmiki Rāmāyana).
3) Till the end of Śrī Rāma's forest life. The sons of Daśaratha married the daughters of Janaka, King of Mithilā. Śrī Rāma married Sītā, Bhārata, Māṇḍavī, Lakṣmaṇa, Urmili ā and Satrughna, Śrutakirtī. Daśaratha made arrangements to crown Rāma as King and then leave for the forests and lead an ascetic life. At that time Bhārata and Satrughna were in the country of Kekaya with their uncle, Yudhājīt. When the day of coronation was drawing near Kaikēyī demanded of Daśaratha the execution of two boons which were once promised by Daśaratha to her long ago during a battle between the devas and asuras. One of them was to crown her son, Bhārata, as king and the other to send Rāma to the forests for a period of fourteen years. Daśaratha was shocked to hear that. But, without any hesitation, Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa accompanied by Sītā went to the forests and Daśaratha overcame with immense grief caused by this unpleasant turn of events fell down dead. Messengers were sent then to Kekaya to bring Bhārata and after traveling for three days Bhārata and Satrughna reached Ayodhya. Though they were not informed of the death of their father they were worried all the way because of the several bad omens which they saw. On entering Ayodhya they were shocked to find all the roads desolate and arriving at the palace they found it silent and gloomy. Kaikēyī then told him all that had happened and when Bhārata knew that his mother was at the root of all this calamity his rage knew no bounds. Forgetting himself he drew from the sheath the glittering sword and stood before his mother with the drawn sword waving to strike or not to strike and muscled to himself "No, Not a woman and not one's own mother, No, it should not be done". Immediately after this was decided, he swung the sword straight to his throat. But adroitly Satrughna intervened and swept away the sword before it fell at its aim. This strong move of Satrughna brought Bhārata to his senses and he looked at his mother so fiendishly that at his stare his mother turned pale like a flower brought near a burning flame. Bhārata immediately changed into the dress of a Sannyāsī and started to go to the forests. Satrughna followed his brother. Vasiṣṭha also started. The news spread like wildfire and people began to crowd at the palace eager to follow the brothers. Very soon a huge procession was seen moving towards the forests. Vasiṣṭha and Arundhatī in a chariot in the front, Kausalyā and Sūmīrā in another next to it and Bhārata and Satru ghna closely following the chariots, walking. People joined the procession from behind. The great crowd of people reached the banks of the river Ganges. Ganga coming to know of the great exile of people from Ayodhya through spies went and saw Bhārata, at first in disguise, and later as himself made his acquaintance. He then took Bhārata and Satrughna across the river to the presence of Śrī Rāma at Citrakāṭa. When they reached Citrakāṭa only Bhārata-Satrughna, Vasiṣṭha and Arundhatī, Kausalyā and Sūmīrā entered the āśrama of Śrī Rāma, all the others remaining outside. When Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were told about the death of their father they were filled with grief. All the sons, then, Vasiṣṭha officiating performed the obsequies of their father. Rāma and Bhārata then discussed the future. Śrī Rāma persisted in his vow and said he would return to his country only after fourteen years and insisted that Bhārata should rule the country during that period. Bhārata accepted the arrangement saying that if his brother did not come back after fourteen years he would give up his life by jumping into the fire. Śrī Rāma then gave his sandals to Bhārata who accepting the same with due respect returned home followed by others. On reaching Ayodhya Bhārata did not go to the royal palace which he considered as empty because of the absence of his brother, Rāma and abhorrent because of the presence of his mother, Kaikēyī. Instead, he went to a nearby village called Nandi and installing the sandals there lived there and ruled the country.

4) Return of Śrī Rāma. Śrī Rāma when he came back to Ayodhya after fourteen years was crowned King. Bhārata got two sons of his wife Māṇḍavī, Subāhu and Śrāseṇa. While they were thus living happily in Ayodhya, message was sent through an ascetic by Yudhājīt from Kekaya that some gandharvas were creating trouble in that country. It was the state of Sindhu in Kekaya which was subjected to this molestation and on the advice of Rāma Bhārata went and subdued the trouble, killing the gandharvas. He then created two small states on either side of Sindhu and made his two sons the kings of those states. When Śrī Rāma gave up his life in Sarayū river and rose to heaven as Viṣṇu Bhārata and Satrughna also gave up their lives and took the forms of the conch and the wheel which adorn the hands of Viṣṇu. (Uttara Rāmāyana).
and doing pūjā Bharata lived there oblivious of the world outside. (Paṇcama Sandhya, Bhāgavata).

3) Bharata and the deer. Bharata led a purely ascetic life performing everyday the rites laid down by scriptures and muttering the mystical formula of Brahmiṣṭa. One day a thirsty pregnant deer went to drink water in a nearby pond. As it was drinking it heard the loud roar of a lion nearby. Frightened the poor animal without even waiting to quench its thirst ran into the forest and on its way delivered a child and the deer-babe fell into the river. The deer exhausted and tormented by fear ran into a cave and fell down dead. Bharata happened to see the new-born deer floating on the river and took it to his āśrama. From then onwards Bharata’s mind was diverted from the spiritual to the mundane effort of taking care of the young deer. The deer followed him wherever he went and if it did not turn up in time in the evening after grazing Bharata went about in search of it weeping. Years went by and Bharata became old and died with the name of the deer on his lips. (Paṇcama Sandhya, Bhāgavata).

4) Rebirths of Bharata. Because he died with the thought of the deer in his mind he was reborn as a deer. The deer was aware of his previous birth and regretted that he spent the life of a man for the sake of a deer. The deer, therefore, left the house of his mother in the mountain of Kālaṇjīra and went to the āśrama of Pulaha. The pious animal daily bathed in the river and died there on the bank of that river. So in its next life the deer was born as the son of a brahmin in the line of Aṅgiras. That brahmin had two wives and got nine sons of his first wife and one of the second. The son born to the second wife was none other than Bharata. In due course the brahmin died and his second wife jumped into the funeral pyre and ended her life. Thrown an orphan Bharata became a puppet in the hands of his brothers. Bharata was asked to look after the cattle and fields of his brothers for his living. With great forbearance Bharata did all he was told. One day Bharata was keeping watch over the fields of his brothers. It was midnight. In the neighbourhood the Candālas were making merry over the birth of a child to one of the women. Some of them were bringing a man bound by ropes to be given as ‘Narabali’ to the goddess Kāli. (Narabali is the offering of a human being with his head cut off to propitiate a deity). On the way the man escaped and the disappointed Candālas were roaming about in search of a substitute when they came across Bharata keeping watch over the fields. Immediately he was bound by ropes and taken before the idol of Kāli. The effulgence of the brahmin astounded Kāli and getting angry for bringing such a pious brahmin for sacrifice she devoured the Candālas and allowed the brahmin to go free. Escaping from there Bharata reached a village walking all the way. That village was being ruled over by a king called Rāhuṇa and that king was going to see Bhagavān Kapila Mahārṣi along the banks of the river Ikṣumati in a palanquin. The palanquin had not enough bears and so the brahmin was asked to join the team of bearers. As they were moving the palanquin shook because of the wrong steps kept by Bharata. The king reprimanded Bharata and Bharata then gave the king fitting replies based on the ethics of Vedānta. The admonition of Bharata greatly impressed the king and he stepped down from the palanquin and bowed to Bharata.

Bharata went from there to the forests singing devotional songs in praise of Viṣṇu and at last attained salvation. (Paṇcama Sandhya, Bhāgavata).

BHARATA IV. A sage and the famous author of Nātyaśāstra. He was a critic who lived around the year 400 B.C. His book on Nātyaśāstra (Histrionics) is world famous. Kālidāsa in the second act of his drama, Vikramorvaśiya states that this Bharata used to coach the devas in the art of acting. Nātyaśāstra is a book comprising thirty-seven chapters dealing with the art of dance and music. He has written in detail about the four Alahūkāras, Upamā, Dīpaka, Rūpaka and Yamaka and also about the ten requisites of a Kāvyā. He has not forgotten to write about the defects and demerits of Kāvyā also. Commentaries on Nātyaśāstra have been written by liyus in the profession: Mitragupta, Harṣavarūhāna, Śaṅkuka, Udghāṭa, Bhāṭṭānāyaka and Abhinavagupta. Of these ‘Abhinavabhārati’ the commentary written by Abhinavagupta is the only one freely available now.

BHARATA V. The Mahābhārata speaks about a few other Bharatas who were sons of Agni. Samyu is a son of Agni known as Bharata. This Bharata has got another name, Urja. (Śloka 6, Chapter 219, Vana Parva, M.B.). There is an Agni of name Bharata with a son named Bharata. When this Agni is propitiated one gets healthy and strong and so this Agni is called Puṣṭimān also. (Śloka 7, Chapter 219, Vana Parva, M.B.). There is another Bharata son of an Agni called Abhūta. It is this Agni that burns dead bodies. As this Agni lives permanently in Agniṣṭoma Yajñas; it gets the name of Niyata also. (Śloka 6, Chapter 222, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHĀRATA (MAHĀBHĀRATA). An epic written by Vyāsa.

1) General information. The Mahābhārata is an epic. Bharata is acclaimed as the first emperor of Bharata. The theme of this great epic is the fight between the two lines of princes belonging to the dynasty of Bharata. That is why the book is called Mahābhārata. The great size of the volume and the greatness of the wisdom contained therein have contributed much to its getting the name, Mahābhārata. Once the devas put the Mahābhārata in one pan of a balance and the Vedas in the other pan. Then the devas were convinced that the Mahābhārata weighed more than all the Vedas put together. (Ślokas 269-271, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva, M.B.).* This book contains over a lakh of verses. There is no subject on earth which is not dealt with in the Mahābhārata. None of the world's epics is so big as Mahābhārata. In size the Mahābhārata is double that of Homer's Iliad and Odyssey put together. The following poem about it is worth mentioning now:

* Purā kila suraih sarvaih sametya tulyā dhīram Caturbhaya sarasvathyehyo Vedeḥhyo hyadhikām yadda Tadā prabhūti leke smin mahābhārataṃcyate Mahāte ca gurute ca dhriyamāhāni yato'kākam Mahatvād bhāravatvāc ca Mahābhārataṃcyate.

Yathā samudro bhagavan
Yathā ca himavān giriḥ /

The Mahābhārata is not a mere epic. It is a whole literature in itself containing a philosophy which has been an unflaing and perennial source of spiritual strength to the people of India. Above all it has for its core the Gītā which is perhaps the noblest of scriptures.

The Mahābhārata comprises eighteen books, each book being called a Parva. There are 2109 chapters in it, the chapters differing in size. Besides, there is an annexe called Harivaṃśa which deals with the life and history of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

2) Contents. The contents of each Parva are succinctly given below. The Parvas are so named as to give a hint of their central theme.

1) Adi Parva. (Adi = beginning). Pāṇḍu and Dhṛtarāṣṭra, king of the Candra dynasty, are brothers. Bhiṣma brought them up. Dhṛtarāṣṭra was born blind and he got a hundred children of his wife Gāndhārī. They were called the Kauravas. Pāṇḍu had two wives Kuntī and Mādri and got of them five sons called the Pāṇḍavas headed by the eldest Yudhiṣṭhīra.

2) Sāmba Parva (Sāmba = court). The Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas lived together in the court at Hastināpura. There, the Kauravas entered into a game of dice with Yudhiṣṭhīra and through the deceitful tactics engineered by the keen-witted Śakuni, Yudhiṣṭhīra was defeated and he lost everything he possessed. The Pāṇḍavas were then compelled to go into exile to the forests for twelve years and spend another year after that in incognito. If they were found out during that period of incognito they were to go into exile for another term of twelve years. The Pāṇḍavas accompanied by Pāṇcālī left for the forests.

3) Vana Parva (Vana = forest). This is one of the longest of Parvas and describes the life of the Pāṇḍavas in the forest Kānyaka. The well known stories 'Nala Carita' and 'Kirāṭārjunīya' are told in this Parva.

4) Virāṭa Parva. (Virāṭa = name of a King). The Pāṇḍavas after completing their term of exile in the forests spent the year of their life in incognito at the court of King Virāṭa. Many wonderful events took place during their stay there and this Parva deals in detail about them.

5) Bhiṣma Parva (Bhiṣma = The first Generalissimo of the Kauravas). The great Mahābhārata war was fought in the vast expanse of Kurukṣetra lying to the northwest of Delhi. Bhiṣma was the first generalissimo of the Kauravas and Dhṛṣṭadyumna of the Pāṇḍavas. Vṛṣaṇa describes the events of the battle classifying it according to the generalissimos of the Kaurava army giving the four generalissimos a Parva each. Bhiṣma fought for ten days and was struck down on the tenth day by an arrow from Arjuna.

6) Droṇa Parva (Droṇa = The second Generalissimo). When Bhiṣma fell Droṇa took charge as the supreme commander. This Parva deals with the fight under his command. Droṇa was killed in the end by Dhṛṣṭa-

7) Karna Parva. (Karna = The third generalissimo). This Parva deals with the war under the command of Karna. Karna fell in the end at the hands of Arjuna.

8) Śalya Parva. (Śalya = The fourth and last of the Generalissimos). When Karna fell Śalya took over charge of the Kaurava army. As the war was coming to an end most of the big warriors of the Kaurava army were killed. In the end Bhima and Duryodhana met in a grim fight with maces in which Duryodhana was killed. This Parva deals with the final stage of the battle.

9) Saupiti Parva. (Saupiti = pertaining to sleep). This Parva tells us the tragic story of how Kṛṣṇacāya, Kṛtavarmā and Aśvatthāmā who were the only three left with Duryodhana after the great battle went into the camp of the Pāṇḍavas at night and killed all the brave warriors of the Pāṇḍava army, excepting the Pāṇḍavas, who were sleeping in their camp unaware of the foul play lying ahead.

10) Śṛṇi Parva. (Śṛṇi = woman). This Parva deals with the great lamentation in the battlefield, after the war, of Gāndhārī and other women.

11) Śanti Parva. Yudhiṣṭhīra was crowned king and even at that time Bhiṣma was lying on his bed of arrows awaiting death. Before taking up his duties of the state Yudhiṣṭhīra went to where the grand sire lay dying and took his blessing and instruction in dharma. This instruction of Bhiṣmācārya to King Yudhiṣṭhīra of the three dharmas, Rājadharmā, Apadharmā and Mokṣadharmā is the famous Śanti Parva.

12) Aṇuśāsana Parva. (Aṇuśāsana = Instruction). Bhiṣma still on his death-bed continues his instructions on several topics, like duty, freedom and fasting, giving entertaining stories to illustrate the essence of his teaching. This Parva is devoted to this.

13) Āśvamedhika Parva. (Āśvamedhā = yāga conducted by emperors). This Parva deals with the yāga conducted by Yudhiṣṭhīra when he became the emperor of Bhārata.

14) Āśramavāsika Parva. (Āśramavāśa = life in a hermitage). Dhṛtarāṣṭra, the blind and his wife Gāndhārī accompanied by Kuntī left for the forests and lived there for two years in a hermitage. One day the forest caught fire and the three without trying to escape sat on the ground facing eastwards in yoga posture and calmly gave up themselves to the flames. This is dealt with in this Parva.

15) Mauśalā Parva. (Mauśala = Mace). This Parva gives the story of how the Yādavas fought against each other with maces and were destroyed and how Dvārakā sank into the ocean. It describes the death of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma also.

16) Mahāprāathanika Parva. (Mahāprāsthāna = Death). Dharmaputra entrusts his kingdom to his successor and along with his four brothers and wife Pāṇcālī sets out on a long journey to Mahāmeru never to return. This journey to death is detailed in this Parva.

17) Svargaśātmika Parva. (Svargaśātma = Heaven). This Parva describes the entry of the Pāṇḍavas and their relatives into Svarga, heaven.

3) Mode of Narration. Most of the verses in the Mahābhārata are in the Anuṣṭup metre. At certain places other metres also have been used. There are prose pieces also in it. There are twenty notable pieces, three in Adi Parva, seven in Vana Parva, seven in Śanti Parva and three in Anuśāsana Parva. All the pieces are statements by realised souls. The style of the poetry is simple and the method of presentation lively. At times the imagination of the poet extends up to the horizon. Though there is a flow of spiritualism throughout the matter is purely mundane.

4) Authorship. Bhagavān Vyāsa is believed to be the author of Mahābhārata. He was a contemporary of the Pāndavas and the Kauravas. Many of the events of the Mahābhārata were personally witnessed by Vyāsa. He took three years to write this book. The following slokas will support the above:

Kururāja kulasthānāṃ
Drṣṭaṁ vrīttai ca yatsthitam /
Tāsuravaiṁ bhagavān Vyāso
Varnayāmāsa Bhārataḥ. //
(Padma purāṇa)

Trībhivarsaṁi sadottāhyā
Kṛṣṇadvaipāyana muniḥ /
Mahābhārata-māthyaṁ
Kṛtvānīdumuttamam. //
(Sloka 55, Chapter 62, Ādi Parva).

The Varāha Purāṇa states that Vyāsa composed the Mahābhārata at a period when the end of Dvāpara yuga merged with the dawn of the Kaliyuga. The Bhāgavata states that Śri Kṛṣṇa passed away on the first day of Kaliyuga. The Bhāgavata is devoted to admire and praise the life of Śri Kṛṣṇa. This book also is written by Vyāsa. This sloka found in the first Chapter of Ādi Parva clears the doubt:

Vāsudevasya māḥāmyaṁ
Pāṇḍavānām ca satyataṁ /
Durūrtaṁ Bhāratarśtrāṇāṁ
Uktavān Bhagavāṅṣir. //

The original name of the Bhārata which Vyāsa composed was ‘Jaya’. In the first Chapter of Ādi Parva is this sloka to support this statement:

Nārāyaṇaṁ namaśkṛtya
Nāraṁ caiva narottamaṁ/
Devīṁ Sarasvatīṁ caiva
Tato Jayamudrīyat/. //

After the death of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas the disciples of Vyāsa, Sumantu, Jaimini, Paila, Śuka and Vaiśampāyana gave this book great publicity. They wrote books based on this story of Bhārata of which only the ‘Bhārata’ of Vaiśampāyana and the Āsvamedha Parva of Jaimini are now available.

Vyāsa’s Bhārata was first expounded by Vaiśampāyana at the Sarpa-satras of Janamejaya. At the request of Janamejaya, Vaiśampāyana added some more facts to the original work known then as ‘Jaya’. Jaya with the accretions came to be known as Bhārata-saṁhitā. Śūta who narrated this story to Saunaka and others at the forest of Naimīśa added some more matter to the Bhārata-saṁhitā and made it larger. The present Mahābhārata is this expanded edition.

The following facts prove that the Mahābhārata has thus passed through three stages of evolution:

1) This book is known by three names: Jaya, Bhārata-saṁhitā and Mahābhārata.4

2) There is a reference to the three parts of the book in Sloka 66, Chapter 1 of Ādi Parva.2

3) There are three different opinions regarding the total number of slokas in the Mahābhārata. According to Ugraśīravas there are 8800 verses, according to Vyāsa 24000 verses and according to another statement a lakh of verses.3

4) The narration appears to be of three different kinds, descriptive, philosophical and oratorical, indicative of three different authorships.

5) Śūta and Vaiśampāyana have made accretions to the original work ‘Jaya’ of Vyāsa.

Viewed with these facts we are led to believe that Vyāsa has composed only the very essence of Mahābhārata comprising 8800 slokas and that work was known as ‘Jaya’ as referred to in the first invocatory verse of the epic. Vaiśampāyana added a few verses of his own and brought the number to 24,000 and gave the book the name of ‘Bhārata-saṁhitā’. It was Śūta who made many more additions and made the book so big as to fetch it the name of ‘Mahābhārata’. The epic which is now current among us contains a lakh of verses and it took perhaps centuries to get this transformation of the book from ‘Jaya’ to ‘Mahābhārata’.

6) Period of publication. The Kali Varṣa starts from 3102 B.C. The great Mahābhārata war was fought at a period when the end of Dvāpara yuga merged into the dawn of Kali yuga as could be gathered from the following verse from the epic:

Antare caiva sampārte
Kalidvāparayorabhut /
Samantapānīce kuddhāṁ
Kurupāṇḍavasenayoḥ. //
(Sloka 13, Chapter 2, Ādi Parva).

So it can be deduced that the great war was fought round about 3102 B.C. Dhṛtarāṣṭra lived for eighteen years after the great battle and the Pāṇḍavas ruled the country for 36 years. (Śtri Parva, M.B.). It was when Śri Kṛṣṇa died that the Pāṇḍavas ended their rule and commenced the Mahāpātthana. So it can be surmised that Śri Kṛṣṇa lived for 36 years after the war.

(Ādi Parva, Chapter 1).
Sri Krṣṇa died on the first day of Kali yuga, 3102 B.C. Therefore it is clear the Mahābhārata battle was fought in 3138 B.C. There are indications in other purāṇas to support this theory. There was that rare phenomenon of a Saptagrama yaga (Combination in astronomical position of seven planets) while King Parīkṣīt, son of Arjuna, was ruling the country.1 This happened in a month of Māgha (January) and a probe into the dates of such previous occurrences revealed that a similar one had happened in the month of Māgha in the years 3177 and 477 B.C. (The next one is to happen in 2223 A.D.) This phenomenon repeats itself in every hundred years and so it is to be believed that one of the kind happened in 3077 B.C. precisely during the period of Parīkṣīt. It is therefore confirmatory to the statement that the great war occurred in 3138 B.C.

The Pāṇḍavas ruled the country for 36 years after the war and Vyāsa wrote this divine epic after the death of the Pāṇḍavas. Vyāsa took three years to complete his work. Therefore, it can be well concluded that Vyāsa wrote the epic in 3100 B.C. The Pāṇḍavas commenced their Mahāprāṣāhāṇa after entrusting the administration of the state into the hands of Parīkṣīt. This must have happened in 3102 B.C. Parīkṣīt ruled the country for 60 years and so his son Janamejaya became King in 3042 B.C. It was after two years of his becoming King that he conducted the Sarpaṇaṣatra and it was at this Sarpaṇaṣatra that Vaiśampāyana first expounded 'Jaya' (Mahābhārata) to the sages assembled there.

This fixing of the date of Mahābhārata is based on the conclusions arrived at by the pandits of Bhārata, but foreign chronologists differ from us. They argue that it was in the 10th century B.C. that the Mahābhārata battle took place on the strength of the following:

The theme of the Mahābhārata is a fight between Kuru and Pāṇḍavas. After the war the two join and there is a statement in the Yajurveda of a people formed by the merger of the two. Therefore the great war should have happened in the 10th century B.C. It was a period of hero-worship and songs on the heroic deeds of the Kuru and Pāṇḍava were sung and handed over from one generation to the other and gradually those songs took shape in the form of the Mahābhārata.

There is another school of thought. In the Mahābhārata, Brahmā is given great prominence. But in Vedic times Brahmā was not counted at all. During the golden period of the Buddhists Brahmā had a conspicuous hold on Hinduism. Therefore it should be deduced that the Mahābhārata was written during the 6th century B.C. Then there were about 8,000 verses in the Mahābhārata.

Towards the second stage of Mahābhārata the epic grew in size bringing into its fold about 24,000 slokas. It was at this stage that the Mahābhārata got a vaisāṅvite colour and Sri Krṣṇa was adored as an incarnation of Viṣṇu. Megasthenes who visited India in 300 B.C. records that the majority of Hindus were vaisāṅvites at that period. There are references in certain parts of the Mahābhārata to Greeks and Buddhists. Therefore a set of foreign chronologists conclude that those portions of the Mahābhārata could have been written only after Buddha and after the attack on Bhārata by the Greeks i.e. by 300 B.C.

The third stage of the Mahābhārata is its present form and it was at this stage that it included new philosophy in it. The Dharmasāṅhitā of Manusṭi became popular in the fifth century A.D. and therefore the third stage of the Mahābhārata must have started before that, in the 3rd century A.D.

BHĀRATA II. (Bhāratavarṣa. India).

The purāṇas describe the Earth to be constituted of seven continents: Jambudvīpa, Plākṣadvīpa, Sālmathvīpa, Kuṣadvīpa, Krauṇḍadvīpa and Puṣkaradvīpa. Of these India is Jambudvīpa.

The Bhāratavarṣa was constituted of nine islands at that time in the following positions: In the centre was Iśavṛta and to the east was Bhadravarṣa. To the south-east was Hiranyak and to the south was Bhārata. To the south-west was Hari and to the west was Ketumāla. To the north-west was cambaka and to the north was Kuruvavarṣa. Beautiful Kuniḍpuravṛṣa stood to the north-east of Iśavṛta. There was neither the passage of time nor the fear of ageing or death in any of these continents excepting Bhāratavarṣa.

This Bhāratavarṣa itself is a group of nine islands each separated from the other by oceans and thus made not easily accessible between each other. Indravṛṣa, Kaśerumān, Tāmraparṇa, Gāhasthamān, Nāgadvīpa, Kaṭāha, Simhala and Vāruṇa are the eight others and the ninth is this island of Bhāratavarṣa. This island is called Kumāra also. On the eastern boundary of this island live Kīrātas, on the western side, Yavanas, on the southern boundary Andhras and on the north Turuṣkas. In the Centre live the Brahmins, Kṣatriyas, Vaiṣyas and Śudras. The eight sacred mountains of this place are: Mahendra, Malaya, Sahya, Śuktimāna, Rākṣaparvata, Vindhya and Pārīyatra. There are several other mountains also in Mahayapradeśa. They are: Koṭālaha, Vaibhūrī, Mandara, Duruddhara, Vādadhūma, Vaiḍyuta, Maināka, Sarasa, Tūṅgapraṣṭha, Nāgaṅgiri, Govardhana, Ujjayanī, Puspagiri, Aruda, Raivataka, Śyaṅkanta, Gomanta, Citrakūṭa, Kṛṣṭamsura, Srīparvata and Koṅkaṇa. This place is inhabited by Aryan and Mlecchas. The rivers which they use for drinking water are the following: Sarasvatī, Pānchārūpa, Kālindī, Hiranyavati, Satadru, Candrikā, Nila, Vitastā, Iravātu, Kuhā, Madhurā, Hārārāvī, Uśīrā, Dhātaki, Rasā, Gomati, Dhūtapāpa, Bahudrā, Dṛṣadvatī, Nīvarā, Gājābaka, Citrā, Kauśikī, Vādūśaura, Sarayū and Lohitya. All these rivers originate from the base of Himavān. Those originating from Pārīyatra are: Vedaśmṛtī, Vedasvāni, Vṛtragni, Sindhu, Parnaśa, Nandini, Pāvani, Mahī, Śara, Cārmavatī, Lūpī, Vidiśa, Venuṃati, Citrā and Oghavatī. Those flowing down from the Rākṣaparvata are: Soṇata alias Mahānāda, Narmadā, Surāṣa, Kriyā, Māndakini, Daśārṇa, Citrakūṭa, Devikā, Citrotpalī, Tamasā, Karaṇyā, Piśācikā, Pippalāśṛṣṭi, Vipāśa, Vaiṇjyūlāvati, Satsataṇāja, Sūktumāti, Cakrini, Tridīvā, Vasu, Valguvāhīni. From the base of Vindhyā flow down the follow-

1. (a) Saptarṣaya maṅgaliyuktāṁ kāle pārīkṣīte śatam (Matsya purāṇa 271.46).
   (b) Te tu pārīkṣīte kāle maṅgaliyavānan dvijottama (Vimūṇa purāṇa 4. 24. 106).
Mahâkâvyas in Sanskrit with established reputation.

In the Êhole records of A.D. 634 Bharavi is held up in praise along with Kâlidâsa. The theme of Kritârjuniya's Siva, in the guise of a hunter, attacking Arjuna immersed in penance. Bharavi's literary style is simple and sweet. In the use of similes he is second only to Kâlidâsa. Among his books only Kritârjuniya has been found out yet.

BHARGA I. Grandson of Divodâsa, a King of the Pûru line. Divodâsa got a son named Pratardana. Bharga and Vatsa were the sons of Pratardana. (Chapter 278, Agni Purâna).

BHARGA II. A synonym of Siva.

BHARGA(M). A village of ancient India. (Śloka 51, Chapter 9, Bhîsma Parva, M.B.).

BHARGAVA. One who belongs to the Brûg dynasty. (See Bhru).

BHARGAVA (M). A city in ancient India. (Bhîsma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 50).

BHARMYASVA. A famous king of Pâncâla Deśa. He had five heroic sons headed by Mudgala. (Navama Skandha, Bhâgavata).

BHARTRHARI. A famous Sanskrit poet.

1) Birth. He was the son of Vidyâsâgara, a great brahmin scholar, who lived in Paṭâliputra. There is a legend about the birth of Bhartrhari in Utara Bharata.

Vidyâsâgara while young learnt the Vedas from his guru. But he was not satisfied with that study and wanted to learn more about all śastras and so he started on a tour to find out a guru who would teach him all he wanted. On his way he met several great scholars but none came up to his standard of a guru. One day tired after a long journey he reached a mountain valley. Washing his hands and feet in a nearby river and quenching his thirst he went and sat down under a banyan tree to rest. The cool breeze sent the tired brahmin to sleep and he slept.

A Brahmarâkṣasa who was living on the top of the banyan tree when it became midday descended from the tree to perform the sacred rites of the day and found a man lying asleep. By the sacred thread on his body the Brahmarâkṣasa surmised that the man was a brahmin and woke him up. Waking up Vidyâsâgara found to his surprise the bearded Brahmarâkṣasa standing before him and after mutual enquiries Vidyâsâgara told him of his mission. The Brahmarâkṣasa told him thus: 'Boy, let your name Vidyâsâgara (ocean of learning) be true in your life. I am acquainted with many śastras and I shall teach you everything I know. But there are certain conditions for the same which you have to observe. You must live with me for six months and should fast during that period behaving yourself as one under a vow. I shall, however, teach you a mantra which would help you to remain unaffected by hunger, thirst or sleep. If you are prepared to accept these terms and become my disciple I shall quench your thirst for knowledge. Vidyâsâgara willingly agreed to his terms and became his student.

Both of them then climbed on the banyan tree and the Brahmarâkṣasa sat in his usual place on a branch on the tree and Vidyâsâgara on a branch just below it. The instructions started and continued for six months. Vidyâsâgara never felt thirst or hunger during that period. When the teaching was complete the Brahmarâkovihristi kavitaritā-Kâlidâsa-Bharavi kavitaritib.//
Vidyāśāgara then got down from the tree and performed the obsequies of his guru. Vidyāśāgara while he was learning used to note down the instructions of the guru on the leaves of the banyan tree. It had come to a huge bundle on completion. Taking the bundle along with him Vidyāśāgara left for his country. By the time he left the forest area the power of the mantra faded and Vidyāśāgara began to feel the pangs of hunger and thirst. By dusk he reached Kalīgāra and there he came to the door of a dancing girl named Mandākini. The door was locked as the owner was away in a Śiva temple nearby. Exhausted by the journey, hungry and thirsty, Vidyāśāgara lay down on the doorstep and soon fell asleep with the leaf-bundle as a pillow. Mandākini when she returned from the temple at about ten at night saw a brahmin sleeping on the doorstep, tried and exhausted. She soon asked her servants to get him inside and sent for a doctor. By the clever treatment of the doctor and the expert nursing of Mandākini, Vidyāśāgara survived. When he was fit for travel he started to go but Mandākini objected and requested him to marry her. Vidyāśāgara did not agree to it and she took him to the King and told him all that had happened. Finding Vidyāśāgara to be one with great erudition and good manners he decided that Vidyāśāgara should marry his daughter (a Kṣatriya), daughter of his minister (a brahmin), daughter of Kulapati (a vaisya), and also Mandākini (a Śūdra). There was an injunction in those days that a brahmin should marry a Śūdra only after having married from all the higher castes. The decision of the King surmounted this difficulty for Vidyāśāgara to marry the Śūdra girl, Mandākini. Marriages were all conducted in order. The King’s daughter bore the name Kalavati, the minister’s Mālati and Kulapati’s Sumanigali. Each delivered a son. The brahmin boy was named Vararuci, the Kṣatriya boy, Vikramaditya, the Vaisya boy, Bṛhati and the Śūdra boy, Bṛhatrāi.

2) Kingship. When the King of Kaliṅga became old he gave the kingdom to Vidyāśāgara and when Vidyāśāgara died all his other sons made Bṛhatrāi the King. Bṛhatrāi gave his father on his death-bed a promise that he would see that no sons were born to him. So though Bṛhatrāi married three wives he was careful enough not to produce any children by them.

3) Bṛhatrāi becomes a sannyāsi. Bṛhatrāi was living happily with his wife when one day a yogi of divine disposition came to his house and giving him a ripe mango said: "If you eat this mango you will never become old. It is because you who are perfect in education and fortune should live long for the benefit of the people that I am giving you this." So saying he gave the mango and left the place. When the sannyāsi left him Bṛhatrāi thought thus: "After some years my wife would become old and die. What is the use of my remaining alive after she is gone. So this mango should be given to her. Let her live long." He, therefore, gave the mango to his wife explaining to her the greatness of the fruit. That wife whom poor Bṛhatrāi accepted to be very loving and chaste had a lover. He was none other than the horse-groom of her husband and that prostitute thought thus: "Of what use is my life when my lover is dead. Let him live for ever". So thinking she sent for her lover and giving him the mango explained to him the greatness of the thing. But the horse-groom was well devoted to his wife and desiring that his wife should remain young always he gave it to her. The groom’s wife was a servant-maid of the palace and it was at the time of her departure from the palace after her day’s work that she was given the mango by the horse-groom and so she carried it home in her hand. Bṛhatrāi who was returning from somewhere to the palace saw the woman carrying the mango and questioned her and knew how she got it. On coming to the palace he sent for the horse-groom and though at first the horse-groom tried to shield the queen, he was compelled to tell the truth in the end. The truth pained him much "Phew! It was this wretched and unfaithful woman whom I was believing to be very chaste and loving. Woman can never be believed. Look, she has fallen in love with an ugly-looking servant of mine and unless she was her lover she would not have given this mango to him. It is better that this matter is not pursued any further now. We will decide about the future course of action later". Thinking thus, he sent away the horse-groom and went to his bed-chamber and lay there immersed in thoughts. The horse-groom immediately informed the queen of everything that took place and the queen felt sorry that her secret had come to light. She knew that besides the punishment that her lover would get her name would also be blackened and so decided to kill her husband before the affair became public. At once she made an oṭṭaṭa (flat bread made of wheat or rice) with poison in it and bringing it to the bed-room told her husband thus with much pretended affection. "It will take some time for your lunch to be ready. Let not you lie with an empty stomach. Eat this now". So saying she placed the bread in the hands of Bṛhatrāi and left the room.

Bṛhatrāi suspected foul play and mused "This bread has been prepared by her with poison to kill me. It is better to give up living with her. There is no doubt about it. Of the four āśramas the fourth, Sannyāsa, is the best. It is pleasant and sorrowless. Therefore gradually that āśrama should be accepted". Thinking thus he came out from his room with the bread and placed it hidden somewhere in the lower end of the roof of the house remarking "Oṭṭappam Viṭṭecuṭṭum" (The oṭṭaṭa will burn the house). Then taking an earthen bowl for begging he left the house unnoticed by any. The moment Bṛhatrāi left the house the house caught fire and everything in it was burnt to ashes.

Bṛhatrāi renouncing all and changing himself into the robes of a sannyāsi went about living by begging. After some time he decided that he would never beg but would eat only that which others gave him voluntarily. He had by that time reached a big temple in south India where in one of the entrances to the temple, the east one, was sitting the famous sannyāsi Paṭṭanatt Pillāyār. Bṛhatrāi, therefore, went and sat at the western entrance with his bowl before him. Whatever food fell into the bowl was eaten by him. Sometimes for days together he went without food. But he never was sick or felt weak.

1. There is a belief that if a son is born to a Śūdra who was himself born of a brahmin the brahmin father would go to hell.
2. This temple is believed to be the Chidanaharan Temple.
One day a beggar went to the eastern gate and asked Paṭṭanatt Pillayār for alms. Pillayār said, "I am also a beggar like you. I have nothing in my hand to give you. But there is a man sitting in the western gate. He is a rich man and he may give you something". The beggar went to Bhāṛṭṛhari and asked for alms. Bhāṛṭṛhari also expressed his helplessness in the matter. But then the beggar said "The man sitting at the opposite entrance told me that you were a rich man." Bhāṛṭṛhari smiled. He knew then why Paṭṭanatt Pillayār said so. A woman who has renounced everything needs not keep even a bowl to beg. The bowl was a luxury and a sign of wealth. Bhāṛṭṛhari threw away the bowl and remained at the temple entrance till the end of his life. It was while sitting there that he wrote his famous poems.

4) His well-known works are: (1) The Nīti Sataka (2) The Śṛiṅgāra Sataka (3) The Vairāgya Sataka and (4) The Subhāṣītas.

BHĀṛṬṢṬHĀṆA (M). A very holy place in ancient India. It is said that even those who merely visited this place would get the benefit of performing an Aśvamedha yajña. The place got its importance because Lord Subrahmaṇya lived there. (Śloka 76, Chapter 84, Vana Parva, M.B.)

BHĀRĪ. A daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. The praṇṣpati, at one stage begot sixty girls of Vairīṇī and gave them to Kāsyapa, who distributed them among several Devas. Bhārī was the woman so given to the Viśdevatās. (Hari Vaniśa, Chapter 3).

BHĀRUKA. A king of the Solar dynasty. He was the son of Sudeva and Tāther of Bāhuka. (Nāvama Skanda, Bhāgavata).

BHĀRUKAKSA (M). A village of ancient India. Śūdras lived there. At that time of the Rājaśūya of Dharmaputra these Śūdras brought gifts to the King. (Chapter 51, Sabhā Parva).

BHĀRUNDĀ. A particular kind of bird found in the Kingdom called Uttarakuruvāra. These birds carry in their strong beak corpses to their caves and eat them. (Bhṛṣmaparva, Chapter 7, Verse 12).

BHĀRYĀ. Wife. Bhṛṣma points out the sanctified importance of Bhāryā (wife) as follows:— Without her even the palace will prove itself to be just a forest. She will be a great support (to the husband) in the matter of dharma (duty) artha (wealth) and Kāma (enjoyment of material comforts). (These three precede the ultimate state of Mokṣa (salvation) and the wife will be a great support in fulfilling the conditions during the first three stages.) While on tour in foreign places she will remain faithful to him and instil confidence in him. Bhāryā is great wealth to man.

In his forlorn life on earth the wife is of great help to man. To him, who is suffering from diseases and is otherwise in distress there is no remedy (medicine) like a good wife. There is no relative like a wife. In the matter of practising dharma there is no other support to match the wife. If one has no good wife to take care of domestic affairs one will be driven to the forest; the home will be like a forest. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 144).

BHĀṢA. A very prominent dramatist in Sanskrit. As Bāṇa and Kālidāsa have noticed him in their works, it may safely be assumed that Bhāṣa lived in an earlier period. Since Pratīmā nāṭaka and Abhiṣeka nāṭaka, which are universally admitted to have been composed by Bhāṣa, depend for their themes on the Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, it is clear that Bhāṣa lived after Vālmiki. Kālidāsa’s period has not yet been fixed beyond doubt. It is almost settled that Bāṇa lived sometime between the sixth and seventh centuries A.D. Prof. Keith has been of the view that Vālmiki lived before the 4th century B.C. In the light of all such factors it could be presumed that Bhāṣa lived in the period between the 4th century B.C. and 6th century A.D.

Though Bhāṣa has so many glories to his credit he does not fully match Kālidāsa, and this might have been the reason why Indians did almost forget Bhāṣa with the advent of Kālidāsa on the literary arena. We are not in a position to name with unerring definiteness the works of Bhāṣa. The general belief is that he has written nearly twenty three dramas. In 1922, Pandit Gaṇapati Sāstri unearthed from various sources thirteen dramas of Bhāṣa. Three out of them, viz. Pratīmā-yaugandharāyaṇa, Svapnavāsavadatta and Avīmā raka owe their themes to the Bhratkathā, while Pratīmā nāṭaka and Abhiṣeка nāṭaka have Rāmāyaṇa as their basic inspiration. Out of the eight remaining dramas six, viz. Madhyama vyāyoga, Paṇcaratṛa, Dūtagāvya, Dūtagāhṭotkacca, Kārmabhāra and Urubhāga owe their themes to the Mahābhārattra, while the last two dramas, Bālacarita and Cārudatttra are dependent for their themes on anecdotes about Śrī Kṛṣṇa and on yakṣa stories.

Though Dr. Gaṇapati Sāstri has strongly contended that all the above thirteen dramas were written by Bhāṣa himself, his view has not yet received universal acceptance. Whatever that be, it is an admitted fact that Svapnavāsavadatta is by far the best among the thirteen dramas. It is a continuation of the story of Pratīmāyagandharāyaṇa. The wedding of king Udāyana and Vāsavadattā is the subject matter of Svapnavāsavada. With his killing of the Rākṣasa ‘Avi’ the Sauvira king comes to be known as Avimāra, and Avimāra’s falling in love with Kurangi, daughter of Kunti, forms the theme of the drama, Avimāra. In Pratīmā nāṭaka is told the story narrated in Rāmāyaṇa from Ayodhyā-kāṇḍa to Paṭṭābhīseka. Abhiṣeka nāṭaka codifies the stories in the Kīśkindhā-kāṇḍa and Sundara-kāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa and describes the coronations of Sugrīva and of Śrī Rāma. Though the characters in Paṇcaratṛa are borrowed from Mahābhārata the story is entirely Bhāṣa’s. Madhyama vyāyoga, Dūtagāvya, Dūtagāhṭotkacca, Kārmabhāra and Urubhāga are one-act plays. These five plays have as their basis some of the anecdotes in the Mahābhārata. In Cārudattta is treated the love story of Cārudattta and Vasantasena.

Indisputable evidence is still lacking to credit Bhāṣa with the authorship of all the thirteen plays referred to above.

BHĀṢAS. (See Bhāṣi).

BHĀṢAKARṇA. A military captain of Rāvaṇa. Hanumān killed him in fight. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa 46, 47).

BHĀṢI. Daughter of Tāmrā, Dakṣa’s daughter. Kaśyapa praṇṣpati married the following daughters of Dakṣa: Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kālikā, Tāmrā, Krodhavāsa, Manu and Anala. Tāmrā had five daughters, viz. Krauṇicī, Bhāṣi, Śyenī, Dhrīrāṣṭrī and Śuki. And, the sons of Bhāṣi are the Deva sect called the Bhāsas. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Āraṇya Kāṇḍa, Canto 14).
BHĀSKARA. One of the Dvādaśādityas born of Kaśyapa prajāpāti and Aditi. (Anuṣāsana I arva, Verse 150).

BHĀSKARĀŚAYA. A master astronomer of ancient India. It was he who declared, much earlier than western experts, that the earth is round in shape.

BHĀSKAR1. An old mahaśī of India. He accompanied the Ṛṣis who visited Bhīma on his bed of arrows. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 12).

BHASMA. (Sacrred ash). To know a story about the greatness of Bhasma see under the word Durjaya.

BHĀSMĀSA. A demon. There is no mention about this demon in any of the Sanskrit purāṇas but 'Śivalīlāṃṭa' in Marāṭhi contains the following story about him.

Bhasmāsa was born of the Bhasma dust (ashes) on the body of Śiva. Pleased at the great devotion of the demon towards him Śiva asked him to name any boon he wanted. Bhasmāsa said that he wanted the power to burn to ashes anybody on whose head he placed his hand. Bhasmāsa became arrogant with the boon and he became a nightmare to the whole world. Then Mahāviṣṇu appeared before him in the form of Mohini, an attractive dancer and alluring him by her charm started on a dance called Muktanṭya. During the course of this dance Bhasmāsa was forced to place his hand on his own head and the moment his head touched his head he was burnt to ashes.

BHĀŚVARA. One of the two attendants presented by Sūrya to Subrahmanyā; the other was named Subhrajā. (Śālya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 31).

BHĀṬṬANARĀṆAYANA. A sanskrit poet who flourished near about A.D. 700. Veṇśamhāra, a drama in six acts is the only composition of his found out, yet. He is also known by another name, Mgarājālakāsa. Certain scholars opine that he might have lived before Bāṇa and after Vāmanā.

BHĀṬṬANĀṆAYAKA. A literary critic who flourished in the 10th century A.D. in India. He composed a critical study on the science of dance (Nāṭya) named Hṛdayadarpaṇa based on the Nāṭya śāstra of Bharata. But, the book has not been found out, yet. Contesting the dhvanīvāda (the rhetorical theory that in poetry suggested or implied meaning is superior to the explicit meaning) of Anandavardhanācārya, he established the rasavāda (that sentiment is supreme in poetry). Abhinavagupta also has supported the rasavāda. Hence, it may be inferred that BhāṭṭanāṆayaka lived in the period after Anandavardhana and anterior to Abhinavagupta. BhāṭṭanāṆayaka's theory is that Abhidhā, Bhāvakatvāni and Bhokatvāni should be the three excellences of good poetry.

BHĀṬṬI. A sanskrit poet who lived in the 7th century A.D. His most important composition is the Mahākāvyā, Rāvaṇavadha, which has become very popular and famous by the name Bhāṭṭikāvyā. This mahākāvyā deals with the story of Rāma in its twentytwo Kāndas (cantos). The kāvyā is believed to have been composed at Valabhi in obedience to the request of King Śrīdrasenas.

BHĀUMA I. The fourteenth Manu. In the time of this Manu, the person called Suci will be Indra. Under his control there will be five groups of Devas. These groups are called Cākaṇas, Pavitra, Kanaṇthas, Bhrārikas, and Vāpāvyddhas. The Saptarasī (seven sages) of that Manvantara are Agnibha, Suci, Sukra, Māgadhā, Agnibha, Yukta and Jīta. At that time, the sons of Manu who will be protecting the earth will be Uru, gāniḥbirabuddhi and other Kings. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 3rd Part, Chapter 2).

BHĀUMA II. Another name of Narakāśura. (See the word Narakāśura).

BHĀUTYA. See the word Manvantara.

BHĀVA I. One of the eleven Kudras. He was the son of Śīhū and grandson of Brahma. (Chapter 66, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

BHĀVA II. A sāntana Viśvadeva. (Chapter 60, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

BHĀVA III. One of the sons born to Kaśyapa of Sura-bhi.

BHĀVA (M). I. A famous forest mentioned in the Purāṇas. Bhāva was near the Veṇumanda mountain, which was close to Dvārakā. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

BHĀVA. One of the twelve Devas born to Bṛghuvaṁśi of his wife Divyā.

BHĀVABHŪTI. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 7th century A.D. His important works are the three dramas, Mālatimādhave, Mahāvīraraṇita and Uttararāṇita. Bhāvabhūti was a brahmin of the Kaśyapa gotra. He was the son of one Nilakaṇṭha and one Jātukarnī. He was a great devotee of Śiva and he got his name Bhāvabhūti later because of this. His original name was Nilakaṇṭha. Bhāvabhūti was born in Padmapura in the state of Vidarbha. But Bhāvabhūti spent most of his life in the palace of Yaśodhvarmā, king of Kannauj.

Bhāvabhūti's first drama is believed to be Mahāvīraraṇita. There are seven acts in this. The theme is based on the story of Śrī Rāma. But there are some variations from the original Rāmāyaṇa in this drama. Bhāvabhūti states that even at the time of the svayamvara of Sītā, Rāvaṇa was a suitor. There is an opinion among certain scholars that Bhāvabhūti did write only up to the 46th verse in the fourth act and the rest was written by another poet named Subrahmanyā.

Mālatimādhave is a drama of ten acts. It is a love-story of Mālati and Mādhave. Mālati was the daughter of the minister of Ujjayinī and Mādhave was the son of the minister of Vidarbha. It was while Mādhave was having his education in Ujjayinī that he came to love Mālati. It was Kāmadakī who was a classmate of both the ministers and who became a sanyāsī later who pulls the strings of this love story. The king of Ujjayinī wanted Mālati to marry Nandana, a friend of his. But Mālati did not love him. Yet afraid of getting the displeasure of the King, Mālati's father decided to give her in marriage to Nandana. In despair Mādhave was about to commit suicide when from the temple nearby Mādhave heard an agonised weeping. He rushed to the site of the sound and found to his bewilderment the gruesome sight of Mālati being dragged for sacrifice by a sorceress named Kapālakūṭdāla helped by her guru Aghoraḥanā. Mādhave killed Aghoraḥanā and saved Mālati. Disappointed Kapālakūṭdāla swore that she would seek revenge on Mādhave and disappeared. Mālati went back to her palace. At this time Madhayantikā, sister of Nandana and Makaranda, a friend of Mādhave became lovers. Once Madhayantikā was attacked by a tiger in a Siva temple and Makaranda saved her from the wild beast, and they became lovers thereafter. The proposal to give Mālatī in marriage to Nandana was still pending then. The marriage day was fixed and a day before that by a clever ruse played by the keen-witted Kāmanelaki Mālatī and Mādhava eloped together. Makaranda, friend of Mādhava, was disruised and dressed in bridal robes and Nandana little suspecting the trick played on him married the substitute. Before they went to the bridal chamber for the night Nandana’s sister came to see her new sister-in-law and the moment she put her eyes on her she understood who it was and that night they also eloped. Thus poor Nandana was left alone.

Kapālakundalā by her sorcery separated Mālatī from Mādhava but luckily Saudamini a disciple of Kāmanelaki saved her from Kapālakundalā. Later Mālatī married Mādhava with the permission of the King. This is the story of Mālatī-Mādhava.

Uttarārāmacaritā is a play of seven acts. The theme is the story of Rāma after his return to Ayodhyā after the exile. It begins with the renunciation of Siṭā by Rāma and ends with the vanishing of Siṭā. All these three dramas used to be enacted during the festival of ‘Kālapriyānātha’ at Ujjayinī. The predominant emotion in Mahāvīracaritā is ‘Vāra’, in Mālatī-Mādhava, ‘Snāgāra’ and in Uttarārāmacaritā ‘Karunā’. In expressing and elaborating the emotion of ‘Karunā’ Bhavabhūti excels Kālidāsa. The one draw-back which keeps him second to Kālidāsa is his lack of humour and wit. The sanskrit poet Dhanapāla in his book ‘Tilakamaṇjari’ speaks about Bhavabhūti thus:

Spasṭabhāvārasā citraha
Padanyāsaḥ pravarttitaḥ
Nāṭakeṣu naṭastraiva
Bhārata Bhavabhūtiṇā //

BHĀVADĀ. A follower of Skandadeva. (Chapter 45, Salya Parva).

HĀVANMANYU. A king of Pūruvaṇāśa. He had five B sons: Brhatksatra, Nara, Garga, Mahāvīrya and Jaya. (Chapter 19, Arśa 4, Vīguṇḍa Parāṇa).

BHĀVĀNIKĀ. A companion of princess Mrgaṅkāvati. (See Śrīdatta).

BHĀVATI. The word prescribed by Manu to be used while addressing women. Not all women should be addressed like that. All women who are not your relatives and the wives of others should be addressed using any one of the following words: Bhavati, Subhag: or Bhagini.

Parapatni tu yā strī syād
Asambadhdha ca yonitah /
Tām brūyād bhavatītyeva
Subhage bhagini ca //
(Manusmṛti, Chapter 2).

BHĀVAYAYYA. A muni, whose glories are sung in the Ṛgveda. He married Romāṣṭa, daughter of Bṛhadspaṭi. Once she approached her husband with the request for coition, and the husband laughed at her. (Ṛgveda, Mandala 19, Anuvāka 19, Sūkta 127).

BHĀVINI. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā. (Sālya Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 11).

BHĀVISYA PURĀNA. This purāṇa contains the instructions given by the god Śūrya to Manu. There are about fourteen thousand books in this purāṇa and they deal with almost all subjects on earth including such important ones like, Śṛṣṭi (creation), Kālamanā (time), Garbhādhāna (conception), Godāna (gift of cows), Āryamādhāmas (éetics of a hermit) Nīlaka Sāstra (science of sex), Viṣacikīṣa (treatment of poisoning) and Ayurveda (Medical science). (Chapter 272, Agni Purāṇa).

BHĀVYARĀMĀYA: A. The part after Uttarārāmaṇya. Uttarārāmaṇya states about Bhaaviṣyaratāmāya being sung by Kuṇa and Lava in the presence of Śrī Rāma.

BHĀVUKA. A king of the solar dynasty. He was the son of Raśalya and father of Cakrodhāta. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skanda).

BHĀVAYA I. A son of Dhruva. He got of his wife Śambhū two sons, Sīṣṭi and Bhāvaya. (Chapter 13, Arśa 1, Vīguṇḍa Parāṇa).

BHĀVAYA II. A clan of devas in Raivatamanvantara. Parimiti, Priyaniśthā, Mati, Mana, Vivecasa, Vijaya, Sujaya and Syoda are some of the prominent devas of the clan. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, 2.36, 71-72).

BHĀVAYA III. One of the Saptarśis (seven sacred saints) of Daśaśāvariṇi Manvantara.

BHĀVAYA. A demoness, sister of Kālā who presides over the land of death. She was married to Heti, son of Brähma and brother of Praheṭi. Viḍyutēka was her son and he married Sālakaṇṭakā, daughter of Sandhyā. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

BHĀVAYA (M). Hīṃsa is the wife of Adharma. They got a son named Anṛta and a daughter named Nikṛti. From them were born Bhaya, Narakā, Māyā and Vedanā. Of these Māyā produced Mṛtyu, destroyer of matter. Vedanā got of her husband Raurava son named Dhūkha. From Mṛtyu were born Vyādhi, Jarā, Soka, Trṣā and Krothā. (Chapter 20, Agni Purāṇa). Another version about the birth of Bhaya is found in Sloka 54, Chapter 66 of Ādi I arva, M.B. Adharma married Nirṛti and to them were born Bhaya, Mahābhaya and Mṛtyu, three sons of demonic disposition. These three sons led a sinful life.

BHĀYANKARA I. A prince of the country of Sauvira. He was a dependant of Jayadraṭha. It was this Bhāyan-kara who followed Jayadratha with his flag when he was trying to kidnap Pāṇcāli. Arjuna killed him. (Chapter 265 and 271, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHĀYANKARA II. A sanātana Viśādeva. (Chapter 91, Anuśaṇa Parva, M.B.).

BHĀYANKARĪ. A follower of Subrahmanyā. (Śloka 4, Chapter 46, Salya Parva, M.B.).

BHĒDI. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 13).

BHEILA. A disciple of Punarvasu Ātreya who was an Ayurveda ācārya. He was a contemporary of Agnivesa and has composed a work on Ayurveda, entitled ‘Bheila-samhitā’.

BHĒRĪŚVĀTĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 26).

BHĪMA. Bhīmasena, one of the five Pāṇḍavas.1

1) Genealogy. (See genealogy of Arjuna).

2) Birth and childhood. King Vieitrviryā of Candra vaṁśa (lunar dynasty) had two sons called Dhīrāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu. The Kauravas (Duryodhana etc.) were sons born to Dhīrāṣṭra of his wife Gándhārī, and the captions Dharmaputra, Arjuna, Nakula, Sahadeva and Pāṇcāli only.
Pāṇḍavas were the sons of Pāṇdu and his wives Kuntī and Mādrī. Dharmaputra, Bhīma and Arjuna were the sons of Kuntī, and Nakula and Sahadeva of Mādrī. 1 Kuntī directed a mantra gifted to her by Durvūsas towards Vāyūbbagavān (the wind-god) and the result was the birth of Bhīma. Hence he is called Vāyu-putra (son of the wind-god). At the time of his birth a celestial voice announced that the boy would grow up to be the strongest among the strong. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 14). On the tenth day after birth the child Bhīma fell from his mother’s lap on a rock. Bhīma was not injured in any manner by that fall, although it crushed the rock into power. (This story is told in the southern texts of the Mahābhārata in Chapter 132 of Ādi Parva). The naming ceremony of the child was performed by the Mahārṣis, who stayed at Sataśāṅgā. Kaśyapa Mahārṣi, family priest of Vasudeva performed the ceremonies like wearing of the sacred thread. Bhīma learned fighting with the gadi (club or mace) from Śuka, the famous Rājarṣi.

The Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas spent their childhood in Hastināpura. Droṇācārya taught them fighting with weapons. The Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas often engaged themselves in children’s games. In all such games Bhīma used to hurt and defeat the Kauravas, and to this fact the unending hatred of the Kauravas towards Bhīma owed its origin. Once they administered poison to Bhīma who fell down unconscious, and then they threw him into the depths of the Gaṅgā (Ganges). Going deeper and deeper in the waters Bhīma, at last, reached the Nāgalo, where the nāgas (serpents) bit him which neutralized the effects of the poison in his body. There he got acquainted with a nāga called Āryaka, who introduced him to Vāsuki, king of the nāgas, and Vāsuki presented him with much wealth and other costly gems. But, what use was all this wealth to Bhīma? Then Vāsuki agreed to give him a divine drink, which would give the user of it the strength of thousand elephants. Bhīma drank at one draught eight pot-fulls of that divine drink, and thus became tremendously strong. But, he had to wait in Nāgalo for eight days so that the drink might be thoroughly assimilated, and on the ninth day the nāgas saw him off in all pomp and splendour. Bhīma returned to his mother and brothers and consoled them, who were terribly anxious at his absence.

When the training of the princes in the use of weapons was over a competition or test was conducted. Duryodhana and Bhīma entered into a ‘club-fight’, and when Karṇa tried to intervene in the fight his nobility was questioned by Bhīma. Duryodhana then insulted Bhīma. Arjuna agreed to present King Drupada before Droṇācārya as gurudakṣiṇā to him. In the fierce war the Pāṇḍavas fought with Drupada, Bhīma annihilated the elephant division of the latter’s army. And, afterwards Bhīma underwent higher training in club-war at the hands of Balabhadrārāma. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 136, Verse 4).

3) The Pāṇḍavas left Hastināpura. As enmity between the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas began growing stronger and stronger, Duryodhana, with his father’s permission, removed the Pāṇḍavas to Varāṇavāta and settled them there. They were put up there in a palace specially made of lac. The Pāṇḍavas divided the secret of it and escaped from the fire, when the palace was set fire to. Verse 10, Chapter 147 of the Ādi Parva states that it was Bhīma, who set fire to the palace. Escaping thus through a tunnel the Pāṇḍavas travelled a great distance in the forest. Kuntī and four of her sons got tired by the exertions of the travel and were forced to sit down for rest on the way. Bhīma, continued the journey carrying the mother and his four brothers on his shoulders. With their entry into Hidimba forest the weakness left them, and they became their former selves.

4) Hidimba killed. Kuntī devi and four sons slept under the shade of a tree at dusk, and Bhīma kept guard over them. There dwelt in the forest a Rākṣasa called Hidimba with his sister, Hidimbī. Hidimba looked around that particular day from the top of a tree, and detecting Bhīma his mouth watered. He deputed Hidimbī to bring Bhīma over to him. Hidimbī approached Bhīma, whose fine figure kindled feelings of love in her. She desired to have him as husband. Hidimbī having not returned even after a long time Hidimba went over to the spot, and there finding Hidimbī in love-talks with Bhīma he got terribly angry. He wanted to kill Hidimbī. Bhīma, who could not suffer the killing of a woman in his presence rushed against Hidimbī, The noise of the fight awakened the other Pāṇḍavas from sleep, and at the instance of Arjuna, Bhīma killed Hidimba. Thus rendered helpless and forlorn Hidimbī again craved Bhīma for love. On the suggestion of Kuntī, whose heart melted at the sight of Hidimbī’s helplessness Bhīma took her as his wife. But, one condition was stipulated for their enjoying the honey-moon. The condition was that they might enjoy honey-moon, from dawn to dusk in the sky and on mountain tops, Hidimbī, who was endowed with magic powers carrying Bhīma with her. And, after dusk Bhīma was to be returned to Kuntī. Accordingly Bhīma and Hidimbī spent one year, and to them was born a son called Ghāotokaca. Promising that he shall return when wanted, Ghāotokaca with his mother went into the forest. The Pāṇḍavas also left for the village called Ekacakrā. (Ādi Parva, Chapters 147-154).

5) Killing of Baka and the wedding of Pāncālī. While at Ekacakrā Bhīma killed the Rākṣasa called Baka and freed the people of the village from their distress. Afterwards the Pāṇḍavas attended the Svaṇyamvara (free choice of the husband by woman) of Pāncālī, who became their wife. There Bhīma defeated Śalya in fight. And, the Pāṇḍavas duly returned to Hastināpura. (For details see Baka, Pāncālī and Arjuna).

6) Again to forest. On their return to Hastināpura the Pāṇḍavas took their residence in the palace built by Maya. There Maya presented a magnificent club to Bhīma. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 18). It was Śri Kṛṣṇa, lord of Dvārakā who served as the right hand of the Pāṇḍavas, Jarāsandha, who was then King of Magadha fought with Kṛṣṇa eighteen times and got defeated. Yet he did not yield, and at last Kṛṣṇa decided to do away with him. Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna and Bhīma, in disguise, set out for Magadha. They entered Jarāsandha’s palace and challenged him to a duel. Bhīma and Jarāsandha clashed, and at the instance of Kṛṣṇa Bhīma rent the latter in two and threw him on the ground. Though Jarāsandha was alive again, Bhīma rent him in two and threw away the two parts to two places. (M. B. Sahlā Parva, Southern Text, Chapter 24).

The main impediments and thorns in their way thus having been removed, Dharmaputra decided to perform Rājasūya. Bhima was deputed to conquer all the kingdoms in the eastern part of India. Bhima achieved the object and returned with great wealth to Indraprastha. Though Bhima got ready to kill Śīṣupāla, who alone refused to acknowledge the suzerainty of Yudhīshthira, he also yielded on the tactful advice of Bhīṣma. The Rājasūya Yajña went off quite successfully. It was Bhima, who, after the Yajña was over, took Bhīṣma and Yudhīshṭhira to Hastināpura. Afterwards, in the contest in the game of dice played between Dharmaputra and Duryodhana, the Pāṇḍavas lost everything. The Kauravas brought Pāṇcāli into the assembly hall and attempted to strip her naked in public. Bhima who got enraged at this shouted that the hands of Yudhīshṭhira who played dice should be burnt in fire. (Adi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 6). And, Bhima took then and there the terrible pledge that he would, with his hands stained by blood from the chest of Duṣāśana, who tried to rip Pāṇcāli naked, tie up Pāṇcāli's hair which got untied in the scuffle. He also swore that he would break the thigh of Duryodhana. In uncontrollable rage Bhima also shouted that he would turn into ashes all those who took part in the game of dice. Bhima took also the vow that all the Kauravas would be killed.

According to the terms and conditions laid down with regard to the contest in the game of dice the Pāṇḍavas went into the Kāmyaka forest to live there for twelve years and then to live incognito for one year.

7) Life in forest and life incognito. There lived in Kāmyaka forest a Rākṣasa called Kīrmīra, brother of Bala, whom Bhima had killed on an earlier occasion. Kīrmīra, who was awaiting an opportunity to avenge the murder of his brother, now clashed with Bhima in the forest. Bhima did very easily kill him. (For details see Kīrmīra).

Thus the Pāṇḍavas spent their days once again in the Kāmyaka forest under the spiritual leadership of sage Dhaumya. They thought about their lost kingdom. Should they go to war against the Kauravas or should they spend the rest of their lives in the exercise of dhārmic injunctions? At one time Bhima advised Yudhīshṭhira against war; but on another occasion he pleaded vehemently in favour of war. It was during this time that Arjuna went to the Himālayas to please Śiva by penance and get from him the Pāṇḍavas. (Arrow called Pāṇḍavata). The Pāṇḍavas naturally got nervous and upset at the rather long absence of Arjuna; Bhima was more anxious and sorry than the others. Then the Pāṇḍavas set out in search of Arjuna, and travelled up to Mount Gandhamadana. Then the party got so tired that they could not proceed any further. Pāṇcāli fell down fainting. Then Bhima remembered Ghāṭotkaca, who appeared before his father (Bhima) at once. As directed by Bhima Ghāṭotkaca mounted the Pāṇḍavas on his shoulders and the journey continued. They reached the Aśrama of Naranārāyaṇas, and rested there for six days. One day the wind blowing from the north-east dropped near Pāṇcāli a Saugandhika flower. And, Bhima set out in the north-east direction to fetch saugandhika flowers for Pāṇcāli, who felt a special liking for them.

Walking and walking Bhima entered Kadaliavana. Hanūṁān, his skin wrinkled and hair grey due to old age, was living in this forest. He obstructed the path of Bhima. Hanūmān awoke from sleep and raised his tail with a terrific sound. Bhima walked up the place whence the sound was heard. (Vanapravara, Chapter 146). In the clash that ensued between Hanūmān and Bhima the former came out victorious. Hanūmān, however, congratulated Bhima and directed him on the path to the saugandhika forest.

Bhīmsena reached the saugandhika forest, which was being guarded by the Rākṣasas called Krodhavasas. Bhima overcame them, collected the flowers and returning with them stayed in the Badarikāśrama with his brothers and Pāṇcāli. Here it was that Bhima killed Jaṭāsura. (For details see Jaṭāsura II).

Four years were thus spent; yet Arjuna had not returned. The Pāṇḍavas continued their journey northward. On the 17th day they came to the Aśrama of Vṛṣaparvā in the Himālayas. They were duly received by the mahāraśtri, who directed them in their onward journey. Continuing the journey they reached the Aśrama of Arśiṣena whence, after crossing various mountain peaks and still walking they reached Kubera's Alakāpurī where a Yakṣa called Mānūṁa obstructed their further progress. Bhima killed Mānūṁa and the other Yakṣas who rushed to his support. Finally Kubera himself saw Bhima and blessed the Pāṇḍavas.

While they were returning from Kubera's palace Bhima was caught by a python. But, it was really Nahuṣa transformed into a python on account of a curse. Bhima killed it and it assumed its original form as Nahuṣa. (See Agastya, Parva 8). By this time Arjuna had obtained Pāṇḍuपतास्रात्र from Śiva and he duly returned to his brothers, and the Pāṇḍavas continued their journey in the forest.

Meantime, knowing that the Pāṇḍavas were put up in Dvaitavana, the Kauravas started for their dwelling place in a procession led by Duryodhana with the army and camped nearly two furlongs away from a pool in Dvaitavana. While thus camping Duryodhana clashed with a Gandharva called Citrasena, who with a number of his comrades came to the pool for water games, and in the encounter the latter made Duryodhana prisoner. Bhīmsena who witnessed the scene very much laughed at Duryodhana. But, Arjuna intervened and set free Duryodhana and others.

The Pāṇḍavas again entered the Kāmyaka forest, and it was at that time that Jayadratha abducted Pāṇcāli. Bhima killed Koṭiकṣaya who acted on behalf of Jayadratha. (See Koṭiकṣaya). Moreover Bhima captured Jayadratha, got his head shaved clean and declared that he was a slave of Dharmaputra. It was here at Dvaitavana that Dharmadeva tested the Pāṇḍavas, who had gone to a nearby pool to fetch water; all the Pāṇḍavas except Yudhīshṭhira died at the pool, but were brought back to life again. (See Dharmaputra, Parva 7). The eight years' forest-life of the Pândavas now came to an end.

1. When raised, Hanūmān's tail was as high in the sky as the flag of Indra and produced a thunderous sound. As though the mountains were vomiting through their mouth, the sound produced by the raising of the tail shook the mountains. Drowning the trumpeting of excited elephants the sound reverberated all around the mountains. Hearing the sound Bhima, his whole body hirsutified entered the forest in the direction of the sound. In the middle of Kadaliavana, on a mighty rock, Bhima saw Hanūmān.

According to the advice of Dharmadeva the Pândavas selected the Vírāta palace for their life incognito, Bhimasena assuming the name Vállava (Valala). And, here Bhíma killed in a duel Jímita, the pugilist. (See Jímita 11). It was also here that Bhíma killed Kícaka and the Upákicakas. (See Kícaka). On another occasion, at the instance of Yudhiśthíra Bhíma took Sudharmá, King of Dására that Bhíma captivated; but he was later set free. Next year the Pándavas defeated Duryodhana in the fight in connection with the theft of the cows of the Vírāta King, and then they declared that their forest life and life incognito were over.

8) Bhíma in the great war. Even after the return of the Pándavas after the forest life and life incognito the Kauravas refused to give them half of the kingdom. So, both the parties began preparations for war. Given hereunder is the main incident relating to Bhíma from this period to the Svarágárhóna (going to Heaven) of the Pándavas after relinquishing the kingdom in favour of Paríkṣít, including their victory in war and the administration of the country.

1) Sañjýája described to Dhítaráśtra the prowess and achievements of Bhíma. (Udyogá Parva, Chapter 50).

2) Śrí Kṛṣṇa before leaving for the Kaurava assembly for compromise talks asked for the views of Bhíma about the whole problem, and Bhíma opined that peace was preferable to war. (Udyogá Parva, Chapter 74).

3) When Śrí Kṛṣṇa admonished Bhíma he opted for war and waxed eloquent about his heroism and prowess. (Udyogá Parva, Chapter 76).

(92) Bhima made Yudhiṣṭhira to retract from his intention to renounce the world and become a Sannyāsin. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 19).

(93) Yudhiṣṭhira installed Bhima, as crown prince. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 9).

(94) Yudhiṣṭhira settled Bhima down in the palace of Duryodhana killed in war. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 6).

(95) As directed by Vyāsa, Nakula and Sahadeva were put in-charge of protecting the Kingdom. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 19).

(96) It was Bhima who, along with the brahmans, measured the yājñabhāmi, in connection with Yudhiṣ-
During one of those days Bāhruvāhāna visited Bhīma, who sent the former back loaded with money and foodgrains. (Āśvamedha Parv, Chapter 88, Verse 6).

It was Bhīma who held the umbrella to Śrī Kṛṣṇa in the chariot on his way back from the company of the Pāṇḍavas to Dvārakā. (Āśvamedha Parv, Southern Text, Chapter 92).

Bhīma opposed Dhṛtarāṣṭra’s demand for money to perform the rituals of those who had died in war. (Āśrama-vāsika Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 7).

After Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Kuntī and Gāndhārī retired into the forest Bhīma visited them once. (Āśrama-vāsika Parva, Chapter 23).

8) Bhīma’s conceit put down. While, after the great war, the Pāṇḍavas and Śrī Kṛṣṇa were discussing several matters all the Pāṇḍavas except Bhīma said they owed their success in war to Kṛṣṇa. But, Bhīma, in all haughtiness claimed the credit for victory to his personal prowess.

With the object of putting down this conceit on the part of Bhīma, Śrī Kṛṣṇa, with Bhīma seated along with him on Garuḍa, set out on a journey to the south. After crossing the sea and Mount Subela Śrī Kṛṣṇa, pointing out to Bhīma a lake twelve yojanas wide and lying near Laṅkā, asked him to find out the source of the lake and return with the information. Though Bhīma walked some distance he could not find out its source. Not only that, all the warriors there jointly attacked Bhīma, and finding himself impotent to counter the attack he ran back to Śrī Kṛṣṇa for refuge. Then Śrī Kṛṣṇa with his ring clipped and threw away the lake, and said to Bhīma as follows:—“This is the skull of Kumbhakarṇa killed by Śrī Rāma in the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war. The warriors who attacked you are the asuras called ‘Sarogeyas’.” These words of the lord put down Bhīma’s conceit, and he apologised to Kṛṣṇa. (Skanda Purāṇa, 1,2,66).

9) Death. After entrusting matters of administration of the country to Parīkṣit the Pāṇḍavas set out on their great journey. Yudhīṣṭhīra walking in the front, they started for Kaśī. During the course of their journey Pāṇcāli, Sahadeva, Nakula and Arjuna one after the other fell down dead. Bhīma asked Yudhīṣṭhīra the reason for the deaths and he was given suitable answers by the latter. At last when Bhīma too was about to fall down and die he asked the reason thereof, and Yudhīṣṭhīra replied that Bhīma’s over-eating was the reason. Afterwards when Dharmaputra entered Heaven he found his brothers had already their seats there. (See Arjuna, Para 31).

10) Other information. 1) Bhīma had a son named Sutaśoma by Pāñcāli. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 75).

2) A son called Sarvaga was born to Bhīma of Baladharā, daughter of the King of Kāśī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 97).

3) The following names are found used in the Mahābhārata as synonyms for Bhīma. Acyutānuja, Amlātma, Arjunāgra, Arjunāpūrva, Vallava, Bhīma-dhanvā, Jaya, Kaunteya, Kaurava, Kuśārādūla, Māru-cītma, Māruti, Pāṇḍava, Pārtha, Pavanātmaja, Prabhājanasuta, Rākṣasakatāka, Samirāṇasuta, Vāyu-putra, Vāyusuta, Vṛkodara.

Bhīma II. The Mahābhārata makes mention of another Bhīma, son of King Parīkṣit and brother of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 1). It was this Bhīma who, at the yajña conducted at Kurukṣetra attacked, without reason, the son of Saramā, a dog of the Devas.

Bhīma III. A Deva gandharva delivered by Munī, the wife of Kaśyapa praśajāti. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 42). He took part in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi parva, Chapter 122, Verse 55).

Bhīma IV. Yet another Bhīma, grandson of King Avikṣit of the Lunar dynasty and son of Parīkṣit is mentioned in Chapters 94 and 95 of Ādi Parva. His mother was Suyaśā. He married Kumāri, daughter of Kekaya Rāja and they had a son called Pratīṣṭravas.

Bhīma V. Father of Dīvōdāsī, king of Kāśī. (Udyogaparva, Chapter 117, Verse 1).

Bhīma VI. A Śudra who attained Svarga as on his head fell water with which the feet of a brahmin were washed. The following story about him occurs on page 619 of the Padmapurāṇa.

In the dvāpara yuga there lived a Śudra called Bhīma who engaged himself in the profession of Vaiśyas. An outcaste from practices pertaining to Śudras he enjoyed life with a Vaiśya woman. He was a terrible fellow, who had killed many brahmans, and also enjoyed the wives of many elderly people including his teachers. He was a robber as well. Once he went to a brahmin house, and with the object of robbing his wealth spoke to him in a pathetic tone as follows:—“Respected sir, you will please listen to my grievance. You appear to be kind-hearted. Please give me some rice, or else I will die this very moment.”

Brahmin:—“Oh hungry guest! There is no one here to cook food. I shall give you daily some rice, which you may cook yourself. I have neither father, mother, son, brothers, wife nor any other relatives. All of them are dead and gone. The unfortunate fellow that I am, I am staying here alone. No servants or others here.”

Bhīma:—“Oh revered brahmin! I too am a lonely person. I shall live here for ever serving you. I am a Śudra.”

These words of Bhīma pleased the brahmin so much that he cooked some food quickly and served the Śudra with it. He stayed with the brahmin from that day onwards. His idea was to rob the brahmin of his wealth at some convenient time and get away. But, since he used to pour on his head everyday the water with which the brahmin’s feet were washed he got redemption from all his sins.

One night a thief got into the brahmin’s room to steal his earnings. Seeing the thief Bhīma rushed at him to give him a good thrashing. But, the thief, in the twinkling of an eye, cut off Bhīma’s head and escaped from the scene. At once there came down the attendants of Lord Viṣṇu to lead Bhīma to Vaikuṇṭha. A divine chariot drawn by Rājahaisās (swans) also came down. Bhīma got into the chariot and reached the abode of Viṣṇu.

Bhīma VII. Father of Damayantī. (See Damayantī).

Bhīma VIII. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīma, one of the Pāṇḍavas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 96).

Bhīma IX. Verse 17, Chapter 94 of Ādi Parva, Mentions about one Bhīna born to King Ilīn of his wife Rathandhāri. This Bhīma had four brothers, viz., Duṣyanta, Sūra, Pravasā and Vasu.
BHIMA X. One of the five attendants given to Subrahmanya by the Deva called Aśvina. Parigha, Vata, Dahiṭi and Dahana were the other four. (Sāyā Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 34).

BHIMA XI. A king of ancient time. He sits in yama’s assembly worshipping yama. There are hundred kings in yama’s assembly, having the name Bhīma. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 24). It is on account of the penance of the hundred Bhīmas that the difficulties of people are lifted. (Vana Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 11). These one hundred persons were kings in ancient days. Owing to severe adversities they left their kingdoms for the assembly of yama. (Santi Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 49).

BHIMA XII. A yādava king, the father of Andhaka. This Bhīma was a contemporary of Śrī Rāma. He conquered Madhurāpura founded by Śatrughna after killing the Daitya called Madhu.

BHIMA XIII. A friend of Rāvaṇa, king of Laṅkā. It was on the top of Bhīma’s house that Hanūmān rested for the first time after arriving at Laṅkī. (Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kānda, Canto 6).

BHĪMABALI I (BHURIBALI). One of the hundred sons of Dhrta-rāṣṭra killed by Bhīma. (Sāyā Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 14).

BHĪMABALI II. One of the five Vīnāyakas born from the asura called Pāncājanya. These Vīnāyakas cause difficulties and obstructions to the yajnas of Devatās. (Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 11).

BHĪMABHĀṢA. A gandharva. The following story has reference to his past life. On the death of Śrutadhara, king of Ekalavyanagara the younger of his two sons, Satyadhara drove out of the kingdom the elder brother, Siladhara. Thus ousted from his kingdom Siladhara did due penance and got from Śiva the boon that Satyadhara be killed while he himself be made a gandharva. Owing to the blessing of Śiva Satyadhara died, and he was born again as Samara-bhaṭa, son of Ugrabhaṭa, King of Rādhānagara, and Siladhara was born as Bhīmabhaṭa, brother of Samarabhaṭa. On the death of Ugrabhaṭa Bhīmabhaṭa, after killing Samarabhaṭa ascended the throne. And, on one of those days, he was transformed into a wild elephant as the result of the curse of a muni. But, he remembered his previous existence, and, though turned into elephant could speak like men. Bhīmabhaṭa became a gandharva because he received and treated well once a traveller and related to him his (Bhīmabhaṭa’s) own story. (Kathāsaritsgāra Saśāṅkavatīlanikā). Bhīmajānū. A king in ancient India. He remained in the assembly of yama serving the latter. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 21).

BHĪMĀKṢA. A Rākṣasa, who used to attack the kingdoms of Kāśi and Kosala often. Finally the above kings jointly encountered him. He was killed by King Harivaṇa. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

BHĪMARATHA I. A king of the family of Viśvāmitra. His father was Ketumān and Divodāsa his son. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

BHĪMARATHA II. One of the hundred sons of Dhrta-rāṣṭra killed in the war by Bhīma. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 36).

BHĪMARATHA III. A hero who fought on the Kaurava side. It was this Bhīmaratha who stood at the centre of the garuḍa vyuḥa (army formation in the form of the bird garuḍa, Kite) set up by Drona. (Drona Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 12). He killed Śalva, the Mleccha king and a supporter of the Pāṇḍavas. (Drona Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 26). When Yudhiṣṭhira was king at Indraprastha Bhīmaratha sat in Pāṇḍava assembly as a comrade of the Pāṇḍavas. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 26).

BHĪMARATTHI (BHĪMĀ). A river in the South exotiled in the purāṇas. Sins of those who bathe in this river will vanish. On its shore is a sacred place called Paṇḍhara-pura. (Vana Parva, Chapter 88, Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9).

BHĪMĀŚARA. One of the hundred sons of Dhrta-rāṣṭra. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 99).

BHĪMAVEΓA. One of the hundred sons of Dhrta-rāṣṭra. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 99).

BHĪRū. A son born to Maṇībhadra and his wife Pûnyājani.

BHĪSU. Son of Baka. From the day his father was killed by Bhīma Bhīṣuṇa was impatiently waiting for revenge. When the Paṇḍavas began the Aśvamedha yajña he obstructed it at a place near Ekacakra. Arjuna fought and killed him. (Jainīni Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 22).

2) Birth and Boyhood. Bhīṣma’s name in his boyhood was Devavrata. He was the eighth son of Santanu, a king of the lunar dynasty and Gaṅgādevi. This boy was the human embodiment of Dyaun, one of the Aṣṭavasus. Santanu, his father was the re-birth of another king, Mahābhīṣeka. The story concerning this, as given in the Mahābhārata is as follows:—

King Mahābhīṣeka after his death, attained Viśvuloka. Once he went to visit Brahmā at Satyaloka. At that time Gaṅgādevi was also present in Brahmā’s assembly.

In that pious atmosphere, a gentle breeze began to blow and Gaṅgādevi’s clothes were slightly deranged. Just at that moment, Mahābhīṣeka took a stealthy glance at her and she also returned that glance. This was noted by Brahmā who turned both of them into human beings by a curse. Gaṅgādevi begged pardon and Brahmā lifted the curse and blessed her that the Aṣṭavasus would come to the earth to be born as her sons and that afterwards she could come back to Heaven. After that Gaṅgādevi was born as a mortal woman in the world under the name Gaṅgā and she spent her days in the forests near the Gaṅgā river valleys.

In those days the ruler of the Lunar dynasty was a king named Pratīpa. Having no children, he went to the bank of the river Gaṅgā and performed tapas there. Gaṅgādevi who was moving about in the forests nearby, saw the King deeply absorbed in his tapas. She approached him and sat on his right thigh. She wanted the King to be her husband. He explained to her that the right thigh is the proper seat of a daughter-in-law.
and so she would become his son's wife in due course. His course of time, Pratāpa had a son, Santanu, born to him. When Santanu grew up into a young man, one day he went for a hunt to the Gaṅgā-valley and there he met Gaṅgādevī. He fell in love with her at first sight and courted her. Gaṅgādevī agreed to become his wife on condition that he should not say anything to displease her and if he violated that condition she would leave him. The king accepted the condition and they became man and wife.

At about that time, the wife of Dyo, one of the Aṣṭavasus, happened to see the sacrificial cow of the sage Vasiṣṭha and wished to have it. She expressed her desire to her husband, Dyo. Dyo, with the other seven vasus went and took away by force, Vasiṣṭha's cow. Vasiṣṭha in his anger cursed the Aṣṭavasus to be born as mortals. They repented and begged pardon from Vasiṣṭha. The sage told them that all of them would be born as the sons of Gaṅgādevi and all except Dyo, who actually stole the cow, would return to Heaven at the time of birth itself. As for Dyo, he would continue to live in the world for a long time, as an adventurous hero.

Gaṅgādevī became pregnant and gave birth to her first child. She carried the child to the river Gaṅgā and threw it into the river. Santanu who followed her up to the river bank, did not say anything against her, remembering his promise.

Seven children were born to her and she threw all of them into the river in this way. When she gave birth to the eighth child, Santanu insisted that he would not allow her to throw away that child into the river. As he had violated the condition, the angry Gaṅgādevī left the palace with her child. She named it Devavrata and brought him up in the forest. The sage Vasiṣṭha and Gaṅgādevī taught him all branches of knowledge.

Thirty-two years later, the king went to the same forest for hunting. He saw a handsome boy stopping the flow of the river Gaṅgā. Getting interested in the boy, the King approached him. But by that time he had disappeared. The King prayed to Gaṅgādevi to give back the child. She appeared with the child and after handing over the child to him vanished. The king returned to the palace with the child. (M.B., Aḍī Parva, Chapters 93-100).

3) The name Bhīṣma. Devavrata was anointed, as heir-apparent. One day King Santanu reached the forest near the Gaṅgā river valley, for hunting. As he was hunting, absorbed in the beauty of the forest scenery, he felt the perfume of musk filling the air in the forest. He wondered from where it could come. He went on and on trying to find out the source of this smell until he reached the cottage of a fisherman. The fisherman had a daughter named Satyavatī. It was from her that the fragrance of musk spread all around. The king fell in love with her at first sight. He asked the fisherman to give the girl in marriage to him. But the brave fisher- man did not yield to the king’s demand immediately. He laid down several conditions, one of which was that Satyavatī’s sons should succeed to the throne of Santanu. The king was in a fix. Devavrata was the eldest son and heir-apparent. To deny kingship to his sons would be highly improper. Unable to find a solution to this difficult problem, the king returned to the palace, much depressed and gloomy. There he avoided all company and took to his bed, passing his time in sadness and solitude.

When Devavrata knew about his father’s condition, he called the Ministers and asked them about it. They told him everything in details. At once, without informing even his father, Devavrata went to the fisherman’s cottage on the bank of the river Gaṅgā and begged for Satyavatī on behalf of his father. The fisherman repeated his former condition. Devavrata agreed that Satyavatī’s son shall be given the right of Kingship. The fisherman pointed out that disputes were likely to arise between Devavrata’s sons and Satyavatī’s children regarding the right of succession to the throne. At once Devavrata stood up and made a solemn pledge that he would remain a bachelor for life. The fisherman gave Satyavatī to Devavrata to be taken to the King. Devavrata took her to the palace and presented her to his father. The King, when he came to know of the part played by his son in the matter, rose from his bed and embraced Devavrata with tears of joy and gratitude. The gods showered flowers on the scene. Because he had taken such a solemn oath, it was declared that henceforth he would be known by the name “BHĪṢMA”. The loving father Santanu also gave him a boon that Bhīṣma would die only when he wished. (M.B., Aḍī Parva, Chapter 100).

4) Affairs of the Kingdom in crisis. Two sons named Vicitravirya and Citrāṅgada were born to Satyavatī by Santanu, who died shortly afterwards. As desired by Satyavatī, Bhīṣma crowned the boy Citrāṅgada as king. Although Citrāṅgada’s reign was a prosperous one, it could not last long. Once a Gandharva named Citrāṅgada attacked him at Kurukṣetra and after a battle which lasted for three years, the Gandharva Citrāṅgada killed the King Citrāṅgada. It was Bhīṣma who performed the funeral rites of the King Citrāṅgada. After that Vicitravirya was crowned King.

It was at that time that the Svanāṁvara of the three daughters of the King of Kāśi, Anbā, Ambikā and Ambālikā, was held. Bhīṣma thought that it would be good if Vicitravirya married them. So Bhīṣma attended that function. The presence of Bhīṣma who was an old man, at the Svanāṁvara, frightened the girls. The other kings who were present, stopped him from entering the place, since he had taken an oath to remain a lifelong bachelor. The old Bhīṣma stood up and spoke at length about the eight different forms of marriage and after defeating several kings like Sāvva, he seized the three daughters of the King of Kāśi and took them with him.

1. Satyavatī’s original name was Kāli. The fisherman got her from the stomach of a fish. (See the word Adrikā). Since she had the smell of fish she got the name of “Matsyagandhi.” She used to assist a fisherman in his work as a ferryman in the river Gaṅgā. Once the sage Pārāśara happened to get into her boat and he fell deeply in love with her. The sage removed the smell of fish from her and gave her the perfume of musk instead. By this mystic power he created a mist at noon and under its cover, he had a sexual union with her. As a result of it the child Kṛṣṇa (Vyāsa) was born. The child immediately left the mother to perform tapas in the forest after promising to return to her whenever she wished for his presence. Although she gave birth to a child, Pārāśara bleed that she would again remain a virgin. The whole episode remained a secret. As usual, Satyavatī returned to the fisherman’s cottage in the evening and continued to live with him. It is at this stage that Santanu was attracted by the perfume of musk and came to the cottage where he met Satyavatī, him in his chariot to Hastinapura. Preparations were made for the marriage of Vicitravirya with the three princesses. Then Ambā approached Bhīṣma and told him that she had already dedicated her heart to the king of Śalva. Bhīṣma generously allowed her to return home. (For the rest of Ambā's story, see the word “Ambā”.

Vicitravirya married Ambāikā and Ambālikā. He ruled over the country for seven years at the end of which he died of consumption. The dynasty faced a crisis, as there was no one to succeed him. Satyavatī approached Bhīṣma with a suggestion to beget children by Vicitravirya's wife. But Bhīṣma stood firmly on his solemn oath to continue as a life-long bachelor. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Verse 100-104).

5) Bhīṣma's Wire Pulling. After that Satyavatī summoned Vyāsa to Hastinapura and sons were born to Ambāikā, Ambālikā and their maid by him. Ambāikā gave birth to Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Ambālikā gave birth to Pāṇḍu and the maid gave birth to Vidura. They grew up and Dhṛtarāṣṭra married Gāndhārī and Pāṇḍu married Kuntī and Mādri. Duryodhana and his brothers were born to Dhṛtarāṣṭra, while the Pāṇḍavas were born to Pāṇḍu. Pāṇḍu died at the Satāṣṭaṁga vana and Mādri observed sati by jumping into his funeral pyre and burning herself alive. After that, the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas who lived in the palace at Hastinapura, split up into two blocs. When the palace made of lac was destroyed by fire, the Pāṇḍavas went into the forest and came back to the country after their marriage with Pāñcāli. They ruled over the country with Indraprastha as their capital. In the gambling contest between Dharma-pratīha and Duryodhana, the Pāṇḍavas lost their kingdom and everything and so they went to the forest again. They lived for twelve years in the forest and spent one year incognito in the palace of the King of Virāṭa. At that time the Pāṇḍavas reappeared in the battle which took place as a result of the theft of Virāṭa's cows by the Kauravas. Duryodhana asserted that he would not give so much land to the Pāṇḍavas as to put a dot with a needle. With the failure of Śrī Kṛṣṇa's mediation, the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas encamped on the opposite sides of the field of Kurukṣetra, preparing for a grim battle.

Bhīṣma was the chief protagonist in all these events relating to the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas. At every stage in the story we see Bhīṣma's influence. The main events in which this superman who used to give shelter to Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas alike, played a decisive role, are given below:

1) Bhīṣma sent a messenger to Subala, king of Gāndhāra, to ask for the hand of Gāndhāri, to be married to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 11).

2) He went to the palace of Śalva, king of Madra and secured Mādri to be married to Pāṇḍu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 112).

3) He brought about the marriage between Vidura and the daughter of Devaka. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 2).

4) The Mahārṣis who were the inhabitants of Satāṣṭaṁga told Bhīṣma about the birth of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 125, Verse 22).

5) Bhīṣma offered 'Jalaṇjali' (worship with holy water) to Pāṇḍu at his death. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 126, Verse 27).

6) He performed the death anniversary of Pāṇḍu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 1).

7) He engaged Drona to teach archery to the princes. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 77).

8) He burst into tears and wept bitterly on hearing that Pāṇḍavas were burnt to death in the palace of lac and was about to offer them 'Jalaṇjali'. Just then, Vidura came to him and secretly informed him that the Pāṇḍavas were not dead. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 149, Dākṣiṇātīya Pāthā).

9) He advised Duryodhana to give half the kingdom to the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 202).

10) He had taken part in Dharma-pratīha's Rājasūya Yajña. Dharma-pratīha had entrusted to Bhīṣma, the arrangements for that yajña. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 6).

11) He advised Yudhiṣṭhira to give the highest place of honour in that yajña to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 28).

12) Bhīṣma ridiculed Śiṣuvāla (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 39).

13) Śiṣuvāla insulted Bhīṣma. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 41).

14) Bhīṣma stopped Bhīṣma who rushed out to kill Śiṣuvāla. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 42, Verse 13).

15) It was Bhīṣma who narrated the life story of Śiṣuvāla. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 43).

16) In the battle against Śiṣuvāla, Bhīṣma selected powerful Kings to help Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 41).

17) Once Bhīṣma asked the sage Pulāsta about the value and importance of pilgrimage. (Vana Ārva, Chapter 82, Verse 4).

18) Bhīṣma advised Duryodhana to be on friendly terms with the Pāṇḍavas. (Vana Ārva, Chapter 253, Verse 4).

19) In the battle which was fought by Kauravas against King Virāṭa, Bhīṣma arranged the regiments in order, after sending Duryodhana to Hastinapura. (Virāṭa Ārva, Chapter 52, Verse 16).

20) A grim fight took place between Arjuna who went to help the Virāṭa army and Bhīṣma. At last, it was the charioteer who removed Bhīṣma, (who had fallen down unconscious) from the battlefield. (Virāṭa Ārva, Chapter 64).

21) When the Kauravas were contemplating to fight against the Pāṇḍavas who had returned after their incognito life, Bhīṣma ridiculed Karna and praised Arjuna. (Udyoga Ārva, Chapter 21, Verse 16).

22) At that time, he explained to Duryodhana, the greatness of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna. (Udyoga Ārva, Chapter 49, verse 2).

23) Duryodhana proposed to bind the hands and feet of Śrī Kṛṣṇa who was expected to come as the envoy of the Pāṇḍavas. Hearing this, Bhīṣma in great anger, walked out of the council hall. (Udyoga Ārva, Chapter 88, Verse 19).

24) Bhīṣma strongly advised Duryodhana to make a treaty of peace with the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga Ārva, Chapter 125, Verse 2).

25) He declared that he would not kill the Pāṇḍavas but would kill 10,000 soldiers of the Pāṇḍavas everyday. (Udyoga Ārva, Chapter 156, Verse 21).
(26) As desired by Duryodhana, Bhiṣma declared the Rathiś and Mahārathiś who belonged to the Kaurava side. (Udyoga Parva, Chapters 165-168).

(27) Bhiṣma described all the Mahārathiś of the Pāṇḍava side to Duryodhana. (Udyoga Parva, Chapters 169-172).

(28) Bhiṣma told Duryodhana that Śīkaṇḍi and the Pāṇḍavas should not be killed. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 172, Verse 20).

(29) Bhiṣma offered pājā to Paraśurāma. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 123, Verse 27).

(30) Aśā who was allowed by Bhiṣma to marry her lover, King Śāla, was rejected by him and returned to Bhiṣma again. But he did not accept her. Although Paraśurāma pleaded with him on behalf of Aśā, Bhiṣma did not marry her. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 178, Verse 32).

(31) In connection with Aśā’s case, a duel was fought on the field of Kurukṣetra between Bhiṣma and Paraśurāma. Bhiṣma started the duel after asking for the permission of Paraśurāma. Pleased with the fight, the Vāsus presented to Bhiṣma the Prasāpuba arrow. But he did not use that arrow against Paraśurāma, since the gods and Nārada prevented him from doing so. At the request of the gods, pītrā and Gaṅgādevī, Bhiṣma stopped the fight and prostrated at the feet of Paraśurāma. (Udyoga Parva, Chapters 178-185).

(32) Bhiṣma narrated to Duryodhana the story of Aśā who was re-born as Śīkaṇḍi. (Udyoga Parva, Chapters 188-192).

(33) Bhiṣma himself told Duryodhana that he had the strength to annihilate all the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 193, Verse 14).

(34) Before the beginning of the battle, Yudhiṣṭhira went to Bhiṣma and asked for his permission to start it. Bhiṣma granted him permission and blessed him. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 4).

6) Bhiṣma in Bhāratī Yuddha.

(1) On the first day of the battle a duel took place between Bhiṣma and Arjuna. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 8).

(2) In the battle Bhiṣma killed Śveta, the son of king Viśrāṭa. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 3).

(3) There was again a terrible fight with Arjuna. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 52).

(4) Śīkaṇḍi killed Bhiṣma’s charioteer. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 114).

(5) Seeing that the army of the Kauravas was being scattered in all directions by the violent strokes of Arjuna Bhiṣma ordered to stop the second day’s battle. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 53, Verse 42).

(6) Bhiṣma challenged Śrīkṛṣṇa for the fight. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 96).

(7) Fought again with Arjuna. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 60, Verse 25).

(8) Bhiṣma gave orders to Dronācārya and Duryodhana to save Bhagadatta who fell in danger. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 64).

(9) Bhiṣma told Duryodhana that Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa were the incarnations of Nara and Nārāyaṇa. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapters 65-68).

(10) Bhiṣma praised the greatness of Brahmāpūta Stotra. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 2).

(11) Seeing Śīkaṇḍi rushing forward to oppose him, Bhiṣma put an end to the battle. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 69, Verse 29).

(12) A terrible fight took place between Bhiṣma and Bhiṃsaṇa. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 70).

(13) There was again a fight with Arjuna. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 71).

(14) Bhiṣma wounded Bhiṃsaṇa and defeated Śīkaṇḍi. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 71, Verse 21).

(15) Bhiṣma wounded King Viśrāṭa. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 73, Verse 2).

(16) Duryodhana who was frightened by Bhiṃsaṇa’s deeds of valour, was encouraged by Bhiṣma. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 80, Verse 8).

(17) He deprived Dharmaputra of his chariot. (Bhiṣma parva, Chapter 86, Verse 11).

(18) When Bhiṃsaṇa killed Bhiṣma’s charioteer, the horses turned round and ran away, dragging the chariot with them. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 12).

(19) He ordered Bhagadatta to fight with Ghatotkaca. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 17).

(20) He swore that all except Śīkaṇḍi would be killed. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 98, Verse 4).

(21) Śīkaṇḍi and Bhiṣma fought again. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 104, Verse 29).

(22) Bhiṣma killed 14,000 Mahārathiś who belonged to the Cedi, Kāśi and Kārṣaṇa countries. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 18).

(23) Bhiṣma explained to Dharmaputra, the method by which he (Bhiṣma) could be killed. (Bhiṣma parva, Chapter 107, verse 76).

(24) He declared that he would not fight with Śīkaṇḍi, who was neither man nor woman. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 108, Verse 43).

(25) He allowed Yudhiṣṭhira to launch an attack on himself (Bhiṣma). (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 13).

(26) Bhiṣma, shot by Arjuna’s arrow, fell down unconscious. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 64).

(27) Bhiṣma who recovered and rose again, killed Satāṅkika, brother of King Viśrāṭa. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 27).

(28) Bhiṣma routed the Pāṇḍava army most disastrously. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapters 118, 119).

(29) He considered the misery of life and the sweetness of death. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 119, Verse 34).

(30) Bhiṣma who was wounded by Arjuna’s arrows, described to Duśśāsana, the heroism of Arjuna. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 119, Verse 56).

(31) Arjuna shot his arrow at Bhiṣma and made him fall down from his chariot. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 119, Verse 87).

(32) He told Hanumā that he would remain alive until the sun came to Uttarāśyaṇa. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 119, Verse 104).

(33) Bhiṣma who fell and lay on a bed of arrows begged for a pillow to the Kings. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 120, Verse 34).

(34) When he found that they were not paying any heed to his entreaties, he asked for a pillow to Arjuna. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter, 120, Verse 28).

(35) He exhorted the Kings to put an end to the battle. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 120, Verse 51).

(36) Bhiṣma begged for water to Arjuna. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 121, Verses 18).
(37) He advised Duryodhana to end the battle. (Bhīṣaṇa Parva, Chapter 121, Verse 38).

(38) As Karna wished for ‘Virasvarga’ (Heaven for the valient) Bhīṣma permitted him to fight. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 122, verse 34).

(39) Vyāsā sent Dharmaputra to Bhīṣma to learn the mysteries of “Dharma” from Bhīṣma before his (Bhīṣma’s) death. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 5).

(40) Bhīṣma said that Śrī Kṛṣṇa was more competent to give advice on “Dharma” than himself. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 2).

(41) When the frightened and ashamed Yudhiṣṭhira approached him, Bhīṣma cheered him up. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 19).

(42) Bhīṣma explained to Yudhiṣṭhira, with the help of various examples and illustrations, “Rājya Dharma”, “Āpaldhārma”, and “Mokṣa Dharma”. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 56, to Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165).

(43) After giving his advice to Yudhiṣṭhira Bhīṣma gave him permission to enter Hastinapura. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 166, verse 50).

(44) He gave advice to Dhṛtarāṣṭra regarding his duties and responsibilities. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 167, Verse 30).

(45) He asked for Śrī Kṛṣṇa’s permission to renounce his body. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 167, Verse 37).

(46) With Śrī Kṛṣṇa’s permission, Bhīṣma renounced his body. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 2).

(47) The Kauravas performed the funeral rites and Jalānjalī (purification by sprinkling water) of Bhīṣma (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 10).

(48) Gangādevi lamented that Sikhanda, who was neither man nor woman, killed Bhīṣma. (Anuśāsana Parva, 168, Verse 21).

(49) Vyāsā and Śrī Kṛṣṇa told Gangādevi that Bhīṣma died by Arjuna’s arrow. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 30).

(50) On a later occasion Vyāsā invoked into the river Gaṅgā, those who died in the battle and among them Bhīṣma was also present. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 32, verse 7).

(51) After his death, Bhīṣma remained in Heaven as Dvāru, one of the Aṣṭavasus. (Svargārohanā Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 11).

Other names of Bhīṣma. Āpageya, Āpagāsuta, Bhāgīrathiputra, Bhārata, Pāṭāmaha, Bharatarṣabha, Bharatasattama, Bhīṣmakā, Śāntanava, Śāntanaputra, Śāntanusuta, Śāntanuja, Devavarta, Gaṅgāsuta, Gaṅgēya, Jānnaviputra, Kaurava, Kauravanandana, Kauravya, Kuruvārdūla, Kurusreṣṭha, Kurudvaha, Kurukula-reṣṭha, Kurukulodvaha, Kurumukhya, Kurunandana, Kurupati, Nadija, Prapitāmaha, Sāgarasūta, Satyasandha, Tālādhvaja, Vasu are other names of Bhīṣma used in the Mahābhārata.

BHIṢMA. King of Vidarbha and born in the Bhoga dynasty, Bhīṣmakā was the father of Rukmini, the wife of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. He had five sons. A friend of Bhīṣma, he conquered and ruled over a fourth of the world. He defeated the Krathas, Pāṇḍyas and Kaiikas. He was very much devoted to Jārāsandha. (Śāhī Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 21). Sahādeva, who was on a triumphant tour in connection with the Pāṇḍava’s aśvamedha yajña fought and defeated Bhīṣmakā at Bhogakṣanagara. Bhīṣmakā was also called Hiranyaroma. (Śāhī Parva, Chapter 31, Udvyoga Parva, Chapter 158, Śānti Parva, Chapter 4).

BHIṢMA PARVA. A sub parva in the Mahābhārata.

BHIṢMAVARDHANA PARVA. A sub division of Anuśāsana Parva. Chapters 167 and 168 of Anuśāsana Parva are included in this.

BHIṢMADHVA PARVA. A sub Parva of Bhīṣma Parva. It comprises Chapters 43-122 of the Bhīṣma Parva.

BHOJ. A term used for greeting elders. When saluting an elderly person, the term “Bhoj” is used as a suffix to his name.

For example: "Sonaśarmā nāma aham asmi bhoj" Bhoj śabdāni kirtayedante Svasya nāmābhih vādane // Nāmānī svarūpa bhāvo hi bhobhāvo ṣibhyāṁ snṛtaḥ // (Manusmṛti, Chapter 2, verse 124)

BHOJAVĀN. A mountain—Mahābhārata, Śāhī Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 12 says that in the course of his triumphant over-running of the eastern lands, Bhīmasena conquered this mountain also.

BHOJAVĀTĪ I. Nāgolaka or Pāṭāla. When Sugrīva sent monkeys in all directions in search of Sītā, he gave instructions to them to go and search for her in Bhogavātipura. Vālmiki Ramāyana, 41st Sarga, Kiśkindhākanda describes the place as the city infested with serpents (nāgas) and guarded by them. Vāsuki, King of serpents, lives there.

BHOJAVĀTĪ II. Gaṅgā of Pāṭāla. (M. B. Śāhī Parva, Dāśāśītā, Pātha, Chapter 38).

BHOJAVĀTĪ III. A place of holy bath at Prayāgā. It is better known as Vāsuki tirtha. Mahābhārata Aśā Parva, Chapter 85 says that a bath at this tirtha is as efficacious as an Aśvamedha yajña.

BHOJAVĀTĪ IV. Another name for the river Saravati. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 24, Verse 20).

BHOJAVĀTĪ V. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śāhī Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 8).

BHOJA I. A king of the ancient country named Mārtīkāvata. In Mahābhārata Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 6, we see that this king had attended the Svayamvara of Draupadī. He was slain by Abhimanyu at the battle of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Droha Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 8).

BHOJA II. A king of Yaduvānṭa, Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 79 says, that he died under the stroke of the sword of Mahārāja Uṣīnara. Bhogavān takes its source from this king.

BHOJA III. A king who became renowned as a Sanskrit scholar. It is believed that he lived from 1018 to 1054 A.D. His capital city was Dhrārā. Bhōja is credited with the authorship of two scholarly books entitled, “Sarasvatikāṇṭhābhārana” and “Sīrṣāprakāśa”. Of these, the first is a compendious volume in five chapters, dealing with the merits and defects of poetry, figures of speech, etc. Bhōja observes that besides the four styles (in poetry) laid down by Rudraka, there are two more styles, namely, “Avant” and “Māgadhī”.

BHOJA IV. A follower of Sudās. In Rgveda, 3rd Mandala, 58th Anuvāka, 7th Sūkta we find that this Bhōja had given help to sage Viśvāmitra in performing his Aśvamedha yāga.

BHOJA V. A king of Kāṇyakubja. Once this king Bhōja met a woman with a fantastic shape. Her body was of human shape while her face was that of a female deer. When the king asked her about her strange shape, she related her past history as follows:—"In my previous birth, I was a female deer. On one occasion the whole of my body except my face, was plunged in a river and those parts of the body under the water were transformed into human shape. From that day, I have been changed into this form."

On hearing her story, the king took her to the holy river and immersed her again in it. She was at once transformed into an actual woman and the king married her.

(Śkanda Purāṇa, 7-2-2)

BHŌJĀ. An exquisitely beautiful virgin of the country, Sauvīra. Mahābhārata Droṇa Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 33 says that Śātayki abducted her and made her his wife.

BHŌJA (M.). (BHŌJAVAMŚA). This is a branch of Yaduvāsinī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 217, Verse 18).

BHŌJAKATA. The capital of Vidarbhā. Once Sahu-deva, one of the Pāṇḍavas conquered this city. It was at this place that Śri Kṛṣṇa defeated Rukmi, the brother of Rukmiṇī at the time of Rukmiṇī's Śvayamīvara. The original name of Bhōjakata was "Kuṇḍinapura".

(M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31 and Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158).

BHŌJIKĀ. A Brāhmaṇa. (See the word Pātaliputra.).

BHŌJYĀ. A Bhōja princess. She was abducted by Jyāmagha of the Yadava family and married to his son, Vidarbhā. (See Jyāmahga).

BHŌṢA. A word meaning a comic, stupid or eccentric person. Bhōṣas are of eight kinds. Those who feel derided, those who babble, those who are obstinate, sophists, those who indulge in hollow laughter, those who pretend to be blind, those who pretend to be deaf, and those who try to assert their self-importance—these are the eight classes of "Bhōṣas".

BHRAMARA. A prince of the land of Sauvīra. He was a comrade of Jayadratha. M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 265 describes how Bhrāmara walked behind the chariot of Jayadratha with banner in his hand, when the latter abducted Pāṇḍāla. Bhrāmara was killed by Arjuna.

BHRĀMARI. A Rākṣasī who was the follower of Jam-bhāṣura. As directed by Jam-bhāṣura, she took birth in the house of Kaśyapa to kill Ganeśa. One day she treacherously gave poisoned sweets to Ganeśa. Ganeśa detected her treachery and fisted her to death. (Ganēśa 2-21).

BHRASAKARNA. A Rākṣasa. He was the son of Ketumati, by the Rākṣasa, Sumālī. They had ten sons—Praḥastą, Akaṇḍana, Viṣkā, Kālakāmukha, Dhūmākṣa, Dāṇḍa, Supārhīva, Sanhṛīḍa, Prākṛiṭa, and Bhrāsakarna and four daughters—Vekā, Puspotkaṭā, Kaikaṣi and Kuṁbhāṣa. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

BHĪRGU... 1) General. A sage, the son of Bhrāma. He was the founder of Bīrgu varṇa. Members of the Bīrgu varṇa are called 'Bīrgavas.' Bīrguvarṇa has been reputed for many of its members who were Rṣis of great sanctity and grandeur.

2) Birth. "Utsaṅgād Nārāda jāne
Dakṣo 'ṅguśhāt svayamībhuvah /
Prāṇadvasiṣṭhaṁ saṁjāto
Bhīrgustvacah karāṭkratuḥ".1

*Nārada was born from Bhrāma's lap, Dakṣa from his Aṅguşṭha, Vasiṣṭha from his Prāṇa, Bīrgu from his skin and Kratu from his arm.

From these lines we see that Bhrīgū was born from Bhrāma's skin (tvak). But in M.B. Ādi Parva, 5th Chapter, we find another version regarding his birth. In that passage we read that Bhrīgū was born from "Vahni" (fire). In the light of these two statements, we may examine Bhrīgū's birth.

Bhrīgū had two incarnations. The first time he was born from Bhrāma's skin. In course of time, the sage Bhrīgū became famous. In the Daksayāga, this sage was present as one of the Rtviks (officiating priests). On that occasion, Satidevi who was in rage and grief because her husband (Śīva) was not invited to the yāga, committed suicide by jumping into the sacrificial fire. Hearing about this, Śīva was enraged and the monster spirits who emerged from his matted locks caught hold of the Rtviks. Bṛgavata caturthā sandhāya says that the Bīhu named Nandīvara, who emerged from Śīva's locks, caught hold of Bhrīgū and killed him.

Therefore the Bhrīgū who was born from Bhrāma's skin must be considered as having died at Daksayāga. Bhrīgū was born again in Vaivasvata Manvantara. This second birth was at the famous Brahmayāja of Varuṇa. He was reborn from fire, as Bhrāma's son. This child who was born from Bhrāma's semen which fell in the sacrificial fire, was brought up by Varuṇa and his wife Carṣāṇi. Consequently Bhrīgū is referred to as "Varuṇapūrṇa" and "Carṣāṇipūrṇa" in some Purāṇas. Since he was born at Varuṇa's yāga he is sometimes called "Varuṇī Bhrīgū".

3) Bhrīgū Vanāśa. (Bhrīgū family). Each birth of Bhrīgū gave rise to a separate family. They are given below separately:—First birth: Bhrīgū and his wife Khyāti had a daughter Lakṣmī and three sons, Dhattā, Vidyātā and Kavi. Mahāmeru's daughters, Āyati and Niyati became the wives of Dhattā and Vidyātā, respectively. Two sons, Prāṇa and Mrkandu were born to those two couples. Mārkandeya was born to Mrkandu and from Mārkandeya was born Vedaśīras. Prāṇa had a son, Dyutimān who had a son Rājāvan. From that Rājāvan, Bhrīgū Vanāśa multiplied. The family tree of this first Bhrīgū Vanāśa is given below:(See Viṣṇu purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 10).

Second Birth: The second Bhrīgū Vanāśa is the family which took its origin from the second birth of Bṛgū as the son of Varuṇa. Varuṇa's son, Bhrīgū married the woman, Pulomī. They had six children who were, Bhuṭa, Cyavana, Vajraśīrṣa, Suci, Sukra, and Savana. By his first wife Bhuṭa, he had his sons, "Ekādaśa Rudras" (eleven Rudras) and "Rudra Pāṛṣadas".
Bṛgu set out to Devaloka. First he went to Brahmā's assembly. There, in the presence of Brahmā who was seated in the midst of many Munis, Bṛgu took his seat on a stool. Brahmā was provoked by this act of disrespect. Bṛgu left the place without a word and went to Śiva's place. Śiva rose from his seat and approached him to embrace and welcome him. Bṛgu, shrank back saying, "Do not touch me?" Śiva became angry and was about to hit him with his trident when Pārvati stopped him.

Bṛgu then turned his steps to Vaikuṇṭha, the abode of Mahāvisṇu. There he saw Mahāvisṇu in a deep slumber. Seeing Mahāvisṇu whose task is the preservation of the world, sleeping like an irresponsible person, Bṛgu gave him a kick on his breast. Viṣṇu who sprang up suddenly, saw Bṛgu standing before him. He begged pardon of the sage. He declared that he would carry Bṛgu's footprint permanently on his chest as a sign of his repentance for having shown disrespect to the Mahārṣi. This footprint still remains on Viṣṇu's chest and is known by the name "Śrīvatsa". In this way, the Munis came to the conclusion that Mahāvisṇu is the noblest of the Trimūrtis. (Bhāgavata, Daśāmana Skandha).

6) The origin of Bṛgu Tīrtha. There is a sacred spot called, "Bṛgu Tīrtha" on the western side of Daśāvana-medha. It is here that Bṛgu once offered tapas to Śiva. Owing to the austerity of his tapas, his hair became matted and discoloured. His body was completely covered with earth heaped up by termites. When Śiva was still not propitiated, Pārvati interceded with him on behalf of Bṛgu, Śiva agreed to bless Bṛgu.

Śiva sent his bull to the place where Bṛgu was sitting. The bull in the course of its gambols broke up and destroyed the earthen covering on his body which was made by the termites. Bṛgu became angry and chased the bull. But he was stunned by the sight of the bull rising up to heaven through the air. A divine light spread there, Śiva appeared before him and asked him what soon he wanted. Bṛgu prayed that the place where he was doing tapas should become a holy spot. Śiva granted his prayer and from that day, the place became famous under the name "Bṛgu Tīrtha".

4) Bṛgu cursed Mahāvisṇu. Once a terrible war broke out between Devas and Asuras. In that war, not only were the Asuras defeated but many of them were also killed. Diti, the mother of the Asuras, with tears in her eyes, complained to Bṛgupati. Pulomā, Mother of Śukra, promised to find a remedy for this somehow. She at once went to the forest and started a tapas for the annihilation of the Devas. As the tapas gained force, the Devas were alarmed and they sought the protection of Mahāvisṇu. Mahāvisṇu used his Vajrāyudha (Vajra weapon) against Bṛgu's wife, Pulomā. Under the stroke of Vajra she fell down, a headless corpse. The enraged Mahārṣi Bṛgu cursed Mahāvisṇu to be born as a mortal in this world and to suffer the pangs of separation from his wife. When the curse was pronounced against Mahāvisṇu, he directed his weapon Cakra against the Mahārṣi. Bṛgu fled in panic and at last begged pardon and prayed for shelter to Mahāvisṇu himself in the ocean of milk. Viṣṇu withdrew his Cakra. Bṛgu himself restored Pulomā to life. To fulfil the condition of Bṛgu's curse, Viṣṇu agreed to incarnate in the world as Śrī Rāma, the son of Daśaratha and to experience the pain of separation from his wife. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

5) Bṛgu kicked Viṣṇu. Long ago all the Mahārṣis joined together to perform a yāga on the bank of the river Sarasvatī. A dispute arose among them as to who was the most mighty among the Trimūrtis. Some of them voted for Brahmā, others declared that Viṣṇu was more mighty than the other two, while a third group stood for Śiva's superiority. They unanimously elected Bṛgu to ascertain and find out the truth of the matter.
Bhṛgū and other Devas and the Kinnaras still worship this Bhṛgū Tirtha. All sin is removed by a mere sight of this sacred Tirtha. Those who bathe in the holy water of this place attain Heaven and they will not be born again. Even by hearing about the greatness and glory of this Bhṛgū Tirtha, one will be cleared of all sins and find an easy way to Śīvaloka. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

7 Other details. (1) It was Bhṛgū who gave the boon for having progeny to Sagara, King of the solar dynasty. Sagara, with his two wives, Keśini and Sumati, performed tapas at Bhṛgū prasārana in the Himalayas. After a hundred years, Bhṛgū, who was pleased, blessed the king that he would have numerous children by one wife and one son who would be progenitor of a varṇa, by the other wife. (Vāṃkī Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, 38th Sarga).

(2) Once when some Munis went to Dvārakā, Sāmba and other Yadavas mocked them and the Munis cursed them. Bhṛgū was one of those Munis. (See the word Sāmba).

(3) Paraśurāma, after exterminating the Kṣatriya kings, went to the Aśrama of Bhṛgū, the founder of the family and received his blessings. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 62).

(4) Bhṛgū Mahārṣi was a prominent member in Yudhiṣṭhira’s assembly. (M.B. Chapter 4, Verse 16).

(5) He was also a member of Indra’s assembly. It was by Bhṛgū’s brilliance that Indra’s glory was heightened. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 29).

(6) Bhṛgū was a member of Brahmacemit’s assembly also. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 19).

(7) Once Bhṛgū blessed his son Rēkṣa and his daughter-in-law Satyavatī that they would have children. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 116, Verse 35).

(8) Śrī Kṛṣṇa who went as the messenger of peace to Hastināpura, travelled in Dakṣinākarta, along with the sage Bhṛgū. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 27).

(9) Bhṛgū entered the scene of battle between the Kurus and Pāṇḍavas and tried to persuade Droṇācārya to withdraw from the fight. (M.B. Droṇā Parva, Chapter 190, Verse 34).

(10) Once Bhṛgū lectured on the origin of the earth, Philosophy of life, etc. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 128).

(11) Bhṛgū explained to Bharadvāja how the Pañcabhūtas except the sky originated (Sānti Parva, Chapter 183).

(12) Bhṛgū discussed in a logical manner, the principle of life and the transmigration of the soul. (Śantiparva, Chapter 187).

(13) He made a critical examination of the merits and defects of racial discrimination. (Śantiparva, Chapter 187).

(14) Once Bhṛgū bestowed Brahminhood on a King named Viṭaha-vya. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 57).

(15) He got the name “Bhṛgū” because he was born out of fire. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 105).

(16) It was Bhṛgū who gave the necessary advice to Agastya to depose Nahuṣa from Indra’s post.

(17) There is a story that Nahuṣa kicked Agastya on the head while the latter was carrying Nahuṣa’s palanquin and that Bhṛgū, who was hiding in Agastya’s locks of hair, cursed Nahuṣa and changed him into a python. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 100).

Bṛghuṭṭhirtha. A place made sacred by the performance of tapas by Bhṛgū. (For more details see the 6th para under Bhṛgū).

Bṛghuṭṭūṅga. A peak on which the sage Bhṛgū performed tapas. Rēkṣa had lived there with his wife and children. (Vāṃkī Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, 61st Sarga).

Bṛṅgī. A Mahārṣi who was a devotee of Śiva. Once he went to Kailāśa and began to go round Śiva to pay homage to him. But since Pārvaṭī and Śiva were sitting together as one body, he could not go round Śiva separately. He did not have much reverence for Pārvaṭī. So he took the form of a female beetle (Bṛṅgī) and bored his way through a hole made in the place where their bodies were united and thus went round Śiva alone. Pārvaṭī was angry at this slight shown to her and cursed him to become physically weak. His legs became so weak that they were unable to support his body. So he prayed to Śiva again and he blessed him with a third leg. In this way Bṛṅgī became a Mahārṣi with three legs. (Mahārṣis).

Bṛḥṣundī. A fisherman. He used to earn his living by theft.

Once when the Mahārṣi Mudgala was passing through a forest, Bṛḥṣundī stopped him. But in the presence of the Brahmanic effulgence of the Mahārṣi, the fisherman was dazed. Mudgala took pity on Bṛḥṣundī and advised him to worship Lord Gaṇeṣa.

From that time Bṛḥṣundī gave up his evil ways, and accepting the advice of Mudgala, started the worship of Gaṇeṣa with single-minded devotion. As a result of it, an elephant’s trunk began to grow from the middle of his forehead. Bṛḥṣundī who thus acquired a shape closely resembling Gaṇeṣa, was visited by Indra, mistaking him for Gaṇapati. (Gaṇeṣa : 1.67).

Bhū (H). In the creation of the world, the Lord broke the beginningless “Āṇḍa” (the primal egg or seed) and from it the sound “Oṃ” emerged. The first sound of it was “Bḥūḥ”; the second was “Bhuvah”; and the third was “Svah”. So the combination “Bḥū Bhuvah Svah” was formed. Then came the most adorable and superlative effulgence of the creator (Savītā). That radiance dried up all water. A little of the water became a highly viscous substance. This viscous matter gradually solidified and became the earth. Where the aṇḍa originally was became the source of that supreme effulgence. As it was the first radiant light, it came to be called Āditya (ādī = first). The great procreator Brahmā seemed to emerge from the centre of the aṇḍa. The garbhajalā (the water contained in the aṇḍa) became the oceans and rivers of the world. (Vāmanā Purāṇa, Chapter 43).

Bhujaṅga. A son of Kadrī by Kaśyapa prajāpati.

Bhujyuy. A Rājaśī (royal sage), the son of Tugra. King Tugra sent his son with an army across the sea to conquer the enemies in a distant island. When the boat in which they sailed had reached mid-ocean, it was caught in a storm and wrecked. The prince and the soldiers sank into the sea. At that time the prince prayed to the Asvins who saved Bhujyu from drowning and carried him back to the palace in boats and chariots travelling through the air. This story is given in the Rigveda where the adventures of Asvins are described. (Rigveda, 1st Manušāla, 17th Anuvāka, 116th Sākta.)

BHŪKAMPA. (Earthquake). The cause of earthquake according to ancient belief is given below:—

The earth is being supported and held in its position by an elephant called Virūpākṣa. When he feels the burden too heavy he shakes his head and earth tremors follow. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, 40th Sarga.)

BHŪLĪṢGA (M). A bird which lived on the opposite side of the Himālayas. The cry of this bird resembles “MĀ SĀHASA”.1 But this bird lived by pecking at and eating the flesh between the teeth of a lion. Sūśpāla mentioned this bird as an example to illustrate that Bhiṣma’s advice was at variance with his practice. The bird exhorts people not to act in a rash way (Mā Sāhasa) and at the same time acts rashly.

BHŪMANYU I. A king who was the grandson of King Duṣyanta and the son of Bharata. From Mahābhārata Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 19, we see that he was born by the blessing of Bharadvāja. His mother was Sunandā, daughter of Sarvasena, King of Kāśi. When Bhūm anyu grew up, his father Bharata entrusted him with the affairs of the Kingdom. Bhūm anyu had six sons by his wife Puṣkarini; they were Diviratha, Suhotra, Suhotā, Sukavi, Suyaju, and Rekha. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 33, we see that he had another son Suhotra by a woman Vījaya, a Daśārha maid.

BHŪMANYU II. There is another Bhūm anyu, grandson of Kuru, a king of the Lunar dynasty and son of Dṛṝtarāṣṭra, mentioned in Mahā Bhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 39.

BHŪMANYU III. A Deva Gandharva. He participated in the celebrations connected with Arjuna’s birth. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 35).

BHŪMI I. The earth.

1) General. The Purāṇas maintain that Bhūmi has a Devi (goddess). The births of Bhūmi and its basic goddess are in two different ways.

The Mahābhārata, (Dākṣiṇātyā Pāthā) says that the goddess Bhūmi was the daughter of Brahma and that she was married by Mahāviṣṇu. The earth on which we live is the Mrṛtpuṇḍra of which the basic deity is this Bhūmidevi. Of the many versions given in the Purāṇas regarding the origin of earth, three are given below:—

1) Long ago, towards the end of the age of floods, the earth was in a liquid state. At that time, Śiva cut open his thigh and let fall a drop of blood in the water. It assumed the form of an “aṇḍa” (egg), Śiva took that aṇḍa and split it. A man came out of it. From him was made Nature (Prakṛti) for the creation of the Universe. One half of the broken aṇḍa became sky and the other half became the earth. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāpiṭhāramānabaka, 2nd Taranīga).

2) Mahāviṣṇu lay on the surface of water which spread everywhere in the beginning. A lotus sprang up from the navel of Viṣṇu and from its top Brahmā was born. Liquid matter began to flow out of Viṣṇu’s ears on both sides. From it were born two Rākṣasas named Madhu and Kaitabha. They persecuted Brahmā. Mahāviṣṇu woke up and killed Madhu and Kaitabha. The thick fat of these Rākṣasas hardened into the earth. (Devī Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

3) In the beginning Mahāviṣṇu (Mahāviśrā Puruṣa) spread everywhere. In every pore of that Mahāviśrā who was lying on the surface of the water, there was a Brahmāṇḍa. In course of time that Viṣṇu obtained mind. That mind stood connected with each of the pores equally. Later from it were formed the “Pañcamahābhūtas”. From their combination was formed the Bhūta called “Mahā Pṛthvi”. It was cut into many pieces and each of the pieces was deposited in each pore. It was these Pṛthvi pieces which became “Bhūmis” at the time of creation. At the time of the floods, these Bhūmis sank again into those pores as before. In each of these Brahmāṇḍas, there are the earth, mountains, forests, oceans, the seven islands, Himavān, Meru, Sun, Moon, Stars and other planets. Also, each of them has its own Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva and other Devas. Since all the different Bhūmis in all the Brahmāṇḍas had been formed artificially, they all perish in the floods. (Devī Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

3) Bhūmi Devi (Goddess Earth) is the wife of Mahā Viṣṇu. In Varāha Kalpa (Age of the Pig) the Asura Hiranyākṣa carried the Earth and Submerged it under water. At once Mahā viṣṇu appeared in the form of a Pig and lifted up the Earth on its horns. When the Earth floated on the surface of water like a lotus leaf, Bhūmi Devi who was pleased, stood up in her charming figure. Mahāviṣṇu fell in love with her and with the brilliance of a crore of suns, had sexual union with her for the period of one Devavarsa. It is from that time that Bhūmi Devi became Mahāviṣṇu’s wife. As a result of their union, a son named Maṅgala was born to them.

Ghaṭesā is the son of Maṅgala. Maṅgala has another name, Covva. After the birth of Maṅgala, at the behest of Lord Viṣṇu, all people began to offer worship to Bhūmidevi. Mahāviṣṇu himself first worshipped her by reciting the mantra—“Om Hrīṁ-Srīṁ-Kṛīṁ-Vasundhāryā Svāhā”. After that this mantra became popular for worshipping Bhūmidevi. (Devī Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

Narakāsura was Bhūmidevi’s son by Hiranyākṣa, the Asura. When Hiranyākṣa, in the form of a pig, carried Bhūmidevi on his horns to Patāla, the horns came in contact with Bhūmidevi and she became pregnant. In Bhāgavata, Daśāma Skandha we read that Narakāsura was born as the result of this contact. (See the word Naraka I).

Sītā was the daughter of Bhūmidevi, born on another occasion. Sītā was married by the Kosala King Śrī Rāma. When she was abandoned by her husband, she was at last accepted by Bhūmidevi within her own self. (See the word Sītā).

4) Bhūmi and Prahlàda. Since Bhūmidevi had been the wife of the Asura Hiranyākṣa she has also been called the mother of the Asura clan. Hiranyākṣa’s brother was

1  Mā Sāhasa = Do not act rashly.
BHŪMI II

Hiranyakaśipu. Prahlāda, the son of Hiranyakaśipu, was a devotee of Visnū. The father did not like the son’s devotion to Visnū. So he persecuted Prahlāda in various ways. Once he threw down Prahlāda from the top of a high building. At that time Bhūmi devi appeared and received him in her arms. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 24).

5) Bhūmidēvi and Pṛthu. Once the Emperor Pṛthu turned Bhūmidēvi into a cow and milked all her resources from her. (For details, see the word Pṛthu).

6) Pārvati’s curse. Once Pārvati and Śiva indulged in their sexual act for many years. The earth began to shake to its foundations. The gods approached Śiva with a request to refrain and he agreed. Śiva’s semen was discharged and fell on the earth. Pārvati who was angry at this, cursed Bhūmidēvi as follows:— ‘You Bhūmidēvi ! You will assume many forms and become the wife of many. Since you have prevented me from giving birth to a son, no children will be born to you in future.’ (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākāṇḍa, 36th Sarga).

7) Other details.

(1) Narakāśura has another name, “Bhauma”. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Dākṣinātya Pātha, Chapter 38).

(2) Bhūmidēvi prayed to Śrī Kṛṣṇa and obtained Vaiguṇḍavāstra for her son Narakāśura. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 30).

(3) When Parasurāma was carrying on the annihilation of Kṣatriyas, Bhūmidēvi induced the sage Kaśyapa to entreat Parasurāma to stop his massacre of Bhūpālas. (Protectors of Bhūmi=Kṣatriyas). (M.B. Śantu Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 44).

(4) Once she (Bhūmidēvi) described to Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the greatness of Brahminhood. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 22).

(5) At another time she explained to Śrī Kṛṣṇa the nature of Gṛhausthāramadharma. (Duties of a householder). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 97, Verse 5).

(6) On one occasion, when King Aṅgā touched her, Bhūmidēvi lost her own form and vanished. At that time, Kaśyapa prajāpati paralysed her. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 152, Verse 2).

(7) Parasurāma gifted the whole earth to the sage Kaśyapa. From that time Bhūmidēvi has been called “Kaśyapi” (daughter of Kaśyapa). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 154, Verse 7).

BHŪMI II. Wife of Dhrūva. This Bhūmi devi, the daughter of Śīśumāra had two sons named Kalpa and Vatsala, by Dhrūva. (Bṛghavatā, Caturthā Skandā).

BHŪMI III. Another Bhūmi, who was the wife of a king named Bhūmipati is mentioned in M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 14).

BHŪMIṆJAYA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas. He took his position in the centre of the “Garuḍa Vyūha” (Name of a phalanx) formed by Droṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 13).

BHŪMIPĀLĀ. A Kṣatriya king of ancient India. He was born from a portion of an Asura called Krodhavāsa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 61).

BHŪMIPARVA. A subdivision of Bhūmaparva in Mahābhārata. Chapters 11 and 12 of Bhūṣma Parva are included in this.

BHUMIPATI. A king of ancient India. There is a reference to this King in M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 14.

BHŪMISAYA. A king in ancient India. M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 166, verse 75 says that King Amārtayāras gave a sword to Bhūmisaya who gifted it to Bharata, the son of Dusyanta.

BHŪPAṬI. A vīvadeva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 32).

BHŪRI I. A king of the Kuru dynasty. Somadatta, king of the Kuru dynasty had three sons, Bhūri, Bhūrīśravas and Śala. In M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, we read that they had attended the Svayamvara of Draupadī and in Sabhā Parva, Chapter 94 it is said that they had taken part in Yudhiṣṭhira’s Rājasuya. In Droṇa Parva, Chapter 166, we read that this King Bhūri was slain by Sātyaki during the war between Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas. After death, Bhūri obtained a place with the Vīśvedevas. (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 16).

BHŪRI II. A son of the sage Śuka. Vyāsa’s son, Śuka married Piṣṭi, the daughter of Pīṭha. She had four sons by Śuka, who were named Kṛṣṇa, Gauraprabhā, Bhūri and Dvārasūra, and a daughter named Kirtī. (Devi Bhāgavata, Prathama Skanda).

BHŪRĪBALA. (BhūrīMABALA). One of the hundred sons of Dhrītarāṣṭra. Mahābhārata Śalya Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 14 says that at the battle of Kurukṣetra he was slain by Bhīmasena.

BHŪRĪDYUMNA I. A king in the assembly of Yama. He attained Heaven (Svargarohaṇa) by virtue of his having performed godāna (gift of cow). (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 76).

BHŪRĪDYUMNA II. A Mahārṣi. This sage once went to Hastināpura as a messenger of peace. On the way he met with Śrī Kṛṣṇa whom he reverently worshipped by doing “Pradaksīṇa”.

BHŪRĪDYUMNA III. He was the only son of Vīradyu-ma, a King. Bhūrīdyumna was lost somewhere in the forest. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 14)

BHŪRIHAN. A Rākasā. He was a king in ancient times. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 277, Verse 51).

BHŪRIKĪRTI. A king. He had two daughters, Cāmpīkā and Sumati who were married by Lava and Kuśa respectively. (Ananda Rāmāyaṇa, Vivāha Kāṇḍa).

BHŪRĪŚRĀVĀ (BHŪRĪŚRĀVAS).

(1) General. He was the son of Somadatta, a king of Kuruvarīśa (Kuru dynasty).

(2) Other details. Bhūrīśravas had two brothers named Bhūri and Śala. They were all present at the Svayamvara of Draupadi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 14).

(3) He once described to Duryodhana, the heroic qualities of the Pāṇḍavas and advised him to maintain peaceful relations with them. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 199, Dākṣinātya Paṭha).

(4) He took part in Yudhiṣṭhira’s Rājasuya yajña with his father and brothers. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 8).

(5) In the war between Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas, he arrived with an “Aksauhini” (A division of the army) in order to give help to Duryodhana. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 16).

1 In Agni-parāṇa, Chapter 278, we see another statement that Śāntu, king of the Lunar dynasty, had three sons, Devūpi, Bālīkha and Somadā and of them Bālīkha had four sons, Somadatta, Bhūri, Bhūrīśravas and Śala.
(6) Bhīṣma once remarked that Bhūrīśravas deserved to be counted among the Rāthis and Yāthapatis. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 29).

(7) On the first day of the battle at Kurukṣetra Bhūrīśravas fought a duel with Śaṇikha. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 35).

(8) He fought with Sātyaki (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 33).

(9) He killed the ten sons of Sātyaki. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 25).

(10) Defeated Dhrṣṭaketu in battle. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 35).

(11) He fought a duel with Bhīmasena. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 44).

(12) A duel was fought with Śikhaṇḍī. (Drona Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 45).

(13) Bhūrīśravas fell down under the stroke of Sātyaki. (Drona Parva, Chapter 142, Verse 59).

(14) Arjuna cut off the left arm of Bhūrīśravas. (Drona Parva, Chapter 141, Verse 72).

(15) Enraged by Arjuna’s action, Bhūrīśravas squatted on the ground to attain Svarga (Heaven). (Drona Parva, Chapter 143, Verse 33).

(16) Sātyaki killed Bhūrīśravas. (Drona Parva, Chapter 143, Verse 54).

(17) After death Bhūrīśravas became a Vīṣdeva. (Vārāhoṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 16).

(18) Some of the other names of Bhūrīśravas given in Mahābhārata are: Bhūrīśakṣa, Saḷāḷaṛa, Kaūrava, Kaūraveya, Kaūravya, Yūpaketana, Yūpaketu, Śārdūla, Kuruśrertha, Kurudvaha.

BHŪRĪTEJAS. A king in ancient India. He was born from a portion of the Asura Krodhaśa, according to Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 63).

BHŪṢUNḌA. A dispassionate and large-hearted crow. The residence of this crow was a Kalpavrṣa standing on a beautiful peak surrounded by luxuriant vegetation in the north-eastern corner of Mahāmeru. There were numerous bird-nests on the southern branch of that Kalpavrṣa. In one of them lived this centuries-old bird.

Once when the sage Vasiṣṭha went to Devaloka, he happened to hear about this crow. He went to see Bhūṣunḍa in its nest. The crow recognised Vasiṣṭha at once. They exchanged greetings. The sage opened the conversation as follows:—“Oh, King of birds! when were you born? How did you become a great soul? How old are you? Have you recollections of the past? Who was the prophet who suggested this residence for you?”

The bird calmly replied as follows:—“If you are interested in hearing my past history I shall tell you. Lord Śaṅkarika the Almighty lives in this world. He has numerous attendant spirits. Besides these spirits who have hoofs on their head, hands in the hoofs, teeth in the hands and stomach in the face, and who have faces resembling those of monkeys, camels, and elephants, he has also hordes of Mātrs in his retinue. The Mātrs, attended by spirits continue their dance in the presence of the Lord. Mountain peaks, the sky, the different worlds, deep pits, cremation grounds, etc. are their haunts. Chief among these Mātrs are eight sisters named, Jayā, Vijayā, Jayanti, Apraṁhitā, Siddhā, Raktā, Alambuṣa and Ulpaḷā. They have other followers also. Alambuṣa’s vehicle is the crow named Canḍa.

All these Mātrs assembled together on one occasion to celebrate a festival in the sky. There was a display of many kinds of entertainments at that time. Disputations in spiritual matters, music, dancing, drinking and other forms of hilarious activities were freely indulged in. In another part of the sky, their vehicles were also enjoying themselves with similar celebrations of drinking, dancing, and merry-making. The swans who were the vehicles of Bṛāhmidevī were dancing in one place, intoxicated by drink. Canḍa, the crow, who was Alambuṣa’s vehicle, also joined their company. Completely absorbed in their delirious raptures, the intoxicated swans indulged so freely in their amorous pleasures with Canḍa that they became pregnant. At last when the merry-makings ended and all of them dispersed, the swans became aware of their plight and informed Bṛāhmī about it. The gracious goddess (Bṛāhmi) told them that in their present state they were unable to discharge their duties in drawing her chariot and so they were allowed to go and enjoy themselves wherever they liked. After this she entered into a trance. The swans in the fullness of time, gave birth to twentyone sons. We, the twenty-one brothers, are those children. We and our mothers went to Bṛāhmidevī and offered worship to her for a long time. As a result, the Devī woke up from her trance and pleased with us, gave us her blessing. After that, we went to our father (Canḍa) and offered our devoted services to him and prostrated before him and Alambuṣadevī. They blessed us. We asked our father to suggest a most suitable place for a secluded life. This Kalpa Vṛksa is the secluded place recommended by him. We paid obeisance to our father and Alambuṣadevī and came to settle down here. Many ages have passed since then. Now your visit and holy presence here, have liberated me from all worldly bonds and ennobled my life. My twenty brothers lived for many Kalpas and yugas at the end of which, convinced of the meaninglessness of worldly life, renounced their bodies and attained Śivaloka.

On hearing this, Vasiṣṭha asked Bhūṣunḍa to tell him more about his past life. Bhūṣunḍa resumed his story:—“Long long ago, the whole earth was full of big rocks, without trees, forests or mountains. After a great flood the surface of the earth was covered with ashes. In one caturyuga (a period equal to the length of the four yugas, Kṛta, tretā, dvāpāra and Kali) the earth was filled with forest trees and in another Caturyuga, mountain ranges appeared. I have seen an age in which Bṛāhmaṇas were drunkards, Śudras were virtuous and women of noble families committed adultery. You have now been born in the eighteenth ‘Jana’ as the son of Bṛāhma. You were born once from the sky, at another time from water, then from the mountain and again from fire. I can remember this earth sinking into the ocean five times and Lord Viṣṇu taking the form of a tortoise, lifting it up, above the water. I have seen the ocean of milk being churned twelve times. I know that Hiranayākṣa had taken the earth three times to Pātāla (underworld). The Lord has incarnated six times as Bhārgava Rāma. Incarnation of Buddha has taken place in six Kaliyugas. Tripuradahana (burning of the Tripurasuras) has taken place thirty times. Daśaka yāga was broken up twice. Lord Śiva has slain ten Indras. He fought seven times with Śri Kṛṣṇa for the sake of Bāṇa. I also remember another epic entitled SANATAN WAR BIRD.
This is Varapraja General. A commander resort the place. Kuruksetra. different used "Bhutanayaka", Skanda BHUTADHAMA. An Indra. This Indra is different from the actual Indra. There is reference to this Indra in Mahabhārata, Ṇdi Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 28.

BHUTAJYOTI. A king who was the father of Vasyu and son of Sumati.

BHUTAKARMA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas in the battle at Kuruksetra. He was killed by Satānika, the son of Nakula. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 25).

BHUTALAYA (M). A famous village in the purāṇas. It was a resort of thieves and robbers. Dead bodies were often thrown into the river which was flowing through this village. Mahabhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 129, verse 9 says that it was against Śāstras to bathe in this river.

BHUTAMATHANA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M. B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 69).

BHUTASANTAPANA. One of the sons of Hiranyakṣa, (Bhāgavata, Saptama Skandha).

BHUTASARMA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pāṇḍavas. He had taken his position in the "Garudavyuha" (name of a phalanx) formed by Droṇacārya. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 6).

BHUTAS. (A set of beings created by Rudra).
1) General. A Mānava class or sect in ancient India. In the Purāṇas, this Mānava sect is classified into four subdivisions. (1) Dharmaprajā (2) Iṣvaraprajā (3) Kāśyapiprajā (4) Pulahaprajā.
2) Birth. In the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa there is the following story about the birth and shape of Bhūtas— Bhūtas are one of the subdivisions of Pulaha's creations. Long ago, Brahmā asked the Rudra, Nilaḥohita, to perform the function of creation. Accordingly he begot thousands of Bhūtas in the womb of his wife Sati. All the issues were the exact replica of his own figure. Lean limbs, long ears, thick hanging lips, red eyes, bushy eyebrows, long, pointed and protruding teeth, long nails, matted dirty hair etc. were the grotesque features of these Bhūtas. These music-haters used serpents as their Yaḍḍopaviṭas (sacred threads). These spirits who loitered in Śiva's assembly were, as a rule, naked and carried skulls on their heads. But at times they wore fantastic dress with elephant skin. Their chief weapons were, trident, bow, sword, etc.
3) Bhūta Chief. In the Purāṇas, Rudra is acknowledged as the Bhūta chief. That is why Rudra is known by such names as "Bhūtanayaka", "Gaṇanayaka", "Rudrāncara", "Bhavaparīṣada" etc. But since the common name Rudra is used for the ruler (king) of all the Bhūtas, Vāmana Purāṇa declares that Rudra is not an individual. Both Vāmanapurāṇa and Matsyaapurāṇa represent Virabhadra and Nandikesvara as two Rudras who are the masters of Bhūtas. (Matsyaapurāṇa 181, 2; Vāmanapurāṇa 4, 17).

In Vāmana Purāṇa, the number of Bhūtas is given as 11 crores. Skanda, Śākha, Bhairava are the chief among them. Under them are innumerable Bhūtas. Ashes and Khatvāṅga etc. are their weapons. The emblem on the banner is a cow or a bird. That is how the Gaṇanāyakas have got the titles like "Mayūravāhuja", "Mayūravāhana". (Vāmana Purāṇa 67, 1-23).
4) War with Asuras. In the war between Sīva and Andhakāsura, the Bhūtas fought on the side of Sīva. It was Vīṇayaka, the master of the Bhūta hordes who first came into conflict with the Asura. In that battle Andhaka defeated Vīṇayaka. After that, Nandi, another leader of the Bhūtas, attacked Andhaka jointly with Vīṇayaka and defeated him. At last, Andhaka approached Sīva himself for protection, and Sīva received him and appointed him as commander of one of his hordes of Bhūtas. It is this Andhakāsura who later became famous under the name of Bīrīgī. In this way, the Bhūtas had fought many battles with the Asuras, joining the party of the Devas. But at the time of Daksīṇa's yajnā, they joined the party of the Asuras and opposed the Devas.

Although the Bhūtas won all the battles they fought both on the side of the Devas and on the side of the Asuras, in the end they had to leave north India and to come and settle down in south India. By the time of Vaivasvata manvantara they had already become South Indians.

BHUTIVARMA. A Rākṣasa who was the friend of Kāṇabhuṭī. (Kathāśārtisīgarā).

BHUVANA I. A Maḥārāja who visited Bhīṣma when he was lying on the verge of death. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 81).

BHUVANA II. A sanātana Viśvedev. There is a reference to him in M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 35.).

BHUVANA II. A sanātana Viśvedev. There is a reference to him in M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 35.)

BHUVANAS. See the word Bhradāravas.

BHĪTAKU. One of the ten names of Arjuna. He got this name because he desisted from doing loathful acts. "I will never resort to loathful deeds in war. Therefore the devas and men call me Bhītakus". (Mahābhārata, Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 44, Stanza 18).

BIDAL. A minister of Mahīśāsura. (Devī Bhāgavata).

BIDALAPĀKHYĀNA. See the word Dīnādīka.

BIDAJAS. A son born to Aditi by the blessings of Viṣṇu. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmikāṇḍa, Chapter 3).

BILVA. (VILVA). A devotee of Viṣṇu. There is a story in Skanda Purāṇa about Bilva who lived as a Vaiṣṇavite first and then was converted to a Śaivite. In the beginning Brahmā created many things among which Viḷva (tree) (Crataeva religiosa) also was created. Under that tree an anonymous man began to live. Brahmā gave him the name Viḷva. Being pleased at the behaviour and devotion of Viḷva, Indra asked him to turn the wheel of administration of the earth. Accepting the offer Viḷva requested Indra to give him the Vajra (diamond) for the smooth running of the administration of the earth. Indra told him that vajrāyudha (diamond-weapon) would be at his disposal, when he thought about it, if the occasion required it.

Once Kapila a Śaivite reached the palace of Viḷva. After a long conversation both became fast friends, One day there was a debate between Bilva and Kapila as to whether penance or Action (doing one's duty) was appreciable. In this discussion Bilva lost the equilibrium of his mind and thinking of the diamond-weapon of Indra cut off the head of Kapila. In Kapila there was the power of penance as well as the power of Siva. So through Siva Kapila got immortality. In the meanwhile Bilva went to Viṣṇu and got a boon that every living thing in the earth should fear him. But the boon was futile. This was a turning point for Bilva. The mind of Bilva changed to devotion for Siva. He concentrated his attention on the worship of Śivalinga at the forest of Mahākāla. One day Kapila came by that way and was greeted by Bilva with honour and regard, and they again became fast friends.

BILVAKA. A famous serpent born to Kaśyapa prajāpati of his wife Kadrū. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 12).

BILVAKATIRTHA. A holy place in Haradvāra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anusāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 13 that those who bathe in this holy Bath will attain heaven.

BILVAPÂḌURA. A serpent. The father of this serpent was Kaśyapa and mother, Kadrū. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 12).

BILVAPATRA. A serpent born in the family of Kaśyapa prajāpati. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 14).

BILVATEJÃ. A serpent born in the family of Taṇḍaka. This serpent was burnt to death by falling in the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 9).

BINDUGA. A Brāhmaṇa who lived in the village of Bāḍakalā. Being a frequenter of the houses of harlots and of various other mean habits, he had led his wife Gaṅcalā also to lead an immoral life. Once Binduga called his wife and told her thus: "You may continue the life of a harlot; but all the money acquired must be handed over to me." Thus they continued their lives and after their death both were reborn as devils in the mountain of Vindhyā. In the midst of their life as devils, once it chanced for Gaṅcalā to hear the Siva Purāṇa recited and she got her shape of devil changed. She requested Pārvatī to change the shape of her husband also. Pārvatī sent her attendant Tumburu to Binduga to tell him the story of Siva and thus he also got his form changed. (Siva Purāṇa Māhāmya).

BINDUMAṬI. The queen of the great King Māṇḍhāṭā. Bindumati was the daughter of the King Śaṇabindu. Purukutsa and Mucukunda were the two sons born to her from Māṇḍhāṭā. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

BINDUSARAS. A holy place famous in the Purāṇas. The following information is obtained from the Purāṇas about this holy place.

2. It was at Bindusaras that Bhagiratha did penance to bring down Gaṅga to the earth (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 10).
3. Devendra performed hundred sacrifices at this place. (Mahā Bhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 3).
4. Once Śiva performed a sacrifice at Bindusaras. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 3).
5. Sri Kṛṣṇa did penance here for several years to get righteousness. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 11).

(6) At this place, Maya, the asura gave Arjuna the famous couch known as Devadatta and to Bhūmasena the famous club of Vṛṣaparvā. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 3).

BODHA. A king. In the Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 20, mention is made that this King fled to South India with his brothers and relatives fearing the attack of Jarāsandha.

BODHA(M). A place in ancient India. It is famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made about this place in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 39.

BODHĀYANA. An individual of the lineage of teachers. (See the word Guruparamparā).

BODHISĀTTVA. A good-natured husband generally quoted in Sanskrit works. The following is the story given about him in Kathāsaritsāgara, Tārāṅga 9.

Once there lived a wealthy Vaiśya, who had a son named Bodhisāttva. When the childhood of the boy was at an end his mother died. The Vaiśya married again and got his son also married. Because of the ear-buzzing of his wife, the Vaiśya drove his son out of the house. Bodhisattva left the house of his father, with his wife. By and by they reached a desert. Not a drop of water was to be had. There was not even the shoot of grass. It was a sandy place with nothing else in sight. He walked for seven days carrying his wife on his shoulders. His wife grew weary and worn with hunger and thirst. Seeing that she was about to die he gave her his flesh and blood. The wicked woman took them and saved herself from death. On the eighth day they reached the jungles of a hilly place full of fruit-trees and with a river with grassy banks, flowing down to the valley. With fruits and cool water he appeased the hunger and thirst of his wife. Then he got down to the river to take a bath. He saw a man with his limbs cut off, coming aloft. Now and then he was producing piteous sounds. The kind son of the Vaiśya, without minding his weakness due to fast for the last seven days, swam to the man and brought him to the bank of the river. He did all services possible for him. Then he asked him who had cut off his limbs. He replied that his enemies had done so, with the intention that he might die suffering severe pain for a long time. The Vaiśya’s son stood still for a little while. Then he took his bath. With his wife he lived in the forest doing penance. The wounds of the man he saved had been healed. The Vaiśya’s son, one day, went out to the forest to gather fruits and roots for their food. At that time his wife grew lustful and had coition with the man without limbs. Gradually she began to dote on him. She decided to kill her husband who was an impediment on her way. She pretended to be ill. The Vaiśya’s son began to treat her. One day she took her husband to the edge of a very deep well and said: "See, there is a divine herb at the bottom of this well. I will be cured if I could eat it. This is what a goddess told me in a dream yesternight!" Hearing this her husband made a rope, and tied it to a tree. Then he began to go down the well by the rope. She cut the rope and the man fell into the well. There was a passage from the well to the river. The current took him through that passage to the river. He got out of the river, and sat under a tree thinking of the wickedness of women. There was a city close by. At that time the King of the city was dead and there was no heir left. The subjects of the city brought an elephant and said, "whom ever this elephant takes and places on his back shall be our king". They sent the elephant out. The elephant was pleased at the virtuous character of the son of the Vaisyā. So taking him, as if he was God, placed him on its back and walked to the city. The people gathered round him and anointed him as their King. The son of the Vaisyā became King. He never even thought of women who are generally fickle and wicked.

The wicked wife of the Vaisyā’s son took the limbless man on her shoulder and wandered about saying, “The enemies of my husband have put him in this plight. Because of my conjugal fidelity I carry him thus and earn our daily bread. Please give us alms”. In this manner she spent her days in begging. Thus wandering from place to place she reached the city where the Vaisyā’s son was the King. The people, seeing her loyalty to her husband, honoured her and spoke highly of her. Hearing that a very loyal wife had reached his city the King sent for her. The King recognized her instantly. But she did not know him. The King reminded her of her deeds of the past one by one and began to tease and scold her. Finally when she understood that the King was her husband she was dumb-founded. The amazed ministers looked at each other. The King revealed everything to them. The ministers disfigured her and drove her away.

BODHYA. A famous teacher-priest. Once there was a discussion between Nahuṣa and Bodhya on Philosophy. The summary of what Bodhya said is as follows:—

Before I advise others, I do it myself first. I am the teacher of none. I take the world as my teacher. I learned the lessons of harmlessness from snakes, disappointment from Pingala the harlot, self-sacrifice from animals, concentration from the archer, and loneliness from a maid who is a spinner. (M.B., Sānti Parva, 171, 56, 61).

This hermit came to the King Yayāti and taught him philosophy and ethics. The whole of the Chapter 171 of Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, comprises the exhortations of this hermit, which are known by the famous name Bodhya-Gītā (Song of Bodhya).

BRADHNĀSYA. A king. Agastya once approached this King to request him for some wealth. (See the word Agastya).

BRAHMĀ:

One of the trimūrtis of the Hindu Pantheon. The trimūrtis are Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva.

1) General information. God who is the creator of the Universe. It is mentioned in the Purāṇas that Brahmā creates, Viṣṇu preserves and Paramāśiva destroys the universe.

2) The birth of Brahmā. The birth of Brahmā is from the navel of Viṣṇu. It is mentioned in Devī Purāṇa, Skandha 1, about the birth of Brahmā as follows:—

In the beginning Mahāviṣṇu lay on a banian leaf in the shape of a baby and began to think, “Who am I? Who created me? What for? What is my work? Where to work?” and so on. At that time an ethereal voice said:—

"Sarvarān halvidamevahāna nānyadasti sanatānam". * Mahāviṣṇu was amazed at this ethereal voice. He did not know whose oracle it was. Still He lay meditating upon the words. Then Mahādevi, with four hands and weapons such as Saṅkha (conch), Cakra (wheel), Gadā (club), Padma (lotus) and maids who are prosperity and having worn glorious clothes and ornaments, and accompanied by the Saktis (powers) named Rati, Bhūti, Buddhi, Māti, Kirti, Dhṛti, Śraddhā, Medhā, Svādhī, Śvāhā, Kṣudhā, Nidrā, Dayā, Gati, Tusi, Puṣṭi, Kṣamā, Lajjā, Jñībhā and Tandrā, appeared before Mahāviṣṇu, who was struck with wonder. Mahādevi said, “Oh, Viṣṇu, what is there to wonder at? Every time the universe is subjected to creation, preservation and destruction, you are born thus due to the great power of the supreme spirit. It seems that you have forgotten those matters. Know that the supreme power is beyond qualities. We are all with qualities. Your main quality is Sattva. From your navel Brahmā will be born. His attribute is Rajoguna (activity, passion or motion). From the middle of the eyebrows of Brahmā, will be born Rudra, whose attribute will be Tāmasaguna (darkness). Brahmā, with the power of penance, will acquire the ability of creation and by his attribute of Rajoguna will create the world in the colour of blood. You will be the preserver of that world. The same world will be destroyed by Rudra at the end of the Kalpa (world age)”.

Accordingly from the navel of Viṣṇu a lotus grew up and in that lotus flower Brahmā took his form. The same Brahmadeva did penance before Mahāviṣṇu and Jagadambā, who were pleased at his penance and gave him all the boons he wanted. After that Brahmā began the work of creation. He created with his mind the Saptarśis, (seven sages) and then the Prajāpatīs (the lords of emanation). From them all the movables and the immovables in the universe came into existence. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

In manusmrī, Chapter I, the following stanza about the creation of Brahmā occurs.

“Tadandaśamahavād haimam
Sahasāṁśusamprapbhāhin
Tamājaṁ jajne svayām Brahmā Sarvalokapātimaḥ”

That egg was as radiant as the Sun, with the colour of gold. Brahmā the great grandfather of everything in the world took birth by himself in it. From the supreme power, an egg fell on the water which was the first creation. That egg became a germ of golden colour. Creating a life, which had done penance in its former births in such a way as to enable it to become Brahmā, in the golden germ of the egg, the supreme power entered the life that is to become Brahmā as its inner guide. That Brahmā is known as the Pitāmaha (Grandfather of the manes) or Paternal grandfather of all the worlds.”

Vāmanapurāṇa Chapter 43 states as follows about the creation of Brahmā:—

Ages before the beginning, when all the worlds with everything they contained were submerged in the single ocean of the great flood, the germ of living things formed itself into a big egg. Brahmā who had been inside the egg went to a long sleep. The sleep continued for a thousand yugas (ages) when Brahmā woke up; as Sattva guṇa (purity) was the foremost attribute of him, he saw that the world was void. When the thought of creation occurred in his mind Rajoguna (activity or passion) became his foremost attribute. Rajas is the attribute that creates and Sattva, that which preserves. At the time of destruction Tāmasaguna (darkness) becomes the foremost attribute. That Bhagavān (Supreme 1 Īdāṁ sarvaṁ khalu aham eva, Saṁsthānam anyad nāsti. All these are myself. Except me there is nothing eternal.

Spirit) the Puruṣa (the Male creative Energy) pervades over everything, in all the living worlds. That Eternal Being is Brahmā, Visńu, Śiva.

Knowing that the world was lying in pure water, the Bhagavān (Supreme Being) cut the egg open. From it the Oṁkāra (the sacred syllable “Oṁ”) emanated. The first sound of it was “Bhuḥ”, the second, sound, “Bhuvāḥ” and the third sound “Svaḥ”. So they came to be known as “Bhūbhuvāḥ Svāḥ”. Then the glorious radiance of the sun was born from it and Brahmā the grandfather of the worlds originated in the centre of the egg.

3) Instigation to compose Rāmāyāṇa. It was Brahmā who instigated Vālmīki to compose the Rāmāyāṇa.

A fowler of the forest tribe shot down one of a couple of snipes which were carrying on love-making, on the banks of the River Tamāśa. Seeing this Vālmīki cursed the fowler. The curse came out of the mouth of Vālmīki in the form of a verse,1 “mā niṣīḍā praśīṭhām tvam-gaṁaṁ āsavaṁ samāṁ, yat krauṇcamithunādekam, avadhiṁ kāmamohitam”, which according to harsay, is the first piece of poetry in the world. Brahmā who was attracted by the poetry came to the hermitage of Vālmīki and instigated him to compose the story of Rāma in verse. It is stated in Vālmīki Rāmāyāṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 2, that the Rāmāyāṇa was composed thus.

4) Rāvaṇa is given a boon. It was Brahmā who made Rāvaṇa an ever-powerful hero. Penance was done by Rāvaṇa in the vicinity of the Himālayas and Brahmā appeared before him and granted him the boon that no living creature except man, would kill him. (Vālmīki Rāmāyāṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 16).

5) The loss of a head. Long ago Śiva plucked off a head of Brahmā. This story occurs in various purāṇas with slight changes. Two of them are given below:

(1) In olden days, in the period of Satyayuga, Mahāviśuṇ did penance in Svctadvīpa (the island Sveta) to obtain Eternal Bliss, being deeply engaged in the study of Brahnavidyā. Brahmā also went to another place and began to do penance for the suppression of passions. Both were doing severe penance. So they began to walk in order to take rest from the penance. On the way they met each other. One asked “who are you?” The other also asked the same question. The talk ended in a contest as to who was the greater of the two. Each claimed himself to be the supreme power of the world. Neither of them was prepared to recognize the claims of the other. In the midst of this contest, a phollus, extra-ordinarily bulky and fair appeared before them and an ethereal voice said from the sky: “You need not quarrel as to who is superior. He who reaches the extremity of this phollus is the superior person. So both of you proceed, one upwards and the other downwards and find out the end.” Hearing this Viśu went downwards to find out the bottom and Brahmā, upwards to the top. Viśu travelled for a long time and finding no end thought the attempt futile and returned to the starting point with disappointment and sat down. Brahmā travelled upwards for a long time and found no end. On the way he saw the petal of a pāṇḍānus flower, coming down from the sky. Brahmā took it and joyfully returned and said haughtily to Viśu: “See, I have taken this flower from the head of the Phallus. I have brought this to convince you. You have been defeated. So can you not admit that I am the superior?” Mahāviśuṇ did not believe the words of Brahmā. So he called the Paṇḍānus flower to him and questioned it. The Paṇḍānus flower took false oath and witnessed in favour of Brahmā, who had asked the flower beforehand to be on his side. Mahāviśuṇ did not believe this either and said, “Let Śiva be witness to this flower”. Śiva at these words appeared before them and revealed the deceit played by Brahmā and the flower and then cursed the Paṇḍānus flower that thenceforward it should not have a place among the flowers of oblation to Śiva. Then Śiva got angry and plucked off a head of Brahmā. That is the skull Śiva uses for receiving alms. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skanda 3.)

(2) In days of old all the worlds with everything in them were under water in a single ocean. The Sun, the Moon, the Stars, air, fire, everything was destroyed. A day of utter darkness appeared. Grass, bush all were destroyed. Nothing could be seen and recognized. All existents and non-existents were destroyed. Bhagavān (Supreme Being) was sleeping continuously for so many thousands of nights. At the end of the night Bhagavān assumed the attribute of Rajas (Activity) and got ready for the work of creation. He, the knower of all Vedas and Veḍāṅgas appeared in the shape of a wonderful being with five faces. Another being with three eyes, matted hair, a trident in one hand, and a garland of beads in the other, and with darkness as its attribute took shape. That being was called Puruṣa (the male creative energy). Then the Mahātmā (the Supreme Spirit) created Ahamkāra (Egoism). It affected Brahmā and Śiva. Overcome by egoism, Śiva said to Brahmā:-“Who are you? Who created you?” Swelled with egoism Brahmā asked in reply:-“Who are you? Who are your parents? Let me hear it.” This talk ended in a quarrel. The origin of Bhagavān (the Lord) was from this quarrel. Immediately after his birth the Lord took an unparralleled lute and playing it, went up to the sky. Śiva being defeated by Brahmā, bowed his head and coloured. While Parameśvara was standing angrily thus, the fifth face told him, “You, who are having three eyes and whose attribute is darkness! Look here! I will tell you all. You, who wear air as garments, and ride on an ox, are the destroyer of the world.” Hearing these words Śiva grew more and more angry, opened his third eye and looked steadily at Brahmā to burn him. Seeing the faces shining like the Sun Brahmā said, “When you beat on water, bubbles will appear. But do they have any prowess? Hearing this, Śiva plucked off the head of Brahmā with the tip of his finger nails. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

5) Changing Vijayalakṣmī to Laṅkālakṣmī, by curse. Vijayalakṣmī, one of the eight Lakṣmīs, was the treasurer-keeper of Brahmā. Once she became careless in discharging her duties. Brahmā got angry and cursed her. “You go to Rāvaṇa and keep his tower”. She humbly requested for absolution from the curse. Brahmā said, “At the time of the incarnation of Śrī Rāma, a monkey hero named Hanumān will reach Laṅkā in search of Śrī Rāma’s wife, whom Rāvaṇa had kidnapped. You will obstruct him, and he will strike you down. On that day you will be absolved from the curse and you will return here instantly.” Accordingly Vijayalakṣmī was born in Laṅkā under the name Laṅkālakṣṇī. When Hanumān jumped to Laṅkā she prevented him, and he struck her down to the ground. (Kārtiṣṭa Rāmāyana, Sundara Kāṇḍa).

6) Brahmah cursing the daughters of Himavān. Three daughters named Kuṭjī, Raṇī and Pārvatī and a son named Suṇābha were born to Himavān by his wife Menā. The three daughters went to the Himālayas for penance, to get Śiva as husband. They were not even six years old then. The devas saw them. The Ādiyās and the Vasus took Kuṭjī who was doing penance, to the world of the gods. All the gods gathered together and asked Brahmah. "Oh Lord, be pleased to tell us if this girl will be able to bear a son who could kill Mahiśāsura". Brahmah replied. "This poor girl will not be capable of bearing the radiance of Śiva. So let her go away."

Prajā Pāñchāsī. Kuṭjī got angry at Brahmah and said "Lord, I will try to become fit to bear the unbearable radiance of Śiva. Harken, I will do penance properly and please Viṣṇu and make Śiva bow his head. I take a vow to that effect." Brahmah became angry and told Kuṭjī, "You, wicked Kuṭjī, you did not succumb to my words. So by my curse you will be turned to water."

Kuṭjī having been cursed by Brahmah became water and began to flood the world of Brahmah. Seeing the flow of water, Brahmah made cause-ways on four sides with the Vedas of Rg, Yajus, Sāma and Atharva. Thus being tied up she stays in the world of Brahmah.

The Devas took Raṇī also before Brahmah and put the same question. The reply of Brahmah was the same as before. She also got angry and said to Brahmah. "I will do great penance so as to enable to give birth to one in my family to be the killer of Mahiśāsura." Brahmah cursed her also. "You are deliberately disobeying my words which even devas won't gainsay. So you will become the colours of the twilight." Thus she became the fast colours of the twilight, and her body was divided among the Pleiades. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

7) Giving a boon to a tiger and golden colour to Pārvatī. The first name of Pārvatī, the daughter of Himavān was Kāli. She was given this name (Kāli) because of her dark complexion. After the marriage Śiva and Pārvatī led a household life in the golden house built by Viṣṇavārma. Once Śiva called Devi humorously, by the name Kāli. Pārvatī got angry and said to her husband. "A wound by an arrow will be cured. If you cut down a tree by an axe it will sprout again. A wound inflicted by hard words will never be cured. The arrows of words shoot out of the mouth. Those who are hit by them suffer pain day and night. Wise people should not shoot them at others. You have violated that principle. So my lord, I am going to do intensive penance. I will endeavour to create such a condition, that you may not call me by the name Kāli again." Saying thus, Pārvatī bowed before Paramēśvara and bidding good-bye she went up into the air and reached the peak of Himālayas and thought of Jayā, Viṣṇu, Jayantī and Aparājītā. Instantly they arrived to see Kāli. They got permission and stayed with Pārvatī to attend on her.

While Pārvatī was engaged in doing penance, a tiger, with his weapons of tusks and claws came there from the jungles of the Himālayas. Umā (Pārvatī) was standing on one leg. The tiger began to think, "I shall do it when it is needed". Thinking thus it gazed at the face of Devi with staring eyes and consequently it lost one eye. Pronouncing the word Brahmah Devi did penance for a hundred years. After that Brahmah, the Lord of the three worlds appeared before her and said to her: "I am much pleased. Your penance was flawless. Ask your boon." Kāli replied, "Oh, Lotus-born! First give this tiger a boon. It will please me." Then Brahmah gave the wonderful tiger leadership of the Gaṇas, devotion to Śiva, invincibility and righteousness. After giving the tiger this boon Brahmah told Pārvatī, "Now, Ambikā, ask your boon. Don't hesitate, I will grant the boon." Then Pārvatī asked the boon. "Brahmah, give me golden colour". Brahmah said "Let it be so", and disappeared. The dark complexion of Pārvatī disappeared. She got the colour of the filament of the lotus flower. From the discarded skin Kātyāyāni was born. Then Indra appeared and asked for her as a gift. Indra requested Pārvatī on behalf of heaven. "Let me have her. Let this Kauśikī be my sister. Because she was born from your Kṣa, (outer skin) she is Kauśikī, I am also Kauśikī." Devi gave the beautiful Kauśikī to Indra. Sahasrāka (Indra who has thousand eyes) took her to the Vindhyā mountain; when they reached there Indra told her. "You stay on this mount, honoured and revered by gods. You will be known as Vindhyavāsini (who stays on the Vindhya). He consecrated the goddess there. She was given a lion as her carrier (Vāhana) "You destroy the asuras" saying so Indra returned to Heaven. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 54).

8) Brahmah became river. Long ago in the period of Cākṣuṣa manvantara (the age of a Manu), Brahmah decided to perform a sacrifice on the Sahya Mountain and preparations were made for it. Brahmah came with Viṣṇu and Śiva. Bhṛgū and other hermits took their seats. Mahāviṣṇu called Svarādevī, the wife of Brahmah. But she was very slow in coming. The hermit Bhṛgū said to Viṣṇu: "You yourself have gone to call Devī. But she is very slow. The auspicious moment is coming to an end. So how are we to commence the rituals?"

"If Svarā does not appear before the end of the stipulated time we shall seat Gayātrī in her place," said Viṣṇu. Śiva also agreed to it. So Bhṛgū seated Gayātrī on the right side of Brahmah and the rituals were performed. By then Svarā reached the sacrificial hall. When she saw that Gayātrī was placed in her place and the rituals were performed she became angry, because of her quarrel with her co-wife. She called out: "Where the person to whom respect is due, is not given respect and where the person who ought not to be respected is given undue respect; there, scarcity, death and fear will be rampant. She dared to sit on the right in my place. So she will grow lean and become a river which will not be seen in the world. All of you will become rivers because you have placed a person lower than me in my position." Hearing the curse of Svarā, Gayātrī rose up trembling, and cursed Svarā also to become a river. Before Svarā was changed to a river, Brahmah and the other gods rose up and requested for absolution from the curse. Svarā said, "Gods, it is because you have not given oblations to Gaṇapati in the beginning of the sacrifice, that this break, due to my anger, has been caused. My curse cannot be futile. So each of you change to a river by your portions and we, your wives, will also become rivers by our portions, and flow to the west."
Thus Brahma, Viṣṇu and Mahēśvara became rivers with their portions. Brahma became the fast-flowing Kukumati, Mahāviṣṇu changed to river Kṛṣṇa and Śiva, the river Veṇi. The devas also changed their portions to rivers and flowed from the Sahya mountain to the east and their wives changed to rivers by their portions and flowed to the west. Śvarā and Gāyatrī flowed as two rivers to the west and then joined together as one river called Śāvirī. Viṣṇu and Śiva who were consecrated at the sacrifice by Brahma came to be called Bala and Aṭībala (Powerful and more powerful). This is the origin of the rivers in Kerala. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 111).

9) Brahma is not worshipped. Long ago Brahma and Viṣṇu went to see Śiva near Himavān. They saw a shining phalus there in front of them. It was of immense size. One of them went downwards and the other upwards to find out the end of it. Both returned without reaching the top or the bottom and by penance they pleased Śiva who appeared before them and asked them what boon they desired. Brahma asked Śiva to take birth as his son. Śiva did not like this and said that nobody would worship Brahma because of his extravagant desire (namely, to have Śiva as his son). Viṣṇu requested that he should be made a servant at Śiva’s feet. So Viṣṇu incarnated as Śiva’s Sakti (power). That Sakti is Pārvatī. So Viṣṇu and Pārvatī are one and the same in a sense. (Kathāsāritsāgarā, Kathāpīṭhalambakaṇī, Ta-raṇaṇa 1).

10) The abode of Brahma. It is said in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8, that the abode of Brahma is on the top of Mount Mahāmeru. There are nine towns there. Mano-vatī which is in the centre, is the town of Brahma. Due east of Mano-vatī stands Ama-ravatī, the town of Indra. On the south-east corner there is Rajavatī which is owned by Agni (fire-god). Due south of Brahmāpurī there is the town of Saniyamanī which is the town of Yama (God of death). On the south west corner there is the town of Nīrītī. It is named Kṛṣṇājanā. On the west there is the town called Sraṃdhavatī. It is the abode of God Varuṇa. On the north-west corner there is the town called Gandhavatī which is the abode of Bhagavān Vāyu (Wind-God). Due north to Brahmāpurī stands the town of Kubera (God of wealth). It is known by the name Mahodaya. On the north east corner there is the city of Śiva. It is known as Ya-śovatī.

11) The sons of Brahma. Brahma is the creator of all the living things in the world. Still mention is made in the Purāṇas about countless divine persons who were born from the mind and body of Brahma, directly and indirectly. They are given below in groups:

(1) Maricī, Angirās, Ati, Pulastya, Pulaha, and Kratu. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 10, that these six grand hermits were born from the mind of Brahma.

(2) Dhatā and Vidhatā. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 51 that these two were good sons born to Brahma.

(3) Rudra. Mention is made in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20, that Brahma had a roaring son who was named Rudra.

(4) Śvāyambhuva Manu. It occurs in Bhāgavata Skandha 11, that Manu Śvāyambhuva was the son of Brahma.

(5) Kandarpa (Kāmadeva -Cupid). In Kathāsārit-sāgara, Lāvāṇakalāmbaka, Ta-raṇaṇa, 6, it is mentioned that Cupid was born from the Egoism of Brahma.

(6) Madhuka and Golikā. In Uttara Rāmāyaṇa, mention is made that from the playful habit of Brahma, a giant named Madhuka and a giantess named Golikā were born.

(7) Bhrigu. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 8, that the hermit Bhrigu was the son of Brahma.

(8) Jāmbavān. It is seen in Kaṁpa Rāmāyaṇa that Jāmbavān was born from the sweat of Brahma.

(9) The Sanakas. In Bhāgavata mention is made that the Sanakas (Sanaka, Sananda, Sanātana and Sanat Kumāra) were sons of Brahma.

(10) In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsa Parva there is a passage given as the words of Vaśiṣṭha spoken to Bhrigu, about the birth of many of the sons of Brahma. “May I tell you a story I have heard long ago about the revelation of Brahma of himself? Lord Rudra took the form of Varuṇa and performed a sacrifice. Many hermits, all the devas, Agni and others, Vaṣaṭkīra (Exclamation in sacrifice) which took body, and all yajñāṅgas came to the sacrificial hall. All the expedients, all the glories which are thousands in number took shape and came to the sacrifice. Ṛgveda arrayed in garments of heroism came there. All the omens, all the voices, all the emotions, all the etymologies of pronouncing Veda Sūktas, all the svabhāvikas, Omkāra (the syllable Om) the eye of all the Vedic metres and their theories, all restraints and donations, all Vedas, Upaniṣads, accomplishments, Sāvitrī, the past, the near future and distant future, all these came there. The Lord Śiva held everyone of them. He offered his spirit by his spirit. The sacrifice took many forms and shed radiances. Paramaśiva is heaven, is the sky, is the earth, is the father and the husband of the Earth, is the lord of all accomplishments, is noble and the lord of radiance. This Lord is lauded by the names Brahma, Śiva, Rudra, Varuṇa, Agni, and Prabhāvatī. Śiva is the King of all the worlds. Penances, sacrifices, vows emblazoned by fast, all the directions and gods of directions, Indras, celestial maids, mothers of the worlds, all these assumed forms and came to the sacrifice in multitudes. Everybody who witnessed the sacrifice of Paramēśvara, who was in the form of Varuṇa, was greatly pleased. Seeing the pleasing celestial maids standing in rows passion arose in Brahma. He had seminal discharge. Ādiya (the Sun) took the earth on which the semen fell and threw it into the sacrificial fire, which blazed furiously. Brahma who became the offerer of obligation had discharge again. He got it in the sacrificial ladle and with recitation of spells offered it in the sacrificial fire as if it was ghee. The powerful semen contained the three attributes of Sattva, Rajas and Tamas. From the attribute of Rajas arose the living world which had activity as its purpose. Radiance is the quality of Sattva which entered the living and non-living world. It gives light to everything. It also gives the power of discrimination. From the semen offered in the fire, three sons with body and the attributes of demi-gods came out. The male who had originated from the flame called 'Bharjana' became Anīgas. The male who originated from the burning coals became Kavi. Over and above these three radiances, other radiances also originated from the sacrificial fire. From the Maricīs (rays) of the fire Marici the father of Kaśyapa was born. From the Kuśa-grass spread on the floor of the hall of sacrifice, the Bālakhīlyas were born. Atri also was born from the Kuśa-grass. The noble hermits called Vaikhānasas, who have grown powerful by penance and became the seat of all good qualities, were born from the sacrificial ashes. From the stream of fire which are the eyes of the sacrificial fire the handsome Āśvin were born. The rest of the Prajāpatis were born from the ears of the fire. From the pores of the skin of fire were born the hermits, from the sweat the ‘chandhas’ (metre of Vedas) and from might, the mind. For this reason the Vedic scholars and knowers of the Śruti and those who see the superiority of Vedas, say that fire is a combination of all the gods. The trees that feed the fire are called Māsas (months), the sap of the tree is called Pakṣa (half of the month i.e. full moon to new moon and new moon to full moon), the pith of the tree is called night and day and the flames are called Muhūrtas (auspicious moments). Rudras were born from the blood of fire and the golden coloured gods, the Maitrās, also were born from the blood of fire. From the smoke of the fire, the Vāyus, from the flame of the fire Rudras and the Adītvas of the extreme radiance were born. The planets and stars which stand in their places in the sky are the charcoal of the fire. Brahmā declared that fire was Brahmā the supreme spirit, eternal and the giver of all wishes. The sinless Mahādeva, who was in the form of Varuṇa said, “This sacrificial fire is mine, and I am the sacrificer. So the children born as the first fruit of this sacrifice are mine. So Bhṛgu, Aṅgiras and Kavi are my sons, no doubt. Let everybody who moves along the sky know that these three are my sons, the fruit of my sacrifice.” Agni said, “These are born from my organs. They had been depending on me for their sustenance. So they are my sons.” Brahmā the teacher of all the worlds and the grandfather of all living beings said, “They are my sons. I offered my sperm to the fire, and these sons were born therefrom. How can they be claimed by anybody else? Here, I am the utterer of the spell and the offerer of the sperm. I am the owner of the sperm. Am I not the owner of the fruit? There is no contest on the point that the birth of Bhṛgu and others is from the oblation of my sperm.” The Gods who heard these arguments bowed their heads before Brahmā and greeting him said, “Lord Brahmā, It is not only us that are born from you, but the entire world of living and non-living is born from you. So let Agni and Deva in the shape of Varuṇa have their wishes.”

12) Brahmā and the giantess Karkkāṭi. In days of old, a ferocious giantess named Karkkāṭi lived on the northern side of the Himalayas. Because of the hugeness of her body and the scarcity of food she became famished. She began to do penance for the alleviation of her hunger and thirst. She stood on one leg in the Himalaya Mountain, fixing her eyes on the sun in the day and on the Moon in the night, and the severe penance continued for a thousand years. Then Brahmā appeared before her and told her that she could ask for any boon. She said “I wish to become a Sūcī (Needle) as hard as iron, having the form of disease. This is the boon I pray for, Brahmā”. Brahmā blessed her and said, “Let it be so, my daughter, you shall be a Sūcīka (Needle) with the prefix ‘V’ that is Viśūcika (Spasmodic cholera). You can eat those who eat stale food, those who are wicked, those who sit in places where they ought not to sit and those who are hard-hearted. Enter into their bodies and affect their hearts, spleens and life-breaths. Thus carry out the work of destruction? You can affect both the good and the bad. But good people should not be killed. So to save them from death, you can use this mantra (spell).

Saying these words Brahmā disappeared. Karkkāṭi made her body smaller and smaller and finally assumed the shape of a needle. After that she began her work by entering the body of those who had lost their energy because of illness, in the form of a needle of gout and caused Cholera, and the body of those who were lean and was thin and weary, in the form of internal cholera. Thus assuming two bodies and killing countless people she travelled for a long time in the earth and the sky, until she herself felt aversion to her work. When she remembered her original form she loathed the needle-form. Karkkāṭi again went to the vicinity of the Himalayas and began to do penance, which lasted for another thousand years. Thus she became pure and by the power of thinking, she acquired spiritual knowledge. Then she wanted to be saved from the mirage of birth and death, to attain which, she did penance for yet another thousand years at the end of which, the highly pleased Brahmā appeared before her and said, “daughter Karkkāṭi, all the darkness is erased from your heart and you have attained deliverance from delusion. Now I will bless you according to your wish. Receive your original body and walk about in the worlds eating the ignorant, bad beginners, the imprudent, those who sit in bad places and dwell in bad places.”

She became a giantess again, but as she had attained purity of soul, she engaged herself in deep meditation which was free from doubt. The meditation lasted for a long time. Finally her mind waved. Then she remembered about worldly things and felt hunger. She remembered, “Brahmā has ordained the wicked as my food. So I shall seek them.” Thinking thus she went to a jungle in the vicinity of the Himalayas. That was the dwelling place of foresters. In that dark night the King and the minister of the foresters approached the place where Karkkāṭi sat. Karkkāṭi seeing them thought, “let me know first if they are good or bad.” So she decided to ask them some questions. She asked them in a voice like thunder. “Who are you? Are you enlightened sages or ignorant fools? say quickly.” The king of the foresters hearing this replied in a cynical way. “You insignificant ghost? What is your form? Where do you sit? Let us see your powerless body. Who is there to fear at your sound which is like the humming of a she-beetle?”

Hearing this reply Karkkāṭi showed her tusks and laughed loud, to spread light, and to terrify them. They heard the loud roaring sound of her laugh and saw her huge form in the light. But those mighty heroes were not at all shaken by the sound they heard or the sight they witnessed. The Minister looked at her and said, “Hoi, Giantess? These delusions of yours will have no effect on us. Even if a number of mosquitoes like you come before us, they will be only dry leaves before wind. You are acting like this merely for food. So what is your need? Tell us, we will satisfy you."

Hearing the words of the minister Karkkāṭi knew that her might was useless before such valiant men. She thought them to be sages. So she said "Hey mighty heroes, Who are you? Tell me the truth". The minister said; "This the King of foresters and I am his minister. We came for a night-walk to find out and punish wicked people like you."

The giantess appreciated them and said; "I am about to put some questions to you. If you give me suitable answers you will be saved." The King agreed. The questions put by her are given below in the order they were asked:

1) Inside what atom which is unit and multiple at the same time, do the lakhs of universes originate and vanish as bubbles in a sea?
2) What does shine as ether and non-ether?
3) What is it that is something and nothing?
4) What is it that is going and not going at the same time?
5) What is it that has taken form from voidness?
6) What is it that is moving and at the same time stationary as a rock?
7) Who draws pictures in clear sky?
8) In what seed do the worlds exist as a big tree in its seed?
9) From what substance can the living and non-living things in the worlds, not be separated as the foam and waves cannot be separated from the ocean?
10) What substance is dualism not separate from (others) as fluidity from water?

The reply given by the minister to each question is given below in the order of the questions:

1) Hey, Giantess: All the questions you have put before us encased in figurative words discernible only to the Vedic sages, are concerned with the supreme Being. The atom is the supreme Spirit which is beyond all knowledge of the mind and the senses. As it is without organs of action it is as unmanifested as the sky. And inside that supreme atom which could be felt only by the mind, crores and crores of bubbles of universes originate and vanish due to frailty.

2) The impersonal Supreme Being, having no substance, pervades everything. This Supreme Being, Brahman, is pure knowledge (Jñānasvarāpā). It is the sky and the non-sky.

3) As it is indescribable the Impersonal Supreme Spirit is nothing, but as it is a reality it is something.

4) As it pervades everything accessible, the Impersonal Supreme Spirit has the quality of motion. But as it has no emotions and as there exists no space beyond, it is motionless.

5) As it is inaccessible to others the Supreme Spirit is having no existence, but as it is the essence of everything that is good, it has existence.

6) The Supreme Spirit is the radiance of motion or activity and as there is nothing else to be found out, that is, as it doesn’t know anything else it is as rigid as a rock.

7) In the clear sky the Supreme Spirit draws the pictures of the universe.

8) Exists in the Supreme Atom.

9) As the entire visible world cannot be separated from the Supreme Spirit nothing is other than the Impersonal Supreme Spirit.

10) The differentiations of the various worlds are mere appearances of the Supreme Spirit and so dualism is of the same figure.

The King drew Karkkāṭi nearer to the Impersonal Supreme Spirit. He advised her not to commit slaughter. She accepted the advice. The King asked her to come to his palace assuming the form of a beautiful woman. She asked, what could he offer to a giantess as food. The King said; "You good woman, we shall find out a way for that. You change yourself to a beautiful woman wearing golden ornaments and stay in my palace for a while. I shall arrange to gather sinners, robbers and such other wicked people who are to be given capital punishment, in thousands from various places, and shall give them to you. You can take your original form and take them all to the peaks of the Himalaya and feed on them.

Gluttonous people like to eat in solitude. After having eaten sumptuously, take some sleep, and a little rest in meditation. When you wake up you come again and take away people destined to be killed. The slaughter done for the sake of righteousness is not a sin. It is said to be equal to mercy. When your desire for meditation is over you must come to me. If an attachment of love is formed even with bad persons it is difficult to break the love."

Karkkāṭi obeyed the King. They all reached the palace. Within six days three thousand wicked persons, who were sentenced to death, were brought before the King, from his own country and the various dependent countries, and were given to Karkkāṭi. In the night she took her original form, gathered all the wicked people, who deserved killing and bidding good bye to the King, went to the Peaks of the Himalaya. (Jñānavāsītha).

13) Brahmā and Haindavas. At the end of the day of Brahmā there was the great flood, and destroying all the heavens, Brahmā went to sleep. He woke up next morning and after the usual morning ablutions, prepared for creation. He looked around at the sky, and saw some heavens still engaged in usual activities. He was amazed at this unusual occurrence. Ten Brahmās and the countless devas (gods) under them were doing their routine work. Brahmā stared at the worlds for a long time thinking "How is it". Then he by his divine power caused one of the suns, working in a heaven, to come to him, and asked him. "Who are you, shining one? How have these worlds come into existence?"

The Sun said with humility. "Your sons Marici and others erected a beautiful shed called Suvarṇatāma, in a corner of Jānibudvāpī in the valley below Kailāśa. A Brāhmaṇa named Īndu arose from that hall. The Brahmā who was a Vedic scholar, righteous and peaceful, led the life of a house-holder with his wife for a long time. But they were childless. So they went to Kailāśa and did penance to get children. They entered a natural arbour which was quite silent and began severe penance. Śiva appeared and said that they would get children.

In course of time, ten sons were born to them. After a long time, when the sons had reached manhood the old parents died. The sons felt very sorry. They regarded life as short and full of woe and misery. So they went for pendence, as they had no relatives left to care for them. They abstained from all the pleasures of the world and reached Kailāsa. They began to meditate upon the shortness of life. “What is there which is noble in this world? Is there anything except woe and misery? How simple is the desire of man for greatness? One thinks himself prosperous if he becomes a house-holder. The head of the village is more prosperous than a house-holder. The King of a dependent state is more powerful than the head of a village. An independent king is far more prosperous than a dependent King. When we think of the state of an emperor how simple is an independent king! When compared with Indra, the Lord of the three worlds what is an emperor after all? But there is nothing glorious in the state of Indra also as it ends in a Brahmanamūrtta (a period in the life of Brahman). So what is there substantial and eternal?

“Brahma alone is eternal and indestructible,” said the eldest brother. “Concentrate your mind and say to yourself, ‘I am the supreme Being Brahman seated on a lotus’, and meditate upon it and pray for it and knowledge of Brahman will be conferred upon you.’ They understood this and the ten brothers became Brahman. There are ten heavens of them. They are ten worlds in the sky of mind. I am the sun who creates day and night in one of them,” saying thus the Sun went away. Brahman commenced his activity. (Jānavaśiṣṭha).

14) The age of Brahman. Forty-three crores twenty lacs of human years is one four-yuga period called Devacaturyuga (a period of four yugas of the devas or gods). One thousand deva caturyugas will make one Mahāyuga (great yuga). A Mahāyuga is a day time of Brahman. During the period of one Mahāyuga, that is, during one day of Brahman, fourteen Manus, one after another, help Brahman in doing the work of creation. This is the time of the seventh Manus in the present day time (Kalpa) of the present Brahman. The period of six Manus are over in the present day time of the present Brahman. Vaivasvata is the present Manus. Brahman wakes up in the morning—the beginning of a Kalpa. Those which underwent destruction in the night, are created again in the morning. As Brahman wakes up daily in the morning, what are the things created before, which do not undergo destruction? At that time there will remain, without destruction, six or twenty-four tattvas (principles) which are natural creations. These twenty-four principles are not the creation of Brahman. He who is beyond names, He who created Brahman in the lotus flower, created them. Brahman who originated in the lotus which grew from the navel of Nārāyaṇa performs the work of creation guided by these twenty-four principles. The work of creation performed by Brahman is called Pratisarga (substitute creation). Everything Brahman created in the day time will be destroyed in the evening. After a day time is over there is the night time and sleep for Brahman. The life of Brahman is hundred years, that is thirty-six thousand Brahman days and Brahman nights. At the expiry of this period the life of Brahman will come to an end, and will dissolve in Nārāyaṇa. Thus crores and crores of Brahman have appeared and passed away and in future also crores will appear and pass away. (Bhāgavata).

15) The creations and substitute creations of Brahman. The creations performed by Brahman are of two kinds. The first is Sarga or creation and the second is Pratisarga or substitute creation. In the first Kalpa when a Brahman is born from the lotus, certain creations are made and the things thus originated do not undergo destruction in the evening or at the end of the Kalpa. They are the sarga or creation. On that day and every day of the life of Brahman they help Brahman in the work of creation. In a sense they could be called Prajāpati (the lords of emanation). But as most of them have not left sons, and for other reasons also, they are not well known by that name. Only the persons mentioned here have as long a life as that of Brahman. The Sanakas, Karaddama, Marici, Atri, Angiras, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Bhrgu, Vasiṣṭha, Dakṣa, Nārada, Dharma, Adharma, Nirṛti, Sarasvatī, Kāma, Atharva, the Manes, Agni, Śthānu, and Śvāyambhuva: these do not end at the end of a Brahman’s day (or Kalpa) and will be dissolved only when Brahman is dissolved. A Brahman creates in his first morning not only persons from Sanaka to Śvāyambhuva, but also creations which have a history only up to the end of that day, such as the lokas (worlds) of Bhūloka, Bhuvanloka and Svarloka, and minerals, plants, animals, humanity etc. Sarga or creation is called Prākṛta Śrṣṭi (natural creation). Pratisarga or substitute creation is called Aprākṛta Śrṣṭi or unnatural creation. At the end of the Kalpa, Sanvartakāgni (Fire which destroys the universe) and Sanvartaka vārṣa (Rain which destroys the universe) will occur and all the unnatural creations will be destroyed. In all the morning, following the first morning of a Brahman substitute creation takes place, and they are destroyed at the end of each Kalpa by Sanvartakāgni and Sanvarttakavārṣa. (Bhāgavata).

(47) Brahmā gave the devas (gods) the earth as a gift for performing sacrifice. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 66).
(48) Once Brahmā made a speech to Indra about the importance of giving cow as gift. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 2).
(49) Brahmā granted a boon to Surabhi. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 36).
(50) Brahmā originated the Prajāpatis by offering his sperm into the sacrificial fire at the sacrifice of Varuṇa. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 99).
(51) Once Brahmā gave the devas (gods), Rṣis (hermits) and the Nāgas (serpents) the ekākṣa ramantra (the one-syllable-spell) ‘OM’. (M.B. Āsvamedha Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 8).
(52) In almost all the Purāṇas Brahmā is called ‘Caturmukha’ (having four faces) and to substantiate this the following story is given in the Matsyapurāṇa. Brahmā created Śatarūpā with half the portion of his body, and accepted that bright and beautiful woman as his wife. He could not bear his beautiful wife to be away from his sight even for a moment. So much had he become attached to her.
One day Śatarūpā was walking round Brahmā. The daughters born from his mind also were seated close by. So he could not turn round and look at his wife as she was moving. To solve this problem, in place of one face, there arose four faces.
Once Śatarūpā was walking in the air. To see her at that time there arose a fifth head on the top of his matted hair. It is this face that was plucked off by Śiva.
(53) Various stories occur in the purāṇas regarding how Śiva plucked off the fifth head of Brahmā. They are given below,
BRAHMA

(1) Once Brahma praised Siva and pleased him and asked him to become his son. Siva did not like it. He got angry and cursed, “I shall become your son. But I will pluck off your fifth head.”

(2) In the beginning Brahma created the incarnation of Siva, called Nilalojita also, along with the creation of worlds and everything in it. In later creations Brahma did not think of Nilalojita. Seeing Brahma carrying on the work of creation forgetting him, Nilalojita got angry and cursed Brahma, “Your fifth head will shortly be destroyed.”

(3) After Brahma became five-faced the brightness of the devas began to decrease day by day. Seeing this the conceited Brahma said to Siva: “I am the first who got existence in this world. So by all means I am the eldest.” Hearing this Siva got angry and plucked off the fifth head of Brahma and threw it away. (Matsyapurana, 133, 84-86).

When the fifth head was gone, the rest of the heads were benumbed. The sweat which flowed from them was thrown into the earth by Brahma. Out of it came out a horrible monster, which began to chase Siva, who caught hold of it and gave it to Visnu. (Skanda, 5, 73, 13, 4).

(4) In the Siva-Rudra collections a story occurs about the quarrel between Siva and Brahma.

Once Brahma fell in love with Satī the wife of Siva; coming to know of this Siva tried to kill Brahma. Mahāviṣṇu tried to pacify Siva, but it was of no avail. Siva took away the fifth head of Brahma and made him ugly, and consequently Brahma became invincible in the world.

(5) Once Siva showed his daughter Sandhyā to Brahma who grew lustful instantly; Siva insulted Brahma by showing this ill-owned passion of his to his sons (Brahma’s sons). As a revenge Brahma created Satī and insulted Siva through Daśa. (Skanda, 2, 2, 26).

17 Various names of Brahma and their meanings: In Amanakośa, the following names are given to Brahma.

BRAHMA. See Parabrahma.

BRAHMA. A kind of marriage. The bride is adorned with all kinds of ornaments and is taken to bridegroom; and given to him as wife. This is called Brahma marriage. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 73, Stanza 8 states that this mode of marriage was allowed to all the four castes of ancient Bhārata.

BRAHMABALI. An individual of a dynasty of teachers. (See Guruparāṇiparā).

BRAHMACĀRĪ I. See Brahmacarya.

BRAHMACĀRĪ II. A devagandharva (a class of Gods) born to Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife Prthē. He took part in the Birth festival of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 65 and 122).

BRAHMACARYA. In ancient India an ideal life was considered to pass through four stages, and Brahmacya is one of the stages of life. The four stages are Brahmacya (Vedic student vowed to chastity), Gārhasṭhya (married householder), Vānaprastha (forest hermit) and Sannyāsa (an ascetic who has renounced the world). Brahmacya, the first stage of the four is considered as the period of education. The rules and conduct of a Brahmacārī are given in Manusmṛti, Chapter 2. The brahmacārī who lives with the teacher has to obey certain rules and principles. He should bathe in the river at sun-rise and offer oblations to gods and manes. A brahmacārī has to abstain from using honey, meat, fragrance, flowers, flower of chrysanthemum (Ind.) women, curd, milk, ghee, churned-curd, slaughter, bath applying oil, anointing the eyes with collyrium, sandals, umbrella, lust, anger, covetousness, dance, music, gambling, slander, ridicule, falsehood, and causing injury to others. A Brahmacya should go to bed alone. Semen should not be made to discharge through lust. If seminal discharge occurs in dream he should take bath early in the morning and worship the Sun, pronouncing the mantra or spell ‘Punaḥ’ thrice. The Brahmacya should live on alms. It is the duty of the brahmacya to bring water, flower for oblation, cowdung, soil and darbha (grass) for the teacher. He should receive alms only from the houses of those who believe in the Vedas and sacrifices. He should not go to the house of his teacher or his heirs and their families for alms. Provided there are no other houses he may receive alms from the houses of his teacher’s relatives and in the absence of such houses he may approach the houses of heirs to his teacher and in the absence of such houses he may receive alms from the house of the teacher. He should fetch ‘Camata’ (fuel chiefly from butca frondosa) from a place of purity in the forest, as instructed in rules and dry it in the sun; in the absence of which it may be got dried in a sheltered place. This fuel should be put in the sacrificial fire in the mornings, at noons, and in the evenings. If a healthy Brahmācārī fails in doing his duties consecutively for seven days it will be considered that his vow of Brahmacarya is broken and then he will have to take the vow of ‘Avakāṃya’ again. Without waiting for the order of the teacher, the Brahmācārī (student) should engage himself in devotion and meditation and in the service of the teacher daily. When the student is before the teacher he should stand with folded hands controlling his body, speech, brains, sensitive organs, and mind. Only when he is asked to sit, should he do so before the teacher, covering the portions of his body, which are to be covered, with clothes. He should rise up in the morning before his teacher wakes up, and go to bed only after the teacher has retired for sleep. When his teacher calls him, he should not give reply lying, sitting, walking, eating or looking in the opposite direction. He should not gainsay the teacher. The student should attend to the orders of the teacher and comply with them, sitting if the teacher is sitting, standing if the teacher is standing, standing back if the teacher is advancing towards him, running behind if he is walking, standing close by when he is facing the opposite direction, folding his limbs when the teacher is lying or sitting near. The student should have his seat and bed one step lower than those of his teacher. The student should not sit in a careless manner in places where the teacher’s eyes could reach. He should not utter the name of his teacher. If anybody speaks ill of his teacher he should close his ears and run away from the spot. If a Brahmācārī scoffs his teacher, he will be born as a donkey, and as a dog if he scorns him, and as a worm if he steals the wealth of his teacher and as a beetle if he becomes jealous at the greatness of his teacher. When the teacher is angry the brahmācārī should not go near him. The Brahmācārī should not speak unasked. A Brahmācārī could sit with his teacher only when they are in a vehicle, or on a camel or in a tower or on the steps or on rocks or in a boat. He should consider the teacher of his teacher as his teacher. He should not address his parents who visit the house of the teacher, without the permission of his teacher. He should respect learned men, holymen, sons of the teacher and those who are born of his family, as a teacher. If the wife of the teacher is of the caste of the teacher, the brahmācārī should consider her as his teacher. If the wife is not of the same caste the brahmācārī needs only to stand up and make obeisance to her. A brahmācārī should not apply oil to the body of his teacher’s wife, wash her, massage her body, and comb her hair. A brahmācārī may either shave his head or grow matted hair. He should never be asleep at sunrise or sunset. For learning Vedas etc. the student should not give the teacher cows, clothes etc. as free gifts beforehand. On completion of education, when the student asks the teacher for permission to get married, he should give the teacher what he demands. A brahmācārī who has fully complied with the rules mentioned above, will attain heaven after his death.

BRAHMADATTA I. A famous king of Kaṁpyapura.

1) Birth. Brahmadatta was born in the family of Bṛhatkṣatras who was a scion of the Solar dynasty.
Pancala in the great city of Kampilya. The King loved his father. He was mighty and powerful. He was regular in performing sacrifices and giving offerings to the manes. He had the attainment of harmony with the supreme spirit. He understood the thought and speech of birds and animals. He married Sannati, the daughter of Sudeva (Devala); she was in her former birth the cow of Garga.

Once as the King was walking in the garden with his wife, he saw two ants. The minute creatures, who were husband and wife were engaged in a petty quarrel. The male one, with loving words, pacified the female one, who instantly came close to her husband and they became happy. The King felt amazed at this conversation of the ants, and he laughed. Because of the attainments of his previous lives, he had the power to understand the language of animals, birds, etc.

Seeing the King laughing without any reason the queen Sannati asked him why he laughed. She said that there was no reason whatsoever for the king to laugh just then. The King replied, "Oh, beautiful one! just now there was a quarrel between a female and a male ant. I heard it. That is why I laughed. There is no other reason." The queen did not believe the King.

She thought that the King had been scolding her. She asked him how he came to understand the language of such creatures. The King could not answer her question. He fasted for seven days. On the seventh day Brahma appeared before him and told him, "The King will know everything from the words of a Brahmin, whom he would meet when he goes to walk in the streets."

Brahmadatta returned to the palace and spent the night there. Next morning he started with his wife and ministers, for a walk. When they left the palace they saw an old Brahmin coming towards them. Seeing the king the Brahmin recited a verse:

"Brāhmaṇas in Kurukṣetra which seven as wild men in Daśapura?
Stags in Kālañjara, ruddy geese in Mānasā.
Then, are we, now living here?"

When the King heard this verse the memory of his former births revived and he fell down in a swoon. There is a reason why the old Brahmin recited the verse. The Ruddy geese mentioned before took their next birth as sons of a poor Brahmin in the same city. They had the memory of their previous births. They were called Dhritimān, Sarvadarśi, Vidvācandra and Tapodhika, names suitable to their character. The Brahmin boys decided to go for penance to attain supreme bliss. Then the poor father asked them, "My dear sons, what is this? You are going away leaving your poor and aged father. Is that dutiful?" The sons replied, "We will tell you a way to earn wealth. You recite to the King to-morrow morning this verse, which we will teach you now. You will get plenty of wealth." The boys taught their father this verse and then they went to the forest. Their father, the old Brahmin, came to the gate of the palace at Kampilya. The King was Brahmadatta.

There is another story how Brahmadatta became the King of this place. Long ago Aghusa, the King of Pāncala did penance before Brahma, who appeared before the King and asked him what he desired. The King made his request that he might have a son who should be a mighty hero, a learned man, a great hermit and who could understand the language of all living creatures. Brahma granted him boon and thus Brahmadatta was born to Aghusa. It was before this Brahmadatta that the Brāhmaṇa recited his verse and it was that King who swooned and fell down.

The two ministers were Subālaka the son of Bābhravya who was the author of the Kāmasūtra and Pundarika the son of Pāncala who propagated the science of medicine. They also remembered about their former births and also fell down unconscious. When they recovered the King Brahmadatta and the minister Subala and Pundarika bemoaned the loss of powers they had attained before by devotion, meditation, penance and sacrifice. They cried, "Fate has made us desirous of the objects of our senses and we have lost our harmony with the Supreme Spirit." They repeated the cry again and again and they spoke about the blessings obtained by offering oblation to their manes. Brahmadatta gave the old Brāhmaṇa plenty of wealth and several villages and sent him fully satisfied. Then he anointed his capable and fully qualified son Vīśvakarman as King and with his retinue retired to Mānlāsa-saras for penance.

3) A bird as his wife when he was King. When Brahmadatta was the King of Kampilyapura a bird named Tapaniyā became his friend. Her head was purple coloured and body black. By and by this bird became his wife. A daughter named Sarvasenā was born to Brahmadatta by his bird-wife. The King had sons by other wives. Tapaniyā would wash her child and place her in the cradle early in the morning and then go to the forest and fly about in the air. She would return in the evening and tell the King news all over the world. It went on like this for a long time.

Once, when there was nobody in the room a prince took Sarvasenā from the cage and choked her to death. Tapaniyā returned and seeing the dead body of her daughter, waited for a long time. Finally she pecked out the eyes of the prince and flew away into the air. (Harivansiśa, Chapter 20).

BRAHMADATTA II. Another King who ruled over Kampilya. This King was the son of the hermit Culi and his wife Somadā, a Gandharva woman whose mother was Urmilā. When he was ruling Kampilya, Kusānabha was the King of Kanyakubja. One hundred beautiful daughters were born to the King Kusānabha. One day while they were playing in the jungle Vayubhaavavan (wind-god) saw them and grew lustful. But they did not yield to his request. So he got angry and cursed them and they became hump-backed. The King was very sorry. He presented his hundred hunch-backed daughters to King Brahmadatta, who, by his divine power straightened their backs. When they regained their former form they became the wives of Brahmadatta. This story occurs in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sargas 32 & 33.

BRAHMADATTA III. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Bhaviṣya Parva, Chapter 104, about another Brahmadatta. He was the King of Sālva. Though he had two wives he had no children. Finally by the grace of Śiva two children were born to them. They were called Haris and Dībhaka. (For further information see Dībhaka).
BRAHMADATTA IV. A king who ruled over the country of Kāśi. One night he saw two swans flying in the air. They were of golden colour. There were a number of swans around them. They seemed like two lightnings in the midst of white clouds. Brahmadatta wished to see them again. His desire increased to such an extent that he had desire for nothing else. He consulted his ministers and made a lake. Every creature which seemed beautiful to him was brought to that place. Hearing this those two swans also came there. By and by he tamed them and asked them how they got the golden colour. The swans said thus: "Oh King! you might have heard of the famous mountain Mandara, which is the field of games of the Devas (gods). At the time of the churning of the milk sea when this mountain was used as churn-drill, Amṛtaṃ (celestial nectar of immortality) touched this mountain. So the flowers, fruits and roots in the vicinity of this mountain got the power of removing death, wrinkles etc. Candracīḍa also will come to this mountain occasionally to play on the top of it and so it became more glorious than the mount Kailāśa. One day while Mahādeva was playing in those gardens he had to leave on an urgent matter concerning Gods. So he left Pārvati there and went away. Devī began to walk about in those gardens with pangs of separation. Spring season came. The Gaṇas (servants of Śiva) and the maids of Pārvati attended on her. One day Manipuspeśvara, a Gaṇa, hankered after Candralekhā, daughter of Jaya. She had been engaged in fanning Pārvati. Both were young and their figures suited each other. Candralekhā reciprocated his love. Understanding this Piṅgēśvara and Guhēśvara, two gaṇas looked at each other and smiled. Seeing this Devī looked round with anger to see what caused them to smile. They squinted their eyes and showed Manipuspeśvara and Candralekhā to Devī. Because of separation she had been much worried, weary and sad. So all these affairs made her angry. She said: "It is good that you behave like this when I am in this plight! The two are making love. Seeing that, you are laughing. May these two dotards be born on the earth and become husband and wife there. Let you two who laughed before me without humility also be born on the earth, first as poor Brāhmaṇas, and then as Brahmarakṣas (sorcery demons), outcasts, robbers, dogs with tails cut off and finally as various kinds of birds." Thus she cursed the four of gaṇas. Then a gaṇa named Dhiṛjata said to Pārvati: "Devi, this is unfortunate. They have not committed any severe crime." Devī got angry at him and cursed him too: "May you also be born on the earth as a human being." After this Jaya the loved maid of Pārvati requested her for absolution for curse, for all. The Devī said that all of them would get absolution at the place of penance of Brāhmaṇa and other gods and would return here. Of these, Candralekha and her husband and Dhiṛjata would be happy on the earth. The two others would lead a miserable life on the earth."

(Bhāratīvadīgīti, Tārāvṛtta). BRAHMADEVA, A warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas in the battle of Mahābhārata. His duty was to protect the army in the rear. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 196, Stanza 25).

BRAHMADUMBARĀ. A holy place in Kurukṣetra. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 71, it is said that this place is auspicious to Brāhmaṇa.

BRAHMAMAHATYĀ. Killing a Brāhmaṇa is called Brahmatatya. In ancient India killing a Brāhmaṇa was considered to be a great sin. He, who committed this sin had to build a hut in the forest and live there for a period of twelve years, or make an alms-pot called 'Sivasirodhvaja' and wander about begging alms, to purify his soul, or else to attempt to jump into a blazing fire thrice with bowed head, or perform one of the three sacrifices Aśvamedha, Śvarjit or Gosava. If none of these was possible, he had to give all the wealth he had to Brāhmaṇs well-versed in Vedas, as gift. It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 169, that if any of the vows mentioned above was performed he would be absolved from the sin of Brahmatatya.

BRAHMĀJIT. A son of Kālanemi. (Brāhmaṇḍa Purāṇa 35-38).

BRAHMAMEDHYĀ. A river, famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made about this river in Mahābhārata Bṛhadāpara, Chapter 9, Stanza 32.

BRAHMAMUHURTĀ. The period of forty-eight minutes before the sunrise is called Brahmamuhūrta. The deity of this period is Brāhmaṇa. In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 155, it is instructed that one should wake up at this period and engage in prayer and meditation.

BRAHMĀṆA, (BRAHMIN). (1) Origin. Brāhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyās, and Śūdras are the caturvaryas or the four castes. The Purānas say that the four castes originated from different parts of the body of Brāhmaṇa. See Manusmṛti, Chapter 1, Stanza 87.

"Sarvasyaśya tu sargasya
Guptyarthā vai mahādyutīḥ
Mukhabhūrūpañjānāṁ
Prīhakkarmāṇyakalpayat.

(With a view to sustain the world, Brāhmaṇa ordered activities, for the four castes (Brāhmaṇa Kṣatriya, Vaiśya, and Śūdra) who were born from his face, arms, thighs and feet). From this statement it is seen that the Brāhmaṇas were born from the face, Kṣatriyas from the arms, Vaiśyas from the thighs and Śūdras from the feet of Brāhmaṇa.

2) The activities of a Brāhmaṇa. The duties of a Brāhmaṇa are, performing sacrifice, and encouraging others to perform sacrifice, learning Vedas and teaching Vedas, giving gifts and getting remuneration. A Brāhmaṇa has two births in one life. Till the time of investiture with the sacred string is one birth and from that period onwards is the second birth. So a Brāhmaṇa is called 'dvija' or twice-born.

The Brāhmaṇas were allowed to do the works of agriculture, keeping cows, trade and commerce and Kuśīda (money-lending). Living on the interest of money giving out as loan is Kuśīda. But they should not trade on products from cow, jaggery, salt, lac and flesh. The suffix 'Sarmā' should be added to the name of Brāhmaṇa. A Brāhmaṇa can have four wives.

BRAHMĀṆA (M). See Veda.

BRAHMĀṆDA. The word Brāhmaṇda means the anda of Brāhma (anda-egg), the Supreme Being which is the root of the origin of the universe. At a time long ago, which is beyond reckoning, there was nothing but an egg. This egg was split into two and from it a male... child with the radiance of innumerable suns came out. This wonderful child was helpless. After his birth he cried for a while, because of hunger and thirst. He got no help. There was nobody to feed it. So this wonderful child looked up and lay there. This helpless child was called 'Virātapuruṣa' (the next emanation from Brahmā) by those versed in the Purāṇas. The boy was so called because he was the most material of materiality. But he was an atom of atoms and the first figuration of God. From each pore of the skin of the great virāt, who was the base of all the worlds a universe came into being. Thus all the countless universes were born. Each universe has its own trinity of Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva and devas (the bright ones), the protectors of the eight zones. One universe comprises fourteen worlds or realms, from Pañcāla to the Brahma-loka (from the other world to the upper world or the realm of Brahmā). Countless such universes exist. Over and above all these universes there is Vaikunṭha, and above Vaikunṭha there is another world with an area of fifty crore yojanas (leagues), called 'Goloka' (the world of cow). Only the two worlds Vaikunṭha and the Goloka are eternal. Bhūloka (the earth) consists of seven islands and sixty-four peninsulas. There are seven worlds above and seven worlds below. The seven upper worlds are Bhūloka, Bhuvarloka, Svarloka, Jana-loka, Tapalo, Satyaloka and Brahmaloκa. Thus a universe consists of fourteen worlds. This is the idea given by the Purāṇas about Brahmāṇḍa. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandhas 9).

Mention is made, in the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anuṣa 2, Chapter 7, about the construction of Brahmāṇḍa.

This Brahmāṇḍa, like the seed of the Kapittha tree (Vitar—the wood-apple), is covered under, above and all around by anḍaṅkāṭōba (egg-shell). The anḍa (egg) is covered by water ten times the egg in volume. This water-shell is covered by a shell of fire. Around the shell of fire there is the shell of air and the air-shell is covered with ether. Around the shell of ether there is the shell of Egoism of darkness. Over the shell of Egoism there is the shell of glory and the shell of glory is covered by Prakṛti, the Divine Nature. It is immeasurable. Prakṛti contains numberless Brahmāṇḍas. As oil exists in sesame, God pervades the whole universe. This is the connection between Prakṛti and Puruṣa. (The Nature and the Supreme Spirit).

BRAHMĀṆĀDIRUṆĀ. One of the eighteen puruṇas. This puruṇa contains a talk by Brahmā about the glory of Brahmāṇḍa. There are twelve thousand verses in this puruṇa. (Agni Puruṇa, Chapter 272).

BRAHMĀṆIPĀṬṬU. (Pāṭu—song). A performance connected with the temples of Kerala.

BRAHMĀṆJALI. When a disciple stands before his teacher he should have both his arms folded. Folding both arms in this way is called BrahmāṆjali. (Manu-smṛti, Chapter 2).

BRAHMAPRĀLAYA. See Manvantara.

BRAHMAPURĀṆA, (BRAHMAPUṆĀṆA). This is a great book of twenty-five thousand verses taught to the great hermit-sage Marici by Brahmā. It is mentioned in Agni Puruṇa, Chapter 271, that if a copy of this book is taken and offered to a Brahmin on the full moon day of the month of Vaisākha with cow and water, the giver will attain heaven.

BRAHMĀṆUṆĀṆA. The abode of Brahmā. BrahmāṆuṆṇā is on the summit of Mahāmeru, with an area of fourteen thousand yojanas (leagues). Around this city, at the four sides, (East etc.) and at the four corners (South-East etc.) there are eight towns, very big and beautiful, kept by eight protectors such as Indra and others. The river Gaṅgā which springs from the feet of Mahāviśnu wets the whole of Candramandal (Lunar region), falls down on the BrahmāṆuṇṇā, and dividing itself into four rivers called Sītā, Alakanandā, Cakṣus and Bhadrā flows in four directions. The river Sītā flows through the top of the mountains and passing through the mountain in the east called Bhadrāśva, falls in the Eastern Ocean. The river Alakanandā flows to the south and reaches Bhārata. Then it divides into seven rivers which unite in the ocean. The river Cakṣus passes through the mountains in the west and enters the country called Ketumālavarṣa and then flows into the ocean. The river Bhadrā passes through all the mountains in the north and flows through the north country of the Kurūṣa and falls in the North Ocean. The mountain of Mālāvān in the west and the mountain of Gandhāmādanā in the east are as long as the mountain of Nilagiri in the north and the mountain of Niṣadha in the south. Mount Meru shaped like an ear-ring stands in the middle of these four mountains. (Viṣṇu Puruṇa, Anuṣa 2, Chapter 21).

BRAHMĀṆALĀ. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 87, Stanza 23, that the moment one visits this holy Bath in the river Gaṅgās one would attain heaven.

BRAHMĀṆASARAS. A holy place. In Dharmāraṇya. If a man fasts in this holy place for one night, he would reach the world of Brahmā. In this holy place there is a peg driven down by Brahmā himself. One who walks round this peg will attain the fruits of performing a Vājapeya yajña (a drinking sacrifice). There is another holy bath of the name: BrahmāṆaras in Gayā. (M. B. Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 89).

BRAHMĀṆAVARṆĪ. Tenth Manu. (See Manvantara).

BRAHMĀṆIRAS. See Brahmāstra.

BRAHMĀṆSTHĀNA. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 103, that a person who visits this holy place will get the fruits of performing Āśvamedha yāga. (Horse sacrifice).

BRAHMĀṆSTRA. This is known by another name Brahmāśirstra also. This weapon was given to Agastyā by Siva. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 138, Stanza 9, that Agastyā gave this weapon to Agnivesa, who gave it to Drona and Drona gave it to Arjuna and instructed him about the use of it as follows:

"You should never shoot this arrow at man. If it is used against mean people the three worlds would be destroyed. It is said that this weapon has no parallel in the world. Keep this pure, and give ear to what I say. If an enemy, other than human being attacks you, this weapon may be used to kill him in battle."

BRAHMATĪRTHA. A holy place in Kuruksetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 113, that a non-brahmaṇa who bathes in this holy place will attain Brahmāyatva. (the state of being a brahmaṇa), BRAHMATUNGA. A mountain. Arjuna dreamt that Śrī Kṛṣṇa and himself went to the presence of Śiva. Brahmatusāna mentioned that Arjuna saw on the way in his dream-travel. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 80, Stanza 31).

BRAHMAVAIVARTAPURĀNA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. Sāvānī Manu taught this Purāṇa to Nārada. The theme of the Purāṇa is the story of Rathindhara. This Purāṇa contains eighteen thousand verses. It is stated in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 272, that this Purāṇa is good to be given as a gift on the full moonday of the month of Māgha.

BRAHMĀVARTTA. A holy place situated in Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 53, that he who takes a bath in this holy place will go to the world of Brahmā. Manu says, Chapter 2, Stanza 17, refers to this Brahmāvartta. Manu says as follows:

"Sarasvatīrṣadhvartayor devanadyoryadantaram /
Taddevanirmitaññ desaṁ Brahmāvarttaṁ pracaṅgata. //

"The place between the two rivers Sarasvatī and Dṛṣadvatī is called Brahmāvartta, which was made by the devas."

BRAHMAVEDHYA. A river, famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made about this river in Mahābhārata, Bṛhaṁśa Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 30.

BRAHMAYAJNA. A special sacrifice to be performed by a Brāhmaṇin only. The rules and rituals of the sacrifice are given below:—

The Brāhmaṇa should rinse his mouth three times. Then he should wipe his mouth twice and face once. Then he should take water in his hand and sprinkle it on his hands and legs, and then sprinkle it on his head, eyes, nose, ears, chest and forehead. After that uttering the name of the place, date, time, star etc. he should say to himself, "I am beginning to perform Brāhmayajña." For this he should have to place two darbhas (grass—Poa cynosuroides) in his right hand, three in his left hand, one on the seat, one each on his Brahma-string (sacred string worn by brahmins), hair and legs, and then think of the place, time, etc. and say to himself, "I am about to perform Brāhmayajña to please the gods known in the Sūktas (hymns in the Vedas) for the absolution of all my sins." Then recite Gāyatrī (spell) thrice. Then recite the following Vedic mantras or spells, in the order given: Mantras beginning with: "Agniṁile"; "Yadaṅga"; "Agniśvāra"; "Mahāvrataṁ"; "Pañthā etacca"; "Sanhitavādamahavat"; "Mahāvratasya"; "Īṣa tvorje"; "Agniśvārāyā" and śanādevih." Then in conformity with the number of letters used, he should recite the grammatic Śutra known as Vṛddhirādaic. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandaḥ 11).

BRAHMAYONI. A holy place in Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 143 that one who bathes in this holy bath will attain the world of Brahmā.

BRAHMAMHUTAM. A sacrifice. There are five kinds of sacrifice, known as Āhuta, Huta, Prahuṭa, Brahmanahuta and Praśita. Āhuta is sacrifice to Brahmā, Huta is sacrifice to devas or Gods, Prahuṭa is sacrifice to Ghosts, Brahmanahuta is sacrifice to man and Praśita is the sacrifice to the manes. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 3).

BṛBU TAKṢA. A king of the period of the Vedas. He was liberal and interested in architecture and all kinds of construction work. In the R̥g Veda and Śāmkhyāyana Śrauta Sūtra mention is made that this king offered plenty of presents to the hermit Bharadvāja.

BṛDHINĀŚVA. A king. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 98, that Agastya once went to this king and begged him for wealth.

BṛDHĀDANTA I. A king of the country known as Ulūka. Once in a battle, Arjuna defeated this King. Thenceforward he was friendly with the Pāṇḍavas. Bhadrānta offered Arjuna a good deal of costly presents. In the battle of Bhārata, this king fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas and was killed in the battle. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4; Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23 and Karna Parva, Chapter 9).

BṛDHĀDANTA II. Brother of the king Kṣemadhūrti. He fought against the Kauravas and was killed in the battle. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25; Karna Parva Chapter 5).

BṛDHĀDŚVA I. An ancient hermit. He had much respect for Dharmaputra. It is stated in the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 32, that Bṛhadāśva went to the forest Kāmyaka with Dharmaputra. Bṛhadāśva narrated the story 'Nalopsākyāna' to Dharmaputra in order to divert his mind from the thought of the loss of his kingdom. When he had finished the story he taught Dharmaputra, the two important spells, Akṣaḥtyaya and Āvāśiras.

BṛDHĀDŚVA II. A king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. His father was Śrāvasta. The King Kuvalayāśva was the son of Bhṛadaśva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 7).

BṛDHĀDṬMĀ. A king of the Aṅga dynasty. (Agni Parāṇa, Chapter 278).

BṛDHĀDALA I. A king in ancient India. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 237).

BṛDHĀDALA II. Son of Suba, a King of Gandhāra. He was present at the Pāṇcālī Svayamvara (marriage of Pāncālī) with his brothers Śakuni and Vṛṣaka. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 5).

BṛDHĀDALA III. A king of the country known as Kosalā. During his conquest of the East, Bhumesana defeated this king. This powerful King of Kosala had given fourteen thousand horses for the Rājasāya (imperial inauguration) of Yudhīṣṭhira. He fought with Abhimanyu and Ghaṭotkacā in the battle of Bhārata. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 40, Stanza 20, that Abhimanyu killed this Bṛhadālā in the battle.

BṛDHĀDALIKĀ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Sālīa Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 4).

BṛDHĀDHĀNU. A fire. A hermit who had acquired great knowledge in Vedas and Vedāṅgas (scriptures) also has this name. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Stanza 8).

BṛDHĀDHĀŚA. See Bṛhadkīrti.

BṛDHĀDHĀŚĀ. A daughter of the Sun. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Stanza 9, that Bṛhadbhāsā was the wife of the Agni (fire) called Bṛhaduṇā.

BṛDHĀDRAHMĀ. See Bṛhadkīrti.
BRHADDHALA I A great King of Kosala. He gave fourteen thousand best horses for the Rājaśīya (imperial inauguration) sacrifice performed by Yudhiṣṭhira as present. In the battle of Mahābhārata, Bhāddhala sided with the Kauravas and fought against the Pāṇḍavas and was killed in the battle by Abhīmanyu. (M.B. Drona Parva, 46: 24; Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

BRHADDHALA II. The son of Subala, the king of Gândhāra—Bṛhadhala attended the Pāṇḍavī Svaṃ̄vara (marriage of Pāṇḍavī) with his brother Śaṅkunī and Vṛṣaṅka.

BRHADDHALA III. A king of the Yādavas, He was the son of Devabhāga, the brother of Vasudeva. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

BRHADDHALADHVAJA. A hermit who was a leper. It is stated in Brāhma Parva of Bhavisya Purāṇa that this hermit recovered from leprosy by Sun-worship.

BRHADDHVĀJA. A Rāṣṭras (giants). This giant wandered about stealing the wealth and women of others. One day Bhṛddhavāja happened to meet with Keśīṇī, the beautiful wife of king Bhīmakaśa. The lustful giant was about to take her away, when she told him thus:—"I hate my husband very much. So I am ready to come with you, of my own accord." Taking her in his chariot the giant went to Gaṅga-sāgara saṅgama. When she learned that this place was under the rule of her husband, she died of fear. Being unable to bear separation from Keśīṇī, the giant also died. As these two had died at the holy place of Gaṅga-sāgara saṅgama, both attained the world of Viṣṇu. (Skanda Purāṇa, Krīṣyāṅga).

BRHADDHVANI. A river in India. This river is famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made about this river in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 32.

BRHADGARBHA. Son of emperor Sibi. (For further information about him see Astaka).

BRHADGIRI. A person named Yati. He was one of those who were against sacrifice. (For further information see Purhūraṁśa).

BRHADGURU. A king in ancient India. Mention is made about this king in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter I, Stanza 233.

BRHADIKṢU. A king of the family of Bhārata, (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

BRHADĪŚTHA. A king of the Puru dynasty. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 279).

BRHADRATHI I. A king. He went to the forest to lead a life of retirement after having installed his eldest son on the throne. He began to do penance in the forest for the attainment of heaven. One day the hermit Śākyāṇya appeared before him and told him that he might ask any boon. Accordingly the king said, "Tell me, what eternal Truth is and give me Spiritual knowledge", The hermit complied with his request. (Maiträ Upaniśad).

BRHADRATHI II. A king of the Āṅga family. It is stated in Agnipūraṇa, chapter 277 that he was the son of Jaya-dratha and that Viśvājīt was the son of Bhṛadratha. The Lamsuras, a forest tribe of the mountain of Grddh rakūṭa, saved this King from the attempt of extermination of the Kaśtriya by Parāsūrāma. (Mahābhārata, Sāntī Parva, Chapter 49; Drona Parva, Chapters 57 and 62).

BRHADRATHI III. A king of the Puru dynasty. This Bhṛadratha was one of the seven sons of Girikā. Kuśa, Yadu, Pratyaṅga, Bala, Matsyākāla and Viśa were the brothers of Bhṛadratha. A son named Kuṣṭāgra was born to Bhṛadratha. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 275).

BRHADRATHA IV. Son of Uparicara, the king of Cedi. Uparicara made his son Bhṛadratha, king of Magadh. In course of time he became a powerful emperor. This Bhṛadratha was a mighty warrior-king with an army of three aṣṭauḥṣīński (an aṣṭauḥṣīński is a complete army consisting of 21870 horses and 109350 infantry). Though he had married two daughters of the King of Kāśi he was childless. The sorrowful king went with his wives to a hermit named Cauḍakauṣṭika and pleased him by giving him precious stones. The King told the hermit about his sorrow due to lack of children. The hermit gave them a mango fruit and said that the King should enthron the son who would be born by eating the mango, and return to the forest for penance. The hermit gave eight boons for the son who was to be born.

The King and his wives returned to the palace and divided the mango fruit into two and both of his wives ate the fruit and became pregnant. Each of them gave birth to half of a child. The lifeless forms of these half children were thrown out. A giantess called Jarā put them together and instantly the pieces joined together and became a living child. The giantess took that child and made a present of it to the King. That child grew up and was known by the famous name Jarāśandha. From that time onwards Giantess-worship began in Magadh. When Jarāśandha came of age the King anointed him as King and went to the hermitage of Cauḍakauṣṭika with his wives and began to do penance. After coming to the forest Bhṛadratha killed a giant named Rṣabha and with his hide made three big drums and placed them in the city. The sound of one beat on the drum will last for a month. When Bhūma, Arjuna and Śrī Krṣṇa came to Magadh to kill Jarāśandha they broke these drums. (M.B. Ādi Parva, 53; Sabbā Parva, Chapters 17, 19 and 21).

BRHADRATHA V. A king who lived in a portion of an asura named Sākṣma. This King was present at Pāṇḍavī svayambara (marriage of Pāṇḍavī). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 185).

BRHADRATHA VI. An Agni (fire). As this Agni is the son of Vasiṣṭha he has got the name Vasiṣṭha also. A son named Praṇīti was born to this Agni. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 220).

BRHADVATĪ. A river in India, purāṇically famous. Mention is made about this river in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 30.

BRHADVīṢA. A king of the family of Bhārata. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

BRHADUKTCHA. He was the son of the hermit named Pāṇḍajanya. He was transformed to a god, who is remembered at the beginning of the sacrifice known as agnihotra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Stanza 13).

BRHADDYUMNA. See Arvāvasu.

BRHĀJJYOTI. The son born to Aṅgiras of his wife Śubhā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 218, Stanza 2).

BRHAKA. A deva Gandharva. (A class of Gods). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata Adi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 57 that this Gandharva was present at the Birthday celebration of Arjuna.

BRHANMANAS I. See Brhatkirti.
BRHANMANAS II. A hermit. This hermit was one of the seven sons born to Anirūgas of his wife Sumānā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 208).

BRHANMANIRA. See Bhratārīti.

BRHANMEDAS. A king of the Yādavas. He was the son of Vapisuvāman and father of Śrīdeva. (Karma Purāṇa, 1: 24: 6–10).

BRHNAL. The name adopted by Arjuna during the concealment of the Pāṇḍavas in the Kingdom of Viśupa. (For further information see Arjuna).

BRHITE 1. A king. Yuddhiṣṭhīra performed a horse sacrifice. Arjuna was taking the sacrificial horse round, for the conquest of the North when King Bṛhata opposed him. Arjuna defeated him and brought him under subjugation. He presented Arjuna with a large quantity of precious stones. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 177).

In the battle of Mahābhārata Bṛhata fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas, and was killed by Duṣśāsana. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 4).

BRHITE II. A warrior on the side of the Kauravas. He was the brother of Kṣemadhūrti. Bṛhata was killed in a fight with Sāgyākī. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 4).

BRHITE. One of the seven mothers of Subrahmapuya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 118, Stanza 10).

Bṛhaspati. The teacher of the devas (Gods).

1) Birth. The father of Bṛhaspati was Anirūgas, the son of Brahmā. Brahmā grew amorous, at the sight of some celestial maidens who were present at a sacrifice performed by Rudra; and he had seminal fluid. Brahmā put the semen in fire. From that fire the devas such as Marici, Bṛgū, Anirūgas and others were born. The name Anirūgas was given because he was born out of anāgāra (live-coal). Eight sons were born to Anirūgas by his wife Vasudā. They were Utathyā, Bṛhaspati, Vayasya, Śantī, Ghora, Vīrūpa, Saivanta and Sudhāvanā. All of them were sages who had attained one- ness with the supreme Spitd and knowledge, and who had been free from worldly pain. Of these Bṛhaspati, Utathyā and Saivanta became famous through all the worlds. In some purāṇas Vasudā, the mother of Bṛhaspati, is given the name Śraddhā also.

It is stated that Bṛhata had a sister named Anirūgasā. She was a follower of the Brahmā cult. She became the wife of Prabhāsa the last one of the eight Vāsus. Vibudhārī was her son. (Bhāgavata Skandha 4, Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 66).

2) Is Bṛhaspati the son of Anirūgas? In some purāṇas Bṛhaspati is described as the son of Anirūgas. Its authority is given below. Anirūgas, the father of Bṛhaspati was once doing penance in his hermitage. When the fire of penance increased the brightness of the real fire decreased, Anirūgas (fire) stood before Anirūgas and said "Oh Lord! your brightness surpasses mine. From this day onwards you are the real fire. So you shall be the first fire and I will be the fire of Prajāpāti which is the second fire."

Because of this boon of Anirūgas, the devas (gods), recognized Anirūgas also as a fire-god. So in some purāṇas Bṛhaspati is mentioned as the son of Anirūgas (fire-god). (Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

3) Teacher of the Devas. The story of how Bṛhaspati became the teacher of the devas, is given in the Brahmapurāṇa. Chapter 76 as shown below:

"The Suras and the asuras (the gods and the demons) became enemies from time immemorial, regarding the possession of wealth and prosperity in the three worlds. To secure victory in the battles the gods made Bṛhaspati their teacher and likewise the asuras made Sukra their teacher."

The devas and asuras began to fight for prosperity and wealth. At that time the devas selected Bṛhaspati and the asuras selected Sukra, as their teacher.

4) The conjugality of Bṛhaspati. Tārā was the wife of Bṛhaspati. She was very beautiful. Seeing Candra's handsome figure she doted on him. There arose several quarrels over this affair. Finally the devas intervened and Tārā was given back to Bṛhaspati. Tatā was born to Candra by Tārā.

The individual called Tārā in the family of the monkeys, was a son of Bṛhaspati. It is mentioned in Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Bāla Kānḍa, Sarga 17, Stanza 10 as follows, which proves this fact.

"Bṛhaspati begot the mighty monkey Tārā." In the Rīgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 19, Sūkta 126, it is mentioned that Bṛhaspati had a daughter named Romāśā. When her husband teased her Romāśā said to her husband: "You please come and feel your hand on my body. Don't think that my organs are small. Though I am hairy like the goats of Gāndhāra, I have got all the organs fully grown." This is the statement in the Rīgveda. In the Uttara Rāmāyana, it is stated that Bṛhaspati had a Brāhmaṇa son named Kusādhvaja, and that a daughter named Devavatī was born to Kusādhvaja. Devavatī was born from his mouth while Kusādhvaja was engaged in devotional recitation of the Vedas. Sītā was the rebirth of this Devavatī. It is stated in the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 69, that Dropana, the son of Bhāradvāja, was born from a portion of Bṛhaspati. Kaca was another son of Bṛhaspati. For full particulars of the story her Devavatī (daughter of Sukra) hankered after Kaca, see 'Kaca'. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 1, that Bṛhaspati had a wife called Cāndramāsī and that she gave birth to six Agnis. In Kampa Rāmāyana, Yuddhākanda menion is made that Bṛhaspati had a daughter named Sulekhā. Six sons and a daughter were born to Cāndramāsī. The six sons were six Agnis (fires). In sacrifices the burnt offerings and the ghee were the portions meant for the great and mighty fire Śāmyu, the son of Bṛhaspati. It is to satisfy this great fire which blazes with numberless pointed tongues, that in sacrifices such as Śāstrīmāya, Śāvamedha etc animals are slaughtered. The daughter of Dharma was the wife of Śāmyu. The name of the wonderful being (Śāmyu's wife) is Satyā. A son named Dīpti and three daughters were born to Śāmyu. The son of Dīpti is Bhāradvāja who is the recipient of first portion of Ghee oblated in sacrifice. On all full-moon days offerings of sacrifices are meant for Bhārata. Bhārata had a son named Bhrārata and a daughter named Bhrārati. Bhārata the Agni is said to be the son of the Agni who is Praja-pati Bharata. Thus Bharata got the famous name 'the great'. Bharata married Vīrā and a son was born to them called Vīra. This Vīra like Soma is the recipient of sacrificial ghee, according to the belief of the Brāhmaṇas. As this Vīra is the recipient of the ghee offered in sacrifice, as Soma, he is known by names Rathaprābhu, Rathadhvāna and Kumbhāretas. Vīra married Sarayū and became the father of Siddhī—Siddhi the Agnidevata—who is remembered in all fire songs. Fire which has no action on prosperity, fame and vigour has the name Niṣcyavana. Niṣcyavana praises the earth. Satyā is the son of Niṣcyavana. Satyā which blazes by flame determines time. Satyā is known by another name Niskṛti. The Agni Śvāna spreads diseases. The Agnis called Vipulaprabha, Yatītā and Brahmaćāri are invoked in simple domestic sacrifices by Brāhmaṇas. The awful fire Bādavāgni is supported by life. The sixth son of Brhaspati and Tārā is called Śvetakṛt. The oblation offered to this Agni is known as Udadvāra. Śvāhā was the daughter of Čandramasi. Śvāhā had three sons. They are three Agnis called Kāmagnī, Amogha, and Utkhyā. (Brāhaspati, Skandha 4).

5) Growing amorous on the wife of elder brother. A story stating how Brhaspati begot a son by the wife of Utathya is given in Skandha 9 of Brāhaspati. Mamatā, the wife of Utathya, was pregnant. Brhaspati had coition with her when her husband was away. The mother and the child in the womb who opposed the act of Brhaspati were cursed. Mamatā gave birth to two children. Fearing that her husband might cast her out she left the son of Brhaspati in the forest and was about to go, when there was a divine voice from above, "Mūḍhe, Bharadvājamam bhala dvajam Brhaspate." "You senseless woman, bring up this one born of the two. Brhaspati, bring up this one born of the two." Hearing this ethereal voice Brhaspati took the child and gave him the name Bharadvāja and brought him up. After that the child was given to emperor Bharata. The famous archer Droṇa was the son of this Bharadvāja.

6) Personation of Brhaspati. The enmity between the devas and asuras increased day by day. Śukrācārya the teacher of the asuras began to do penance before Śiva in the Himālayas, with a view to get a divine spell or incantation to destroy the devas. The duration of the penance was thousand years. Indra came to know of this secret and sent his daughter Jayantī to get the spell from Śukra by deceit. She stayed with Śukra as his disciple and servant. Thousand years passed by. Śiva appeared before Śukra and gave him the spell, capable of destroying the devas. When he was about to return Jayantī accepted him as her husband. Because of his familiarity with her, of a long standing, he could not refuse her request. Śukra told her that he would become her husband, for a period of ten years and that during that period both of them would be invisible to the world. Thus the couple began an invisible life.

Brhaspati thought of making the best use of this period. He personated himself as Śukrācārya and went to the Asuras, who thinking that their teacher had returned after a long penance gave him a loving and sincere welcome. Brhaspati sat on the seat of Śukrācārya and began to exhort the asuras in such a manner that within the period of ten years he was able to remove factionalism and hatred from them.

At the expiry of ten years' invisible life Śukra returned having sent Jayantī away. The asuras saw two Śukras together and were amazed. They declared that the real Śukra was he who had been teaching them for the last ten years. Being dismayed at the ingratitude of the asuras he cursed them that they would shortly be destroyed and then left the place. At this juncture Brhaspati also assumed his real form and returned to heaven. Thus the asuras became a people without a leader like sheep without a shepherd. At last they approached their teacher Śukra who became their teacher again, when they begged for his pardon. But he said that his curse could not be recalled. But he gave them absolution by saying that they would regain their lost power during the time of Manu Sāvarni. (Devī Brāhasvata, Skandha 4).

7) Cursing Rāvaṇa. Once Rāvaṇa was returning haughtily and proud after having defeated the devas and conquered heaven, when Sulekhā the daughter of Brhaspati, got terrified and ran away to hide herself from him. Rāvaṇa chased her and when she was caught he tried to ravish her. Brhaspati got angry and cursed him. "You, who have grown rank by the dart of Cupid, will meet with death by the dart of Rāma". (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kaṇḍa).

8) Brhaspati and Hanūmān. Anjanē the mother of Hanūmān was a servant of Brhaspati in her previous birth. Her name then was Puṣjīkāsthalī. She once went to fetch water. At that time many Vidyādhara young people, both male and female, came there and engaged in amorous acts. Puṣjīkāsthalī witnessed these love-scenes for a long time and returned home. It is mentioned in Kampa Rāmāyaṇa that Brhaspati cursed her to be born in the next birth as a female monkey.

Anjanē gave birth to Hanūmān. When he grew up Hanūmān desired to learn Vedas and Śastras (scriptures). Hanūmān approached Brhaspati to learn from him. But Brhaspati was not prepared to teach a monkey who jumped about everywhere. The disappointed Hanūmān went to the Sun, who asked him how it could be done by him as he was engaged in travelling without stop. Hanūmān said that he would move in front of the sun always. Thus Hanūmān who had been rejected by Brhaspati became the disciple of the Sun. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

9) Other information.

(1) It is mentioned in Devī Brāhasvata, Skandha 1, that Brhaspati was the teacher of the hermit Śuṅga.

(2) In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51, it is instructed that Brhaspati should be consecrated in temples as wearing a necklace of beads (Elaeo carpus seeds) and a water pot.

(3) Mention is made in the Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 169, Stanza 21 that Bhraspati gave Bharadvāja Agneyāstra (the arrow of fire).

(4) During the period of emperor Pṛthu, when the Earth-goddess was changed into a cow the gods employed Bhraspati to milk the cow to obtain the things they needed. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69).

(5) Once Brhaspati gave Subrahmanya a stick as a present. (M.B. Śaiva Parva, Chapter 46).
(6) Once Brhaspati advised Indra to use sweet words. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 84).
(7) Once Brhaspati got angry with Mahāviṣṇu at the sacrificial hall of Uparicaravāsuv. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 336, Stanza 14).
(8) Brhaspati cursed the Jaladevātās (goddesses of water). (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 242, Stanza 27).
(9) Brhaspati and Candra are said to be Brāhmaṇa Kings. (M.B. Asvamedha Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 8).

BRHATKĀMA. A king of the family of Anāga. (Agni-Purāṇa).

BRHATKATHĀ. See Guṇādaīya.

BRHATKĀYA. A king of the family of Bharata. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

BRHATKETU. A king in ancient India. Mention is made about this king in the Mahābhārata, Adī Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 237.

BRHATKIRTI. A son of Angras. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 218, that seven sons, named Brhatkirti, Brhajjotra, Brhadbrahmā, Brhadmanā, Brhadmantra, Brhadbhāsa and Brhaspati and a daughter named Bhanumati were born to Angras and his wife Subhā.

BRHATKŚATRA I. A king. Scion of the family of Bhagiratha. In the Mahābhārata, Adī Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 21, it is mentioned that this king attended Pāncālī Svayānivara (Marriage of Pāncālī).

BRHATKŚATRA II. A king of the country called Kekeya. On the first day of the battle of Bhārata at Kuruksetra, this King fought with Kṛpa, the teacher. Later he killed Kṣemadhārī in the battle. In Mahābhārata, Drona Parva, Chapter 125, mention is made that he fought with Drona, the teacher and was killed.

BRHATKŚATRA III. A king of the country known as Nisadhā. In the battle of Bhārata, he fought on the side of the Kauravas and was killed in the battle, by Dhṛṣṭadyumna (Drona Parva, Chapter 337, Stanza 65).

BRHATPUTRA. A king of the Puru dynasty. King Suhotra was his father. King Brhatputra had three sons, Ajamīḍha, Śūmiḍha and Puruḍiṇa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

BRHATSĀMA. A teacher born in the family of Angras. The Kṣatriyas of his time had troubled and harassed him a great deal. Mention is made in Atharva Veda that the Kṣatriyas met with destruction as a consequence.

BRHATSĀMA(N). The name of a hmn. (Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 10, Śikta 52).

BRHATSENANA I. A king born of the family of Bharata. (Bhāgavata Skanda 9).

BRHATSENANA II. An asura (opponent of gods) born from a portion of Krodhaśvāsa, a daitya (asura). Lakṣmaṇa, the daughter of Bhatsena was one of the wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. In the battle of Mahābhārata, Bhatsena was on the side of the Kauravas.

BRHATSENANA III. A teacher. It is mentioned in Garuḍa Purāṇa that Nārada had taught Brhatsena, Brahma-vidyā (theosophy).

BRHATSENĀ. A female attendant of Damayanti. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 60, that when Nala was defeated in the game of dice, Damayanti sent Brhatsena to inform the ministers about the defeat of the King.

BRHATTA I. Another name of the Sun. (M.B. Adī Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 42).

BRHATTA II. A king born to Kāleya, an asura. (M.B. Adī Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 55).

BRHATTA (M). A song of Śāma (conciliation—one of the four expedients) originated from the head of hermit Pāñcajanya. From the face of this hermit another song of Śāma called Rathantaraka also originated. These two songs of Śāma are very effective expedients. So they are called Tarasāharas (quickly effective). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Stanza 7).

BRHATI I. Mother of Caksuṣmanu. Two sons, Śiṣṭī, and Bhavya were born to Dhruva by his wife Sambhu. Suchāyā the wife of Śiṣṭī gave birth to five sons, Rūpī, Rūpūṇyā, Vīra, Vṛkāla and Vṛkatetaj. These sons were sinless. Bhāti was the wife of Rūpī. Caksuṣa Manu was born to Rūpī and Bhāti. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amrta 1, Chapter 13).

BRHATI II. One of the seven horses of the Sun. The seven horses of Sun are, Gāyatrī, Bhātri, Uṣnik, Jagatī, Trīṣṭup, Anuṣṭup and Panktī. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amrta 2, Chapter 8).

BRHATVA. A devagandharva (a class of gods). In the Mahābhārata, Adī Parva, Chapter 122, mention is made that this gandharva had participated in the birth celebration of Arjuna.

BRLIHANA (BILIHANA). A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 11th Century A.D. Brliha is the author of Vikramaśekadevacarita, Caurapaciśikā, Karpaśundari and such other works. Of these Karpaśundari is a four-act play. The theme of the play is Kāmadeva the king of the Cāḷukyas marrying Karpaśundari a vidyādhara woman. The King at first sees her in a dream and falls in love with her. She then appears before the King in the guise of a boy. But the intelligent minister recognizes her by her fragrance and introduces her to the King and the King marries her. Brliha had written his dramas on the model of Mālavikāgnimitra, Ratnāvalli and such other dramas.

BUDBUDĀ. A celestial maid. She was the hand-maid of Varga a celestial beauty. (For further information see Varga).

BUDHA I. Son of Candra.

1) Birth. Brhaspati the teacher-priest of the devas had a very beautiful wife named Tārā. One day seeing the handsome figure of Candra, Tārā became amorous. Candra was the Disciple of Brhaspati. It was not right on the part of the wife of the teacher to feel amorous towards a disciple. Brhaspati came to know of the affair and sending for Candra asked him to return his wife. Both Candra and Tārā did not pay any heed to Brhaspati. Both sides were about to engage in a battle. The devas arrayed themselves on both sides. Seeing that this was not an honourable thing some devas tried for a compromise. Finally Candra returned Tārā to Brhaspati. At this time Tārā was pregnant. Both Candra and Brhaspati claimed the paternity of the child in the womb of Tārā, who witnessed that Candra was the father of the child. All accepted the words of Tārā. Buddha was the child Tārā gave birth to.

2) Marriage and birth of a child. Buddha grew up to be a youth. During the period the King Sudyumna one day entered Kumāravāna (a forest) and was changed to a woman. When the King became a woman the name adopted was Iâla, who grew amorous of Buddha. The famous King Purūravas was the son born to them.

(For more information see Iâla, Candra and Purūravas.)

3) Other information

(1) Buddha wears a necklace of Rudrākṣa beads (Elaeocarpus Seeds) and has a bow. (Agni Purâna, Chapter 51).

(2) Candra performed the christening ceremony of Buddha. (Bhāgavata Skandha 9).

(3) Buddha is a luminous member of the assembly of Brahmā. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 29).

BUDDHA II. A hermit. Once he spoke about the importance of Vānaprastha (retirement in the forest). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 244, Stanza 17, that this hermit spent the whole of his life in Vānaprastha (retirement in the forest) and at the end he entered heaven.

BUDDHA III. A scientist on ethics. He has written a book called Dharmaśatra on the different kinds of rites of consecration, initiation etc. from formation in the womb till Upanayana (investiture with the Brahmā string), different kinds of marriages, Pañcamahāyajñīs (the five essential sacrifices) Śraddha (offering to the manes), Pākayajñī (simple domestic sacrifices), Somayāga (drinking the moon-plant juice at the Soma sacrifice) and such other matters of ethics.

BUDDHA IV. A Brāhmaṇa who lived in Gaudādeśa. Buddha who was the incarnation of all vices drank too much and spent a whole night lying unconscious on the veranda of the house of a harlot. His father became anxious about him as he had not returned though the night had advanced much. He searched everywhere and finally came to the place where he was lying unconscious. He reviled the son, who getting angry killed his father then and there.

After that he returned home. His mother advised him to leave off his vices. His wife shed tears before him. Seeing that his mother and wife were impediments on his way, he put an end to their lives.

Once this Brāhmaṇa carried away Sulabhā the beautiful wife of hermit Kālabhuṭi and ravished her. Sulabhā cursed him and made him a leper.

Buddha wandered about and reached the city of King Śrāsena. On that day the King was about to go to Heaven with the entire city by aeroplane. However hard the pilots might try the plane would not move an inch. Then the devas told the King: "Drive away the leper there. The vices of that sinful murderer have made the aeroplane stationary."

Śrāsena who was kind and righteous, nearred the leper and cured him with tatturākṣarimana (a spell of four letters) and got ready to take him also to heaven. (Ganeśa Purāṇa 1 : 76).

BUDDHA. The founder of Buddhism. Some consider him to be an incarnation of Visnura. In days of old in a battle the devas were defeated by the asuras and the gods approached Visnura with their grievance. Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as the son of Sudhodana with the name Gautamabuddha (Siddhārtha). Then he went to the asuras and made them reject the Vedas and the laws thereof. All the Daityas (Asuras) became Buddhists. There is a story in Agnīpurāṇa, Chapter 16, that thus it was the purpose of Buddha to convert every asura to Buddhism and send him to hell.

The story given above is in accordance with the Purāṇas. The following are the facts gained by historic investigations.

Gautama Buddha was born in B.C. 560, in Kapilavastu near the Himalayas. His father was Sudhodana. He was born in the family of the Śākyas. The word ‘Śākya’ is another form of the word Kṣatriya. The real name of Buddha was Siddhārtha. Sudhodana brought up his son in such a way that he should not be subjected to any sort of mental pain or worry. So he kept Buddha aloof from the outer world. Thus he spent his childhood in comfort and pleasure. Once by chance he happened to see a sick man, an old man and a dead body. The sight made him thoughtful. He began to think upon a way to remove sorrow and pain from the world and to bring about peace and comfort.

The change that appeared in the son worried the father. So at the age of sixteen he made Siddhārtha marry Yaśodhara. A son was born to them. But the mind of Siddhārtha was restless, distressed and agitated. One day Siddhārtha discarded everything and went out of the palace alone.

Siddhārtha wandered from place to place learning from various teachers. But he did not find peace. Once on a full-moon day while he was sitting in meditation under a banian tree he got ‘Bodha’, (insight or conviction). From that day onwards he began to be known by the name ‘Buddha’. After that he came to Kāśi, and told his disciples how he got Bodha or conviction. The number of his followers increased day by day. Thus Buddhism came into being. Buddha said that the reason for pain and sorrow in the world was desire and that sorrow could be exterminated only by controlling and overcoming all desire. To attain eternal Bliss one should be true and righteous in thought, deed and word and that ‘Not Killing’ was the foundation of righteousness. Buddhism spread everywhere in Bhārata.

Gautama Buddha died at the age of eighty.

BUDDHAGHOSHA. An ancient Sanskrit poet. It is believed that he lived in the 4th century A.D. The most important work of this poet who was a Buddhist, is ‘Padyacūḍāmaṇi’. The life of Buddha is described in this book in ten Kāḷāṇḍas (sections). A similarity to the poems of Kāḷāṇḍa and Śrīvaghoṣa is seen in this poem. Buddhaghosa is said to have reached Ceylon in 357 A.D. and translated some Buddhist literature.

BUDDH. A wife of Dharmadeva. In Viṣṇu Purāṇa Amśa 1, Chapter 7, it is mentioned that Dharmadeva had married thirteen daughters of Śrādha. They are Śraddhā, Lākṣmi, Dṛḍhi, Tuṣṭi, Medhi, Puṣṭi, Kriyā, Vadhu, Leṣa, Vapuṣṭi, Śraddhā and Kirti.

BUDDHIKĀM. An attendant of Subrahmāṇya. (M.B. Śrīva Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 12).

BUDDHISM. (BUDDHA-MATA). The origin of Buddhism was in the sixth century B.C. This new religion was shaped out of Hinduism that prevailed at that time. Buddhism which had its origin in North India, prevailed everywhere in India up to the eleventh century A.D. During that period there was an overflow of this religion to the other parts of Asia. Now this religion has its full sway over the people of Burma, 90% of the population there, are adherents of Buddhism. 80% of the people of Thailand, 60% of the people in Ceylon and Japan and 17% in China are now Buddhists. In India, Pakistan and the Philippines the Buddhists are only a minority. Even though Indonesia is a Muslim country there is a small class of Buddhists there. Cambodia, Laos and Tibet are considered to be Buddhist countries. In Nepal there are only two religions, Hinduism and Buddhism. In countries outside Asia there are followers of Buddhism. Statistics reveal that there are one hundred and sixty-five thousand Buddhists in North America, one hundred and thirty-five thousand in South America, and ten thousand in Europe. The number of Buddhists in the world today is 150.31 crores.

C.

C. (a) The letter C has two meanings, viz., evil people and pure man.

CAIDYA. Sisupala, king of Cedi. Dhrstaketu, King of Cedi, is also known by this name. It was this Caidya who led the Krauvacayya created by Dhrstadyumna in the great battle. (Krauvacayya = A battle array in the shape of a stork). (Sloka 47, Chapter 50, Bhishma Parva).

CAITRARATHA. A prince born to King Kuru of his queen Vahini (Sloka 50, Chapter 94, Adi Parva).

CAITRARATHA(M). A forest of puranic fame. Once King Yayati enjoyed sexual acts with the apsaras Viśvācī in this forest. (Sloka 43, Chapter 75, Adi Parva). It was here in this forest that Pāṇḍu spent some days once with his wives Mādri and Kunti. (Sloka 48, Chapter 118, Adi Parva).

As a support to the great mountain Mahāmeru were four mountains, Mandara, Merumandara, Supārsva and Kumuda. Above each of these was a garden-wood, Nandana, Caitraratha, Vaibhāraka and Sarvatobhadra. Thus it is to be presumed that Caitraratha was on Merumandara. (Chapter 16, Pañcama Skandha, Bhagavata).

CAITRARATHA PARVA. A sub-division of Adi Parva, (See under Mahābhārata).

CAITYAKA. A mountain. This mountain is situated near Girivraj, the capital city of Magadh. This mountain was very dear to the people of Magadh. The followers of Bhradatta deemed it as a God and worshipped it. (Chapter 21, Sābhā Parva).

CAKATA. (See Brahmadatta II).

CAKRA. I. A son of Vāsuki, the Nāga king. He died at the serpent yajña (Sarpa Satra) of Janamejaya by falling into a red-hot fire. (Adī Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 6).

CAKRA II. One of the three attendants given to Subrahmanya by Viṣṇu, the other two being Saṅkrāma and Atikrama. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 40).

CAKRA III. One of the two attendants presented to Skandhaevā by Tvaṣṭa, the other one being Anucakra. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 40).

CAKRA(M) I. Sudārśana Cakra (disc) of Mahāviṣṇu. The Viṣṇu Purāṇa contains the following story about the origin of the Cakra. Sāryadeva (the Sun God) married Sañjñā, daughter of Viśvakarmā. But, due to the insufferable heat of her husband the marital life of Sañjñā became miserable, and so she requested her father to lessen the heat of Viṣṇu. And, accordingly Viṣvakarmā ground Viṣṇu on a grinding machine and thus diminished his effulgence. But, the grinding could diminish only 1/8 of that effulgence, which glowing red-hot dropped on the earth, and with that Viṣvakarmā made the Sudārśana Cakra, the Trisūla, the Puṣpapakīrṇa and the weapon called Sakti. Out of those four things the Trisūla came to be possessed by Śiva, the Puṣpapakīrṇa by Kubera and Sakti by Brahmā. The Sudārśana Cakra which was glowing like anything was deposited in the sea. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part III, Chapter 2). There is a story in the Mahābhārata as to how the Cakra thrown into the sea came into the possession of Mahāviṣṇu. While Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna were picnicking on the shores of the Yamunā Anugītā went to them and requested them to give Khāṇḍavā forest to him for food. As Taṣākaka, friend of Indra, was living in the forest the latter was causing heavy rains to fall there. Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna realized the fact that Anugītā would be able to consume the forest only after subjugating Indra. But, how to manage it? Then Anugītā said that he would supply the weapon to fight Indra with, and accordingly he mediated on Varuṇa, who presented to him (Anugītā) a chariot and flag with monkey as a symbol, a quiver which would never become empty of arrows, a bow called Gaṇḍiva and the Sudārśana Cakra. Anugītā gave the Cakra to Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the other things to Arjuna. (M.B. Adī Parva, Chapter 297).

CAKRA (M) II. A city in ancient India. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 45).

CAKRADEVA. A warrior born in Viṣṇu vānī. (Viṣṇu dynasty). (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 57).

CAKRADHANUS. A synonym of Kapila mahārṣi. (See Kapila).

CAKRADHARA. A very intelligent brahmin. One-eyed and bent down in body he is a character in Vatsarāja-carita. (See Vidūṣaka).

CAKRADHARMA. Chief of the Vidyāharas. He, with his younger brother is engaged in singing the praise of Kubera. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 27).

CAKRADVĀRA (M). A great mountain. Indra performed a yajña on this mountain. (Śaṇtī Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 185).

CAKRAK. The son, a Brahmacādin, of Viṣṇumitra. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 64).

CAKRAMANDA. A nāga (a serpent). It was this nāga which was deputed by Ananta (nāga king) to lead the soul of Balarāma on his death to Pātalā. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

CAKRANEMI. A woman attendant of Skandadeva. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 5).

CAKRĀTI. A town in ancient India. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 45).

CAKRĀVĀN. A mountain very much extolled in the Purāṇas. When deputing monkeys in quest of Stī, Sugriva instructed them to make a special search in Mount Cakravān. It was on this mountain that Viṣṇu-karma made the Sudārśana Cakra. (Vāṁsik Kāmaṇya, Kiskindhā Kanda, Chapter 42, Verse 16).
trapped and killed. (Abhimanyu, who forced himself inside the Vyūha did not know the method of getting out of it which Arjuna alone knew). Cakravūha is made in the form and shape of Cart-wheels. Vyāsa has described the Cakravūha made by Droṇa as follows: —

The great preceptor made the Cakravūha and posted it in to maximum capacity kings, who were equal to Indra. In every opening of the vyūha were posted princes equal in prowess to the Sun. All the princes were organised compactly. And, all of them wore red uniforms and were adorned with other things also red in colour and held red flags. They also wore golden ornaments and garlands scented with Sandal paste. Ten thousand strong they rushed forward to fight with Abhimanyu. Duryodhana’s son, Lakṣmaṇa, led the onrush. In the centre (of the Cakravūha) stood Duryodhana in the company of heroes like Karṇa, Duṣšasana and Kṛpā. And, at the head of the army stood Droṇa, the captain of the army, who looked like the rising sun. Then there was the King of Sindhu, and near him stood Aśvatthāmā, and there stood in front of them thirty Kauravas, all of them equal to Devas. On the flanks were great heroes like Salya, Bhūrīśravas. And then did the battle rage. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 34).

CAKRIKA. A forest hunter. The following story is told about him in Chapter 16, Kriyāyoga of the Padma Purāṇa.

Devoted much to his parents, Cakrika was a great devotee of Viṣṇu. He used to worship Viṣṇu daily with fruits, (edible) roots etc. But, he did so only after himself tasting them. One day while thus tasting a fruit, somehow or other it got itself lodged in his throat, and all his attempts to dislodge it failed. The fruit had to be, at any rate, offered to Viṣṇu and therefore Cakrika drew his sword and cut his throat with it. Lord Viṣṇu who was so pleased at such great devotion of the man appeared on the scene and brought him back to life. Sometime afterwards Cakrika expired at the Dvārakā temple, and thus attained salvation.

CAKRODHATA. A king in the dynasty of Yayātī. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

CAKSUS I. A synonym of the Sun. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 42).

CAKSUS II. A tributary of river Gaṅgā. Starting from Viṣṇupāda (Svarga) the Gaṅgā falls into Devayāna and thence into the moon and after flooding the whole area it divides itself into four tributaries, viz., Śītā, Caḵṣuṣ, Alakanaṇḍa and Bhadrā and falls into Brahma-loka and flows in four directions. Of the four tributaries the river called Caksus falls on the peak of Mount Mālayavān and then flows through Ketaṃāla and falls into the western sea. The Gaṅgā which flows through India is a branch of the above-mentioned tributary, Alakanaṇḍa. (Devi Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

CAKSUS III. A king born in the lunar dynasty. He was the son of King Anudrūhyu. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

CAKSURVARDHANIKĀ. A river which flows through Sākadvipa, (Śaka island). (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 33).

CAKSUSAMANU. 1) General. The sixth of the fourteen Manus. (See Manvantara).

2) Genealogy. Utṭanāpāda and Priyavrata were the sons of Śvayambhuvamanu, and Dhruvā was Utṭanāpāda’s son. Dhruvā had two sons, Śisti, and Bhavya by his wife Sambhu. Suchāyā, wife of Śisti, had five sons, viz., Ripu, Ripuṇījaya, Vipra, Vṛkala and Vṛkatajās. From Brhati, wife of Ripu, was born Caksuṣa, the mighty and Caksuṣa begot a son called Manu by Puṣkaraṇi, daughter of Vairājaṇpājapati and one of the offsprings of Varuṇa. This Manu was called Caksuṣa Manu. And Caksuṣa Manu had ten sons by his wife Nadvala, daughter of Vairājaṇpājapati, called Kuru, Puru, Satadyumna, Tapasvi, Satyāvan, Sucī, Agni-śoma, Atriṭra, Sudyumna and Abhimanyu. Out of the ten, Puru had the following sons by Agneyi, viz. Aṅga, Sumanas, Khyāti, Kṛatu, Aṅgrās and Sibi. Aṅga married Sūmithā, and Vena was their son. The famous emperor, Pṛthu was Vena’s son.

3) Former life. The following story is told in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa about the former life of Caksuṣa before he was born as Caksuṣa. In that former life he was Ananda, son of Anāmitra. Once a cat carried Ananda away and laid him on the bed of the child of King Vikrānta, and the same cat deposited the king’s child somewhere else. And, Ananda grew up as the real son of the King. But, one day he told the King the truth about him and left for the forest for tapas. Brahmā appeared before him and blessed that he would, in the next birth, be born as the sixth Manu and thus Caksuṣa became the sixth Manu.

4) Chief incidents during his time. During Caksuṣamanvantara were born the famous Nara and Nārāyaṇa as the sons of Dharma. It was also during this period that Brahmā was born as Candara, Viṣṇu as Dattātrey and Śiva as Durvāsas from Anaśyā, the purest of women and the wife of Atri. (Devi Bhāgavata, Caturtha Skandha).

CĀKSUṢĪ. An art, the study of which will enable one to see anything in the three worlds. Caksuṣī was taught by Manu to Soma, by him to Viśvāvasu, by him to Citrārtha, the Gandharva and by him to Arjuna, son of Pāṇḍu. (Ādi Parva).

CĀKYJĀRTTU. A very important art practised in temples mainly in Kerala. It is called so because it is exhibited by Cākyārs (a sect attached to temples). In important temples a place called Kāttambala is set apart for displaying the art. The Kātū now prevalent in Kerala temples is not exactly of its old form. Kulaśekhavarmā perumāl (elected ruler of old Kerala) effected some changes in the old art form, and Bhāskara-ravivarmā perumāl and Tolkāvi made further reforms in it. The art of Kātū was evolved with the object of relating purāṇic stories in such a manner as will help devotional feelings grow in man. The main aim of the Kātū is to narrate purāṇic stories in such a way as to instil Bhakti in the hearers and to create an interest in them in the Purāṇas. The Cākyār (the man who gives the discourse who usually belongs to the Brahmin sect called Cākyārs) tells the story in a very interesting way, reciting appropriate passages from the Purāṇas and illustrating them with apt examples and similes. The narration is from the beginning till end humorous. The Cākyār who delivers the discourse is usually a man with a good sense of humour and a sense of what is odd, strange or eccentric in nature and human character. There are three varieties of Kūṭṭa: Prabandhaṇī Kūṭṭa, Nanbhir Kūṭṭa and Kūṭṭiṣṭam. Of these the first is narrative (Ākhāṇa-para) while in the second and third type, the element of acting is more important (Abhinayapara).

CALĀ. Laṃśmidevi. The following story is told in the Devi-bhaṅgavata as to how this name came to be applied to the devi. Once Revanta the very handsome son of Sūryadeva came to Vaikunṭha riding Uccailśravas, Indra’s horse. Devi, who was at that time with Viṣṇu gazed for a few minutes in wonder at the horse. She did not, therefore, attend to Viṣṇu’s talk. Angered at this Viṣṇu told the devi: “Since your eyes find enjoyment on unnecessary things and move about among such objects, you shall be called from today onwards Ramā and Calā. Also you will be born as a mare on earth. Accordingly Mahālakṣmi was born as a mare on the banks of river Sarasvatī, and regained her old form only after delivering a son by Viṣṇu. That son was Ekavīra, founder of the Hehaya kingdom. (Devi Bhāṅgavata, Skanda 6).

CAMARA. (CAMART). An animal whose tail is its most important and valued organ. In the course of its movements in the forest if the tail gets entangled anywhere it is supposed to lie down there till the tail is freed by itself. About the origin of Camara, the following story is told in the Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa. Krodhavāsa, daughter of Daṅkaprajāpati and wife of Kaśyapa had ten daugh-

CAMARA (M). A rod (handile) with a large tuft of hair, fibre or feathers at the end. A symbol used by kings and brahmins. Cāmara of the king should have a golden handle, and it should be made of the wings of the swan, the pea cock, the Balākā bird etc. But, the wings of different birds shall not be intermixed. Circular in shape, the Cāmara should have on its handle 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, or 8 sandhis (joints, knots). (Agnipurāṇa, Chapter 245).

CĀMASA. A yogi, the younger brother of Bharata, a king born in the dynasty of Priyavrata, son of Manu. This country got its name Bhrātara from king Bharata (country ruled by Bharata). Bharata had nine brothers called Kuṣāvarta, Ilavarta, Brahmāvarta, Āryāvarta, Malaya, Bhadракetu, Sena, Indrapryk and Kικα. Bharata had also nine other brothers renowned as navayogis, born of another mother. Camasa was one of them, the other eight being Kavi, Hari, Ambariṣa, Prabuddha, Pippaḷayan, Avirhotra, Driḍa and Kharabhājana. (Bhāgvavata Pañcama Skanda).

CĀMAŚODBHEDA. A holy place in Saurāṣṭra which forms part of the very reputed sacred place called Vināṣana. It is said that it was here that the river
Sarasvatī which once became invisible, was detected.
A, bath here is as efficacious as performing the Jyotiṣṭoma yajña. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 112).

CĀMATKĀRA. (See PATTU).

CĀMOHARA. A viśvadeva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 191, Verse 35).

CĀMPA. A king born in the Āṇga dynasty. (See CANDRAVAMSĀ).

CĀMPA. (CĀMPĀPURI). A city on the banks of river Gāṅgā, Cāmpa is often referred to in the Purāṇas. It was here that Lomapāda lived in tretāyuga. (M.B.

Vana Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 15). In Dvāparayuga the city was ruled by a Sūta called Atiratha, who got Karna, while he and his wife were brooding over their lack of a child. In after years Karna also ruled the city. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 7).

CĀMPAṆ. A vidyādhara. Once he visited the banks of river Yamunā with his wife Madālāśa when they got from the forest nearby a child. The child in later years became famous as Ekāvīra, founder of the Hehaya dynasty. (See ĒKĀVĪRA).

CĀMPĀKARAṆA. (CĀMPĀKARA). A holy place in Northern India. One day’s halt at the place and a bath there is considered to be as good as giving away one thousand cows as gift. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84).

CĀMPENV. Son of Viśvāmitra who was a brahmavādin
(M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 58).

CĀMPŪ. A literary form of presenting a story in a mixture of prose and verse, and abounding in beautiful descriptions: “Gadāpadyamayāṁ kāyaṁ Cāmpū dṛtyabydhiḥyate”. Over and above prose and verse the Cāmpūs use dāṇḍakas (very long, involved and poetical prose). This literary form had its origin first in Sanskrit and other Indian languages adopted it with some variations. For instance, though prose in Sanskrit Cāmpūs is really prose, that in Malayalam is something akin to metrical prose. There are more than two hundred Cāmpūs in Malayalam. The most famous of the Cāmpū writers in Malayālam are Punam Namboothiri, Mahāmaṅgalam Namboothiri Nilaṅkaṭha.

CĀMU. A division of an army. (See Akṣauṁiṇi).

CĀMUNDĀ. (See Pārvatī).

CĀNAKA. The auspicious of Cānaka (cowdung) is due to Lakṣmī. (See Lakṣmī, Paras 1 and 6).

CĀNĀKYA (KAUTILYA). The famous author of “Arthaśāstra” a treatise on political economy.

Eastern and western scholars have made exhaustive researches on this intellectual giant of ancient India, Cānaka. But, nothing definite has yet been established about his life and work. Indians have accepted as a fact the traditional legend that he was a minister of Candra-gupta, the founder of the Maurya dynasty. It is also firmly believed that it was this mighty intellect of a brahmin who made Candragupta a powerful emperor and steered the ship of his state. The phrase ‘Cānaka’s guḍñānā’ (crooked tactics) has become proverbial.
Some scholars hold the opinion that he came to be called ‘Kautilaya’ because of his Kūṭila (crooked) tactics; but evidence to establish this view-point is yet to be adduced.

It is his famous Arthaśāstra, which has made Cānaka’s name a world famous one. The great German thinker Jolly has described the Arthaśāstra as a unique composition in the Sanskrit language. And, Johann Meyer, the great western scholar has the following to say about the book:—

“Kautilya’s Arthaśāstra is not one single text, it is a collection and collation of all books in ancient India. To study the greatness of the theories and principles contained in it today requires continuous and constant study at least for twenty years and the unremitting efforts of a scholar with unabounded knowldge are required.”
Even his name has not yet been confirmed beyond doubts. Kautiya is also called Viṣṇugupta, Cāṇaka, Drahmila, and Āṅgula. Modern researches place the date of the Arthasastra at about 400 B.C. In Vīśakhadatta’s Mudrārākṣasa (drama) the name Kautiya is used. The Authors of Nitiśāstra maintain that the name of the author of Arthasastra was Viṣṇugupta. It may be gathered from the Mudrārākṣasa that he became famous as Cāṇaka as he was the son of Cāṇaka, and that he possessed deep erudition in Nitiśāstra, Dharmaśāstra and astrology. There is another legend to the effect that this brahmin (Cāṇaka) belonged to Kāncipuram and that he migrated to Pāṭaliputra, the seat of learning and scholarship. As Kāmāndaka, who lived in the fourth century B.C. has eulogised Cāṇaka in his Nitiśāstra it may be surmised that Cāṇaka lived sometime near that. Candragupta and Cāṇaka are referred to in the Viṣṇu and the Vāmana Purāṇas. Kautiya was keen-eyed and scholar par excellence. “Arthasastra” is a great book written by him after thoroughly examining the viewpoints of previous scholars, and then establishing his own views and theories. From the Daṅkumārarcirīta of Daṁḍi (A.D. 700) it may be seen that there are 6000 verses in the Anuśṭup metre (eight letters in one line) in the Arthaśāstra composed by Viṣṇugupta for the use of Candragupta Maurya. The Arthaśāstra has been held in praise by Bāṇabhaṭṭa who lived in the 7th Century, Somadevaśūri, who lived in the 10th century and also by Hemacandra, the author of Kavyānuyāsasana, who lived in the 12th century. The book is a discourse on the principles and practices that are necessary to establish a strong government of an ideal empire. Cāṇaka has mentioned in his book with respect the old scholars like Manu, Sukra, Bṛhaspati, Nārāyaṇa, Kātyāyana and Govinda dikṣita. (For the purānic story about Cāṇaka see Vararuci, Para 6).

CĀṆCALĀṆŚI. A notorious harlot who lived in dvāparu yuga. When one day at midnight she came to the appointed place to meet a paramour the latter had not arrived. While waiting impatiently there she was attacked and killed by a leopard. Emissaries of Viṣṇu as also of Yama arrived to carry away the soul of Cāṇcalāṇśi. Yama’s men argued that she had sinned throughout her life, and therefore claimed the harlot’s soul. But the emissaries of Viṣṇu countered the argument thus: “on her way to conduct her trade Cāṇcalāṇśi got into a temple and munched tāmbūla in the course of which she rubbed some time on the walls of the temple. Taking into consideration this fact of her having spent sometime thus to clean the temple wall her soul deserves to be led to Viṣṇuloka”. In the argument the emissaries of Yama were defeated and the soul of Cāṇcalāṇśi was taken to Vaiṅkuṇṭha by the emissaries of Viṣṇu. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

CĀṆCALĀṆŚI II. A vidyādhara girl. Once while she was concentrating her mind in prayer over Mahālakṣmi, Rāvana, King of the Rākṣasas, committed rape on her, and she cursed him that he should die on account of Mahālakṣmi herself and accordingly at last he was killed by Rāma on account of Śtā, the incarnation of Mahālakṣmi. (Kaṁpa Rāmāyana).

CĀṆDA. (See Čaṇḍamanuḍā). CĀṆḌAṬAŚA. A prominent monkey. In the Rāma-Rāvana war this monkey caused much trouble to Kumārkarna. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 287, Verse 6).

CĀṆḌAṬHĀRGAVA. A mahārṣi born in the dynasty of Čayavana Muni. A very erudite scholar and deeply versed in the Vedas, it was this mahārṣi, who performed Jānejaya’s famous Sarpa sattra. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 4).

CĀṆḌA. A forest hunter who attained salvation by the worship of Sivalīṅga. (Phallus of Śiva).

While once hunting in the woods Cāṇḍaka saw a Śiva temple in ruins, and the Sivalīṅga lying on the ground uncared for. This sight greatly grieved him, and he told Śīhaketu, son of the Śāncāla lying on the ground to come to that way all about the temple and the līṅga. To his query as to whether the sāstra permitted a hunter like himself to worship Sivalīṅga, Śīhaketu answered there were injunctions in the Sāstras for people like him (Cāṇḍakas) to instal Sivalīṅga on rock and then worship it daily, the worshipper wearing ashes from the burning ghat on his body. Accordingly Cāṇḍaka installed the līṅga on a rock and began worshipping it daily along with his wife, Pulindi. But after sometime there was left no ashes in the burning ghat and Cāṇḍaka and Pulindi discussed between them the means to get ashes for the next day. Then Pulindi suggested that she should burn herself to ashes and that Cāṇḍaka should continue worshipping the Sivalīṅga wearing on his body the ashes. Very unwillingly Cāṇḍaka agreed with the sad proposal of his wife, and the next day he worshipped the Sivalīṅga wearing on his body the ashes of Pulindi. And, at the close of the worship he called aloud for Pulindi, and lo ! wonder of wonders ! she stood there before him more healthy than formerly. Moreover a vimāṇa descended from the skies and conducted both Cāṇḍaka and Pulindi to Sivaloka. (Śiva Purāṇa, Siṁbaramāhātyma).

CĀṆḌAṬAŚIKA. A muni, son of Kaṅśivān, the son of Gauṭama. Bhadratha, King of Magadha, was having no issue when, one day, Cāṇḍakaṭiṣka went to the palace and blessed the King as a result of which a son called Jarāsandha was born to him. Cāṇḍakaṭiṣka continued to live at Magadha for long as the preceptor of the kings of that land. (See Jarāsandha).

CĀṆḌALĀ. (See Cāṭurvarṇamya).

CĀṆḌAMAHĀSENĀ.

1) General. A very prominent and reputed king of Ujjayini. Vāsavadātā, wife of Udayana, was his daughter.

2) The name Cāṇḍamahāsenā. His real name was Mahāsenā. After ascending the throne he began doing tapas to get a noble wife and a good sword. When he cut his own flesh and made an offering of the same to the sacred fire after a long period of tapas the Devī became pleased, and offered him a sword of exceptional excellence and said that as long as he had that sword with him no enemy would defeat him. The Devī also assured him that ere long Āṅgāravatī, daughter of the asura called Āṅgāraka and the fairest damsel in the three worlds would become his wife. Since he (Mahāsenā) did the most austere rites and rituals, the Devī said, he would come to be called Cāṇḍamahāsenā. Afterwards the sword given by the Devī and the elephant called nadāgīri proved as successful and effective to him as were Vajrāyudha and his elephant Airāvata to Indra.
3) Marriage. One day, during a hunting expedition a boar escaped unhurt by the king's arrows and after turning turtle his chariot went into a cave. The king in great anger followed the pig into the cave, and going forward some distance he saw a beautiful animal whereupon he seated himself on the side of a tank. There he saw, amidst a number of women an exceptionally beautiful woman moving about. Casting her charming eyes glistering with love the woman approached the King. During their conversation, when the king told her about himself she began crying. To the query as to the reason for her crying she answered as follows:—

"The boar you saw is my father, Aṅgarakāsura. His body is harder than even diamond, and none can inflict any injury on it. The women you see around are princesses captured by my father from various palaces for my help, and my name is Aṅgaravati. My father became a Rāksasa as the result of a curse; he is now asleep in the assumed form of a boar. On awaking he is sure to eat you for food, and it was that thought which brought tears to my eyes." To these words of Aṅgaravati, the king replied as follows:—"If you have any love for me you would go to your father and begin crying when he wakes up, and to his question as to why you are crying you should reply that thoughts about your future in the event of your father's death brought tears in your eyes."

Aṅgaravati agreed to the above proposal of the King. She hid the King in a safe place and went and stood by the side of her father. Everything happened as was anticipated and Aṅgaraka consoled his daughter by saying that none would be able to kill him whose body was as hard and strong as diamond, there being only one opening through which he might be struck on the left wrist which might be concealed by the bow. Caṇḍamahāśena who heard the above talk came out of his hiding place and challenged the asura to war. He raised his left hand to show the sign, "just coming, please wait", and the king then shot his arrow through the opening on his left wrist. The asura fell dead.

4) Birth of Vēsava-daṭṭā: And, now Caṇḍamahāśena married Aṅgaravati and returned to his kingdom with his wife. Two sons, Gopālaka and Pālaka were born to the royal couple, and the King celebrated an Indrotsava for the welfare and prosperity of the children. Pleased at the utsava Indra appeared to the king in sleep and blessed him saying that a daughter would be born to him and that her son would be crowned emperor of the Vidyādharas. Accordingly a daughter was born to the King, and she was called Vēsava-daṭṭā, (given by Vēsava, i.e. Indra). Udayana married Vēsava-daṭṭā, (See Udayana).

Caṇḍamūndas: Two brothers born in the Asura dynasty, the elder brother being called Caṇḍa and the younger Munḍa. These brothers collected, like the other asura leaders Dhūmrākṣa, and Raktābīja, thousands of soldiers and lived in all pomp and glory. During this period two asura brothers called Sūmbha and Nīśumbha had returned from the Himālayas after securing from Brahman a boon that they would meet with their death only at the hands of a woman. Caṇḍa and Munḍa became their friends and attendants, Sūmbha and Nīśumbha set out on a triumphal tour and conquered heaven, earth and pātāla. The Devas took refuge in a forest. After wandering in the forest for a long time, at the instance of Brhaspati they sought asylum with Pārvati. Pārvati stood for sometime in deep concentration, and there emerged from her divine body Kauśiki or Kāli. Pārvati assured the Devas that she would kill Sūmbha and Nīśumbha. And, then Kāli sat alone on a rock in the thick Forest. Caṇḍa and Munḍa, who happened to pass that way were attracted by the great beauty of Pārvati and imparted the news to Sūmbha and Nīśumbha, and they deputed Dhūmrākṣa and 60,000 soldiers to bring Pārvati over to them; but boy one hūnikāra (sound 'hum') she reduced them to ashes. Ultimately she killed Sūmbha and Nīśumbha also. Devī Brāhagvata, Pañcama Skandha).

Caṇḍatundaka(s): A son of Garuda. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 9).

Caṇḍavega: A Gandharva. (See Puraṇajana).

Caṇḍikā: A terrific form of Pārvati, who is worshipped in temples under the name Caṇḍikādevi. The Devi's idol has twenty hands. In the hands on the right side are held Śūla (three-pronged weapons) sword, Vēla (rod), Cakra, pāśa (rope), parighā (shield), āyudha, abhaya, damaru and Śakti, while the hands on the left side hold nāgāpāśa, small parighā, axe, Aṅkuśa (a long-hooked rod), pāśa, mani, flag, gadā, mirror and an iron cylindrical rod. There are also idols of Caṇḍikā with ten hands. At the feet of the Devi lies Māhīṣāsura with his head severed from body. There will also be standing near the idol a puruṣa (man) born from the neck of the Māhīṣa brandishing his weapon, and with the Śūla in his hand in all rage and woe; a puruṣa is bound strongly on his neck with rope. The vehicle of the Devi is a lion. The Devi is mounted on the lion with her left leg on the asura lying below. This Caṇḍikādevi thus stands with weapons in the hand, as annihilator of enemies and with three eyes, and she should be worshipped in pūjāmaṇḍala with nine padmas (tantric divisions) along with her idol. Firstly the Devi should be worshipped in the central padma and Indra and others in the other padmas.

There is also another Caṇḍikādevī (Durgā) with eighteen hands. She holds in her right hand a skull, shield, mirror, broom, bow, flag, damaru and pāśa (cord) and in her left hand rod, iron pounder, Śūla, Vajra, sword, Aṅkuśa (a sticklike weapon with one end bent to hold on to things) Śara (arrow) Cakra and Śālākā. There are nine other Durgās having the same weapons as the above except the Damaru and the broom. But, they have only sixteen hands each. These nine Durgās are called Rudracaṇḍā, Pracaṇḍā, Ugracanḍā, Caṇḍānāyikā, Aṭicaṇḍikā, and Caṇḍogrā. The Durgā standing at the centre will have the colour of gorocana (red sandal paste) and the others will have the following colours: arunavarna (red) Kṛṣṇa varna (black), nīl varṇa (blue), sukla varṇa (white), dhāmā varna (brown) pīta varṇa (yellow) and śveṣa varna (white). The nava Durgās (nine Durgās) are installed for the prosperity of children etc. And all these are different forms of Pārvati.

Also, in various aspects or poses, Pārvati is called by other names. She is called Siddhā when installed in Rainbhā-vana wearing aksamālā (garland of beads), kirīṭa (crown) and agni. The same Siddhā without the fire is called Lalitā. Gaurīdevi with one of the hands on the left side placed on the shoulder and the head, and holding the mirror in the other hand, and holding in one of the hands on the right side fruits etc. and the other hand held up is called Sauhâgâya gaurî. (For further details see pârvati). (Agni Purâna, Chapter 67, Verse 31).

CANDRA I. A prominent asura, also called Candrarvarman. It was this asura, as beautiful as Candra (the moon) who was born as the king of Kâmboja under the name Candrarvarman (M.B. Âdi Parva, Chapter 18 and Visûj Purâna, Part 1, Chapter 9). Also, the evil devastâ called Jyeṣṭhâ, Airâvata, who were named Cintâmaṇi and fair damsels like Târâ and Rumâ were got from the Kṣirâbdhi, (Kampa Râmâyana, Yuddhakândâ). For general information about Candra, see Grahas.

CANDRA IV. (CANDRA DEVA).

1) Birth. The child born to Atri by Anasuyâ. (See Purûravas). In Skandha 4 of the Devîbhâgavata it is stated that it was Brahman who was born as Candra. (See Atri).

2) Candrarvarman married life with the wife of his guru. Târâ, the very beautiful wife of Brhaspati, preceptor of the devas happened to reach Candra’s home during her perambulation one day. Candra and Târâ fell in love with each other at first sight and lived in conjugal happiness. And thus days passed. Brhaspati being informed of the fact on enquiry, deputed his disciples to bring Târâ back, but to no purpose. Brhaspati sent his disciples again and again to Târâ, but all to no purpose. Then Brhaspati himself went to the house of Candra and invited Târâ, this time also to no purpose. Enraged at this the Deva guru spoke to Candra as follows: “The brahmin-killer, gold-thief, drunkard, he who marries another's wife and he who associates himself with the above three types are responsible for the most terrible five sins, and you, therefore, are not fit enough to reside in Devaloka. Unless you return my wife to me I will curse you.” None of the threats of Brhaspati could shake Candra. He told the Devaguru that Târâ who had gone to his house on her own accord would also leave him when she was satiated with him. These words of Candra made Brhaspati all the more angry. He returned home and waited sometime more for Târâ’s return. But, he got disappointed, and getting impatient he started again for Candra’s house. But, this time the gatekeepers did not let him in. Trrribly angry at the cruel rebuff Brhaspati sought help of Indra. Indra sent word to Candra asking him to send Târâ back home or be prepared for war. Even then Candra refused to yield, and Indra started for war against Candra. But, there was somehow some difference among the devas about all this, and the news reached the asuras. At once Sukra, preceptor of the asuras and an old enemy of Brhaspati met Candra and assured him all support in case war broke out between Indra and Candra. He also strongly advised Candra not to return Târâ to Brhaspati. And, ultimately a fierce war began between Indra and Candra. All activities in the world were thrown into confusion and chaos. At this Brhma on his hanîsa (swan) came to the scene and admonished Candra and Sukra. They could not but obey Brahma and so were forced to stop fighting. Moreover, Candra returned Târâ to Brhaspati.

The quarrel and fighting thus ended for the time being, but another problem cropped up. At the time Candra returned Târâ to Brhaspati she was carrying, and Brhaspati was not aware of the fact. And at last Târâ delivered an exceptionally beautiful male child. The naming ceremony of the child was duly performed, Brhaspati himself acting as its father. When the news reached Candra he sent a messenger to Brhaspati claiming the child was his. Brhaspati too claimed its fatherhood. This controversy developed almost to the brink of a second devâsura war. At this stage Brahma went to Brhaspati’s house and questioned Târâ as to who really was her child’s father, and she named Candra. Upon this Brahma asked Brhaspati to release the child to Candra. Brhaspati did so. (Devi Bhâgavata, Prathamamandâ). 3) Wives of Candra. Candra took twentyseven daughters of Daksa as his wives. (Devi Bhâgavata, Saptama Mandâ). These twentyseven wives are the twentyseven stars. Candra circumambulates Mahâmeru along with these, this twentyseven wives (stars). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 163, Verse 33). The names of the twentyseven wives are given hereunder: Aśvinî, Bharaṇî, Kuṟtikā, Rohiṇī, Mrgasîras, Ardâr, Pûnârvasu, Pûṣya, Aśleṣâ, Janakaṇi. Phâlguṇi, Uttarâphâlguṇi, Hastâ, Cîtrâ, Svâtî, Visâkha, Anûrâdha, Jyeṣṭhâ, Mûlâ, Purvâsadhâ, Uttarâsadhâ, Sûrâ, Srâvîṣṭhâ, Pracetas, Pûrâṇospâlapadâ, Uttarâprôṣpâlapadâ, Revâti.

Solar eclipse according to the Purânas. The Devas and the asuras jointly churned Kṣirâbdhi wherefrom emerged Dhanvantari with the Amrâtkumbha (pot of nectar). (See Âmtam).

But an asura mâyâvi (magician) called Sainihyâka absconded to Pâtâla with the Amrâtkumbha which nobody noticed as everybody was busy with dividing other divine objects. Only after the mâyâvi’s disappearance was it noticed that the Amrâta Kumbha was missing. At once Mahâvisû ā assumed the figure of a beautiful woman, got back the Kumbha and gave it to the devas. The devas began drinking the amrâta when, at the instance of some other devas, Sainihyâka, the mâyâvi assuming the form of an old brahmin reached svarga, got a share of the amrâta and began to drink it. Sûrya and Candra (Sun and Moon) who were on guard at the gates divided the secret of the ‘old brahmin’ and informed Mahâvisû ā about it. He cut the throat of the pseudo-brahmin with his Sudarsâna Cakra. But, half of the nectar he had drunk stayed above the throat and the other half fell below it. Therefore, though the head and the trunk were severed they remained alive. These two parts, in course of time, evolved as Râhu and Ketu.

When the throat was cut some blood as well as some amrâta dropped on two places on the ground, and they became the red onion and the white onion respectively. Some vaidika brahmins used to consider the red onion objectionable for consumption as it was evolved from blood, while the white onion was considered usable as it was evolved from amrtam.

Rahu and Ketu still maintain their hatred for Surya and Candra who had betrayed the asura, who, disguised as brahmin tried to drink the amrtam. Eclipse is the phenomenon of Rahu and Ketu swallowing Surya and Candra as and when opportunity presents itself for it. But, since the throat is severed from the body, Surya and Candra thus swallowed get out through the throat. That is the reason why Surya and Candra become visible after the eclipse in over. (Kampa Rāmāyāṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa and Bhāgavata Aṣṭamā Skandha).

5) Candra became Calif. Once emperor Prthu transformed Bhūmidevi into a cow and milked from her all things and provisions. On that occasion it was Brahmā, who acted as Calif. And, following Prthu when the Rśis milked the cow Candra served as Calif. (For details see Prthu).

6) Waxing and waning of Candra, the purānic story regarding it. Of the twentyseven daughters of Dakṣa whom Candra had married he loved Rohiṇī much more than the other twentiesix wives, and so kept her always with him. This annoyed the twentiesix wives, who complained about it to Dakṣa. Dakṣa's advice to Candra to treat all the wives on an equal footing had no effect on him. So, the twentiesix neglected wives again complained to Dakṣa as follows: "We shall stay in the āśrama and serve you. Soma (Candra) does not associate with us, he will not accept your advice."

Though Dakṣa warned Candra a second time, that too had no effect on him. So the twentiesix wives, for the third time, complained to Dakṣa. Dakṣa got angry at this and cursed that Candra should suffer from tuberculosis. Thus Candra was afflicted by consumption. Though Candra performed many a yajña to get cured of the fell disease, they did not produce the desired effect. Candra remaining a tubercular patient, the growth of medicinal plants stopped with the result that all living things contracted consumption. When people began becoming thinner, the devas asked Candra for an explanation, and he told them all the details. They then sought the help of Dakṣa, who gave Candra redemption from the curse by ordaining that if he dived in the Sarasvatī tīrtha in the western sea he would be free from consumption for half of every month. Henceforth Candra made it a practice to dive in the Sarasvatī tīrtha and that is the reason why Candra is exempted from Kṣayaroga for fifteen days. (M.B. Sāya Parva, Chapter 35).

7) Candra—King of stars and of medicines. During the reign of emperor Prthu, he changed Bhūmidevi into a cow. Later the Rśīs also changed bhūmidevi into a cow and milked her. It was Candra who served as calf then. Pleased at this Brahman crowned Candra as king of the stars and medicines. (Harivamsā, Chapter 4, Verse 2).

8) Other information about Candra

(1) Candra is 11,000 sq. yojanas in area, 33,000 yojanas in circumference and a volume of 5,900 cubic yojanas. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12).

(2) Candra presented two attendants called Maṇi and Sumati to Subrahmaṇya (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 32).

(3) Candra once made a discourse on the superior qualities of brahmins to Sambarāsura. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 13, Southern Text).

(4) All welfare and prosperity accrue to him, who on full-moon day at moon-rise tenders offerings to Candra of bread in copper vessels with honey poured into it. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 13, Southern Text).

(5) Candra is one of the aṣṭa-vasus. Candra had four sons, Varcas, Śīśira, Praṇa and Ramaṇa by his wife named Manohara. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 18).

(6) Abhimanyu was Candra's son, Varcas, reborn as the son of Arjuna. (Sec Abhimanyu).

CANDRĀ. An important river in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 29).

CANDRAGUPTA I. Second son of Rāvana. Once when Śrī Rāma was King, Candragupta abducted the daughter of Sugriva and the daughter-in-law of Vibhīṣaṇa, Hanumān released them both as ordered by Śrī Rāma. (Kampa Rāmāyāṇa Utara Kāṇḍa; also see Sahasrakṣa Rāvaṇa).

CANDRAGUPTA II. A minister of Kārtavīryārjuna. Kārtavīryārjuna was once fed sumptuously by Jamadagni at his āśrama with the help of Sūśālī, the deva-surabhi (divine cow). Candragupta, at the instance of Kārtavīryārjuna tried to capture Sūśālī by force, which disappeared immediately in the sky. Kārtavīryārjuna's servants then forcibly took away its calf. Candragupta thrashed to death Jamadagni, who tried to obstruct their action. (See Kārtavīrya, Para 9).

CANDRAHANṬĂ. An asura, who was reborn as King Sunaka. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 677, Verse 37).

CANDRAHARTĂ. A son born to Kaṣyapa prajāpati of Sinhikā, daughter of Dakṣa. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 31).

CANDRAHĀSA. Son of King Sudhārmika of Kerala. The following story about him is told in Jaimini Āsvamedha Parva.

Candrahāsa, born under the star Mūlam had a sixth finger on the left foot indicative of poverty and of all other evils. And, therefore, on his birth enemies killed Sudhārmika and his wife followed him soon to the other world. The child thus left an orphan was taken to Kaundalakapuri by a female inmate of the palace. But unfortunately the woman died within three years of the above incident. The child, just for very existence, took to begging. After sometime some women jointly took up charge of the boy. Once he went to the house of Dhṛṣṭabuddhi, minister of Kaundal where a feast was in progress. The munis present there were impressed by Candrahāsa and prophesied that he would become a King. To Dhṛṣṭabuddhi, the munis said that the child would guard his wealth. Angry and suspicious at the prophecies of the munis Dhṛṣṭabuddhi asked his men to kill the boy. They led him to the forest. On the way Candrahāsa got a Sālagrāma (a small sacred stone which represented some upadevā) which he applied very devotedly to his face. They did not in fact kill the boy, but cut off his sixth finger on the left foot and showed it to their master.

Thus left alive in the forest by the murderers the boy was roaming about when the King af Kalinda on a hunting expedition saw the destitute boy, and taking pity on him took him back with him to the palace. The boy was put under the care of Medhāvī, the King's consort. The king named him Candrahāsa. Since the king took a special interest in the education of the child he became adept in all arts and sciences. At the age of twelve Candrahāsa, with the permission of the king, set out on a triumphal tour, and the king welcomed Candrahāsa on his return after his glorious victory that brought him wealth. At the instance of the Kalinda king, Candrahāsa, sent by his messengers tribute to the Kaundāla king, who, understanding from them that so much of wealth had been brought to the Kalinda king by Candrahāsa started at once for the Kalinda palace. On being told the whole story about Candrahāsa, Dhṛṣṭabuddhi, the minister of the King of Kaundāla made up his mind to do away with him somehow or other for which he despatched a letter to his son, Madana, through Candrahāsa. Candrahāsa on his way to Kaundāla slept on the banks of a river, Campakamalini, the daughter of the King of Kaundāla and Viṣāyā, daughter of Dhṛṣṭabuddhi happened to go to the river bank where Candrahāsa was sleeping. Campakamalini, who became subject to great love for Candrahāsa removed the anklets on her feet and approached him slowly, and when she took up and read a letter she found lying beside him, she felt awe and sorrow to find therein a suggestion to poison him to death. Without wasting much time in thought she changed the word 'viṣamasmai' (give him poison) to 'Viṣāyāsmai' (give him Viṣāyā) and put it in its former place. After some time when Candrahāsa awoke from sleep and reached Kaundāla city and delivered the letter to Madana its content pleased him very much. As for Viṣāyā, she was spending her days in constant prayer that Candrahāsa should marry her. In the circumstances the marriage of Candrahāsa and Viṣāyā was solemnised on the earliest auspicious day. In due course Dhṛṣṭabuddhi returned to Kaundāla with all the wealth he could lay his hands upon after capturing Kalinda. He seethed with grief and rage at the news that Viṣāyā had been married to Candrahāsa. All the explanations offered by Madana did not satisfy him. He persisted in his determination to kill Candrahāsa. The evil-minded Dhṛṣṭabuddhi one day asked Candrahāsa to go and worship at the Devī temple after having made arrangements for his murder there. But, as fate would have it, it was Madana who, instead of Candrahāsa, was killed. Even before the above incident had happened the Kaundāla King had married his daughter Candramalini to Candrahāsa, and after relinquishing the kingdom also in his favour the King took to the forest to lead a hermit's life. The above developments added fuel to the fire of anger in respect of Dhṛṣṭabuddhi, and when he saw in the temple precincts, his son's corpse he became well-nigh mad. Crying out that all this was the result of his having troubled the Vaishāva Candrahāsa he dashed his head against the pillars of the temple and died. Candrahāsa was grieved over the death of Dhṛṣṭabuddhi. He worshipped Devī offering her flesh in the sacrificial fire. Devī appeared and granted him two boons which helped him to bring Dhṛṣṭabuddhi and Madana back to life. And, when the Kalinda king and his wife, fearing the wicked Dhṛṣṭabuddhi were about to end their lives in flaming fire, Dhṛṣṭabuddhi went to them and imparted to them the secrets about the life of Candrahāsa. The Kalinda king and his wife dropped their former decision to end their life, and Candrahāsa took up the reins of government at the behest of the King. Candrahāsa, who won repute as a very powerful and effective ruler, during the Āsvidmedha sacrifice of Yudhiṣṭhira captured the sacrificial horse, and Arjuna, at the instance of Kṛṣṇa had to enter into a pact with Candrahāsa, who promised him help for the success of the sacrifice. Candrahāsa had a son called Makarākṣa by Viṣāyā and another son, Padmākṣa by Campakamalini.

CANDRAHASA (M). Rāvana's sword. Rāvana, in the course of his triumphal tour after receiving the boons from Brahman, subjugated kings, and marching northward reached the valleys of Mount Kailāsa. But, Nandikeśvara stopped him there, and Rāvana, threatening to throw away Śiva, master of Nandikeśvara along with Kailāsa, put his twenty hands under it to pull it out, and the great mountain shook violently. Pārvatī got frightened and running up to Śiva embraced him. Śiva, who divined the reason for all these with his eye of supreme knowledge grounded the mountain firmly on earth, crushing Rāvana's hands under it. Unable to take away his arms from under the mountain, Rāvana remained there for about thousand years singing the praises of the Lord. At last Śiva appeared to Rāvana and presented him with a sword called Candrahāsa. It was this sword which won victories for Rāvana in future wars. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

CANDRAKETU I. A son of Satrugnha, brother of Śrī Rāma. Satrugnha had two sons, Aṅgada and Candrika by his wife Śrutakirti (Uttara Rāmāyana).

CANDRAKETU II. A vīyādhara King. (See Muktaphalaketu).

CANDRAMĀS. A rṣi who imparted spiritual knowledge to Sampāti and advised Jātāyu to give directions about the way to the monkeys in their search for Śtādevi. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana).

CANDRAMASI. Tārā, the wife of Brhaspati. She fell in love with Candra and lived with him for sometime, and came to be called Gāndramasi. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219; see also Tārā).

CANDRAMATI I. Wife of king Hariścandra reputed for his unique honesty and integrity. (See Hariścandra).

CANDRAMATI II. A city. Two sons, Taksaka and Citraketu were born to Lakṣmaṇa of Urmīla. Taksaka was crowned King of Agati, a city built on the eastern coast of the sea after annihilating the hunter tribe there, and Citraketu was crowned king of Candramati, a city built on the western coast of the sea after killing all the Mieccas there. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

CANDRĀNGADA. Grandson of Nala. He married Sīmāntini, daughter of Citravarman, a king of Āryavarta. Sīmāntini, hearing about Candrāngada fell in love with him, and it was with the help of Maitreyi, wife of Yājñavalkya, that she was wedded to him. While once Candrāngada was enjoying a boat-race in Kalindi (river) with his friends a storm upset the boat and most of them were drowned to death. The servants of Taksaka saw Candrāngada sinking to the bottom of the river and carried him to Pāṭāla and he stayed there for sometime in the midst of amorous nāgā damsels. Candrāngada's people, under the impression that he had died, performed his funeral rites, and Sīmāntini took to widow's lot. Enemies captured his kingdom and imprisoned his father, Indrase. When once the nāga King asked Candranāgada to marry nāga girls and settle down in Pāṭala he told the King that he was already married and that his wife Simantini was brooding over him, and he had, therefore, to return to her. Accordingly the nāga king sent him back with presents of a white horse, a Rākṣa and an infant serpent.

Candranāgada, with his presents, came up in Kālindī where Simantini, grief-stricken was spending her days in penance, and they recognised each other. Informed about the return of Candranāgada the enemy kings released his father from captivity and apologised to him. And he pardoned them.

Candranāgada and Simantini took great interest in observing somavāravrata (fasting etc. on Mondays) and pleased at the vratā of the latter Śrī Pārvatī blessed her. Two brahmins called Devamitra and Sāravasata were living there at the time. Three sons called Sumedhā, Sāravasata and Sāmavan were born to Devamitra. The sons also turned out to be great scholars but they were poor. They could not get brides as they were poor. In the hope that they would get some money if they approached Candranāgada and Simantini the brahmins went to them. After hearing their story the king and his queen conducted them in a procession in the precincts of the palace, Sumedhā dressed as husband and Sāmavan as his wife. But, lo! when the procession was over Sāmavan could not be divested of his womanhood, and Simantini named her Sāmavati. Being told that his son had turned woman Sāravasata sought the advice of some munis to remedy the situation. But all the attempts of the munis to change the woman to man failed, and they opined that only Pārvatī, who had been pleased by the Somavāravrata, would be able to find a solution to the problem. From that day onwards the brahmin youths lived as husband and wife. (Śiva Purāṇa, Somavāravatam).

CANDRAPIĐA. A son of Janamejaya. Parikṣit was the son of Abhimanyu (Arjuna’s son). Janamejaya was Parikṣit’s son. Janamejaya married princess Vasupāmā of Kāśī. Two sons called Candrapīḍa and Sūryapīḍa were born to the couple. Candrapīḍa had hundred sons, who distinguished themselves as great heroes in archery. Satyakarnā was the eldest among the sons. Śvetakarnā, son of Satyakarnā, married Yādavī, the daughter of Sūcāru. (Bhavisya Purāṇa).

CANDRAPRABHA. (See Sūryaprabha).

CANDRAPRABHĀ. Mother of the wonderful girl, Somaprabhā. (See Somaprabhā).

CANDRASARMA. I. A great sinner, who killed his preceptor. The Padma Purāṇa relates the story of four sinners named Vidura, Candrasarma, Vedaśarman and Vaiśjula, who shed their sin by bathing in the Gaṅgā. The sins committed by the four were respectively Brahmahatyā (killing of brahmin), Gurusahyā (killing of the preceptor), Agamyāgama (having sexual contact with women like the wife of guru which is debarred) and Govadha (killing of cow) respectively. The leader of the above four sinners was one Vidura of the Pāṇeśa daśa. He was begging in the streets without the tuft of hair, the sacred thread and tilaka (mark of sandal paste etc. on the forehead). He went from house to house begging for alms crying thus: “Here is come the man (himself) who committed Brahmahatyā. Please give alms to the brahmin-killer who is a drunkard also.” During his begging tour he visited all the thītras also, yet brahmahastyā stuck on to him.

While this sinner Vidura, his heart rent with sorrow and remorse, was sitting under a tree, a Māgadhā brahmin called Candrasarma happened to come there. This brahmin had committed the sin of gurushatyā (killing the preceptor). He told Vidura:—“While residing with the guru, blinded by desire, I killed the guru, and am now burning myself in the fire of repentance.” While they were engaged thus in conversation a third person, called Vedaśarman also came there in an absolutely tired condition. He told Vidura and Candrasarma that his relatives and others had cast him out as he once did the sin of agamyāgama, and by the time he had finished telling his story a Vaiśya called Vaiśjula came there. Besides drinking liquor he had committed govdahā (killing of cow) also. Though these four sinners assembled at the same place, they only talked, but did not touch one another, take food together, rest on the same seat or lie on the same bed-sheet.

According to the advice of a Siddha (an evolved soul) the four sinners dived in the holy waters of Gaṅgā and came out redeemed of their sins. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 91).

CANDRASARMĀ. II. A brahmin of Agni gotra from Māyāpura, he was the disciple and son-in-law of Devāśarman. Both of them were killed by a Rākṣas while they were gathering darbha (a particular variety of grass used in religious ceremonies) in the forest. Candrasarmā attained Vaiśvatin as he was a very righteous person. During Kṛśnāvataṁ (incarnation of Viṣṇu as Śrī Kṛṣṇa) he was born as Ācārya. (Padma Purāṇa).

CANDRASEKHARA. A King (son of Pauṣya). The following story about his birth is told in the Padma Purāṇa.

Though married for a long time Pauṣya did not have an issue. He began worshipping Śiva to be blessed with a son. Śiva was pleased at this and gave him a fruit which he divided equally among his three wives. In due course the three wives delivered. But, to get the full and complete form of a child the three children had to be joined together, and so the parts were unified. This boy was Candrasekharā. Thus Candrasekharā acquired the name Tryabhaka.

Candrasekharā married Tārāvati, daughter of Kukutṣa, a King of the solar dynasty. On account of the curse of Kapotamuni two sons, Bhṛgū and Mahākāla were born to Tārāvati in Vaiśā la yoni and Bhairava yoni respectively. Dama, Uparicara and Alaka were sons born to Candrasekharā himself. (Aurasaputras).

CANDRASENA. I. A king of Sinhala deśa (Ceylon). Candrasena had two daughters, Mandodari and Indumati by his wife Gunavatī. Kumbhrā, son of Sudhāvatī, the chief of Mādra desired to marry Mandodari. But, since she preferred unmarried life Kumbhrā’s desire did not fructify. Some time later she refused to marry another suitor also, King Virasena of Kosala. Meanwhile the marriage of her younger sister, Indumati was celebrated, herself having selected Sudeśa, the Mādra prince at the Svaśīvara as husband. Though a handsome person Sudeśa was a philanderer, and one day Indumati saw him in bed with her maid-servant. From that day onwards, cutting asunder all marital relationship with Sudeśa, Indumati went and stayed. with her father. This story told by Mahiśāsura to show that women possess only very little discretion occurs in the Pañcama Skanda of Devībhāgavata.

CANDRASENA II. A king of Ujjayinī and a great devotee of Śiva. As he performed great sacrifices and gave away money and materials in gift to those who prayed for them, an attendant of Śiva called Mañjībhadrā once gave him a gem, which possessed supernatural powers. Attracted by the lustre and glare of the gem many kings wanted to purchase it. But Candrasena refused to sell it. Much incensed at the refusal, the enemy kings set out to fight Candrasena, who then took refuge in the Mahākāla temple in Ujjayinī the idol installed in which was Śivalīṅga. Lord Śiva then appeared to him and granted him salvation. (Śiva Purāṇa, Sanipradoṣamāhāmyam).

CANDRASENA III. The Mahābhārata refers to another Candrasena, son of Samudrasena, King of Bengāl. He was present at the svayarīvara of Pañcālī. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 183, Verse 11). Bhūmasena once defeated Candrasena and his father in fight. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 24). After that Candrasena became a supporter of the Pāṇḍavas. It is stated in Droṇa Parva that in the great war Candrasena fought from a chariot drawn by horses as white as Candra (moon) and got killed by Āśvatthāmā.

CANDRASENA IV. Another Candrasena, a partisan of the Kauravas, is referred to in the Bhārata as having fought against the Pāṇḍavas. His duty was to guard the chariot wheels of Salya; he was killed by Yudhīṣṭhīra. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 52).

CANDRASITĀ. A female attendant of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 11).

CANDRĀṢĪ. A woman, who, though actually in love with her husband enjoyed life with her paramour. Candrāṣī is the heroine of a story narrated in the Kāthāsarītāgāra to prove that the interest married women take in clandestine relationship is only due to fleeting temptations. Candrāṣī was the wife of a vaiśya called Bālavarmar, who lived in the city of Pratiṣṭhāna. One day, looking out through the windows in her house she saw the very handsome vaiśya youth called Śilāhāra and felt great desire for him. She brought him secretly to the house of her companion and satisfied her desire. When their meeting became a routine affair her relations and servants knew about it. And, her husband alone was unaware of it. Once he became ill with severe fever. Even while he was in his death-bed Candrāṣī continued her affair with the paramour. When one day she was with her paramour thus, she was told that her husband was no more. At once she took leave of him, returned home and committed suicide by jumping into the funeral pyre of the husband. (Kāthāsarītāgāra, Śakīṭyaśolambaka, Taranāga 2).

CANDRĀṢĪVA (M). Son of King Kuvalayāśva of the Iksvāku dynasty. He had two brothers called Dṛḍhaśāva and Kapilāśva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 24).

CANDRASVĀMĪ. A brahmin, who got back his life by worshiping Sūrya. He stayed with his wife, Devamati in Kamalapura ruled by King Kamalavarmar. A son called Mahiśāla was born to him, and at the time of the birth of the child a celestial voice declared that Mahiśāla would become King. A few years later a daughter called Candramati also was born to Candrasvāmī.

During this period, rains having failed, very severe famine stalked Kamalapura. Even the king unmindful of justice and righteousness began extracting from the people whatever they possessed. Finding the situation deteriorated so much Candrasvāmī set out for his father-in-law's house with Mahiśāla and Candramati, and on the way they had to cross what was once a wild forest, but which had by then been denuded of green trees or other foliage due to the failure of the rains. The children were severely afflicted by thirst, and so the father, after leaving them at the foot of a tree went in search of water when he was caught by the people of the forest king and taken before him. When he knew that he was about to be given in sacrifice to Devī the brahmin folded his hands and prayed to Sūryadeva, who appeared before him and assured him that not only will death not visit him, but also he would be united with his wife and children.

The children left under the tree began crying, their father having not returned to them, and a Vaiśya called Sārthadhāra who came that way felt pity for the crying children and took them to his house. One day Anantasvāmī, a brahmin and a minister of King Tārānātha of Tārāpura happened to visit Sārthadhāra. Anantasvāmī, who had no children of his own took away with him the children from Sārthadhāra.

One day Sūryadeva appeared to the forest king in his sleep and asked him not to kill the brahmin (Candrasvāmī) held captive by him. The very next morning Candrasvāmī was released from captivity. Roaming about in quest of his children, Candrasvāmī reached the city called Jalapura where he was put up as the guest of a house-holder. One day the host told Candrasvāmī that a vaiśya called Kanakavarmar had, a few days back, told him that he (Kanakavarmar) had got two children, one male and the other female from the forest, and taken them to the Nālikera island. The very next day Candrasvāmī, along with a vaiśya called Viṣṇuvarman arrived at the Nālikera island, and on enquiry they were told that Kanakavarmar, with the children had left for Kaṭāha island. They then went to Kaṭāha island only to be told that Kanakavarmar had gone to Karpūra island. With another Vaiśya Candrasvāmī landed on the Karpūra island to no purpose. After thus going to the Suvarṇa and Simhala islands too Candrasvāmī met Kanakavarmar at Citrakūṭapura. Kanakavarmar showed the children to Candrasvāmī, but they were not his. He burst into tears, and returned from Citrakūṭapura. He passed on his way back many a temple and city and at dusk reached a big forest. He satisfied his hunger by eating some roots and fruits, and got upon a tree and sat on the top of it. It was mid-night, yet sleep did not oblige him. Then he saw a mātṛsaṅgha (a group of women) consisting of Nārāyaṇi and others coming and dance at the foot of the tree. Nārāyaṇi saw Candrasvāmī and after the dance was over and her companions had left the place Nārāyaṇi called him down from the tree and gave him a flower. And, according to the advice of Nārāyaṇi the next day morning Candrasvāmī went to Tārāpura where, accidentally he got into the house of Anantasvāmī, minister of the kingdom, and, for food, repeated vedic hymns. The minister invited him for meals, and there he saw Mahiśāla and Candramati. He placed the flowers presented by Nārāyaṇi on Mahiśāla's nose whereupon the children recognised him, their father. The people celebrated it as a happy day. King Tārāvarman gave his daughter, Vasumatī, in marriage to Mahīpāla along with half his kingdom. They went to Kamalapura and returned with their mother. All of them spent their days very happily at Tārāpur. (Kathsārisāgara, Alāṅkāravatī Lāṁbāka, Taranaga 6).

CANDRĀVALOKA. A King of Citrakūṭanagara. When once the King in the course of a hunting expedition came to the bank of a river tired and done up he saw there the very beautiful lady, Indivaraaprabhā, daughter of Mahārṣi Kanva by Menakā. Having fallen in love with each other they went to the āstama of the mahārṣi where, at his instance, Candrāvaloka took the pledge not to kill animals in future, and Kanva married his daughter to the King. On their way back to the palace the couple went to sleep on the banks of a pool which belonged to a Brahmaraṇkas, who caught hold of them, but released them on condition that they gave him in their stead a brahmin boy aged seven. Thus they returned to Citrakūṭa and told about the incident to minister Sumati. As advised by Sumati an idol in gold equal in size to a brahmin boy aged seven was made and a proclamation was issued that the golden idol would be given to him who, in return, give a brahmin boy seven years old. A brahmin boy was got, and he was given to the Brahmaraṇkas. (Kathsārisāgara Saṅkaṇa-vatī Lāṁbāka, Taranaga 27).

CANDRAVAMŚA. A royal dynasty of the kings who ruled India for a long time. Since the founding father of the dynasty was Candra all the kings in the dynasty came to be called Candravaṃśarāja. (For Candra’s birth see Purūravas). A chronological list of the kings of this dynasty is given infra.

Descended from Candra thus, Budha—Purūravas—Āyu—Nahuṣa. Nahuṣa had two sons, Ayati and Yāyati. Yāyati had three sons: Druhyu, Anudruhyu and Pūru by his wife Sarmiṣṭhā, and two sons, Yadu and Turvasu by his wife Devayāni. The genealogy of each of them is given below.

2) Anudruhyu :—Three sons, Sahhānara, Caṅkus and Parokṣa were born to Anudruhyu. Sahhānara begot Kālanara, and he Sṛṇjaya. Sṛṇjaya had four sons : (a) Janamejaya, (b) Mahāmanas, (c) Uśinara and (d) Titikṣa. Uśinara and Titikṣa proved to be family progenitors. Their genealogy is given below :—

c) Uśinara. Uśinara had five sons: Sibi, Vena, Krmi, Uṣi and Darpa of whom Sibi begot five sons: Bhadra—Suvira—Kekaya—Vṛṣadarpa and Kapotaromā, and from Kekaya was born the Kicakas.

d) Titikṣa. Descended from Titikṣa were : Kaṭad-ratha—Homa—Sutapas and Bali, and Bali had seven sons : Anaghāḥbhu—Anga—Kaliṅga—Suḥva—Punḍra—Vanga and Adrīpa. Of the seven sons Anga turned out to be the family progenitor, and thenceforth the Aṅga royal dynasty starts its course. To Anga were born the following sons : Dadhivāhana—Raviratha—Dharmaratha—Citraratha—Satyaratha—Lomapāda—Cardra—Prthu—Campa—Haryanga and Bhadraratha, and to Bhadraratha were born three sons viz: Bhṛdaratha—Bṛhatkarmā and Bhṛdbābhu. And Bhṛdaratha had the following sons : Brhaṇmanas, Jayadratha—Vijaya—Dhṛtravarta—Satyakarman and Atiratha. Karṇa was Atiratha’s foster son and father of Vṛṣaṇa.

a) Pratiratha. From Pratiratha was born Kanva and from him Medhātiṣṭha.

b) Sindhratha. He had three sons, Duvṣayanta—Pra-vīra and Sāmanta, and Bharata (Vīthata) was born to Duvṣayanta of Sakuntalā. From Bharata were descended the following:—Suhotra—Suhotā—Gala—Garda—Suketu and Brhatksatra, who had four sons: Nara—Mahāvīra—Garga and Hasti. And, Nara begot Sati-krīti and he begot Rantideva and Kuru. A son called Pāpakyasa was born to Mahāvīra. Garga begot Śani. And it was Hasti who founded Hastaṁipura. He became the family progenitor. Hasti had three sons, Purumidha—Ajamidha and Dvimidha. The King called Vīpras was the son of Purumidha.

Ajamidha, the second son of Hasti had three sons, (a) Rkṣa (b) Brhadiṣṭha and (c) Nila. Their descendants are mentioned below.

(A2) Sudhanus. The following were descended from him in order :—Suhotra—Gyaavana—Kṛti—Upari-caravasva—Brhrdhratha and Jarāsandha. Jarāsandha had four sons: Soma—Sahadeva—Turya and Śrutasa. (A3) Jahnua. From Jahnua were descended :—Suratha—Vidūratha—Sārvabhauma—Jayatena—Ravaya—Bhāvuka—Cakrodhata—Devalithi—Rkṣa—Brhima and Pratiṭi. Pratiṭi had three sons: Devāpi, Santanu and Bāhika. Santanu was also called Mahābhīṣak. And, he had two wives, Gaṅgā and Satyavatī. From Gaṅgā was born Bhīṣma; of Satyavatī, before her marriage, was born Vyāsa by Parāśara. Satyavatī had two sons, Citrāṅgada and Vicitravīrya by Santanu. From Vyāsa were born Dhrtaraṣṭra, Pāṇdu, and Vidura, and from Dhrtaraṣṭra the Kauravas. Kunti and Madri, wives of Pāṇdu, together got from the devas five sons, viz: Dhar-maputra, Bhīma, Arjuna, Nakula and Sahadeva. Dharmaputra had two sons, Devaka and Prativindhya. To Bhīma was born of Hidimbi Ghaṭotkaca. Śaṭānika was born of Renumati to Nakula. Arjuna’s descendants were: Abhimanyu—Parikṣit—Candrāpīḍa—Satyakarṇa Śvetakarṇa—Ajaḍaśva—Janamejaya—Śaṭānika— Sahasrānika—Āśvamedha—Āśvinikṣṇa—Gupta—Citraratha—Sūcira—Dhṛtāman—Sūṣena—Sūnta—Sukañṣa—Nala—Uparīpalva—Medhāvi—Mṛtyunjaya—Dusya—Nimi—Brḥdratha—Satānika—Durdama—Vibhirama—Dvāḍapāṇi—Kṣema.

B) Brhadiṣṭha. Descended from Brhadiṣṭha were: Brhrdhratha—Brḥhatkīya—Jayadrastra—Viṣaṇa—Senacita—Ruciraṇa. Ruciraṇa had three sons: Drhaṇhanu—Kāṣya and Vatsa.
CANDRAVAMSA

C. Nila. Descended from Nila were: Śānti—Suśānti—Puruja—Arka—Bharmyāśa and Pāṇcāla. Pāṇcāla had five sons: Mudgala, Yavīnara, Kāmpilya, Bṛhādiṣu and Saṅjāya. Mudgala had two children: Divodāsa and Ahalyā. Gautama married Ahalyā. To Gautama was born Śātananda, to Śātananda Satyavātra and from Satyavātra was born Saradvān. And from Divodāsa, brother of Ahalyā were descended: Mitrayu—Puyā—Sudāsa—Sahadeva—Somaka and Drupada. Drupada became King of Pāṇcāla and to him were born Dṛṣṭaduryumna and Pāṇcāla (Krṣṇa). Dṛṣṭaduryu and Dṛṣṭaketu were the sons of Dṛṣṭaduryumna.

4) Yadu. The Yadu dynasty owes its origin to Yadu who had four sons: Sahasrajīt, Kṛṣṇa, Nala and Rūpu. Sahasrajit, the son of Sahasrajit begot three sons: Mahāhaya, Venuhaya and Hehaya (Ekaśīva). Dharma was Hehaya's son, and Kanji was the son of Dharma. Kanji had four sons: Sadājīt, Mahāmān, Bhadrasana and Durdama. Bhadrasana begot Dhanaka and he Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇaran and Kṛṣṇājas. Kṛṣṇavarjana was Kṛṣṇa's son, and Kṛṣṇavarjana had hundred sons, Jayadhvaja, Sūtrasena, Vṛṣabha, Madhu, Maurjita and others. Vṛṣṇi with whom Vṛṣṇi dynasty begins was Madhu's son. From Jayadhvaja the eldest son of Kṛṣṇavarjana were descended in order: Tālajāṅga—Vitihotra—Ananta—Durjaya.

The Vṛṣṇi dynasty. Vṛṣṇi, son of Madhu and grandson of Kṛṣṇavarjana had four sons: Sumitra, Yudhajīt, Vasu and Sārabhauma. Śini and Nīma were the sons of Yudhajīt. From Śini came in order: Satyaka—Sāyasīk (Yuvudhāna)—Jaya—Kanji—Amitra—Prśi. Prśi had two sons, (1) Citraratha and (2) Śvaphalka. 1) Citraratha. Two sons (1A) Viśuṭraka and (1B) Kukura were born to Citraratha.

(1A) Viśuṭraka. From Viśuṭraka was born Śrūya, and from Śrūya was born Śini. Bhaja was Śini's son and from Bhaja, Hṛdīka was born. Hṛdīka had four sons: Devavāha, Gādādhavā, Kṛtaparvan and Śrūya and one daughter Prthī (Kuntī). And ten sons were born to Śrūya by Māriṣa: Vasu, Devabhāga, Devakrīna, Anaka, Śrījaya, Kākānika, Śyāmaka, Vatsa, Kāvīka and Vasudeva. Vasudeva married Devakī. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was born as the son of Vasudeva and Devakī, and Pradyumna was Śrī Kṛṣṇa's son. Aniruddha was the son of Pradyumna and Vrajā of Aniruddha.

(1B) Kukura. The descendants of Kukura were: Vahni—Viloman—Kapatoramā—Tumburudundubhi—Darīḍra—Vasu—Nābhā—Āhuka. Āhuka had two sons: Ugrasena and Devaka. Kainasa was Ugrasena's son and Devaki his daughter. Devaka had three sons: Devāpa, Upadeva and Sudeva. Devāpa had seven daughters, Śrītadeva, Sāndīveda, Upadeva, Śrīdeva, Devarakṣitā, Sahadeva and Devakī.

2) Śvaphalka. Son of Prśi and brother of Citraratha. Śvaphalka, had twelve sons called Akrūra, Āsaṅga, Sārameya, Mrudra, Mrudvadgiri, Dharmanvṛddha, Sukarman, Kṣatripekṣa, Arimardana, Śrutsugna, Gandhamadana and Pratībhāhu. Of them Akrūra had two sons: Devaka and Upadevaka.

5) Turvasu. From Turvasu were descended in order: Vahni—Bhārga—Bhānu—Tribhānu—Karanāhama—Marutta. (As Marutta had no sons Dusyanta was adopted; this Dusyanta is not the famous Dusyanta, husband of Sakuntalā). Dusyanta—Vārūtha—Gāndīra. Gāndīra had four sons, Gandhāra, Kerala, Cola

All the above royal dynasties belong to Candra vanī. (Agni Purāṇa, Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Bhāgavata and Brahmapurāṇa.)

CANDRAVARMA. A king of Kumara. As handsome as Candra, he was born in the dynasty of the asura called (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 31).

Dṛṣṭaduryumna killed him in the great war. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 62.)

CANDRĀVATI. Daughter of Sunābha, the asura. Pradyumna, son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa of Rukmini, married Prabhāvati, daughter of the asura called Vajanābha. Sunābha was the younger brother of Vajanābha. Sunābha had two daughters called Candrāvati and Gunavati. These girls once saw Pradyumna and Prabhāvati engaged in love-talk and they were attracted by Pradyumna. They requested Prabhāvati to select husbands for them also from among the Yādavas. Prabhāvati, in her childhood had learnt from Durvāsas a mantra, the repetition of which by a woman thinking in mind of any male would help to secure that male as the husband for her. Prabhāvati taught that mantra to Candrāvati and Gunavati. They thought respectively of Gada and Śambha and repeated the mantra with the result that Gada married Candrāvati and Śambha married Gunavati.

CANDRĀVATI. A wife of Hariścandra in his former birth. (See Hariścandra.)

CANDRAVATSAM. A Kṣatriya dynasty which originated from king Candravatsa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 16.)

CANDRAVINĀSA. An asura, who descended on earth as a reputed king under the name Jñānaka. (Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 37.)

CANDRĀVATARA. A penance performed for the attainment of beauty, happiness and popularity among the people. It is practised in the full-moon day in Dhanu (December-January). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 110.)

CANDRĀYĀNA. A penance. (See Vraṭa.)

CANDRODAYA. A brother of the Virāṭa King. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 42.)

CĀṆURA I. A Kṣatriya king, who served Dharmaputra at the council hall built by Maya. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 26.)

CĀṆURA II. An asura, one of the attendants of Kaimasa. Kaimasa had employed as his body-guards many puglist—Pralambaka, Caṇāra, Triṇāvarta, Muṣṭika, Asrītaka, Kesī, Dhenuka, Agha and Vivida and these puglists were sent with Pūtanā to Gokula to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa. On the death of Pūtanā they returned to Mathurā. When Kaimasa invited Śrīma to Mathurā Caṇāra and Muṣṭika were the chief puglist entrusted with the duty of killing Śrīma. Śrīma fought with Caṇāra and Balabhadra with Muṣṭika. Both Caṇāra and Muṣṭika were killed. (Bhāgavata Daśāma Skandha.)

CAPALA. A king in ancient India. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 238.)

CĀṆAYAJNA. A programme of worshipping the bow. Kainasa did this yajña for fourteen days, and Śrīma was invited to witness it. And Kṛṣṇa killed Kaṁśa, (Bhāga-vata, Daśāma Skandha).

CARAKA. Author of Carakasaṁhitā.

CARMAMANDALA. A village in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 47).

CARMAVĀN. Son of King Subala. He was the brother of Śakuni. Irāvan, son of Arjuna killed him in the great war. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90).

CARMASVATI. A river in north India, now known as river Campā.

1) General. King Śaśābindu, who ruled northern India in olden days once performed a yajña. The skins (carmans) of animals killed in the yajña lay there in a heap like a hill. When rain fell there flowed from the ‘skin-hill’ a river and it was called Carmasvati. (Devibhāgavata, Prathama Skandha).

2) Other details. (1) River Carmasvati serves Varuṇa in his assembly. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 21).

(2) Once on the bank of this river Sahadeva defeated the son of Janīthaka in fight. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 7).

(3) He who bathes in this river will get the same result as from the Aguṇiṣṭoma yajña. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 54).

(4) Carmasvati is one of the rivers responsible for the origin of Agni. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 23).

CARI (CARCUCITRA). A son of Dhrṛtarāṣṭra, killed in war by Bhūmasena. (M.B. Droṇā Parva, Chapter 136).

CARUHADRA. (See Carugupta).

CARUCANDRA. (See Carugupta).

CARUDHI. (See Carugupta).

CARUDEŠNA. I. A son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Rukmini. (See Carugupta). He was present at the wedding of Draupadi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185). The chief incident in his life was his killing Vivindhya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 26).

CARUDEŚNA II. (See Candrasena).

CĀRUDHI. A mountain near the Mahāmeru. There are twenty mountains around the Meru, viz., Kāṅga, Kuraga, Kuśumbha, Vīkāṅkata, Trikūta, Śīśirā, Pataṁka, Rucaka, Nila, Niśadha, Śītāśa, Kapila, Śaṅkha, Vādūrya, Cārudi, Haṁsa, Ṛṣabha, Nāga, Kālājara and Nārada. (Devibhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

CARUGUPTA. Son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Rukmiṇī. Pradyumna, Caruḍeṣṇa, Sudeṣṇa, Cārudeha, Sañcara, Cārugiṇa, Bhadracāru, Cārucandra, Atrīcāru and Cāru were the ten sons of Rukmiṇī. She had also a daughter called Cārumati (Bhāgavata Daśāma Skandha). As distinct from the Bhāgavata the Mahābhārata, speaks of three more sons to Rukmiṇī, viz., Cāruyaśas, Cāruveṣa and Cāruśravas. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 59).

CĀRUMATI. (See Cārugiṇa).

CĀRUMATSAVA. A brahnavādi son of Viṣvāmitra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 59).

CĀRUNETRA. A celestial woman, who spent her time in Kubera’s assembly. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 10).

CĀRUṢIṚṢA. A mahārṣi, who belonged to Ālambagotra. A friend of Indra, the mahārṣi once spoke to Dharmaputra about the greatness of Siva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 5).

CĀRUṢRAVAS. (See Cārugiṇa).

CĀRUVAKTRA. An attendant of Subrahmanya. He was much devoted to brahmins. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 71).

CĀRUVESĀ. (See Cārugiṇa).

CĀRUVYĀŚAS. (See Cārugiṇa).

CĀRVĀKĀ. I. A Rākṣasa, who was a close friend of Duryodhana. The following story is told about how he happened to become Duryodhana’s friend. In the Kṛtyayuga this Rākṣasa did tapas to please Brahmā at Badāryāśrama, and Brahmā gave him the boon that he would be safe from all beings. Then he went round the world troubling brahmins, who, at last sought refuge in Brahmā, and he pacified them with the assurance that Cārvāka would become a friend of Duryodhana when he would insult Brahmins and be reduced to ashes in the fire of their anger.

Accordingly Cārvāka became a friend of Duryodhana. When, after the great war, Dharmaputra entered Hastinapurapura with his followers thousands of brahmins gathered around and blessed him. Cārvāka also disguised as a brahmin came there and condemning Dharmaputra as an enemy of his own people cursed him. The brahmins recognised him and cursed him to ashes. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapters 38, 39).

CĀRVĀKĀ. I. Certain Sanskrit texts refer to another Cārvāka as a philosopher in ancient India. He was an atheist. He controverted in a powerful manner the belief in the existence of heaven and hell after death.

CĀRVĀKAGI. Wife of King Bhadraśeṣa and daughter of Kuśāmba. (Brahmaṇḍ Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

CĀŚAVAKTRA. An attendant of Subrahmanya. He had deep love for brahmins. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 45).

CĀTURĀNGA. A king of the Aṅga dynasty. He was the son of Hemapāda and father of Pūrulakṣa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

CĀTURASA. A Rajāśri. He was a prominent member in Yama’s assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11).

CĀTURASYA. A heroic asura. Once he fell in love with Rambhā, and on his request Svaṃprabhā, Rambhā’s attendant, won over her mistress to the asura. The asura, Rambhā and Svaṃprabhā then shifted their residence to a beautiful palace built in south India by Maya for Cāturasya. But, Indra who felt Rambhā’s absence badly came down to earth, killed Cāturasya and took Rambhā back with him. Indra cursed Svaṃprabhā to remain on earth. And, he told her that she should welcome and treat well the monkeys who would be arriving there in their quest of Sītā, and then she would get redemption from the curse. The above facts were revealed by Svaṃprabhā herself while welcoming the monkeys. (Kampā Rāmāyaṇa).

CĀTURDASMĀHATMYA. The purāṇas declare that worshiping Śiva on Caturdāsi day will satisfy all desires. There is a story in one of the purāṇas supporting this claim. (See Kumudavati).

CĀTURDAMSTRĀ. An attendant of Subrahmanya. He always showed great devotion towards Brahmins. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 62).

CĀTURIKĀ. A harlot about whom the following story is told in Kathāsaritāgāra.

Once a poor Brahmin got a piece of gold as Pratigraha (fee or dakṣina for performing a religious rite). While he was perplexed not knowing what to do with the gold, a Viṣṇu advised him to go on tour with the money got by selling the gold. The poor Brahmin did not even know how to go on tour. Then the Viṣṇu advised him to visit a harlot called Caturikā, who lived close by and who, the Viṣṇu said, would teach him how to go on tour.

Brahmin:—What shall I do first after going to the harlot’s house?

Viṣṇu:—Caturikā will become friendly if you would give her the gold. Then you should use sweet and charming words, and that is all.

The Brahmin went immediately to Caturikā’s house and he was received honourably by her. Then giving the gold to her he requested her to instruct him about going on tour. This request of his evoked laughter from people around him. Then the Brahmin who was versed in the Śruti began reciting the Śaṁan with his palm formed in the shape of the ears of the cow. All those who were present there wildly laughed at him, and somehow or other he escaped from the none too pleasant scene, and reported his experience at the harlot’s to the Viṣṇu. He very easily understood that the reason for the Brahmin being ridiculed was that misreading his advice to use ‘śaṁa’ (sweet words) the Brahmin recited the sāma-veda. He took the Brahmin back to Caturikā and asked her to return the ‘grass’ (gold given her by the Brahmin) to the ‘cow’, the Brahmin who was as simple as the cow. Laughingly Caturikā returned the gold to him. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāpiṭha Lārbakam, Ta-raṇga 6).

Caturmāsyā. A penance (Vrata) which continues for four months. During this period, the Vedas are to be studied with pure heart. The Pāṇḍavaś as this penance at Gavā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 95).

Caturmajhāliga. A Brahamā liṅga installed on the northern bank of Sarasvatī by Brahmarāj. Brahmarāj, to start with, created animate and inanimate objects, and was thinking about further creation when a beautiful girl, born of herself appeared before him. Brahmarāj became enamoured of that girl and showed an unbecoming passion. As a punishment for this sin one of his heads broke. Thus broken-headed Brahmarāj, went to the Sthāṇuṭīrtha, which washes off all sins, on the northern bank of Sarasvatī and installed his own liṅga, known as the Caturmajhāliga. This installation of liṅga redeemed him from sins. (Vāmanā Purāṇa, Chapter 49).

CaturthiVrata. A fast undertaken so that one may be happy for one year, may achieve all desires and attain Śivaloka. While observing this fast one should worship Gaṇapati on the fourth day after New Moon (Caturthi) in the month of Makara (February-March). Next day the fast should be broken by eating cooked rice and oil seeds. The Mūlamantra of Gaṇapati is ‘gain śvāhā; hṛdayāśaṁdaṅgas beginning with ‘gām’. ‘Agaṇchāṭikāya’ is the āvāhana mantra and ‘Gacchāṭikāya’ the visarjangana mantra. Gaṇapati should be worshipped with mantras ending with ‘tuṅkaṇya’ and beginning with ‘gakāra’ as also with offering of sandal paste, rice balls etc. ‘Oṁ Mahātākāya vidmahe vakra-tuṅkāya śīmāhi tanno daṇḍi pracadāyāt’ is the Gaṇeṣa gaṇayati mantra. He or she who performs the Caturthi vrata will attain Śivaloka. If Gaṇapati is worshipped on a Tuesday which is also Caturthi the devotee will get all his desires satisfied. Caturthi occurring in Mina (March-April) is called Avighnacaturthi, and that day fasting should be in the night. On Caturthi in April-May Gaṇapati should be worshipped with ‘damanaka flowers, and then the worshipper will become very happy. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 179). Also see Vināyaka Caturthi.

Caturupāya. The four means used by Kings in olden times to achieve their objects are called Caturupāya. Śama, dāna, bheda and daṇḍa are the Caturupāyas (four tactics). There are three other upāyas also, almost equally important as the first four, and the seven upāyas are collectively called Saptopāyas. There are also yet other upāyas, but they are not important enough to merit special mention.

1) Śama. It is the best means to attract and convert others to one’s side. It consists in winning people with sweet words and looks. People who are friendly by temperament and straightforward may be brought round by śaṁa. Śaṁa is employed in dealing with sons, brothers and other relatives.

2) Dāna. There are five kinds or varieties of dāna (gift) viz. pritidāna, dravyadāna, svayamgrāha, deya and pratimoksa. If a person gets help from another and acknowledges help by reward that reward is called pritidāna. The miser and the poor should be brought round by pritidāna. Military captains, heroes and citizens should be won over by this dāna. Those who fall at feet should be honoured by dāna.

3) Bheda. Bhedopāya is of three kinds: to destroy or end the friendship subsisting between people, to create dissension and to make the parties quarrel with each other. He who is falsely praised, he who does not desire wealth or welfare, he who has been invited to come and then insulted, traitor to king, he who has been exorbitantly taxed, the angry one, the honourable one, the insulted, the unreasonably forsaken one, he who harbours hatred in his mind, the pacified one, one whose wealth and wife have been taken away or stolen, he who has not been respected though deserving of respect—if such people are in one’s opposite camp, suspicion should be raked up among them and thus division created in their ranks. If subordinate chieffains, and forest tribes commit offences they should be brought round by the use of śaṁa and bheda upāyas.

4) Daṇḍa. Daṇḍopāya is of three kinds, viz., killing, denuding of wealth, and inflicting pain on the body or torture. Daṇḍa has two other forms, prakāṣa (open) and aprakāṣa (secret). Those who have become objects of hatred to all people should be subjected to prakāṣa-daṇḍa. People, whose killing the world will detest, should not be killed openly, but only secretly. Enemies should be killed with weapons etc. Brahmins should not be killed. Friends and allies should not be subjected to daṇḍa; friends, who are made objects of daṇḍa will wither away like worm-eaten trees. The King, who possesses the three powers (of wealth, army and people’s support) and is very conscious of the time and environmental factors should annihilate enemies by the instrument of daṇḍa. Evil people should be defeated by daṇḍa itself.

The upāya māyā consists in practising deception by magic or other yogic powers. The powers can be acquired by the worship of the idols of certain Devatās. People who employ go about at night in various disguises. They disguise themselves as beautiful women or even as animals. They also deceive people by creating illusions of clouds, fire or lightning. For instance, Bhima killed Kicaka by going to him in the guise of a woman.
Not to dissuade people who indulge in unjustifiable grief, war etc. is the principal aim of the upāyā called upēkṣā. Hīṃdīmī gave up his brother Hīṃdīmī by practising Upekṣā. Next is the Indrajālopaṇā (magic).

For example, to create illusions of clouds, darkness, rain, fire, and other magic in order to instil fear among troops of the enemy etc. To scare the enemy is the aim of Indrajālopaṇā. (For details of Caturupāṇās see Kaṇīka).

(Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 241).

CĀTURVARDHIYAM. (The four Castes, Classes).

1) General. The purāṇas tell that Brahmā created the four castes like Brahmins, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas and Sūdras and assigned to them duties and rules of procedure.

2) Origin. Brahmā got ready for the work of Creation, concentrating his mind on the universal soul, the embodiment of Truth. And, the first to be born from his face were people with sublime qualities, and them he called Brahmins. Then emerged from his chest people in whom the heroic or militant qualities preponderated. (Rājasa). Then the Creator named Kṣatriyas. Then from his thighs were born people in whom rajas and tamas preponderated, and they were called Vaiśyas. And, lastly Brahmā brought forth from his feet another sect of people, and as tamas (darkness, cultural darkness) preponderated in them they were named Sūdras. The system of four castes is called Cāturvarṇym. (Viśṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 6).

3) Code of conduct. Ahimsā (non-violence), Satyavāda (speaking truth), Bhūtadāya (love for all living beings), Tirthasevā (go to holy places), Dāna (gifts), Brahmacarya (celibacy), Vīmatsaratva (absence of malice), Service of Devas, Brahmins and Gurus (elders), to attend to all dharmas (duties), Pitṛpūjā (worship of elders) eternal loyalty to King, to accomplish objects in conformity with the injunction of the Sāstras, not to commit cruel deeds, Titikṣā (forbearance, to put up with equanimity the pair of opposites such as pleasure and pain, heat and cold), belief in God—these codes of conduct are common to all Castes and in all the four stations in life. Now, the special codes for each of the four castes.

1) Brahmins. To perform and get performed Yajñas, to study and to teach the Vedas, to give gifts and to receive gifts—these form the dharma (duties) of the Brahmin. Brahmins take their second birth (dvija) on the upanayana (wearing of the sacred thread). The caste of the mother is the caste of the child. But children born to Brahmins of their non-Brahmin wives are not Brahmins. Children born of a Brahmin woman to a Sūdra are called Caṇḍālas. Sons born of Brahmin women to Kṣatriyas are called Sūtas, and sons born of a Brahmin woman to a Vaiśya are called Vaidehikas. The Brahmin shall not adopt the profession of the other castes. The twice-born are, however, allowed in certain circumstances, the profession of agriculture, protection of cows, commerce and kusūḍā (to lend money on interest). But, he shall not trade in gorasa (milk and other cow products) lavana (salt) and flesh. If he be an agriculturist, the Brahmin may till the earth, cut medicinal plants and destroy pests. But, he must purify the soul by performing yajñas and worshipping Devas. The soil should be ploughed with eight oxen attached to the plough. He may sustain himself either with ṛta (food got by begging) or āmrta (food got not by begging). The suffix “Sarmā” should be added to the names of Brahmin children. Upanayana (wearing of the sacred thread) should be done when the child is eight years old. The māṇḍukī (girdle around the waist) to be worn after upanayana should be made either of muṇja grass or of the bark of trees. Brahmin brahmācārins should wear hides, and when they beg for alms the sentence should commence with the word ‘Bhavati’, e.g. “Bhavati, bhikṣaṁ dehi”. The Brahmin can marry in all the castes, but he shall perform ritual only along with the wife of his own caste.

ii) Kṣatriya. To give gifts according to rules, study Vedas and perform yajñas form the duty of the Kṣatriya. To look after and take care of good people and to punish evil-doers are his special duties. Names of Kṣatriya children should take the suffix “Varmā”. After upanayana the child should wear tiger skin. He should carry a dāṇḍa (rod) of the Arayāl (peepal) tree. When the Kṣatriya brahmācārin begs for alms the word ‘bhavati’ should be used in the middle of the sentence, e.g. “Bhikṣāṁ bhavati dehi”. The Kṣatriya can marry in the other castes, except the Brahmin. At the time of wedding the Kṣatriya woman should hold an arrow in her hand.

iii) Vaiśya. Agriculture, protection of cows and trade are the special duties of the Vaiśya. Children born of Brahmin women to Vaiśyas are called Vaidehikas. Names of Vaiśya children should have the suffix ‘gupta’ after them. After upanayana the Vaiśya brahmācārin should wear sheep’s skin. He should carry a dāṇḍa made of a branch of the Kūvala tree. The Vaiśya may have a wife of his own caste and one of the Sūdra caste. At the time of wedding the Vaiśya woman should hold a cane in her hand.

iv) Śūdra. Service to the Brahmin and architecture form the duties of the Śūdra. Children born to Kṣatriya women by Śūdras are called Pulkasans. Children born to Brahmin women by Śūdras are called Caṇḍālas, and sons born to Śūdras by Vaiśya women are called Ayogavas.

The Caṇḍāla’s profession is to hang criminals sentenced to death, and to live by women. The Pulkasa must live by hunting. Ayogava is to act on the stage and live by architecture. The Caṇḍāla should live outside the village. The Caṇḍāla has a right to take the clothes on corpses. He shall not have any physical contacts with the others. He will attain salvation if he died in the course of protecting others. The suffix ‘dāsa’ should be added to his name. He shall marry only from his own caste. (Agni Purāṇa, 4 Chapters from 151).

CĀTURVEDA. One of the Śapta Pitṛs (seven manes). Vairājas, agniśvattas, gārhapayatas, somapās, Ekaśśringas, Cāturvedas and Kālas are the seven manes. (M. B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 47).

CĀTURUVAGA. (See Manvantara).

CĀTUSKARNI. One of the female attendants of Skanda-deva. (M. B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 25).

CĀTUSPĀTHARATĀ. A female attendant of Skanda. (M. B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 27).

CĀTVARAVĀSINĪ. A woman attendant of Skanda. (M. B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 12).

CĀVEṬTIUPĀṬA. (CĀVERU). (Pāṭa = army).

A particular division of the army which in olden days used to come forward to lay down their lives in the service of the country. When defeat in war was almost certain for their king an army division under royal leadership was formed of heroes, who took their last leave of their homes and people. The soldiers left their homes with their head and eyebrows shaved, and people gave them a hearty send-off. Either victory or death in battlefield was their slogan. This system originated in Kerala. Imitating Kerala, Turkey and Egypt formed their own division of Çaveçüpaça in the 15th century. The Çaveçüpaça of Turkey called the Janissary was formed out of poor Christians captured in war, and that of Egypt called Mamaluk was formed out of slaves. But, the Çaveçüpaça of ancient Kerala was self-organised out of burning love for their king and country. The families of those warriors of the paṭa who died in fight were allotted royal favours. Even before, in the 14th century A.D. there existed in Kerala this system of Çaveçüpaça. From A.D. 1090 to 1111 A.D. many fierce wars were fought between Kerala and the Coța country, and it was perhaps during this period that this system of fighting came into vogue. Certain inscriptions of the period go to prove that Rāmavarmakulaevahara Cakravarti who ruled Kerala during the above period drove out the Colas from Quilon and captured places up to Kōṭṭar.

Foreign writers have also referred to the Çaveçüpaça. “Amouces” and “Amochi” used in the ‘Rise of Portuguese power in India” indicate the Çaveçüpaça. “In the war between Cochin and Calicut in 1504 three princes of Cochin were killed, one of them being the nephew of the ruling monarch. On his death 200 Çaveçṭu warriors who formed the body-guard of the nephew rushed to the field after shaving their heads and eyebrows and killed all the enemies they saw.”

2) Other details regarding King Cedi. 1) Once Uparicaravasu conquered his land. (Sloka 2, Chapter 63, Ādi Parva).

2) Kareṇumati, wife of Nakula, was a princess of Cedi rājya. (Sloka 79, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva). 3) Once Sītāpāla reigned over this country. After his death his son Dhṛṣṭaketu was crowned king. (Sloka 36, Chapter 45, Sahā Parva).

4) During the period of Nala, Cedirāja was ruled by king Subāhu. Damayantī lived in his palace very comfortably. (Sloka 44, Chapter 65, Vana Parva).

5) Dhṛṣṭaketu, a king of Cedi, came to the help of the Pāṇḍavas with an akṣauhinī (an army of 21870 chariots, equal number of elephants, 65610 horses and 10990 infantry men.). (Sloka 7, Chapter 19, Udyoga Parva).

6) The Kṣatriya warriors of this state helped Śri Kṛṣṇa in many ways. (Sloka 11, Chapter 28, Udyoga Parva).

7) Cedi was counted as one of the prominent kingdoms of ancient Bhārata. (Sloka 40, Chapter 9, Bhīmā Parva).

2) Important events. (1) Cekitāna was present at the svayainvara of Draupadi. (Chapter 171, Sloka 18, Udyoga Parva).

2) When the Pāṇḍavas entered the hall constructed by Maya for the first time Cekitāna was with them. (Sloka 27, Chapter 4, Sahā Parva).

3) At the time of the Rājasūya he approached Dharma- putra and presented him with an arrow-holder. (Sloka 9, Chapter 53, Sahā Parva).

4) On the first day of the great battle this great archer wrestled with Suṣarmā. (Sloka 60, Chapter 45, Bhīmā Parva).

5) At the Kurukṣetra in the combat with Kṛpācārya both of them fainted. (Sloka 31, Chapter 84, Bhīmā Parva).

6) He wrestled with Citrasena. (Sloka 8, Chapter 110, Bhīmā Parva).

7) Cekitāna fought with Anuvinda in the Kurukṣetra battle. (Sloka 48, Chapter 14, Drona Parva).

8) Dronācārya defeated Cekitāna in the great battle. (Sloka 68, Chapter 125, Drona Parva).

9) Duryodhana killed Cekitāna in the great battle. (Sloka 31, Chapter 12, Salya Parva).

10) When Vyāsa by his yogic powers invited the spirits of all the dead warriors on the banks of the Gaṅgā the spirit of Cekitāna was also there. (Sloka 12, Chapter 32, Śrimāvakāśika Parva).

CEMB (U). (COPPER). The sperm of Lord Śiva which was dropped into the river Gaṅgā developed into form and gave birth to Subrahmanya. Along with Subrahmanya came out from Gaṅgā gold and silver and from its heat steel and copper. From the dirt came out tin. (Sarga 37, Vālmikī Rāmāyaṇa).

CENKAṆAṆARĀJA. See Jambukesvara.

CENNĀSU NAMBÜTÜRĪ. Cennās Nārāyaṇa Nambutīripād was born and bred up in Kerala. He was born in Vanneri in Ponnāni Taluk in the year 1428 A.D. His father was Ravi Nambutīripād of Bhārgava gotra. Besides his book ‘Tantrasamuccaya’ he has written a book ‘Mānavavāstulakṣaṇa’. This book is called ‘Manuṣyālayacandrikā’ also.

CERA. (A king of serpents). See under Ruru.

CERIPPU. (FOOTWEAR). There is a story in Mahābhārata of how Cerippu and Kuṭa (footwear and umbrella) were born. Once the heat of the Sun became unbearable to Jamadagni and enraged at this the sage started sending arrows against the Sun. His wife Renukā was supplying him with arrows. When a set of arrows was finished Renukā brought another set. This continued without break and the Sun began to feel the attack. Unable to do anything against the sage the Sun heated the head and foot of Renukā on her way to supply the arrows so fiercely that Renukā fell down under a banyan tree exhausted. When she became well enough to walk she took the arrows to her husband who was very angry for her being late. She then explained to him how because of the extreme heat of the sun she fell down on the way. Jamadagni then started with increased fury his shower of arrows and the Sun in the disguise of a Brahmin approached and advised him that it was not possible to strike down the Sun because he was a swift-mover in the sky and so it was better to withdraw from that attempt. But Jamadagni said the Sun would be stationary for some time at midday and then he would hit the Sun down. When the Sun found that Jamadagni would never drop his attempt he accepted defeat and presented Jamadagni with a pair of sandals and an umbrella to protect against the heat from below and above. From that day onwards footwear and umbrella came into vogue.

The practice of presenting sandals and umbrella is being carried down from generation to generation and even today it is being followed; these two are given as gifts on the ‘Śraddha’ day. (Chapters 95 and 96, Anuśasana Parva, M.B.)

CH. This letter means a cut, amputation severance. (Chapter 348, Agni Purāṇa).

CHĀGAMUKHA. Subrahmanyam. He is here idolised as one having a face like that of a goat. (Sloka 3, Chapter 228, Vana Parva).

CHANDODEVA. Sage Mataṅga was known in his previous birth by this name. (See Mataṅga).

CHATRAKETU. The second son born to Laksmana of his wife Īrmlī. The eldest son was Taksaka. Śrī Rāma after his return from the exile established a Kingdom called Agati on the eastern sea-shore and crowned Taṅkaka as the King of that place. On the western side after subjugating the meghas (low-caste non-Hindu tribes) Śrī Rāma established another kingdom called Candramati and installed Chatraketu as the King of that country. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

CHATRAVATI. There was in ancient Bharata a country called Alihicattra. Chatravaṭi was the capital of that State. The country itself is also known as Chatravati. (Sloka 21, Chapter 165, Ādi Parva).

CHAYA. A substitute of Sanjīnā, daughter of Vīva-karmā. Sanjīnā got from Śürīya three children, Manu, Yama and Yamī. The heat of Śürīya, her husband, became unbearable to her and so she created a substitute in her exact form and leaving her to look after Śürīya, her husband, she left the place and went to her father. Śūrīya did not know of this replacement and taking her to be Sanjīnā he produced three children by her, Śani, Śvārṇamanu and Tapati. Chāyā loved her sons more and this made Yama angry and he raised his legs to strike her when Chāyā cursed that Yama’s legs would fall off from his body. Yama complained to his father and he amended the curse and said that only some flesh from his limbs would fall to the ground and that flesh would serve as food to the gourds in the earth. Yama would escape from further injury. After consoling his son he turned towards Chāyā. The anger of Śūrīya frightened her and she told him everything. Śūrīya then divorced her and brought back Sanjīnā. For details see Sanjīnā. (Chapter 9 of Harivaṃśa; Chapter 2, Arśa 3, Viṣṇupurāṇa).

CHAYAGRĀHI . I. A demoness who harassed Hanumān on his flight to Lanka from the Bhārata shore. She, by a trick of the shade obstructed his path and Hanumān realising the danger killed her by a blow with his left foot and sprang forward. (Sundara Kāṇḍa, Kampa Rāmāyaṇa).

CHAYASUTA. Śani (Saturn).

CIBUKA. A low-caste born of Nandini, the cow, during her fight with Viśvāmitra. (Sloka 38, Chapter 174, Ādi Parva).

CIDAMBARA (SITAMBARA). A Sanskrit poet of 16th century A.D. He was a poet in the court of emperor Veṅkaṭa who ruled over Vijayanagar during the period 1586 A.D. to 1614 A.D. His one great work is Rāghava-yādava-pāṇḍava-viśāya. There are three Kāṇḍas in it and one Kāṇḍa each is devoted to the story of Śrī Rāma, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the Pāṇḍavas.

CĪKṢURA. War minister of Mahiṣāsura. Tāmra was his finance minister, Asīloma prince minister, Bīḍāla foreign minister, Ublharva Commander-in-chief, Sukra, minister for education and Bāṇkala, Trinetra and Kāla-bandhaka consulting ministers. (Devi Bhāgavata, Pañcama Skandha).

CĪKURA. Son of Āryaka, the serpent king. Cikura had a son called Sumukha. Once Garuḍa ate Cikura for food. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 120, Verse 23).

CĪNAR. People of China. It is believed that the Činars were born from the body of Nandini, the cow, during her fight with Viśvāmitra. (Sloka 38, Chapter 174, Ādi Parva). These low-caste people paid homage to Yudhīṣṭhira and gave him many presents. (Sloka 31, Chapter 51, Sabhā Parva).

CINTĀMANI. A diamond. This was salvaged from the ocean of milk along with other precious items like Airāvata, Uccaiḥṛavas, Kalpavṛkṣa, Kausthubha, Candra, Apsaras, Mahālakṣmī, Tārā, and Rumā. (Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Kaṇṭha Rāmāyaṇa).

CIRADĀṬA. There was a king called Cīradāṭa in the country called Cīrapura. Though himself a good man he was surrounded by bad advisers. Once a foreigner, Prasāṅga, came along with two friends to the palace to see the King. But due to the bad advice of his courtiers the King did not care to see them even. For five years they stayed there without even getting a look at the King. One day the only son of the King died. All the courtiers gathered round the child and pretended to be greatly grieved. Prasāṅga and his friends also came to the scene. They saw the king and spoke to him thus: “For five years you have not cared either to see or talk to us. We were cherishing a hope that at least your son would give us a better treatment when he grew old and became King. We were living here on that hope and now that hope also has been shattered and so we are leaving the place this instant.” The King was surprised to hear that they were prepared even to wait for his son to become the King and gave them very many presents. (Taraṅga 5, Alauṅkārvatī Laiṅbaka, Kāthāsaṅitāgara).

CĪRAKA. A place of habitation in ancient India. Once Karna conquered this land and from then onwards they started paying tribute to Duryodhana. (Sloka 19, Chapter 8, Karna Parva).

CĪRAKĀRI. A son of Gautama Mahārṣi. He used to think deeply before doing any deed and so he earned the name Cīrakāri.

Once the sage Gautama found out proof against the chastity of his own wife and enraged at this commanded his son Cīrakāri to chop off the head of the latter’s mother. Giving this command Gautama went into the forest and Cīrakāri in obedience to his father’s command came before his mother, weapon in hand. He did not kill her immediately but pondered over the consequences of the deed. Matricide is a great sin, he mused. Then again who would be there to look after father if mother died. Perhaps his father, when he cools down, might regret his command and come back repentant. Thus he was sitting undecided when Gautama returned full of remorse for his hasty order. On seeing his wife alive he was greatly reliced and immensely happy and he blessed Cirakari. (Chapter 266, Santi Parva).

CIRANJIVI. The name of a crow, a character in the ‘Pañcatantra’. (See under Meghavarna).

CIRANTAKA. A son of Garuda. (Śloka 1, Chapter 101, Udyoga Parva).

CIRAVASAS I. A Kṣatriya King born as a rebirth of an asura Kröhavasa. (Śloka 61, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).

CIRAVASAS II. A yakṣa. He stayed in the court of Kubera worshipping him. (Śloka 10, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

CIRĀYUS. An ancient King of the country Cirāyu. Nāgārjuna was a minister of this King. Nāgārjuna knew the secret of ‘Rasāyanasiddhi’. Once Nāgārjuna prepared a medicine for himself and the King which if taken would keep them eternally young. They took medicine accordingly.

After some days a child of the minister died. Grief-stricken Nāgārjuna decided to prepare Amṛta which would eradicate death from this world. He had prepared it but there remained one more medicine to be added to this. The auspicious moment to add the same was to come only after five days and Nāgārjuna waited. The devas were frightened. If Amṛta was made available on earth men would become Devas. Devas could not bear this and so they sent the Aśvinikumāras to the earth to persuade Nāgārjuna to desist from his work of preparing Amṛta. Further they informed him that his dead child was living happily in heaven. He agreed to stop his work.

After some time Cirāyu crowned his son Jivahara as the heir-apparent. Overjoyed Jivahara ran to his mother Dhanaparā to give her the glad tidings. Dhanaparā told her son thus: “My child, why should you be so happy to think that you have become the heir-apparent. Several sons of your father had already become yuvarājas and died before becoming King. Your father has taken a medicine from Nāgārjuna and that will keep him eternally young. None of his sons can aspire to be the King. Your father is now eight hundred years old and will live long. Many of you will become yuvarājas but not the King. I will therefore suggest a way to tide over this difficulty. Everyday in the afternoon Nāgārjuna would come outside the palace and enquire whether anybody is in need of anything. At that time he would give whatever was asked for. It is an opportunity when you can ask for his head. When Nāgārjuna is dead your father would either die of grief or go to the forests.

Then you can become the King.”

Jivahara was pleased to hear this suggestion and he went that afternoon to the palace of Nāgārjuna and when Nāgārjuna as usual came out with his query Jivahara asked for his head. Most willingly Nāgārjuna offered his head to be chopped off. But the effect of the medicine made even the strongest cut by the sword ineffective.

Jivahara lost many swords without Nāgārjuna getting even a small scratch on his neck. The hubbub brought the King to the scene and he immediately asked Nāgārjuna to withdraw his head but Nāgārjuna refused saying, “Oh, King, in my ninety-nine previous births I have offered my head like this and please do not ask me to desist from making this offer for the hundredth time”.

So saying he embraced the King and taking a powder from his body smeared it on the sword and asked Jivahara to strike again. This time very easily Jivahara severed the head from the body of Nāgārjuna. The King was greatly aggrieved and he denounced all and went to the forest and led a pious life.

Cīrāyu’s son Jivahara became King. But Nāgārjuna’s sons killed him and his mother died of grief. (Taraṅga, Ratnaprabhā Lambaka, Kathāsārītāgara).

CIRI. A river. It was on the banks of this river that Vaivasvata Manu clad in bark-skin and with knotted hair did penance. (Śloka 6, Chapter 187, Vana Parva).

CITAL. (Termites). Cital has got its own place in the purāṇas. Devi Bhāgavata has the following story about the origin of it.

Mahāviṣṇu once looking at the face of Lakṣmī laughed without any apparent reason. Lakṣmī, thinking that Viṣṇu was laughing at her and that he had an eye on some other woman more beautiful than her lost her temper and cursed Viṣṇu that his head would be severed from his body.

No sooner was the curse pronounced than the asuras came in batches fully armed and challenged Viṣṇu to war. Single-handed the Lord fought the asuras with one bow. The fight did not end though it continued for thousands of years. Viṣṇu felt tired and decided to rest awhile. He planted one end of the untied bow on the ground, rested his chin on the other and sat in Padmāsana. Being very tired the Lord remained asleep for a long time in this posture.

About this time the devas made preparations to perform a yajña. All the devas except Mahāviṣṇu attended that yajña. Since he was the master of yajñas performed for purposes of the devas they could not begin it in his absence. So, Brahmrā and others went in search of Viṣṇu to Vaikuṇṭha. But he was not to be found there. Then Brahmrā and others found out with their eyes of knowledge where Viṣṇu was and they went to the place where he was sleeping. They waited there for a long time, yet Viṣṇu did not awake from sleep. Then Brahmrā hit at a plan to awaken Viṣṇu. It was to create cital (termite) to eat the end of the bow. When they had eaten away the end of the bow planted on the ground the cord binding the two ends of it would break, the bow would straighten up and the speedy movement of it would awaken Viṣṇu.

According to this plan Brahmrā created citals, but his other plans were not acceptable to the citals. They argued that the advantage of awakening the Lord from sleep would go only to the devas, while its sin would fall upon them.

They argued,

- Nidrābhaṅgaḥ kathācheda
- Dampatyoḥ prītabhedanam /
- Śīṣumātyāibhedaśca
- Brahmahatyāsamarāṃ smṛtam \//*

Brahmrā conceded the justness of this argument and agreed that, in future, a part of the result of yajñas shall go to citalas. It was after this that havis (sa critical offering) which, in the course of being submitted to the fire falls on the sides of the pit of fire became the share of citalas (termites). This promise of Brahmrā pleased the citalas, and they did as was bidden by Brahmrā and the bow of Viṣṇu straightened up with a terrific sound. The devas were terror-stricken, the whole universe shook, the earth experienced a convulsion and the oceans too were shaken. Moreover, the head of Viṣṇu was severed from the body, rose high up in the sky and fell into the sea. Brahmā, Śiva and others opened their eyes only to find the body of Viṣṇu lying thus without the head.

This loss of Viṣṇu's head proved to be useful in another way. Now, Hayagrīva, after securing the boon from Brahmā that he would be killed only by one with horse's head, was running rough-shod over the whole earth. The devas cut off the head of a horse and attached it to the trunk of Viṣṇu. Thus Viṣṇu came to life again, and according to his orders the citals gnawed away the cord of Hayagrīva's bow as a result of which he was killed. (Devimāhātmya, Prathama Skanda).

CITAYU. A king of the Pāru dynasty. He was the son of Bhadrāśva, who had ten sons called Rksāyu, Kṛśāyu, Sannatāyu, Gṛtāyu, Citāyu, Śhanḍilāyu, Dharmāyu, Sammitāyu, Kṛtāyu and Matināra. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

CITRA. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra killed in war by Bhīmasena. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 136, Verse 20).

CITRA. A gajaranā (king elephant) with whom Subrahmanya, as a child, used to play. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 23).

CITRA. A hero who fought on the Kaurava side against the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed by Prativindhya. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 32).

CITRA. A hero from the Cedi Kingdom who fought on the Pāṇḍava side against the Kauravas. Karna killed him. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 46).

CITRA. A celestial maiden. When once Aṣṭāvakara went to the court of Kubera this maiden gave a dance in honour of his visit. (Sloka 44, Chapter 14, Anuśāsana Parva).

CITRABHĀHU (CITRĀYUDHA). A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed in war by Bhīma. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 136, Verse 20).

CITRĀBARHA. A son of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 12).

CITRĀCĀPA. (CITRĀŚAR+SANA, SARĀSANA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Adī Parva, Chapter 67).

CITRADEVA. An attendant of Subrahmanya. He loved brahmins deeply. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 71).

CITRADHARMĀ. A king in ancient India. The asura called Vṛūpākṣa was born again as Citradharman. (M.B. Adī Parva, Chapter 67). The Pāṇḍavas invited him to come and help them in the war. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 13).

CITRAGUPTA. A minister of Kīla. (God of death). His duty is to examine, after the death of men, a list of the good and evil actions they had done while living. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 130).

CITRAKETU I. An emperor, who remained childless for a long time. At last a son was born to him owing to the blessings of Sage Aṅgiras. But, ere long the child was dead and gone, and its parents, immersed in sorrow took the dead child to Aṅgiras. Nārada also happened to be there on the occasion. Aṅgiras restored the dead child to life and asked him to live with the parents. The boy immediately stood up and told Aṅgiras that he had many parents in his many previous lives, and requested to be enlightened as to which of those parents he was to live with. Brahmā and Nārada felt confused. In the end they disappeared after imparting spiritual wisdom to Citraketu. And, Citraketu, who, for eight days immersed himself in concentrating the mind on God was turned into a Gandharva; his wife too turned Gandharva.

And, both of them rose up in the sky and flying over Mount Kailāsa looked down to the mountain. There they saw Pārvati being seated on the thighs of Śiva at which sight Citraketu laughed. Enraged by the laughter Pārvati cursed him to be born as an asura, and lie was born as such. Vṛtrāsura was Citraketu born as asura. (Bhāgavata, Saśāha Skanda).

CITRAKETU II. A son of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 12).

CITRAKETU III. A Pāṇeśa prince who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 41).

CITRAKETU IV. A son of Śīṣupāla. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skanda).

CITRAKESI. An Apsār woman. King Vatsa begot sons like Vṛṣa of her. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skanda).

CITRAKĀŚA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīmasena killed him in the great battle. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 136).

CITRAKUṆĐAKA. (DĪRGHALOCANA). One of the Kauravas killed by Bhīma. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 27).

CITRAKUṬA. A mountain. Renowned in the purāṇas, this mountain is on the banks of the river, Mandākini. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85). It was here, at Citrakūṭa that Śrī Rāma, Sītā and others lived for a period of time. It is said that Rājaalakṣṇi (royal wealth and welfare) will embrace those who fast on the Citrakūṭa after a bath in the Mandākini. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 29). This mountain is in Bandhā Zilla of the U.P. in modern India. Citrakūṭa is described in Cantos 56 and 94 of Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa.

CITRALEKHĀI. A celestial maiden. This maiden came and danced in the assembly of the Pāṇḍavas once. (Sloka 34, Chapter 9, Vana Parva, M.B.).

CITRALEKHĀII. A companion of Uṣā, daughter of the demon, Bāna. She was a beautiful portrait painter. Uṣā once dreamt of Aniruddha, grandson of Kṛṣṇa. Even before knowing the identity of the idol of her dream Uṣā fell in love with him. Next day morning Citralekhā gathered from the glowing Uṣā details of her dream and Citralekhā started making portraits of many known charming princes but Uṣā was not satisfied. She then drew in her imagination a figure which was exactly like that of Aniruddha, the man of her dream. Uṣā was satisfied and it was through the cleverness of Chitralekha that Aniruddha was brought to Uṣā's room and Uṣā was able to marry Aniruddha. (See under 'Aniruddha').
CITRAMUKHA

A sage. Though he was born a Vaiśya, he became a brahmin and from there gradually rose to the status of a brahmārshi. (Chapter 56, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.)

CITRĀNGA I. (CITRĀNGADA, ŚRUTĀNTAKA).
One of the hundred sons of Bhṛatarśa. In the great battle Bhīmasena killed him. (Sloka 11, Chapter 26, Sālya Parva).

CITRĀNGA II. A warrior. In the Āvāmedhayajña performed by Śrī Rāma Satrughna followed the sacrificial horse and Citrāṅga blocked them on their way. Satrughna killed him. (Chapter 27, Pātala Kānda, Padma Purāṇa).

CITRĀNGADA I. (CITRĀNGA). See under Citrāṅga I.

CITRĀNGADA II. A son of the Mahārāja Sanatana: King Sanatanu of the Candra dynasty had two wives, Gaṅgā and Satyavati. Bhīṣma is the son born of Gaṅgā; of Satyavati were born two sons, Citrāṅgada and Vicitravirya. They were very brave and learned. After ruling his kingdom for a long period, living with Satyavati and the three children Sanatana passed away. Because Bhīṣma dedicated himself to a life of unbroken chastity Citrāṅgada was crowned King. Once when he went to the forest for hunting he met with a gandharva of the same name. Both did not like the other to keep the same name and so a fight ensued. It was fought in Kurukṣetra and lasted for three years. In the end Citrāṅgada was killed. Bhīṣma felt very sorry and after asking Vicitravirya to perform the funeral rites crowned him as King. (Devi Bhāgavata-Prathama Skandha).

CITRĀNGADA III. A gandharva. See under Citrāṅgada II.

CITRĀNGADA IV. One of the Kings who attended the svayamvara of Draupadī. He might have been the King of either Kaliṅga or Daśārma because both these states were then ruled by a Citrāṅgada, (Sloka 22, Chapter 185, Aḍī Parva).

CITRĀNGADA V. A king of Kaliṅga. Almost all the Kings of Bhārata attended a svayamvara once held at the palace of this King. (Sloka 2, Chapter 4, Sānti Parva).

CITRĀNGADA VI. A king of Daśārma. He blocked the sacrificial horse sent out by Dharmaputra during the Āvāmedhayajña and Arjuna killed him. (Āvāmedha Parva, Chapter 33, Sloka 7).

CITRĀNGADA VII. A deer. A character in the stories in the book 'Pañcataṇtra Stories' (See B-2 in Pañcataṇtra).

CITRĀNGADĀ I. A celestial maiden. Once this girl gave a dance in the court of Kubera in honour of Aśvāvakrā. (Sloka 44, Chapter 19, Anuśāsana Parva).

CITRĀNGADĀ II. A wife of Arjuna.

General information. When once Dharmaputra was closeted with Pañcālī in amorous talks Arjuna by mistake entered the room and was thus compelled as per a previous mutual agreement to go on a pilgrimage for a year. During this exile he married the serpent girl Ulūpi. After that he proceeded again on his pilgrimage and reached a state called Maṇalūr. Maṇalūr was then reigned by a King called Citrāvāhana. Citrāṅgadā was the daughter of Citrāvāhana. An ancestor of Citrāvāhana greatly grieved by the lack of a son, did great penance to propitiate Śiva and Śiva blessed him and said that in future he and his successors would get a son to keep their line unbroken. Accordingly all the forefathers of Citrāvāhana got a son each but when it came to the turn of the latter he got a girl instead.

Arjuna accidentally saw Citrāṅgadā and fell in love with her, and knowing that, the king received Arjuna in his palace and requested Arjuna to marry his daughter. Arjuna married her and the couple got a son named Bābhruvāhana. Promising them that he would come back and take them to Hastināpura Arjuna continued his pilgrimage. (Chapters 219, 220, and 221, Aḍī Parva).

2) How Citrāṅgadā came to Hastināpura. When after the great epic battle Dharmaputra conducted an Āvāmedhayajña it was Arjuna who led the sacrificial horse to the south. When Arjuna came to Maṇalūr he came against Bābhruvāhana who challenged him for a fight. In the grim battle that ensued Arjuna fell dead by the piercing arrows of Bābhruvāhana, his own son. At that time Ulūpi and Citrāṅgadā came to the scene and seeing Arjuna lying dead, Ulūpi brought the diamond, Mṛtasunjyani, and placing it on Arjuna’s face brought him back to life. (See Bābhruvāhana for details).

When this incident all of them, Citrāṅgadā, Ulūpi and Bābhruvāhana went to Hastināpura along with Arjuna. (Chapters 79 to 81, Āvāmedha Parva).

3) Other details
(1) Citrāṅgadā on reaching Hastināpura bowed down before Kuntī and Pañcālī touching their feet and lived amicably with others like Subhadra. (Sloka 2, Chapter 88, Āvāmedha Parva).
(2) Kuntī, Subhadra and Pañcālī gave Citrāṅgadā many diamonds as present. (Sloka 3, Chapter 88, Āvāmedha Parva).
(3) Citrāṅgadā looked to the comforts of Gāndhāri as a servant-maid. (Sloka 25, Chapter 1, Āśramaṇa Parva).
(4) Citrāṅgadā was one among the women who wept when at the fag end of their life Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhāri and Kuntī started for Vanavāsa (life in the forest). (Sloka 10, Chapter 15, Āśramaṇa Parva).
(5) Citrāṅgadā was a beautiful woman having an enchanting figure as that of a Madhūka flower. (Sloka 11, Chapter 25, Āśramaṇa Parva).
(6) After the Mahāprasthāna of the Paṇḍavas Citrāṅgadā left for Maṇipur. (Sloka 18, Chapter 1, Mahāprasthānika Parva).

CITRĀNGADĀ III. Daughter of Viśvakarmā. Once while she was bathing in a pond along with her companions in the forest of Naimiṣa Prince Suratha, son of Sudeva, came that way. Seeing him Citrāṅgadā told her companions “This beautiful young man is in love. I must give myself to him”. Though her companions objected to her doing this, waving aside the objections Citrāṅgadā approached Suratha. When Viśvakarmā knew about this he was extremely angry and cursed her saying that she would never have a marriage, Citrāṅgadā fainted when she heard the curse and her companions tried their best to wake her up, but failed. They then took her to be dead and left the place in search of firewood and other things to conduct a funeral.

When Citrāṅgadā woke up she looked around for her companions and finding none including her lover, the prince, she ran and threw herself into the river, Sarasvati.
That river pushed her down to river Gomati and that river in turn washed her ashore a huge forest. There she was met by the sage Râdhvajâ. Knowing her sad tale the sage felt compassion for her and cursed Visvâkarma to be born as a monkey. Then he let her marry her lover and blessed them. (Chapters 63 and 64, Vâmanâ Purâṇa).

CITRÂNGI. Daughter of Bhadrâśena, a king of Helaya. She was the wife of Durmada. (See under Durmada).

CITRAPUSPÂMA. A garden where peculiar kinds of flowers grow. This garden is on the higher planes of Mount Sukâkṣa to the west of Dvârakâ. (M.B. Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 38).

1) Birth. Citraratha was the gandharva son of Kaśyapaprajapati of his wife Muni. (Śloka 43, Chapter 65, Âdi Parva).

2) Citraratha and Arjuna. The greatest event in the life of Citraratha alias Ângâraparâṇa was the defeat he suffered at the hands of Arjuna. The Pandavas after their escape from the Icchârajâvâ forest (Lâkṣângâra) through a tunnel arrived in a forest and there they killed the demons Hidimba and Baka. One night they were walking along the shores of the river Gângâ when they heard a sound of somebody bathing in the river. Arjuna who was walking ahead waving a country torch went to see who was bathing at that time of the night. Arjuna then saw Citraratha enjoying a bath with his wife Kumbhinâ. That period of the night was allotted to the gandharvas, and human beings were not expected to be out walking at that time. Citraratha felt it impertinent that Arjuna a human being should be out walking at night and peep into the privacy of the gandharvas. The gandharva and Arjuna so entered into a combat. Citraratha who was a great fighter was, after a grim battle, subdued, bound hand and foot, and brought before his brothers by Arjuna. Kumbhinâ followed her exhausted, powerless and spiritless husband and pleaded to Dharma putra to release him. Dharma putra advised Arjuna to do so and on getting his release he taught Arjuna the famous Câksuvidyâ—the magic art of seeing by one's own eyes anything and everything in the three worlds: Heaven, Earth and the netherworld. Manu was the author of this magic art and from him Soma learnt it and from Soma Viśvâvasu, from Viśvâvasu, Citraratha and from Citraratha, Arjuna. Besides this Citraratha gave Arjuna many chariots and horses.

In return Arjuna taught him the secret of the missile Agniśira. Exchanging faith and affection thus Citraratha and the Pandavas became friends. He then narrated to the Pandavas many interesting stories, of which the following are a few. The story of the feud between Vasiśtha and Viśvâmitra, story of Tapanâsinâvarana and tales about the sage Parâśara, Kalmâsāpâda, Adîyanâ, Bhârgavas, Kṛtavirya and Aurva. Citraratha advised the Pandavas to have a priest for the sacrificial rites and it was thus that they engaged Dhaumya as their family priest.

Since Arjuna had destroyed all the chariots belonging to Citraratha, the latter got a name 'Bhâgnaratâ' (devoid of chariots). Citraratha admitted that Arjuna could conquer him because of his vow of celibacy. (Chapters 165 to 183, Âdi Parva, M.B.).

3) Other details.

(1) Citraratha attended one of the birthday festivals of Arjuna. (Śloka 52, Chapter 122, Âdi Parva, M.B.).

(2) Citraratha worshipped Kubera sitting in the latter's council. (Sabha Parva, Chapter 10, Śloka 26).

(3) He offered as a gift to Dharma putra four hundred excellent horses which could fly like wind. (Chapter 52, Śloka 23, Vana Parva).

(4) When the gandharvas milked the earth during the time of the emperor, Pṛthu, Citraratha acted as the calf. (Śloka 39, Chapter 6, Hari-vâṇâsâ).

(5) Siva once sent Citraratha as a messenger to Aśura Sârkhacûda, with a message that Sârkhacûda should abandon his satanic activities. (Devi Bhâgavata, Navama Skandha).

CITRARÂTHA II. One of the ministers of Daśaratha. He belonged to the Sûta dynasty. (Śloka 17, Ayodhyâ Kânda, Vâlmiki Râmâyâna).

CITRARÂTHA III. A king of Sâlva. Once Renukâ, wife of Jamadagni, after her bath in the river stayed ashore watching this king and his queen bath in the river with erotic plays. Renukâ thus reached the ârâma a bit late and Jamadagni enraged at this commanded his son Parasurâma to chop the head of his own mother. (Brahmâpûra Purâṇa, Chapter 59).

CITRARÂTHA IV. A king of the dynasty of Bharata. He was the son of King Gaya. Citraratha had a sister named Sugati and a brother Avarodhana. (Pañcama Skandha, Bhâgavata).

CITRARÂTHA V. A prince of Pâñcâla. He was killed in the battle of Mahâbhârata by Droṇâcârya. (Śloka 43, Chapter 122, Droṇa Parva).

CITRARÂTHA VI. A king of the Ârâga country. He married Prabhâvatî, sister of Ruci, wife of Devâstarma. (Śloka 8, Chapter 42, Anuśâsana Parva, M.B.).

CITRARÂTHA VII. A king of the Yâdava dynasty. He was the son of Ushâkû and father of Sûra. (Śloka 29, Chapter 147, Anuśâsana Parva).

CITRARÂTHA VIII. Son of Virabhâdu and a friend of Sri Râma. In the Râja Kânda of Ânanda Râmâyâna there is the following story about him.

Citraratha was also one among those assembled for the swayamvaras of Hemâ, daughter of Kuśa. He sent an anaesthetic missile to the assemblage and made them all fall down senseless. He then took Hemâ out from the marriage hall. But on reaching outside he felt he had done a very unjust thing and so withdrew the missile and stood outside ready to fight. A fight ensued in which Citraratha defeated all. But Lava alone continued to fight with him. Virabhâdu, father of Citraratha, who was closely watching the fight came to the help of Citraratha and engaging Lava in a fight struck him down. Kuśa seeing this attacked Virabhâdu and bound him hand and foot. At that time Sri Râma came to the scene and told Kuśa that Virabhâdu was a friend of his and set Virabhâdu free. Hemâ was then married to Citraratha and Virabhâdu was sent away with due respect.

CITRARÂTHA. An Indian river of purânic fame. (Chapter 9, Bhâshima Parva, M.B.).

CITRARÎPA. An attendant of Śiva. When by a curse of Mahâviṣṇu Mahâlakṣmî was changed into a mare, it was through this attendant that Śiva sent a message to Viṣṇu. (Devi Bhâgavata, Skandha 6).
CITRASENA. (SARASANA, CITRACAPA). One of the sons of Dhrtarashtra. In the great battle he was killed by Bhimasena. (Sloka 20, Chapter 136, Droña Parva).

CITRASENA I. A gandharva. There is reference to this gandharva in many places in the purāṇas. He had two wives Sandhyāvali and Ratnāvali.

1) How Arjuna saved him. Once when Citrasena with his wives was travelling in the aerial car the spittings of Citrasena fell upon the sage Gālava who was doing his sandhāyāni rites then. The sage complained about the incident to Śrī Kṛṣṇa who promised to bring to him the head of Citrasena before sun-set. Sage Nārada informed Citrasena of this vow of Kṛṣṇa. The gandharva was taken aback and did not know what to do. But Sandhyāvali and Ratnāvali went and sought the help of Subhadrā. They made a fire pit in front of her house and decided to end their lives along with Citrasena by jumping into the fire. While Citrasena was circling the fire-pit before jumping into it his wives wept loudly and hearing the noise Subhadrā came out and saw what was happening. They then took from Subhadrā a boon to the effect that they should be allowed to live with their husband. It was only after granting them the boon that Subhadrā understood the whole situation. Subhadrā was in a fix but Arjuna assured her that Citrasena would be protected at any cost. Arjuna very cleverly shielded all the arrows sent against the gandharva by Kṛṣṇa and gradually the fight came to be one between Arjuna and Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Subhadrā came between them and it was found difficult to continue the fight. Śrī Kṛṣṇa advised Citrasena to bow down and touch the feet of Gālava, Citrasena obeyed and the issue settled without harm to both the parties.

2) Arjuna defeats Citrasena. While the Pāṇḍavas were in exile, Duryodhana knew through a spy that they were camping in the Dvaitavana forest. Prompted by Karna Duryodhana programmed to go to Dvaitavana with his retinue to enjoy the sight of the suffering Pāṇḍavas. So they started to the forests under a pretext of an annual stock-taking of the cows. They reached Dvaitavana with a huge army. There they split into parties and roamed about making merry by themselves. Soon one of the parties reached a pond near the hermitage of the Pāṇḍavas. They saw a few gandharvas making merry in the pond. With the usual haughtiness they commanded the gandharvas to leave the pond and make room for Duryodhana and his companions to bathe. The gandharvas did not pay heed to their words and on being informed of this Duryodhana went to fight with the gandharvas. It was Citrasena who led the gandharvas and by his incessant shower of piercing arrows split the Kaurava forces and made them flee for life. Duryodhana was isolated from his army, was bound hand and foot and taken a prisoner. In their sheer helplessness they approached Dharma-putra in his hermitage and acquitted him with the pitiable plight of Duryodhana. Dharmaputra asked Arjuna to go to the help of the Kauravas. Arjuna faced Citrasena in a grim combat. Citrasena then appeared in his real form and Arjuna knew that he was fighting a friend. Then at the request of Arjuna Citrāratha released Duryodhana. (Chapters 239 to 243, Vana Parva).

3) Other details. (1) This gandharva occupied a seat in the court of Yudhīśthira along with twentyseven other gandharvas and a few Apsāra maidens. (Sloka 32, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).
(2) Citrasena is a member of the court of Kubera also. (Sloka 26, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).
(3) Citrasena used to attend the court of Indra also at times. (Sloka 22, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva).
(4) At the invitation of Indra Arjuna went to devaloka and Citrasena taught him dance and music. It was during this visit that Arjuna threw a cold blanket on the amorous approaches of Urvāśī and was consequently cursed by her to be an eunuch. It was through Citrasena that Indra sent word to Urvāśī to console Arjuna and give relief from the curse. (Chapters 43 and 46, Vana Parva).

CITRASENA II (UGRASENA). One of the hundred sons of Dhrtarāṣṭra.

2) Other details. (1) Citrasena was present for the svayānvara of Pāṇcālī. (Sloka 3, Chapter 185, Ādi Parva, M.B.).
(2) Citrasena was among those who accompanied Duryodhana when he went to play the historical game of dice with Dharmaputra. (Sloka 13, Chapter 58, Sabhā Parva).
(3) In the great Mahābhārata battle he fought against Bhimasena, Suśarmā, Sātyaki and Saṭānīka. Bhima killed him. (Chapter 137, Drona Parva).

CITRASENA III. A prince of the Puru line, son of Parikṣit and grandson of Avikṣit. (Sloka 54, Chapter 94, Śrī Parva).

CITRASENA VII. A warrior of Pāṇcāla. Karna killed him in the great battle. (Sloka 15, Chapter 48, Karṇa Parva).

CITRASENA VIII. A son of Karna. Nakula killed him in the great battle. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 10).

CITRASENA IX. A brother of Karna. In the great battle Yudhamanyu killed him. (Sloka 39, Chapter 83, Karṇa Parva).

CITRASENA X. One of the kings on the sea-shore. Along with his son he fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas and was killed by Suṣumāra. (Sloka 16, Chapter 6, Karṇa Parva).

CITRASENA XI. A serpent. This serpent joined hands with Arjuna during the Kṛṣṇarjuna battle. (Sloka 43, Chapter 87, Karṇa Parva).

CITRASENA XII. A king of the dynasty of Vyāva-svatamanu. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgava). of the river Yamunā. It was the day of Aṣṭamirohini and many maidens were observing the Aṣṭamirohini Vrata there. Before them was a heap of rice and other eatables which was given as an offering to Kṛṣṇa and seeing the lot the King begged for something to eat and drink. The maidens replied that it was a sin to take food on that day of Vrata and then there came a change in the mind of the King and he readily agreed to observe the Aṣṭamirohini vrata and did so. Because of this when the king died, though a great sinner he was, he was taken to heaven by the servants of Viṣṇu. This story was told by Vasiṣṭha to Dīlpa to impress upon him the greatness of observing the Aṣṭamirohini Vrata. (Chapter 13, Padma Purāṇa).

CITRASENĀ I. An Apsaras. This celestial maiden was a dancer in the court of Kubera. (Śloka 10, Chapter 10, Śabā Parva). When Arjuna went to the land of Indra this maiden gave a dance in honour of Arjuna. (Śloka 30, Chapter 43, Vana Parva).

CITRÔPALA. A river of purānic fame. (Śloka 34, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

CITTIĀVASTHĀS. States of the mind. (See under Paṭṭu).

CIYYĀLĪ. A holy place in South-India. (See under Agastya).

COLA. A very righteous emperor of Kāñcipurā. Because of the virtuous rule of this emperor his country got the name Cola. There is an interesting story in Padma Purāṇa of how the emperor attained Vaikūnthaloka (The abode of Mahāviṣṇu).

Once Cola went to Vaikūntha to worship Mahāviṣṇu. As he was worshipping him with pearls and flowers of gold a brahman subject of his came there to worship him with water and Tulasī leaves. The simple offering of Tulasī leaves and flowers by this brahmanṛy, Viṣṇudāsa, eclipsed the expensive one by the King and the latter was greatly offended and he rebuked the Brahmin saying that he was a poor man who did not know what devotion to Viṣṇu was. But Viṣṇudāsa did not take the taunt unchallenged. He asked the king to wait and see who would merge with the glowing entity of the Lord earlier.

The King on returning to his palace started a Vaiśṇava-sattra. (An almonry dedicated to Mahāviṣṇu). This almonry was as comfortable and luxurious as the one once started by Brahmā in the temple of Gaya. Viṣṇudāsa on the other hand spent his life in a Viṣṇu temple leading a celibate life and observing rites pleasing to Viṣṇu.

One day after finishing his daily morning rites Viṣṇudāsa cooked his food as usual and kept it in its place to be taken later. But on returning to it after some time he found his food eaten by someone else. He went without food that day and it happened the next day also. It continued to happen thus for a week and all these days Viṣṇudāsa went fasting. Viṣṇudāsa then decided to watch and see who the thief was. On keeping a vigil he found a Candāla (a harijan of the lowest Cadre) timidly coming and grabbing at the food with gluttonous greed to appease his hunger. Seeing the famished skeletonous body of the thief Viṣṇudāsa felt compassion rather than resentment and calling him back to take the food went after him crying “Hi, come here and take this rice also with you. That food has no fat in it.” But the Candāla frightened at the sight of the owner of the food ran away as fast as his legs could carry him, Viṣṇudāsa following him. But soon the Candāla fell fainting on the road exhausted and tired. Viṣṇudāsa reaching his side started fanning him with his cloth. Very soon the Candāla changed himself into Mahāviṣṇu adorned with Śaṅkla, Cakra and Gada and Viṣṇu embracing his devotee took him to Vaikūntha.

Hearing this Cola called Mudgala the priest of the Vaiśṇava-sattra, to his side and lamented “I started this sattra to spite Viṣṇudāsa and now he has gone to Vaikuṇṭha. It was due to his true devotion to God that he has attained salvation. What we have done is of no use.” So saying he crowned his nephew as King. Even while young he had become an ascetic as well as such had no sons. From that time the crowning of the nephew as King became a precedent in Cola. Renouncing the kingdom Cola went to the sacrificial hall and circling the sacrificial fire stood before it and addressing Mukunda said “Oh Viṣṇu, grant me unwavering devotion to you in thought, speech and deed.” Repeating this three times the King jumped into the fire. At this Mudgala, the priest, burst into anger and tore off the lock of hair on his head. So even today the descendents of Mudgala do not have hair-locks. Viṣṇu who is always affectionate to his devotees graci-ously appeared from the sacrificial fire and embraced the King. The King was then taken to Vaikuṇṭha.

COLA (M). The three celebrated kingdoms of South-India of old were Cola, Pândya and Cera. References to these will be found in many places in the Purāṇas and a few are given below:—

1) Among those present for the svayanivara of Rukmini were the Kings of Cola, Pândya and Keral. 2) Descending in order from Turvasu were Varga—Gobhānu — Traidāni — Karandham — Maruita — Dusyanta — Varātha — Gandhāra. From Gandhāra were born the people of Kerala, Pândya and Cola. (Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa). 3) Arjuna conquered the army of the King of Cola. (Sloka 21, Chapter 27, Sabhā Parva). 4) The King of Cola gave gifts to Dharmaputra. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Sloka 35). 5) When during the great battle Dhrṣṭadyumna formed the Kauravavyūha the soldiers from Cola guarded the southern wing. (Sloka 60, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva). 6) Śri Kṛṣṇa once conquered the land of Cola. (Sloka 17, Chapter 11, Droṇa Parva).

COURAS. A set of Kṣatriyas who became Śūdras by a curse of the brahmins. Pândyas, Kāṇḍvas, Sirākhyas, Lāṭas, Drāvīḍas, Keralas, Couras, Darvas, Daradas, Saṁdīs, Sabaras, Arbaras, Kīrātas and Yavanas were all Kṣatriyas but were turned into Śūdras by a curse of the brahmins.

CUCUKA. A low-caste tribe of south India. They were aborigines older than the Mahābhārata in origin. (Sloka 42, Chapter 207, Saṁti Parva).

CUCUKA (M). A place in ancient South India. (Sloka 26, Chapter 110, Udūyoga Parva).

CUDĀKARNA. The character of a Sanyāsī in a tale in Pañcatantra.

CUDALĀ. The saintly wife of King Śikhidhāvaja. When once Śikhidhāvaja renounced his kingdom and went to the forests, his wife gave him instruction in Ātma-jñāna and brought him back to his country. (Chapter 77, Yogavāsiṣṭha).

CUDĀMA. 1. See under Sītā.

CULI. A sage. Once Somadā, daughter of a gandharva woman Urnīlā, looked after this sage and well pleased with her service he asked her what she wanted and Somadā asked for a son by him. Čuli gave her a spiritual son of his and the boy was named Brahmadatta. This Brahmadatta married the hundred hunch-backed daughters of Kuṣanābha. (Bala Kāṇḍa, Vāṃkiki Rāmāyaṇa).

CULUKA. A river. People of ancient Bhārata used to drink the water of this river. (Śloka 20, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

CUṬU. A King of the Hēchaya line of kings. He was the grandson of Rohitāśva and son of Hātita. King Vijaya is the son of Cuṭu. (Brahmanda Purāṇa, Chapter 16).

CURAYKKĀ. While emperor Pṛthu was ruling the earth it was once transformed into a cow and milked. Each got a different substance and what the Nāgas got was poison. They milked the poison into a pot-like Curaykkā.

CŪTU. (Diec). It is an imaginative purāṇic assumption that there is a satanic force latent in dice, hunting, wine and women. There is a story to support the presence of this evil power within the above four. Indra once turned the Āśvīṇidesva out of his court labelling them as outcasts and banned wine to them. Discontented at this the Āśvīṇidesva approached Cyavana and the latter performing a yāga invited the Āśvīṇidesva and gave them the yāga wine, ‘Soma’. Infuriated at this Indra raised his celebrated Vajrayuddha (Weapon of thunder) to kill Cyavana. But the sage by his yogic powers paralysed the hands of Indra and instantly from the sacrificial fire there arose Madā a genie to kill Indra. Frightened by this sight Indra fell at the feet of Cyavana and craved for pardon. The sage then tore the genie into four pieces and threw one each into dice, hunting, wine and women. That is why all the four are as alluring as destructive. (Saptamsa Skandha, Devi Bhāgavata).

CYAVANA. A celebrated sage of the Bhārgava dynasty.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Brahmā—Bhrigu—Cyavana.

2) Birth. Bhrigu is the son of Brahmā born of Agni at the Brahmayajna conducted by Varuṇa. The beautiful and virtuous lady Pulomā was the wife of Bhrigu. Even before Bhrigu married her she was being loved by the demon Pulomā and her marriage with Bhrigu embittered him and he waited for an opportunity to kidnap Pulomā. One day when Bhrigu went to the river for his bath Pulomā entered the āśrama and there he found his love Pulomā being watched over by Agni. Pulomā compelled Agni to tell him the truth whether Bhrigu had married Pulomā according to the rites enjoined by the scriptures. Agni confessed that it was not so and then Pulomā taking the shape of a hog carried away Pulomā who was then in a stage of advanced pregnancy. On the way the wife of the sage delivered and the babe dropped to the ground. Because the babe was born with a fall (Cyavana) from the womb the boy was named Cyavana. The radiance of the boy burnt the demon into ashes. Pulomā weeping profusely with tears rolling down her cheeks returned to the āśrama. Her tears ran into a river and the river got the name Vadhūśarī Bhrigu on knowing how all happened cursed Agni saying that Agni would thereafter be an all-round eater, (eating anything and everything). (Chapters 5 and 6, Adī Parva).

3) Penance and marriage. Even when he was very young Cyavana commenced practising austerities. He went to the forests and sat in meditation without food or sleep, oblivious to what happened outside. Years went by and Cyavana did not stir from his place. Gradually earth began to cover him and soon he was completely enveloped by earth. Creepers grew on it and birds made rests; Cyavana did not know anything about it.
One day Saryati with his wives and children came to that forest for a picnic. Sukanyā, daughter of King Saryati, along with her companions separated from the King and roamed about in the forest making merry. They soon came to the place where Cyavana sat doing penance. There was an unusual radiance around the heap of earth they saw there and Sukanyā out of curiosity started striking down the earth. Then from inside came Cyavana’s voice advising her not to crumble down the earth as she was doing. Sukanyā ignored the advice and searched for the source of the voice. She then saw two points of glow and taking a thorn gave two pricks at those points and left the place with her companions. Those glow-points were the eyes of Cyavana and Cyavana felt insufferable pain when his eyes were thus pierced through. But he neither became angry nor cursed the girl who did this havoc. Cyavana went on with his penance. But soon the country of Saryati began to experience the bad effects of this evil-deed. People one by one in the beginning and then the whole lot were disabled from passing either urine or faeces. From men and women the disease spread to the animals also. The country was in a chaos and the subjects flocked to the palace to complain to the King. Saryati knew that somebody must have in a some way tormented Cyavana and enquired of each and everyone of his subjects. Whether anybody had knowingly or unknowingly given pain to Cyavana. Nobody had done so and the King was worried. Then Sukanyā ran to her father and confessed what she had done. The King ran immediately to the place where Cyavana was doing penance and striking down the earth prostrated before the sage who was sitting there sad and miserable. The King apologised to Cyavana and requested him to pardon his daughter. Cyavana then told the King that it was enough if he gave his daughter in marriage to him in expiation of the harm done. The King was shocked to hear this for Cyavana was not only ugly but now blind also. The King returned to the palace sad and worried and there was gloom over the whole palace. But Sukanyā approached her father and agreed to be the wife of Cyavana. The problem was solved and the King with great reluctance took his daughter to the forests and gave her in marriage to Cyavana.

4) Cyavana attains eternal youth. It was the time when Indra had banned Sompāna (drinking of the yāga wine) to the Aśvinidevas. Discontented at this they roamed about in the forests and soon came to the neighbourhood of the āśrama of Cyavana. Sukanyā after becoming the wife of Cyavana did all she could to make her husband comfortable and happy. She would collect very sweet and tasty fruit from the forests and give him. She would bathe him in hot water. After arranging all the materials needed for the morning rites like yava, sesame, darbha and water, she would take her husband to the place of the pūjā leading him by hand. When the morning pūjā was over she would seat him in a suitable place and give him rice and fruits. After the meals she would give him pan to chew. Only after doing all these she would go to do her daily rites and that too only after obtaining her husband’s permission. She would finish her routine in no time to come back to her husband to see whether he was in need of anything. Then she would make arrangements for the evening pūjā and after the pūjā was over she would give him his dinner. She would eat only what was left by her husband. At night she would spread a soft bedding and lull him to sleep. Then she would take a nap lying at the foot of her husband. During summer she would fan him and during winter she would make fire to give him heat. Early morning she would take him to a distant place for his excretion and after washing him would seat him in a suitable place for cleaning his teeth and face. Then the routine would start with great devotion again.

One day Sukanyā was returning from the river after her bath and on the way she came across the Aśvinidevas. They were astounded to see such a beautiful damsel in the forest and they accosted her and requested her to select one of them as her husband. Knowing her identity they advised her to forsake her old and blind husband and come and live with one of them. She flew into a fury when she heard her husband spoken of so slightly and by logical argument convinced them the error of their request. Then they told her thus: “You are aware we are the physicians of the devas. We can give back eyesight to your husband and make him as beautiful as one of us. We will then appear before you as three lovely young men identical in appearance and then you must select one among the three as your husband.” Sukanyā was immensely pleased as well as surprised to hear the offer and was eager to see her husband young and beautiful. But the last condition frightened her. Anyhow she promised to give a reply after consulting her husband and ran to the āśrama to tell her husband the news. Cyavana advised her to accept the offer of the Aśvinidevas and Sukanyā ran back to the Aśvinidevas and brought them to her husband accepting their terms. The Aśvinidevas took the aged and blind Cyavana along with them to the river nearby and the three plunged into the river. When they rose up after a dip the three emerged as young, lovely and charming triplets difficult to be distinguished from one another. When Sukanyā stood before the three to select her real husband she prayed to her goddess and the Devi gave her the power to identify Cyavana and so she correctly chose him from the three. (Saptama Skandha, Devi Bhāgavata).

5) Cyavana defeated Indra. Immensely pleased at regaining his eyesight and youth Cyavana asked the Aśvinidevas what they wanted. The Aśvinidevas replied that Indra had banned wine to them and they would like to have the ban lifted. Cyavana Mahārṣi immediately commenced a Soma yāga to which were invited all the devas and the Aśvinidevas also. When Indra saw the Aśvinidevas standing to partake of the Soma wine he was furious and objected to the wine being given to them. Cyavana dissented and a fight ensued between Indra and Cyavana. Indra raised his weapon ‘Vajrayudha’ to strike at Cyavana and then Cyavana made all his limbs go stiff. He then raised from the sacrificial fire a fiendish demon called Māda to kill the devas. All those present were frightened by this demon and they ran away. But Indra could not run for his limbs were stiff. Standing there he prayed to his preceptor Brhaspati for help and Brhaspati advised Indra to surrender to Cyavana. Indra bowed his head before Cyavana and prayed to be excused. Cyavana was pleased and withdrawing the demon tore him into four pieces and threw one each into Dice, Hunting, Wine and Women. The devas and Aśvinidevas then went back to heaven. (Saptama Skandha, Devi Dhâdhiča. Rudrâ, Maññâla 1, Anuvâka 17, Sûkta 116; Chapter 123, Vana Parva.

6) Other details.
(1) Paraśûrâma once came and stayed at the ârâma of Cyavana. At that time Bhṛgu and Cyavana were in the ãrâma. They blessed him and advised him to go to Kailâsa and do penance there to propitiate Śiva. It was thus that Paraśûrâma happened to go to Kailâsa to do penance there. (Brahmaṇḍa Purâṇa, Chapter 62).
(2) Cyavana got a son named Pramati. This Pramati was the father of Ruru and the grandfather of Sûnaka. (Chapter 5, Ṇâdi Parva).
(3) Cyavana married Arûṣi daughter of Manu. Aurva was the son born to Arûṣi from her thigh. In descending order from Aurva were born Reika—Jamadagni—Paraśûrâma. (Chapter 66, Ṇâdi Parva).
(4) Āstikâ learnt Sâṅga Vedas from the ãrâma of Cyavana. (Chapter 48, Ṇâdi Parva).
(5) Cyavana was the guru of Bhiṣma. (Slôka 11, Chapter 37, Sânti Parva).
(6) King Yuvanâśva once went to the ãrâma of Cyavana greatly worried over the lack of a descendant. Cyavana prepared some sacred water made potent with the recital of mantras to induce gestation and kept it there. Accidentally the King drank that water and got pregnant. The pregnancy developed without miscarriage and in due time the King gave birth to a child, the left side of his stomach bursting forth to push out the child. It was this child who became Mândhâtâ. (Chapter 126, Vana Parva).
(7) Cyavana was a brilliant member of the court of Brahmâ. (Slôka 11, Chapter 22, Sânti Parva).
(8) Cyavana went to Patâla (nether-world). (See under Kekaralohita).
(9) Once the august Vedaśârmâ of Kauśikagotra went to the ãrâma of Cyavana lost in thought. Cyavana received him with due respect and enquired about the reason for his sorrow. Vedaśârmâ then told him that the lack of a son worried him much. Cyavana then blessed him and assured him of a child soon. (Chapter 14, Padma Purâṇa).
(10) Cyavana had a daughter named Sumanas and she was married to a sage called Somaśârmâ. (Chapter 14, Padma Purâṇa).

Cyavanâśrama. A sacred place. Arûbâ, daughter of Kâśîrâja, used to bathe in a pond nearby. (Slôka 26, Chapter 186, Udyoga Parva).

Cyavanâsarovâram. A sacred place. It is believed that this is the best place for worshipping Pîtras (spirits of the dead). (Slôka 11, Chapter 125, Vana Parva).

D

D. (g) This letter means (1) Rudrâ and (2) tremor or fear (trâsâ). DA. This syllable means ruin. (Agni Purâṇa, Chapter 348).

Dabhitâ. A hermit who is praised much in the Rgveda. It is mentioned in Rgveda, Maññâla 1, Anuvâka 16, Sûkta 112, that the Aśvinidevas had saved Turvîti, Dabhitâ, Dhvasanti and Puruṣânti, the sons of Indra, from a danger.

Dadhîca. (Dadhîca).

1) Birth. A famous hermit. Mention is made of Mahâbhârata, Salya Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 83, that this hermit was the son of the great hermit Bhṛgu, and that he was made of the essences of the world, with a huge body.
2) The birth of the hermit Sârasvatâ. Dadhîca erected his hermitage on the bank of the river Sârasvatî and began to do penance. The power of penance increased daily. Seeing this Indra was flurried. So he sent the celestial maids Alâmbuṣâ to break the penance of Dadhîca somehow or other. Alâmbuṣâ came to the hermitage of Dadhîca and began to dance and sing. When the hermit saw her he grew lustful and seminal discharge occurred to him. The semen fell in the river Sârasvatî, who became pregnant and in due course gave birth to a child. She took the child to the hermit Dadhîca and told him the story of the child. The hermit was much pleased. He took the child and embraced it and blessed the river Sârasvatî thus:

"Brahmâ, the gods and the celestial maids will be pleased if your water is offered as oblation."

Dadhîca then said that the child should be named Sârasvatî. He also added that when there was a drought continuously for twelve years, Sârasvatî would have the power to bring rain. Then Sârasvatî took the child to her abode and brought it up.

3) How he destroyed the asuras with the head of a horse. Once Dadhîca went to the world of the devas (gods). From there he looked down and saw the earth filled with the asuras. Indra went to destroy them. But he could not. So he made a search for anything left behind by Dadhîca. He understood that Dadhîca had with him the head of a horse. It was found in a lake in the country of Sâranya. With the bones taken from that head Indra and Dadhîca destroyed a large number of asuras. (Rgveda, Maññâla 1, Anuvâka 13, Sûkta 84).

4) The weapon (Vajra) of Indra was made from a bone. A story occurs in the Mahâbhârata, which says that the Diamond-weapon of Indra was made of a bone of Dadhîca. The asuras went to fight with Indra under the leadership of Vîtrûrasura. Indra tried his utmost to kill Vîtrûrasura, but he could not. At last Indra approached Brahmâ, who told Indra that if a bone of the hermit, called Dadhîca was obtained it could effectively be used against Vîtra. Accordingly Indra went with Nara and Nârâyana to the banks of the river Sârasvatî and entered the hermitage and bowed before the shining hermit Dadhîca and informed him of their errand. The hermit replied that he had no objection in giving his bone to save the gods. Saying thus the hermit discarded his life. Indra took the bone of Dadhîca and made his weapon of Diamond (Vajra) with which he killed Vîtra and his followers. (Mahâbhârata, Chapter 100).

5) Other information
(1) At the sacrifice of Daksha, Dadhîca got angry because Śiva was not given his dues of the sacrifice. (M.B. Sânti Parva, Chapter 284).
(2) Once Dadhîca talked to a Brâhmin called Karuṇa about the importance of the ashes dedicated to Śiva. (Padma Purâṇa, Chapter 101).
(3) See Dhanaṇjaya V to know how this hermit gave absolution from curse to a fly.

Dadhîca (M). A holy place in Kurukṣetra. Aâtâgirâs the son of Sârasvatî was born in this place. From that day onwards this place became a holy place. It is mentioned in Mahâbhârata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 186 that he who bathes in this holy place will obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice Asvamedha, and enter the world of Sarasvatī.

DADHIMANDODAKA. An ocean. This ocean is near the ocean Ghṛtodamā samudra (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 2).

DADHIMUKHA I. A famous serpent, born to Kaśyapa prajāpati by his wife Kadrū. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 8).

DADHIMUKHA II. A famous monkey. This old monkey was the general of a huge monkey-army. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 283, Stanza 7 that this general approached Śrī Rāma once, with his army.

DADHIVĀHANA. An ancient king of Bhārata. The hermit Gautama saved the son of this King from the attack of Prasūrāma (Mahābhārata, Śaṅti Parva, Chapter 49, Stanza 8).

DADHIVAKTRA. A monkey who helped Śrī Rāma. It is seen in Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Sarga 5, as follows:—

"Dadhimukhah Kruddhasugrivasya mātulah". From this it is understood that Dadhimukha or Dadhivaktra was the uncle of Sugriva. (For further information see Madhuvana).

DADHYA. 1. A hermit. Once Indra taught this hermit Madhuvidyā (the art of mead) Indra told the hermit that his head would be cut off if he taught anybody this art. The Āśvinidevas approached Dadhyā to learn this art. Fearing Indra the hermit refused to teach them this art. Āśvinidevas cut off his head and buried it in a place. Then they cut off the head of a horse and fixed it on the neck of Dadhyā. Having the head of the horse he taught the art to the Āśvinidevas. When Dadhyā had finished teaching, they took away the head of the horse and fixed his own head in place. (Ṛgveda, Manuśāla 1, Anuvāka, 17, Sūkta 166).

DAHA I. One of the eleven Rudras. He was the grand-son of Brahmā and the son of Sthānau. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 3).

DAHA II. An attendant given to Subrahmanya by Amśa, a god. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 34).

DAHADĀHA. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 20).

DAHATI. A warrior given to Subrahmanya by god Amśa. Mention is made about this warrior in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 34.

DAIVA I. Almighty God. (See Iśvara).

DAIVA II. A kind of marriage. The form of marriage by which one gives his daughter to a priest. (See Viśāha).

DAIVĀLĪKA. A country. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 18, that the King and the people of Daivālīka were present on the occasion of the sacrifice of Rājāsthyā (imperial consecration) of Yudhisṭhira.

DAIVASAMPATTI. The virtues of those who are born of a noble family.

"The Bharata ! Security, knowledge of tattvas the desire to attain harmony with the Supreme Being by the knowledge of Brahman, alms-giving, self-restraint, performing sacrifice, self-study, penance, sincerity, truth, liberality, continence, kindness, mildness, modesty, resolution, cleanliness, forgiveness, brightness, abstaining from committing murder and getting angry, having no malignity, covetousness, fickleness and pride and not injuring others are the Daivasampatti or good qualities of a noble man." (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 40).

DAVITADĪPA. One of the sons of Gāruḍa. Mention is made about Daityadīpa in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 11.

DAVITASYENA. Sister of Devasenā, the wife of Subrahmanya. Keśi, an asura, married her. (For detailed story, see Devasenā).

DĀKINĪ. A class of women supposed to be proficient in magic and the performance of feats with the help of mantras. (See Kṣuraka).

DAKṢA

1) Two Dakṣas. In most of the Purāṇas references about two Dakṣas occur. In some purāṇas both are referred to as one and the same person, whereas in some others both are considered as separate persons, so much so the stories concerning both are interlocked and entangled very often. The fact is that there was only one Dakṣa, whose life was of two stages. The first Dakṣa was killed at the sacrifice of Dakṣa, at which point, ends the first stage, or the first Dakṣa. The second stage was the rebirth of the same Dakṣa. A short biography of Dakṣa including both stages is given below:—

Brahmā created by his mind, the seven great hermits, Marīcī, Aṅgirās, Atri, Pulastya, Vāsiṣṭha, Pulaha and Kratu. So these seven hermits are called the Mānasaputras (sons born from mind) of Brahmā. After this, from the anger of Brahmā, Rudra was born, and from his lap Nārada, from his right thumb Dakṣa, from his mind the Sanakas and from his left thumb a daughter named Vīraṇi were born.

Vīraṇi nāma tasyā stū asiniyāpi sattamā
From this passage which occurs in Kālīkā Purāṇa it may be assumed that 'Asiknī' was another name of Vīraṇi. Dakṣa did penance in the mountain of Vindhaya for a long time. It is mentioned in Bhāṣavatā, Skandha 8, that Mahāvīśnu appeared before Dakṣa and gave him Asiknī as his wife.

Several sons were born to Dakṣa by his wife Asiknī. The last one was a daughter named Satī who became the wife of Śiva. At this time Dakṣa performed a sacrifice. As he was not invited to that sacrifice, Śiva sent Virabhadrā and Bhadrakāli and killed Dakṣa. Though the devas put the head of a goat in place of the lost head and brought Dakṣa to life again, no reference is made about the life of Dakṣa after the sacrifice. Thus the first stage of the life of Dakṣa ends. (Devī Bhāṣavatā, Skandha 7).

After this, once the Pacchasees (the ten sons of Barhis) were engaged in penance and the earth was not properly cultivated in consequence of which big trees grew up and the whole of the earth was changed into a big forest. The sky was covered with tree tops. It was difficult even for the wind to pass through them and thus the forest thrived for ten thousand years. The Pracetas got out of the sea after penance and entered the shore. When they saw the big forest they got angry and the ten of them discharged fire and wind from their faces. The wind up-rooted the trees and the fire dried them. Thus almost the whole of the trees were consumed. Then Candara, the King of the medicinal herbs came there and told the Pracetas, "Oh, Kings, hold your anger. I will make the trees conclude a treaty with you. The beautiful Mārisā who was born to the trees is my foster-daughter. I give her to you as your wife. From half the portion of your minds and half the portion of my mind the great and wise Prajāpāti Dakṣa is going to take birth in her womb". The Pracetas controlled their anger and accepted Mārisā as their wife, at the words of Somadeva (Candra) and as the son of the ten Pracetas the Prajāpāti Dakṣa was born. With this the second stage of the life of Dakṣa begins. The important occurrences in the two stages of the life of Dakṣa are given below in their order.

2) Dakṣa's creation of the prajā or subjects. Once Brahmā called Dakṣa and ordered him to create prajās or subjects. Accordingly Dakṣa created the gods, the hermits, the Gandharvas (Demi-gods), the Asuras, the serpents etc. Seeing that the subjects he created were not proliferating as required he thought of creating subjects by coition of male and female; and he begot by his wife Asiknī five thousand sons, and they were called Haryāsvas. They in their turn were about to create subjects when Ārjuna appeared before them and said "Oh, Haryāsvas, you are mere children and ignorant of the secrets of this world. How do you intend to create subjects? You fools, since you have the power to go up and down and lengthwise and breadthwise, why don't you try to find out the extremities of the earth?" Hearing the words of Ārjuna, they all ran in different directions and have not returned since. Thus Dakṣa lost the Haryāsvas. Dakṣa again begot thousand sons by Asiknī and they were called Sabalāsvas. Seeing that they also were about to create subjects Nārada scattered them also, by some tricks. The Sabalāsvas who had gone to see the end of the earth have not yet returned.

Dakṣa got angry with Nārada and cursed him thus: "You also, like my children shall wander from place to place all over the earth". From that day onwards Nārada became a wanderer, without a fixed dwelling place. The wise Prajāpati Dakṣa again begot sixty damsels by Asiknī. Ten of the girls were given to Dharmadeva, thirteen of them to Kaśyapa, twenty-seven of them to Soma, and four of them to Āriṣṭānemi. Of the rest two were given to Bāhubhuputra, two to Anirūdas and two to the wise Kṛṣṇāśvā. The names of the wives of each are given below:—

1) Kaśyapa. Aditi, Diti, Danu, Āriṣṭā, Surasā, Khasā, Surabhi, Vinātā, Tāmrā, Krodhavāsā, Irā, Kadrū, Munī.

The names of the wives given to Anirūda, Āriṣṭānemi, Bāhubhuputra and Kṛṣṇāśvā are not mentioned.

Besides these damsels, twentyfour daughters were born to Dakṣa of his wife Praṣūti who was the sister of Uttanāpāda. Dharmadeva married thirteen of them also, named Sradhā, Lakṣmī, Dhrīti, Śrutī, Medhā, Puṣṭi, Kriyā, Buddhī, Lajā, Vapus, Sānti, Siddhī, Kīrti. Of the rest, Khyāiti was given to Bhṛgu, Śaṭi to Śiva, Santihāti to Marici, Śrīti to Anirūdas, Pritei to Pulastya, Kṣamā to Pulaha, Santati to Kratu, Anasūyā to Atri, Urbā to Vasiṣṭha, Śvāhā to Agnideva and Śvadhā to the Manes. (Vīṣṇu Purāṇa, Atri 1, Chapter 15).

3) Sacrifice of Dakṣa. Once Dakṣa performed a sacrifice called Bṛhaspativasana. To this sacrifice he did not invite his daughter Śatī or her husband Śiva. Dakṣa did not invite them because of three reasons according to the Purāṇas.

1) Once Durvāsas, the son of Atri, went to Jambūnāda and meditated with the mantra or spell of Māyañijña and worshipped Jagadambikā (mother of the world) the goddess there. The goddess was much pleased and gave him as a token of her pleasure the garland of flowers she wore from which nectar was oozing. Durvāsas wore it on his head and went to the palace of Dakṣa, the Prajāpati. When he saw such a wonderful garland which was not of this world, he wanted to have it and Durvāsas instantly gave it to Dakṣa. He placed it in a prominent place in his bedroom and enjoying the wonderful fragrance of it he conjugated with his wife, and polluted that pure garland by his lust. Śiva and his wife came to know of this and they scolded Dakṣa, who kept this bitterness in his heart and when the sacrifice was performed, he decided not to invite them. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

2) Śiva was considered as a polluted man by Dakṣa as he had always been carrying with him the skull of Brahmā and so he thought it wrong on his part to admit his daughter and son-in-law to the sacrificial hall. The story of how Śiva came to have the skull, is given below. In days of old when the whole world was under the single ocean (of the great flood) the sun, the moon, the fire, air everything was destroyed and darkness prevailed. All the vegetations were destroyed. All the emotions and non-emotions disappeared. The supreme Lord was sleeping for so many thousands of nights together. At the end of the night he assumed the attribute of Rajoguṇa (activity) and got ready to create the universe. From the face of the Supreme Lord and creator of the universes came out Brahmā with five faces. In the same way, Śiva with three eyes and matted hair, and trident and rosary of heads (Elas carpus) and with attribute of Tamas (darkness-destruction) also came out. Both Brahmā and Śiva were filled with egoism and both began to quarrel with each other. It was a contest as to who was greater. The contest ended in attack. Śiva plucked off the fifth head of Brahmā, when the same face, flushed with anger, scolded Śiva. The head fell into the hands of Śiva, who could not throw it down as it didn't come off from his hand. Brahmā cursed Śiva and made him polluted. Since Śiva became polluted, his wife Satī also was considered as polluted by Dakṣa. (Vāmanā Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

(3) Once the prajāpatis performed a sacrifice. Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Siva were present there. Dakṣa, who had been invited by the prajāpatis also was present. When Dakṣa entered the hall his son-in-law Siva did not rise up. This arrogance of Siva made Dakṣa angry. Dakṣa made up his mind to take vengeance on Siva, and performed a sacrifice known as Bhāsapatisavana. To that sacrifice he did not invite Siva or Satī.

Hearing that her father was conducting a sacrifice Satī came uninvited. But Dakṣa did not even look at her. Satīdevi whose heart was broken at this treatment made a fire and jumped into it and died. Siva became furious when he came to know of this. Being overwhelmed with sorrow and anger he beat his matted hair on the ground, from which two monsters, Virabhadra and Bhadrakāli, came out. They ran to Dakṣa’s sacrificial hall and destroyed everything they saw, killed everybody, caught hold of Dakṣa and cut off his head. Then they began to create havoc in the whole world. The hermits and sages began to take to flight. Men and animals shivered. Thus the three worlds began to tremble with fear. The gods approached Siva with supplication to curb his anger. The gracious Saṅkarā was pleased to recall the monsters. After that everybody requested him to bring Dakṣa back to life. But the search made for the head of Dakṣa was futile. At last Brahmā took the head of a goat and joined it to the headless trunk of Dakṣa. Thus he was brought to life again.¹ (Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 7).

4) Cursing Candra. Candra had married twenty-seven daughters of Dakṣa. But he showed particular attachment to Rohiṇī. The other twenty-six wives could not bear this. They made a complaint to their father Dakṣa. Dakṣa called Candra and advised him to show equal attachment to all his wives and not to show any partiality to anyone. Candra did not gainsay his father-in-law, but he did not make any change in his disposition. After a few days all the daughters except Rohiṇī went to the palace of Dakṣa and told him that they were going to stay with him. This time Dakṣa got angry and called Candra and cursed him to become a sick man (of consumption).

From that day onwards Candra became a patient affected with consumption. All the vegetables in the world began to weaken. It appeared that the world was about to be destroyed. So the gods approached Dakṣa and requested him to show some leniency towards Candra. Dakṣa accordingly called Candra and told him that he would be affected by consumption only for a fortnight and after that he would recover gradually. Candra went to Prabhāśa tirtha and Sarasvatī tirtha and dipped in water. He began to recover from that day. This is according to the curse of Dakṣa that Candra (Moon) waxes and wanes. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 35).

5) Other information.

(1) Dakṣa has another name ‘Kan’.

"Dakṣa the Prajāpati is a son of ten fathers. He has two names. They are Daksā and Kan." (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 206, Stanza 7).

(2) When the emperor Pṛthu milked the earth, Dakṣa was crowned as the King of the subjects. (See under Pṛthu).

(3) It occurs in Mahābhārata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 18, that Dakṣa was a member of the assembly of Brahmā.

(4) Dakṣa was one of those who visited Bhīṣma in his bed of arrows. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 47).

(5) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Santi Parva, Chapter 166 that the devas, the manes, the gandharvas, the celestial maids, the Rakṣasas, animals and birds, fishes and all living creatures were born from the daughters of Dakṣa.

DAKṢĀŚVARĀ. The name of the ninth Manu. During the reign of this Manu, there will be three classes of devas (gods) called the Parnas, the Marici-garbhas and the Sudharmans. Each of these gaṇas or classes will consist of twelve devas or gods. Indra, their King will be known as Adbhuta. He will be mighty and powerful. In that Manvantara (age of the Manu) Savana, Duyumān, Bhavaya, Vasu, Medhātithi, Jyoṭiṣmān and Satya will be the Saptarṣis (the seven hermits and Dhṛṣṭaketu, Dīptiketu, Pańcachāsta, Nirāmaya, Pṛthu-rava and others will be the sons of Manu, Dakṣāśavarāni. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Arīṣa 1, Chapter 2).

DAKṢĀŚAYANĪ. Daughter of Dakṣa. This name is generally used for all the daughters of Dakṣa. Occasionally this name is used for the grand daughters of Dakṣa also.

DAKṢINĀ. A daughter, born to Prajāpati Ruci, by his wife Akūtī. The first Manu was Śvayambhuva, the son of Brahmā. He accepted Satārūpā, his sister who became sinless by penance, as his wife. Satārūpā gave birth to two sons Priyavrata and Utānapāda, and two daughters, Prasūti and Akūtī. Of these two daughters, Prasūti was given to Prajāpati Daksā and Akūtī to Prajāpati Ruci. Akūtī gave birth to twins, a son named Yajña and a daughter named Dakṣinā. To Yajña twelve sons were born by Dakṣinā. They were a class of devas (gods) called the Yānas in the regime of Manu Śvayambhuva (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Arīṣa 1, Chapter 7). Now Dakṣinā is worshipped as a goddess. The same Dakṣinā was reborn in the Goloka under the name Suṣilā. At that time she was a cowherd woman and friend of Rādhā. She liked to talk with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. One day Rādhā saw her sitting in the lap of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, engaged in sexual sports, in a secluded place. When Suṣilā saw that Rādhā had found them out, she became dumbfounded with shame, and sat with bowed head. Śrī Kṛṣṇa slowly placed Suṣilā devi down and instantly vanished. The angry Rādhā cursed Suṣilā to become ashes if ever she entered the Goloka again. Then Rādhā ran about everywhere in search of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, but he could not be found.

Immediately after the curse, Suṣilā got down from the Goloka and began to worship Mahālakṣmi with devotion and meditation and very severe fast and vow. After a long time Mahālakṣmi appeared to her and blessed her, and Suṣilā became absorbed in Mahālakṣmi. Since the absorption of Suṣilā devi, who was the rebirth of Dakṣinādevi, in Mahālakṣmi, the sacrifice of the devas (gods) became fruitless. They were much grieved. They all went to Brahmā to find a solution. As the matter was serious Brahmā meditated upon Viṣṇu, who became pleased with Brahmā and to save the devas, he attracted Daksinādevī from the body of Mahālakṣmi and gave her as a present to Brahmā. Brahmā gave that devī (goddess) to Yajñaphuṣa (the god of sacrifice) so that the sacrifices of gods might become fruitful. When Yajñaphuṣa saw that supernatural beauty he was overpowered by lust and swooned. The couple spent a hundred divine years in seclusion enjoying the company of each other, as a result of which devī became pregnant. The pregnancy matured in twelve divine years and she gave birth to a child which was named Phalada. It is this same Phalada, the son of Yajñaphuṣa and Daksinā who awards fruits to all actions. The learned men say that Yajñaphuṣa, Daksinādevī and Phalada divide the fruits of actions among the doers. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

DĀKSĪNĀGNI. A strong wind born from the fire Pāñcagajanya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 229, Stanza 6).

DĀKSĪNAKAILĀSA. Kālahasti, Trīśivaperoor and Trikonamala are known by the name Dāksīnakailāsa.

DĀKTI. AMALLA. A country in ancient India. This country is called Mallarājya. Its capital was Kuśīnagara or Kuśīnara. In Mahābhārata mention is made that Bhūmasena, during his conquest brought this country under control. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30).

DĀKSĪNAPĀNÇĀLA. A place famous in the Purāṇas. This place lies to the south of the Ganges up to the river Carināp. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 27, that the King of this country fled to the south fearing Jarāsandha. Pāñcāla lies to the south and north of the Ganges. But the country was divided into two when Droṇa defeated Drupada the King of Pāñcāla, and took away from him the part of the country north of the Ganges. After that, the part taken by Droṇa was called Uttarapānçāla and the part south of the Ganges was called Daksinapānçāla. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 137).

DĀKSĪNASINDHU. A holy place. This place is on the shore of the southern sea. If one visits this place and takes bath there he will get the fruits of performing the sacrifice of Agniṣṭoma, and the opportunity of travelling by the aeroplane of the gods. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 53).

DĀKSĪNĀTAYAS. The people of South India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 2, that at the time of the composing of the Mahābhārata, the leader of the Dāksīnātayas was the emperor Bhīṣmaka.

DĀLA. The son of King Parīṣkit of the dynasty of Ikṣvakū. The mother of Dāla was Suṣobhanā, the daughter of the King of Manḍūka. Dāla had an elder brother called Śala. Dāla became king when Śala was killed. Hermit Vāmadeva was the priest of this King. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 192). See Parīṣkit II.

DĀLBHYA (BAKADĀLBHYA). A Mahārṣi of Naimiṣāranya. In Vāmana Purāṇa, there is a story of how this sage once performed a homa and burnt Dhrtarāṣṭra’s kingdom in the sacrificial fire. Long ago some of the sages of Naimiṣāranya approached Dhrtarāṣṭra with a request for some money. Their leader was the sage Dālbhya (Baka). It was he who begged Dhrtarāṣṭra for money. The king not only refused to give money, but also insulted the sage. Provoked at this, Dālbhya began performing a homa in which Dhrtarāṣṭra’s kingdom was the havis in the form of sliced meat. This homa was performed in Avakirṇa-mahātīrtha at Pṛthūdaka. As a result of it the kingdom began to decline. The King was alarmed and consulted great scholars and astrologers about the cause of the country’s decline. They told him that the cause of the disaster was Dālbhya’s homa. Dhrtarāṣṭra at once proceeded with rich presents to propitiate Dālbhya at Avakirṇamahātīrtha. Dālbhya was pleased and as desired by the King, performed homa with milk and honey and revived all those who had died. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 39).

Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 11 says that this Mahārṣi flourished in Yudhiṣṭhīra’s assembly. On another occasion, he is referred to, as coming to Dyuṃatsena, the father of Satyavān. At that time, he comforted Dyuṃatsena by saying that Satyavān would be blessed with longevity. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 298, Verse 17).

DĀLBHYAYAM. A holy place in North India. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 12).

DĀLBHYAGHOSA. Another name for the holy āśrama, Dālbhyam.

DAMA I. The brother of Damayantī. No other information about Dama is available in the Purāṇas.

DAMA II. A hermit. He was one of the hermits who came to visit Bhīṣma when he was lying on the bed of arrows. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 4).

DAMA. See Saṁbara.

DAMA. A female attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Saḷy Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 5).

DAMAÇANDRA. A King. He was a mighty hero and a friend of Dharmaputra. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 40).

DAMAĜHOŠA. The father of Śiṣūpāla, the King of Cedi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 86).

DAMA NA I. A brother of Damayantī. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 8 it is mentioned that King Bhīṣma had a daughter named Damayantī, and three sons named Dama, Dānta and Damana.

DAMA NA II. A hermit. Bhīṣma the King of Vidarbha pleased this hermit, who blessed the King and said that he would get children. Accordingly the king got Damaṇyantī as his daughter and Dama, Dānta and Damana as his sons. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 53).

DAMA NA III. The son of the King Paurava. Dhrstagyūnna killed Damana in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 20).

DAMA NA IV. The son of Bharadvāja. After the investiture with the Brahma string (upanayana) Damana started on a travel. On the way near Amaṇḍakaṇṭha he met with the hermit Garga who talked to him about the glory of Kāśī. Damana who was a seer of spiritual knowledge, stopped his travel and sat down to do penance and thus leaving his body he attained heaven. (Skanda Purāṇa, Chapter 2, 4, 74).

DAMA NAKA I. One of characters in a story, of Pañcatantra. (See Mitrabhedam).

DAMA NAKA II. A dāitya (āśura) Mahāviṣṇu in his incarnation as Matsya (Matsyāvatāra), killed this āśura who was a dweller of the sea. Viṣṇu threw the body of the āśura into the earth. By the touch of the Lord the body became fragrant and it was changed to a plant which is known as (Kozhunnu or Kozhunthu) Damanakam. (Skanda Purāṇa).
DAMANAKAM. The Tātiri tree (Grislea Tomentosa). The ceremony of worshipping this tree is called Damana-kārohaṇavīdhi. The Grislea tree is supposed to be Bhairava, who had been changed to a tree by the curse of Śiva. A story to this effect occurs in the Purāṇas. Bhairava was formed from the anger of Śiva. Bhairava, against the will of Śiva, destroyed the devas, and so Śiva cursed him and turned him to a Tātiri tree. It is called Damanaka because Bhairava tried to do ‘damana’ (restraint or punishment) to the gods. Bhairava felt sorry at the curse of Śiva. He requested Śiva to withdraw the curse. At last Śiva had pity on him and said that all would worship Damanaka tree. The method of that worship is called Damanakārohaṇa-vīdhi. It is given below:

This tree should be worshipped on the seventh or thirteenth lunar day. The worshipper should go to the tree, with those who recite mantras and spells. After the worship is over the worshipper should say, “O, Tree, which has originated by the power of Hari, you come to my presence. On behalf of Śiva, and by his order, I have to take you home.” Saying thus the tree should be taken home and consecrated in the evening in accordance with the rituals. In the house, the Sun, Śiva and Agni should be evoked and worshipped and then the root of the tree should be planted in the Tāna (N.E. point) corner of the house and when it is planted, the spell or incantation of Vāmadeva Mantra or Siromantra should be recited. In the same way the trunk with the branches of the tree is planted on the Northern part. The fallen leaves and flowers should be placed on the eastern side. When the root is planted the following prayer should be uttered:

Āmantritōi devea
praṭāḥ kāle mayā prabho/
Kartavyastapaso labhāḥ
Pūraṇāṁ sarvaṁ tāvānāya.//

After that at dawn he should take bath and with oblations of sweet-smelling flowers etc. should worship Śiva. This is Damanakārohaṇa-vīdhi. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 80).

DAMAYANTI Daughter of Bhīma the King of Vidarbha. The most noble of all the Indian heroines, Damayanti has secured a place in the literatures of almost all the languages in the world. The famous hero Nala is her husband.

1) The background of the story of Nala. During the time of the forest life of the Pāṇḍavas, Arjuna had gone to Kailāsa to do penance before Śiva for getting divine weapons. The rest of the Pāṇḍavas spent the time till the arrival of Arjuna, in sorrow and sadness. They spent miserable days one by one. At that time the hermit Bṛhadāva visited them. They welcomed the hermit. In the midst of their conversation Dharma-putra told the hermit with tears that he was the most unhappy man in the world. Hearing this the hermit told them the story of Nala, to console the Pāṇḍavas.

2) The birth of Damayanti. The King Bhīma of Vidarbha was childless for a long time. While the King was spending sorrowful days, as he had no children, a hermit named Dama reached his palace. The King welcomed the hermit. Seeing the sorrow of the King the hermit blessed the King and the queen, and as a result a daughter named Damayanti and as her brothers three sons Dama, Dūnta and Damana were born to them.

3) The Svaṇavara (marriage) of Damayanti. During this period a son named Nala was born to Vīrasena the King of Nisadha. The child was an expert in the game of dice and he would speak only truth. He grew up and became a youth.

Once the swans which came to the palace of Damayanti from Nala, began to praise Nala. They sang about the glory of Nala. Nala also knew about the beauty and the other good qualities of Damayanti. Thus they fell in love with each other. Nala also started for Kuṇḍinapuri, the capital city of Vidarbha, to marry Damayanti. The devas (gods) Indra, Agni, Varuṇa and Yama, having heard of the beauty of Damayanti from Nārada, had gone Kuṇḍinapuri, to take part in the marriage. On the way they met Nala. They were aware of the fact that Damayanti was in love with Nala. So they called Nala and sent him to Damayanti with a message that Damayanti should accept one of the four gods as her husband. By the boon of invisibility, given by the Gods, Nala entered the room of Damayanti unseen by others and gave the message to Damayanti. But Damayanti ‘did not agree to it. The Gods also entered the nuptial hall and took their seats in the shape of four Nalas. Damayanti entered the hall with the nuptial garland in her hands. She saw five Nalas including the real Nala, and prayed to the gods to show her the real Nala her lover. So the devas assumed their real forms and Damayanti put the garland on the neck of the real Nala and accepted him as her husband. Being much pleased with the behaviour and character of both Nala and Damayanti, the four gods blessed them. Agni promised to be near Nala whenever he thought of him. Yama said that Nala would always be righteous. Varuṇa said that Nala would obtain water at the thought of it. Indra blessed him saying that he would get moksā immediately after the completion of a yāga. The gods remained till the end of the marriage ceremony and then they departed. Nala and Damayanti lived in Kuṇḍinapuri.

4) The hatred between Kali and Dvāpara. Hearing about the Svaṇavara of Damayanti Kali and Dvāpara started for Kuṇḍinapuri. On the way they met Indra and the other gods, who were returning from the marriage of Damayanti. They told Kali and Dvāpara that Damayanti had accepted Nala as her husband. Kali and Dvāpara got angry at this and returned saying that they would destroy the kingdom of Nala. After that Kali waited for a chance to enter the body of Nala. After twelve years, once Nala, after passing urine, without washing his legs performed his evening worship. At that moment Kali entered the body of Nala. With that Nala became bereft of all senses of righteousness and duty, and challenged his younger brother Puṣkara to a game of dice. Puṣkara engaged Nala in the game of dice. Kali stood in the shape of an ox as helper of Nala. Nala lost his kingdom in the game. Seeing that her husband was being defeated continuously, Damayanti sent for the charioteer Vārṣeṇya and sent her son Indrasena and daughter Indrasena to Kuṇḍinapuri. After leaving the children at Kuṇḍinapuri Vārṣeṇya engaged himself in a travel. After visiting several countries he reached Ayodhyā and became the charioteer of King Rtuparna.
5) Nala and Damayanti to the forest. Puskara got the kingdom, wealth and everything that his elder brother, Nala, had possessed. The miserable Nala left everything he had and clad in only one cloth got out of the palace. His wife Damayanti followed him. They stayed outside the city for three days. Puskara made a proclamation that if anybody rendered any help to Nala he would be ruthlessly put to death. After that Nala stayed there for three more days, with only water for food and drink. Then he went to the forest. His wife followed him. They were hungry. Nala saw some golden birds.
Nala wanted to catch them for food. So he took his only cloth and spread it on the ground. The birds took that cloth and flew away. Those birds were the dices used in the game. They were influenced by Kali. The miserable and hungerstricken Nala asked his wife Damayanti to go with the caravan traders who were going to Avanti and save herself. But she did not consent to go away from him.
They spent that night in an inn. They both fell asleep because of weakness. After a time Nala woke up. He thought that his wife would somehow or other get to some country closely and save herself, if he left her there. So he decided to take half of her cloth.
How to do it without her knowledge? Thinking so he walked round the inn. He saw a good sword. He took the sword, and cut half of the cloth of Damayanti and leaving her in the inn he went away.
In a short while she woke up and missing her husband she cried aloud and ran here and there in search of him. Then she went into the forest crying. A big snake cought hold of her and began to swallow her. She cried aloud. Hearing the cry, a forester came there. He cut the snake open and saved Damayanti. But when he saw her he became overpowered by libido and tried to make her his wife. She got angry and cursed him and he instantly fell down dead. After this she began to wander in the forest aimlessly, often seeing wild animals and fearing them. At last she got on a rock and sat there and began to wail thinking of Nala.
6) Damayanti in the kingdom of Cedi. While she was sitting on the rock wailing, a caravan of traders came by that way. They had been attacked by a herd of elephants and were running away from them. They saw Damayanti. She told them her story. They brought her to the kingdom of Cedi. She wandered through the country for a whole and finally reached the palace of the King Subahu. Thinking her to be a mad woman the street boys were following her. The queen saw the woman surrounded by street boys and felt pity for her. She sent her maid and brought her to the palace. Without revealing that she was the queen of King Nala, she told everything else to the queen.
The queen consoled her and said that she would get her husband back. She invited Damayanti to stay in the palace till she got her husband back. Damayanti replied as follows: "Mother, I shall stay here. But there are certain conditions. I won't eat remains and offals of victuals, I won't make others to wash my legs.
I won't talk with men who are not related to me. If anybody hankers after me you must order him to be killed. Brāhmaṇas may come and see me only in connection with the search for my husband. This is my vow." The queen agreed to her conditions and made her the attendant of her daughter Sunandā.
7) Nala in Ayodhya. Nala filled with sorrow was walking along the forest when he saw a wild fire. From the midst of the fire somebody was calling Nala by name and crying. When Nala approached the fire, he saw the great and famous serpent Karkotaka lying entwined in the flames. Karkotaka the King of the Nāgas had once deceived Nārada, who then cursed him that he would become stationary in a place like an immovable thing till Nala came and rescued him. From that day onwards, Karkotaka was remaining in that forest without moving. Then the forest caught fire. Karkotaka being unable to move had to remain in the fire. Nala immediately saved Karkotaka from the fire and with that he was absolved from the curse of Nārada. Kar-kotaka asked Nala to walk forward, counting the steps.
When Nala counted ten, Karkotaka bit on the leg of Nala and he became ugly. Then the serpent said to the flurried Nala, "Don't fear. I have made you ugly so that others may not recognize you. Now you are ugly because of my poison. But my poison has affected Kali who is in your body. Because he had harmed you who are blameless, he has to suffer for it. So long as this poison is in you, nobody will harm you. You must go to Rtuparna the King of Ayodhya and tell him that you are Bāhuka a charioteer. You must give Rtuparna the spell 'Āsvahṛdaya mantra' and get from him the spell 'Āksahṛdayamantra'. After that you will have reunion with your wife and children.
Here are two cloths for you. Whenever you want to get your original form you need only wear them."
Saying these words Karkotaka gave Nala two divine garments and then disappeared.
Nala started for Ayodhya. He reached the palace on the tenth day. There he was employed as the horse keeper of Rtuparna on a pay of hundred pieces of gold. Thus he stayed there under the name Bāhuka. Vārṣṇeya and Jivala who were the horse-keepers of Rtuparna up to that time, were placed under Bāhuka.
Bāhuka used to recite a poem every evening when he returned from his work.
Weary and worn of hunger and thirst,
That poor woman, where might she be?
Serving whom will she be now.
Thinking of the unlucky fool?
Hearing this song of lamentation everyday, once his assistant Jivala asked Bāhuka, whom he was reciting the poem about. Bāhuka replied: "Once there was a man who was a fool. He got a good wife. For some reason they were separated. The fool is still wandering about weary and sad in search of his wife.".
8) Damayanti in Kayādpura. At this time Damayanti was living in the palace of the King of Cedi, as the maid of princess Sunandā. King Bhima became very sorry not knowing where Nala and Damayanti had gone. He sent men in all directions to search for them. The King proclaimed that those who found them would be awarded thousand cows, lands assigned to Brāhmaṇins, and villages. He proclaimed that so many cows would be given even to those who could give any information about them. Hearing this Brāhmanans went in all directions and Sudeva, one of them, reached the Kingdom of Cedi. He recognized Damayanti who was like fire inside the cover of smoke. When Damayanti was alone Sudeva approached her and said that he had come from Vidarbha and that he was a friend of Damayanti's brother. Damayanti recognized Sudeva and she cried aloud. Sunandá who saw this scene, told her mother about it. The queen sent for Sudeva and asked him what the matter was. He revealed everything about Damayanti, to the queen.
When they heard the story all the women in the harem cried. Then with tears the queen said, "Hear this, Damayanti, your mother and myself are the two daughters of Sudama the King of Daśāmā. Father gave your mother to Bhima the King of Vidarbha and me to Virabahu the King of Cedi. I have seen you when you were an infant."
When the King of Cedi knew everything he sent Damayanti in a palanquin to Vidarbha.
9) The search for Nala. Damayanti told her father that she didn't want to live any longer unless Nala was brought to her. Bhima had been trying hard to find out Nala. Nala was kept by Patanjá, one of the numerous Brahmins who were engaged in the search for Nala. She came to Bhima and said, "while I was wandering from place to place, I happened to reach the palace of Rūp-purna the King of Ayodhya. There I made enquiries about Nala the husband of Damayanti, in the precence of the King. But nobody gave me any answer.

When I returned Bāhuka the charioteer of Rūpurna followed me. An ugly man with short hands, an exper}t in driving horses, and an excellent cook, he asked me several questions about Damayanti."
When Damayanti heard this she had horripilation.
She secretly went to her mother and compelled her to send Sudeva the Bṛāhmaṇa to Ayodhya. Her mother consented. She called Sudeva, in the presence of her mother and told him to go to Ayodhya and tell Rūpurna that the second svayāvara (marriage) of Damayanti would take place before sunrise next day and that he should come earlier. Sudeva instantly went to Ayodhya.
Rūpurna, hearing the words of Sudeva, wanted Bāhuka to take him in the chariot to Vidarbha within the period of a day's time for the second svayāvara of Damayanti. Nala consented with a breaking heart.
Immediately they started. Vṛṣṇeya also got into the chariot. The chariot flew through the sky with tremendous speed, to Vidarbha. On the way the upper garment of the King fell on the ground. He ordered the chariot to be stopped for taking his upper garment.
Nala said that with that winking time the chariot had travelled a yojana (league) and gloried in his power of driving horses. Then they saw in the forest a Tanni tree (Terminalia belerica) with fruits. Seeing the Tanni tree the King said, "O Bāhuka, if you are an expert in horse-driving I am an expert in reckoning.
I will tell you how many leaves and nuts there are in that Tanni Tree. There are five crops of leaves in both the branches together and two thousand and ninetyfive nuts. They stopped the chariot and checked the tree and found the reckoning of the King correct.
The King had the knowledge of the art called 'Aksa-hadayā'. It was with this art that the king calculated the number of leaves in the tree, at one look. Bāhuka drove the chariot with the speed of wind because he had known the art called 'Asvahṛdayā'. Then and there, Bāhuka taught the King the art of 'Asvahṛdayā' and the King taught Bāhuka the art of 'Aksahṛdayā'. The moment Nala learned Aksahṛdayā Kali vomitted the poison of Karkotaka and got out of the body of Nala. Long ago, the mother of Indrasena, a god, had cursed Kali and drove him out. Since then Kali had been living in the body of Nala. As soon as he came out Kali begged Nala for pardon. Nala cursed his anger, but Kali was afraid of Nala. So he made the Tanni tree his abode. Because of that Tanni became detectable.
Rūpurna, Vṛṣṇeya and Bāhuka reached Kuṇḍina-pura in the evening. When the sound of the chariot of Nala reached the ears of Damayanti her heart bumped with joy. The chariot was stopped and Rūpurna entered the palace. The King Bhima welcomed Rūpurna heartily. As there was no sign of any preparation for the svayāvara (marriage) Rūpurna understood that some sort of trick had been played on him.
10) Test of Nala. Damayanti sent her maid Kesīni to Bāhuka to watch him. Kesīni had a secret talk with Bāhuka. Though Nala did not reveal himself, he cried when she talked about Damayanti. Kesīni returned to Damayanti and told her what she had heard and seen. Damayanti became more and more convinced that Bāhuka was Nala himself. So she sent Kesīni again to Nala. She discovered the following facts about Bāhuka, after a keen observation, and made a report of them.
(1) Bāhuka does not stop to pass through even a small door. The upper sill lifts by itself for him to pass through.
(2) He gets enough room for him to pass through even a big crowd.
(3) Empty pots are filled with water at a look from him.
(4) When he stretches out a grass to the sun, it catches fire.
(5) Fire does not burn him even if he touches it.
(6) When he crushes a flower, it blooms more beautiful and fragrant than before.
When Kesīni said all these facts to Damayanti, she became fully convinced that Bāhuka was none other than Nala himself. Damayanti sent Kesīni again to Bāhuka to get some meat cooked by him. Damayanti tested the taste of the meat brought by Kesīni and she knew that the food was cooked by Nala. She sent Kesīni again to Bāhuka with her children. Seeing Indrasena and Indrasena coming to him, Bāhuka ran to them, gathered them and embraced them and cried aloud. Then he told Kesīni that he had done so because the children were just like his two children.
11) Reunion. After having tested Bāhuka so far Da-mayanti sent Kesīni to her mother to tell her everything, and to say that she was convinced of the fact that Bāhuka was none other than Nala and that the difference was only in shape and to request that she may be permitted to see Bāhuka in person. The queen informed the King of all these facts. With the permission of her parents Bāhuka was brought to the room of Damayanti. The moment Bāhuka saw Damayanti he began to shed tears. Damayanti also was filled with emotion. But she told him thus:
"Bāhuka, have you seen a man who had left his sleeping wife in the forest? Who else, but Nala the famous and the righteous would discard his blameless and loving wife who had been sleeping, with fatigue and hunger in a lonely place? Have I done anything wrong to him in my younger days so that he should leave me in the forest when I was sleeping? Leaving aside real gods I married him. I worshipped him. I had children from his blood and now he has abandoned me. In the presence of Gods and with fire as witness, holding my ‘hands he had taken a vow that he would support and protect me. Where has that vow gone?”

At these words Bāhūka shed tears for a long time. Then he told her all that had happened to him since their separation. Damayanti requested Nala, not to have any misconception regarding the idea of a second svayaṁvara; she said to him that she committed no wrong and that her fidelity and loyalty had undergone no change. At that time Vāyu (the wind-god) in an ethereal voice said “Damayanti has committed no sin”. Immediately Nala put on the divine clothes given by Karkoṭaka and regained his original form. Damayanti embraced Nala and cried aloud. The king her father, mother and the people of the city all ran to them.

Next day Rūpārja returned. After a few days Nala collected an army consisting of three hundred soldiers, sixteen elephants, fifty horses and a white chariot only, from Vīdarbha and went to the kingdom of Nisādhā. Reaching there Nala challenged Puṣkara for a game of dice. Puṣkara refused the challenge. Nala took his sword to cut Puṣkara into two. Finally Puṣkara agreed to play. At the first cast of the dice the life and the Kingdom of Puṣkara fell into the hands of Nala. But Nala did not kill Puṣkara; instead, he embraced him. Nala became King. Damayanti and the children reached Nisādhā. Nala ruled the country with more happiness and prosperity than before. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapters 52 to 79).

DAMAYANTI II. The daughter of Pralocca. See Viṣvakarmā, 2nd para.

DAMBARA. One of the two attendants given by Brahmā to Subrahmanya. The other attendant’s name is Ādaṁbara. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 39).

DAMBHA. A dānava or asura. Daṁbha was the son of Vipracitān asura born to Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. This Daṁbha is the father of Saṅkhacūḍa, an asura. Daṁbha received from their teacher Śukra, the spell known as the famous Viṣjumantra and went to Puṣkara-tīrtha and did penance there for one lac of years. It was due to this penance that the son Saṅkhacūḍa was born to him. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

DAMBHODBHAVA. See Paraśurāma, Para 10, sub-section 2.

DAMBHODBHAVA. An ancient emperor. He was a mighty warrior prince. He brought the whole world under control. At last there was nobody left to fight with. So he walked about challenging everybody he met with. But none dared to fight with him. Then Brahmā advised him to challenge Nara Nārāyaṇa who were doing penance on the northern-most point of the earth. So the emperor went with his mighty army to Gandhāmādaṇa and informed Nara and Nārāyana of his desire to fight. They said that they were mere hermits and that they had no power to fight. But Dambhodbhava was not satisfied. Finally Nara and Nārāyana took some isikā grass and began to fight the emperor with it. Though the army of the emperor was mighty and vast it could not stand against the grass in the hands of the hermits. Finally the emperor admitted failure and bowed before the hermits. They advised him not to be arrogant in future and to lead a pure life. Hearing the exhortations of the hermits the emperor became a devoted man. He returned to his palace and led a life of righteousness. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 96).

DAMI. A famous holy place. Brahmā usually sits in this place and worships Maheśvara. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 72, it is mentioned that all the sins of those who bathe in this place will be washed away.

DAMSA. The giant who took birth as the worm ‘Alarkaṁ’. This giant came in the shape of a beetle and pierced the leg of Karṇa, the disciple of Parasurāma. Daṁsa once kidnapped the wife of Bhrigu, and the hermit cursed the giant and turned him to a beetle. He also said that Parameśvara would absolve him from the curse. (See Karṇa, Para 4).

DĀMODARA. Śrī Kṛṣṇa. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa was a small boy, Yaṣodā tied him to a mortar-stone. The boy ran about, dragging the heavy stone with him and the rope snapped. Part of the rope still remained round his abdomen. From that he got the name Dāmodara. “Dama” means rope and “Udara” means abdomen. (See Kṛṣṇa).

DĀMO 5 1. A sage in the assembly of Yudhiṣṭhira. Once he met Śrī Kṛṣṇa who was on his way to Hastināpura. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 13).

DĀNADĀRĪ. A town in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 52).

DĀNAM. Gift. In ancient India a spiritual significance was attached to dānam. (offering of a free gift). One who gave water was said to achieve contentment; one who gave food, eternal happiness; one who gave land, government of the country; one who gave gold would attain longevity; one who gave a house would get domestic felicity; one who gave silver would get physical beauty; one who gave clothes would reach candraloka; one who gave a horse would attain the world of the Asvinīdevas; one who gave bulls would get prosperity; one who gave cows would reach sūryaloka; according to Manusmṛti.

DANAVA. Danavas are the sons born to Kaśyapa Prajāpati by his wife Danu and their descendants. (See under Daṇu.)

DANAYUS. A daughter of Dakṣaprājāpati. Kaśyapa Prajāpati married Danayus. Four sons Vikśara, Bala, Vira and Vrata were born to her. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65.)

DANĀ. A king who was the son of Iksvāku. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 45, that this King was the rebirth of Krodhahantā, an asura.

1) Birth. Iksvāku had one hundred sons. Of them Vikukṣi, Nimi and Daṇḍa were famous. Daṇḍa became a famous archer when he grew up. In the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa mention is made that this King Daṇḍa took part in the Devāsura battle (Battle between the gods and the demons) and killed several thousand asuras (demons).

2) Administration. The king Iksvāku gave his son Daṇḍa the country between the mountains Himālaya and Vindhya and anointed him the King of that country. Daṇḍa built a capital city known as Madhumatta and began to rule the country. He had an army of Caturāṅga (four parts, elephant, chariot, horse and infantry). The hermit Śamana was the priest of King Daṇḍa. (Uttarārāṇyāṇa).

3) The origin of Daṇḍakāranya (the forest of Daṇḍaka). Daṇḍa once raped Arā, the daughter of hermit Śukra, who had been doing penance in a forest in the middle of the country of Daṇḍa. Śukra the hermit got angry and destroyed the country of Daṇḍa by a shower of fire. From that very day onwards that country was known as Daṇḍakāranya. (For further information see under Arā.)

DANĀDA. II.

1) General information. Another Kaśtriya King of ancient India. He was the son of the King Vidanda. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, it is mentioned that Vidanda and Daṇḍa had attended Draupadi Svayānivara (the marriage of Draupadi).

2) Other information. (1) Bhīmasena defeated the King Daṇḍa. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 307, Stanza 177).

3) This King Daṇḍa was the brother of Daṇḍadharā, the king of Magadha. Daṇḍadharā and Daṇḍa were killed by Arjuna in battle. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 16).

DANĀDA. III. An attendant of the Sun. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 68).

DANĀDA. IV. A warrior of the kingdom of Cedi. He fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas and was killed by Karna. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 49).

DANĀDA. V. A synonym of Mahāviṣṇu. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Stanza 105).

DANĀDA. VI (DANĀDAKA). A thief who had made the world tremble in the Dvāpara yuga. This wicked Daṇḍaka used to steal the wealth of the Brāhmaṇas, kill those who trusted him, speak lies, rape the women of others, drink liquor, eat the flesh of cows, mingle with wicked people and do various other sinful deeds daily. Daṇḍa once went to a Vaiśnavite temple to commit robbery. When he reached the steps of the temple he wiped his legs which were wet, on the ground and the small depression that was there, was levelled by the drawing of his legs. He broke the lock with an iron rod and entered the temple. Inside the temple he saw Kṛṣṇa, clad in yellow robes lying on a beautiful cot, with his spouse Rādhā. The thief instantly bowed before the spouse of Rādhā. By this act his sins were washed away. Still impelled by his evil nature, he took the silk garment of Kṛṣṇa, spread it on the ground, collected as many things as he could take, placed them in the garment and making them into a bundle, got out of the temple with shaky feet. The bundle fell on the ground with a loud noise. Hearing the noise the neighbours woke up and looked out. The thief began to run and was bitten by a poisonous snake and fell down dead. The men of Yama (God of death) tied the spirit of the thief with a rope and took him before Yama. Citrā Gupta looked into his accounts and informed Yama that he had committed all the sins. Yama asked if there was any good deed to his account. Then Citrā Gupta said “When this great sinner was going to commit theft in a Vaiṣṇavite temple, at the steps of the temple, he levelled a pit by the mud on his leg, and that single good deed on his part has wiped out all his sins.” Hearing this Yama gave him a golden seat and showed hospitality and then bowed before him and said “By the soil on your legs you have purified my abode today. I am grateful to you. Now you may go to the blissful world of Viṣṇu where there are no deaths or births or sorrow”. Hearing this Daṇḍa entered Vaiśūnṭha. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 1).

DANĀDA. VII. A giant (Rākṣasa). This giant Daṇḍa was born to the giant Sumāli, by his wife Ketumati. The nine ministers of Rāvana, named Prahasta, Akampa, Vikata, Kālākāmukha, Dhūmrākṣa, Supārśva, Sarıhrāda, Prākṣita and Bhaśākarna were brothers of this Daṇḍa. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

DANĀDA. I. A divine weapon of Kāla (Yama). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 41, Stanza 26 that King Yama had presented this weapon to Arjuna.

DANĀDA. II. A holy place on the bank of river Pampa. Those who bathe in this holy place will get the fruits of giving a thousand cows as Gift. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 15).

DANĀDA. III. One of the four expedients. The four expedients are Sāma, Dāna, Bheda and Daṇḍa. A king should subdue an enemy by resorting to these four expedients. Of the four expedients, sāma and daṇḍa are considered to be the best. Sāmādaṇḍaupāyāṇām / Caturāṇāmapi paṇḍitāt / Sāmādaṇḍau prāśaṇānti / Nityam rāṣṭrābhivyuddhayē. // (Manuṣṭṛti, Stanza 109).

Wise people say that, of the four expedients Sāma and Daṇḍa are the most effective for the prosperity of the country.

DANĀDAHU. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 73).

DANĀDAHARA I. A Kaśtriya King of Magadha. The following information about this King is available from the Mahābhārata.

1) Danādāhara was born as the rebirth of a giant known as Krodhavardhana. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 46).

2) Bhīmasena, during his conquest of the countries, overcame King Daṇḍadharā and his brother Daṇḍa.
(M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 17).
3) In the battle between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas, Daṇḍadhara fought from the back of an elephant against the Pāṇḍavas. When Daṇḍadhara began to exterminate the army of the Pāṇḍavas, Śrí Kṛṣṇa persuaded Arjuna to fight against Daṇḍadhara, who was killed in the fight. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 8, Stanzas 1 to 13).

DAṆḌÂDHARA II. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīmasena killed this Daṇḍadhara in the battle of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 5).

DAṆḌÂDHARA III. A king who helped the Pāṇḍavas. Very often the name Maṇḍīmān also occurs along with the name of Daṇḍadhara. They might have been brothers or sons of the same father by separate mothers. In the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 7, mention is made that these two had been present at the marriage of Draupadi. Dronācārya killed both of them in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 13).

DAṆḌÂDHARA IV. A warrior born and bred in the country of Pāṇcāla. He kept the rear of the army of Yudhīśṭhīra in the battle of Bhārata against the Kauravas. He died by an arrow of Karna. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 49, Stanza 27).

DAṆḌÂGAṆŪ. A celestial maid. When Arjuna visited the devoloka, there was a dance of this woman in honour of him. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 29).

DAṆḌÂKĀ. See Daṇḍa VI.

DAṆḌÂKÂRA. A Śūdra who had saved himself from going to hell by taking the vow called Viṣṇu pañcaka. This Śūdra who lived in the treṭāyuga had done a good deal of wicked deeds. Finally he accepted the advice of Brahmaṇas and performed the vow of Viṣṇu pañcaka and because of the vow he attained heaven. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 23).

DAṆḌÂKÂRÂṆĪ. A forest in the Indo-Gangetic Valley. For the story of how this place became a great forest see under Arā. Other information. (1) This is a holy place. He who takes bath in this place would get the fruits of giving a thousand cows as gift. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 41).
(2) During the time of the forest life of Śrī Rāma he made his cottage in this forest and stayed there for a while. It was in this forest that a part of the body of Śūraṇaḥkā was cut off and the infantry of fourteen thousand giants who came under the leadership of Khara, Dūṣaṇa and Trīśīrā was completely destroyed. Śī Śūraṇa was stolen. Mārīca was killed by Śrī Rāma, and Jatāyū died by the sword of Rāvaṇa in this forest of Daṇḍakārāṇī. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 277 to 279.)

DAṆḌÂKEṬU. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. Daṇḍaketu fought on the back of an attractive horse. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 68).

DAṆḌÂNÂṬĪ. (The laws of chastisement). Daṇḍanāṭī is the law of punishment given to the subjects by Kings of ancient India. According to the criminal laws of ancient India, fining a man up to two hundred and fifty paṇas (a coin) was called Prathama Sāhasa danḍa (first degree of punishment) and fining up to five hundred paṇas was called Madhyama Sāhasa danḍa (medium punishment) and fining up to thousand paṇas was called Uttama Sāhasa danḍa (highest degree of punishment). If a man complains to the King that his property is stolen, when actually it is not stolen, the man will be fined the amount that is said to have been stolen. There was another law, that the owner of the stolen property and the thief would have to pay double the amount they admit, if the amount shown in the complaint differed from the actual amount stolen. For appearing as false witness, the three classes of non-Brahmins were punished with fine and if he was a Brahmin he would have to be cast out of the society. The King ordered that if one spent the property entrusted with him for keeping, the owner of the property would have to be paid double the amount. If one says that he has given the property for keeping when actually it is not, the person will have to be punished as if he were a thief. If a man spends an amount without knowing that it was the property of others, the man will have to be acquitted of the charge.

If an artisan has received money in advance for a particular product and fails to give the thing at the stipulated time the King will fine the artisan one svārṇa. If a man received money in advance on a promise to do a particular work and if he fails to do the work he will be fined one Kṛśṇa of gold. (One Kṛśṇa weighs three yavagrayins). If a man conceals his diseases and marries a damsī, she will be considered as a spinster and the man will be fined two hundred paṇas. If a cowherd agrees to look after the cows of another receiving pay and food and refuses to return the cow to the owner the King will fine him hundred paṇas. If a Kṣatriya scoffs a Brāhmaṇa the fine imposed would be hundred paṇas. If it is a Vaiśya the fine will be two hundred paṇas. If it is a Śūdra he will be put to death. If a Brahmin scoffs a Kṣatriya his tongue should be cut off. If a Śūdra advises a Brahmin, he may inflict any punishment on the Śūdra.

If a Śūdra wronged a Brahmin, the Śūdra might be punished by cutting off the organ which was employed in the crime. If one spat at a Brahmin, the two lips of the culprit might be cut off. If a man passed urine on a Brahmin the culprit would have his penis cut off. If a Śūdra sits on the seats of the upper classes his buttock will have to be cut off. If one slays cow, elephant, camel or horse half of his limbs will have to be cut off. Cutting across of boundaries, making the water of ponds or pools impure etc., will have to be punished with a fine of two suvarnas. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 227.).

DAṆḌÂPÂṆĪ I. A king of the family of Yayāti. This King was the son of Vibhina and the father of Nimi. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

DAṆḌÂPÂṆĪ II. The son of Paṇḍraka, the King of Kāśi. Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Paṇḍraka. As his son Daṇḍapaṇī was not powerful enough to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa, he performed the sacrifice of Maheśvara yajña. Being pleased at the sacrifice Śiva created Kṛṣṇa in the sacrificial fire and sent her to Dvārakā to destroy Śrī Kṛṣṇa, who aimed his Sudaraśana cakra (wheel-weapon) at her. She ran to Vāraṇaśi, where the wheel turned Kṛtyā and everybody with her to ashes. (Padma-Purāṇa, Uttara Kāṇḍa, Chapter 278).

DANDAŚUKA. A hell. See the para Naraka under Kāla.

DANDI I. A son of Dāhantarātra. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 103.

DANDI II. A god. This god is worshipped as a waiter of the Sun. The sun is consecrated in a chariot of one wheel, yoked with seven horses, and wearing two lotus flowers. On the right side of the Sun his waiter Dandī will be standing as door-keeper with ink and pen in his hand, and on the left his waiter Piṅgala will be standing with a stick in his hand. These two gate-keepers are the two ganas of the Sun. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

DANDI III. A famous critic and writer of Sanskrit literature. He lived in the 6th century B.C. His critical work Kāvyādārśa made him famous. There are three chapters in this book. The first chapter is about criticism of poetry and the use of idioms. The second chapter deals with figurative language. The third chapter deals with alliteration and rhyme and the flaws in poetry. ‘Daśakumāracarita’, is supposed to be another work of Dandī. (History of Classical Sanskrit Literature).

DANTA. Son of Bhima, King of Vidarbha. This prince was the brother of Damayanti. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 53, Verse 9).

DANTA. An apsaras of Alakāpuri. Once she danced in honour of the sage Aśṭāvakra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 45).

DANDADHVAJA. The son of Manu Tāmasa. Once Dandadhvaja gave as oblition his flesh and blood in fire, to get children. But it was of no use. So he put his hair of the body, of the head, his sinews, the marrow of the bones, and liver and sperm in the fire. When the sperm was put in the fire there was a voice ‘Don’t’ and with that the king fell dead. And instantly seven luminous children came out from the fire. They began to cry aloud. Hearing their cry Brahmacame there and anointed them as the Maruts (wind gods). They were the maruts of Tāmasamanvantara. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 72).

DANDAVAKTRA I. A Kṣatriya king of Kāruṣa. He was the rebirth of the daitya (asura) Krodhavaśa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 62).

DANDAVAKTRA II. He was the rebirth of Vijaya, one of the two door-keepers of Mahāviṣṇu, Jaya and Vijaya. (For full particulars see under Jaya).

Dandavakra was a contemporary king of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Dandavakra died in a battle with Śrī Kṛṣṇa and returned to Vaikuṇṭha (the abode of Viṣṇu).

DANTIMUKHA. An asura (demon). This asura was killed in a fight with Subrahmanya. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).

DANU I. 1) General information. Danu, the daughter of Dakṣa was married to Kaśyapa Prajāpati. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata that the Dānavas (demons) were born from Danu.
2) Sons. One hundred sons were born to Danu. The following are the important among them.
   1. Viprachitti
   2. Śibara
   3. Namuci
   4. Pulomā
   5. Asilomā
   6. Kesi
   7. Durjaya
   8. Ayaśirās
   9. Aṣvaśirās
   10. Aṣvaśāiku
   11. Garga
   12. Amūrdhā
   13. Vegavān
   14. Ketumān
   15. Svarbhāṇu
   16. Āśva
   17. Aṣvapati
   18. Vṛṣaparvan
   19. Ajaka

(This sun and the moon (Sūrya and Candra) are not the planets).

From the sons named above ten families of Dānavas (asuras) arose. The founders of the families are mentioned below:
   1. Ekākṣa
   2. Āṃrātapa
   3. Pralamba
   4. Naraka
   5. Vātāpi
   6. Tapanā
   7. Śāra
   8. Mahāhanu
   9. Garviṣṭha
   10. Dirghajīva

All the dānavas or Āsuras belong to one of these ten families. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65).

DANU II. A King. Two sons Rambha and Kārmabha were born to this king. (See Kārmabha).

DARADA I. King of an ancient country known as Bālīka. It is stated in Mahābhārata Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 58 that this King was the incarnation of a portion of the asura named Sūrya. At the time of his birth the earth was cleaved because of his weight.

DARADA II. An ancient country in North East India. The people of this country were called Daradas. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, that Arjuna conquered this country during his conquest of countries. The Daradas paid tribute to Yuddhiṣṭhira. During their forest-life the Pāṇḍavas had passed through the country of the Daradas. At the beginning of the Bhārata-battle, the Pāṇḍavas had sent invitation to the Daradas also. But they fought on the side of the Kauravas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 11 that Śrī Kṛṣṇa had conquered the Darada country. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 121, that in the battle of Bhārata the Daradas attacked Sātyaki and that Sātyaki killed them.

DARADA III. A tribe. At first they were Kṣatriyas. They grew jealous of the Brāhmaṇas and so they were changed to Śūdras. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 17).

DARADAM. A place in ancient India. There is a reference to this place in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 50.

DARBHĪ. An ancient hermit. This hermit built a tirtha (bath) named Ardhaṅkila in Kurukṣetra. It is believed that anybody who bathed in this place and fasted could learn the mantras (spells and incantations) and become a Brāhmaṇa. It occurs in the Purāṇas that the hermit Darbhī has brought the four oceans to this bath. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 54).

DARDDURA. A mountain. The deity of this mountain is said to be sitting in the council hall of Kubera (the god of wealth) and worshipping him, according to Mahābharata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 35.

DARI. A serpent born in the family of Dhitarashtra. This serpent fell into the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya and was burnt to death. (Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 16).

DARIDRA. A king born in the family of Yayati. He was the son of Dundubhi and father of Vasu. (Bhagavata, Navama Skandha).

DARPA. A king of the family of Yayati. (Bhagavata, Skandha 9).

DARSAKA. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 53).

DARUKA I.

1) Sri Krsna’s charioteer. In the Mahabharata, we come across few persons who excel Daruka in their skill as charioteers. We find the following details about him in the Mahabharata:—

2) At the time of the battle at Kuruksetra, hearing the sound of Sri Krsna’s conch-shell, Daruka drove his chariot and brought it before Sri Krsna. (M.B. Drotha Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 45).

3) When Suyyaki fought with Karna, Daruka drove Suyyaki’s chariot. At that time he proved his extraordinary skill in charioteering. (M.B. Drotha Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 54).

4) After being attended by Daruka, Sri Krsna’s chariot horses flew up into the Heavens. (M.B. Mauusa Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 5).

5) It was Daruka who informed the Panadhas that the Yaduvamsha had perished. On his return, he accompanied Arjuna in his journey to Dwarka. (M.B. Mauusa Parva, Chapter 5).

DARUKA II. A charioteer of Mahishasura. (Devi Bhagavata, Pañcama Skandha). For further details about this Daruka, see under Ghanatarka.

DARUKA III. A son of Garuda. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 9 contains a reference to this Daruka).

DARUSAM. A narakha (hell). See under Narakha.

DARVA. A Kshatriya king of the land called Darvam. Opinion is divided as to whether Darvam is the name of a land or of a caste. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 10).

DARVA. A country in Ancient India. Mention is made about this country in Mahabharata, Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 54.

DARVADHISARA(S). A low class people. (M.B. Drotha Parva, Chapter 93, Verse 44).

DARVAM. The word Darvas indicates a particular class of Kshatriyas. In Mahabharata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 13, it is said that the Kshatriyas of this family had presented Dharmaputra with a large quantity of wealth.

DARVI. An ancient town in India. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 54).

DARVISHAKRAMANA. A holy place. Those who visit this place will get the fruits of performing the sacrifice of Ashvamedha and will attain heaven. (Mahabharata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 45).

DAESA. A country in Ancient India. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 56).

DASA. A term used as a suffix to the name of a Sudra. In ancient India the rule was that the proper suffix for a Brahmin’s name should be ‘Sarma’, for a Kshatriya’s name, ‘Varm’, for a Vaishya’s name, ‘Gupta’ and for a Sudra’s name, ‘Dasa’. (See under Caturvarya).

DAASADRYU. A hermit. It is mentioned in Rgveda, Manjala 1, Anuvaka 7, Sutka 33 that Daasadryu was a valiant hermit.

DAASAGRIVA. Ravana. (See under Ravana).

DAASAJYOTTI. A son of the King Subhrat. Mention is made about him in Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 44.

DAASAMALIKA. A country in Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 66.

DAASAMUKHA RAVANA. Ravana, the enemy of Sri Rama. (See under Ravana).

DAASANA. See under Ravana.

DAASARAJA. Foster-father of Santanu’s wife, Satyavati. His actual name was Uschahrasavas. For detailed story see under Satyavati.

DAASARAJNA. A great war which took place in India in ancient times. It was a terrible clash between the Aryans who lived in Pañcama and the primitive inhabitants of India, before the Rgveda period. Sudas, the king was the adversary of the Aryans. Among the relatives of Sudas were Aryans and non-Aryans. It was the people under Sudas who got victory in this war. Anyway, with this war, (Dasaarajna), a new mixed race of people came into being in North India, which was composed of the Aryans and the primitive inhabitants of the country. The Hindus are the descendants of this mixed race. (Rgveda).

DAASARATHA. (Nemi). A famous king of the Ikshvaku dynasty. He was the father of Sri Rama.

2) Birth. Daasaratha was the son of Aja, of the family of Ikshvaku, born of his wife Indumati.

3) Daasaratha’s hunt. Once during the early part of his life Daasaratha was walking through a forest engaged in hunting. He reached the bank of the river Sarayu. It was evening and the forest was thick. He walked in search of wild animals. The night was advancing and darkness getting thicker. Then he heard a sound from the river as if an elephant was drinking water. Thinking it to be an elephant Daasaratha sent an arrow in the direction from which the sound came. Instantly he heard a man crying with pain. The king was disappointed. He ran to the spot and saw a hermit boy lying in a pool of blood beating his limbs on the ground and crying. The waterpot he had been dipping in the water lay close by. In answer to the questions of the King, the hermit boy whose name was Śravana, said, "Oh King! What wrong have I done? My parents are sitting thirsty and blind with age, in the hermitage close-by. I, their only son, was dipping the pot to take water to them, when you sent the arrow at me. So, please take some water to them in this pot and console them."

Hearing this, with tears the King drew out the fatal arrow from the body of the boy and with that the boy Śravana said good bye to the world. Daśaratha took water in the pot and went in search of the hermitage in the darkness. With difficulty he found out the hermitage and as he drew near, the aged parents of the boy heard his footsteps and called him eagerly. The King, with tearful eyes told them what had happened. There was loud wailing and crying in the hermitage. According to their wish the King took them to where their son lay. Then the King made a fire and placed the dead body of the boy in it. The aged and blind parents cursed Daśaratha, "You also will die of loss of children". Then they also entered the fire and were burnt along with their son's dead body. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 63).

4) Marriage. Daśaratha had three wives, named Kausālyā, Kaikeyi and Sūmitrā.

5) Kaikeyi given a boon. There was a great battle in the world of the gods between the asuras and the gods. According to the request of the devas, Daśaratha went to the world of the devas to help them. Kaikeyi also went with Daśaratha. In a severe fight with Sambaran, an asura, Daśaratha fell down unconscious. Kaikeyi took him away from the battlefield. When he recovered the King got into the chariot and fought more fiercely than before. This time the wheel-bolt of one of the wheels of the chariot of Daśaratha slipped away. Without informing her husband of this danger, Kaikeyi inserted her finger into the bolt-hole and prevented the wheel from sliding away. The King won the battle. After the battle, when the King came to know of the services rendered by Kaikeyi, he promised her two boons. Kaikeyi told the King that she would ask for them later, when she needed them. Then they returned to Ayodhyā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Sarga 9, Kampā Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa).

6) Administration of Daśaratha. The capital of Daśaratha's kingdom of Kosala, was Ayodhyā. This city was situated on the bank of river Sarayū. Daśaratha was as famous in Ayodhyā as Indra was in the realm of the gods. There were palaces in Ayodhyā for the kings who brought tribute to stay. In short, as mentioned in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 5, Ayodhyā was the heaven on earth.

7) Ministers. Daśaratha had eight ministers, Śrṣṭi, Jayanta, Vijaya, Siddhārtha, Raṣṭravardhana, Asoka, Dharmapāla, and Sumantra. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

8) The name Daśaratha. The real name of Daśaratha was Nemi. Once the unattackable and invincible asura Śāṇībāra conquered the throne of Indra. At the request of Bhumā and the gods, this King reached heaven and destroyed the armies of the asuras very easily. Śāṇībāra got angry, assumed ten shapes and attacked the King from ten points at the same time. The king confronted the ten Śāṇībāras at ten points, at the same time, and killed all of them at the same moment. Because he faced his chariot to ten points at the same time and fought with enemies on those ten points Bhumā appreciated his valiant fighting and charioteering and gave him the name 'Daśaratha' (one who is capable of driving the chariot to ten points at the same time). Thus his original name was forgotten and he came to be known only by the name given him later. (Kāmpeśvara Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

9) Birth of Sons. Kausālyā was the first wife of Daśaratha. She was the daughter of the King of Uttara Kosala. A daughter named Sāntā was born to Daśaratha by Kausālyā. After this, no sons or daughters were born to Daśaratha for a long time.

At this juncture Lomapāda, the king of Aṅga who was the class-mate and a great friend of Daśaratha, came to Ayodhyā on a friendly visit. He also had no children. So he entreated Daśaratha to give Sāntā to him as a foster-daughter. Thus he took away Sāntā to Aṅga. Lomapāda gave Sāntā in marriage to Rṣyaśṛiga a hermit. (See under Rṣyaśṛiga).

As Kausālyā was childless Daśaratha brought as his wife Kaikeyi the daughter of the King of Keśa and sister of Yuddhājīt. Still no children were born to them. He was much disappointed. At last he married again and brought Sūmitrā the princess of Kāśi. Of these three, Kausālyā was the chief wife. Though he had three wives, Daśaratha still remained childless. The King and his queens spent their days in sorrow for a long time. The King remembered the curse he had incurred when he was young. The curse was that as they had died with sorrow at the death of their son Śravana, the same thing would happen to them. So he believed that sons would be born to him. He performed several devotional acts to get children. Finally he gave up all kingly pleasures and began to lead an ascetic life. He built a temple for his own use and consecrated the idol of Mahāvīra in it. Then entrusting the administration of the Kingdom to his ministers he and his wives engaged themselves in daily devotion and meditation in the temple. Then the King decided to perform the sacrifice of Purākāmeṣṭi (sacrifice for getting children) by the hermit Rṣyaśṛiga under the guidance of Vasiṣṭha. The King informed Rṣyaśṛiga of his decision. Rṣyaśṛiga could not refuse the King's request as the King was his father-in-law. Moreover Lomapāda and Sāntā also requested the hermit to comply with the desire of Daśaratha. So Rṣyaśṛiga came to Ayodhyā and the sacrifice of Purākāmeṣṭi was begun. The air vibrated with the recitation of mantras (spirits and incantations) and the Veda Sūktas. The hermit uttered the divine spell of Purākāmeṣṭi and offered oblations in the sacrificial fire. Then a wonderful and luminous figure came out of the fire with a pot containing a pudding of ambrosia, and placed the pot before Rṣyaśṛiga and then disappeared in the sacrificial fire. When the wonderful figure disappeared, Rṣyaśṛiga took the pot of pudding and gave it to Daśaratha with prayer and incantations. Daśaratha received the golden pot and in accordance with the instruction of the hermit, divided the pudding between his first wife Kausālyā and second wife Kaikeyi, both of whom gave half of their share to Sūmitrā. Thus the three wives ate the divine pudding and by and by all of them became pregnant. Kausālyā and Kaikeyi gave birth to a son each and Sūmitrā gave birth to two sons. The son of Kausālyā was called Rāma, the son of Kaikeyi was named Bharata and the sons of Sumitra were called Laksmana and Satrughna.

(10) The boon of Sani (Saturn). Astronomers are of opinion that famine will occur in the world for the period of twelve years, when the planet Sani (Saturn) comes into the orbit of Rohini (a star). But now the planet Saturn does not come into the orbit of the star Rohini. There is a story in the Padma Purana, which states that this happened so because of a boon Sani had given to Dasaratha.

During the regime of Dasaratha the planet Sani approached the orbit of Rohini. Experts in astronomy said that the earth would be ruined by famine etc. if Sani elected the star Rohini. Hearing this Dasaratha took his bow and arrows, got into his chariot, and started for the firmament. He travelled for one lac and a quarter of yojanas (leagues) and reached the hind part of Rohini, which is beyond the sun. Adorned with golden garments and a golden crown studded with jewels, seated on a golden chariot decorated with precious stones, and a lofty flagpost and yoked with horses of the colour of swan, the king shone in the sky as a second sun. He drew the bow-string right up to his ear and placed it in the arrow of destruction. When the devas and the asuras saw the arrow of destruction they began to tremble with fear. Sani came to Daśaratha and fell before him and said that he would grant any boon to the King, and requested him to recall the arrow of destruction. Daśaratha told Sani that he only wanted Sani not to come to the orbit of Rohini. Sani agreed. From that day onwards Sani has never entered the orbit of Rohini. (Padma Purana, Uttar Kanda, Chapter 34).

11) Death. Rama and Laksmana with Sītā went to live in the forest. Sumantra who accompanied them up to the river Ganges, returned to the palace. By then Daśaratha had fallen down filled with grief. He had never recovered from that state of unconsciousness. At the time of his death Bharata and Satrughna had been away in the kingdom of Kekaya and Rama and Laksmana in the forest. Thus the curse he incurred in his younger days from the aged hermit, the father of Śravana, was fully realized.

12) Daśaratha appears again. Rāvana was killed in the battle. Sītā was tested in fire and found sinless. Rāma accepted her, seeing that her conjugal fidelity was not marred. At this time Śīva appeared before Rāma in a divine aeroplane. Daśaratha was seated in that plane clad in pure garments. He took Rāma and Laksmana into his lap and embraced them. He blessed them and Sītā who was standing with folded hands. Then Daśaratha disappeared. (Valmiki Rāmāyana, Yuddh Kāṇḍa, Sarga 122).

Daśarha. A king of the Yadu family. He was so famous that his descendants were called the Daśāhrs. As Śrī Kṛṣṇa was born as a descendant in the line of Daśarha, Śrī Kṛṣṇa is sometimes called Daśarha, in certain places. For genealogy see under Yudhuvamśa.

Daśarhi I. A woman belonging to Daśarha’s family. Vijaya, the wife of Drumanyu, Sudēv, the wife of Vikānta, Subhāṅgi, the wife of Kuru, Kunti, the wife of Pāṇḍu—all these Yavada women are entitled to the name Daśarhi. (M.B. Daśa Parva, Chapter 38).

Daśarhi II. In Mahābhārata, Sāhā Parva, Daśaśīnātyaṇa, Chapter 38 we find that the assembly of the Yadava leaders was known by the name of Daśārhi.

Daśārha. An inhabitant of the Daśārha country. This name is also used for addressing King Daśārha.

(M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 47).

Daśārha (M). An ancient country, famous in the Purāṇas.

1) General information. This country had been divided into two, Eastern Daśārha and Western Daśārha. The modern Patna and the surrounding places comprised Eastern Daśārha and the places of Malva, the Western Daśārha. Some are of opinion that Daśārha comprises the South-East part of the Vindhyā mountain. It is mentioned in ‘Meghaduta’ that Vīḍiśā was the capital of Daśārha. The modern name of Vīḍiśā is Bhīṣa.

2) Other information regarding Daśārha.

(1) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Aḍī Parva, Chapter 112, Stanza 25, that once Pāṇḍu brought the country of Vīḍiśā under subjugation.

(2) At another time Bhūmasena conquered the country of Daśārha. (Mahābhārata, Sāhā Parva, Chapter 29, Stanza 5).

(3) Nakula once conquered this country. (M.B. Sāhā Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 7).

(4) King Sudāmā ruled over the country of Daśārha. He had two daughters. Bhīma, the king of Vidarba married the first one and Virābhāhu the king of Cedi married the second daughter. Damayanti was the daughter of Bhīma. A daughter named Sunandā was born to Virābhāhu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 69).

(5) Before the battle of Bhārata, Hiraṇyavarmā was the King of Daśārha. Śīkhaṇḍini the daughter of Drupada went in the guise of a male and married the daughter of Hiraṇyavarmā. The king of Daśārha who had been deceived thus, attacked Drupada. But the problem was solved because Śīkhaṇḍini actually became a male. (See the word Anمب). (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 41).

(6) The king of Daśārha took the side of the Kauravas in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 12).

(7) Cītṛaṅgada was the king of Daśārha at the time of the Asvamedha sacrifice of Yudhiṣṭhira. In Mahābhārata, Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 83, it is stated that Arjuna defeated Cītṛaṅgada.

Daśāsva. Tenth son of Iκṣvāku. He ruled over the city of Māhiṣmati. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśṣāsana Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 6, that Daśāsva had a son named Madirāsva.

Daśāśvamedha. A holy place situated in Kurukṣetra. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 14, that those who bathe in this holy place will obtain the fruits of giving a gift of thousand cows.

Daśāśvamedhika (M). A holy place in Kurukṣetra. Those who bathe here will attain Supreme Bliss. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 64).

Daśāvara. An asura. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sāhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 14 that this asura (demon) serves Varuṇa and stays in his palace.

Daśeraka (S). Members of a Kṣatriya tribe. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 47).

Daśeraka (M). A place-name. It is by observing Śrāvana Dvādaśi at a spot to the west of this place that a Vaiśya attained mokṣa (salvation). (See under Śrāvana Dvādaśi).
DASURA. A sage. For further details see under Saraswati.

DASI. An important river in India. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 31).

DASRA. The first of the gods called the Aśvinīdevas. The two gods Dasra and Nāsaya are known by the collective name Aśvinīdevas. (M.B. Śantí Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 17).

DASYU. The ancient dwellers of North India. What we see in Rgveda is mostly a history of the Aryans from the period of their exodus from the plateau Kundha till they reached the banks of the Yamunā. The plateau of Kundha is Kabul. The Dasyus were the first people the Aryans had to confront with after passing the Indus. Rgveda bears testimony to the fact that the civilization of the Dasyus was far advanced than that of the Aryans. Saṅhāra, King of the Dasyus, was the ruler of hundred cities. All the cities were fortified with strong walls and fortresses, which are described as 'vāsma-yā', 'ayaśi', 'vatamudhū' etc. The greatest enemies of the Aryans were the 'Panis' of these cities. They were a particular class of people of these cities. In the 'Nirukta of Yāska' it is mentioned that panis were traders. Names of many of the Kings of the Dasyus occur in the Rgveda. Dhuni, Cumuri, Pipru, Varca, Saṅhāra and such others are the most valiant and mighty among them. The most important of the several tribes of the Dasyus were the Śīnyus, the Kikayas, Śigrus and the Yakṣus. They are mentioned as the Anāsas in the Rgveda. (Anāsas—without nose). Perhaps their nose was flat; more over they are stated as having dark complexion. So it may be assumed that the Dasyus were Dravidians. They talked a primitive language, and they despised sacrificial religion. They did not worship Gods like Indra and others. They possibly worshipped the Phallus, Śiva, Devi and the like.

DĀTAKAGCHA. An ancient country on the bank of the river, Narmadā. (Kathāsaritśāgara).

DATTA (DATTAKA). See under Dattatreya.

DATTAMITRA. This is another name of Sumitra the King of Sauvira, Arjuna, during his conquest of the countries, defeated this King. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 193, Stanza 20).

DATTĀTMAN. A Viśvadeva. (A class of gods concerned with sacrifice to the manes). (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 34).

DATTĀTREYA. (DATTA). A hermit famous in the purāṇas.
1) Birth. Anasūyā, the wife of hermit Atri gave birth to Dattatreya. But Dattatreya was the incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu. There is a story in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa how Mahāviṣṇu came to incarnate as Dattatreya. Once there was a hermit called Anāmānḍavya (Māndavya). While the hermit was engaged in silent meditation, some robbers passed by that way. The King's men who were chasing the robbers, came to the hermit and asked him about the robbers. The hermit did not break the silence. The King's men, thinking the hermit to be the thief bound his hands and legs and took him to the palace. The King ordered Māndavya to be killed by piercing his body with a trident. Accordingly a trident was posted on a hill far away and Māndavya was seated on the tip of it. Māndavya lay there in agony. It was at this time that Śilavati, famous for her conjugal fidelity, went to the house of a harlot, carrying her husband Ugraśravas on her shoulder. When they passed by that way Ugraśravas scolded Anāmānḍavya; getting angry at this Anāmānḍavya cursed Ugraśravas that he would get his head broken and die before the sun-rise. Śilavati became very sorry when she heard the curse and she also cursed. "Let the sun not rise tomorrow". The sun did not rise next day. Everything in the world was in chaos. The devas were flurried. They went to Brahmā. Brahmā took them to Śiva. They could not find a solution. So all of them approached Mahāviṣṇu. The Trimūrtis (three gods) told the devas that the problem would be solved, and the devas returned. Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Mahēśvara went to Śilavati. Before seeing Śilavati, they went to Anasūyā the wife of Atri and sought her help to persuade Śilavati to recall her curse. Thus Anasūyā and the Trimūrtis approached Śilavati and spoke compassionate and consolatory words. At last Śilavati recalled the curse. The Trimūrtis convinced Śilavati, that Ugraśravas would not die. The pleased Trimūrtis asked Anasūyā to ask for any boon. She replied that she did not want any boon except that the Trimūrtis should take birth as her sons. Accordingly Mahāviṣṇu took birth as Dattatreya, Śiva as Durvasā and Brahmā as Candra, in the womb of Anasūyā. This is how Dattatreya was born. Dattatreya did penance from his childhood and became a hermit. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 39 to 44).

2) Kārtavīryaṇa and Dattatreya. When Kārtavīryaṇa became King Dattatreya had become very famous. Kārtavīryaṇa wanted to obtain supernatural powers. So he called the hermit Garga and asked for his advice. Garga advised him that Dattatreya was the incarnation of Viṣṇu and that he would grant his wishes. So Kārtavīryaṇa and his wife came to the river Narmadā, and taking bath in the river, began to worship Dattatreya, who was doing penance closely. Dattatreya was pleased and went to Kārtavīryaṇa and asked what he desired was. He requested for thousand hands and to be a youth for ever, and such other things. Dattatreya granted his wishes. After that Kārtavīryaṇa would very often go to the hermit Dattatreya for his advice. (Brahma Purāṇa, Chapter 44).

3) Cursing Rāvaṇa. Once Rāvaṇa went to the hermitage of Dattatreya. The hermit had placed a waterpot purified by reciting spells and incantations. Rāvaṇa stole that waterpot. When the hermit knew this, he cursed Rāvaṇa saying, "Since the water, which was evoked by spells and incantations, has fallen on your head, Monkeys will pollute your head by treading on it." (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kanda).

4) Exhortation to the Śādhyas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 36, Stanza 4, that the hermit Dattatreya gave exhortations to the Śādhyas (the sons of Dharmadeva by his wife Śādhyā).

5) A boon for the birth of Nāhusha. See Nāhusha.

DATTOLI. A son born to hermit Pulastya by his wife Priti. This Dattoli was in his previous birth, Agastya of the Śvāyambhuva manvantara. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṣṭā 1, Chapter 10).

DĀYAKRAMA. (INHERITANCE). Dāyakrama is the system which the wealth of parents is received by the heirs. The system of inheritance as described by Manu is as follows:

1) After the death of the parents, all the children should divide their wealth among themselves. When either the father or the mother is alive, the sons should not take their wealth.

2) If the wealth is not divided, the eldest brother should keep the whole of it in his custody and maintain his brothers and sisters like a father.

3) Of the entire wealth, the eldest brother may take one-twentieth part, the second brother, one-fortieth part and the third brother, one-eighth part and the balance is to be divided equally among all of them.

4) If there are more than three sons, the eldest and the youngest may take one-twentieth and one-eighth (of the entire wealth) respectively, and each of the other brothers may take one-fortieth. The rest of the property must be divided equally among all of them.

5) After dividing like this, if there are unmarried sisters, each of the brothers should give one-fourth of his share for their marriage.

6) The ornaments which the mother had received by way of her dowry etc. may be taken after her death by her unmarried daughters.

7) If, after his marriage, one of the brothers dies, the brother who keeps his movable and immovable properties, must beget children by the brother's wife and hand over the above properties to her issue. (See under Manusmirti).

DAYANÄKSETRA. A famous temple of Goddess Diana in Ephesus. In Greek mythology Diana (Dayânâ) is the goddess of hunting. She is also identified with the Moon Goddess. Being a virgin goddess, she came to be worshipped by virgins who regarded her as their patron. Dayânâ (Diana) is one of the beautiful daughters of the supreme God, Zeus. Her idol was worshipped in many places in Greece. There was a famous temple of this goddess in the town of Ephesus. This temple was destroyed in the 3rd Century B.C. by enemies.

DEVA (S). Gods or deities.

1) General information. From time immemorial belief in Devas has existed in every country and all religions have lauded their superior nature and power. It was the Hindus and the Buddhists who first applied the term ‘Deva’ to certain very subtle beings recognised in all religions. The Pârśi religion (Zaratuštra) has spoken about seven Devarâjans and their attendants, 'Ames pentas' is the actual term used for the Devarâja. The Christian religion refers to nine sects of Devas like Śráfi, Kherubi, Dominion, Angel etc. Islam refers to four chief Devas viz. Gabriel, the presiding Deva over revelations, Mikehâyl of protection, Arsiyâl of death and Israfin of resurrection. An important section of the Rgveda is Sûktas about Devâs like Indra, Mitra, Varuña, Agni, etc. In Yajñas etc. Devas occupy a very important place. The Khnopanisad states that the conceived and haughty Devas were taught a lesson by God. The subject matter of the Kaṭhopanisad is the advice given by Yama to Naçiketas. The Mundâkapanisad says that the Devas, man and birds originated from God. There are references about Deva worship in the Smârtis. The Purânas and Upapu-ti. Tasmâca devâh bahudhâ samprassâthâ sâdhyâh manuvâthâ paâvâ vâyânsah.

râpas contain scientific discussions, about the origin, work or functions, classes, etc. of Devas. The Mantrâ-śåstra and Tautrâśåstra deal also about the various sects and class of Devas, their nature, and the worship to be offered to them etc.

2) Christian Devas, Satan and devils. Christian religious books commonly use the term Mâlakhas for Devas. Greek mythology contains a story about the Mâlakhas, who did not obey the orders of Jehovah and how He cursed them, turned them into devils and flung them into hell. And, in hell they organised a revolutionary party to fight Jehovah. Many leaders talked on the subject of how to take vengeance on Jehovah. It was nearabout this period that Jehovah created with the dust on earth Adam as his beloved son and settled him in the garden of Eden. God created from the ribs of Adam the woman called Eve, and they lived in Eden quite happily. Satan and other leaders in hell decided that the greatest revenge that could be taken upon Jehovah was to create troubles for his dear son, Adam in Eden. Accordingly Satan went to Eden and made Adam and Eve eat the forbidden fruit with the result that Jehovah cursed and turned them into human beings and turned them out of Eden. Milton in his reputed poem Paradise Lost has told the above story in inimitable language.

3) Indian Devas. Most of the Indian Devas are the sons of Kaśyapa Prajâpati by Aditi, daughter of Daksa Prajâpati. The total number of Devas is 33 crores. The Devas are divided into many classes or sections like Âdityas, Vîvâdevatas, Vasus, Tuṣistas, Âbhâsvaras, Anilas, Mahârâjakas, Sâdhyas, Rudras, Vidyâdharas, Piîrdevas etc. There are further divisions like Aparas, Virûpâkṣas, Bhadras, Gandharvas, Kumbbhâjâs, Râkṣasas, Nâgas, Âśvinis, Kinnaras, Kîrâpurasas, Piîcas, Gulyakas, Siddhas, Càranas, Matsras, Kûmândas, Bhûtás, Vaiûtás, etc. Yet another division is into Lokâpâlas, Liûkcas etc. The Devas are classified with special reference to bhûtâganas like Pîthvi etc. and are, therefore, referred to as Bhûdevatâs, Agnidevatâs, Vaiûvedatâs etc. The presiding spirit of Bhûdevatâs is Kubera, that of the Jâladevatâs is Varuṇa, that of the Agnidevatâs, Vaiûbhâgavân and that of the Âkâsdevatâs, Indra. And, under them there are various sets of Devas in charge of different departments. Sâdhyas, Vasus, Âdityas, Aparas etc. are Âkâsdevas, Maruttas and Gandharvas, Vaiûvedas. Yakṣas and Yakṣis are servants of Kubera. Virûpâkṣa, Bhadra etc. are Bhûdevas. Virûpâkṣa supports the earth according to the Vâlmîki Purâna. Those who protect nidhis (treasures) may also be considered Bhûmidevas.

There are 33 bosors or presiding spirits for the 33 crores of Devas. Dvâdaśâdityas (12) Ekâdârudas (11) Âstavasus (8) and Aîvînidevas (2) are the 33 chiefs of Devas. Indra is the chief of all of them.

4) The term Deva. The word Deva means light and also play. Devas shine forth, they are also playful. Thus the name is quite apt for them. (See Grâmâ-devatâ).

DEVABHÄGA. A king of the Yayâti dynasty. (Bhâgavata Navama Skandha).

DEVABHÄGAŚRAUTÂRÂSA. A rśi, the son of Śrûta and learned in yajñas. He had accurate knowledge as to which parts of the yajña-cow should be distributed to whom, and till death he did not impart this knowledge to anyone. But, sometime afterwards a non-human individual taught the subject to Giriśa, son of Babhrū. (Aitareya Brāhmaṇa).

At the time when the Śrījāyas and the Kuru kings were living in amity consequent upon the dāksāyaṇa yajña it was this Devabhāga who acted as the priest of both the parties. His theories on Śāṅkṛitiṇi are quoted in Taittīrya Brāhmaṇa.

DEVABHĪṬ. An efficient Devatā who was the son of Ravi and father of Subhrāṭ. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 42).

DEVĀDARŚA. An acārya in the line of Vyāsa's disciples. He was the disciple of Kābandha, and he had many disciples. Medhā, Brahmabali, Sautāyana and Pippalāda were chief among those disciples. (See genealogy of Gurus).

DEVĀDARUVANA. A holy centre. A dip in the tirtha here is productive of very good results. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 27).

DEVĀDASA. A rich Vaiśya extolled much in the Kāthāsaritsāgara. He lived in Pātaliputra and had married the daughter of a very rich Vaiśya of Paṇḍravardhana. After his father's death Devādasa lost all his wealth in gambling, and his wife foresook his impecunious husband and returned home.

After roaming about for some time the helpless Devādasa decided to go to his wife's house, and one mid-night he went there. While hiding himself there in the darkness he heard his wife telling her paramour the following: “In the four corners of Devādasa's house are hidden four treasures. But he does not know about the treasures hidden thus by one of his fore-fathers. I got the information from his mother. You should purchase the property for a small price.”

No sooner did Devādasa hear the above than he hurried back to his house and dug up the treasure and thus became wealthy again. The paramour of his wife went to him a few days later and purchased the property at a heavy price. But, when he dug up the place no treasure was found. Then he wanted to sell back the property to Devādasa himself, but he refused to purchase it. The case was taken before the King when Devādasa detailed the whole story. And, as ordered by the King, Devādasa disfigured his wife and wedded another wife. (Kāthāsaritsāgara, Lāvāṇakalāṃbakaṃ, Taranāga 5).

DEVADATTĀ I. A famous brahmin boy whose story is described in the Kāthāsaritsāgara.

Devadatta was the son of the Brahmin, Haridatta of Kambukapura. Though as a boy Devadatta learnt all the arts and sciences when he grew up to be a youth he became a very wayward fellow. Dice-play became his main job. One day in a game of dice he lost even his clothes, and being afraid of his father, he left the place without returning home.

Devadatta roamed about, and during one such trip he saw a deserted temple, and a muni called Jālapāda engaged in reciting mantras. Devadatta prostrated before the muni and told him all the details about himself. The muni accepted Devadatta as his śiṣya and promised to secure vidyādharahood for him.

Next night Jālapāda led Devadatta to a burning ghat, nearby the temple. After conducting Pūjā in the shade of a fig tree with offerings of Pāyas and Vaiśvadevabali the muni told Devadatta thus: “You should come here daily and perform pūjā like this, and pray at the close of it, ‘Oh! Vidyutprabhā! please accept my pūjā’.

Devadatta acted according to the above advice of the muni, and one day, at the close of his pūjā the tree broke open into two and a beautiful female who appeared from it took him with her saying that her mistress wanted him. He was thus taken to a house studded with gems wherein he saw a noble lady seated on a cot. She caught Devadatta by his hands and after seating him alongside said to him: “I am Vidyutprabhā, daughter of the Yakṣa king Ratnavarṣa. I am a virgin girl. Muni Jālapāda has worshipped me so much that I have decided to fulfil his desire. I am in love with you and you will please wed me.”

Accordingly Devadatta married Vidyutprabhā and lived there with her. In due course she conceived, and Devadatta met Jālapāda and told him about the whole affair, and the muni, to achieve his personal object asked Devadatta to cut open the abdomen of Vidyutprabhā and take to him the child found therein. Devadatta did not at all relish the idea. Yet reluctant to disobey his preceptor he returned to his wife. She permitted him to carry out the directions of the muni, yet his mind did not approve of the action. Then Vidyutprabhā herself cut open her abdomen, took the child out of it and placing it before her husband told him thus:—“He who eats the child will become a Vidyādharā. Take it. I was a Vidyādharī turned into a Yakṣī by a curse, and to cut open my abdomen and take out the child like this was the redemption promised me from the curse, and now I go to the Vidyādharā world; we shall meet there.” And she disappeared.

In great sorrow Devadatta brought the child to Jālapāḍa who, after sending him out on the pretext of his (Jālapāḍa’s) performing Bhairavaprūpā, ate up the child. Devadatta returned and when he knew of the action of his preceptor he was overcome with rage. But the latter rose up to the skies assuming the form of a Vidyādharā. Devadatta made up his mind to anyhow take revenge upon Jālapāḍa, and he also went to Vidyādharaloka with the help of a Veṭāla whom he befriended by offering human flesh. And, there he saw Jālapāḍa drunk with pride at his Vidyādharahood sitting on a throne of gems in a mansion. Meanwhile Vidyutprabhā who was now once more a Vidyādharī had turned down the advances made by the erstwhile Jālapāḍa for her love. But, at the sight of Devadatta her face flushed with love for him while, in fear, the sword fell down from the hands of Jālapāḍa who now fainted. Devadatta prevented the Veṭāla from killing Jālapāḍa and he (Veṭāla) at the instance of Devadatta took Jālapāḍa to the burning ghat and cremated him there.

Kātyāyānidevi at this time appeared before Devadatta and pleaded with his courage appointed him as chief of the Vidyādharas. He wedded Vidyutprabhā and lived happily. (Kāthāsaritsāgara, Caturādikālāṅbakaṃ, Taranāga 3).

DEVADATTĀ II. A king of ancient India, son of King Jayadatta. Jayadatta wanted to marry his son Devadatta to the daughter of a Vaiśya in Pātaliputra. Though it was a far cry from Pāṭaliputra to Jayadatta's court the Vaiśya married his daughter to the prince as he attached much importance to such an alliance with the King. From the dowry given by the Vaiśya to his daughter the resources of her father appeared to be very meagre to Devadatta. After some time Devadatta's wife returned to her house with the permission of her husband. During her absence Jayadatta expired, enemies attacked his kingdom and Devadatta with his mother ran away from his kingdom. Sometime after that he started for his wife's house. But, feeling that it would not be proper for him to personally tell his father-in-law about what had happened to him, he waited outside an inn near his wife's house, and he had not waited there for long when he saw a woman descending by a cord from the other door of the house. He felt deeply mortified to detect that it was his wife who was thus descending. And, when she, not recognising Devadatta in his dirty clothes, asked him who he was, he answered a 'traveller'. Taking no notice of this 'traveller' she got into the inn, and Devadatta followed her. Inside the inn she was met by a man who beat her for being late to go to him; but, in spite of the beating she pleased him with coy words. Then and there Devadatta divorced her in his mind, but remained there observing their love-making. In the course of their love-play an ear-ring studded with costly gems rolled down the floor from her ears, but she did not notice it. She parted from her paramour before dawn. Devadatta went to Kānyakubja with the ear-ring, and there he pledged it for one lakh sovereigns with which money he collected an army and conquered back his lost kingdom. Then he redeemed the pledge and sent the ear-ring to his father-in-law. The whole incident became public. When she realised the fact that the stranger whom she had met at the inn was her own husband, Devadatta's wife felt so deeply hurt and humiliated that her heart was broken and she died. (Kāthāsārītāgāra, Narāvāhana-datta Janana, Tarāṅga I).

DEVADATTĀ III. Father of the reputed muni Uatatthyā. (Satyatapas). (See Satyatapas.)

DEVADATTA (M). The divine conch of Arjuna. Maya got this conch from Varuna and he kept it in the sabhā of Vṛṣaparvan, which was in Bindusaras on Mount Maināka to the south of Mount Kaiśā. When Maya built the palace at Indraprastha for the Pāṇḍavas he went to Bindusaras and brought for Arjuna that conch called Devadattam, and a club for Bhimasena. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3).

In the battle of Kurukṣetra Arjuna mounted a white horse and blew his conch Devadattam. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 14).

DEVĀDHIPA. A king who in his previous life was an asura. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 26).

DEVADUTTĀ. A messenger of the Devas. When Dharma-putra refused to live in heaven without his brothers like Karna it was this Devadūta with whom Indra sent Dharma-putra to Karna and others. (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 14). This Devadūta is said to be meditated upon at dawn and before sun-set everyday. (Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 14).

DEVADYUMNA. A king of the dynasty of Bharata. From Bharata, son of Rṣabha, was born Sumati, from Sumati Devajīt and from him Devadyumna was born. Devadyumna was the grand-father of King Pratipa and father of King Parameśṭhi. (Bhāgavata Pañcama Skandha).

DEVADVUTI. A Rṣi who dwelt in his āśrama on the banks of river Sarasvati. Owing to the blessing of Viṣṇu a son called Sumitra was born to him. As a result of his doing rigorous tapas for 1000 years he shone with a rare effulgence. Though Viṣṇu appeared to him one day in the month of Vaśākha and asked him to choose any boon he wanted, he, who was so much detached in life prayed only for devotion to God. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 212).

DEVAGANA. See Manvantara.

DEVAGARBHA. A Rṣi. He too was present as one of the ṛtis (Priests) at the yajña conducted by Brahmā at the Puṣkara temple. (Padma Purāṇa, Śṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 34).

DEVAGRAHĀ. An evil planet. Devagrahā darṣana (seeing this planet) will lead to insanity. (Vana Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 47).

DEVAHAVYA. A sage, a member of Indra's assembly. (Sabha Parva, Chapter 7).

DEVAHOTRA. A maharṣi, who was an honoured member at the yajña performed by Uparicaravasu. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 336, Verse 9).

DEVAHIRADA (M). A tīrtha centre on the heights of Mount Kāḷaṇja. A dip in its holy waters will bring the same result as the dāna (gift) of a thousand cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 56).

DEVĀHUTI. A daughter of Śvayambhuva Manu, the son of Brahmā. The Manu had two sons called Priyavrata and Uttānapāda and three daughters named Aṅkūti, Devahūti and Praśūti. Aṅkūti was married by Ruci-prajāpati and Devahūti by Kardamaprajāpati and Praśūti to Daksprajāpati. Kapila, the mighty exponent of the Sāṅkhyā system of philosophy and great ascetic was the son born to Kardama by Devahūti. Kapila taught his mother the world famous Kapila Sāstra, (Deviḥāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha) and when the teaching was over he bade farewell to her and took to forest life. And, his mother performed a yajña on the lines advised by her son, on the banks of river Sarasvati. Because she took three baths daily her hairs became a mixture of black and blue in colour and she got emancipated due to fasting. She wore the bark of trees. Devāhūti, who realised all the principles and the truth became blind to all external objects like gardens, maids, mansions etc. Thus immersed in meditation she in course of time attained siddhi (realisation). The particular spot on the banks of Sarasvati where she attained Siddhi is called Siddhapada.

DEVĀHVAYA. A king in ancient India. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 235).

DEVĀKA I. A king in ancient India. Born in the Yayāti dynasty he shone like Indra (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67). He was the brother of Ugrasena, father of Kāṁsa, and the father of Devākī, the mother of Kṛṣṇa. (Sabha Parva, Southern Text, Chapter 22).

DEVĀKA II. A king in ancient India. He fostered a girl born to a brahmin by a Sūḍra woman. It was this girl whom Vidura married. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 12).

DEVĀKA III. A king, a contemporary of the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 17).

DEVAKI. Mother of Śri Kṛṣṇa.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus:—Brahmā
DEVAKŚATRA

A king of the Yayāti dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

DEVAKULYĀ. Grand-daughter of Maricī mahārṣi, who lived in the Svāyambhuva Manvantara. As she washed in her previous life the holy feet of Mahāviṣṇu, in the next birth she was born as river Gangā. (Bhāgavata, Caturtha Skandha).

DEVAKUNḌAM I. (DEVAHRADAM). A sacred place. A dip in the holy waters there is productive of results equal to that of an Aśvamedha yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 20).

DEVAKUNḌAM II. A particular part of Kṛṣṇaṇeva river. It is known as Jātismarana hradam also. A bath in the holy waters here will evoke memories of previous life. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 37).

DEVAKŪṬA I. A mountain 18,000 miles in extent and 2000 miles in height. Devakūṭa is on the eastern side of Mahāmeru. There is another mountain called Jathara near this mountain. (Devi Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

DEVAKŪṬA II. A holy place. A dip in the sacred waters at this place is equal in its effects to that of an Aśvamedha yajña. Moreover the family of such persons also will prosper. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 14).

DEVALA. A famous muni, the son of Pratyūṣa, one of the aśtavasus. (Adi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 26). Devala muni is a character in the well-known story of Gajendra-mokṣa. (For details see Indra-dyūmna).

DEVALA I. A muni, a very erudite scholar in the Vedas. He was the elder brother of Dhumya mahaṛṣi, and was present at the sarpa-satras (serpent yajñas) of King Janamejaya. Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa on his way from Devarakā to Hastināpuram met Devala. After the great war was over he visited Yudhishṭhira.

Devala had a daughter called Suvarcalā. In the svayamvara ceremony he held for his daughter to which sons of munis were invited she chose Śvetaketu as her husband. (Sānti Parva, Southern Text, Chapter 22).

Devala had two very intelligent and forebearing sons. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 15).

DEVALA II. A disciple of Vyāsa. Asita, Devala, Vaiśampāyana, Sumantu and Jaimini were some of the disciples of Vyāsa. (M.B. Prathamā Skandha).

Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa contains the following story about Devala. Devala was the son born to Asitamuni as the result of a boon granted by Śiva. Rainbhā, the heavenly dancer fell in love with him. But, Devala did not reciprocate her love. So, she cursed him to become crooked in body. When he became crooked thus he came to be called Aṣṭāvakra. For six thousand years he did penance after which Kṛṣṇa and Rādāh appeared to him. Rādāh laughed at the uncouth form of Aṣṭāvakra. But, Kṛṣṇa admonished her and embraced him. At once his bodily crookedness disappeared and he became very handsome. A vimāna then descended from heaven, and Rādāh, Kṛṣṇa and muni together disappeared in it.

Ekaparṇā, daughter of Himavān was this Devala’s wife. (Harivarāṇyā, Chapter 18).

DEVAMATA. An ancient rṣi in India. Once he had a talk with Nārada about the Ātman (soul). (Adi Parva, Chapter 22).

DEVAMĪḌHA. A reputed Yādava born in the family of Yadu, son of Yayāti. He was the grandfather of Vasudeva and father of King Sūrascena. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 144, Verse 6).

DEVAMITRĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmanya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 14).

DEVAMITRĀŚĀKALYA. Son of Māndukeya muni. A great Vedic scholar, he taught the five Sāṁhitās to his five disciples, Mūdgala, Gokala, Matsuś, Khāliya and Sāṁśīreyas. (See Yājñavalkya).

DEVANADI. A river described as existing in the assembly of Varuṇa. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 19).

DEVĀNĪKA. A king born in Śrī Rāma’s dynasty, (Solar). Kuśa was Śrī Rāma’s son, Aditi the son of Kuśa, Niśadha the son of Aditi, Nabhas Niśadha’s son, Puṇḍarika the son of Nabhas, Kṣemadhanvā the son

1. Devaki Rohini caiva Vasudevastathā suratā / Kṛṣṇarāmīvapatyanā bhoktā vi jahū śmrīm // Prānāṁśa vijahustatā bhāgavadvirahāturāh // of Puṇḍarika and Devānika the son of Kṣemadhavanī. In the navama skandha of Bhāgavata it is said that Devānika was the grandfather of Pāriyātra and father of Rākṣa.

DEVĀNTAKA. A Rākṣasa, the son of Rudraketu. When the people of the three worlds could no longer stand his depredations Gaṅapati incarnated in Kaśyapa’s house and killed Devāntaka. (Padma Purāṇa, Srṣṭī Khaṇḍa).

DEVĀPA. A king born in the Yayāti dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

DEVAPATHA (M). A holy centre. To stay there bathing in the holy waters is as productive of results as conducting a Devasattra (Yajna). (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 45).

DEVĀPI I. A king born in the lunar dynasty.

2) Devāpi resorted to the forest. Devāpi was the best loved by his father and was the apple of the eyes of his subjects. But he was suffering from skin disease. So, when Pratīpa wanted to crown him king the people objected. Their argument was that God would not be pleased if a man with skin disease became king. The king yielded to their wishes and crowned Santanu as his successor. The youngest brother Bālхиka went and stayed in his mother’s house. Devāpi who was disappointed that he was denied the crown, left for the forest and spent the rest of his life in penance. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 149).

His end. Devāpi did tapas at the Prthūdaka tirtha in the interior of Kurukṣetra and ultimately attained salvation. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 37).

DEVĀPI II. A warrior who fought on the Pāṇḍava side in the great war. He hailed from Cedi. Karna killed him. (Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 48).

DEVAPRASTHĀM. A city in the northern borders of ancient India. King Senābindu had his capital there. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 13)

DEVAPRATIṢṬHĀ. A king of the Yayāti dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

DEVAPRATIṢṬHAṬ. The sacred rite of installation of Devas (idols) in temples for which definite rules have been laid down by great ācāryas. According to the rules Vāsudevamūrti is to be installed in the centre of the pañcāyatanas. (the Śrī kovil—the sanctum sanctorum and the four paths used for the procession of the deity, around it). The mūrtis Vāmana, Narasīhna, Hayagrīva and Varāhā are to be installed in the zones (corners) dominated by Agni, Nirṛti, Vāyu and Isāna respectively. Nārāyaṇamūrti should be installed at the centre of the prāṣāda. Ambikā should be installed in Agni’s corner, Ādiya in Nirṛti’s corner, Brahmas in Vāyu’s corner and Śivalīnga in the Isāna corner. Liṅga in the form of Rudra should also be installed in the Isāna corner; or it may be installed in all the nine corners or zones. In that case Vāsudevamūrti should be installed at the centre. All the Devas bearing the name Rāma must be installed to the east of the Prāṣāda. Lokapāla kas like Indra should be installed at the eight places starting with the east. In Pañcāyata pratiṣṭhā Puruṣottama should be installed at the centre. Mahālakṣmī and Vaiṣṇavāraṇa are to be installed to the east of the Prāṣāda, and the Mātṛs in the south. Subrahmanyas, Gaṅapati, Isāna and the planets (grahaḥ) like Sun should be installed in the west. Daśāvatāramūrtis (ten incarnations of Viṣṇu) should be installed in the North. Čandikā should be installed in Agni’s zone, Sarasvatī in Vāyu’s zone, Ambikā in Nirṛti’s zone and Śrī Bhagavatī in Isāna zone. In temples with thirteen Ālayas Viṣṇu should be installed at the centre. Mūrtis like Keśava should be installed.

Devapratīṣṭhā (idols) are of seven varieties like those made of earth, of wood, of metals, of gems, of sandal wood, of stone and of flowers. Of the above, idols made of earth, sandalwood and of flowers are meant only for temporary use, but they also grant all the desires of the devotees.

Stone for idols should be got from mountains. Pāṇḍura (white), Aruṇa (red), Pīta (yellow) and Kṛṣṇa (black) rocks having any one of these four colours may be selected. If no such stone is available any other stone may be used, but by doing homa and reciting Narasiṅhā mantra the attributes of any of the specified varnas should be transferred to it. It is best to have white markings on the stone selected for the idol. There are the three genders, masculine, feminine and neuter with reference to stones. Stone which produces the sound of bell metal on being hit and gives out sparks of fire on being cut is of the masculine gender. Stone which possesses these attributes to a lesser degree is of the feminine gender. Stone with no shape is of neuter gender. Beside these three varieties there are the sargarha (pregnant) stones also, viz. stones with round markings on them, and they should not be used for making idols. Once it is decided to make an idol, Vanayaṅja should be performed first. To worship the forest from which the stone for the idol was to be obtained is vanayaṅja. A specified place in the forest should be dug up, the pit treated with cow-dung and a small platform raised and Viṣṇu worshipped thereon. After sacrificial offerings etc. instruments for the construction of the idol like taṅka (chisel) should be worshipped. To sprinkle on the stone sālītīya (water in which paddy grains are put) purified with the chanting of astramantra is the next step. After that bhūtabali (offerings to the spirits of the stone) should be performed upon which the bhūtas residing inside the stone will quit. Then the ācārya should go to sleep repeating the svapna mantra.\[1\]
DEVAPUŚKARINĪ 212 DEVASĀRMĀ IV

If he dreams good dreams everything is quite right; if bad dreams are dreamt, the next morning narasimha-homa should be performed, the stone given offerings with chanting of astra mantra. The edge of the instruments used for sculpturing the idol should be firstly smeared with ghee, honey etc. The architect should be one who has gained mastery over the senses. He should first cut the stone into a square, and then it should be placed on a chariot, covered with cloth and taken to his house. Then after performing a pūjā the work on the idol should be started. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 43.)

DEVAPUŚKARINĪ. A very ancient tīrtha in India a dip in which is as efficacious as performing an Āsvamedha yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 45.)

DEVARĀJA I. A king in ancient India who spent his days in the assembly of Yama worshiping him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 26.)

DEVARĀJA II. An immoral brahmin who had been a trader in Kāratanagara. Once he met a whore at the bathing pool and got so inextricably tied up with her that he killed his parents and wife for her sake. Then one day he had to go to Pratiṣṭhānanagara on business where he heard sacred stories being read. He had also a glimpse of the divine. A month after that he died. Though an evil fellow, because of his having worshipped Śiva for a month he had the good fortune to go to Mount Kailāsa after his death. (Śiva Purāṇa Māhātmya.)

DEVARAKŚITĀ. Sister of Devaki, mother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (See Devaki.)

DEVĀRANYA (M). A holy centre. It was here where Ambā, daughter of the Kāti king did tapas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 186, Verse 27.)

DEVARĀTA I. A king who flourished in Dharma-putra's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 26.)

DEVARĀTA II. (Śunaśeṣpha). General. A king of Mithilā. The kings of Mithilā were commonly called Janaka. Devarāta was called Devarāta Janaka. (See Janaka.)

2) Genealogy. From Viṣṇu descended thus:—Brahmā,—Bhrigu—Cayavana—Ūrva—Rcika—Devarāta (Śunaśeṣpha). (For details see Śunaśeṣpha.)

DEVARĀTA III. A house-holder whose daughter Kalā was married by Śoṇa. Kalā was killed by Mārica. Devarāta and Śoṇa along with Viśvāmitra went to Sīvaloka in search of Kalā. As Kalā had, at the time of her death, uttered the word ‘Hara’ (Śiva) she had gone to Mount Kailāsa and was spending her days in the service of Pārvaṭī who, after making Kalā and Śoṇa participate in Somavrāturata sent them back to earth. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khanda, Chapter 112.)

DEVASĀRMAM. A mountain. Here lived Agstya in his āśrama for some time. (M.B. Chapter 88, Verse 17.)

DEVASĀRMĀ I. A very reputed muni. He had a wife called Ruci and a disciple called Vipula. (See Vipula III.)

DEVASĀRMĀ II. A Brahmā, an erudite scholar in the Vedas. His story was once told to Pārvaṭī by Śiva as follows:—

Devasārmā, the very erudite brahmin scholar in the Vedas came to be much respected by the people of the four varṇas (Castes) because of his constant and unfailing performance of the various religious duties and rites like the Agnihotra etc. He had sons, relations and cows in abundance. But, he did not observe the Śukla-paṅcamī in Proṣṭhapada (Bhādrapada) which is one of the dvādasacāndra māsas (the 12 solar months). That day was his father's death anniversary (Śrāddha day) for which he would invite Brahmins on the previous evening. And, in the morning he would get cooked rice by his wife in 18 different ways for the gratification of the departed soul. Then will he feed the Brahmās. On one such day he duly treated a Brahmā versed in the Vedas. In the evening when he was washing his feet with water brought by his wife he heard the following conversation between a dog and an ox.

Dog:—Please attend to my words about what my daughter-in-law did. One day, as fate would have it, I went to my son's house, where a snake was drinking milk, and I drank the whole of the milk which was left over by it. My daughter-in-law saw me drinking it and I was absolutely crest-fallen. I don't feel any yearning even for food.

Ox:—Now dog, please attend to my sorrow and grief. Today my son feasted the Brahmāns, but he did not even think of me. Nobody gave me even a blade of grass or a drop of water. I have not tasted anything today. Moreover I am a captive also. All this must be the result of some sin committed by me in my past life; no doubt about it.”

The very learned and intelligent brahmin inferred from the above talk that the dog and ox were his mother and his father respectively, He thought to himself: they have been born as animals in my house. What remedy shall I find out therefor?

On account of such painful thoughts the Brahmin could not sleep in the night. Early in the morning he went to sage Vasiṣṭha and unburdened his heart to him and requested him to find a solution to the low and mean birth which had become his parents' fate. After meditating for some time the great sage told the brahmin as follows:—

"Look here, the ox was, in its previous birth, a great brahmin in Kupḍināgarā. He did not observe the Śukla-paṅcamī in the month of Proṣṭhapada, the day being the death anniversary of his father. His wife had menstruation on the same day, but she herself feasted the Brahmās. A woman is impure during the four days of menstruation. Because of having feasted the Brahmās on the first day of her monthly period the Brahmin's wife was born as a dog. As for the husband, he was born an ox as he not only did not observe the Śukla-paṅcamī day, but also shared the sin of his wife. Further questioned by the brahmin as to what he should do for the salvation of his parents, Vasiṣṭha advised him to observe the Śrī paṅcamī in the month of Proṣṭhapada (Bhādrapada). He did so and his parents blessed him and attained salvation. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 78.)

DEVASĀRMĀ III. (See Mitrabhedha.)

DEVASĀRMĀ IV. (See Mitrabhedha.)
a brahmin called Devasarman with his wife Yajnasena. When his wife got pregnant Devasarman told her that a good and lucky son would be born to them to which she replied as follows :- "On no account build castles in the air and brood over things. I shall tell you a story about a danger which happened to one who built castles in the air. A brahmaçāri was carrying home in a pot on his head some rice flour. On the way he thought thus : "I will purchase a she-goat with the money I get out of the sale of this rice powder, and it will deliver two kids every year. I will sell all the kids and with the sale proceeds purchase a cow and when it multiplies I will have the wherewithals for cultivation and then I will do cultivation in a good field and produce much paddy. And when I have thus money in hand I will renovate my house and marry. We will then have a good son whom I will name Somaşaran, and if my wife, without caring for the boy, goes to milk the cow I will go to the cow shed and give her a good beating. "When his imagination reached this point the pot on his head received, without his knowing, a blow which the stick in his hand fell down on the ground and was broken into pieces."

Five or six days after telling the above story to her husband Yajnasena gave birth to a child. One day she went to the river to take her bath leaving the child to the care of her husband. Soon after a messenger came from the palace to invite Devasarman for food, the day being Amavāsi when Brahmins were fed well and also given dakṣinā, (presents of money). He could not wait till his wife arrived; the child became a problem to him.

The brahmin had a beloved Mongoose. After entrusting the child to the care of it the brahmin went to the palace. Within a short time a serpent was seen crawling towards the child and the Mongoose attacked it and bit it into pieces. Naturally the Mongoose got itself smeared all over with the blood of the serpent, and the brahmin on returning home finding the Mongoose bathed in blood thought it might have eaten the child and in a rage he killed the poor Mongoose. But, when he entered the room and found pieces of the killed serpent strayed all over there truth and light dawned on him, Yajnasena, who had returned after bath by now also found fault with him.

The second story. Once there was a brahmin in very indigent circumstances. He was an orphan from his very childhood. One day while he was asleep quite weary and tired as he had no food that day some one appeared and told him in a dream that three sannyāsins would come to his house that noon and that if beaten to death they would turn into three pot-fulls of treasure with which he could live comfortably well.

His dream came true, and he locked up the treasure in his room after sending away a barber who had witnessed the incident with a piece of gold. The barber returned home cherishing in his mind the false belief that sannyāsins beaten to death would turn into pot-fulls of treasure. And, one day some sannyāsins came to his house and he began beating them and they ran out crying aloud. Their cries attracted the attention of the servants of the King. The barber's limbs were cut off and he was killed on Śīla (a three-pronged weapon).

DEVAŚARMA V. A brahmin, who used to perform rites for the dead at the confluence of the sea every fortnight. On every such occasion souls of the departed used to appear and bless him. Once Devasarman went to Piṭāloka with his pitṛs, and he got restless and sorry to find other pitṛs living there in greater comfort than the pitṛs of his parents. When he was told that the better fate of the other pitṛs was due to their sons performing Śraddha at Mahīśārasañgama he returned to earth and with the help of other people did Śraddha at the saṅgama and thus raised the condition of his pitṛs. (Skanda Purāṇa. Skandhas 1, 2 and 3).

DEVAŚARMA VI. A brahmin who lived on the northern side of river Kāveri. The following story about him is told in chapters 2, 4 and 12 of the Skanda Purāṇa.

One day in the month of Kārttika he asked his son to bathe. The son refused to obey his father, who got angry at the disobedience of the son and cursed him to be turned into a rat. But, when the son begged his pardon he said that the boy would resume his old form when he heard about the greatness of Kārttika.

While the brahmin thus turned into a rat, was roaming about in the forest it saw Visvāmitra mahārāja seated under a tree with his disciples. The mahārāja was telling the disciples about the greatness of Kārttika. The brahmin—turned rat—heard the story and reverted to its old form as the brahmin boy.

DEVAŚARMA VII. See Māyā Śīva.

DEVAŚATIRA(M). A yajña. (See Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 68).

DEVAŚENA I. A very intelligent king who ruled his country with Šrāvasti as his capital. (See Unmādini).

DEVAŚENA II. Husband of Kirtisenā. (See Kirtisenā).

DEVAŚENA. Dakṣa's daughter and wife of Subrahmanya and a woman of rare beauty and purity. Daityasena and Devasena, daughters of Dakṣa, used to enjoy themselves at Mānasa saras. One day Kesi, the asura saw them and craved for their love. Daityasena agreed to become his wife, but Devasenā refused, and she prayed for the help of Indra, who happened to come there at the moment. Indra and Kesi fought with each other. Kesi used the club against Indra, who broke it into two with his vajráyuḍha. Then Kesi hurled a mountain at Indra, who cut it also. Frightened to death Kesi then ran away with Daityasena to safety, and Devasena expressed her desire to Indra to have one who could defeat the Devas, Dānavas and Yakṣas as her husband. But, Indra could not find such a one in the whole universe. Indra told Brahmat about it. The Devas put their heads together and brought forth Subrahmanya from Śiva to be her husband. In the war between the Devas and the asuras Devasenā helped Subrahmanya, and the asuras were completely destroyed. (Vana Parva, Chapters 223, 224).

DEVAŚĪ. See Gayātīrtha.

DEVASMITĀ. A Gem of a woman who was much devoted to her husband. The story of Devasmītā has been so often quoted in ancient Indian literature. She was the daughter of a Vaiśya called Dharmagupta and was married to Guhasena, son of a Vaiśya called Dhana-datta, who belonged to Tāmraliptinagara.

After the death of his father Guhasena decided to go to Kaṭāhadvīpa for trade, and Devasmītā, a very suspicious wife, objected to it. When his other relations began pressing him to go to the dvipa for trade and his wife not to go, Guhasena could not take a decision on the matter. He began a penance so that God might take the decision in the matter. Devasmitā also followed him. Then God appeared to them in their dreams and gave each of them a red lotus flower saying, "both of you keep one flower each with you, and while both of you are away from each other if either of you go astray the lotus flower in the hands of the other person will fade." And, on awaking both of them had a flower in their hands. Guhasena with his flower in his hands started for Kājāhadvīpa, and Devasmitā stayed at home with her eyes fixed on her lotus flower. Guhasena reached the dīpa and traded in gems. Everybody was surprised to find in his hands a lotus flower which never faded. Four Vaiśya youngsters wanted to understand the secret of it and one day they invited Guhasena to their house and treated him to liquor very liberally. When he got absolutely drunk they questioned him about the secret of the lotus flower, and he, though in indistinct words, explained it to them. When the secret was thus out all the four youngsters decided to seduce his wife. They extracted from him the information that he was not returning in the near future, and then they came to Tāmralipi.
At that time there lived in Tāmralipi a bogus Sannāsini (a female anchorite) called Yogakaranādikā. The four youths from Kājāhadvīpa visited her, and she understood to fulfill their desire. She asked them to halt at her house and then went to Devasmitā with some refreshments. Devasmitā’s bitch barked very violently at the bogus anchorite when she told the former thus: "Child! don’t you see the bitch barking at my very sight. The bitch is crying thinking of her previous birth at my sight. Herself (the bitch) and I were, in our last birth, the wives of a Brahmin. Since our husband was a courtier at the palace often he was away from home and in his absence I used to satisfy the cravings of sex by associating freely with other males. I had even at that time realised the truth that there was no duty higher than satisfying the senses, and so I am now reborn with memories of the past life. As for this bitch in her past life as co-wife with me of the Brahmin, she sinned against her sense-organs by upholding, in ignorance, her chastity, as a punishment for which she was born as dog in this life. Yet, she remembers her past.
Though Devasmitā saw through the false and treacherous heart of the bogus anchorite, without expressing it she talked in all respect with her. Believing that she had succeeded in her mission she told Devasmitā about the four youths who had come from Kājāhadvīpa, and Devasmitā welcomed the idea very gladly. Devasmitā got some liquor and mixed poison in it. When it was night one of the Vaiśya youths came, and after rendering him unconscious by administering the poisoned liquor to him Devasmitā stripped him of all his clothes and ornaments, got him scratched on the brows by the bitch and threw him into a cow dung heap. Before it was dawn next day he returned to the anchorite’s house, took a bath and dressed himself up in decent clothes. His other three companions also visited Devasmitā one after the other in the next three days, and they too underwent the same experience as the first one. Lastly the bogus Sannāsini also got down and Devasmitā cut her limbs and sent her away. And, after this Devasmitā put on the garb of a merchant and went to Kājāhadvīpa and identified her husband from among a thousand merchants. Guhasena too felt his own doubts about her identity. But, without revealing her identity she saw the king and told him that she had certain matters to submit before the prajāparīṣat (popular assembly). The King accordingly convened a session of the assembly and Devasmitā identified the four youths who had tried to seduce her and submitted all details regarding the episode. The King then gave her a lot of money, appointed the four youths as servants and sent her back home with Guhasena. (Kathāsārītavākar, Kathāmukhalamabakam, Taranāga).
DEVASRAVAS I A king of the Yayāti dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).
DEVASRAVAS II A Ēṣi born in Vīvāmitra’s family. He was a māntrika of the Kuṣika gotra (Sānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 5).
DEVASRUTA. A son of Śukamuni. Śuka, the son of Vṛṣṇa married Pivari, the beautiful daughter of the Pīrṣ, and to them were born four sons, Kṛṣṇa, Gauraprabha, Bhūri and Devāsruta, and one daughter, Kirtī. (Devibhāgavata, Prathama Skandha).
DEVASTHĀNA.
General. A maharsi, who was a friend of the Pāṇḍavas.
Other information. (1) After the great war was over this muni visited Dharmacūtra and induced him to perform yajñas.
(2) Along with some other munis he gave spiritual advice to Dharmaçūtra and comforted him. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 27).
(3) He was one of the muni who visited Bhīṣma on his bed of arrows. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 5).
DEVAŚUROYUDDHA(S) Wars between the gods and asuras. Altogether twelve wars were fought between the Devas and the asuras, viz. Narasima, Vāmana, Varāha, Amṛtamathana, Tārakāmaya, Aḍābaka, Trai-pura, Andhaka, Vadha, Vṛtravāda, Dhvajapāta, Halāhala and Kolāhala. Hiranyakāśipu, the dāitya was killed by Narasimha. Vāmana took Mahābali captive after measuring the three worlds in one stride. Hiranyakāśa was killed in fighting in the sea by Varāha with its tusk. Indra defeated Prahlāda in the Tārakāmaya war also killed his son Virocana who had planned to kill him (Indra). As the Devas could not kill, the dānavas of Tripura, Trilocana killed them. Vṛtra who was aided by the dānavas was killed by Indra with the help of Viṣṇu. Indra himself killed Vipracti and his followers who became invisible by māyā after the falling of the dhvaja (flag staff), and in the course of celebrating their victory the Devas defeated Saṇḍāmarka at the yajñāvabhrthā (Bathing at the close of the yajñā). Thus were waged twelve wars between the Devas and the Asuras. (Pādmā Purāṇa, Part 4, Chapter 13).
DEVAŚVĀMI. A Brahmin. (See Vararuci).
DEVĀTITHI. A king born in the Pāṇḍu dynasty. Akrodha was his father and Kārambhā, daughter of the king of Kaliniga, his mother. (Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 22).
Devātithi had wedded Maryādā, daughter of the King of Videha. (Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 23).
DEVAVĀH. A king of the Yayāti dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).
DEVAVANAM. A sacred place. The rivers Bāhudā and Nandā flow along this place. (Vana Parva, Chapter 87, Verse 29).
DEVAVARṈINI. Daughter of Bharadvāja maharṣi. Muni Viśravas married her and to them were born a son called Kubera. (See Kubera).

DEVAVTI I. Daughter of the Gandharva called Manimayya. Suka, the Rākṣasa married Devavatī, and three sons Mālayā, Sumāli and Māli were born to them who lived as dependants of Rāvaṇa. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

DEVAVTI II. Sitā, wife of Rāma was Devavatī in her previous birth. (See Sitā for information for Devavatī's death in fire and rebirth as Sitā).

DEVAVTI III. Daughter of the dailya called Mandāramāli. (See Visvakarman, Para 2).

DEVAVTI. Daughter-in-law of king Agnīdhra, Pūrvacitti, the apsara woman was the king's wife and they had nine sons called Nābbhi, Kītipuruṣa, Hāri, Iḷāvra, Ramuka, Hiraṇjaya, Kuru, Bhadrāśva and Ketumāla, and these sons were married to the following daughters of Meru, viz. Merudevi, Pratirūpā, Ugradaṃṣṭri, Latā, Ramyā, Syāmā, Nāri, Bhadrā and Devavatī. Thus Devavatī became the wife of Ketumāla. (Bhāgavata, Pañcama Skanda).

DEVAVTĀRA I. Bhīṣma (See Bhīṣma for details).

DEVAVTĀRA II. A brahmin who believed in yajñas. He once received without due regard and with indifference the tirtha water given to him by a devotee of Kṛṣṇa after worship of the Lord, as a result of which, in the next birth, he was born as a bamboo stem. And, as he did, consciously or otherwise some good deeds Śrī Kṛṣṇa made a flute out of that bamboo stem, and Devavatā thus attained redemption. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Ḍhaṇḍa, Chapter 73).

DEVAVRDHĀ I. A warrior, who fought against the Pāṇḍavas in the Kurukṣetra war (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 3).

DEVAVRDHĀ II. A king who, along with his subjects attained heaven as he had made a gift of a golden umbrella. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 21).

DEVAYAJANAM. The place called Prayāga which is considered to be the yājnic centre of the Devas, Ambā, daughter of the King of Kāśi did rigorous tapas here. (Udyogā Parva, Chapter 186, Verse 27).

DEVAYAJI. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 7).

DEVAYANI, Sukrācārya’s daughter.

1) Birth. Śvayambhuvamanu, son of Brahā had two sons: Priyavrata and Utānapāda. Priyavrata wedded Surūpa and Barhiṣmati, two very beautiful daughters of Viśvakarma, and he had by Surūpa ten sons called Agnīdhra, Idhmañjīva, Yañābāhu, Mahāvira, Rukmaśrī, Gṛḍhaśrī, Savaṇa, Medha-ti, Vīhitota and Kavi as also a daughter called Uṛjasvati who was the youngest of the whole lot. Of the above ten sons Kavi, Savana and Mahāvira were spiritual giants and great sages. Uttama, Tāpasa and Raivata, the three sons of Priyavrata by his second wife Barhiṣmati turned out to be manvantarādhipatis. Uṛjasvati, the only daughter of Priyavrata was married to Sukrācārya, preceptor of the asuras. Devayānī was Sukrācārya’s daughter by Uṛjasvati. (Devībhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skanda).

2) Curse by Kaca. Kaca, son of Bṛhaspati became Sukrācārya’s disciple to learn Mṛtaśānjivī vināyakī (the science to ward off death for ever). Devayānī fell madly in love with Kaca. But, after his studies under her father were over Kaca returned to devaloka without marrying Devayānī, who cursed that Kaca’s learning should prove useless. And, Kaca cursed her in return that nobody from devaloka should marry her. (For details see Kaca).

3) Devayānī in a neglected well. Once Vṛṣaparvan was the king of the asuras, and Sukrācārya lived in his palace. Sārmiṣṭhā, the daughter of the king and Devayānī, the daughter of Sukrācārya became thick friends. While one day these two friends with their companions were engaged in water sports Indra came that way. Very much interested in seeing the deva damsels thus engaged in water sports Indra assumed the form of air and blew off the dresses of the damsels from the shore while they were playing in the river. The damsels hurriedly got out of water, ran after the fleeing garments and put on whatever came to their hands. In the confusion what Sārmiṣṭhā got and wore was Devayānī’s clothes. Devayānī ran after Sārmiṣṭhā and caught hold of the clothes, but the latter did not yield them to her. Both of them indulged in hot words against each other, Sārmiṣṭhā calling Sukrācārya a beggar living in her father’s palace for his food. Not only that, she pushed Devayānī into a neglected well and went her way. At that time prince Yayāti, son of Nahuṣa, was hunting in that forest. Feeling very thirsty he came to the well for a drink and therein saw Devayānī in tears. He brought her out from the well and leaving her there went on his way.

Sukrācārya and his wife actually got anxious and upset that their daughter had not returned even after the lapse of so much time and deputed their servant Gurnikā to seek for Devayānī. She found her out in the forest. But, Devayānī refused to return home as she did not want to continue as the daughter of one who lived on the charity of Sārmiṣṭhā and her father. Gurnikā carried back this news to Sukrācārya, who then went himself to the forest and met his daughter. He felt deeply wounded to hear about the insults heaped on his daughter by Sārmiṣṭhā, and sent word to Vṛṣaparvan that they were not returning to the palace. Vṛṣaparvan realised that if Sukrācārya quarrelled with him the whole asura world also would become divided. He, therefore, tried his best to pacify the aśūra and his daughter. At last Devayānī agreed to return to the palace in case Sārmiṣṭhā went to her with one thousand of her maids to serve as her (Devayānī’s) maids. Vṛṣaparvan acted accordingly and Devayānī was satisfied and returned to the palace with her father. (Aḍi Parva, Chapter 78 onwards).

4) Wedding of Devayānī. Some time afterwards when Devayānī was sporting in the forest with Sārmiṣṭhā and others, King Yayāti happened to pass that way. They recognised each other and Devayānī requested Yayāti to marry her as she had mentally chosen him as her husband on the very same day on which he had saved her from the well.

Yayāti realised only too well that it was really dangerous to marry the daughter of Sukrācārya in the forest secretly and he, therefore, rejected Devayānī’s request. But, she got down her father there and with his permission Yayāti married her. He also got much wealth by way of dowry. Sārmiṣṭhā and her maids accompanied Devayānī but Sukrācārya warned Yayāti that on no account should he touch Sārmiṣṭhā.

With his wife and her attendants Yayāti returned to his palace; but he put Sārmiṣṭhā and her maids in a place newly built for the purpose. Devayānī delivered a child in due course and it was named Yaḍu. Sarmaṣṭhā one day met Yayāti in the forest and requested for a child by him. Though at first he was reluctant to oblige remembering only too well the injunction of Śukrācārya, he at last succumbed to the eloquence of Sarmaṣṭhā. She got pregnant by him and the child she delivered was called Druhyu.

Devayānī was alarmed at the birth of a child to Sarmaṣṭhā, who was unmarried, and questioned her about it. Sarmaṣṭhā’s answer that a brahmin stranger, who came that way was the father of her child satisfied Devayānī.

Ere long another son, Turvasu, was born to Devayānī, and Sarmaṣṭhā too delivered two children called Anudruhyu and Pūru. Thus the mistress (Devayānī) had two sons and her servant, Sarmaṣṭhā three sons.

While Yayāti and Devayānī were one day strolling in the garden the sons of Sarmaṣṭhā came there. She noticed the close resemblance of those boys to her husband (Yayāti) and it kindled her wrath. Though Yayāti did not, because of the presence of Devayānī, notice the children, when she asked them who their father was, they answered “Yayāti”, whereupon in great rage she ran up to her father. Yayāti too followed her. Devayānī told her father about the infidelity of Yayāti and he (Sukra) cursed that Yayāti be afflicted with old age. When Yayāti asked for redemption from the curse Śukrācārya told him that he could exchange his old age for the youth of somebody else.

Yayāti then called together all his five sons and asked them whether anyone of them was prepared to exchange his (son’s) youth for his (Yayāti’s) old age for one thousand years. The three elder sons refused to agree to the proposal, but the fourth son Pūru gladly exchanged his youth with his father’s old age. After spending his life in youthful enjoyment for one thousand years Yayāti returned his youth to Pūru, and Pūru assumed Kingship of the country. (Adi Parva, Chapters 81-83).

5) Synonyms forDevayānī. Ausanaśi, Śukratanyāyā and Bāhrāgavi.

DEVI. (Mahāmāyā). Though Devi is without a beginning it is told how she became first visible to living beings.

1) Beginning: While Mahāviṣṇu was resting on a fig leaf in the assumed form of a child he began thinking as to who he was, who created him and how he should act. And then a celestial voice announced as follows:

[Verse from Devi Bhāgavata, Pañcamā Skandha]

DEVI. (Mahāmāyā). Though Devī is without a beginning it is told how she became first visible to living beings.

1) Beginning: While Mahāviṣṇu was resting on a fig leaf in the assumed form of a child he began thinking as to who he was, who created him and how he should act. And then a celestial voice announced as follows:

[Verse from Devi Bhāgavata, Pañcamā Skandha]
pleasure in removing the worries and sorrows of devotees who seek refuge in her. She is all-power, achievements and assets personified. All imaginable permutations and combinations of every attribute comprise in her and she it is who activates the universal soul.

2) Laksmi. This Devi is the most sublime form of the universal soul, nay, the universal soul itself. She is all wealth and riches personified, and she is the very seat of beauty, compassion, welfare, peace, all goodness etc. Evil traits like anger, avarice, haughtiness etc. are miles away from her. She is all sympathy and kindness towards her devotees. In Vaikuntha, as Mahalaksmi she is ever engaged in the service of her husband, Vishnu. In heaven she is the very glory of it. In houses she appears as the welfare and prosperity of the inmates. She is in fact beauty itself and is the essence of beauty everywhere. She is all-merciful, and worshipped by all.

(3) Sarasvatī. She is very base and fountain head of and the presiding deity of the word, intellect, knowledge, the arts etc. She also is of the form of the universal soul and liberally grants intellect, poetical skill, reason and logic, understanding capacity etc. to her devotees. The finest music with all its beauties originates from her. Yet, she is the goddess of all learning, fine arts and every branch of knowledge. Like the ice piece, the jasmine flower etc. she is beautiful in her white cover. She recited the holy names of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. She is of the form of tapas and blesses those who perform it. In fact, she it is who grants all gifts and powers of understanding. She is the goddess of language and learning (Vāṃtāṭā) and without her human beings would lose their capacity to speak.

(4) Śakārādevī. She is mother of the four varnas (castes, classes) Vedānga, the tāntic science etc. She is of the form of Japa (chanting of holy names and mantras), tapas, the effulgence of Brahma, the very essence of truth and existence and supreme bliss. She is eternal and grants salvation. She forms the very basis and pith and core of the glowing presence of the universal soul. This world is pure, and has been purified by the touch of the sacred feet of this Devi.

(5) Rādhādevī. Rādhikādevī, fifth of the pañcakārīs is the presiding deity over the five prāpas and She is of the form of those prāpas. She is exceptionally beautiful endowed with all fortunes and happiness, sublime and serious, and the consort of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and as eternal and equally endowed with divine attributes as the lord. She is formless also, above and beyond attributes, unattached and detached, and not visible even to the great Devas and muniś by the naked eye. Her clothes even Agni would not burn. She was born, in Vārāha Kalpa as the daughter of Vṛṣabhānu, and because her sacred feet trod over this land, Bhārata (India) became holy. Once Brahmā did tapas for 60,000 years to have a glimpse of the Devī's lotus feet, but could not. People were able to see her only after she, in unbounded compassion for the world, incarnated herself in Vṛndāvana (See Prakṛti).

4) Aṁśārātha(s)—partial manifestations of Devī. The above discussion was concerned with the five forms of the Devī in her full and complete forms. Now, there are six other Devīs, who are partial manifestations or born from certain parts of the Devī.

1) Gaṅgādevī. This Devī who flows in the form of water and washes off men’s sins takes her origin from the body of Mahāviṣṇu. (There is another story which traces Gaṅga’s origin to the Anā (egg or seed) of Brahmā). (See Gaṅgā).

2) Tulasi. She is the lover and also the servant at the feet of Viṣṇu. She also washes off men’s sins and promotes their welfare. (See Tulasi).

3) Manasādevī. Manasādevī, who was born as a daughter of Kaśyapa is another partial incarnation of Mahāmāyā. She is a great tapasvin, a favourite disciple of Śaṅkara, unique in learning and erudition, sister of Ananta (the king of Serpents), the presiding deity of Mantras, wife of Jarātrkāru muni and mother of Āśṭikā muni. (See Manasādevī).

4) Devaseṇādevī. Since this Devī has been born out of a sixth part of Mahāmāyā she is called Śaṭhīdevī also. It is this Devī, who gives children to living beings and also protects them. For one year from the birth of a child this Devī should be worshipped. Those who cannot afford it should worship Devī on the 6th or 21st day after a child is born. (See Devaseṇā).

5) Māṇgalacāndikā. She is born from the face of Mālāprakṛti. Anybody who propitiates and pleases her will be the recipient of all good things like sons and grandsons, wealth, reputation, welfare etc. (See Māṅgalacāndikā).

6) Bhūmīdevī. She is the basis for all things, soil for the origin of the vegetable kingdom, the treasure house of all gems and the very incarnation of compassion and sympathy. (See Bhūmidevi).

5) Aṁśakālādevī(s). Another class of devīs who are also partial manifestations of the Supreme Devī. They are born out of the parts of Mahādevī. The following are the Aṁśakālādevīs.

1) Śudhādevī. Consort of Agni Bhagavān (Fire God). Śvāhā is worshipped in all the worlds. If havis (oblation) is offered without repeating her name the Devas will not accept it.

2) Dakṣīṇādevī. Wife of Yajñādeva, this Devī is worshipped by all. Without this Devī all Karmanās (actions) in the world will become futile.

3) Dikṣādevī. Wife of Yajñādeva, this Devī is worshipped by all.

   Diyāte vimalaṁ jīnam / Kṣiyate karmavāsanā / Tena dikṣetāṁ sa proktā.

   The Devī grants pure knowledge.

4) Suadhādevī. Wife of the Pitṛs, worshipped by manes and men. Offerings made to the Pitṛs without honouring this Devī will prove to be futile.

5) Svastidevī. Consort of the Vāyu. When offering Dakṣīṇā and making divya-dāna (divine gifts) if ‘Svasti’ (may good happen) is not uttered the gifts will be of no use.

6) Puṣṭidevī. Wife of Gaṇapatī. If this Devī ceased to exist men and women would become feeble, because she is the source of all strength.

7) Tuṣṭidevī. Consort of Ananta worshipped by everybody. If the Devī ceased to exist there would be no happiness in the world.

8) Sampattidevī. Wife of Kaśā, Worshipped by Devas and men. If the Devī ceased to exist the whole world would become poor and indigent.

9) Dḥṛti. Consort of Kapila. Everybody worships her all the time. If the Devi ceased to exist the whole world would become timid and cowardly.
(10) Satidevi. Wife of Satya. Well-wisher of all, this Devi is worshipped by muktas. (people released from worldly attachments). If the Devi ceased to exist there would be no friendship and amity between people.
(11) Dayādevi. Wife of Moha. If the Devi ceased to exist the world would become hellish and a fierce battle field.
(12) Pratishṭhādevi. Wife of Punya. In the absence of this Devi, who grants good and happy results to people’s actions the whole world would become as though it were dead.
(13) Siddhādevi.
(14) Kirtidevi. Both the Devis, Siddhā and Kirti are wives of Sukarmā. If they ceased to exist the whole world would be bereft of reputation and become lifeless like a dead body.
(15) Kṛṣṇadevi. Wife of Udyoga. If she ceased to exist the whole world would become inactive and cease to function.
(16) Mithyādevi. Wife of Adharma. Wayward and characterless people worship this Devi. If the Devi ceased to exist the whole world as evolved by Brahmā would cease to exist. This Devi was not seen anywhere in the world during Kṛtyayuga. She began to appear in a subtle form here and there during Tretāyuga. In dvaparyugas she attained more growth and then her limbs and organs became doubly strong. In Kaliyuga she developed to her full stature and growth and goes about everywhere with her brother, Čheat (Kapaja).
(17) Sāntidevi. (see below).
(18) Lajjadevi. Both the Devis, Sānti and Lajja are good-natured wives. If they ceased to exist the world would become dull and sleepy.
(19-20-21) Buddhidevi, Medhādevi and Dhytidevi. These three Devis are wives of Jānāna. If they ceased to exist the world would become steeped in ignorance and foolishness.
(22) Mārti. Wife of Dharma. She is very beautiful and effulgent. In her absence the universal soul would become devoid of vitality, helpless and meaningless.
(23) Śrīdevi. Wife of Māli. Her absence will make the world lifeless.
(24) Nidrādevi. Wife of Kālāgni. The Devi, a sage who has attained realisation, affects everybody in the world during night and makes them lose consciousness and plunges them in sleep. In the absence of this Devi the world will become a lunatic asylum.
(25-26-27) Rātri, Sandhyā and Divasā. These three are the wives of Time (Kāla). In their absence nobody would have any sense of time and none would be able to calculate and fix time.
(28-29) Viśappu and Dāhām. Viśappu = hunger. Dāhām = thirst. These two Devis are the wives of greed (Lobha). They go about the world affecting people and thus making them worried and miserable.
(30-31) Prabhādevi and Dāhikādevi are the wives of Tejas (Vitality). Without them Īśvara will find it impossible to continue the function of creation.
(32-33) Mṛtyu and Jarā are the consorts of Prakṛta- jvara and daughters of Kāla. And, if they cease to exist, Brahmā’s creation would also cease. (For Brahmā’s creation individual souls with the will for action are necessary. He cannot create a soul of his own. So death is a pre-condition of creation, birth. If there is no death there is no birth also. There is a school of thought which maintains that if there is no death but only birth there will not be space on earth for the living, and therefore birth will stop if there is no death.).
(34-35) Tāndra and Prīti are the daughters of Nidrā and consorts of Sukha (pleasure, happiness). These Devis go around the world on the orders of Brahmā.
(36-37) Śraddhā and Bhakti are the consorts of Vairāgya (aversion to worldly comforts, renunciation) and they give salvation to the souls of the people in the world.
Aditi, mother of the Devas, Diti, mother of the Asuras, Surabhi, mother of cows, Kadru, mother of serpents and Vīnātā, mother of Gāruḍas are also involved in the process of creation, and they are born out of parts of Devi.
6) Idol of Devi. There are special injunctions for making idols of the Devi for installation in temples. Candikādevi should have twenty hands. The hands on the right side should hold Śīla, sword, disc, cord, damaru, śakti etc. and the hands on the left side should hold nāgappāra, flag, club, mirror etc. (There are also idols with slight differences from the above).
Lakṣmiṇidevi would hold in her right hand the lotus flower and a Kāvāla fruit in the left. Sarasvatidevi will have in her hands books, aksamālā and viṇā. Gaṅgadevi rides on a makaramatsaya (fish) holding in her hands a pot and lotus flowers. Yamunādevi rides the turtle with a pot in hand and she is blue in colour.
Now, about the saptamātsa. Tumburu, white in colour, and mounted on an ox rests on a śūla with viṇā in hand before the Mātr. Among the Mātr Brahmā has four faces, wears the aksamālā and holds the aksamāpātra etc. in her left hand. She is seated on a swan. Śākkara (Māheśvari) is white in colour. She has in her right hand bow and arrows, and the disc and bow in her left hand. The ox is her vehicle. Kaumārī is seated on the peacock. She has two hands in one of which is held Śakti (Vel). Lakṣmi has in her right hand the conch and disc, and the club and the lotus flower in her left hand. Vārāhi rides the buffalo with staff, sword, club and conch in her hands. Indrāṇi is seated on the club, holding diamond in her hands. She has a thousand eyes. Cāmuṇḍi has three eyes and is without flesh in the body. Her hairs are raised above. She holds in her left hand elephant’s skin and śūla in the right hand. At times she is seated on a corpse also.
Now, about the idols of the eight Āmās. Rudra Carcikā holds a skull, Śīla and cord in her hands. She wears elephant’s skin, her legs slightly held up. She becomes Rudracāmuṇḍa when she assumes eight hands, and holds the skull and the damaru. And in dancing pose she is called Nāteśvari, and with four faces Mahalakṣmi. She is called Siddhacāmuṇḍa when she assumes the form with ten hands and three eyes, and when she eats men, horses and buffaloes. In this form she holds in her right hand the sword, damaru etc. and in her left hand the Trīśūla, bell etc. Since the Devī is sarva-siddhipradāyikā (giver of all divine attainments or assets) she is Siddhāyogesvari also. There is also another Devī in this very form who holds the pāśa and Āmūkā in her hand and who is slightly red in colour. She is called Bhairavi. When Bhairavi assumes the form with twelve hands she is called Rūpavidyā. All the above eight Devis were born in burial grounds and are Raudramūrtis. They are known as the Aṣṭāmbās.

DEVĪBHAṆAVATA. The Śaivas venerate this book as one of the eighteen Purāṇas. But according to the Vaiśnava sages, this is an authoritative book of a loftier level than the eighteen Purāṇas. (See under Purāṇa.)

DEVĪKĀ I. (VEDIKA). Daughter of Govāsa, the Sāyaṇa King. She was wedded by Yudhīṣṭhira in Svanaya-vāra, and to them were born a son named Yaudheyā. (Aḍī Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 76).

DEVĪKĀ II. A holy centre. A dip in the tirtha there will give the same result as that of a yajña. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 102).

DEVĪPĪTHA. The dead body of Satīdevi crumpled into small pieces and fell in different places in Bhārata. Each place where a piece of the dead body fell, is known by the name Devīpīṭha. There is a reason why the dead body crumpled into pieces.

Dakṣa performed a sacrifice to which Śiva was not invited and Satīdevi came to the sacrifice, and committed suicide by jumping into the fire. Śiva who became furious, killed Dakṣa and carrying the dead body of his wife on his shoulder, walked the length and breadth of Bhārata like a mad man. It seemed that he was not going to recover from this mania, and the devas (gods) were worried at this. To rescue Śiva from this mental disposition, Mahāviṣṇu, unseen by others, followed Śiva with a bow and arrow. Whenever it was convenient Mahāviṣṇu sent an arrow at the body of Satīdevi, on the shoulder of Śiva. By the hitting of the arrows the body was crumpled into pieces and fell here and there. Thus within a few days the body of Satīdevi came to an end and Śiva walked to Kailāsa. The pieces of the dead body fell in 108 places, and thus 108 Devīpīṭhas came into existence. The names of the places and the names by which the Devī is known in such places are given below.

DEVISTHANA. A holy place, dedicated to Śaṅkumihari Devi. It is stated in Mahābhārata (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 13) that one who stays in this holy place and eats gresus (cira or kira) for three days will get the fruits of eating greens for twelve years.

DEVITIRTHA. The common name of three holy centres (Śarikānhi, Madhuvatī, Mrgadhūmā) in Kurukṣetra. Those who bathe in Śarikānhi will become beautiful in appearance, while those who bathe in Madhuvatī and Mrgadhūmā will get the benefits of performing a thousand godānas (gifts of cows).

DHA. This letter means dhāraṇa, Sūbaṇā, Dhātā, dhatūra (umina plant). (Chapter 348, Agni Purāṇa).

DHĀMĀ. A hermit who protected Gaṅgā-Mahādvāra. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 111, Stanza 17).

DHANAMDHAMA. A follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 27, Chapter 46, Saśī Parva).

DHANAKA. A king of the Yāyā dynasty. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

DHANAPĀLĀ. A Vaiṣṇava who lived in the city of Ayodhyā. He built in Ayodhyā a temple for the Sun-god and appointed, for a year, paying his wages in advance, a scholar well versed in Purāṇas to read aloud the Purāṇas in the temple. After six months the Dhanaḍāla died and as a result of the goodness accrued to him by his worthy deeds the Sun-god came to him with his chariot and took him to his place and seating him on his seat paid respects to him. Later he was taken to Brahmalaoka. (Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Brahma Kāṇḍa, Chapter 94).

DHANAŚĀRMĀ. A brahmin belonging to Madhyadea. Once when Dhanasārmā went to the forest to get darbha he confronted three fierce evil spirits and getting frightened ran away from them. But the spirits followed him and the Brahmin then cried and said "Oh, please do not harm me. Mahāviṣṇu will bless you.

The moment they heard the name of Viṣṇu there came a change in them. They reiterated their story to Dhanasārmā. Their names were Vaiṣākha, Sudāsa and Advaita. Because of the ingratitude of Vaiṣākha he got a nick-name 'Kṛthagha' (ungrateful man) also. All the three were human beings in their previous birth. Not only that, Advaita was a king called Harivira. All the three became evil spirits because of their sins.

From the conversation Dhanasārmā understood that Vaiṣākha was his father and they then knew each other.

The son then anxiously enquired what he should do to absolve his father of his sins and save him from hell. Vaiṣākha then told him observe the vrata, Vaiṣākha-pūrṇimā. He did that and all the spirits went to heaven. (Chapter 94, Padma Purāṇa).

DHANAṆVARDHANA. A virtuous Vaiṣṇava who lived in the island of Puskara in the Kṛtyaṅga. Once DhanaṆvardana after having performed Vaiṣṇaveda sat for his food. At that time he heard a cry from outside "Annaṁ dehi (give me food)". DhanaṆvardana immediately came out to see who the visitor was but seeing none went in and started taking his food. Because he ate his food once left behind, his food was torn to a hundred pieces. (Bhaviṣya, Brahma Kāṇḍa).

DHANAVATI. See Suryaprabhā.

DHANAṆJAYA I. A famous serpent. This serpent was born to Kaṭyaṇaprajāpati of his wife Kadra. (Śloka 5, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva). This serpent served as a rope to bind the horses to the chariot of Śiva during the time of burning to death the Tripuras. (Śloka 29, Chapter 34, Karna Parva). This serpent sits in the court of Varuṇa and worships him. (Śloka 9, Chapter 9, Sabha Parva).

DHANAṆJAYA II. Another name for Arjuna. (See under Arjuna).

DHANAṆJAYA III. The army given to Subrahmaṇya by Śiva. (Śloka 17, Chapter 46, Saśī Parva).

DHANAṆJAYA IV. A Sanskrit critic who lived during the period between 11th and 12th century A.D. He was a member of the court of King Muṇja. His important work is 'Daśārūpaka'. This work contains one hundred slōkas divided in four separate divisions. After the death of Muṇja, Dhanika, brother of DhanaṆjaya, wrote a commentary on this work. The treatise is named 'Daśārūpāvaloka'. There are several quotations in this from the Sanskrit dramas 'Veṇisamhāra' and 'Rāmatvali'. He has in this work discussed Drama and Poetry in general giving prominence to the emotional side of it. The critical work, Daśārūpāvaloka, contains quotations from a book 'Kāvyanirjaya' by Dhanika himself. But the work 'Kāvyanirjaya' has not yet been made available. Even in composing poetry DhanaṆjaya was well versed. He is the author of the well-known epic 'Rāghava-paṇḍaviya'. It is known as 'Dvisandhāna Kāvyā' also. This is based on the lives of Pāṇḍavas and Śrī Rāma. DhanaṆjaya bears the name of Śrutakirti also. It is stated by scholars that Rāghavapaṇḍaviya was written during the period 1123 to 1140 A.D. (History of classical Sanskrit Literature).

DHANAṆJAYA V. There was once a brahmin ascetic called DhanaṆjaya in the gotra of Vaiṣiṣṭha. This hermit had hundred wives and got hundred sons, one by each of his wives. The son born of his wife Śahākā (Salāka) was named Karuṇa. The father divided his assets equally among his sons and yet they quarrelled with each other.

Once Karuṇamuni went to the shores of Bhavānāśini along with a few other munis to worship Narasimha. There a brahmin had brought a lovely lime as an offering to the deity. Karuṇa took the lime from him and smashed it. At this the brahmin got angry and cursed him. "Sinner, may you live as a fly for a hundred years. Then Mahātmā Dadhīca will give you back your original form." Karuṇa instantly became a fly and he pleaded to his wife thus “Beloved, I have become a fly. Please do protect me.” Karuṇa started flying hither and thither and his cruel brothers made the fly fall in oil and killed it. Sucismita, wife of Karuṇa, started weeping laying the dead fly in her lap. Arundhatidevi passing that way saw her and consoled her thus: ‘Sucismita, stop lamenting. I shall bring it to life this instant by sacred ashes.’ So saying the Devī took some ashes from the fire-pit and reciting the powerful Mṛtyunjaya mantra sprinkled it on the dead body of the fly. Sucismita fanned the fly. The potency of the ashes brought the fly back to life.

After a hundred years one of his relatives killed it again. Sucismita grief-stricken, took the dead fly to the Maharsi, Dadhica. The sage told her thus: “It was bhasma (sacred ashes) that gave life three times to Jamadagni, Kaśyapa, the devas and myself. I will, therefore, give life to thy husband by bhasma itself.” Dadhica took some ashes and meditating on Maheśvara recited a mantra and sprinkled it on the dead fly and brought it back to life. By the touch of Dadhica, the fly, husband of Sucismita, became Karuṇa again and both of them went back to their hermitage. (Chapter 101, Padma Purāṇa).

DHANAṆJAYA VI. A brahmin devotee of Mahāvīṣṇu who lived in the Tretā yuga. Once, in winter, when for want of proper clothing he could bear the biting cold no longer, he broke some twigs of the Aśvattha tree (poplar leaved fig tree) and made fire to warm him. When Dhananājaya broke the twigs it gave reflectice pain on the body of Mahāvīṣṇu. But Mahāvīṣṇu who was aware of the unflinching devotion of Dhananājaya to himself was not displeased but appeared before Dhananājaya with wounds all over the body. The brahmin enquired how Viṣṇu got the wounds and on knowing that it was the consequence of his breaking the twigs of Aśvattha Dhananājaya in utter grief started to cut his own head off. Greatly pleased Viṣṇu stopped him from his attempt and asked him to name a boon. Very modestly he replied that he would be satisfied if he was given the strength to continue as a devotee of Viṣṇu. (Padma Purāṇa, Kriyā Kāṇḍa).

DHANEŚVARA. A brahmin born in the city of Avanti. Abandoning the duties enjoined by scriptures to a brahmin he stayed away from the brahmin fold doing all sorts of sins. He became a store-house of sins. He was engaged in commerce and once while travelling he reached the city of Māhismatī. There he met many people from several adjoining villages who had come there to observe the Kārttika Vrata. Later Dhaneśvara was bitten by a cobra there and fell down fainting. Very soon he died. When he died the messengers of Yama came and took him bound to Kālapūri. There, Citragupta read out to Yama all the sins Dhaneśvara had committed from boyhood till his death. Citragupta added “Even from boyhood there is no record of any good deed done by him. On the other hand the sins he has committed could not be told in a year. He is an incarnation of evil. He must be roasted in hell till the end of the world.” On hearing this the body of Yama blazed like flame with anger and calling aside an attendant he ordered, “Hi, Pretpālaka, take this sinner away, beat him with spiked clubs and throw him into Kumbhīpāka”. Pretpālaka instantly took him away and breaking his head with a thorn-spiked club threw him into a copper vessel containing burning oil. But to his great amazement the burning oil became cold as soon as the body of Dhaneśvara came into contact with it just as it happened once before in the case of Prahlāda. The perplexed attendant ran to Yama and told him of this strange incident. Yama was also surprised at this novelty in hell and called back Dhaneśvara and started enquiring about his life once again. Nārada came there at that time. Both of them then talked about Dhaneśvara. Nārada told Yama how the unanticipated thing so happened because Dhaneśvara on the eve of his death spent some time with people who were observing the Kārttika Vrata washing away thus all the sins accumulated so far in his life. Hearing that Yama took Dhaneśvara round hell and giving Dhaneśvara, the position of a Yakṣa sent him to Kuberapuri. (Chapter 115, Padma Purāṇa).

DHANI. A messenger of the asuras called Kapas. The Kapas once sent Dhani to preach moral code among the Brahmins. (Chapter 157, Anuśasana Parva, M.B.)

DHANIKA. A Sanskrit poet. (See Dhananājaya IV).

DHANUGRAHA. (DHANUGRAHA, DHANURDHARA) One of the hundred sons of Dhrītarāṣṭra. He was killed in the great battle by Bhīmasena. (Śloka 62, Chapter 91, Karna Parva, M.B.)

DHANUVAKTRA. A soldier of Subrahmāṇya. (Śloka 62, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

DHANURVEDA. General information. A scientific treatise on the art of warfare in ancient Bhārata. Because of the undue importance of the science the treatise is deemed and respected as a Veda. There have been innumerable books on the subject to teach Dhanurveda to the Kṣatriya youths. In the book ‘Prasthānah Abeda’ by Madhusūdana Sarasvati he states that Dhanurveda is a branch of Yajurveda. A Sanskrit book called Dhanurvedasāṁhitā is now available. Some scholars are of opinion that not much antiquity can be attributed to this work. Many books relating to Dhanurveda have been lost to us. What details are there in Agni Purāṇa are given below:

2) Divisions of Dhanurveda. This is known as Catuspāda (four-footed) also because of the fact that the four main constituents of an army are the chariots, elephants, horses and men. Dhanurveda has been divided into five parts (1) Yantramukta, (2) Pāni Mukta, (3) Mukta Sandhārīta, (4) Amukta and (5) Bāhyuuddha. There is another division according to Astra and Sastra. There is yet another division of the science into two by some scholars from a different viewpoint calling them Māyā and Rūju.

Yantramukta (Yantra = machine). This means a warfare where machines are used. Kṣepaṇī (sling) bow and arrow and other such machines are included in this. Pāni Mukta. (Pāni = hand). This is where the hand is used mainly. Stone, mace etc. are used in this.

Mukta Sandhārīta. This includes the use of weapons like a spear.

Amukta. The use of a weapon like a sword which never leaves your hand.

Bāhyuuddha. (Bāhu = head). The fight with only bare hands without the use of a weapon. One who wishes to fight should make ready his own weapons. He should be one who will never get tired even after exertion. A war with bows and arrows is considered the best and most manly, that with a spear ranks next, a fight with a sword is bad and a fight with hands, the most mean.

3) The Trainees. Only a brahmin is entitled to be a preceptor in Dhanurveda. The Kṣatriya and Vaiśya should learn from him. The Śādra can fight of his own in danger. He is not allowed to learn military science from a preceptor. Those mixed-born are to help the king during a war.

4) Various postures. There are nine different ways of standing when you give a fight, classified according to the different positions of one’s foot, heel and knee.

Samapāda. When you stand with your Āṅgūṣṭha, Nariyāṇī (Gulpaha), Pāṇi and Pāda closely joined together, it is termed Samapāda.

Vaiśākha. Keep your legs twentyseven inches apart and without bending your knees stand erect throwing your weight on the fingers of the foot. This stand is called Vaiśākha.

Mandala. Keep your knees thirty-six inches apart and stand in the shape of a hamsapankti and this position is called Mandala.

Āśītha. Bend your right knee and thigh in the shape of a plough and without any movement to that posture draw your left leg forty-five inches apart. This stand is called Āśītha.

Pratyāśītha. If you bend your left knee and thigh and stand like above it is called Pratyāśītha.

Jāta. Place your right foot straight and place the left one perpendicular to the right one with the heels and the ankles of the feet five fingers apart. The whole length of the posture should not exceed twelve fingers. This stand is called Jāta.

Dandgāyāta. Keep the right knee bent and the left leg straight or vice versa. This posture is called Dandgāyāta.

Vikāta. If for the above posture the distance between the two legs is two palm-length it is Vikāta.

Svapuṇa. Keep the knees vīṇṇas and the feet Utṭāyanas for the posture of Svapuṇa.

Svastika. Keep your legs sixteen fingers apart and raise your feet a little keeping the level of both the feet equal. This is Svastika.

5) Use of arrows. Before a man is to make use of a bow and arrow he should first take the posture of Svastika and bow down. He should take the bow by the left hand, take the arrow by the right hand. He then should adopt a posture of either Vaiśākha or Jāta and taking the bow should sink into the earth one end of the bow and draw the bow-string up to the other end and see whether there is sufficient length for the string. He should take an arrow from his sheath and thrust the arrowhead into the ground near the bow. He should place his elbow on the top of the arrow with his forearm bent and fist clenched. If the clenched fist touches the top of the bow that bow and arrow is superior to any other. He should tie the bow-string in a way that the distance between the tied bow-string and the bow is twelve fingers. He should place the bow in front of his navel and the arrows in a quiver on his hip. Taking an arrow he should raise the bow and fix the arrow at a point on the bow-string between his eye and ear. He should take the arrow by his left fist and fix it so that the fist touches the left nipple. The bow should not change position horizontally, vertically, laterally, face downwards or upwards. Then taking an arrow from the sheath by the thumb and forefinger fix it on the bow-string and stretch it well before sending the shot. The clue to correct aim is this. Anything that one can see with one’s eyes but can be covered by his fist is within the arrow-shot. When one arrow is sent another should be taken immediately from the sheath and sent in quick succession. This is called Upacchedha.

6) Operations with a sword and a carma (shield). There are thirty-two different ways of putting into use a sword or a ‘carma’ (shield). Bhrānta, Udbhānta, Āvīddha, Āpluta, Vipluta, Śṛṣṭa, Saṁdīrṇa, Śvetapāta, Akūla, Savyodādhūta, Savyāvdādhūta, Daksīnavadādhūta, Daksīnavadādhūta, Anālakṣaṇa, Viśpoṭa, Karāla, Indramahāśaṁkha, Viṣkarāla, Nipāta, Vibhiṣaṇa, Bhayānakā, Samagrapāda, Arddhapāda, Trūṭyānśapāda, Pāda, Ardhavārija, Vārīja, Pratyāśītha, Āśītha, Varāha and Lalita.

7) Operations with ropes. There are eleven different ways of using a rope in a war. Parāvrutta, Aparāvrutta, Grhtitā, Laghugṛhitā, Udṛṣṭhaviṣptā, Adṛṣṭhaviṣptā, Sandhārīta, Śyenāpata, Gajāpata and Grahāgrāhya. Adepts in this art have stated that there are five acts in the rope-operation. They are: Rju, Āyata, Viśāla, Tiryak and Bhrānta.

8) Mode of using the weapons. (1) Deeds with a wheel are: Chedana, Bhedana, Pāṭana, Bhramaṇa, Saḷana and Vikartana.

(2) Śāla (spear). Deeds with this are: Āṣpoṭana, Kuśolana, Bhedana, Trāśana, Andolana and Āghāṭa.

(3) Tomara (iron club). Deeds with this are: Dṛṣṭiṣhāta, Pārśvāghāta, Rupakṣa and Iṣṭapurpta.

(4) Gada (Mace). Deeds with this are: Govumā, Āhata, Prabhūta, Kamalāśaṇa, Tara, Udṛṣṭhvāṭra, Vamanmita, Daksīgamita, Ārūtra, Parāvrutta, Pādoddhūta, and Apubluta Haṁsamardha.

(5) Paraśu (axe). Deeds with this are: Karāla, Avaghaṭa, Danta, Upapulita, Kṣipta, Sthita and Śunya.

(6) Mudgara (hammer). Deeds with this are: Tāḍana, Chedana, Cāṛṇana, Plavana and Gāṭhana.

(7) Bhūindiḍaṭa. Deeds with this are: Sarhāranta, Viśālanta, Govisarga and Sudurdhara. Deeds with the Laguḍa are the same as these.

(8) Vajra. Deeds with this are: Antya, Madhya, Pārāvrutta, and Nidesānta. The deeds with Paṭiśa are the same as there.

(9) Krpaṇa (Churikā—small dagger). Deeds with these are: Harana, Chedana, Gāṭhana, Bhedana, Mṛṇaśaṇa, Pāṭana and Śpoṭana.

(10) Kropi (Kaṇa—Sling). Deeds are Trāśana, Rakṣana, Gāṭhana, Baloddharaṇa and Āyata.

The feats of one who fights a bludgeon or cudgel are the following:

9) Dhanurveda in Mahābhārata. Some references to Dhanurveda in Mahābhārata are given below:

(1) A sage named Śaradvān was a noted preceptor in Dhanurveda. Krpācārya learnt Dhanurveda from him and taught many others of his disciples. (Chapter 129, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

(2) Droṇacārya learnt Dhanurveda from Paraṣurāma and imparted it to many other disciples of his including the Kauravas and Pândavas. (Chapter 129, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

3) Agniveśa, a sage, learnt Dhanurveda from sage Agastya. (Sloka 9, Chapter 133, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

4) Dhanurveda has got ten āṅgas and four caraṇas. (Chapters 6 and 41, Salya Parva, M.B.).

5) Four-footed Dhanurveda worshipped Subrahmany a. (Sloka 22, Chapter 44, Salya Parva, M.B.).

DHANUṢA. An ancient sage. He was a priest in the yāga of Uparicaravasa. (Sloka 7, Chapter 336, Śaṅti Parva).

DHANUṢĀKṢA. An ancient sage. He killed Medhāvi, son of the sage Bāladhi, accusing Medhāvi of having mocked other sages (Sloka 50, Chapter 135, Vana Parva, M.B.).

DHANVA. One of the Kings of Kāṣi. Dhanvantari was born as his son. (For details see under Dhanvantari).

DHANVANTARI I. A deva who was a preceptor in Ayurveda.

1) Origin. The devas and asuras together churned the milky ocean, Kṣīrādhi, to salvage Amṛta (Nectar) from it. After thousand years there arose from the ocean a deva with a Kamsāndalu (water-pot of ascetics) in one hand and a dāṇḍa in the other. That deva was Dhanvantari, (Sloka 31, Sarga 45, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

The birth of Dhanvantari from the ocean of Milk is described in Chapter 29 of Harivāraṇa thus:

Prosperous-looking Dhanvantari rising above the water-level of Kṣīrādhi stood worshipping Mahāviṣṇu. Viṣṇu gave him the name of Abja. Dhanvantari is thus known by the name of Abja also. Dhanvantari bowing to Viṣṇu said “Prabhō, I am your son. Allot to me yajñabhāga”.

Viṣṇu replied thus: “Portions of yajña have already been allotted. Because you were born after the devas you cannot be considered as one among them. You will be born again in the world for a second time and then you will be a celebrity. In your second life even from while in the womb you will have knowledge of Anīmā and Garimā. Therefore you will be born as a deva incarnate. You will write in eight divisions a book on Ayurveda; your second life will be in Dvāpara yuga.”

After having said so much Viṣṇu disappeared.

2) Rebirth of Dhanvantari. Suhotra, King of Kāṣī, in the second Dvāpara yuga had two sons, Śala and Grīṣmāda. Śunaka was the son of Grīṣmāda. Śala got a son, Ārṣiśeṇa. Kāśa was born to Ārṣiśeṇa. To Kāśa was born Dīrghatapas (Dhanvā). For a long time Dhanvā did not have any children and so he went and did penance to propitiate Abjadeva. Abjadeva (Dhanvantari) was pleased and was born as a son to Dhanvā. Dhanvā named the boy as Dhanvantari and the latter taught his disciples Ayurveda, by parts, eight in number. From Dhanvantari in order were born Ketumāna—Bhimaratha—Divodāsa. (Chapter 29, Harivarīṇa).

3) Dhanvantari and Parīkṣit. There is a story in the purāṇas that when Tākṣaṇaka went and bit Parīkṣit to kill him, a Viṣahāri (one who cures those infected with snake venom) rushed to save the king but was bribed and sent back by Tākṣaṇaka. There are indications in the Purāṇas to show that the Viṣahāri under reference was Dhanvantari though it is stated that Kaśyapa was the person involved. (See under Tākṣaṇaka).

4) Dhanvantari and Manasādevi. In the Kṛṣṇaṇama Khaṇḍa of Brahmayāvarta Purāṇa there is a story connecting Dhanvantari with Manasādevi, a serpent-goddess.

Once Dhanvantari with his disciples was going to Kālīśa. On the way Tākṣaṇaka made a venom-spitting hiss. At once one of the disciples of Dhanvantari boldly went and plucked the diamond on the head of Tākṣaṇaka and threw it to the ground. Hearing this Viṣuki, King of serpents, sent to Dhanvantari thousands of serpents under the leadership of Droṇa, Puṇḍarika and Dhanan- jaya. The poisonous breath of all these serpents joined together made the disciples of Dhanvantari swoon. Immediately Dhanvantari by a medicine made from vanaspati made all his disciples recover and then sent all the serpents to a swoon. When Viṣuki heard this he sent the serpent-maid, Manasādevi, a disciple of Śiva, to face Dhanvantari. Manasādevi and Gaḍūra were both disciples of Śiva. But Dhanvantari was a follower of Gaḍūra. Manasādevi made all the disciples of Dhanvantari swoon but the latter because of his great proficiency is Viṣāvidyā soon brought back his disciples to normal. When Manasādevi found that it was impossible to defeat Dhanvantari or his disciples by using poison Manasādevi took the trīṣūla given to her by Śiva and aimed it at Dhanvantari. Seeing this Śiva and Brahmā appeared before them and pacifying them sent them all their way.

DHANVANTARI II. (Amṛtacārya). An eminent medical scientist born in the āmbaṣṭha caste. There is no reference anywhere in the Purāṇas regarding any relationship between the two Dhanvantaris. There is the following story about Amṛtacārya in Ambaṣṭha-candrika.

Once Gālava Mahārṣi went to the forest to collect darbha and firewood. He walked for long and felt thirsty and hungry. Then he saw a girl coming that way with water and Gālava quenched his thirst taking water from her. Pleased with her the Mahārṣi blessed her saying “May you get a good son.” The girl replied that she was still unmarried. Gālava then made a figure of a male with darbha and told her to get a child from that figure. She was a Vaśīya girl named Viṇahādrā and she got a beautiful child of that darbha male. Because the boy was born to a Vaśīya of a brahmin male he belonged to the Āmbaṣṭha caste. The boy was named Amṛtacārya.

DHANYAMĀLĀ. The foster-mother of Atikāya. (See Atikāya).

DHARA. Wife of a Vasu named Droṇa (see under Nandagopa).

DHARA I. He is the first Vasu born to Dharma of his wife Dhumrā. (Sloka 19, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva).

DHARA II. A king who was a friend of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sloka 39, Chapter 158, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

DHĀRA. A holy place. If one bathes in this holy place (Bath) his sorrows will be at an end. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 25).

DHĀRĀNĀ. One of the eight means of Rājayoga (One of the ways of union with the supreme Spirit). Yama, Niyama, Āsana, Prāṇāyāma, Pratyāhāra, Dhārānā, Dyānā and Samādhi are the eight means (See under Rājayoga).

DHĀRĀNĀ I. A king born in the family of Candravata. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 16).

DHĀRĀNĀ II. A nāga (serpent) of the family of Kaśyapa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 16).

DHARANYA (M). A measure. In ancient times a dharana was made up of ten palas. (Manusmriti).

DHARAPALA. A king of ancient times. He ruled over a country named Vidiśa. There is a holy place where the rivers Vetaśi and Vetravati meet. Dharpāla constructed a temple at the confluence. There is a story also for his doing so.

Once a Śiva-pārśada brought to Śiva a woman at a time when Pārvatī was away from the place. Śiva and the woman were enjoying each other when Pārvatī came to the place. Getting angry she cursed the Pārśada and made him into a fox. The fox came to the place where the rivers Vetaśi and Vetravati meet and did penance there and attained Mokṣa. Dharpāla saw the divine plane coming down to take the Pārśada away and he, therefore, constructed a temple at the place where the plane landed. He then arranged scholars well versed in Vedas and āstras to read Padma Purāṇa there. He himself read Padma Purāṇa and attained moksa. (Chapter 29, Padma Purāṇa).

DHĀRESVARĪ. A goddess living in the tirtha (holy bath) of Jambunada. This goddess is another form of Pārvatī. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandhāla 8).

DHARINĪ. A daughter born to the Menes (Pīṭhas) created by Brahmā, by their wife Svadhā. Dharinī had an elder sister named Menā. Both were expounders of the Vedas and of good qualities. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anuśa 1, Chapter 10).

DHARMA. A deva who is the abode of all luxuries in life.

1) Birth. This deva broke the right nipple of Brahmā and came out in the form of a human being. Three sons were born to him: Śama, Kāma and Harṣa. Kāma married Rāti, Śama, Prāpti and Harṣa, Nandā.1

2) Marriage and family life. The Bhāgavata states that Dharma married the thirteen daughters of Dakṣaprājāpati named Śraddhā, Maitri, Dayā, Śanti, Puṣṭi, Śuṣṭi, Kriyā, Unnaṭi, Buddhī, Medhā, Tiṭākṣa, Hṛi and Mūrti. Besides them he married ten other girls named Bhānu, Lambā, Kukubh, Jāmi, Viśā, Śadāyī, Māhāra, Harṣavatī, Vasū, Mūhūrta and Saikałpā and also a woman named Sunṛtā. According to Mahābhārata Dharma married the following daughters of Dakṣa: Kirtī, Lakṣmī, Dhṛiti, Medhā, Puṣṭi, Śraddhā, Kriyā, Budhī and Lajjā. From each of his wives there originated a family. The son born to each is given below Śraddhā—Śubha; Maitri—Prasāda; Dayā—Abhaya; Śanti—Sukī; Puṣṭi—Moda; Unnaṭi—Daraṇa; Buddhī—Artha; Medhā—Sukṛti; Tiṭākṣa—Sama; Hṛi—Praśaṇa. Mūrti gave birth to the virtuous Naranārīyaṇas. Sunṛtā became the mother of the devas, Satyavrata and Satyasena. Satyasena became famous by slaying many cruel and evil-natured Yakṣas, demons and spirits. Lambā gave birth to Śrābha and Vidyotama. Śrābha got a son, Indrascena. Vidyotama became the father of stanayitru. Kukubh delivered Satikṣa and Saikaḷa became the father of Kikaḷa and Durgadeva. Jámi got a son Svarga and of him was born Nandi. Viśā gave birth to Viśva-dēvas and Śadhiyā to Śadhiyas. These Śadhiyas are different from those born of Brahmā. Śadhiyas became the father of Arthasiddhi. Marutvati gave birth to Marutvati and Jayanta. Vasu gave birth to eight sons and they were known as Aṣṭavasus. Drona, the first of the Aṣṭavasus, married Abhimati. Abhimati is known as Dharā also. It was Drona and Dharā who were born as Nandagopa and Yaśodā later. Prāṇa, second of the Aṣṭavasus, married Urjasvati, daughter of Priyavrata. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

3) Prominent sons. Four sons of Dharma, Hari, Kṛṣṇa, Nara and Nārāyaṇa became prominent. Hari and Kṛṣṇa were great yogis while Nara and Nārāyaṇa were great ascetics. (See under Naranārīyaṇa).

4) The daughter named Dharmavrata. Darmadeva got a daughter named Dharmavrata of his wife Dharmāvati. Dharmavrata was an ascetic and she was married to Marici, son of Brahmā. One day Marici came back from the forest after getting darbha and flowers extremely tired and so after food lay down to rest. His wife sitting by his side massaged his legs. The sage fell asleep. Then Brahmā came there and Dharmavrata attended on him and worshipped him. Marici, when he woke up, finding Dharmavrata attending on another man cursed her and made her into stone. Dharmavrata pleaded not guilty and standing inside a fire-pit did penance for ten thousand years. Brahmā and other devas appeared before her and consoled her by assuring that though she would be a stone devas would take their abode in it and that she would be worshipped by all. From that day onwards that stone was known as Devaśilā and even now it is believed that Brahmā and other devas live therein. (Chapter 114, Agni Purāṇa).

5) Dharma was cursed and made Vidura by Animāṇḍayā. (See Animāṇḍayā).

Other details. (1) A portion of Dharma took life as Yudhiṣṭhira in Kunti. (See Dharmaputra).

(2) Dharma did penance in Dharmatirtha for a very long time. (Śloka 1, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

(3) The abode of Dharma was Dharmapraśtha. (Śloka 1, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

(4) Dharma did penance on the banks of the river Vaitāraṇi for a long time. (Śloka 4, Chapter 114, Vana Parva).

(5) While the Pāṇḍavas were in exile in the forest Dharma in the form of a deer came to the hut of a Brahmin and carried away by its horns the Arāṇī stick which the Brahmin owned for making fire by attrition. (Chapter 311, Vana Parva).

(6) Dharma appeared in the form of a Yakṣa and made all the Pāṇḍavas swoon except Yudhiṣṭhira, on the shores of a pond in the forest and later got them back to normal. (See under Dharmaputra).

(7) Darmadeva went to Viśvāmitra in the guise of Vasiṣṭha to test him. (See para 3 of Gālava).

(8) Following a directive from Brahmā, Darmadeva once brought before Varuṇa all the daityadānavas bound by ropes. (Chapter 128, Udyoga Parva).

(9) Mahāviṣṇu was born as a son of Darmadeva. (See under Naranārīyaṇa).

(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65).
(10) Dharma worshipped a brahmin named Satya taking the form of a deer. (Śloka 17, Chapter 272, Śānti Parva).

(11) Dharma tested Sudarśana taking the form of a brahmin. (Śloka 79, Chapter 2, Anuśāsana Parva).

(12) Dharma saved a sage named Vatsanābha from a great downpour taking the shape of a buffalo. (Chapter 12, Anuśāsana Parva).

(13) Dharma disguised as a brahmin, went and imparted advice to Janaka, father of Sītā. (Chapter 32, Āśvamedha Parva).

(14) To test Jāmadagni, Dharma went to his āśrama taking the form of Anger. Jāmadagni had just milked Kāmadhenu and kept the milk in a pot. Dharma as Anger crept into the milk. Jāmadagni drank it and yet remained calm. Seeing this Dharma appeared before him in the form of a brahmin and blessed him assuring Jāmadagni that in future he would be obedient to Dharma (Chapter 91, Āśvamedha Parva).

(15) When at the end of their life the Pāṇḍavas started on their Mahāprāśāhna, Dharma as a dog accompanied them up to the gates of heaven. (Śloka 22, Chapter 5, Svargārohaṇa Parva).

7) Dharmā and Kāla. There is a misunderstanding found even in some Purāṇas that Kāla, the chief of Kālapuri, and Dharma are one and the same person. But if the stories around each are examined it is easy to deduce that they are two different devas. The father and mother of Dharmadeva is Brahmapāda. The father of Kāla is Śūrya and mother Sārijjā, daughter of Viśvakarmā. This itself is a sufficient evidence to show that the two are different persons. Further, Kāla or Yama is the sixth descendant of Viśnu.

But scholars are misled to think that the two are identical. There is a reason for it. Dharma (Vitāpiṭā)/ Samavartti Parētarā/ Kṛtānto Yamanābhūtā/ Samāno Yamarājī Yamaḥ // Kālo Daṇḍadhārā Śrāddhā-Devo Vāivāsvatotakāḥ. // (Amara).

The above are the synonyms of Kāla. Vyāsa has used as synonyms for Dharmadeva in the Mahābhārata the words Dharmarāja, Vṛṣa and Yama. Now among the synonyms for the two there are two words in common—Dharmarāja and Yama. This has led to this misunderstanding. Because Kāla weighs the evil and good in man he got the name Dharmarāja. Dharmadeva got that name because he is the incarnation of Dharma. The real name of Kāla is Yama. Dharmadeva got the name Yama because he possesses 'Yama' (control of the self for moral conduct). Kāla has no sons; Vidura and Yudhisthira are the sons of Dharmadeva.

DHARMABHĪRT. A maharśi who was an inhabitant of Daṇḍakāranya. This sage narrated to Śrī Rāma the story of the pond 'Pañcācpara' and the gānadhārā that rises from it. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranya, Sarga 11).

DHARMABUDDHI. See under Mitabheda.

DHARMADA. A follower of Subrahmanyā. (Śloka 72, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

DHARMADATTĀ I. A king of Kosala. He had a wife named Nāgārī. By her chastity she became a celebrity and got the name of Arundhati of the earth. They got a daughter named Tārādattā. Once when Dharmadatta and Nāgārī were engaged in conversation both remembered their lives in their previous births. It was not allowed to speak about previous births in open and if anybody did so death was the penalty. But Nāgārī could not control herself and prepared to accept the worst. Nāgārī told her husband thus: "I am just reminded of my life in my previous birth. I will tell you my story. I was the servant maid of a brahmin named Mādhava in this same place. I had a husband named Devadāsa then. My husband was the son of a merchant. We made a small house of our own and lived there peacefully. Each of us would bring food from where we worked and everyday we used to set apart a portion of what we got for guests and the ptis. We were satisfied with what was left after that. If we got more than one set of clothes we would give it to the poor. Then there came a famine in the country. Our earning also was reduced daily. We lived in hunger. One day a hungry and tired sannyāśī came to our place and we gave him the whole of our food. My husband died that day and I gave away my life jumping into the funeral pyre of my husband. Then I was born in the family of a King and became your wife." Dharmadatta also got back the memory of his previous birth. He said he was the Devadāsa of Nāgārī's previous life.

The moment they finished talking about their previous births both fell down dead. Orphaned Tārādattā then lived under the care of her mother's younger sister. After some time a Mahārśi came to their house and by his blessing Tārādattā got a husband named Kalīṅgasena. Kalīṅgasena was a brave and daring Prince. Very soon they got a daughter and she was named Kalīṅgasena. (Kathāsārisāgara, Madanamañjukā lāmbaka, Tārānga 2).

DHARMADATTĀ II. A brahmin who lived in the city of Karavīra. One day while Dharmadatta was going to the temple with material for pūjā he came across a demoness named Kalahā on the way. The brahmin threw the pūjā materials in his hand on to the face of the demoness. When a tulasī leaf touched the demoness she got back the memory of her previous birth. Kalahā then abandoned her cruel nature and begged Dharmadatta to advise her as to how she should get a release from her demoniac life. Taking pity on her Dharmadatta gave her all the 'punya' he had obtained by observing Kārttikāvratā. (Chapters 106, 107, Uttra Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa and Chapters 2, 4, 24, 25 Skanda Purāṇa).

Dharmadatta and Kalāhā were born as Daśaratha and Kaikēyī in their next births as a result of the accumulates Punya obtained by observing Kārttikāvratā. (Sāra khaṇḍa, Ananda Rāmāyaṇa).

DHARMADHVĀJA. See under Tulasī.

DHARMAGUPTA I. A prince who obtained blessings from Śiva by observing the Pradoṣavratā. (For detailed story see Aśvīnūmatī).

DHARMAGUPTA II. A Nandarājakumāra belonging to the Lunar dynasty. Chapters 1, 2 and 13 of Skanda Purāṇa gives the following story about him.

Once Dharmagupta went to the forests, hunting. Deeply interested in the game he never knew when it became dusk. It was late to go back to the palace and so deciding to stay in the forest for the night he climbed upon a tree and made a seat there to rest. After some time a bear followed by a lion came running and took refuge on the top of the same tree. The lion stood growling below. Seeing a bear on the same tree the bear said "Oh, Prince, we are both in the same sad plight now. Believe me as a friend. We can spend the night on this tree safe. Therefore, go to sleep till midnight and I will keep watch over you. After that I will go to sleep and you keep watch". Gladly accepting the proposal the prince went to sleep and the bear kept vigil. Then the lion suggested to the bear to push down the prince. The bear replied that he would never cheat a friend and that it was a great sin also to do so. After midnight the bear slept and the prince kept watch over. The lion then suggested to the prince to push down the bear. Thinking that he would be saved if the bear is gone to the lion the unfaithful prince pushed the bear down. But the bear escaped catching hold of the branches lower down. Embittered at this the bear cursed Dharmagupta and made him mad.

Then addressing Dharmagupta first and the lion next the bear said thus: "I am Dhyānakaṣṭha a sage of the Bhrigu family. I can take any form I like. I cursed you, Dharmagupta, because you cheated a friend. This lion is Bhādra, one of the ministers of Kubera. Once he entered into sexual act with a bear in front of the ārama of Gautama at midday and the sage cursed him and made him into a lion. The sage as a relief from the curse had further decreed that he would get his original form when he entered into a conversation with me." When Dhyānakaṣṭha finished speaking the lion changed itself into the form of Bhādra.

Dharmagupta remained mad and his father, the King, approached Jaimini for help. The sage said that the prince would be cured of his madness if he bathed in the Puṣkariṇī tirtha. The king did as was suggested and Dharmagupta was cured.

DHARMĀKARA. A righteous house-holder. Once a prince entrusted his beautiful wife with Dharmākara and went away. Though she lived with him for six months he did not have any kind of contact with her. The prince returned. Wicked people tried to arouse doubts about the chastity of his wife and the householder. But it was futile. Still fearing calumny Dharmākara entered fire. In that test by fire he came out victorious. Not only did his body remain unscorched, but also that the faces of the wicked people who blamed him were filled with leprosy and became ugly. (Padma Purāṇa, Srṣṭi khaṇḍa, Chapter 50).

DHARMĀKETU. A king of Bhārgava gotra. He was the son of Suketu and father of Satyaketu. (Navamaśkaṇḍha, Bhāgavata).

DHARMĀNANDANA. A king of the family of Bhārgava. (Navamaśkaṇḍha, Bhāgavata).

DHARMĀNGADA. A Brahmin who became a deep meditator on Viṣṇu, because of his habits in his previous life. Dharmāngada was the son of Rukmāngada by his wife Sāndhya-vālī. Rukmāngada was the son of Rādhi-vāja who lived in the city of Vidiśā. He was a man of good personality, who lived with his father and being a generous man he did not hesitate to give his head to Mohini for the pleasure of his father. God Viṣṇu was pleased with him because of his love of his father and of his loyalty to Vaiṣṇavite deity and took him bodily to heaven (Vaikuṇṭha). Dharmāngada lived there for many thousands of years enjoying heavenly pleasures. Then he went astray from divine life and had to take life again as Suvaṭrata the son of a Brahmin named Sonaśāmā. The wise Suvaṭrata discarded the passions of Kāma (desire), Krodha (anger) etc. and controlled his senses and engaged himself in penance in Vaiḍūryamahādṛi. For hundred years he sat in meditation and Mahāvisṇu was pleased with him and took him and his father to Vaikuṇṭha. At the instruction of Mahāvisṇu, Suvaṭrata took life again in the house of Kaśyapa. When he died he went to Vaikuṇṭha. In every successive birth he had the remembrance of his previous birth. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 21).

DHARMĀNETRA I. A king of the Hchaya family. He was the son of Hchaya and father of Kṛṣṭi. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

DHARMĀNETRA II. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Śloka 60, Chapter 94, Ādi Parva).

DHARMAPĀLĀ. A minister of Daśaratha. There were eight ministers for Daśaratha: Srṣṭi, Jayanta, Viṣṇya, Siddhārtha, Rāṣṭravardhana, Aśoka, Dharmapāla and Sumantra. (Chapter 6, Agni Purāṇa).

DHARMAPRASTHA. A sacred place. It is believed to be the abode of Dharmanāra. There is a general assumption that anybody who touches the water in a well there will be absolved of all sins. (Śloka 99, Chapter 94, Vana Parva).

DHARMĀPUTRA. The eldest of the Pāṇḍavas, the others being Bhīmasena, Arjuna, Nakula and Sahadeva. 1) Genealogy. See under Arjuna. 2) Birth. Pāṇḍu, brother of Dhr̥tarāṣṭra, had two wives, Kunti and Mādhri. There was a curse for Pāṇḍu that he would die the moment he touched his wife. (See under Pāṇḍu). Kunti, the first wife of Pāṇḍu, had obtained from Durvāsas five mantras. The mantras were very potent. If she called upon any god reciting the mantra that God would manifest himself to her and bless her with a son. When Kunti found that Gāndhāri was pregnant and was about to deliver she became anxious and meditating on Dharma-deva recited one of the mantras given by Durbāsas and got a child from him. The boy was born at midday on the eighth Jyeṣṭha day of the year on Pañcami and at the auspicious hour, Abhijit. At the time of his birth there was a celestial voice which said "This boy will become a very righteous and bold King, best among the virtuous. He will be known as Yudhiṣṭhira". Obeying the dictate of the mysterious voice he was named Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 123). 3) Boyhood. When he had five sons Pāṇḍu went to the forest of Sataśriga together with his family to spend the spring time there. The sages residing in that forest conducted the christening ceremony of Dharmaputra. Kaśyapa, priest of Vāsudeva, performed the Upanayana ceremony (thread-wearing) of Dharmaputra (Chapter 123, Dākṣiṇāyapatha Ādi Parva, M.B.). Rājā Ṣuṣa impetuously instructed Dharmaputra on spear-warfare. Pāṇḍu died during their stay there. Mādri abandoned her life by jumping into her husband's funeral pyre. Before doing so she called Dharmaputra to her side and joining her hands together said "Son, you are now the father to your brothers." When Pāṇḍu and Mādri were dead the sages of the forest took Kunti and the children to Hastinapura and entrusted them to the care of Bhīma.
detailing to him all that had happened in the forest. (Chapter 125, Adi Parva, M.B.)

4) Kaumāra(youth). Dharmaputra and his brothers spent their boyhood in Hastināpura along with Duryodhana and his brothers. Bhīmasena became a great foe of Duryodhana and his brothers and Duryodhana always nurtured a desire to kill Bhīmasena. Once Duryodhana invited Dharmaputra and his brothers to have aquatic games in the Gaṅgā. Accepting the invitation Dharmaputra participated in the games along with his brothers. One night Duryodhana caught hold of Bhīma alone and tied him with ropes and threw him into the river. When in the morning Dharmaputra found his brother missing he ran to his mother to inform her of the loss. Kuntī asked him to start a search and while he was on it Bhīmasena appeared before him and told him how he was thrown into the river by Duryodhana and how he went to Nāgaloa and was brought to earth with great acquisitions from there. Dharmaputra advised them not to make the incident public. They received training in warfare in Hastināpura under Droṇācārya. Dharmaputra got great proficiency in chariot-fighting. As Gurudakṣiṇā (fee for the preceptor) Dharmaputra agreed to bring Drupada bound before the preceptor. But Arjuna stopped him and himself undertook the task (Chapters 127 to 136, Adi Parva, M.B.).

5) Becomes heir-apparent and goes to the forest. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, crowned Dharmaputra as the heir-apparent when the latter had successfully completed his course of study in warfare. By his good conduct, righteousness and administrative efficiency Dharmaputra excelled his father and became very popular among his subjects. Jealous of this Duryodhana decided to destroy the Pāṇḍavas somehow. With the permission of his father, Duryodhana constructed a palace at Vāraṇāsva for the Pāṇḍavas to reside there. That palace was built of Lākṣa (See under Arakāllam). The entire population resented this act of Duryodhana and rebuked him. They tried to follow Dharmaputra to Vāraṇāsva and stay there. But by tactful words he made them abandon that idea. Still many brahmins followed Dharmaputra. After some days Duryodhana set fire to the palace. But the Pāṇḍavas escaped through a tunnel from the house which had been constructed without the knowledge of Duryodhana just at the time of construction of the building. Escaping from there the Pāṇḍavas reached the forests and travelling farther came to the shore of the Gaṅgā. (Slokas 138 to 148, Adi Parva, M.B.).

6) Story up to the life igncognito.

(1) When the palace was burnt to ashes it was presumed that they were dead and by the instructions of Dhṛtarāṣṭra the funeral rites of the Pāṇḍavas were conducted at Hastināpura. But Vidura informed Bhīṣma that the Pāṇḍavas were alive. (Chapter 149, Dāśāṅgavagepiṭha, Adi Parva, M.B.).

(2) Dharmaputra gave permission to Bhima to marry Hidimbā while they were in the forest. (Chapter 154, Dāśāṅgavagepiṭha, Adi Parva).

(3) Dharmaputra counselled Arjuna to release Cēṭaratha Yakṣa who was defeated by Arjuna in a battle. (Sloka 39, Chapter 169, Adi Parva).

(4) After the svaayāṃvara of Pāṇcālī, Dharmaputra narrated to Drupada the story of their escape from the palace. (Chapter 194, Adi Parva).

(5) After svaayāṃvara of Pāṇcālī the Pāṇḍavas returned to their country and Dharmaputra was crowned king of half of the country. He started his rule at Khaṇḍava-prasātha, his capital. (Chapter 206, Adi Parva).

(6) Nārada went to Khaṇḍavapraśasti and advised them, how to avoid unpleasantness accruing from their having one wife in common. His advice was that Pāṇcālī should spend one year with each of the five in turn. (Chapter 207, Adi Parva).

(7) When Abhimanyu was born to Arjuna, Dharmaputra gave ten thousand cows to brahmans as gifts. (Sloka 69, Chapter 22, Adi Parva).

(8) Yudhiṣṭhīra got a son Pratīvindhyā of Pāṇcālī. (Sloka 79, Chapter 220, Adi Parva).

(9) Yudhiṣṭhīra got a son Yaudheya of Devikā, daughter of King Sīhi. (Sloka 76, Chapter 93, Adi Parva).

(10) When Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to Dwārakā from Indraprastha Dharmaputra drove the chariot in the place of Dārūka, charioteer of Kṛṣṇa. (Sloka 16, Chapter 2, Sabhā Parva).

(11) Mayāśura constructed a beautiful palace in Indraprastha and gave it to Dharmaputra. (Sloka 37, Chapter 3, Sabhā Parva).

(12) Yudhiṣṭhīra decided to perform a Rājasūya at Indraprastha. Even before the Rājasūya Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna and Bhīmasena together killed Jarāsandha. After that Yudhiṣṭhīra sent Arjuna to the northern side and the other brothers to the southern side for Dīvījaya (conquest of countries). When he established his autocracy he performed the Rājasūya. (Chapter 43, Sabhā Parva).

(13) Yudhīṣṭhīra used to give free sumptuous food to thousands of brahmans in golden pots daily. (Chapter 49, Sabhā Parva).

(14) Envious Duryodhana sent Vidura to bring Dharmaputra to Hastināpura and defeated him foully in a game of dice. Though Dharmaputra lost everything Dhṛtarāṣṭra gave him back everything. (Chapter 72, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

(15) Before Dharmaputra went back to his place, with the permission of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Duryodhana called him back again for another game of dice. Despite protests from all sides Dharmaputra went again for a game of dice with Duryodhana and lost again all he possessed. Then he left the country with his brothers and wife to spend twelve years in exile in the forests and another year igncognito. (Chapter 79, Sabhā Parva).

(16) Śūrya gave the Aksāyapātra (a pot which is never emptied) to the Pāṇḍavas. (Sloka 72, Chapter 3, Vana Parva).

(17) At first the Pāṇḍavas stayed in Dvaitavana and later on the advice of Vyāsa they went to Kāmyakavana. (Sloka 41, Chapter 36, Vana Parva).

(18) He advised Bhīmasena to remain quiet for thirteen years. (Chapter 52, Vana Parva).

(19) Brhadaśva, the sage, narrated the story of Nala to Dharmaputra while they were in the forest. (Chapter 43, Vana Parva).

(20) The sage Lomaśa imparted instructions on philosophy to Dharmaputra while they were in the forest. (Chapter 94, Vana Parva).

(21) Yudhiṣṭhīra met and conversed with Parasurāma at the mountain Mahendra. (Chapter 117, Vana Parva).

(22) The Pāṇḍavas then travelled in north India. On their way to the mountain of Gandhamādana Pāṇcālī fainted and Yudhishthira wept bitterly. (Chapter 145, Vana Parva).

(23) From Gandhamadana Dharmaputra with his wife and brothers reached Badarikasrama and from there they returned to Dvaivatavana.

(24) When they went to Kamyaka vana Sri Krsna visited Dharmaputra there. (Chapter 153, Vana Parva).

(25) Duryodhana and his followers made a grand march to Kamyaka vana to see the Pndavas in sad plight and there the Gandharva Citrasena bound them all by ropes. Arjuna on the orders of Dharmaputra got them all released. (Chapter 246, Vana Parva).

(26) While the Pndavas were in exile in the forest Durvasasana went and invited Yudhishthira to attend a Vaisrava sacrifice conducted by Duryodhana. But Dharmaputra sent him away saying that it was not proper to come to the country before the expiry of the period of exile. (Chapter 256, Vana Parva).

(27) Yudhishthira received the sage Durvasas with respect and after offering homage sent him away contented. (Chapter 262, Vana Parva).

(28) Jayadratha kidnapped Pnceali and in the battle that ensued Dharmaputra slew the King of Trigarta but left free Jayadratha. (Chapter 272, Vana Parva).

(29) At a time when Yudhishthira was plunged in sorrow the sage Mrkaendra narrated the story of Sri Rama to console him. (Chapters 273 to 291, Vana Parva).

7) How Dharmadeva tested Yudhishthira. The Pndavas travelling through the forests reached Dvaivatavana. A brahmin among their group was making fire by the arani sticks when a deer rushed at him and took the arani sticks away, carrying them on its horns. The Pndavas ran after the deer and they travelled far away from their place, still not getting scent of it. They were all tired and thirsty. Yudhishthira directed Nakula to climb on the top of a tree and investigate whether there was any water anywhere nearby. Nakula did so and reported that he could see a pond not far from the place where they were sitting. Yudhishthira asked Nakula to go and fetch water. Nakula did not return for a long time and Sahadeva was asked to go and enquire. Sahadeva also did not return and Arjuna was sent in search of them. When Arjuna did not return Bhismasena went to enquire. Bhismasena also did not return and finally Yudhishthira himself set out in search of them. On reaching the pond Yudhishthira was dumbfounded to see his brothers lying dead on the banks of the pond. Weeping bitterly Yudhishthira entered the pond and to his surprise he heard a voice from the air addressed to him thus: "Ho, Yudhishthira, I am a stork living on the small fishes of this pond. This pond is my hereditary property. It was I who killed your brothers. I will ask you certain questions. If you answer them correctly you can drink from this pond. If not, you will also die.

Dharmaputra: "I do not believe that you are simply a bird. My brothers are renowned for their valour and have defeated not only the devas, dhnava, gandharvas and rksasas but also the four huge mountains like Himalaya Parvyastra, Vindhya and Malaya. I am eager to know your true self who have slain such brave brothers of mine."

Yaksa: "I am a Yaksa and not merely a bird. I objected to your brothers taking water from the pond. But waving aside my objections they started taking water from the pond and then I slew them. Now, hear my questions: Who carries the Sun? Who are his followers? Who makes the sun set? On whom does the sun exist?"

Dharmaputra:—It is Brahman who carries the Sun. Devas are his followers. Dharma makes him set. He exists on Satya.

Yaksa:—How does Mahisiddhi come to he Srotriyas? (those who study the Vedas).

Yudhishthira:—It happens by deep penance.

Yaksa:—What is the reason for a brahmin getting divinity? What deed is equal to good conduct? What makes a brahmin mortal and what makes him evil?

Yudhishthira:—The Brahmin gets divinity by meditation. Austerity is equal to good conduct. Death makes a brahmin mortal and abusive words make him evil.

Yaksa:—What is the divinity of Ksatriyas? What is equal to good nature? What makes them mortal and what makes them evil?

Dharmaputra:—The divinity of a Ksatriya is weapon. Sacrifice is equal to good conduct. Fear makes him mortal and non-sacrifice makes him evil.

Yaksa:—What is the best thing for agriculture? What is the most important thing for agriculture? What are the installations of the atmosphere and child-birth?

Dharmaputra:—The best thing for agriculture is rain. The important thing for agriculture is seed. The installation of atmosphere is rays and that of child-birth is child.

Yaksa:—Who is lifeless even though he breathes?

Dharmaputra:—He who never offers oblations to a deva, a guest or a servant is like the dead even though he breathes.

Yaksa:—What is bigger than the earth? What is higher than the sky? What is swifter than the wind? What are greater in number than grass?

Dharmaputra:—Mother is bigger than the earth. Father is taller than the sky. Mind is swifter than the wind. Thoughts are greater in number than grass.

Yaksa:—What is it that does not shut its eyes when asleep? What is it that does not grow after birth? What is heartless? What grows very quickly?

Dharmaputra:—A fish does not shut its eyes when asleep. An egg does not grow after its birth. A stone is heartless. A river grows very quickly.

Yaksa:—Who is a friend to one who lives outside his country? Who is a friend to a householder, to a patient and to one dead?

Dharmaputra:—For one who leaves his country the friend he gets on his way is the best friend. To a householder his wife is his friend, to a patient his doctor and to one dead, charity.

Yaksa:—Who is a guest of all? What is Nectar? What is spread throughout the world?

Dharmaputra:—Agni (fire) is the guest of all. Moon (Candra) is the nectar. Air is that which is spread throughout the world.

Yaksa:—Who are circles around solo? Who is born again? What is the remedy for cold? What gives the maximum yield?

Dharmaputra:—The Sun circles solo. Candra is born again. Fire is the remedy for cold. Earth gives the maximum yield.
Yakṣa:—What is the soul of Man? Who is the companion given by God? What is Upajīvana?

Dharmaputra:—The soul of Man is his son. The companion given by God is wife. Cloud is Upajīvana.

Yakṣa:—How do you become rich? How do you become happy?

Dharmaputra:—If you abandon lust you will be rich. If you abandon desire you will be happy.

Yakṣa:—By what is this world covered? By what does the world become clear? By what does one lose his friend? What is the obstacle for an entry into heaven?

Dharmaputra:—Dullness covers the world. World becomes clear by intelligence. A friend is lost by desire. Domestic ties stand in the way of getting into heaven.

Yakṣa:—Who are those equal to the dead? Which country is dead?

Dharmaputra:—A poor penniless man is equal to the dead. The country where there is mob-rule is dead.

Yakṣa:—Who is a pandit? Who is an atheist? Who is wicked? What are lust and jealousy?

Dharmaputra:—A righteous man is a pandit. An atheist is wicked. Lust is the cause of worldly life. Jealousy is the cause of worry.

Yakṣa:—Though charity, wealth and lust are incompatible with each other when do they unite together?

Dharmaputra:—When charity and wife compromise the above three blend together harmoniously.

The Yakṣa was highly pleased with the replies given by Dharmaputra. He then offered to revive one of his brothers and asked Dharmaputra to name whom he should do so. Then Yudhiṣṭhira named Nakula. Yakṣa then enquired why he had named Nakula leaving aside Arjuna and Bhīma. Dharmaputra replied that though Kuntī and Mādrī were two wives of Pāṇḍu they were both mothers to them and so he wanted to see one of the sons of Mādrī alive. He therefore pressed the name of Nakula again. The Yakṣa who was none other than Dharmadeva was immensely happy to hear that reply and gave life to all his brothers. He confessed to Yudhiṣṭhira that he was who in the form of a deer came and ran away with the āraṇī sticks. He returned the āraṇī sticks also. Dharmadeva then advised them to go and spend their life incognito at the court of King Virāṭa blessing them with the assurance that they would never be found out during their life in disguise. Dharmadeva disappeared after this and the Pāṇḍavas returned to their āśrama. (Chapters 312 and 313 of Vana Parva, M.B.).

8) Ajñātāvāsā (Life incognito). See under Arjuna.

9) Dharmaputra and the great battle. Events relating to or involving Dharmaputra from the end of his life in disguise up to the end of the Mahābhārata battle are given below:

(1) Yudhiṣṭhira tried utmost to avoid war but when it was made clear that the Pāṇḍavas would not be given even an inch of land, he decided to fight. So Yudhiṣṭhira prepared for a war and camped on one side of the Kurukṣetra with his army. (Chapter 196, Udyoga Parva).

(2) Dharmaputra gave instructions to Arjuna to keep his army in vyūhas. (Śloka 6, Chapter 19, Bhīṣma Parva).

(3) Dharmaputra was sorry when he looked at the Kaurava army. (Śloka 3, Chapter 21, Bhīṣma Parva).

(4) Yudhiṣṭhira blew his conch Anantavijaya to announce the war. (Śloka 16, Chapter 25, Bhīṣma Parva).

(5) Yudhiṣṭhira sought permission from Bhīṣma to fight against the Kauravas. (Śloka 35, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva).

(6) Yudhiṣṭhira bowed before Droṇacārya and sought permission to conduct the war. (Śloka 52, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva).

(7) He sought permission from Kṛpācārya to fight the war. (Śloka 69, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva).

(8) Yudhiṣṭhira went to Śalya and obtained his permission to conduct the war. (Śloka 78, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva).

(9) Yudhiṣṭhira appealed to the warriors on the Kaurava side to join his army. Only Yuyutsu, responded to that beckoning and joined the Paṇḍava's side. (Śloka 94, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva).

(10) On the first day of the battle Dharmaputra fought a duel with Śalya. (Śloka 28, Chapter 45, Bhīṣma Parva).

(11) Yudhiṣṭhira constructed a Vajra Vyūha (an array in the shape of a diamond) with his army. (Śloka 22, Chapter 81, Bhīṣma Parva).

(12) Yudhiṣṭhira fought with fury and defeated Śrutāyus. (Śloka 8, Chapter 84, Bhīṣma Parva).

(13) Yudhiṣṭhira got defeated by Bhīṣma. (Śloka 2, Chapter 86, Bhīṣma Parva).

(14) Bhagadatta attacked Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 84, Chapter 96, Bhīṣma Parva).

(15) He fought against Śakuni. (Śloka 11, Chapter 105, Bhīṣma Parva).

(16) Yudhiṣṭhira sought permission from Śri Kṛṣṇa to kill Bhīṣma and he went straight to Bhīṣma himself and asked him how he should be killed. Yudhiṣṭhira attacked Bhīṣma as per the latter's instructions. (Chapter 107 to 115, Bhīṣma Parva).

(17) In the meantime Droṇacārya made a vow that he would capture Yudhiṣṭhira. So Yudhiṣṭhira thereafter, always kept Arjuna near at hand. (Śloka 3, Chapter 13, Droṇa Parva).

(18) Yudhiṣṭhira consoled his own army when Abhimanyu was slain. (Śloka 35, Chapter 49, Droṇa Parva).

(19) Yudhiṣṭhira attacked Śalya and Kṛtavarmā. (Chapters 95 and 97, Bhīṣma Parva).

(20) Yudhiṣṭhira was defeated in a fight with Droṇa. (Śloka 18, Chapter 106, Droṇa Parva).

(21) He fought against Duryodhana. (Śloka 15, Chapter 124, Droṇa Parva).

(22) He defeated Droṇacārya in another battle. (Śloka 27, Chapter 157, Droṇa Parva).

(23) He became moody when Ghaṭotkaca was killed. (Śloka 27, Chapter 183, Droṇa Parva).

(24) He made Karna swoon in a fight. (Śloka 21, Chapter 49, Karna Parva).

(25) He withdrew from the battlefield after having been defeated by Śvattāḥma. (Śloka 38, Chapter 35, Karna Parva).

(26) Karna wounded Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 33, Chapter 63, Karna Parva).

(27) Once Yudhiṣṭhira scolded Arjuna and the latter greatly offended started to go to the forests and then Yudhiṣṭhira himself appeased him. (Chapters 63, 70 and 71, Karna Parva).

(28) Yudhiṣṭhira slew Candrasena and Drumasena who were the guardians of Śalya's Cakravyūha. (Śloka 52, Chapter 12, Śalya Parva).
(29) He slew Salya (Sloka 51, Chapter, 17, Salya Parva).
(30) He killed the younger brother of Salya. (Sloka 64, Chapter 17, Salya Parva).
(31) Duryodhana at this time went to a lake in Dvapiyana and lay there immersed under water. Yudhishthira went there with an army and challenged him for a fight. (Sloka 18, Chapter 61, Salya Parva).
(32) When Yudhishthira won the war he sent Sri Krsna to Hastinapura to console Gandhāri. (Sloka 40, Chapter 62, Salya Parva).

10) Yudhishthira is crowned King. When Yudhishthira won the war he sent Nakula to bring Pāṇcāli. He went round the Kurukṣetra battle ground and saw his own kith and kin lying dead and the sight made him faint. After that he went to Dhrtaṛastra. Gandhāri cursed him for killing her sons. Gandhāri gave a piercing look at the nails on the foot of Dharmaputra when he stood before Gandhāri bowing down. Instantly the nails turned black. Yudhishthira gave Dhrtaṛastra the names of all the prominent persons who were killed in the war. Dhrtaṛastra ordered Yudhishthira to perform the obsequies of the dead. It was at this stage that Yudhishthira came to know from Kuntī that Karna was his brother. Yudhishthira wept bitterly when he knew the secret from his mother and cursed womankind as a whole stating that woman would thereafter be incapable of keeping a secret to herself. The news of the death of Karna gave a sudden mental turn-back to Yudhishthira and he decided to renounce all and go to the forest. He called aside his followers and announced his decision to them. At that time Vyāsa came there and preached to him about the perishable nature of life. Yudhishthira then asked him what he should do for the atonement of the sins committed. Though he strongly desired to go to the forest Vyāsa and Śri Kṛṣṇa did not allow him to do so and sent them all to Hastinapura. When the Pāṇḍavas entered the city the people gave them a rousing reception and Yudhishthira was crowned King. (Chapters 10 to 17 of Saúptika Parva, Chapters 12 to 27 Śri Parva, Chapters 1 to 40 Sānti Parva).

11) Administration. When Yudhishthira became King, with the permission of Dhrtaṛastra, he distributed the various administrative responsibilities among his brothers. He took for himself the task of taking care of their kith and kin and friends. He gave many gifts to the brahmans and other dependants. He once went to Śri Kṛṣṇa to express his gratitude for him. He visited Bhīma lying on his bed of arrows accompanied by Śri Kṛṣṇa and his brothers. Bhīma revealed to him the inner import of Rājadhrama, Āpaddhrama and Mokṣadharma. Receiving the blessings of Bhīma Yudhishthira and his brothers returned to Hastinapura. Yudhishthira went to the Himalayas to get riches from Marutta before performing an Aśvamedha Sacrifice. While on his way to the Himalayas he fasted for a night and worshipped Śiva. People like Vyāsa and Śri Kṛṣṇa partook in the sacrifice. After the sacrifice was over Dhrtaṛastra desired to go to forest and sought the approval of Yudhishthira to do so. On hearing that Yudhishthira wept. But on the advice of Vyāsa he gave his approval for Dhrtaṛastra to go to forest. Dhrtaṛastra appealed to him through Vidura for funds to perform the obsequies of the dead. Bhīma objected to this but Yudhishthira reprimanded him and silenced him and gave Dhrtaṛastra enough funds for his purposes. Kuntī and Gandhāri accompanied Dhrtaṛastra to the forest. Yudhishthira accompanied by Pāṇcāli and Sahadeva went and saw them in the forests after a few days. (Chapters 41 to 55, Sānti Parva, Chapters 92 from Anuśāsana Parva and Aśvamedha Parva and Chapter 26 from Anuśāsana Parva).

12) Vidura merges into Dharmaputra. When Dhrtaṛastra, Gandhāri and Kuntī went to forest Vidura also accepted sannyāsa and left for the forest. There sitting under a tree he started doing penance. After a few days Yudhishthira came to the forest to see his mother and others. After spending some time with Dhrtaṛastra, Gandhāri and Kuntī he went to the place where Vidura was doing penance. Vidura started running the moment he set eyes on Yudhishthira and the latter ran after him. After some time Vidura turned back and stood staring at Yudhishthira. At that time the soul of Vidura escaping from his body merged with that of Yudhishthira. The body of Vidura stood stiff and leaned against a tree. Taking him to be dead Yudhishthira started to do the funeral rites and then there resounded a voice from heaven saying that Vidura was not dead. The unknown voice was from Dharmadeva. When the voice subsided Vidura became his old self again. Yudhishthira went back. (Chapter 26, Anuśāsana Parva).

13) The end of Dharmaputra. Soon after his return from the forest Nārada came to Hastinapura and told him of the death of Dhrtaṛastra, Kuntī and Gandhāri in a wild fire in the forest. Lamenting deeply Yudhishthira performed the obsequies at Hastinapura. It was at this time that the Yadava dynasty perished and Dvārakā was sunk into the ocean. The Pāṇḍavas then crowned Parikṣit as their successor and entrusted Yuyutsu with the administration of the State till Parikṣit came of age. Vajra was appointed as chief of Indraprastha. The obsequies of Vāsudeva, Balarāma and Kṛṣṇa were performed at Hastinapura. Kṛpācārya was appointed as preceptor to Parikṣit. After having made all such arrangements the Pāṇḍavas commenced their Mahāprāṣṭhāṇa. The five Pāṇḍavas and Pāṇcāli started from Hastinapura. A dog also followed them. Yudhishthira walked ahead. On the way, one by one, Pāṇcāli Sahadeva, Nakula, Arjuna and Bhimasena fell dead. Alone with a dog to keep company, Yudhishthira reached a plateau on the top of the Himalayas and there Indra was waiting for him with a chariot. But Yudhishthira said that he would not come to heaven without his wife and brothers. He was then informed that they had already reached heaven. Yudhishthira insisted that the dog also should be taken to heaven which Indra blankly refused. But Yudhishthira refused to ascend the chariot without the dog which, he said, had given him company from the start to the finish. The dog then changed itself into Dharmadeva and he complimented him on his sense of justice. When Yudhishthira entered heaven he saw Duryodhana sitting in all luxury and glory. Yudhishthira did not like it but Nārada pacified him. Yudhishthira saw all his relatives sitting there. A devadātu took him round hell also. When he heard the pitiable groans from there Yudhishthira thought his right place was with them. But Indra and Dharmadeva again consoled him. He was given a bath in Ākāśagāna. He then lost his mortal form and his soul entered Divyaloka.
Standing in the form of Dharmadeva he saw all his relatives including Keśa. (Chapters 38 and 39, Aśramaśāka Parva, Chapter 1, Mausal Parva; Mahāprasthānika Parva, Savāgāraha Parva).

14) Synonyms of Yudhishṭhira. Ajāmīdh, Ajāṭāsatru, Bhrāta, Bhrātāśārdula, Bhrātāpravara, Bhrātārsa-bha, Bhrātāsattama, Bhrātāsimha, Bhimāparvaja, Dharna, Dharmaja, Dharmandana, Dharmaprabha, Dharmaputra, Dharmarāj, Dharmarājya, Dharmasuta, Kaunteya, Kaurava, Kauravāś סביב, Kauravandana, Kauravya, Kauravanātha, Kauritandana, Kuruśārdula, Kuruśeṣṭha, Kuruvadhana, Kurukolodvaha, Kurumukhya, Kurunandana, Kurupāṇḍavagrya, Kurupati, Kurupravira, Kurupusigava, Kururjya, Kurusattama, Kurūttama, Kuruvardhana, Kuruvirā, Kuruvyāsaba, Mrdayaketu, Pāṇḍava, Pāṇḍavāśreṣṭha, Pāṇḍavandana, Pāṇḍaveya, Pāṇḍuputra, Pāricha and Yādavimātā. All these words have been used to identify Yudhishṭhira in the Mahābhārata.

DHRMARĀJAJA. A king of Gauḍadeśa. He became King at a time when Jainism was getting more and more hold on the people and the Hindu Vedics were getting less and less popular among the people. The King thought it was his duty to revive the interest in the Vedics and so became a priest himself and did much propaganda on the superiority of the same, writing several books on the subject for the benefit of the people. (Bhaviṣyapūrāṇa, Pṛatāsarga Parva.)

DHRMĀRANYA. A Brahmin. He had many children. The major portion of his life was spent in hard work to support his large family. After that he went in search of means to attain heaven. In his quest, he happened to reach the realm of Nāgas (serpents). He entered the house of a Nāga named Padmanābha. When he reached the house Padmanābha had been away carrying the chariot of the Sun. Dharmāranyā sat outside the house and spent a few days in vow and meditation. Then Padmanābha returned. The Brāhma asked Padmanābha about the ways of attaining heaven. The Nāga replied that there was none superior to the Sun. The Brahmin accepted penance and lived in the hermitage of Ciyavana for a few days. (M.B. Sānti Parva, 4 Chapters from 361.)

DHRMĀRANYAJ(M). A forest which is a holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva Chapter 82 Stanza 46, that the moment one enters this forest one would become sinless. This place was once the capital of the King named Asūrataraja. See under Kuśa I.

DHRMARAATHA. A king of the family of Aūgarāja. He was the great grandfather of Lomapida and the son of Drivrathā. (Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa.)

DHRMASAKHA. A king of the Kekaya line of Kings. He had a hundred wives but no children. At last, at an old age, he got a son of Sucandra, wife of his elder brother. But the hundred wives of Dharasakha were pining for having a son and so the king consulted his ministers and on their advice conducted a Putrakāmēṣṭi yajña (a sacred sacrificial ceremony for obtaining children) at Hanunāmatkunda near the southern sea-coast. As a result of that each of his hundred wives got a child. (Skanda Parāṇa, Chapter 15.)

DHRMĀSRAMA I. A brahmin who was born a parrot named Kaṭjala in his rebirth. Dharmāsrama was one of the three sons of an eminent Brahmin called Vidyaadhara. His other two sons were Vasuṣrāma and Nāmaṣrāma. While both his brothers became great scholars Dharmāsrāma never studied anything and became a muffer. His father was greatly worried on account of this. Dharmāsrāma never heeded the advice of his father and went about in bad company ruining himself. Years went by and Dharmāsrāma became old. One day Dharmāsrāma was sitting repentant in a temple sadly pondering over his past when a siddha came to the temple. Watching him Dharmāsrāma saw him go and sit in a lonely place for meditation with his eyes shut. Dharmāsrāma went and stood near him very respectfully. When the Siddha opened his eyes after some time he saw Dharmāsrāma standing before him and then the Siddha made enquiries about Dharmāsrāma. The latter then requested the Siddha to give him instructions to acquire the supreme knowledge. The Siddha then gave him Jñānopadesa (advice on knowledge) and Dharmāsrāma soon became a Siddha himself. He then started on a pilgrimage and on the way he got a parrot. He took care of the bird just like his son and loved it very affectionately. One day when Dharmāsrāma was away from the place to collect fruits for his food a cat caught and ate the parrot. Greatly grief-stricken Dharmāsrāma went bitterly and ran about like a mad man. After some days he died and because at the time of death he was thinking about the parrot he was born a parrot in his next birth. The Jñānopadesa of the siddha was still lingering in him while he died and so even in his life as a parrot he never lost the jñāna he had acquired in his previous life. (Chapter 122, Padma Purāṇa.)

DHRMĀSRAMA II. Sec under Śivaṣrāma.

DHRMĀŚVARṆI. The eleventh Manu. (Sec under Manvantara.)

DHRMĀSVA. A Brahmin. Once this Brahmin was coming home with water from the Ganges. On the way he saw Kāpakalpa, the servant of merchant Ratnakara, being killed by an ox. Though Kāpakalpa was a sinner, his end aroused pity in the heart of the Brahmin. So he sprinkled the Ganges-water on the body of Kāpakalpa, who instantly regained life and energy. The Brahmin who saw the power of Ganges-water began to worship the Ganges from that day onwards. It is mentioned in Padma Purāṇa, Kriyā Khaṇḍa, Chapter 7, that finally the Brahmin got a boon from the Ganges that only uttering the name of the Ganges should he meet with death.

DHRMĀTĪRTHA I. A holy place of ancient Bhārata. If a man bathes in a pond there, he would be absolved of all sins. (Slokā 1, Chapter 84, Vana Parva.)

DHRMĀTĪRTHA II. Another holy place of ancient Bhārata. If a person bathes in a pond there he would get the benefit of performing a Vājapeya Sacrifice (Slokā 162, Chapter 84, Vana Parva.)

DHRMĀVARṆA. A Brahmin who lived in the country of Anarta at the end of Kaliyuga. Once when he went to the land of the dead, he saw his fathers hanging by the end of darbha. They requested Dhrmavarna to marry and obtain sons who would get them relief from their plight. Dhrmavarna married and as soon as he got a son he went to the forest of Gandhamidana to practise penance there. (Chapters 2, 17 and 22, Skanda Purāṇa.)
DIHARMAVATI. A wife of Dharmadeva. He got of Dharmanati a daughter Dharmanurti. Dharmanurti was married to Marici, son of Brahma. (See under Gayatrih).

DIHARMAVRTI. A daughter of Dharmadeva. (See under Gayatirtha).

DIHARMAYADHA. Though he was born in the caste of foresters he became a saint by following the path of duty and righteousness. In his previous birth he was a Brahmin. He was a friend of a king who was an adept in archery. Once both went on hunting expedition to the forest. The Brahmin sent an arrow at a wild animal but the arrow went and struck a sage who was doing penance under a tree. When the sage was rolling on the arrow he said: “Oh, evil-natured Brahmana, may you be born as a hunter selling flesh in your next life.” The Brahmin went and apologised to the sage and craved for pardon. Taking pity on him the sage consolied him by saying that though he would be born as such, he would be a great scholar and attain moksha by doing his duty without even once wavering from it. The Brahmin was born a hunter in the country of Mithila. He took to looking after his parents as a vow and soon became a top-ranking righteous man. He did his duty to which he was born. He sold meat and earned a living. He never killed or butchered an animal. One day a Brahmin named Kausika was doing penance sitting under a tree when a crane perched on the top of its branches defiled the Brahmin’s head with its droppings. The Brahmin in rage looked up and his powerful stare burnt the crane and it fell down dead. Leaving that place some time later he went to a house to beg. The house-wife informed him that he would be given alms only after attending to her husband. The Brahmin was not pleased with her reply. Seeing that she added “Please do not look at me like that. I am no crane. To me my husband is supreme.” The Brahmin was taken aback when he heard the lady mention the incident of the crane. The lady explained to him that all her powers were due to her devotion to her husband and advised the Brahmin to go and meet Dharmanayadhah of Mithila to remove the egoism in him. Obeying her instructions Kausika went and accepted Dharmanayadhah as his guru. The learned hunter then spoke to Kausika about Varadharmas, Siṣṭacāras, hīnas and ahīnas, Mimāṁsā relating to dharma and karma, the importance and glory of Brahmaidya, the significance of the control of the senses, Trīguṇas, Prāṇāvāyu, service to father and mother and many such other things. The egoism of Kausika was removed and he returned home. Devoted to his parents he attained heaven. (Chapters 27 to 33, Vana Parva).

DHARMAYU. A king of the Puru family. His father was Raudrāśva, the son of Puru and his mother was a celestial woman Miśrakcī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 11).

DHARŚTAVAMŚA. A particular family of kings of the Ikṣvāku Dynasty. This family originated from Dhrṣṭa the brother of Ikṣvāku. So this family is called Dharṣṭavamśa (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

DHĀṬĀ I. 1) General information. One of the twelve Ādityas. (See Dvādaśādityyas and Āditya).
2) Other details: (1) At the burning of Khāṇḍava forest among the gods who came against Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, there was Dhāṭā also. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 266, Stanza 34).
(2) Dhāṭā gave Subrahmanya five followers named Kunda, Kusuma, Kumuda, Dāmbara and Aḍāmbara as gift. (M.B. Sāya Parva, Chapter 45 Stanza 39).

DHĀṬĀ II. It is seen in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amśa 1, Chapter 10, that two sons named Dhāṭā and Vidhāṭā and a daughter Lakṣmī were born to Bhṛgu, the son of Brahma, by his wife Khyāti. Of them Dhāṭā and Vidhāṭā married Ayati and Nyati, the daughters of Meru. Lakṣmī became the wife of Mahāvīṣṇu.

DHĀṬRETĪKĀ. A maid of Pāneśāli during the time of the forest life of the Pāṇḍavas. It was this maid who informed the Pāṇḍavas that Jayadrathā had kidnapped Pāneśāli. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 269, Stanza 16).

DHĀṬU(S). (Minerals). To understand the Purānic stories regarding the origin of iron, copper, tin etc. see under Irump (iron).

DHAIMARA. An ancient hermit. He was one of the hermits who visited Bhisma in his bed of arrows. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 11).

DHĀMAYA I. A hermit.
1) General information. This hermit was the younger brother of Devala, a hermit. The Pāṇḍavas, who escaped from burning in the Lāksī house, reached the banks of the Ganges when this hermit was performing penance in the holy tīrtha of Utkoca. Arjuna defeated Citarathā, a Gandharva. After that Citarathā and Arjuna became friends. The Gandharva advised him that a priest was unavoidable and that the Pāṇḍavas should accept the hermit Dhaumya who was doing penance in the Utkocatīrtha as their priest. Accordingly the Pāṇḍavas accepted Dhaumya as their priest. From that day onwards in everything the Pāṇḍavas did, Dhaumya was their priest. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 182).
2) Other details. (1) After the Svayārīvara of Pāneśāli, Dhaumya performed the marriage ceremony for each of the Pāṇḍavas from Dharmaputra to Sahadeva separately with Pāneśāli. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 197).
(2) When sons were born to the Pāṇḍavas, Dhaumya performed the rites of investiture etc. with the Brahma string etc. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Stanza 87).
(3) Dhaumya was the chief priest who performed the rites of sacrifice at the Rājasūya of Yudhīśṭhīra. He anointed Yudhīśṭhīra as King. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 10).
(4) When the Pāṇḍavas started for forest life, Dhaumya walked in front of them with Kuśa grass in his hands, singing Yamasāma and Rudraśāma songs. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 80, Stanza 8).
(5) Once Dhaumya talked about the attributes of the Sun and advised Dharmaputra to worship the Sun. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 3).
(6) In the forest Dhaumya rendered powerless the illusive and magical arts of Kirmira, an asura (demon). (Mahābhārata, Vana parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 20).
(7) Dhaumya described to Dharmaputra the importance of several holy tīrthas or Baths. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 87 to 90).
(8) On another occasion Dhaumya described to Dharmaputra the motions of the Sun and the Moon. and the positions of Viṣṇu and Brahmā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 163).
(9) When Jayadratha had stolen Pāṇिकāli, Dhaumya blamed him and tried to recover Pāṇिकāli. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 238, Stanza 26).
(10) Dhaumya advised the Pāṇḍavas how to preserve pseudonymity in the capital of Virāṭa. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 4).
(11) When the Pāṇḍavas started their life incognito Dhaumya performed the rite of Agniṣṭoma and uttered the Veda, mantras for their prosperity, recovery of kingdom and victory in the world etc. When they started Dhaumya took the fire with oblations and went to the country of Pāṇिकāla. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 54).
(12) After the bhārata battle, Dhaumya performed the funeral ceremonies, offerings etc. of the relatives of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Strī Parva, Chapter 24).
(13) After Dharmaṇputra was anointed King, Dhaumya disclosed to him the secrets of righteousness. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 15).
DHAUMYA II. In the Purāṇas we see another hermit with the name Dhaumya. In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 112, it is mentioned that this hermit was the brother and teacher of hermit Upamanyu. He had been keeping contact with Dyumatsena, the father of Satyavān. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 298, Stanza 19). Other names such as Ayodha Dhaumya, Ayodha Dhaumya, Apoḍhadhuṣa, Apoḍhadhuṣa etc. are used for this Dhaumya, (For details see under Ayodhaḍhuṣa).
DHAUTAMULAKA. A king born of a dynasty of China. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 14).
DHAVALAGIRI. (SVETA PARVATA). A mountain. Arjuna once encamped in this mountain. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 29).
DHENU. See under Surabhi.
DHENUKA. 1) General information. A fierce Rākṣasa (giant) with the figure of a donkey. He lived in the forest of Kāli (Tāla). People did not dare to pass by that way fearing this giant. Hearing about him, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and his elder brother Balabhadrā Rāma went to the forest. There were several palm trees in the forest, the fruits of which they shook with force. Hearing the noise Dhenuka ran to them. Balabhadrā and Śrī Kṛṣṇa beat the giant to death.
2) Other details. (1) In Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, it is stated that Pralambaka, Cāṇūra, Ṭṇāvārta, Mūṣṭika, Aṛiṣṭaka, Keśi, Dhenuka and others were the followers of Karīṣa.
(2) In Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, there is another story that while Balabhadrā Rāma, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the other cowherds were looking after the cows an asura entered into the midst of the flock, in the shape of a cow (Dhenu). Rāma and Kṛṣṇa saw him, struck him against a tree and killed him.
DHENUKAM. An ancient country in Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Stanza 51).
DHENUKĀŚRAMA. A holy place. Once the god of Death Yama took the shape of a man and did penance in this place. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 54, Stanza 8).
DHENUTĪRTHA. A holy place. If gingelly (tila) is offered as gift in this holy place, one would get redemption from all sins. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 87).
DHIRADHI. A brahmīn devotee of Śiva. He lived in Kāśi. Because he meditated on Śiva alone, Śiva was pleased with him and helped him in various ways. The gaṇas of Śiva were amazed at Śiva’s partiality for Dhiradhī. Paramaśiva told them the story of the former birth of Dhiradhī. “This Brahmīn was a swan in his former life. Once he was flying over a lake when he became tired and fell down. His colour became black. Then Kamalini, another swan who dwelt in the same lake told him to recite the tenth Chapter of Gitā, and to meditate on Śiva. Because the swan did that holy act, he was born a Brahmīn in his next birth. Though he was a Brahmīn in his previous birth, he kicked his teacher and for that fault he had to take birth as a swan. Later, because of the love of Śiva, Dhiradhī attained heaven. (Padma Purāṇa, Uṭtara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 184).
DHĪROŚṆI. A god concerned with Śrāddha (offering to the manes). (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 32).
DHĪṢANĀ. The wife of Havirdhāna born in the dynasty of the emperor Prīthu. Dhiṣanā was born from fire. (Six sons, Prācinabharis, Sukra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Viraja and Ajina, were born to Havirdhāna by his wife Dhiṣanā born of fire. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).
DHĪṢṬA. A son of Vaiṣvāvata Manu. Ikṣvāku, Nabhāga, Dhrṣṭa, Saryāti, Narisyaṇa, Prāṁśu, Nṛga, Diśa, Kariṣa and Prśadhra were the sons of Vaiṣvāvata Manu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).
DHĪṢṬAmares. A Vaiṣya who attained heaven by performing the fast of Vaiśākha Vrata. He lived in the country of Bhadravati, on the bank of the River Sarasvati. The name of the king of the country was Dhīrmiṇa. Dhanapāla, a Vaiṣya of that country had five sons: Sumanas, Dyutimān, Medhāvi, Sukṛta and Dhīṣṭabuddhi. The last of them turned out to be a wicked man. Going after many women, keeping company with wicked people, gambling, wandering about in search of harlots, not venerating Gods, Manes or Brāhmaṇas, wasting the money of his father, eating untouchable food, drinking liquor and such other acts, he indulged in. Once he was seen walking in the street with his hand on the shoulder of a harlot. So his father turned him out of the house. He was deserted by his relatives too. He sold the ornaments he had on his body. When that was finished the harlots also evaded him. He became a destitute having no money or clothes. When he became tired with hunger and thirst he began stealing in that city. The King’s men caught him. They chained him and scourged him. Finally, he went to the forest and with a bow and arrows he lived by hunting. Dhīṣṭabuddhi happened to reach the hermitage of Kauṇḍinya. It was the month of Vaiśākha. While Kauṇḍinya was coming from the Ganges, having taken bath, a drop of water fell on Dhīṣṭabuddhi from the wet cloth of the hermit, and consequently his sins were washed off. He fell before the hermit and requested him to instruct him in the way of attaining heaven.
The hermit advised him to observe the fast of Vaiśākha-śukla-kārṇa known as Mohini. Accordingly he observed the fast and became sinless. Invested with a divine form he entered the realm of Viṣṇu. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttra Khaṇḍa, Chapter 51).

DHRŚṬADYUMNA. The son of King Drupada. He was brother of Pāṇcāli.

1) Birth. Drupada and Droṇa were fellow students. After finishing his education Drupada became King. When Droṇa came to his palace Drupada did not honour him. Droṇa got angry, went to Hastināpura and began to teach the Pāṇḍava and the Kaurava princes in archery and other weapons. When the weapon-training was over, Arjuna, at the instruction of Droṇa, defeated and captured Drupada. Droṇa seized half of his kingdom from him.

As Drupada was not powerful to wreak vengeance on Droṇa, he performed a sacrifice to obtain a son who could take revenge on Droṇa and regain his lost prestige. A son and a daughter were born from the sacrificial fire. The son was named Dhrṣṭadyumna. The daughter grew up and became the famous Pāṇcāli. The Pāṇḍavas married her.

At the time of birth, Dhrṣṭadyumna had a crown on his head, and armour on his body, bow, arrows and sword in his hands. He ran out of the fire into a chariot and sat in it as if he were about to begin a travel of conquest. Seeing this the Pāṇcālas were filled with joy. There was a celestial voice: “This boy will destroy the fear of the Pāṇcālas. He is born to slay Droṇa.” At this time the queen approached the sacrificing priest with a request that the children born of the sacrificial fire should consider her as their mother. Accordingly the children accepted the wife of Drupada as their mother. Brāhmaṇas named the boy Dhrṣṭadyumna and the girl Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 166). (For more particulars see under ‘Pāṇcāli’ Para 2).

2) Till the battle of Bhārata. The history of Dhrṣṭadyumna till the battle between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas, is given below.

The news that Dhrṣṭadyumna was born to kill Droṇa spread everywhere. The Broad-minded Droṇa did not seem to mind this news. Droṇa took Dhrṣṭadyumna to his house, with the permission of Drupada and gave him training in the wielding of weapons. He believed that God’s will would not be thwarted. After he had learned archery Dhrṣṭadyumna returned to his kingdom. Next, we see Dhrṣṭadyumna at the svayaṁvara (marriage) of Pāṇcāli. Several kings arrived from various countries on that occasion. When the auspicious moment came, Dhrṣṭadyumna brought Pāṇcāli to the nuptial dais. He proclaimed the rules and conditions that the competitors of Svayaṁvara had to observe. After that he conversed with each king who was present. In the Svayaṁvara Pāṇcāli accepted Arjuna. The Pāṇḍavas and Pāṇcāli were given the Kumbhakāra mandira (the Palace of Kumbhakāra) which stood in the city of Drupada, to stay for that night. Though the Pāṇḍavas were in the guise of Brāhmaṇa, Dhrṣṭadyumna had his own doubts about their identity.

So he hid himself somewhere in the Palace and kept an eye on them. This shows his peculiar trait of observation. After this he returned to his Palace and pacified his father who had been much worried about his daughter’s selection.

Next, we see Dhrṣṭadyumna, during the time of the forest life of the Pāṇḍavas. He consoled Pāṇcāli, who was miserable. After that he took the sons of Pāṇcāli, to his house. While the Pāṇḍavas were living in the forest ‘Kāmyaka’, Dhrṣṭadyumna visited them. The forest life of the Pāṇḍavas came to an end. A battle between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas became inevitable. Then the Pāṇḍavas selected Dhrṣṭadyumna, as the commander-in-chief of their army. He ordered for a general parade of the army and gave them instructions. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 166 to 195; the whole of Sabhā Parva; Vana Parva, Chapters 12, 22 and 51; Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72; Udvyoga Parva, Chapters 50, 157, 163 and 164).

3) Dhrṣṭadyumna in the Bhārata-battle. The part played by Dhrṣṭadyumna in the battle is given below:

(1) In the first day’s battle Dhrṣṭadyumna confronted Droṇa. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 31).

(2) Fought with Bhīṣma. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 31).

(3) On the second day of the battle he formed the disposition of the army called the ‘Krauṇcārūpayyāḥ’ (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Stanza 42).

(4) A terrible fight ensued between Droṇa and Dhrṣṭadyumna (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 53).

(5) He fought with Aśvatthāmā (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 19).

(6) He killed Damana the son of Paurava. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 20).

(7) He killed the son of Salya. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 29).

(8) He fought with Salya and was wounded. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 62, Stanza 8).

(9) He formed the disposition called the ‘Makara Vyūhā’. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 4).

(10) He shot the missile called Pramohana (the arrow of fainting) and the Kauravas swooned. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 77, Stanza 45).

(11) He was defeated by Droṇa (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 77, Stanza 69).

(12) He defeated Duryodhana. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 53).

(13) He fought with Vinda and Aravinda. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 86, Stanza 61).

(14) He fought with Kṛtvāvarma. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 9).

(15) He again fought with Bhīṣma. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 114, Stanza 39).

(16) There was a combat with Droṇa again. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 48).

(17) He fought with Suśarmā. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 37).

(18) He fought with Durmukha. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 4).

(19) He killed Candrabhāga and Bṛhatkṣatriya, King of Niśadha. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 65).

1. The fast taken on the eleventh day of the bright lunar fortnight in the month of Vaiśākha.
2. Because he was born with Dhrṣṭadvā (boldness) amāsrava (impatience) and dyumna (vigour) the son of Drupada was called Dhrṣṭadyumna. Draupadi was called Kṛṣṇa as she was of Kṛṣṇa varna (dark complexion. Thus Drupada got two children from ‘Makha’ (sacrifice).
(20) He made Drona swoon by shooting arrows at him and got into his chariot and sat there. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 56).
(21) In the fight which continued Drona defeated Dhrstadyumna. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 71).
(22) In the fight with Āśvatthāmā, Dhrstadyumna was defeated. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 160, Stanza 41).
(23) He killed Drumasena. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 170, Stanza 22).
(24) He was defeated by Karṇa. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 173, Stanza 7).
(25) He vowed that he would kill Drona. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 46).
(26) In the fight that followed he cut off the head of Drona. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 192, Stanza 62).
(27) Following this, he annihilated the elephants of the Kauravas and made Kṛtavarmā swoon. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 22).
(28) He fought with Karṇa. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 59, Stanza 7).
(29) In the fight with Āśvatthāmā, the Kauravas caught Dhrstadyumna alive. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 59, Stanza 39).
(30) He happened to enter the camp of Duṣṭsāna but escaped. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 33).
(31) In the night, while Dhrstadyumna was sleeping Āśvatthāmā kicked him to death. (M.B. Sauptika Parva, Stanza 26).
(32) The funeral of Dhrstadyumna was conducted according to rites. (M.B. Sṛṭ Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 34).
(33) The Pāṇḍavas conducted mourning and offering to the defied ancestors for Dhrstadyumna. (M.B. Sṛṭ Parva, Chapter 42, Stanza 4).
(34) After death the spirit of Dhrstadyumna was absorbed in the Fire-God. (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 21).

4) Names. In Bhārata, the names, Draupada, Droṇaḥantā, Pāṇcāla, Pāṇcālaladāyāda, Pāṇcālalakulavardhana, Pāṇcālamukhya, Pāṇcālaputra, Pāṇcālārājā, Pāṇcālārāja, Pāṇcālāya, Pāṛṣada, Yajñasena, Śuṣṭi, Sūṣṭi etc. are used as synonyms of Dhrstadyumna.

DHRSTAKARMĀ. A king of the Yayāti family. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

DHRSTAKETU I. A prince who was the son of Dhrstadyumna and the grandson of King Dhrptada. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 276).

DHRSTAKETU II. A king of the family of Yayāti. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

DHRSTAKETU III. The son of Śiśupāla, the king of Cedi. The details obtained from Mahābhārata about this king are given below.
(1) Dhrstaketu was the rebirth of Anuhāda, the son of Hiranyakaśipu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 7).
(2) Dhrstaketu was anointed as King after the death of Śiśupāla. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 36).
(3) After the death of his father, Dhrstaketu became a tributary King of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 2).
(4) Dhrstaketu had a sister named Kareṇumati. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Stanza 40).
(5) During the Bhārata-battle, Dhrstaketu supplied the Pāṇḍavas with an aṣkauhiṇi (21870 elephants, 21870 chariots, 65610 horses and 109350 infantry). (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 7).
(6) Dhrstaketu was appointed as one of the seven commanders-in-chief of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 157, Stanza 11).
(7) On the first day of the battle of Bhārata, Dhrstaketu, confronted Bāhlika. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45).
(8) He fought with Bhūrīśravas. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 84).
(9) Dhrstaketu fought with Paurava. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 116, Stanza 13).
(10) Dhrstaketu fought with the teacher Kṛpa. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 33).
(11) He fought with Ambaṭṭha. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 25).
(12) He killed Viradhavan. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 107, Stanza 17).
(13) He fought with the teacher Droṇa and was killed in the fight. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 125, Stanza 23).
(14) Among the spirits of those relatives of the Kauravas, who died in the Bhārata-battle, which were evoked to the surface of the Ganges, by Vyāsa, the spirit of Dhrstaketu also appeared. (M.B. Āṣrama-vāsika Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 11).
(15) After his death Dhrstaketu became a Viṣvadeva in heaven. (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 15).
(16) Vyāsa has used the following names in his Bhārata for Dhrstaketu: Caidya, Cediya, Cediapatī, Cedi-pūṇgava, Cēdīrājā, Śaśūpāli, Śiśupālāmājavāna.

DHRŚNU I. The second son of Vaivāsava Manu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 15).

DHRŚNU II. A Prajāpati who was the son of Kavi. He was learned in Vedas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 13).
by force into his chariot and brought the last two, to Hastinapura to be given as wives to Victoravinya. On the way he sent Ambā back. Victoravinya married Ambikā and Ambalikā. But shortly after that he also died, before any children were born to him. Fearing that the Lunar dynasty would come to an end, Satyavati brought her son Vedavyāsa, who was born to her from hermit Parāśara, before her marriage, to Hastinapura. In the night Satyavati sent Ambikā adorned with ornaments and costly garments, to the bedroom of Vyāsa. But she could not bear to lie with Vyāsa who was clad in barks of the tree and wearing matted hair. Still thinking that it was not right on her part to stand against the wish of her mother, she approached Vyāsa and lay with him with closed eyes. Ambikā became pregnant. The child she gave birth to, was blind. That child was Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Next night Ambalikā approached Vyāsa. When she saw Vyāsa she turned pale at his uncouth figure and her face became bloodless. So the child born to her was pale and was called Pāṇḍu. Next night the maid of the queen approached Vyāsa with a joyful heart and so she got Vidura as son, who was extremely wise and intelligent. Thus Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu and Vidura became sons of the same father.

(1) (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters, 63 and 105).

3) Up to marriage. After the birth of Dhṛtarāṣṭra Vyāsa returned to forest and since then Bhīṣma stood in place of father to the children. Bhīṣma performed ‘Upanayana’ (investiture with Brahma-string) and other rites of the children. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu and Vidura had their education in Hastinapura. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 108).

“Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu and the wise Vidura
The three were brought up as sons by Bhīṣma,
They became well educated, cultured and devotional, Respectful towards vows and fasts, and of good physique, earnest in work
And they became valiant youths.
Learned the Vedas and Veda of archery,
Clubbing, shield and swords play,
Elephant-keeping, laws of chasteisment,
Veda śāstras, allied works and epics and the Purāṇas,
Pāṇḍu came out expert archer,
Dhṛtarāṣṭra the strongest of all.
None in the three worlds was equal to Vidura,
In wisdom and knowledge and righteousness.”

(M.B.Ādi Parva, Chapter 109).

Because of his blindness Dhṛtarāṣṭra was not anointed as King. It is stated in M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 108 Stanza 25, that in the place of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu was anointed the King.

4) Marriage and birth of children. Dhṛtarāṣṭra came of marriageable age. Bhīṣma had heard about Gándhāri, daughter of Subala, the King of Gándhāra, as a beautiful damsel of good qualities. Moreover she had acquired a boon from Śiva that hundred sons would be born to her. Bhīṣma sent a messenger to Subala with a request to give Gándhāri as wife to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Subala was not much pleased at the aspect of getting a blind man as son-in-law. Still he thought of the prestige his family would get by a marriage alliance with the kings of the Pāṇḍu Dynasty, and finally agreed. Gándhāri submitted to the will of her father, and to live with a husband who was blind. She tied her eyes with a cloth. Śakuni the son of Subala brought Gándhāri to Hastinapura, and gave her to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. With the sanction of Bhīṣma their marriage took place.

Once Gándhāri feasted Vyāsa who came tired with hunger and thirst. The hermit was pleased with her and blessed her to have hundred sons. Gándhāri became pregnant. But even after two years no delivery took place. She crushed her womb by force and a lump of flesh came out. At that time Vyāsa came there. He cut the lump into hundred pieces and kept them in ghee-pots. Gándhāri had a desire to get a daughter also. Vyāsa who had known it had cut the lump in such a way that there was a small piece in excess. The pots broke by themselves in due course and hundred sons and a daughter were born. The daughter was named Duśālā. A son named Yuyutsu also was born to Dhṛtarāṣṭra of a Vaiśya woman. Duryodhana was the eldest of the hundred sons. The children grew up. Duśālā was given in marriage to Jayadratha, the King of Sindhu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 109 to 116).

5) Till Dhārata-battle. At this juncture Pāṇḍu incurred a curse from a hermit that he would die if his wife touched him. With that Pāṇḍu retired to forest with his wives. Dhṛtarāṣṭra was grieved at the separation of his brother. Pāṇḍu died in the forest and Mādri jumped into fire and died with her husband. Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked Vidura to perform their cremation rites. After that Yudhiṣṭhira became King. The Pāṇḍavas became more and more prosperous. This made the heart of Dhṛtarāṣṭra cloudy. He gave sanction to Duryodhana to transfer the Pāṇḍavas to the lac house in Vāraṇāvata. The lac house caught fire and it was rumoured that the Pāṇḍavas died in the lac house fire, and Dhṛtarāṣṭra shed crocodile tears, and ordered for the mourning and oblation to be performed. After the marriage of Pāṇḍali, it came to be known that the Pāṇḍavas were alive and that they were living with Drupada. Dhṛtarāṣṭra recalled them and gave them half of the country. The Pāṇḍavas made Indraprastha their capital and began to rule the kingdom. Yudhiṣṭhira performed the sacrifice of Rājasya (royal consecration). Dhṛtarāṣṭra also took part in the sacrifice.

Duryodhana wanted to challenge Yudhiṣṭhira to a game of dice. Dhṛtarāṣṭra agreed but advised Duryodhana not to live in enmity with the Pāṇḍavas. The game of dice was played, and Yudhiṣṭhira lost everything the Pāṇḍavas had. Dhṛtarāṣṭra called Pāṇḍali and told her that she might ask any boon. She requested that her husband Dharmaputra might be exempted from servitude and the Pāṇḍavas made free. Dhṛtarāṣṭra compelled her to ask for more boons. She replied that according to law Vaiśyas were eligible for one boon, Kṣatriya women two boons, Kings three boons and Brāhmaṇas hundred boons, and since she had already taken two boons, she wanted no more. Dhṛtarāṣṭra who was pleased at this reply gave the Pāṇḍavas freedom and returned all their lost wealth.

Duryodhana wanted to challenge the Pāṇḍavas for a game of dice again. Dhṛtarāṣṭra agreed. This time also Yudhiṣṭhira lost the game. The Pāṇḍavas who had lost everything, were ordered to go to forest for twelve years and to live incognito for one year. The Pāṇḍavas went to the forest with Pāṇcāli. Dhṛtarāṣṭra was grieved.

1. It is stated in M.B. Āramavanāsika Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 7 that Dhṛtarāṣṭra was born as the incarnation of a Gandharva having the name Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (See under Dhṛtarāṣṭra III).
After thirteen years the Pāṇḍavas returned. Duryodhana said that not an inch of land would be given to the Pāṇḍavas. Dhṛtarāṣṭra felt sorry at this. Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to talk about conciliation. Duryodhana wanted to take him a prisoner. But Dhṛtarāṣṭra opposed it. Śrī Kṛṣṇa showed Dhṛtarāṣṭra his Viśvarūpa (cosmic form) to see which, Kṛṣṇa gave him sight for the time being for which Dhṛtarāṣṭra was very thankful. The Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas came to Kurukṣetra for Bhārata-battle. Dhṛtarāṣṭra called Sañjaya to him and asked him about the preparations the parties had made for war. Sañjaya gave a true description of the battle arrays of both parties. (M.B. Ādi Parva. Sābhā Parva, Vāna Parva, and Udyoga Parva).

(6) Dhṛtarāṣṭra and the battle of Bhārata. The terrible battle began. The heart of Dhṛtarāṣṭra was grieved with sorrow. When Arjuna vowed that he would kill Jaya-dratha, Dhṛtarāṣṭra cried aloud. When he knew that Śaṭyaki had destroyed the army of the Kauravas he became dumb with grief. He praised Bhīma’s valour and blamed his sons. When Sañjaya told him about the fall of Karṇa, Dhṛtarāṣṭra fell down unconscious. He rose up again and attended to the noises from the battlefield. He fell down again when he knew that Sañjaya and Duryodhana were killed. He rose again and cried for a long time. He gathered the women-folk, his people and went to the battlefield. He broke the metal statue of Bhīma and embraced the Pāṇḍavas. He asked Yudhiṣṭhirā to do the mourning and offerings for the dead. It was done accordingly. The Pāṇḍavas respected Dhṛtarāṣṭra. But Bhīma scolded them. Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhāri were greatly depressed and asked Yudhiṣṭhirā to permit them to live in forest. Yudhiṣṭhirā tried to prevent it. He kissed on the head of Yudhiṣṭhirā. Seeing that they did not eat food he asked them to eat. Yudhiṣṭhirā saw that they would eat only if he permitted them to live in forest. At last Yudhiṣṭhirā agreed. Dhṛtarāṣṭra accepted money from Dharmaputra and performed mourning and offerings for the dead on a large scale (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Karṇa Parva, Śrī Parva, Sānti Parva and Āśramavāsīka Parva).

(7) Journey to forest and death. Afterwards Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhāri went to forest. Kuntī followed them. All the subjects followed them a long way, crying. Dhṛtarāṣṭra sent them back and entrusted the teacher Kṛṣṇa and Yuvāntra with the Pāṇḍavas. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhāri and Kuntī lived on the Ganges. From there they came to Kurukṣetra and lived in the hermitage of Śaṭyayūpa for a time. During that period Nārada visited them. The Pāṇḍavas and the subjects visited them again. Vyāsa also came there. He took Dhṛtarāṣṭra and the rest of them to the river Ganges and evoked the spirits of those who died in the battle. Vyāsa gave Dhṛtarāṣṭra divine eye to see the departed spirits. After this, at the request of Vyāsa they all returned. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhāri and Kuntī went to Gaṅgāvāra and performed severe penance and were burnt to death in a wild fire. The relatives put their remains in the Ganges. The spirits of the three—Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhāri and Kuntī entered the realm of Kubera. (M.B. Āśramavāsīka Parva, Svargārohaṇa Parva).

8) The names of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Ājamiḍha, Ambikāsuta, Āmbikeya, Bhārata, Bharaṭārāḍūla, Bharaṭarāṣṭha,
Bharatasaṃbha, Bharatasattama, Kaurava, Kauravaraśṭha, Kauravarāja, Kauravendra, Kauravya, Kuru-śārdula, Kuruśrēṣṭha, Kurudvaha, Kurunandana, Kuruṣāja, Kuruvan śāvardhana, Kuruvṛddha, Vaicittrāvīrya, Prajūḍācaksus etc. have been used as synonyms of Dhṛtarāṣṭra.

DHRTARĀṢṬRA I I. A serpent born to Kaśyapa Prajāpati by his wife Kaḍrī. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 9, that this serpent sits in the Durbar of Varuṇa and worships him. During the time of emperor Pṛthu, devas (gods), asuras (demons) and Nāgās (serpents) milked the earth, and the person who milked for the Nāgās was the serpent Dhṛtarāṣṭra (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69).

It is stated in Mahābhārata, Karna Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 28, that once this Nāga was admitted into the chariot of Śiva. When Bālabhadra Rāma, discarded his body and went to Pātala (nether world, several serpents came to greet him. Dhṛtarāṣṭra was one of them. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 15).

9) Dhṛtarāṣṭra II. A deva gandharva. (Semi-god).
Some information. (1) This deva gandharva was the son of the hermit Kaśyapa by his wife Muni. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 15).
(2) He took part in the birth-celebration of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 55).
(3) He went to the presence of King Marutta as a messenger of Indra. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 107, Stanza 2).
(4) It was this Gandharva who had taken Arjuna to Dhṛtarāṣṭra, the father of Duryodhana. (M.B. Svar-gārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 15).

DHRTARĀṢṬRA III. A king who was the son of Janamejaya and the grandsons of Kuru, a king of the Lunar dynasty. He had eleven sons: Kūṇḍīka and others. (M.B. Chapter 94, Stanza 58.)

DHRTARĀṢṬRA IV. A king who was the son of Janamejaya and the grandsons of Kuru, a king of the Lunar dynasty. He had eleven sons: Kūṇḍīka and others. (M.B. Chapter 94, Stanza 58.)

DHRTARĀṢṬRA V. One of the famous sons of Vāsuki.
There is a story about this nāga (serpent) in Jamini, Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 39.
After the Bhārata-battle, Yudhiṣṭhirā performed horse-sacrifice. Arjuna led the sacrificial horse. He travelled far and wide and reached Manalār. At the instruction of Uḷīpi, Bālbhūvahana confronted his father. A terrible fight ensued and Bālbhūvahana cut off the head of Arjuna. Citraṅgadā sent Bālbhūvahana to the "Nāgalāka" (the world of serpents) to bring the jewel "Mṛtasāñjīvini" to restore her husband to life. The keeper of this jewel, which was under the custody of serpent Seṣa was Dhṛtarāṣṭra, the son of Vāsuki.
Knowing that it was not easy to get the jewel, Bālbhūvahana fought with Dhṛtarāṣṭra. After a terrible fight he got the jewel. But Dhṛtarāṣṭra, who did not want Arjuna to come to life again, stole the head of Arjuna, but the help of his sons and threw it into the hermitage of Dālbhya.

DHRTARĀṢṬRI. A daughter born from Tāmrā the wife of Kaśyapa Prajāpati. Tāmrā had five daughters: Kramūrici, Bhāṣ, Syeni, Dhr̥тарāṣṭri and Sukī. Of these, from Kramūrici, the owls, the Bhāṣas from Bhāṣ, the eagle and vulture from Syeni, the swans and the ruddy goose from Dhr̥тарāṣṭri were born in the world. (This occurs in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakanda, Sarga 14).

DHRTASENA. A king who took the side of the Kauravas. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 3).

DHRTAVARMĀ. The brother of Suvarṇā, the king of Trigarta, and Ketuvarmā. Arjuna led the sacrificial horse of Asvamedha performed by Yudhiṣṭhira after the Bhārata war. Stūryavarmā the king of Trigarta, confronted Arjuna and was defeated. Ketuvarmā who came next was also killed. Dhṛtavarmā came next. He showered arrows on Arjuna and inflicted wound on his hand, and the famous bow, Gāṇḍiva fell from his hand. Arjuna grew angry and fought so fiercely that eighteen famous and mighty Trigarta warriors fell. At last Dhṛtavarmā fell at the feet of Arjuna and begged for pardon and accepted the supremacy of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Asvamedha Parva, Chapter 74).

DHRTAVRATA. A king of the family of Yayātī. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

DHRTI I. A daughter of Prajāpati Dakṣa. She was one of the wives of Dharmadeva. Madrī, the mother of Nakula and Sahadeva, was the rebirth of Dhṛtī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67). Dhṛtī had given birth to Niya-ma when she was the wife of Dharmadeva, who had married Sraddhā, Lākṣmī, Dhrīti, Tuṣṭī, Medhā, Puṣṭī, Kriyā, Buddhī, Lajjā, Vapus, Sāntī, Siddhī and Kirti, thirteen of the daughters of Dakṣa. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Arṇā I, Chapter 7).

DHRTII. A Viṣvadeva god. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91).

DHRTIII. The son of Dakṣa, the king of Videha. He was a contemporary of Vyāsa and Vicitrivirya the king of the Kurus. Mahālaśva was the son of this Dhṛti. (M.B. Ādi Parva).

DHRTIMĀN I. A king of the family of Yayātī. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

DHRTIMĀN II. An ancient country in Kuśadvipa (the island of Kuśā). (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 13).

DHRTIMĀN III. See under Dwṛṣṭabuddhi.

DHRUVA I.

1) Birth and childhood. Manu Svāyambhuva the son of Brahmati. One day three renowned heroes were fighting in a forest. The gods escorted them to heaven and gave them gold and jewels. Dhṛtavarmā said to Dhruva, “Child, if you wish to sit on the lap of your father, you ought to have been born in my womb. You cherish high ambition which you do not deserve.” Dhruva said to his father, “I will get a position unattainable even for my father, by my own endeavour.” He then started for the forest. He attained self-renunciation even in childhood and became a disciple of hermits and performing severe penance.

Dhruva next wished to perform the penance in the forest of Madhuvana on the river Jamunā. Suniṇī came and tried to take him to the palace. But he did not return. He intensified his penance more and more. At last Mahāviṣṇu appeared before him. Dhruva requested for a lofty, and eternal place which would become a prop of the world. Accordingly, Viṣṇu pointed out to Dhruva, a noble place, higher than the planets, stars Saptarṣis (Ursa Major) and the devas who travelled in aeroplanes. Mahāviṣṇu said that Dhruva would live in a lofty place as a star till the end of the Kalpa and his mother Suniṇī would also remain as a star near Śiva as long as Dhruva lived (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Arṇā I, Chapters 11 and 12).

2) The previous birth of Dhruva. Mahāviṣṇu appeared before Dhruva and revealed his previous birth. Dhruva was a Brahmin in his previous birth. He used to meditate on Viṣṇu with concentration of mind. In course of time he befriended a prince who was a youth, of beautiful and bright complexion, enjoying all the pleasures of the world. Attracted by the position and status of the prince, the Brahmin wanted to become a prince. Mahāviṣṇu granted his wish. Accordingly Dhruva took his next birth as the son of Uttanapāda. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Arṇā I, Chapter 12).

3) The reign and end of Dhruva. After receiving the boon from Mahāviṣṇu, Dhruva returned. All who were there embraced Dhruva. Years passed by. Uttanapāda left his kingdom to Dhruva and became a forest householder. Dhruva became King. The King Dhruva married Bhārmī, the daughter of Śīṣumā, a Prajāpatī. The queen gave birth to two sons Kalpa and Vatsara. Dhruva married Illā, the daughter of Vāyu (wind). She gave birth to a son named Utkaḷa. Uttaṇa remained unmarried. While he was hunting in the forest a Yakṣa (a demi-god) killed him. Surucī was caught in wild fire and died. Hearing about the death of Uttama, Dhruva took his weapons and reached the realm of the Yakṣas. He stood at their gate and challenged them for battle. One lac and thirty thousand Yakṣa warriors fought with Dhruva. Dhruva destroyed the entire army. The Yakṣas began illusive and magical arts. Dhruva overcame that also. At last Kubera himself appeared before Dhruva and blessed him. They got him into a plane and placed him in a place higher than all the planets. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Bhāgavata).

4) The descendants of Dhruva. Two sons named Śiṣṭi and Bhavya were born to Dhruva by his wife Śambhu. Succaḥāya the wife of Śiṣṭi gave birth to five sinless sons named Rūpī, Rūpājaya, Vibhī, Vṛkaḷa and Vṛkatejā. Bṛhatī the wife of Rūpī gave birth to Cākṣuṣa of extreme bright complexion. Manu was born to Cākṣuṣa by his wife Puṣkaraṇi the daughter of Viraṇaprajāpati and included in the children of Varuṇa. Ten sons were born to the bright Manu by his wife Naḍvalā, daughter of Prajāpati Vairāja. These ten bright sons were Kuru, Pūru, Satādhyumna Tapasvī, Satyavān, Suci, Aṃgisa, Aṃgisa, Atri, Sudhyumna, and Abhimanyu. Agni, the wife of Kuru gave birth to six children. They were Aniga, Sumanas, Khyātī, Kṛatū, Aṃgiras and Śibi. A son named Vena was born to Aniga.
by his wife Sunithâ. Hermits churned the right hand of Vena to obtain children. As a result of churning Vaineya was born from the right hand of Vena. That King is the famous Prthu. This Prthu milked the earth for the prosperity of his subjects. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anśa 1, Chapter 13).

5) The place of Dhruva. The origin of the river Gaṅgâ was through the hole at the top of the shell of the mundane egg. It flowed down and fell on the highest part of heaven. That place is called Viṣṇupâda. Sitting in this Viṣṇupâda, Dhruva does penance to Viṣṇu. So this place got the name Dhruvamândala. (Devi Bhâgavata, Skandha 8).

DHRUVA II. He was the son of Nahuṣa and the brother of Yayâti. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 30).

DHRUVA III. A king. He sits in the council of Yama and serves him. (M.B. Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 10).

DHRUVA IV. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pândavas. He was killed by Bhimasena. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 155, Stanza 27).

DHRUVA V. A king who supported Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 39).

DHRUVA VI. A son born to Dharmacdeva by his wife Dhûmrâ. He was one of the aṣṭa Vaus (eight Vaus). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 19).

DHUVAKA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 75).

DHUVARATNA. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 4).

DHUVASANDHI. A king of Kosala. During the reign of this King there was prosperity in Ayodhâyâ and the people were virtuous. This king had two wives Manoramâ and Lîlavatî. A son named Sudârsana was born to Manoramâ. After a month the second wife also gave birth to a son named Śatrújit. The King was much pleased and both sons were brought up alike. As Śatrújit was cleverer than Sudârsana people loved Śatrújit more.

Once Dhuvasandhi went to the forest for hunting and was killed by a lion in the forest. According to the custom Sudârsana became King. Lîlavatî, the mother of Śatrújit was the daughter of the King of Ujjayîni. Her desire was to make Śatrújit the King. Manoramâ the mother of Sudârsana was the daughter of the King of Kañcâ. Hearing about the death of Dhuvasandhi, the kings of Ujjayîni and Kañcâ arrived at Ayodhâyâ. The King of Ujjayîni got angry because Sudârsana was made king and began war. The King of Kañcâ took the side of Sudârsana. A terrible battle was fought in Ayodhâyâ as to who should be the heir to the throne. In the battle Yudhâjit, the King of Ujjayîni, killed Vîrasena, the king of Kañcâ. Sudârsana and his mother Manoramâ were in a sorry plight. According to the advice of minister Vidulla, Manoramâ and Sudârsana fled from the capital. Vidulla and the maid of Manoramâ accompanied them. In two days they reached Gaṅgâtabeta. They were caught by fishermen thieves and they lost everything they had. At last with the help of a boat they crossed the Ganges and reached Trikûṭa. They went to the hermitage of Bharadvâja who was doing penance there. He gave them protection.

After making Śatrújit King, Yudhâjit began to search for Manoramâ and Sudârsana. He got news that they lived in Cîtrakûṭa. Yudhâjit went there with an army. But he could not get them out of the hermitage of Bharadvâja. Manoramâ and Sudârsana lived safely in the hermitage.

Once Vidulla came to the hermitage of Bharadvâja to enquire about Manoramâ. Seeing the old man the hermit boys called out “Kliśa Kliśa.” Prince Sudârsana heard only “Kliś.” The syllable ‘Kliś’ is the spell called ‘Kâmarâja bijamâtra’. Without knowing its meaning Sudârsana called out ‘Kliś’ several times. With that the prince got a special power. Six more years passed. The prince became eleven years old. By this time Bharadvâja had taught the prince Veda, Śaśtras, etc. The prince was a devotee of Devi. Devî appeared before him and gave him a bow and a quiver which would never become empty, and an impenetrable armour. Sudârsana married Śâikâlâ the daughter of the King of Kâśî, Nîśâda, the King of Śrîgiravapura, was a friend of Dhuvasandhi. He gave Sudârsana a chariot which Sudârsana rode through the forest. With the help of the King of Kâśî and others Sudârsana recaptured Ayodhâyâ. He made Vidulla his minister and ruled over the country for a long time. (Devi Bhâgavata, Skandha 3).

DHŪMAPA. A set of deified benes (Pîrêsh) who form a gaṇa (Siva’s hosts of deities). This Gaṇa is seen to have attended the sacrifice of Dakṣa. (M.B. Śânti Parva, Chapter 284, Stanza 8).

DHŪMAPALÅ. A river. (M.B. Bhîṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 18).

DHŪMÂVATI. A holy place. The wishes of those who take three days’ fast in this holy place are realised. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 22).

DHŪMÎNÌ. The wife of King Ajamiñđha of Puru dynasty. By this wife, a son named Rûṣa was born to Ajamiñđha. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 32).

DHŪMORNÅ I. The wife of King Yama (God of Death). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 117, Stanza 9).

DHŪMORNÅ II. The wife of hermit Mârkâṇḍeya. (M.B. Anuâśâsana Parva, Chapter 146, Stanza 4).

DHŪMRA I. A hermit. This hermit was a luminary in the Durbar of Indra. (M.B. Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 7).

DHŪMRA II. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 64).

DHŪMRÅ. A daughter of Prajâpati Dakṣa. She became the wife of Dharmacdeva. Two sons, Dhruva and Dhara were born to the couple. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 19).

DHŪMRÅKEŚÅ I. A Prâcetas (Bhâgavata, Skandha 4).

DHŪMRÅKEŚÅ II. The third son of Prthu, the son of Vena. Five sons were born to Prthu by his wife Arcis. On the death of Prthu, his elder brother’s son Vîjîtâśva appointed Dhūmrâkeśa as the governor of southern countries. (Bhâgavata, Skandha 4).

DHŪMRÅKETÅ. A son of Bharata. Five sons named Sûmati, Râstraśrît, Sudârsana, Varana and Dhûmraketu were born to Bharata by his wife Pañcâjani. (Bhâgavata, Skandha 5).

DHŪMRÅKÅ I. A king of the Iksvåku dynasty.

DHŪMRÅKÅ II. A minister of Râvana.
DHŪMRĀSVĀ

Genealogy. Brahmā created the Rākṣasa (giant) Heti. The son Vidhyutkesa was born to him of his wife Bhayā. Sukēa was born to Vidhyutkesa by his wife SālaKaṭāṇākā. Sukēa married Devavati. Three sons, Mālayaṃ, Sumāli and Māli were born to the couple. To Sumāli, by his wife Ketumati, fourteen children were born: Prahasta, Akaṇḍa, Vīkaṇa, Kālakāmuṇaka, Dhūmrākaśa, Danda, Supārśva, Sāmhiṛtā, Prākṣva, Bhāsakarna, Veka, Puṣpotkaṇa, Kaikasi, and Kumbhinasi; most of them were ministers of Rāvaṇa. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

2) Work and death. Dhūmrāsa was one who worked in all the branches of administration of the state. In all the battles fought by the Rākṣasas Dhūmrākasa was present. He was also called Dhūmrarocana. He was killed in the battle of Kāma and Rāvaṇa at the hands of Hanumān. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Chapter 51).

DHŪMRĀSVĀ. A king of the Iksvāku dynasty. He was the son of Sucandra and the father of Sāniyāja. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 47).

DHUNDHU I. A notorious Asura. He was the son of the Madhu Kaṭābhas. Brahmā was born in the lotus from the navel of Viṣṇu, who was lying in meditation on the surface of water. From the car-wax of Viṣṇu two asuras—Madhu and Kaitabha sprang up. They terrified Brahmā by shaking the stalk of the lotus. Brahmā became terribly afraid of the asuras and ran about on the surface of water. Hearing the cry of Brahmā Viṣṇu awoke, but he could not defeat the asuras. Viṣṇu decided to employ Śāma (conciliation) the first expedient. The arrogant demons ordered Viṣṇu to ask of them any boon. Viṣṇu replied, "If it is so, you must be killed by me." They could not but give the boon. They agreed to the request of Viṣṇu and said: "But we must be killed in an atmosphere, which is not cloudy." Viṣṇu killed them when the atmosphere was clear.

A son named Dhundhu had been born to Madhu and Kaṭābha. Because Viṣṇu had killed his fathers Dhundhu decided to take revenge on Viṣṇu and the Gods. With this idea in view Dhundhu began to do penance in the sandy desert of Ujjalaka in Marudhanava. Standing on one leg he did penance for thousands of years. Then Brahmā appeared before him and gave the boon that he would not be killed by Devas, Dānavas (asuras), Gandharvas (Demi-gods), Rākṣasas (demons), Yaksas (paragods) and Uragas (serpents). Having got this boon, he lived under sand in the desert of Ujjalaka. His idea was to destroy the gods.

A hermit named Uttāṇka had erected his hermitage in another part of Marudhanava and began penance. By his penance he made Viṣṇu appear before him and then made a request that Dhundhu’s activities be put a stop to. Viṣṇu replied: "Uttāṇka! Dhundhu has become a curse to the three worlds. There is a king named Kuvalāśva, born of the dynasty of Iksvāku. He will kill Dhundhu." Saying these words, Viṣṇu disappeared.

Uttāṇka went to the palace of Kuvalāśva and told him what Viṣṇu had said. Kuvalāśva and his sons went to the forest and killed Dhundhu in a fight. From that day Kuvalāśva came to be known by the name Dhundhumāra,1 which meant ‘the killer of Dhundhu. (M.B. Vana Parva, 4 Chapters from 201).

DHUNDHU II. An ancient King who lived on vegetable food only. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 66).

DHUNDHUKĀRI. See under Gokarna.

DHUNDHUL. See under Gokarna.

DHUNDHUMĀRA. A king of the Iksvāku dynasty. (See under Kuvalāśva). He was also called Kuvalayāśva.

DHUNDHUMAKA. A wicked King. Viṣṇyā was his wife. Even at the marriage of his son this wicked King remained indifferent. He indulged in sexual activities with a Śūdra woman. Not much later he killed her. As soon as her brother knew about this he ran to the palace and killed the King Dhundhumāka along with his wife. Because he was killed by a Śūdra, the family of the King faced destruction. His son was also wicked like his father. But on the advice of a sage he began o utter (the five-syllabled and six-syllabled mantras of Siva) in consequence of which, his parents were redeemed. (Linga Purāṇa).

DHUNDHURA. An Asura. It is stated in Ganeśa Purāṇa that this asura went to the house of Kaśyapa in the shape of a parrot and tried to kill Ganeśa who had incarnated in the house of Kaśyapa, but was killed by him.

DHURANDHARAM. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 18).

DHURTAKA. A King of ancient India. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 23).

DHURTAKA. A serpent born in the family of Kaurava. He fell in the sacrificial fire of King Janamejaya and was burnt to death. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 13).

DHVAJAVATI. The daughter of the hermit Harimedha, who lived in the sky, according to the order of the Sun. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 13).

DHVAJINI. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 83).

DHVANI. The son of Āpa who is one of the eight Vaus. Āpa had four sons called Vaiṣṇaṇḍa, Śrama, Śanta and Dhvani. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁā 1, Chapter 15).

DHVANYA. A king. He was the son of Lakṣmanā. (See Rgveda Index).

DHVASANTI. A hermit of the period of the Rgveda. Aṁvinidevas rescued the hermits Turviti, Dabhitī, Dhvasanti and Puruṣanti from danger. Rgveda, Manḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 112).

DHYĀNA. (Meditation). Even from ancient times the people of Bhārata believed that heaven could be attained by meditation. There are scientific methods of meditating upon God. They are described below: The root “dhya”, means “to think”. Dhyāna (meditation) means thinking of God with concentration. God is invisible and featureless. We can meditate only upon some material that contains the attributes of God. So dhyāna (meditation) is to fix the mind on the object of meditation, and to imagine that particular object in a particular place and to concentrate the mind upon it. One who casts off his body, while engaged in meditation attains ‘Śāyujja’ (oneness with God).

1. Dhundhu was the son of Kaśyapa, born of Danu. It was to kill Dhundhu that Viṣṇu incarnated a Vāmana, Vāmanapurāṇa Chapter 8.
He who can meditate upon God, with concentration of mind even for a moment or two can attain heaven. The fruits he attains are far greater than the fruits attained by performing great sacrifices and offerings. For meditation, there are four factors: Dhyātā (the meditator), Dhyāna (the act of meditation) Dhyeya (the object meditated upon) and Dhyānaprayojana (the attainment by meditation). He who indulges in meditation is the meditator. The act done by him is meditation. That which is meditated upon is the object of meditation. What the meditator obtains as a result of his meditation is the attainment. A meditator should be wise and virtuous, should have attention and patience, devoted to Viṣṇu and always energetic.

We can meditate upon God, walking, standing, sleeping and awake. God should be consecrated in the centre of the lotus chair of the heart and be worshipped with devotional meditation. It is to give practice in fixing the mind firmly on a particular object, that the sages say that some visible material object should be given to meditate upon, in the early stage of meditation. When concentration of mind is obtained by meditating upon a visible object, it will be possible for us to meditate upon an object which is not amenable to our senses. When engaged in meditation we should be thinking “Ahaṁ Brahmā jyotiṛāmā vāsudevo vimukta Oṁ”, (I am Brahmā, the light, the Spirit, Vāsudeva, and Vimukta (having no connection with anything), OM). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 374).

DIBHAKA. A prince who, puffed up by the power of boons and blessings from the gods, tried to harm sage Durvāsas. Balabhadrārāma killed him. The following account occurs in the Bhaviṣya Purāṇa.

Brahmadatta, King of Śālva, had two wives. No children were born to them for several years. Brahmadatta’s minister, Mitrasaha, also had no children. Mitrasaha was a brahmin and a scholar. On his advice, Brahmadatta, with his wives, went to Kailāsa and performed tapas to please Śiva to get children. As a result of ten years’ rigorous tapas Śiva was pleased and blessed him that two sons would be born to him. Later his wives gave birth to two sons. The son of the eldest queen was named Harīṇa and that of the second queen was named Dibhaka. At this time a son was also born to Mitrasaha, the minister by the blessing of Viṣṇu. That child was named Janārdana.

Harīṇa and Dibhaka were spoilt, but Janārdana was a bhakta of Viṣṇu. Harīṇa and Dibhaka performed tapas in their childhood to please Śiva and got invincible power and arrows. After that they became lokakanṭakas (torturers) and went round the world. Once they went to Kaśyapa’s āśrama and destroyed the place of worship. After that they went to the āśrama of Durvāsas. There they tortured the sages and made the sages naked who were wearing only loin cloth. Then they returned.

Enraged by these, sage Durvāsas went to Đvārakā taking the destroyed loin-cloth and other articles. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and his courtiers stood up and saluted him when they saw Durvāsas coming like sāhārarudra. On hearing the news, Śrī Kṛṣṇa assured him that he would kill Harīṇa and Dibhaka and sent him back pacified. Harīṇa and Dibhaka began a rājasūya. They sent Janārdana to Śrī Kṛṣṇa with the message that he should either fight with them or give them tribute (in the form of money). Janārdana went to Đvārakā, just as Akūra, a devotee of Viṣṇu, went to Ambādī with the message of Karīsa. Immediately Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadrā with the chief Ministers like Sātīyaki went to Sālva. In the war that followed Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Harīṇa and Bala. Bhadrārāma killed Dibhaka. (M.B. Bhaviṣya Parva, Chapter 103-129).

DIGVIJAYAPARVA. A sub-division of the Sabhā Parva of Mahābhārata. It comprises of Chapters 25 to 32 of Sabhā Parva.

DIK. A river. The Mahābhārata, (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 18) states that the water of this river was used for drinking by the people in India.

DĪKŚĀ. Dīkśā is the vrata that expels sin and increases Jūna (wisdom). Those who are to be blessed fall into three categories. The person who belongs to the first category is called Vijnānakala; the second is Pralayaka; and the third is Sakala. Vijnānakala is free from sin alone. Pralayaka is free from sins and Karmans. Sakala has everything from Kalā to the earth. The Dīkśās to be practised by the three classes of persons are of different kinds. Dīkśā is classified into two: “Nirādhāra and Sādhāra.

Nirādhāra Dīkśā is performed for the sake of Vijnānakala and Pralayaka. Sādhāra Dīkśā is prescribed for the third class of people, the Sakaīs.

(1) Genealogy. See Daśaratha’s Genealogy.

2) Reign and Birth of Son. Dilipa is counted as one of the noblest kings. His reign was extremely popular. But even after a long period of married life, he had no issue. His queen was Sudakṣṇā, the princess of Magadha. In order to get Vasiṣṭha’s advice, Dilipa and Sudakṣṇā went to the sages’ āśrama. After hearing about their grievance, Vasiṣṭha meditated for a little while and described why the royal couple were not blessed with children:—“Long ago, Dilipa had paid a visit to Indra. While returning after the visit, he passed by Kāmadhenu who was lying under the shade of Kalpavṛkṣa. He paid no heed to her, as he did not see her. The divine cow (Kāmadhenu) took this as a personal slight to her and cursed the King that he would not have children until he served and propitiated her daughter, Nandini. Neither the King nor his charioteer was aware of the curse. Kāmadhenu has now gone to Pātāla (underworld) to attend a sacrifice of Vāruṇa. Therefore Dilipa and his queen should attend on and propitiate her daughter, Nandini.”

From the next morning the King and queen began to offer their services to Nandini. The King followed her as her shadow. After twentyone days, one morning Nandini went to graze in a dense forest. As usual, the King also followed her. As they reached the middle of the woods, the King was enchanted for a moment by the charm of the Sylvan scenery. Just then, on turning round he saw a lion springing towards Nandini to prey upon her. Suddenly he took up his bow and aimed an arrow at the lion, but to his great amazement, his hands were paralysed. The lion spoke to him as follows:—“O King, you need not exert yourself in vain. I am the servant of Lord Śiva. This holy deodor tree which you see in front of us, was planted and tended by Pārvati. My task is to protect this tree. Pārvati and lord Śiva have authorized me to kill and eat the animals which come this way. Therefore this cow is my food.”

The king was in a fix. He begged the lion to spare Nandinī and to eat his (king’s) body instead. The lion agreed. The king put down his arms and stood bowing down in front of the lion. Hearing the words, “Beloved child, arise” he looked up, and the lion had vanished. Just then Nandinī told him that it was she herself who had done this to test him. The king and Nandinī then returned to the Āśrama. As a result of Nandinī’s blessing, the king’s wife bore a son who later became the celebrated emperor Raghu. (Pādma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 198).

(3) Killing of the Asura, Vīrasena. Once a powerful Asura named Vīrasena attacked Vaśīraṇa. When lord Śiva came to know of it he tried to defeat Vīrasena, but in vain. At Śiva’s request, Mahāvīra entered the scene. He was also unable to subdue the Asura. Viṣṇu advised Vaśīraṇa to seek the help of Dīlīpa. Dīlīpa went to Alakāpūri and encountered Vīrasena. Under the shower of arrows from Dīlīpa, blood began to flow from the body of Vīrasena. But each drop of his blood came to life as a new Vīrasena and all those Vīrasenas continued a ceaseless battle with Dīlīpa. At last Dīlīpa prayed to Rakteśvarī who suddenly appeared and drank all the blood. In this way the king managed to kill Vīrasena. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kaṇḍa).

(4) Dilīpa and the Holy Waters. Once king Dilīpa led a saintly life on the bank of Gaṅga, the sacred place worshipped by Devas, Rṣis and Gandharvas. With religious practices and offering pūjā to Devas, Rṣis and Pitṛs, he spent time in prayer and meditation. One day he happened to meet Vaśīṣṭha, and paid homage to him. The sage Vaśīṣṭha described to him all the places of sacred waters and explained the greatness of each. (See under Kaṭaṭvāṅga). (Pādma Purāṇa, Chapter 10).

Dilīpa II. A serpent born in Kaśyapa family. There is a reference to this serpent in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 15.

Dilīpaśrāma. A sacred place. It was at this place that Ambā, the daughter of the King of Kāśi performed austere tapas (Penance). (See under Ambā).

Dīṃḍīka. A rat who played a part in Bīḍālopākhyāṇa.

The story runs as follows:

Once a cat performed tapas, holding his hands up, on the banks of the Ganges, when the found no way to get food. Seeing the devotion of that cat all living beings birds and animals began to worship him. Once the cat called all rats and told them: “One cannot do spiritual and physical deeds at the same time. So I will look after your spiritual affairs. You should attend to my physical needs. That is, bring me food, bathe me in the Ganges, all these are your duties.”

The rats agreed to do so. They took him to the Ganges, bathed him and gave him food. But, the cat, whenever he got a chance caught a rat and ate it up. The cat’s health improved day-by-day and the number of rat’s began to decrease. Among them, there was a clever rat named Dīṃḍīka. He called all the other rats and organized a secret conference. The subject of discussion was the cruel deeds done by the cat to the rats.

The next day Dīṃḍīka went secretly to examine the ways of living of the cat. The cat ate Dīṃḍīka. After 40 days the rats came to know that Dīṃḍīka was missing. They assembled secretly, They elected a rat named Kokila as their leader. Under his leadership the rats declared independence and left the place. The cat also went his own way finding no means to get food. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 160).

Dīṃṅṅāga. A Sanskrit dramatist who lived between the second and lith centuries A.D. “Dīṃṅṅāga” was his other name. The Sanskrit drama “KUNDAMALĀ” which is based on Uttara Rāmāyaṇa and has six acts, was composed by Dīṃṅṅāga. Dīṃṅṅāga, the Buddhist preacher and this Dīṃṅṅāga are two different persons. Vināyaka and Śiva are praised in the introductory stanzas of Kundamālā (A.B. Keith: Classical Sanskrit literature).

Dīṅṅāṭhā. A King who lived in Dvāpara Age. He was a mighty and famous Vaśīva. But his childless life distressed him very much. Once he consulted Gālava about his plight. Gālava assured him that if he performed a human sacrifice, a son would be born to him. A handsome, scholarly and highly-born man was to be sacrificed into the fire. A cripple, a dark-skinned man or a crude fellow was unsuitable for the purpose. The King’s servants scourred the villages and towns looking for such a perfect man, but in vain. At last they reached a country called Daśapura, inhabited by noble Brāhmaṇas. The women of that place were reputed for their charming eyes. No man could resist their fascination. In that lovely city there lived a Brāhmaṇa named Kṛṣṇadeva with his virtuous wife and three sons. The King’s servants requested Kṛṣṇadeva to give one of his sons to be sacrificed. They offered four lakhs of gold coins as price. The Brāhmaṇa and his wife cried bitterly and Kṛṣṇadeva offered himself instead of his sons. The royal servants seized one of his sons after throwing gold coins in the house and prepared to take him away. At this stage the second son of Kṛṣṇadeva came forward and volunteered himself. They agreed and he accompanied them to the palace. On their way they met the sage Viśvāmitra. He asked them to release the boy but they refused to set him free. The sage followed them to the palace and undertook to perform a sacrifice which would bless the King with progeny without a human sacrifice. The King accepted the offer and thus the boy was saved. (Pādma Purāṇa, Chapter 12).

Dīpaṅkarṇī. A character in Guṇādhya’s Brāhmaṇa. Dīpaṅkarṇī was a King. He had a wife named Saktimatī. One day while she was sleeping in the garden she was bitten by a snake and she died. Distressed by her departure, Dīpaṅkarṇī accepted Brāhmaṇa. He was deeply grieved because he had no son to succeed to his throne. One day Śiva appeared to him in a dream and told him thus: “When you pass through the forest, you will come across a youth riding a lion. Take him to your palace; he will be your son.” Dīpaṅkarṇī woke up happily. He had faith in his dream. One day he went to a distant forest for hunting. There he saw a very handsome boy riding on a lion. He was reminded of his dream when the boy dismounted and the lion walked away slowly to a nearby stream to drink water. At once Dipakarṇi shot an arrow at the lion. Suddenly the lion gave up its animal shape and transformed itself into a man and spoke to the King as follows:—

I am a Yakṣa named Sāta and a friend of Vaiśravaṇa. Once when I went to bathe in the river Gaṅgā, I happened to see a Rṣi virgin and I fell in love with her. I married her according to the Gândharva rules. The Rṣis who came to know of it turned us into a lion couple by their curse. When we fell at their feet and begged pardon, they gave her a blessing that a son would be born to her and that I would fall under your arrow. After that we were wandering about as a lion-couple and in due course she became pregnant. In the fullness of time she gave birth to this boy and then was liberated from the curse. I have been bringing him up by giving the milk of lionesses. Now, by being hit by your arrow, I am also released from the curse. From this time kindly receive this mighty youth as your own.”

After saying this, the Yakṣa vanished. Dipakarṇi returned to the palace, taking the boy with him. Since he was carried by Sāta, the boy was named “Sātavāhana”. When he grew up into a youth, Dipakarṇi handed over the rule of the kingdom to him and entered into Vānaprastha. In course of time Sātavāhana became an emperor. (Kathāsarītāgāra, Kathāpiṭḥa lambaka, 6th Tāraṅgā.)

DĪPTA Son of Manu Utama. Utama was the third Manu. He had three sons—Aja, Parāsu and Dīpta. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 1).

DĪPTAKETU. A King of olden times. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, verse 237).

DĪPTĀKṢA. A Kṣatriya tribe. Purūravas, the renowned king was born in this family. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74).

DĪPTAROMĀ. A Viśvadeva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, verse 31).

DĪPTI. A Viśvadeva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 34).

DĪRGA. A King of Magadha. He was killed by Pāṇḍu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 112, Verse 27).

DĪRGHABĀHU I. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīmasena killed him in Bhārata War. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, chapter 96, Verse 26).

DĪRGHABĀHU II. A pious King. There are conflicting versions about him in the Purāṇas.

DĪRGHAJAMGHA. A Yakṣa who was the elder brother of the Yakṣa Puspadatta. (Kathāsarītāgāra, Kathāpiṭḥalambaka, 2nd Tāraṅgā).

DĪRGHAJIHVĀ. A dānava (asura) born to Kaṭṭīyapa by his wife Danu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 30).

DĪRGHAKARṇA. A rabbit. A character in one of the stories of the Pañcatantra illustrating the dangers of trusting mean or wicked people. (See under Pañcatantra)

DĪRGHALOCANA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra.

DĪRGHAPOJNA. A Kṣatriya King. He traces his ancestry from a part of the Asura, Vṛṣa Parva. Mahābhārata (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 12) states that the Paṇḍavas had sent an invitation to him at the time of the Kurukṣetra battle.

DĪRGHAROMĀ. (DĪRGHALOCANA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīmasena in the Bhārata War. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127).

DĪRGHAPATTRA. A holy place. He who visits this holy place will derive the blessings of having performed the Aśvamedha and Rājasūya sacrifices. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82).

DĪRGHĀŚRĀVAS. A son of Dirghatamas. (Rgveda, Manuḍala 1, Anuvaṇka 112, Sūkta 117).

DĪRGHATAMAS. A great Muni.

1) Birth. Aṅgiras, the son of Brahmā, had two sons, Utathya and Bṛhaspati. One day when Utathya was away from home, Bṛhaspati approached his elder brother’s wife, Māmātā, who was pregnant at the time, and tried to have sexual union with her. But she tried to dissuade him and said—“The child in my womb, born from Utathya’s semen has already mastered Vedas and Vedāṅgas. Your semen is also equally powerful. How can my womb bear the combined force of the two semens? So please refrain from this attempt of yours.” But even after hearing these, words of his sister-in-law, Bṛhaspati was not able to control his passions. At the time of the intercourse, when the semen of Bṛhaspati entered the womb, the child within it cried out—“Father! this passion is improper. Two persons have no place here. So withdraw your semen.” Bṛhaspati did not heed the request. The child in the womb repelled the semen that entered the womb with its foot and it dropped on the floor. Bṛhaspati who became angry, cursed the child. As a result, the boy was born blind. He got the name “Dirghatama” because he was born blind. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 104).

2) Family Life. In brilliance of parts, Dirghatamas equalled Bṛhaspati. Dirghatamas, who was born blind, married Pradveṣi, a Brāhmaṇī. The couple had many children, chief of whom was Gauṭama. But after the birth of the children, Dirghatamas fell into evil ways and became an object of hatred and contempt. The inmates of āśramas dubbed him a sinner. His wife, was disgusted with him. One day, the enraged Dirghatamas, in his fury cursed women as a whole and Pradveṣi could not control her anger. She, with the help of Gauṭama and other sons made a raft and placing Dirghatamas on it, floated it down the river Gaṅgā. The King Bali happened to see the raft floating down the river. He sent men to bring the boat to the bank. The King recognized Dirghatamas and asked the Muni to beget brilliant and intelligent children by his queen. Dirghatamas agreed and the King sent the queen Sudeṣṇā to him. The queen who did not find pleasure in the company of the blind and decrepit Muni sent a nurse to him. The nurse bore to him Kaṭṭīvān and ten other sons all of whom became great scholars. After some years the King came to know that the mother of those boys was the nurse. Then he sent Sudeṣṇā again to the Muni. Dirghatamas, after touching her body blessed her and five sons, Āṅgī, Bharadvāja. The Mahābhārata states that the child born to Māmātā was Dirghatamas.
Vanga, Kalininga, Puṇḍra and Suṅga were born to her. They founded five Kingdoms which were known by their names respectively. They are known by their modern names: Bhūgalpura, Bengal, Andhra, Rāja-sāhi and Tāmārvika.

3) Other details. (1) Dirghatamas had another wife named Uṣṭik. (Rgveda, 1st Manḍala, 16th Anuvāka, 112th Sūkta.)

(2) Dirghatamas continues to be in the assembly of Indra offering worship to him (Indra). (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 11).

DIRGHATAPAS I. Father of Dhanvantari. (See under Dhanvantari).

DIRGHATAPAS II. See under Puṇya.

DIRGHAYAJNĀ. A King of Ayodhya. Bhimasena had once won him over to his side by persuasive speech. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 30, verse 2).

DIRGHAYUS. Brother of Śrutayus, the King of Kalința. Arjuna killed him in the war. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 29).

DIRGHIKĀ. A daughter of Vīvakarman. She was abnormally tall, and since there was the Sāstric injunction that he who married such women would die within six months none came forward to wed her. Dirghikā began a penance for a good husband. As it continued for years together symptoms of old age began to appear in her. At this juncture an old and ailing householder came there. On certain conditions he married Dirghikā. After sometime, in obedience to the husband's wish Dirghikā set out on a tour carrying him on her shoulders. Though Māṇḍavya cursed her husband on their way, due to the chastity of Dirghikā the curse proved to be ineffective. The similarity in the stories of Śāndīti and this Dirghikā leads us to think that they might have been one and the same person.

DIŚACAKSU. One of the prominent off-springs of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 10).

DITI.

1) General. A daughter of Daśa Prajāpati. She was married to Kaśyapa, grandson of Brahmā and son of Marici. She had many sisters, chief among whom were Aditi, Kalā, Danāyus, Danu, Simhikā, Krodhā, Prthū, Vīkā, Vinnatā, Kapilā, Muni and Kadrū. Kaśyapa's sons by Aditi became Devas (Ādityas) and his sons by Diti became Asuras (Daityas). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63).

2) Indra cut Diti's embryo to pieces. Devas and Asuras agreed to churn the ocean of milk as a joint endeavour. But when Amṛta rose up to the surface, they began to quarrel over it. In the battle between Devas and Asuras for the possession of Amṛta, Diti's sons were killed.

In her inconsolable grief at the death of her sons, Diti prayed to her husband Kaśyapa that she should be blessed with a brave and heroic son who would be capable of killing Indra. The sage granted her the boon and told her that by worshipping the Lord with a pure mind and body for a hundred years, she would bear a son who would be mighty enough to kill Indra. In due course Diti became pregnant and following her husband's advice, she fervently worshipped the Lord and remained pure in mind and body. When Indra came to know that the child in Diti's womb was to be his slayer, he approached her under the disguise of an attendant, offering to serve her. He waited for an opportunity to get access to her and before the expiry of a hundred years he got a chance. One day, Diti went to bed without washing her feet and fell asleep. Indra took his Vajra and gaining access to her womb cut the embryo within it into seven pieces. The child in the womb began to cry loudly. Indra asked it "MĀ RUDA" (Do not cry). Then he proceeded to cut each of the seven pieces again into seven and finally there were forty-nine pieces in all. They subsequently became Devas known as "Maruts." They got the name Maruts because Indra told them "MĀ RUDA." All the forty-nine Maruts later on became the helpers of Indra. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 21).

3) Diti's sons. Asuras were Diti's sons. Chief among them were Hiranyakasipu and Hiranyākṣa. They had a sister named Siṁhikā. Hiranyakasipu had four sons—Anuḥlāḍa, Hīḍa, Praḥlāḍa and Saṅhīlāḍa who were famous for their glory and might. Sūrapadma, Siṁhavaktra, Tārākāsura, Gomukha and Ajāmukha were also Diti's sons. Of them, Sūrapadma had four sons by his wife Mayaśūṭa, who were Bhāṅukopa, Agnimukha, Vajrabhūṭa and Hiraṇyapa. An asura named Mahāśūṭa was born to Siṁhavaktra by his wife, Viḥūṭī. The Asuras, Sambhara, Śaṅkuni, Dwīmurūḍa, Śaṅku, Āśva, were the sons of Hiranyakṣa. Siṁhikā married Virpacitti; Rāhu and Ketu were born to them. Saṅhīlāḍa, the son of Hiranyakasipu had three sons, Āyuṣmān, Śibi and Bāṣkala. Virocanas were the sons of Prahlāḍa; Mahābāli was the son of Virocanas; Bāna was born to Mahābāli and to Bāna were born four crores of Nivātakavacas. All these were the prominent children of Diti. Besides them, Diti had crores of other Asuras born to her. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 3; Harivarhaṇā, Chapter 3).

4) Birth of Hiranyakasipu and Hiranyākṣa. Hiranyakasipu and Hiranyākṣa were the rebirth of Jaya and Viṣṇaja, the two gate-keepers of Mahāviṣṇu. (See under Jaya). There is a story as to how they were born as the sons of Diti.

Diti was one of the wives of Kaśyapa. She had no children while the other wives of Kaśyapa had children. Jealousy and grief rankled in her mind. One day she approached Kaśyapa and pressed him to beget a son for her. It was the time of dusk when Kaśyapa was deeply absorbed in his day's devotional worship. She disturbed his "Dhyāna" (devotional concentration) by her importunity, but he was reluctant to yield to her wishes at such an inauspicious time. It is at dusk that Śiva goes about with his attendant hordes of spirits, wearing the crown of his matted hair covered with the dust carried by the whirlwinds from cremation grounds and keeping his three eyes wide open. Kaśyapa asked Diti to wait for a few minutes, until that terrible time was over, but she did not heed his advice. In the fury of her passion she sprang towards him and stripped him of his clothes and in the end Kaśyapa yielded to her carnal desires. But after the act he in a repentant mood told her that she had defiled her mind by having sexual union in that unholy hour and by doing so had sinned against the gods. As a result, twin sons will be born in her womb. They would persecute and torture the three worlds. Mahāviṣṇu would incarnate to destroy them. But since she also felt a little regret in her act, a grandson of her (Prahlāda) will become a devotee of Viṣṇu.
Twin sons, Hiraṇyakaśipu and Hiraṇyākṣa were born to Diti. For the rest of the story, see under Hiraṇyakaśipu and Hiraṇyākṣa. (Bhāgavata, Prthagama Skandha).

5) Diti flourishes in the assembly of Brahmā. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, verse 39.)

Divaḥputra. One of the twelve sūryas who were born in the form of the Sun. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 42).

Divaḥputra I. A synonym of Sūrya (Sun).

Divaḥputra II. A son of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101).

Divaḥputra III. See under Niśākara II.

Divaḥputra IV. A king. During the reign of this king the Matsya Purāṇa was composed.

Diviratha I. A king born in Bharata's dynasty.

He was the grandson of Bharata and the son of Bhumanya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 24).

Diviratha II. A king. He was the son of Dadhivahana.

In the course of Parasurāma's extermination of Kṣatriyas, the sage Gautama rescued a son of Diviratha and gave shelter to him. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 80).

Divodāsa's great grandfather's father, Kāśa had many sons. They were the called the Kāśis. It was from Kāša's reign that Vāraṇaśi came to be called Kāśi. (Hari Vamsa, Chapter 29).

2) Divodāsa's Reign. When Divodāsa began his rule in Vāraṇaśi, there was a Rākṣa named Kēmaka. Divodāsa killed him and extended his kingdom. At that stage, Bhadraśrēṇya, King of Hehayas invaded Divodāsa. Divodāsa killed the hundred sons of Bhadraśrēṇya. At that time the sage Kumbhaka (Nikumbha) came to Kāśi. His practice was to live for a thousand years at any place where he reached at the time of dusk. Since he had reached Vāraṇaśi at dusk, he set up an āśrama and lived there for a thousand years. At that time there was a famine in Vāraṇaśi. The whole land was in the grip of a severe drought. Kumbhaka's āśrama and its surroundings alone remained green and cool. Herdsmen used to take cattle to graze in the neighbourhood of the āśrama. Once when they returned in the evening, they took with their cows, the sacrificial cow of Kumbhaka. It was dark and the sage searched for the cow everywhere but could not trace its whereabouts. At last he came to know by intuition that his cow was taken away by the herdsmen. In his rage he cursed that Vāraṇaśi should be ruined and left the place with his disciples. (See under Kumbhaka).

The story of the ruin of Vāraṇaśi in Harivāraṇa is different. It was the time when Śiva had married Pārvatī, the daughter of Himāvān. After marriage Śiva shifted his residence to his wife's house. Śiva whose task was to look after the affairs of the world, was never available for the purpose at Kailāsa, his own seat. The gods were in a helpless condition. They approached Pārvatī's mother, Menā and requested her to persuade Śiva to return to his own place by any means. Menā called her daughter and ridiculed her husband as a vagabond who had no place to lay his head on. Pārvatī could not bear this insult. Her mother's stinging remarks got circulation in Devaloka. So she urged Śiva to settle down somewhere on earth with her. Śiva agreed and promised to take up residence at Kāśi.

The ruler of Kāśi in those days was Divodāsa. It was a prosperous period in the country. As a rule, a man turns to God only when faced with misfortunes. So Śiva decided to bring about a famine among the people of the country by ruining it. For that he sent sage Kumbhaka to Vāraṇaśi. Kumbhaka arrived in Kāśi and appeared to the barber Karṇaka to whom he communicated Śiva's intentions. The barber cheerfully fell in with the proposal and built a temple on the next day for the residence of Kumbhaka. Living in the temple, Kumbhaka began to participate in the spiritual matters of the people. His blessings were much sought after and people came to have deep faith in him.

Divodāsa had no children. He had made many pious offerings to gods and performed many holy rites for removing his wife's sterility, but it was all in vain. At last, at the King's suggestion, she began to offer pūjā to Kumbhaka praying for issue. But even after a long period of devoted worship, she received no blessing or boon from the sage. Moved by the pathetic condition of his queen, Suyaśas, Divodāsa reproached Kumbhaka very severely. He reprimanded him for denying his blessings to the queen while he was showering them on all and sundry in the country. Provoked at the King's rebuke, Kumbhaka pronounced a curse that the country should be ruined. As a result of it the country began to decline. (Harivarṣaṇa, Chapter 29).

Śiva and Pārvatī came and settled down in Vāraṇaśi. After some years, Pārvatī began to press her husband to leave the place and to go somewhere else. Śiva was not inclined to do so. He said the place was "Avimukta" and therefore insisted that he would not leave it. From that time the place came to be called "Avimukta."

3) Other details.

Towards the end of his life Divodāsa became a Rājaśri (Royal Saint). There are numerous references to this Rājaśri in the Rgveda. Since Divodāsa was of a very hospitable nature he was known by another name, "Atithigvā". In Rgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 16th Anuvāka, 127th Sūkta, we read that once he hid himself under water to escape from an Asura called Sainbara.

(2) Divodāsa had a son named "Parucchepa", who was a Rṣi. Rgveda 1st Maṇḍala 19th Anuvāka, 127th Sūkta relates to Parucchepa.

(3) Bhimaratha, the father of Divodāsa, had two other names, Bhūmasena, and Sudeva. Divodāsa purchased Mādhavi, the daughter of Yayāti after paying two hundred Śyāmakarnāśvas (beautiful horses with dark-coloured ears) to Gālava, so that he might have children. After the birth of his children, he returned Mādhavi to her father. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117).

(4) He sits in Yama's assembly and offers Pūjā to Yama. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 12).
(5) Dvódásā once plundered the accessories of his enemies. Agnihotra vanished after it. (M.B. Sánti Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 21).

(6) It was at the behest of Indra that Dvódásā built the city of Vārāṇasi (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 16).

(7) Once Dvódásā fought with the King of Hēhaya for one thousand days. After having lost his army he went to the sage Bharadvāja and performed Putrakāmēṣṭi sacrifice. As a result of it a son Prātardana was born to him. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30).

(8) Other names for Dvódásā used in the Mahābhārata are—Bhāmaseni, Kāśīśa, Saudeva, Sudevatanaya etc.

DIVYĀDEVI. Daughter of Dvódásā, King of Plākṣadvīpā. There is a story about this princess in Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmikāhāṇḍa, Chapters 85, 88.

Dvódásā decided to give his daughter Divyā in marriage to Citrasena, King of Rūpadeva. But just before the day fixed for the marriage Citrasena died prematurely. So, as advised by the Brāhmaṇas who had come there she was married to Rūpaseṇa. He also died soon after. She was subsequently married to 21 persons in turn, and all of them died one by one.

Everyone took pity on her for her ill-fate. At last, at the suggestion of the ministers, preparations were made for her svayāvivara. Here also ill-luck pursued her. All the princes who arrived to take part in the svayāvivara killed each other in mutual fight. Depressed and embittered by all this, Divyā decided to renounce all worldly pleasures and proceeded to the forest.

Once Śūka named Ujjvala came to Plākṣadvīpā. Moved to pity at the grief-stricken Divyā he taught her “Aśūnyāsāyana” vratā. When she practised this vratā with devotion for about four years, Mahāvisṇu appeared before her and took her with him to Viṣṇuloka.

DIVYAKĀṬAM. A city situated in Western India in ancient times. According to Mahābhārata this city was conquered by Nakula—Śabhā Parva, Chapter 32.

DIVYĀKRiMĀKRT. A Viśvadeva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 33).

DIVYĀSĀNU. A Viśvadeva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 30).

DIVYĀVARSA(M). 365 days make one year for human beings. One year for human beings is one day for the gods. 365 such days of the gods make one year for the gods. This means that 365 years for human beings are equal to one year for the gods. The year for the gods is known as “Divyāvara” or “Divyavatsara”. Kṛtayuga is made up of 4,800 Divyavatsaras. Tretāyuga has 3,600 Divyavatsaras. 2,400 Divyavatsaras make up one Dvāparayuga. Kaliyuga has 1,200 Divyavatsaras.

12,000 Divyavarṣas of this kind make up one “caturyauga”. 71 Caturyaugas are the period of one Manus. After the end of the period of one Manus, the gods complete their term of existence. The total period of 14 Manus is called a Kalpa. At the end of every Kalpa there is a deluge. One Kalpa is one day time for Brahmā. After the deluge, until the time of one Kalpa, is Brahmā’s night. There is no universe at that time.

At the end of that Kalpa, the next Kalpa begins and Brahmā starts his work of creation. In this way when 360 days and nights of Brahmā are completed, it is one Brahmā Varṣa. One Brahmā life-span is 120 such years. After that there is nothing for a Brahmā’s life-span. Then Brahmā is re-born and resumes creation. (Bhāgavata, Daśaśā Skandha).

DRAUPADI. Pāncālī, the wife of the Pāṇḍavas. (See under Pāncālī).

DRAUPADĪHARANA PARVA. A sub section of Vana Parva in the Mahābhārata. This covers Chapters 262 to 271 of Vana Parva.

DRAUPADĪSATYABHĀMĀSAMVADĀ PARVA. A sub section of Vana Parva, in the Mahābhārata. This comprises Chapters 233 to 235 of Vana Parva.

DRAVIDA I. A King of the family of Priyavrata who was the son of Manu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

DRAVIDA II. A gandharva who was the father of Kaṁsa. (See under Kaṁsa) Aniśumati was the daughter of this gandharva. (See under Aniśumati).

DRAVIDA(M). (DRAVIDA). In ancient days the whole of South India was known by the name Tami-laka, as Tamil was the language used throughout South India. Strictly speaking, all the languages used in South India were given the name Tamil. The word ‘Tamil’ underwent changes in the language of North India and took the form ‘Dravid’. Etymologists are of opinion that the changes that took place in the word Tamil were as follows :- Tamil — Damil — Damiḍ — Dramiḍ — Dravid — Dravīḍ. Reference to the Dravid country occurs in most of the Purāṇas. Mahābhārata states that Sahadeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas, sent a note for collecting taxes from the people of Dravidā, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 71.

“Sthāṇā–Kṛṣṇa, the son of Droni, a gandharva. (See under Kṛṣṇa).

DRAVIDAS. It is stated in Mahābhārata (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 22) that the drāvidas were originally Kaṣṭriyas and that they became Śūdras by the curse of Brāhmaṇas.

DRAVIDA BHĀṢĀ. (Dravidian Language). Linguists have classified the languages of the world under certain groups. Important among them are the Indo-European group, the semitic group, the Hamitic group, the Ural Altaic group, the South East Asiatic group, the Dravidian group, Austric group, the Bantu group and the Chinese group. Almost all the languages in South India belong to the Dravidian group. The languages of this group are Tamil, Telugu, Kannada, Malayalam, Tulu, Kukku, Coţa, Ḍadaka, Kuruk and Brāhmi. Of these Brāhmi alone is used in the mountain regions of Balsūcīstan. Linguists like Smīmud and others have stated that there is a close relation between the Australian and Dravidian languages. The Āryan language has influenced the Dravidian languages to a great extent. But Tamil has not been so much influenced as Telugu, Kannada and Malayalam. It is because Tamil had a great wealth of literature of its own from ancient times. The Dravidian group is again divided into four sections: Eastern, Western, Northern and Southern. Brāhmi is the only language in the Northern section. Its Etymology, grammar etc. are like that of the Dravidian group. But it had been influenced to a large extent by the Iranian language. Still it keeps its Dravidian character.

Telugu, Gondi, Kuruk, Kolami, Malyā etc. come under the Eastern group. Of these only Telugu has grown as a literary language. Telugu is in use from Madras to Mahendragiri. But it has various sub-divisions and local differences. The Telugu used in the Districts of Kṛṣṇa and Godāvari is considered to be the purest form. Golarī, Sālevāri, Kāmāri, Vāsāri, Dāsāri etc. are its local sub-divisions. Over modern Telugu, Sanskrit has its full sway.

Kanna, Kūṭaku, Toṭa, Koça etc. come under the western group. Kanna is used in Mysore and the vicinity of the Districts of Coimbatore, Salem, Bellary, Anantapole etc. Baṣāka used in the Nilgiris, Kurumpa, used in the vicinity of Nilgiris, Kūṭaku used in Coorg, are the sub-divisions of Kanna. In edicts from the 5th century Kanna could be seen in its ancient form. The modern Kanna has been used from 10th century onwards. Tula is in use in places between the rivers Candragiri in the south of Southern Canara and Kālīpāparī. Child's few ancient songs could be included in Tula mantra. The Mahāsāman script is used to write Tula. But now certain books in Tula have been published using Kanna script.

Tamil and Malayālam are the languages of the Southern section. The oldest literature in the Dravidian group is in Tamil. The most ancient form of Tamil is seen in the edicts and stone tables of the 30th century B.C. The most important among them are the Saṅga works. The grammatical work ‘Tolkāppiyam’, is the literary grammar of Centamil. Malayālam became an independent language only by the 8th century A.D. The close relation that exists between Tamil and Malayālam is not visible in any other language of the Dravidian group. By examining the inter-relations of the various languages in the Dravidian group, and noting how close or distant the relation is, we can ascertain which languages separated themselves first from the original Dravida language.

DRAVINASA. A Pracetas. (One of the ten sons of the Prācīna Barhis). (Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

DRAVIRATHA. A King of the family of Aṅga. He was the son of Dādhivāhāna and the father of Dₕhₕₐmaraṭha (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

DRAVYASUDDHI. Purifying impure things, The mode of purification of impure things, in ancient India, was known as dravyasuddhi. The procedure of purification was as follows:

If earthen-wares became impure by coming into contact with urine or excreta, they should be burnt in fire. Golden or copper vessels may be remoulded or filled with or dipped in tamarind water. Things made of iron or bronze may be washed in ash-water. Things made of glass or pearl need only be washed in pure water. Things born in water such as lotus etc. could be purified by dipping them in water. If cloth is made impure rub it with soil and dip it in water. If it is a large quantity of cloth, a mixture of soil and water may be sprinkled on it. Woody things will become pure by planing. Cot, chair, fan etc. need only be washed. Pots used for cooking meat may be touched with cow's milk. Things made of ivory may be washed in mustard-water. Jaggery, salt etc. need only be dried. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 156).

DRDHAYU I. (DRDHAVAṀĀN). One of the hundred sons of Dḥṛtarāṣṭra. Bṛhmaṇa killed him in the great war. (Dṛṇa Parva, Chapter 137).

DRDHAYU II. (DRDHAKSATRA). One of the hundred sons of Dḥṛtarāṣṭra. Bṛhmaṇa killed him. (Dṛṇa Parva, Chapter 157).

DRDHADHANA. A King of the Pṛu dynasty. He was present on the occasion of Pāṇīcāli's svayānavara. (Aṇi Parva, Chapter 105. Verse 15).

DRDHASTHA. One of the hundred sons of Dḥṛtarāṣṭra. (Aṇi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 102).

DRDHAKSATRA. See Drdha II.

DRDHANEMI. A King of the Pṛu dynasty. He was the son of Satyaḥri and father of Supārśva. (Bhāgavata, Daśāma Skandha).

DRDHARTHARĀ. (DRDHARTHARĀ). One of the 100 sons of Dḥṛtarāṣṭra killed in the great war by Bṛhmaṇa. (Dṛṇa Parva, Chapter 157).

DRDHARTHARĀ II. One of the kings, who should be remembered both at dawn and before sun-set. (Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 52).

DRDHARTHĀŚRĀYA. See Drdharaṭha I.

DRDHASANDHA. (SATRUNDAYA). One of the 100 sons of Dḥṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed in the great war by Bṛhmaṇa. (Dṛṇa Parva Chapter 137, Verse 20).

DRDHASENA. A King of the Yayāti dynasty. He fought in the great war on the side of the Pāṇḍavas and was killed by Dṛṇa. (Dṛṇa Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 52).

DRDHĀŚYA. A famous king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He was the son of Kuvalayāśva who had 21,000 sons. All those sons but three were killed in the fight with an asura called Dhundhu. The three sons who survived the killing were Drdhāśva, Kapilāśa and Candrāśa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 204).

DRDHASYU. A son born to Agastya mahārṣi by Lopāmundrā. He was born only after remaining in the mother's womb for seven years. He was a very great scholar and tapasvi. He began studying the Vedas from the very time of his birth. He is called Idhma-vāha also. (See Idhma-vāha).

DRDHAVAṀĀ I. See Drdha I.

DRDHAVAṀĀ II. A King. Kadaligārbhā was the name of his wife. (See under Kadaligārbhā).

DRDHAVAṬ. A mahārṣi. He was one of the seven Rīvks of Dharmarājā. Unmuca, Pramucu, Ātreya, Drdhavya, Ārdhahvābhu, Tṛṣāsoma and Aṅgiras were the seven Rīvks. (Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 34).

DRDHAVRATA. A brahmārṣi who lived in South India. (Śaṅti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 28).

DRDHAYU I. Son born to King Pururavas by Urvaśī. (Aṇi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 25).

DRDHAYU II. A King who lived in North India during the time of the great war. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 23).

DRDHAYU III. A brahmārṣi of South India. He is known as Drdhavya and Drdhavrata also (Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 40).

DRDHAYUḌHA. (CITRAYUḌHA). One of the 100 sons of Dḥṛtarāṣṭra killed in the great war. (Dṛṇa Parva, Chapter 136, Verse 20).
DRDHEYU. A maharshi who lived in the western part of India. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 36).

DRDHEŚṬADHI. A King in ancient India. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 238).

DRONA I. The teacher in archery of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas.

1) Birth. Droṇa was the son of Bharadvāja who had his hermitage erected on the bank of the Ganges. Once Bharadvāja went to bathe in the river. When he got into the river he saw the celestial maid Gṛhṭācī. The celestial maid ran away as soon as she saw the hermit. But her cloth was caught in grass and slipped off her body. When the hermit saw the complete form of her body which was bright and beautiful, he had seminal discharge. The discharged semen was kept in a Droṇa (trough). A child was born from that and he was named Droṇa, who was brought up in the hermitage. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 13).

2) Education and Marriage. Droṇa learned the art of using weapons from his father and the hermit Agniveśa. Drupada the prince of Pāncāla was the fellow student of Droṇa. They became great friends. On completion of education Drupada returned to Pāncāla. Droṇa married Kṛṣṇa the daughter of Saradvān. A son was born to them. At his birth the child neighed like the horse Uccaiṣṭhravas; so his parents named him Aśvatthāmā. Hearing that Paraśurāma was giving Brāhmaṇas free gift of wealth and property, Droṇa reached there. Droṇa’s desire was to get Dhanurveda (the art of archery). Droṇa with his disciples went to Mahendragiri and saw Paraśurāma, who was about to enter forest giving away everything he had. Paraśurāma said, “I have given away to the Brāhmaṇas free gift and everything I had. The land I had conquered is given to Kaśyapa. Now there remains only my body and some weapons. You can have one of them.” Droṇa preferred the weapons. Thus Droṇa got the entire armoury of Paraśurāma. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 13).

3) He became the teacher of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas. After receiving dhanurveda from Paraśurāma Droṇa went to Pāncāla. Drupada who had been a fellow student of Droṇa was the King of Uttarapāncāla. Then. Though Droṇa had become proficient in archery, he was very poor. He had no money even to buy milk for his child. Once the playmates of Aśvatthāmā made him drink a mixture of water and flour saying that it was milk. So Droṇa approached Drupada for financial help. But Drupada shunned his fellow student, scolded him and sent him away without giving any help. Droṇa vowed that he would, somehow or other, take revenge upon Drupada and departed from Pāncāla. The aim of Droṇa was to get some capable disciples. He reached Hastināpur and stayed in disguise with Gautama for a while. Once the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas who were boys were engaged in the game of Kāra (a kind of cricket play) outside the palace premises. The ball fell in a well by chance. The princess stood round the well and began to ponder how to get the ‘ball’ out of the well. They tried all means but in vain. At that time a Brāhmaṇa of dark complexion, short and aged, came by that way. It was Droṇa. The boys gathered round the old man. Droṇa threw his ring also into the well and said; “Your kingly qualities are very poor. Your education in using weapons is not complete. If you give me a meal I will get both the ring and the ball together” The boys agreed to the conditions. Droṇa took a grass and evoked arrow into it by mantra (spell) and shot it at the ‘Kāra’. The next grass was shot at the first grass. It struck the first grass. Thus he shot grasses one after another till the grass reached the brink of the well and by pulling the grass he took the ball out. In the same way he took the ring also out of the well. When they got the ‘Kāra’ the boys stood round Droṇa and asked him what he would like as the reward for his deed. Droṇa said that they need only tell Bhīṣma how a short man of dark complexion took the ball out of the well. Accordingly the boys went to Bhīṣma and told him everything. Immediately Bhīṣma understood that it was Droṇa. Bhīṣma thought that Droṇa was the best person to teach the princes. So Droṇa was brought to the palace and was engaged as the teacher in archery. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 130 and 131).

4) Education in Archery of the Kauravas and reward.
(a) First vow. Droṇa asked the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas to sit together and then told them, “There is one thing that you should do for me when your education is over”. Hearing this they all kept silent. But Arjuna came forward and took the vow that he would achieve that task according to the wish of the teacher.
(b) The disciple who is second to none. The training in weapons commenced. Hearing of the fame of Droṇa, disciples came from places far and near. Arjuna was the first of all the students. Sending all the students to fetch water Droṇa taught his son Aśvatthāmā certain special lessons. Arjuna secretly knew this. So he brought water as quickly as possible before the others. As Droṇa loved his brilliant student Arjuna, he taught both his son and Arjuna alike the secrets. Seeing the brilliance of Arjuna Droṇa ordered the cook not to seat Arjuna in a dark place for meals. Yet it happened once that the light was extinguished by wind while the princes were having their meals. All sat still, without eating, while Arjuna alone ate his food. From this Arjuna discovered that without seeing the object one could hit the target by constant practice. Droṇa was greatly pleased at this and embracing him promised to try to make him such an expert that there would be none equal to him in archery.
(c) Ekalavya. Once Arjuna and the other disciples went to the forest for a hunt and there they met Ekalavya who was superior to Arjuna in archery. This Ekalavya had once approached Droṇa to learn archery from him. But it was against the rule for a Brahmin to teach a forester the art of fighting. So Ekalavya returned to the forest and making an earthen image of Droṇa worshipped it and began self-learning in archery. Now he had become superior to Arjuna in archery. The teacher had said that none would be equal to Arjuna in archery. Arjuna told Droṇa about Ekalavya. The teacher went to the forest and got the thumb of Ekalavya as the reward due to the teacher. Since then Ekalavya became a great archer though only of a lower level than Arjuna (See under Ekalavya).
(d) Expert disciple. The education in archery and the use of weapons was nearing completion. In archery Arjuna was second to none. Duryodhana and Bhīma were in the uppermost in the mind of Droṇa.
became expert club-men. Asvathāmā was the first in the secrets of archery. Nakula and Sahadeva became expert swordsmen. Arjuna was expert in all branches of weapon-training. Bliima had bodily strength and Arjuna had the strength of learning. Yudhishthira was the foremost in chariot-fighting.

c) Artificial bird. Once Drona placed an artificial bird on the branch of a tree without the knowledge of the princes, to test their practice in archery. Then he placed his disciples with their bows, around the tree, and told them to shoot the bird down at his command. Drona first called Dharmaputra and told him to look at the bird. Then he asked him what he saw. Dharmaputra said that he saw the bird, the tree, the teacher and the students. He tested one by one. All gave the same reply, that Dharmaputra gave. At last he asked Arjuna. Arjuna stood for a while, taking aim and said that he saw a bird only. The teacher commanded to shoot and Arjuna sent an arrow. At the first shot the bird fell down headless. With this test Drona understood that Arjuna could defeat Drupada and embraced his disciple.

f) Drona caught by a crocodile. Once Drona and his disciples went to bathe in the Ganges. While they were dipping and splashing in the water a crocodile caught Drona by the leg. Drona was unable to extricate himself from the grip of the crocodile. So he asked his disciples to shoot the crocodile and kill it. All stood agape. Arjuna at once took bow and arrows and sent five arrows one after another at the crocodile, which died instantly and came afloat. The teacher, who was much pleased, got out of the water and embraced Arjuna and taught him 'Brahma Śirāstṛa', a divine weapon. After imparting this knowledge Drona told Arjuna not to operate this weapon on man. But if an enemy superior to man attacked him, then only, he should send this missile at him to kill him.

Giving due respect to the advice of the teacher, Arjuna received the Brahmatirāstra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 133).

g) Demonstration by the pupils. When the training of the princes terminated, Dhṛtarāṣṭra accorded sanction to hold a demonstration of weapon-play, by the princes. An arena was got ready. Drona entered the arena. As a preliminary rite Drona worshipped the gods. Then he invited Brāhmaṇas to bless his pupils. After that the pupils gave the teacher, gold, precious stones, clothes, and other costly things. The princes paid homage to their teacher. The teacher gave his blessings to them. With this the demonstration commenced. Clubbing between Duryodhana and Bliima was a terrible one. But the mock fighting changed to a serious fight. Drona sent Asvathāmā who separated them. The audience applauded their performance. The performance of Arjuna was of the most superior type and the audience and the teacher were struck with wonder at his extraordinary capability. Karna also showed his performance. (For details see under Arjuna, Para 1 and Karna, Para 4). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 133 and 134).

5) Revenge upon Drupada. When demonstration came to an end it was the time for giving the teacher the gift due to him. The teacher had, at the beginning, told his pupils that on completion of the training they should give him a gift. Accordingly he demanded that Drupada, the King of Pāṇcāla, should be brought before him with his hands tied. As soon as Duryodhana and Karna heard this they rapidly marched to Pāṇcāla and engaged Drupada in a fight but were defeated by Drupada. After that Arjuna entered the battle-field, defeated and tied Drupada and brought him before Droṇa who was kind enough not to kill Drupada. The Kingdom of Pāṇcāla was divided into two. Drupada was given Uttara-Pāṇcāla and Droṇa took Dakṣiṇa Pāṇcāla. Then Drupada was released. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 137).

6) Arjuna is accorded sanction to fight with his teacher. One year after the revenge on Drupada Yudhishthira was anointed as heir-apparent, by Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Once, in the council of the king, Droṇa called Arjuna to him and said: "Oh, Arjuna! you must take an oath to do a particular thing in the presence of your relatives. If it happens that I oppose you in battle you should fight against me without thinking that I am your teacher. This oath is your gift to your teacher." Arjuna agreed and took the oath in the presence of the people. Because there was such an oath Arjuna's conscience did not prick him when he had to fight against his teacher Droṇa in the battle of Bhārata between the Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 139).

7) Part played by Droṇa up to the battle of Bhārata.

(1) Duryodhana and his party came to know only at the time of the svayamvara (marriage) of Pāṇcāla that the Pāṇḍavas were not killed in the lac house burning. When Arjuna won the test and got Pāṇcāla, the Kauravas became furious and began to plot against the Pāṇḍavas. At that time Droṇa came to the council-hall of the Kauravas and said that the Kauravas should go to Pāṇcāla and greet the Pāṇḍavas, bring them back and give them half of the kingdom. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 203).

(2) Droṇa was present at the sacrifice of Rājaśīya (imperial consecration) performed by Yudhishthira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 8).

(3) When the game of dice was going on between Sakuni and Yudhishthira Droṇa came with Dhrtrarāṣṭra to the place to witness the game. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 60, Stanza 2).

(4) Droṇa declared that the game of dice between Sakuni and Yudhishthira was not fair. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 2).

(5) Droṇa was well-versed in archery. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 37, Stanza 4).

(6) While the Pāṇḍavas were living in the country of Virāta, Arjuna in the guise of Bhāhannala, fought with the Kauravas. Droṇa was the first to recognize Bhāhannala as Arjuna at the sound of his conch. (M.B. Virāta Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 24).

(7) In that fight Droṇa fought with Arjuna whose arrows wounded Droṇa and he ran away from the battlefield. (M.B. Vīra Parva, Chapter 58).

(8) When Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to the council-hall of the Kauravas to plead for a treaty on behalf of the Pāṇḍavas who had returned after forest life and pseudonymity, Droṇa took the side of the Pāṇḍavas and argued with Duryodhana. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 126).

(9) Droṇa advised Dhṛtarāṣṭra to see that a battle between the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas was avoided. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, two Chapters from 130).

(10) When it was almost decided that the battle was inevitable Droṇa boasted to Duryodhana that he would annihilate the army of the Pândavas within a month. (M. B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 193, Stanza 18).
8) Why Drona, whose leaning was towards the Pândavas, took the side of the Kauravas in the battle of Bhārata. At heart Drona was on the side of the Pândavas. But he fought against them, taking the side of the Kauravas. Even at that time he ardently wished the Pândavas to win the battle. What is the reason for it? An answer to this question is found in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 43. The battle was about to begin. Dharmaputra went to Drona and bowed before him and requested to bless him so that he might win the battle against the Kauravas. Drona said, “It is good on your part to have come and seen me before the battle is begun. If you had not seen me I would have cursed you to lose the battle. But today I am honoured since you have come. You fight the battle. Victory is yours. But I have to stand with the Kauravas, and there is a reason for it. Man is a slave of money and money is not the slave of Man. The Kauravas have tied me with money’. Śrī Kṛṣṇa will be on the side of the righteous. Where Śrī Kṛṣṇa is, there will be victory. But so long as I fight it is difficult for you to win. So try to kill me at the beginning of the battle. You need not feel sorry for killing your teacher. Because when I shower arrows and fight vehemently I won’t look to see which enemy has struck me down. Enemies could kill me only when I am lying on darbha grass leaving fighting in disappointment. I will put down my weapons in battle only when I hear words which I dislike to hear.”

After having revealed these secrets of his own he sent Yudhīṣṭhīra back. (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 43).
9) Drona in the battle of Bhārata. (1) On the first day of the battle Drona fought in a combat with Dhrūṣṭadyumna, who was defeated. (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 77, Stanza 69).
(2) Drona killed Saṅkha the son of King Virāta. (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 23).
(3) Drona became unconscious by the clubbing of Bhīmaśena. (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 19).
(4) Drona fought with Arjuna. (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 102, Stanza 6).
(6) There was a fight between Drona and Yudhīṣṭhīra (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 17).
(7) Drona combated with Dhrūṣṭadyumna. (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 116, Stanza 45).
(8) He became the commander-in-general after the fall of Bhīma. (M. B. Drona Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 5).
(9) He gave Duryodhana a boon to catch Yudhīṣṭhīra alive. (M. B. Drona Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 20).
(10) He killed Yugandhara. (M. B. Drona Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 31).
(11) Vyāghradatta and Sinhasena were killed by Drona. (M. B. Drona Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 37).
(12) In the fight which followed Arjuna and his army were driven back by Drona. (M. B. Drona Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 50).

1. “Man is slave to wealth, wealth is slave to none. This is true of King. The Kauravas have bound me with wealth. I am telling you this without shame. You only require battle. I will fight for the Kauravas and wish for your victory.”
DROṆA II

251

(41) Drona killed the King of Hşaya, all the sons of Dhṛṣṭadyumna, and the King Sibí. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 155, Stanza 14).

(42) He became unconscious in the fight with Yudhishthira. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 162, Stanza 49).

(43) He killed Drupada and Virāja, the grandsons of Drupada. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 33).

(44) Hearing that Aśvatthāmā had been killed he was filled with grief. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 190, Stanza 57).

(45) After that throwing away the weapons, he immersed in a deep meditation and attained harmony with the Supreme Being and his spirit entered the realm of Brahman. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 192, Stanza 43).

(46) Thus by the power of meditation his spirit went to heaven and the body without spirit sat motionless in meditation. Dhṛṣṭadyumna cut off his head and thus killed Drona. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 193, Stanza 62).

10 Other details. (1) Vyāsa evoked the spirits of those who died in the battle of Bhārata to the surface of the Ganges. The spirit of Drona was one of them. (M.B. Aśramavāśika Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 7).

(2) Offerings were given to the manes for Drona. (M.B. Śaṇti Parva, Chapter 296, Stanza 15).

(3) Drona attained heaven after his death, and was absorbed in Bṛhaspati. (M.B. Svargaśroha Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 21).

(4) He was the man who took birth through Bharadvaja from a portion of Bṛhaspati. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 69).

(5) Ācārya (teacher), Ācārya-mukhya (chief teacher) Bharadvaja, Bharadvājasa, Bharadvājajīva, Bharatācārya, Sopāśva, Sopāsvavāhā, Sōnahaya, Guru and Rukmaratha are used as synonyms of Drona by Vyāsa in Mahābhārata.

DROṆA II. A bird. A son born to the hermit Mandalpāla of Jaritā, a bird. (See under Khaṇḍavadāhā, Para 8).

DROṆĀM. A medicinal herb. (See under Maruttvāmala).

DROṆĀBHĪSEKAPARVA. A subsection of DronaParva: Chapters 1 to 16.

DROṆA PARVA. An important Parva (section) in the Mahābhārata.

DROṆAVADHAPARVA. A sub section of Drona Parva: Chapters 154 to 192.

DROṆAŚARMAPADA. A holy bath (tīrtha). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 28).

DṚṢADVĀN. Father-in-law of King Sāmyāti of Pūru dynasty, Varāṇgi was the name of Sāmyāti’s wife. (See Sāmyāti).

DṚṢADVATI. A river to the south of Kuruksetra. During their exile in the forest the Pāṇḍavas drank water from it. (Vana Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 2). It was on the delta of this river that Śiva imparted advice to Yudhishthira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 78, Verse 15).

Living on the northern bank of this river is equal to living in Sarga. (Vana Parva, Chapter 88). To perform bali and other rites for the souls of the dead after bathing in the river is as efficacious as performing the Agniṣṭoma Yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 88).

DRŚṬAKETU. A dānava. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 8).

2) Education and kingship. Yajñasaṇa went to the hermitage of Bharadvaja for education. Drupada, who became a great teacher in archery later, was also a student and disciple of Bharadvaja at that time. Thus during the time of education both Drupada and Drona became fast friends. After receiving education Drupada returned to his country. At that time Pāṇcāla was ruled by Pṛṣata. When Yajñasaṇa returned on completion of his education, Pṛṣata died and Yajñasaṇa was anointed as King of Uttara-Pāṇcāla. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 129).

3) Yajñasaṇa reproaches Drona. It has already been said that during the period of education Drona and Yajñasaṇa were fast friends. Once Drupada said to Drona: “My dear friend. My father has told me that I would be made the King of Uttara-Pāṇcāla on completing my education. Thus if I become a King, the treasury of the King will be at your disposal.”

After the education both returned to their places. Not much later Drona got married. A son born to him was named Āśvatthāmā. Drona was so poor that he could not even buy milk for his child. Once the friends of Āśvatthāmā mixed flour in water and made him drink it saying that it was milk. Āśvatthāmā drank it without knowing that it was not milk. Thinking that he had become energetic by drinking milk he began to run with the other boys. At last they told him the truth and teased him.

With his wife and child Drona went to Drupada who did not care to recognize him as a friend. Drona tried to remind him of their former friendship. But Drupada shunned him and said, “If I had friendship with you, it was to achieve certain ends. There is no friendship between the rich and the poor, the learned and the illiterate, the brave and the coward. So if there was any friendship at all it was not real. You, who are slow of brain! Kings of high status cannot have friendship with such people especially the poor. A Brahmin learned in Vedas won’t befriend a Brahmin who is not learned in Vedas, a man seated in a chariot cannot befriend a man who is not seated in a chariot and a King cannot befriend one who is not a King. So a friendship of bygone days is no friendship at all”. Drupada’s reproaches aroused a storm of anger in Drona. He vowed that he would avenge the insult. With his wife and child he got out of the palace. He wandered about in search of disciples who were capable of confronting with Drupada. At last he came to Hastinapura and became the teacher of the Pândavas and the Kauravas. (M.B. Ádi Parva, Chapter 130).

4) The revenge of Droña. Droña told Bhiṣma about his dealings with Drupada. Bhiṣma consoled Droña. Before the commencement of the training in archery, Droña told his disciples: "When your training in archery is completed you will have to do a favour to your teacher". All stood agape. But Arjuna came forward and said: "I will do". Droña embraced Arjuna. The training commenced. The Andhakas, Vṛṣṇis and others joined his school of archery.

The training in archery came to an end. Droña called his disciples and told them that Drupada should be tied with a rope and placed before him. When they heard the words of the teacher, Duryodhana, Karna, Yu-yutsu, Duṣṣāsana, Vikarna, Jarāsandha and Sulocana led the Kauravas to Pāṇḍāla. Arjuna knew that the Kauravas would not be able to defeat Drupada. He told the teacher that when the Kauravas returned without achieving the task, he himself would go and bring Drupada. After a terrible battle the Kauravas were defeated by the Pāṇḍālas. After that Arjuna confronted Drupada. Nakula and Sahadeva stood as guards of the wheels. Bhiṣmasena with his club stood in front of the army. Arjuna drove the chariot right in the midst of the Pāṇḍāla army. Bhima took his club and a terrible battle ensued. Arjuna shattered the Pāṇḍāla army, bound Drupada and took him to Droña.

The teacher looked at Drupada and reproached him with scornful word: "I have destroyed your country. Now you are at my mercy. Is not the former friendship a friendship?" Drupada requested that they should be friends in future. Accordingly Drupada was set free. The country of Pāṇḍāla was divided into two, and giving Utara Pāṇḍāla to Drupada, Droña took Daksīṇa Pāṇḍāla. Thus because of the revenge of Droña, Drupada lost half of his kingdom. (M.B. Ádi Parva, Chapter 137).

5) Birth of Children. Though Droña and Drupada were on friendly terms Drupada did not forget the defeat he had incurred at the hands of Droña. So, Drupada desired to have a son who would become powerful enough to take revenge on Droña. He began to think of ways and means. He consulted several learned Brahmins. At that time two hermit brothers yāja and Upayāja lived on the bank of the Ganges. The King approached them and requested their help to obtain a son, who would kill Droña, and promised to give them cows and other precious things in return. At first they refused to help him. The King served Upayāja for a year, and pleased him. He sent the King to the hermitage of Yāja. They accepted the request of the King. Both the hermits performed a sacrifice for Drupada. A boy and a girl arose from the sacrificial fire. The boy was named Dhrṣṭadyumna and the girl was named Kṛṣṇā (Pāṇḍāli). There was a celestial voice that the boy would kill Droña when he grew up. (M.B. Ádi parva, Chapter 167).

6) The marriage of Pāṇḍāli. Pāṇḍāli grew up. Drupada desired to give her in marriage to Arjuna. But at that time the lac-house caught fire and the Pāṇḍavas disappeared. Drupada set certain tests in the Svayamvara of Pāṇḍāli with a view to ascertain if Arjuna was alive. The Pāṇḍavas came to the svayamvara and Drupada found out Arjuna. But Drupada did not like the idea of his daughter becoming the wife of more than one husband. Then Vyāsa appeared there and informed Drupada of the previous births of the Pāṇḍavas and Pāṇḍāli. Drupada was much pleased and he gave the Pāṇḍavas a good deal of wealth and sent Pāṇḍāli with them. (M.B. Ádi Parva, Chapter 196).

7) Other details (1) Drupada was present at the marriage of Abhimanyu, celebrated at the city of Upaplayya (M.B. Virāta Parva, Chapter 72, Stanza 17).

(2) Drupada gave the Pāṇḍavas an aksāvānijī, (division 21870 elephants, 21870 chariots, 65610 horses, 109350 footmen) of army for the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 57).

(3) At the battle of Bhārata, Drupada was appointed as one of the seven commanders on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 157, Stanza 11).

(4) Drupada fought with Jayadratha on the first day of the battle of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 55).

(5) Drupada was defeated in a combat with Droña the teacher. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 48).

(6) Drupada combated with Aśvatthāmā. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 16).

(7) He fought with Bhagadatta. (M.B. Droña Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 40).

(8) He fought with Bālhiika. (M.B. Droña Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 18).

(9) He was defeated by Pṛṣata. (M.B. Droña Parva, Chapter 138, Stanza 24).

(10) Droña the teacher killed Drupada. (M.B. Droña Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 43).

(11) The Pāṇḍavas gave offerings to the manes for Drupada. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 42, Stanza 5).

(12) Vyāsa evoked the spirits of the dead to the surface of the Ganges, after the Battle of Bhārata came to an end. Drupada also was there among the spirits which appeared on the Ganges. (M.B. Śrāmanavāsika Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 8).

(13) After death Drupada entered heaven and was absorbed in Viśvadevas. (M.B. Svargarohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 15).

(14) It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ádi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 68, that Drupada was born from a portion of the Marudgaṇas.

8) Synonyms of Drupada. Pāṇḍāla, Pāṇḍāliya, Pāṇḍālarajā, Pāṛṣṭa, Prṣṭṭātmajā, Saumaki, Yajūnasena, Drupada are his synonyms.

DRUMA I. A King in ancient Bhārata. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Ádi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 233.

DRUMA II. In Mahābhārata, Chapter 67, Stanza 8, King Druma, who was the rebirth of the asura Śibi, is mentioned.

DRUMA III. The leader of the Kinnaras (heavenly musicians). M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 29. He sits in the Durbar of Kubera (God of wealth) and sings. He was the teacher of Rukmin, the son of Bhīṣma and he gave a bow to his pupil Rukmin. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158.)

DRUMASENA I. A Kṣatriya King. He was born from a portion of an Asura called Gaviṣṭha. (M.B. Ádi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 55). He stood as guard of the wheel of Śalya and was killed by Yudhiṣṭhīra in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B.Śalya Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 53.)

DRUMASENA II. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed by Drūṣṭadyumna the son of Drupada. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 170, Stanza 22.)

DRUHYU I. A son of King Yayāti. Two sons, Yadu and Turvasu were born to Yayāti, the son of Nahuṣa, by his wife Devayāni and three sons Druhyu, Anudruhyu and Pāru by his wife Śarmiṣṭhā. Druhyu was cursed by his father because he did not comply with the request of his father to exchange his old age with the youth of his son. The curse was that his desires would not be realized, that he would stay in places where he would not like to stay, that his kingdom would be lost and that he would be called Bhoja. (Sec under Yayāti.)

DRUHYU II. A son of Matināra, a King of the Pāru dynasty. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 14).

DUHKHA (M). Agni Purāṇa tells the following about the origin of Duḥkham.

Hīṁsā (violence) is the wife of Adharma (unrighteousness). To the couple were born two daughters called Anṛta (falsehood) and Niṅkṣta (fraud) and from them were born the daughters Bhīṣa (fear) Naraka (hell) Māyā (illusion) and Vedanan (pain). Māyā brought forth Mṛtyu (death), the annihilator of all living objects, and Vedanan, from Raurava (a particular hell) brought forth Duḥkha (sorrow, grief). From Mṛtyu were born Jāti (caste), Jara (wrinkles), Soka (sorrow), Trṣṇā (covetousness) and Krodha (anger). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19.)

DULİDUHA. A King in ancient India. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 233.)

DUMUDHA. A snake. Sage Sahasrapāda became the snake as a result of a curse. For details see under Sahasrapāda.

DUNDUBHI I. A terrible asura, son of Maya and brother of Māyāvi.

1) Birth. Dānavas were the offsprings of Kaśyapa, grandson of Brahmā and son of Marici by his wife Danu, daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. Maya, chief among the Dānavas earned great reputation as a unique architect. Once Maya attended a dance programme in devaloka where he fell in love with Hema dancing with the deva-women. When the dance was over Maya told Hema about his love for her. Hema too had fallen in love with Maya. And they left the place in secret and reached the southern slope of the Himālayas where they built a beautiful city called Hemapura and they lived there. Ere long they had two sons, Dundubhi and Māyāvi, both of them equally distinguished in prowess. (Uttararāmāyaṇa.)

2) Dundubhi’s relati nship with Rāvaṇa. Maya did tapas for a daughter in the western plains of Mount Kailāsa. One of those days Pārvatī went out of Kailāsa to feed brahmans in celebration of the birthday of Subrahmapāya. In the absence of Pārvatī a deva woman called Madhūrā who had observed the Ṣomavāравrata came to Kailāsa to salute Mahādeva (Śiva) who enjoyed her for some time. On her return to Śiva Pārvatī noticed ashes worn by him transferred to the breasts of Madhūrā. Drawing the natural inference from this Pārvatī got angry and cursed Madhūrā to be transformed into a frog. Then Śiva blessed her that she would regain her former self after twelve years and have a heroic husband. Madhūrā who was thus turned into a frog fell into a well close to where Maya was engaged in tapas. And, after twelve years, the frog regained its former form and became Madhūrā again. Maya, who saw her adopted her as daughter and brought her up as such calling her Mandodari. Mandodari became Rāvāṇa’ wife and thus Dundubhi became the brother-in-law of Rāvāṇa.

3) Dundubhi grew up. The following is told about Dundubhi in Canto I, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa of Vālmiki Rāma yan. As beautiful and majestic as the peak of Mount Kailāsa, the heroic Dundubhi possessed the form of the buffalo. And, he had the strength of a thousand elephants. Proud and haughty over his own prowess and losing his head over the boon he had received from God, Dundubhi went to fight with the ocean, the lord of rivers. (It was Śiva who gave him boons. See M.B. Anuśāsaṇa Parva, Chapter 11.)

4) Fight with Bālī and death. Haughty almost to madness over the unrivalled strength and prowess he got as the result of the boon, Dundubhi went about challenging whomsoever he met for a fight. But none dared to accept the challenge. Then he went to the sea-shore and challenged Vāruṇa, who, appearing on the crest of the waves said: "I am not strong and powerful enough to fight with you. Only Himavān can do that. So, please go north." Accordingly Dundubhi went north to Himavān and challenged him in great rage. Himavān clad in his neat and white apparel appeared and spoke in humble tones: "Oh mighty Dānava; I am not accustomed to fighting war. My job is only to arrange necessary convenience to saints and sages. But, there is in southern India a very powerful monkey called Bālī, who is the King of Kiṣkindhā, and Bālī alone can combat with you.

And, Dundubhi accordingly went southward to Kiṣkindhā and challenged Bālī. Terrible as the dark clouds in the sky the dānava who possessed the body and horns of the buffalo—began roaring like hell at the tower gates of Kiṣkindhā, uprooting trees with his horn and tearing the earth with his hoofs. Disturbed by the noise Bālī along with his wife Tārā came out of the palace, and said to Dundubhi: "Look here, please, I am only a King of the monkeys. Why should you, who are so very strong smash my tower?" but, these soft words of Bālī only kindled Dundubhi’s anger all the more and his challenges became the fiercer. Then did Bālī, wearing the golden chain given by Indra, rush forth to engage Dundubhi in mortal duel in which the former began gaining more and more strength while the latter got weaker and weaker. Dundubhi took to flight in the skies to save his life. But, the moon dawned then and in the moonlight Bālī and his brother Sugrīva followed Dundubhi, who entered a terrible cave covered by something like a forest of grass. After stationing Sugrīva at the opening of the cave Bālī followed Dundubhi into the cave. Sugrīva waited there one year for the return of Bālī from the cave when one day he witnessed foaming blood flow out of the mouth of the cave, and mistakenly believing that Bālī was dead he closed the mouth of the cave with a huge stone and returned home. But, Bālī, who had by then killed Dundubhi kicked off the stone and came out of the cave and followed Sugrīva in a rage. From that day onwards Sugrīva lived at the Śrīya-mūka mountain where Bālī had no admission. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiśkindhā Kāṇḍa, Cantos 9, 11, 46).

5) Curse on Bālī due to the blood of Dundubhi. During Bālī’s duel with Dundubhi blood from the body of the latter spurted out to the skies, and it also fell in the hermitage of Nātaiga at Śrīyaṁuka where the sage Mataiga was performing tapas. Angered at this the sage cursed him whoever he might be, who was responsible for blood falling in his āśrama, with death by his head getting broken if he mounted Śrīyaṁuka. Sugrīva took shelter there because of this curse on Bālī. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiśkindhā Kāṇḍa, Canto 11)

DUNDUBHĪ II. See under Māntharā.

DUNDUBHINHĪRĀDA. A powerful Rākṣasa, who was the son of Dīti and the uncle of Prahlāda. When, in the fierce fight between the devas and the asuras the latter got absolutely defeated this Rākṣasa ascribed the reason for the failure to the brahmans and began killing them. He captured the Kāśi temple and many other temples like it. In the circumstances Śiva gave refuge to the brahmans of Kāśi, and the Rākṣasa was destroyed by Śivasakti. (Śivarudrasanhitā, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Chapter 58).

DUNDUBHĪSVAṆA(M). A particular Place in Kuśa island. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 13).

DURĀDHA. (DURĀDHĀRA, DURDHARA). One of the hundred sons of Dhrītarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīma. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 135, Verse 36).

DURĀDHĀRA. See under Durādha.

DURĀSĀDA. A son of Bhāmasūra. He learned Paucākśarī vidyā from Śiva and used to repeat it. Please at this Śiva gave him all the boons he wanted with the result that he lost his head and began troubling everybody. When thus unrest and injustices increased in the world Dhūruṇḍhi, the son of Śakti killed him. (Gaṇeśa Purāṇa, Chapter 38, 42).

DURDAMA. Son of a Gandharva called Viśvāvasu. The following story about him is told in the Skanda Purāṇa, Chapters 1, 3 and 4).

While maharṣis like Vasiṣṭha and Atri were once engaged in the worship of Lord Śiva at Mount Kailāśa, Durdama, with his thousands of wives came there. In the Hālāyatārtha near-by they got entering in water sports with their bodies stark naked. On seeing their naked sports Vasiṣṭha cursed Durdama to be turned into a Rākṣasa. When his wives begged of Vasiṣṭha for redemption from the curse he told them that seventeen years thence Durdama would regain his old form. Durdama thus turned Rākṣasa tried once to devour sage Gālava when the Sūdrasana Čakra of Viśṇu killed him. He regained his old form and returned to Gandharvaloka.

DURDHARŚĀNA. (Durmada). One of the hundred sons of Dhrītarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīma. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 155, Verse 40).

DURGĀ I. The goddess of the universe, Durgā possesses different forms and aspects. Pārvatī, spouse of Śiva is a form of Durgā. According to the prayer of devotees this Devi assumes diverse forms. She is worshipped in 64 forms as Aṣṭadurgā, Vedagarbha, Ambikā, Bhadrakāli, Bhadrā, Kṣemāśekarī, Naikā-bāhu, Devī etc. In south India she is worshipped more in her fierce and terrible forms. Devī in her gentle aspects and moods assumes the forms of Kanyakā, Kāṃkṣi and Mūkāmbī. In Kerala the Devi is called Bhagavati also, in Andhra Jokufāmbikā and in Tamil-nadu Kanṇāki. Worship of the Devi is supposed to be more than 4000 years old in India. In religious literature from Vedic times up to date Devī occupies an important place. In modern India Śrī Rāmakṛṣṇa Paramahamsa, guru of Śvāmī Vivekananda, was a great devotee of Durgā.

In the Mahābhārata there are various references to the Devī. When the Pāṇḍavas entered the capital of Viṛata for their life incognito they worshipped Durgā, who appeared to them and granted them certain boons. (Viṛatā Parva, Chapter 6). At the commencement of the great war Arjuna, at the instance of Kṛṣṇa prayed to Durgā, who appeared in the sky and granted him boons, for victory in War. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 23). See Pañcadēvis and Prakṛti).

DURGĀ II. A river famous in ancient India. The Pāṇḍavas drank water from this river. (Bhiṣma Parva. Chapter 9, Verse 39).

DURGĀ (M). Fort. There are six kinds of forts, viz. Marudurgam, Jadudurgam, Prthvidurgam Vanadurgam, Parvataudurgam, and Manusy adurgam. Among the above six Manusyā durgā is the most important (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 56, 35).

DURGĀJAM. A city in ancient India. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 52).

DURGAMA. An asura chief born in the dynasty of Hīranyākṣa and son of Taru, Durgama was an enemy of the Devas from his very birth. He argued to himself thus: “the very strength and power of the Devas depend on the Vedas; if there is no Veda there is no yajña, if there is no yajña the Devas do not get their share of the havis, if they do not get the havis they will lose all their strength and prowess, and, therefore, the best means to teach the Devas a lesson is to destroy the Vedas.” Durgama decided that the surest means to achieve that was to perform penance. Accordingly he went to the Himalayas and began doing penance abstaining from food and drink. After a thousand years Brahmag appeared to him and asked him what boon he wanted. Durgama said “I must get the Vedas; I should get all the mantras known to brahmans and Devas in the three worlds, and all the presiding deities of those mantras should come and stand before me and be subject to my control; I must also get the strength to defeat all the Devas.” Brahmagn granted Durgama all the boons. And, thenceforth the brahmans could not recollect the Vedas or the mantras. No bathing, no homas, no daily rites, no rites for the dead, no yajñas, no japa (repeating divine names) and no tapas. Symptoms of old age caught the Devas in its grips. Durgama drove them out of Devolaka and they hid in mountain caves. Within a hundred years the world reached the rock bottom of destruction. Water disappeared from the world. Alarmed beyond measure at these developments the brahmans went to the Himalayas and prayed to Jagadambikā (mother of the universe). Ambikā appeared to them, and their lamentations brought tears to the eyes of Ambikā, and thus water scarcity came to an end. Ambikā gave them Śāka (a vegetable) fruits and roots to eat. Because she protected her devotees by supplying Śāka to them she came to be known as Śākambhari, thenceforward. Also because she shed tears from her eyes, thenceforth she came to be addressed as Satākṣi also.

Being told about the above developments Durgama, with his army attacked Devī. The fight became fierce and furious. From Devī’s body emerged numerous Saktis fully armed. Dhārini, Bālā, Tripurā, Bhairavī and Kālī with 10,000 hands were some of the prominent and powerful Saktis which thus emerged. The army of Durgama was annihilated. Then the fight commenced directly between Devī and Durgama. Fifteen arrows of Devī hit the asura at the very same time and he was killed. (Devī Bhāgavata, Saptama Skanda).

DURGĀPŪJĀ. See under Navarātrī.

DURGASAILA. A mountain in Śāka island. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 23).

DURITAKŚAYA. A son of King Mahāvīrya. Duritasayka had three sons, Trajyārunī, Kavi and Puṣkārārunī. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, Verse 19 and 21).

DURJAYA I. An absolutely cruel King. Owing to the number of adharmaś (evil actions he had committed) Kāla ordained him to be born and reborn twentyone times as various animals and as a Brahmarākṣasā he roamed about forests. One of those days he caught hold of a Śrīvayogi called Mahādeva whose body was smeared with Viśhū (the sacred ash), but as soon as the Viśhū from the body of the Śrīvayogi got smeared on his body also, Durjaya got back his former form and he was lifted up to Śvarga. (Śiva Purāṇa, Bhasma Māhātmava).

DURJAYA II. A dānava born to Kaśyapa praṇāpati by Danu, his wife. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 23).

DURJAYA III. (Duspārājaya). One of the hundred sons of Dhrtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 116, Verse 9).

DURJAYA IV. A King. Drupada advised the Pāṇḍavas to invite this King to the great war. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse, 16).

DURJAYA V. Son of King Suvīra of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 11).

DURJAYA VI. A synonym of Mahāvīṣṇu. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 144, Verse 86).

DURJAYA VII. A powerful son of Supratikā. While he was living as the lord over the country, having conquered the various Kingdoms he was told that Gauramukhi Muni had in his possession the famous gem called Cintāmaṇī. He fought to gain that gem and died. The place where he met with death came to be known as Naimīśāranya in after years. (Varāha Purāṇa, Chapter 17).

DURJAYA. Short form of Durjayanamjatinagara referred to in laudatory terms in the Mahābhārata. Some scholars hold that Durjaya is the Ellora caves of modern India, seven miles off Daulatabad. (Vana Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 1).

DURMĀDA I. See Durdrāṣṭra.

DURMĀDA II. A son of Harṣa, the Gandharva King. Himself and Unmāda, the apsara woman impersonated themselves and cheated Pururāvas and Urvaśī (See Unmāda). Enraged at the deception Urvaśī cursed that Durnama be born as a Rākṣasa and Unmāda a princess. Also, Unmāda as princess would have to marry not the person she really loved but some one else. Both Durnama and Unmāda then begged Urvaśī for redemption from the curse and the latter said thus: “This Durmāda will be born as son of Unmāda, and on seeing her son and husband die, she will end her life by burning herself, and her soul will attain Śvarga”. As a result of the above curse Unmāda was born as the daughter of the King of Videha and Durnama as the son of the Rākṣasa called Durgajāringa. As Rākṣasa, Durnama was called Piṅgālākṣa. The King of Videha named Unmāda as Harini. While Hariṇī was once walking in the garden with her companions Piṅgālākṣa abducted her and flew off in the sky, and put her in a great forest. A prince called Vasumanas, who happened to come that way on his fast-riding horse Ḫimūta heard the lamentations of Hariṇī, and after killing Piṅgālākṣa he took her with him to her palace. The King of Videha and his subjects, who were in great anxiety and distress at the disappearance of Hariṇī felt really happy to have her back. And, all of them opined that Hariṇī should be married to Vasumanas. Accordingly the date for her Svayamvara was announced. But, on the day of the svayamvara Bhadrārenya, King of Hehaya who, along with other Kings was also present on the occasion, forcibly took Hariṇī and rode off with her. According to the condition laid down by Urvaśī for redemption from her curse Durmāda was born as son of Hariṇī and he was named Durmāda. Bhadrārenya, Hariṇī and Durmāda lived very happily in the Hehaya palace. When Durmāda came of age he married Gītrāngī, his uncle’s daughter on the advice of sage Garga. Soon war broke out between Bhadrārenya, and Divodāsa, King of Kāsi in which Bhadrārenya was killed. Hariṇī courted death by fire, regained her former life and under the name Unmāda returned to the world of the Apsaras.

DURMĀDA III. Son of Asura Maya. Conceited and haughty over his strength Durmāda once challenged Bāli to fight, and defeated by Bāli he ran away from battlefield and hid in a cave. (Ānanda Rāmāyaṇa Sārakāṇḍa).

DURMĀSTA. An asura, he clashed with the Devas at the churning of the sea of milk. (Bhāgavata daśamāskandha).

DURMĀSTANA I. One of the 100 sons of Dhrtarāṣṭra. In the great war Arjuna destroyed his Gajasenā and Sātyaki wounded him. Finally he was killed by Bhīma. After the war was over Nakula occupied his palace. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 113, Droṇa Parva, 88, 89, 116 and 135).

DURMĀSTANA II. A son born to Sṛṇjaya by Rāṣṭrapāli. He was a relation of Vasudeva. (Bhāgavata navamāskandha).

DURMUKHA I. A minister of Mahāśāsura. Once he was sent to Bhadrakāli with a message by his master. (Devī Bhāgavata, Pañcama Skanda).

DURMUKHA II. One of the hundred sons of Dhrtarāṣṭra. The following information about him is gathered from the Mahābhārata.
1. He was present at the Svayamvara of Draupadī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 183, Verse 1).
2. During the procession to Īdvaitavana, Gandharvas took him captive. (Vana Parva, Chapter 242, Verse 12).
3. In the great war he fought with Sahaḍeva. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 25).
(4) He killed Arjuna's charioteer. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 12).
(5) He defeated Śrutakarman. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 35).
(6) He was defeated by Abhimanyu. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 42).
(7) A duel was fought between Durmukha and Ghaṭotkaca. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 13).
(8) Durmukha and Dhṛṣṭadṛṣṭyumnā: (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 26).
(9) He fought with Purūjit. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 13).
(10) He was defeated in fight with Sahadeva. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 107, Verse 25).
(11) Bhīmasena killed him in war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 134, Verse 20).
(12) After the war his beautiful palace was occupied by Sahadeva. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 12).

DURVĀKHA III. A King who flourished in the assembly of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 21).

DURVĀKHA IV. A Rākṣasa, who was a member in Rāvana's assembly. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 13). According to the Uttarārāmāyana he was the son of a Rākṣasa called Māhyāvān by his wife Sundari, and he had Vaijraṃśi, Virūpākṣa, Suptaghna, Vajālako, Matta and Unmatta as brothers and Nāla and Ketumātī as sisters.

DURVĀKHA V. A serpent. It was also present among the serpents, which had come to Prabhāsakṣetra to receive Balarāma who, after death, went to Pātālaloka. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

DURVĀKHA VI. An asura on the side of Mahiṣāsura. Tāmra, finance minister of Mahiṣāsura sent Durmukha with Bāskala to fight against Devi, who killed him. (Devibhāgavata, Skandhas 5, 13). In his previous life he was one of the Paulastyas. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 61).

DURVĀKHI. A companion of the Rākṣasa woman called Ajamukhi. See Ajamukhi.

DURVĀRA. Son of King Suratha of Kuṇḍalananagara. When Suratha captured the yajñāvāla (sacrificial horse) of Śrī Rāma Śatrughna clashed with him. Durvāra also was present on the occasion. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāl khaṇḍa, Chapter 49).

DURVĀRĀNA I. An army chief of the King of Kamoja. He was killed in the great war by Sātyaki. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 112, Verse 42).

DURVĀRĀNA II. A messenger of the very powerful Jalandhara. When the Devas and the Asuras churned Kṣirādbhā (ocean of milk), many excellent things emerged out of it. When those things were divided among them all, Devendra took possession of 14 gems in an unauthorised manner. When Jalandhara, through his messenger Durvārāna, demanded Devendra to return the gems, not only did he not return them but he also declared war against Jalandhara. When war broke out Jalandhara hesitated as to whether he should fight with Viṣṇu or with Śiva. Durvārāna advised him first to fight with Viṣṇu. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttarakhaṇḍa, Chapter 16).

DURVĀSAS

1) Genealogy. A sage, who used to lose his temper very easily. He is believed to have been born from an aṁśa (part, aspect) of Śiva.

2) Birth. Three different stories are told in the Purāṇas relating to his birth.
(1) Once a quarrel, arose between Brahmā and Śiva which developed into fighting. At the sight of Śiva seething with rage the Devas ran off frightened, and Pārvatī also got frightened. She told him 'Durvāsas bhavaṁ me'. It has become impossible for me to live happily with you. Realising that it was his momentary anger which made life miserable for Pārvatī Śiva decided to transfer that trait of his character to someone else.

The incident took place during the life period of Śilavati, who was very much reputed for her chastity. While Śilavati was carrying her husband Ugraśravas (who though a leper yet desired to visit brothels) to the house of a prostitute the muni Aṇumāṇḍavāya cursed Ugraśravas to die before sunrise the next day with his head broken. (See under Aṇumāṇḍavāya). Śilavati made the counter curse, let not the sun rise the next day, to the muni's curse. Accordingly the sun did not rise the next day, and confusion prevailed everywhere, whereupon the Trīmūrtis and the Devas, through Anasūyā, the wife of Atrimaharṣi, got the curse of Śilavati withdrawn. Pleased at this the Trīmūrtis asked Anasūyā to choose any boon she desired, and she prayed that Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Maheśvara take their partial incarnations through her. Accordingly Brahmā as Candra and Maheśvara as Dattātreya were born as sons of Anasūyā. And, Śiva deposited his anger, which had caused unhappiness to Pārvatī, in Anasūyā. The child born out of that aspect of Śiva to Anasūyā was Durvāsas. The name Durvāsas was very apt as the child was born out of the anger of Śiva which had made life miserable (durvāsa) for Pārvatī. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 44).

(2) Once defeated in his fight with Brahmā Śiva took refuge with the Nāranārāyaṇas who were doing penance in the plains of the Himālayas. Śiva told sage Nārāyaṇa everything about his plight and he asked the former to pierce his left hand with the Śūla. Śiva did so and three streams of blood flowed out of the wound made on the hand of the Śūl, one stream towards the sphere of the stars, another into the skull in Śiva's hand and from the third stream Durvāsas was born. Brahmā, who witnessed this miracle withdrew from war and returned to his abode. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

(3) In the fierce fight with the Tripurās Śiva, in great rage, ultimately shot an arrow against them, and that arrow, after killing the Tripurās, assumed the form of a child and returned to the lap of Śiva, and the child was named Durvāsas. (M.B. Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 160, Verses 14, 15).

3) Kunti granted boon. Once while Kunti was living in the palace of Kuntibhoja Durvāsas came there, and pleased with Kunti, he granted her five mantras. It was with the aid of those mantras that Kunti became mother of Karna and others. (For details see under Kunti Parā 2).

4) Śrī Kṛṣṇa bathed in pāyaṣa (pudding). Once Durvāsas came to Dvārakā where Kṛṣṇa and Rukmiṇī looked after him to his heart's content. Though, at times he took only meagre food, at other times he destroyed everything he saw and created trouble. Kṛṣṇa and Rukmiṇī served him according to schedule. One day the sage asked Kṛṣṇa to cook some pudding and it was got ready. Then the sage asked Kṛṣṇa to smear his (Kṛṣṇa) body with pudding. Kṛṣṇa did so except on his feet. After that Durvāsas got down the chariot and making Kṛṣṇa and Rukmiṇī serve as horses himself got into it and drove away in great speed into the forest. On the way he thrashed the 'horses' one after the other. Neither Kṛṣṇa nor Rukmiṇī felt sorry about this action of the sage. On reaching the forest he halted the chariot and blessed Siṁhprakāśa that arrows would not hit the parts of Kṛṣṇa's body which were smeared with the pāyas. The spot at which the sage blessed Kṛṣṇa became famous as Varadānārtha in after years. It may be noted that Kṛṣṇa died by an arrow hitting his foot which was not smeared with the pāyasas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 160).

5) Conducted yajña for Śvetaki. There once was a King called Śvetaki equal to Indra. He conducted a yajña of a hundred years' duration. Innumerable brahmans were engaged in the successful conduct of the yajña. Some years after the yajña the brahmans went their own way leaving it unfinished as the clouds of fume all the twenty-four hours in the yajñaśāla irked and affected their eyes. When Śvetaki requested them to further cooperate to complete the yajña they insultingly asked him to invite Śūdras for it. Then the King went to the Himālayas and did tapas for Śiva, who at last deputed Durvāsas to complete the yajña, and under the maharṣis' aegis it was completed within twelve years. On account of the constant offerings of havis in Agni (fire) during the period Agni fell a prey to indigestion, which was cured only after it ate up the Kхаνḍava forest. (See Khаṇḍava dahanā). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 235).

6) Mudgala granted salvation. Once Durvāsas went to sage Mudgala who was doing tapas in Kurukṣetra taking food only rarely and demanded some food with the object of testing his dharmavrūti (righteousness). The sage gave Durvāsas all the food he had with him, himself starving, and Durvāsas left the āśrama after eating a part of the food and smearing his body with the rest of it. This process was repeated by Durvāsas for six days, but Mudgala never felt or showed any offence. Greatly pleased at the firm righteousness of the King, Durvāsas blessed him to bodily ascend to heaven. Immediately a vimāna (aeroplane) descended from Viṣṇuloka and carried Mudgala in it to heaven. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 260).

7) Other information. (1) Durvāsas ran away in fear of the Pāṇḍavas. (See under Durvādhana, Para 12).

(2) He suffered at the hands of Haṁsa and Dībhaka. (See under Dībhaka).

(3) He advised Saivismālsākṣa to the woman called Kalāvāta. (See under Kalāvāta).

(4) Durvāsas and Kṣīrādhi-mathanam. (See under Amṛtam).

(5) Durvāsas and Daksāyāna. (See under Daksā).

(6) Terrified Durvāsas ran helter-skelter in the three worlds. (See under Ambarśa, Para 3).

(7) He was responsible for the death of Lakṣmaṇa. (See Laksmaṇa).

(8) He cursed Śakuntalā. (See Śakuntalā).

(9) He spent his time in Indra's assembly. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 23: For another story see under Pīṭṭirūthā).

Durvībhāga. A particular area in ancient India. The Kṣatriya kings of the area presented a lot of money and foodgrains to Yudhīṣṭhīra at the Rājasūya yajña. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 11).

Durvīghā (Durvīsahā). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed in the great war by Bhīmasena. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 20).

Durvīmocana. One of the hundred sons of Dhrtaraṣṭra killed by Bhīmasena. (Drona Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 62).

Durvīrocana. One of the hundred sons of Dhrtarāṣṭra killed by Bhīmasena. (Drona Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 62).

Durvīsahā (Durvīghā). One of the 100 sons or Dhrtarāṣṭra. He attended the swayamvara of Pāṇīcāli. On the occasion of the procession of Durvīdhanā and others, Durvīsahā was put in prison. (Vana Parva, Chapter 242, Verse 12). He was killed by Bhīmasena in the great war. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 20).

Durvīdhana I. Villain in the Mahābhārata story; the eldest and greatest of the Kauravas.

(1) Genealogy. See under Kauravas.

(2) Birth. Dhrtarāṣṭra born blind married Gandhārī. Hungry and thirsty, Vyāsa once came to Dhrtarāṣṭra's palace where Gandhārī treated him sumptuously, and he blessed her to have hundred sons by her husband. Ere long Gandhārī conceived, but even after two years she did not deliver. Grief-stricken at this she got herself aborted in secret as the result of which she 'delivered' a mass of flesh, and hearing about it Vyāsa visited her. As instructed by him hundred pots were filled with ghee, and the mass of flesh was sprayed with cold water as a result of which it got divided into hundred pieces, each the size of a thumb. Also a smaller piece of flesh remained. Those pieces of flesh were deposited in the pots filled with ghee and the pots kept in a secret place. Vyāsa departed for the Himālayas for tapas. In course of time the pots burst open one by one and from each pot emerged a boy. From the 101st pot a girl was born. Eldest among the boys was named Duryodhana, and the girl called Duṣṭalā. (For other names see under Kauravas).

Duryodhana, at the time of his birth cried in the voice of an ass on hearing which the asses kept in their shed also cried. Also, such evil omens as the jackal howling, birds like crows, vultures etc. crying and storms breaking out were witnessed on the occasion. Alarmed by such evil omens Dhrtarāṣṭra sent for the brahmans and his other friends and well-wishers like Bhīmaṇī and Vidura, and enquired of them whether, after the death of Dharmaputra, Duryodhana would be able to become King. As soon as Dhrtarāṣṭra had asked the question, evil omens like the world becoming dim, jackals howling etc. were witnessed again. Scholars like Vidura did their best to divine what the future of Duryodhana would be, and after mature consideration Vidura and the brahmān pandits opined that because of Duryodhana's birth the country and people would be ruined, and they, therefore advised that he should be cast away and forsaken. But, paternal affection did not permit Dhrtarāṣṭra to accept the advice. During this period Gandhārī was laid up for a few days with stomach trouble, and a vaśya woman was engaged to look after Dhṛtarāṣṭra, who begot of her a son called Yuyutsu.1 Thus with 100 sons and Duśālā for daughter Dhṛtarāṣṭra became rich in the matter of children2 (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 114).

(2) Duryodhana harms Bhīmasena. Now, Pāṇḍu was dead and Mādhri also died in the funeral pyre of her husband. Forlorn and helpless Kuntī and her five sons came to Hastināpura, and Dhṛtarāṣṭra welcomed them to the palace. Thus arose the occasion for the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas to live together in the Hastināpura palace. And, naturally there used to be petty differences and quarrels between the Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas princes. Bhīma being in every way a giant the Kauravas had often to suffer at his hands. To collect all the hundred Kaurava brothers together and throw them away in one lump to push them to the ground, to scoff at them by holding their heads under water etc.—these were some of the childish pranks played by Bhīma on the Kauravas. The constant repetition of such pranks and mischiefs on the part of Bhīma rendered him an object of hatred for the Kauravas among whom the common conviction grew that it was essential to put an end to Bhīma’s life for their safety, nay even their very existence.

One day, the Kauravas, with the object of doing away with Bhīma, escorted the Pāṇḍavas to Prāmāṇakoṭi on the banks of the Gaṅgā for water sports. There all of them ate sumptuous meals and took various drinks. But, Duryodhana had secretly mixed Kālikūṭa poison in the food of Bhīma. After taking meals they began playing water-sports. After the sports were over they returned to their tents and slept. Owing to the effects of the poison and the overexertion during the day Bhīma slept stone dead. While all were asleep during the night Duryodhana bound the hands and legs of Bhīma with cords and threw him into the depths of the Gaṅgā. Bhīma who was still unconscious sank down to the very bottom of the river where the denizens of nāgas looked upon him and the nāgas bit him in anger. The poison of the nāgas neutralised the effects of Kālikūṭa poison in Bhīma, though their bite could not make even a scratch on his skin. Freed thus from the effects of poison Bhīma shook himself up from sleep and drove off the nāgas. Alarmed at these developments the nāgas called Vāsuki up to the scene, and he, recognising Bhīma held in embrace and gave him much money and costly gems etc. Bhīma refused the gifts, but asked Vāsuki for nāgarasa, which would impart the strength of thousand nāgas to those who used it. Vāsuki gave Bhīma eight potfuls of nāgarasa, which the latter drank to the last dregs and thus gained immeasurable strength.

When next morning after the water-sports the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas awoke from sleep Bhīma was found missing. Duryodhana said that Bhīma had returned earlier to Hastināpura, but this did not satisfy the Pāṇḍavas. Kuntī lamented over the absence of Bhīma. Bhīma, who drank the nāga rasa lay on the veranda of Vāsuki for eight days in the manner of one who had lost consciousness. By the time he woke up on the eighth day the body had almost fully assimilated the rasa. Vāsuki told Bhīma that eight potfuls of nāgarasa would impart the strength of 10,000 elephants. And then at the instance of Vāsuki Bhīma took his bath in holy waters and wore new clothes and garb. He ate the pudding offered by Vāsuki, and taking leave of him and followed by nāgas he came up from the water to the bank of the Gaṅgā. Bhīma gave a detailed description to his mother and brothers of all that had happened to him. Dharmaputra advised him to keep the secret. After the incident, once again was Kālikūṭa poison mixed in the food of Bhīma. But, Yuyutsu born of the vaisya woman to Dhṛtarāṣṭra gave the Pāṇḍavas confidential report about it. Because of the powerful effect of nāga rasa, the Kālikūṭa consumed by Bhīma did no harm to him but it only got assimilated in his body. On another occasion Duryodhana killed the charioteer of Bhīma. (Bhāṣā Bhārata, Chapter 127 and 129).

3) Karna crowned king of Aṅga. The Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas learnt the use of weapons of war at the feet of Dronācārya, and when the studies were over arrangements were made for a rehearsal, and at the rehearsal Bhīma and Duryodhana were the first to clash with each other. When the encounter reached its climax both of them pointed the club at each other. But, Aśvatthāma intervened and pacified them. Next, Karna entered the stage for a trial of strength with Arjuna, and at once arose from the Pāṇḍava side questions about Karna’s nobility and aristocracy of birth etc. Karna stood there stunned, not knowing what to say or how to repel the attack. Then it was Duryodhana who rose up to announce that he was, that very moment, crowning Karna King of Aṅga. This ended the scene. (Bhārata (Malayalam), Ādi Parva, Chapters 134, 135 and 136).

4) Pāṇḍavas trapped in palace built of lac. The above incident confirmed and completed the cleavage of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas into two hostile camps. Meantime another event happened. Dronācārya demanded of his pupils to bring before him King Drupada by way of guruḍakṣṣiṇa (tuition fee), for the ācārya had to wreak vengeance upon Drupada (See under Drupada). Though Duryodhana tried his best he could not capture Drupada. Not only that, Drupada defeated him also in fight. At this juncture it was Arjuna who presented Drupada as captive to Dronācārya by way of guruḍakṣṣiṇa. The incident proved to be another provocation for Duryodhana to hate the Pāṇḍavas.

Now, Duryodhana made up his mind to destroy the Pāṇḍavas somehow or other. With this end in view he went to his father, posing himself to be a great well-wisher of the Pāṇḍavas, and obtained his permission to transfer their (Pāṇḍavas’) residence to another palace. Accordingly Duryodhana deputed his minister Purocana to get built at Vāraṇāvata a palace of lac. Vidura came to know of the intended mischief and gave advance notice of it to the Pāṇḍavas through a messenger Kanaka. The architect built the ‘lac palace’ but built a tunnel also attached to it. A year after the Pāṇḍavas shifted the residence to the new ‘palace’ Duryodhana set fire to it, and the Pāṇḍavas escaped unscathed through this tunnel. (Bhārata (Malayalam) Ādi Parva, Chapters 141-151).

1. Vāṣa blessed Gāndhārī to have 100 sons. Then how was it that she got a daughter too? On being questioned thus by King Janamejaya Vaishampāyana replied ‘when Vāṣa was dividing the mess of flesh a desire to have a daughter entered the heart of Gāndhārī and divining that desire Vāṣa cut the flesh in such a manner as to have one more piece, viz. 101.

2. Duryodhana was born as a part of Kali. (M. B. Āṣrama- vāsika Parva, Chapter 1).
5) Duryodhana invited the Pándavas back to Hastináputra. Duryodhana and his brothers were living very happily under the impression that the Pándavas had been burnt to ashes along with the ‘lac Palace’. Then it was that the Pándavas, disguised as brahmans and in the presence of all the Kings, won Páñcālá, the daughter of King Drupada, in svayamvara, for their wife. After the marriage the Pándavas stayed in Drupada’s palace and the Kauravas returned to Hastináputra. Duryodhana and others felt all the more jealous at the Pándavas’ becoming more powerful as a result of their marriage. Again it was decided that the Pándavas should be destroyed anyhow and at any cost. But, how to effect the destruction? Duryodhana wanted to attract the Pándavas to destruction through women and to create differences and divisions among them. But, Kárña attacked the plan as impracticable, and instead he wanted to defeat Drupada and render the Pándavas impotent. At this stage Bhisma and Droṇa argued that it was most preferable to give half the Kingdom to the Pándavas and receive them with grace. Dhṛtarāṣṭra supported the proposal as a result of which the Kauravas went to Páñcālá and escorted the Pándavas back to Hastináputra. Dhṛtarāṣṭra partitioned the country between the Kauravas and the Pándavas and the latter shifted their residence to their part of the country with Káññavaprastha (Indraprastha) as its capital. When the Pándavas went to Indraprastha Maya built for them an exceptionally beautiful palace where King Dharmaputra performed rājasuya. Duryodhana and others earnestly participated in it. After the rājasuya the Kauravas wanted to have a look at the palace and in the course of surveying it they placed themselves in ridiculous situations due to visual illusions. Taking the bright floors of glass for watery tanks they pulled up their clothings and measured with caution every foot of theirs. Then they mistook actual pools for floor and fell into them and got wet. At the consequent discomfiture of the Kauravas Bhisma clapped his hands and roared with laughter. Draupadi hid her face with hands and smiled. Altogether the Kauravas cut a very ridiculous figure, and they returned to Hastináputra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 202, Sábhā Parva, Chapters 35, 85).

6) Dharmaputra’s first defeat in the game of dice. The sight of the great wealth including costly stones and gems presented by various kings to Dharmaputra at the Rājasuya and the humiliation experienced while surveying the palace made Duryodhana all the more mad with anger and hatred towards the Pándavas. He now came to the decision either to defeat the Pándavas once for all or to commit suicide by taking poison. He held secret consultations on the topic with Sakuni whose efforts at first to pacify him (Duryodhana) failed. Ultimately Sakuni, an expert in the game of dice, advised Duryodhana to invite Dharmaputra to a game, assuring him that the rest he would take care of. Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Vidura advised Duryodhana against the move, but he did not yield. Finally Dhṛtarāṣṭra, saying to himself that nobody would change fate, agreed to Duryodhana’s proposal, and deputed Vidura to Dharmaputra to invite him for the game. Dharmaputra, in fact, did not like the game, but he succumbed to the eloquence and persuasive powers of Sakuni and at last agreed to play. Kings lined up the royal hall to witness the game. First gems were staked, and Duryodhana won the game. Then 1000 golden níkas1 and treasuries were offered to the winner. Duryodhana won that game also. Next chariot with horses and next to that 1000 maid-servants were staked and Duryodhana won those games too. 1000 horses, 1000 golden chariots with their horses, the horse decorated with gold presented by Cítraratha to Arjuna, 6000 soldiers with their arms and armaments—these formed the next successive bets, and each game Dharmaputra lost. The next bet was 400 copper vessels each filled with pure gold, and Duryodhana won that game also. And, now Vidura tried to dissuade Yudhishtira from playing the game; but neither he nor Duryodhana heeded the advice. And, Duryodhana by foul play snatched from Dharmaputra all his wealth, his kingdom and his brothers. Now Páñcālí alone remained, and Dharmaputra bet her too and played the last game and lost.

Duryodhana deputed his Síta, Pratikámi, to Indraprastha, to fetch Draupadi but she sent him back. Next Dusáśana was deputed and he brought Páñcālí away to the sabhá dragging her by the hair. She was proclaimed to be the maid-servant of the Kauravas. At last Dhṛtarāṣṭra intervened and sent back the Pándavas along with Draupadi to Indraprastha.

7) Second game and exile in the forest. Duryodhana and others did not appreciate the intervention of their father. He again conspired with Sakuni and it was decided to challenge Dharmaputra to one more game. The conditions to be stipulated were that the vanquished in the game should stay in exile for twelve years in the forest and live incognito during the thirteenth year, and if found out and recognised during this period the whole process of exile and life incognito would have to be repeated. Duryodhana and Sakuni approached Dhṛtarāṣṭra and said to him thus: “Dear father, the desire for revenge at their defeat in the game of dice gnaws at the Pándavas’ heart like poison. Also, they will never forget our having dragged Draupadi by her hair. When a suitable occasion arises they will take revenge on the whole lot of us. Therefore, we want to challenge Dharmaputra to a final game of dice, the condition being that he who gets defeated should go in exile into the forest for twelve years and then to live incognito for one year. If we get defeated we will simply carry out the condition on our part.” This request of Duryodhana appealed to his father, who invited Dharmaputra once again for a game of dice. Dharmaputra accepted the invitation, in fact, in spite of himself. This time too Duryodhana won the stake and the Pándavas set out to the forest. Even at the time of parting Duṣśásana insulted Bhisma who retorted thus: “You, mean fellows, you cheated my brother by foul play. If I fail to tear your heart open in fight and drink blood I do not want heaven. Moreover I will kill Duryodhana, and Arjuna will kill Kárña. Sakuni, the expert in foul play in dice will be killed by Sahadeva. We will meet in the 14th year from today at the battlefield. Adieu.”

Thus did the Pándavas depart for the forest. Kunti being too old Vidura took her to his house, and he consoled her, lamenting over the separation from her children. (M.B. Sábhá Parva).

8) Curse of Maitreya. The Pāṇḍavas entered the Kāṇyaka forest where they were welcomed by the sages. Among them Maitreya whom the misfortune of the Pāṇḍavas affected much started for Hastināpura for peace parleys. Vidura advised Dhṛtarāṣṭra that Maitreya’s proposals should be respected lest he should curse the King. Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Duryodhana received the sage with respect. And, the sage asked them to recall the Pāṇḍavas from the forest and live on friendly terms with them. Duryodhana did not in any manner respond to the advice of the sage, but stood there absolutely mum tapping his thigh with his fingers and making drawings with the fingers of his feet on the ground. This the sage interpreted as an insult to him. He stood up ablaze with anger and cursed Duryodhana thus: “You will, sooner than later reap the consequences of your false pride; your cruelty will invite terrible war, and in the fight Bhīma will rend asunder your thigh, which you struck with your fingers just now.”

Greatly agitated over the curse Dhṛtarāṣṭra prayed the sage for redemption and the sage said: “if only your son resorts to forebearance and peace the curse will not take effect, otherwise it will come true.” And after making this announcement the sage returned to the forest. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 10).

9) The procession. While the Pāṇḍavas were staying in the Kāṇyaka forest Duryodhana and others went there on the pretext of looking after the cows. The Gandharvas took them captive; but the Pāṇḍavas intervened and set them free. Feeling humiliated at the mishap Duryodhana decided to end his life after crowning Duṣṣāsana as King. But Duṣṣāsana did not agree to the proposal. (For details see Ghoṣayātrā).

10) Duryodhana’s attempt at death and his trip to Pātāla. Humiliated at the procession thus and turning down the advice of friends to return to the palace, Duryodhana spread grass on the ground and lay down there to die. As his death would spell disaster to the Dānavas they decided to send him back to his palace for which purpose they performed the Vaiṭāṇā sacrifice in Pātāla. While offering milk in the sacrificial fire a Rākṣasa woman, Kṛṣṭyā, arose therefrom, and at the instance of the Dānavas she carried Duryodhana over to Pātāla. There they told him thus: “Oh Duryodhana, a part of your body has been earned by us from Śiva by our penance. That part of your body above the waist is made of diamond. Therefore, arrows will not pierce your body. Grieve not. Bhagadatta and other heroes have been born to help you. Your great supporter Karna is possessed of the soul of Narakāsura.” These words of the Dānavas instilled fresh hope in Duryodhana, and he was taken back to his Kingdom by Kṛṣṭyā. This incident appeared as a dream to Duryodhana. Bucking up confidence and courage again he returned to Hastināpura and continued to rule (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 252).

11) Duryodhana’s Viṣṇu yajña. At this juncture Duryodhana thought of performing a Rājaśūya for which he invited brahmans to the palace. After bestowing much thought on the subject the brahmans pointed out that there was no sanction for Duryodhana to conduct a Rājaśūya as his elders, Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Dharmaputra were still alive. At the same time they pointed out that there was another Yajña called Viṣṇu yajña as efficacious as Rājaśūya which Duryodhana was competent to perform. Accordingly Duryodhana performed the Viṣṇu yajña and earned reputation among evil monarchs. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 256, 257).

12) Boon from Durvāsas. Once Durvāsas accompanied by his disciples, came to Duryodhana’s palace, and Duryodhana decided somehow or other to befriend and use the mahārṣi as a weapon against the Pāṇḍavas. He housed the mahārṣi and his disciples in the palace for a few days and pleaded them by careful service at which the mahārṣi asked Duryodhana to request for any boon he desired. And, Duryodhana asked the mahārṣi to visit the Pāṇḍavas one day in the forest with his disciples when they had finished taking their meals. The mahārṣi agreed. And, this was the period of time when Pāṇcālī had received the aksayapātra from Śūrya. Everyday the pātra would produce enough food for the Pāṇḍavas and the other people with them, but it would become empty for the day after Pāṇcālī had eaten her food. This was the nature of the aksayapātra.

Pāṇcālī had finished her meals one day when Durvāsas and his disciples came to the Pāṇḍavas. Not knowing that Pāṇcālī had already finished her food Dharmaputra welcomed the mahārṣi and his disciples and requested them to take bath in the Gaṅgā and return for their meals. Pāṇcālī was in a fix. The aksayapātra would not produce any more food for the day, and if not duly fed the mahārṣi would get angry and curse them. In his painful dilemma she prayed to Śrī Kṛṣṇa for succour, and lo! he appeared and asked Pāṇcālī for some food. She replied that the aksayapātra was quite empty. But, Kṛṣṇa got from her the pātra and ate one particle of Kīra (a leafy vegetable) which had stuck on its side. That leafy substance fully satisfied his hunger and thirst whereupon the hunger and thirst of Durvāsas and his disciples were also quenched. Then Kṛṣṇa asked Sahadeva to bring back the mahārṣi and his disciples from the bank of the Gaṅgā and accordingly he went there and invited them. Only a few minutes had passed since the mahārṣi and his disciples had felt the satisfaction of a sumptuous meal. They were also astonished to think how in such a short time food for so many people could be cooked by Pāṇcālī. They felt rather anxious about the reaction which Dharmaputra would evince in case they returned to him to say that they required no food. Durvāsas realised only too well that to quarrel with the Pāṇḍavas, who enjoyed the friendship and support of Kṛṣṇa was like playing with fire. Therefore, the mahārṣi with his disciples ran away from the place secretly. Pāṇḍavas waited long for the mahārṣi and his disciples to return fearing that the object of Durvāsas might be to return at the untimely hour and curse them. But, Śrī Kṛṣṇa told them the details about the mahārṣi’s departure and assured Dharmaputra that he and his disciples would not return. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 263).

13) War against Viśāla. After twelve years’ exile in the forest the Pāṇḍavas began their life incognito at Viśāla nagara. Kīcaka, brother-in-law of Mātysa, the Viśāla King, was killed secretly by Bhīmasena, and news was spread that Kīcaka was killed by a Gandharva.

None of the spies deputed by Duryodhana to spot out the Pāṇḍavas during their life incognito could gather any information about them. One of those days Susarma, King of Trigarta, told Duryodhana that the Virata King had lost his power and spirits due to the death of Kicaka and it was, therefore, the proper time to attack the Virata country and subjugate it thoroughly. The idea appealed to Karna, who prompted Duryodhana to war against Virata. The army was fully mobilised. As an excuse for the war, at the instance of Duryodhana, Susarma, King of Trigarta lifted innumerable cows of the Virata King. This happened on the day on which the life incognito of the Pandavas was to have ended. And war started thus. The Virata prince Uttara who spent his time in the zenana in the palace appeared in the field of war. Arjuna, under the assumed name of Bhramala took up the chariotership of Uttara. But, at the sight of the vast Kaurava army Uttara fainted, and Arjuna hurriedly drove the chariot over to where his bow Gandiva was kept hidden, and with the bow in his hands Arjuna jumped into the thick of the fight. A fierce war ensued in which the Kaurava army was completely routed. The life incognito of the Pandavas was also over, and Duryodhana became naturally anxious about the future of things. (M.B. Virata Parva, Chapter 65).

14) Preparation for war. Duryodhana refused to give the Pandavas, even after their return from twelve years' exile in forest and one year's life incognito, even as much land as would hold a pin', and war became inevitable. The Pandavas and Kauravas fought the great war which lasted for eighteen days on the field of Kuruksetra.

(1) Duryodhana went to invite Sri Krsna. Preparations for the war were gathering speed and momentum. Both the sides were on the look out for more friends and allies. Being told that Arjuna had gone to Dvārakā to seek Krsna's support Duryodhana rushed to the place. Seeing Duryodhana from a distance Krsna lay on his bed in a false sleep, and Duryodhana took his seat on a stool at the head of the bed awaiting Krsna to awake from sleep. Soon after, Arjuna came there and he stood at the feet of Krsna with head bowed down. When Krsna awoke from sleep it was Arjuna whom he saw first, and while exchanging greetings with Arjuna he was told that it was Duryodhana, who had come first. But when Duryodhana and Arjuna explained the object of their visit he told them thus:—

"No doubt it was Duryodhana who came first. But, it was Arjuna whom I met first. Since Duryodhana came first and I saw Arjuna first I shall help both of you in war. There is the adage that youngsters should be given priority of consideration. So, Arjuna may indicate his preference first. I shall give one of you an army of 10 lakhs of warriors as strong in body as myself, and I shall stand by the other without arms and without fighting. Arjuna may make his choice first. And, he chose Krsna for his side in the war while Duryodhana was happy to get Krsna's mighty army. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 7).

(2) Duryodhana sought Balabhadrā's help but Balabhadrā told him frankly that since he could not forsake Krsna he would remain neutral in the war. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 25).

(3) Duryodhana got an akṣāuhini (a specific division of army) from Kṛtavarmā. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 32).

(4) Śalya promised to captain the Kaurava army. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 18).

(5) Duryodhana could collect a total of eleven akṣāuhini. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 27).

(6) He assured Dhṛtarāṣṭra that the Kaurava army would easily defeat the Pāṇḍava army. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 57).

(7) He declared that war was a yajña. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 58).

(8) At the instance of Dhṛtarāṣṭra a rest house was built for Śrī Kṛṣṇa on his way to the Kauravas for compromise talks on behalf of the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 85).

(9) Duryodhana opined that Kṛṣṇa be taken captive when he came to plead for compromise and peace, but the others did not support him. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 13).

(10) Duryodhana worshipped Kṛṣṇa with rare and excellent things and invited him for meals, but Kṛṣṇa did not accept any. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 13).

(11) Duryodhana rejected the advice of sage Kanva to come to terms with the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapters 97-105).

(12) He emphatically announced in the Kaurava assembly that even as much land as may be required to hold a pin would not be given to the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 26).

(13) Kṛṣṇa's pleadings in the Kaurava assembly for peace and amity on behalf of the Pāṇḍavas failed to have any effect. On the occasion Duryodhana, Sākuni, Karna and Duśśāsana conspired to take Kṛṣṇa captive. Sātyaki informed Kṛṣṇa secretly about the conspiracy and Kṛṣṇa informed Dhṛtarāṣṭra about it, and he warned the conspirators against their wicked plan. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 13, Verse 4).

(14) Duryodhana appointed Kṛpa, Droṇa, Śalya, Jayadratha, Hārdika, Aśvatthāma, Karna, Śakuni, Bālihika and Kāmbọja as commanders of the army. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 155).

(15) Duryodhana appointed Bhīṣma as the Commander in-Chief of the army. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 156 verse 26).

(16) He appointed Ulūka as messenger and warned Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the Pāṇḍavas, Drupada, Virata, Śikhandi, Dhrṣṭadyumna and others. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 10).

(17) He ordered the army to the Kurukṣetra field. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 195).

(18) He appointed Duśśāsana as Bhīṣma's body-guard. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 15).

(19) On the flag staff of Duryodhana studded with gems his flag with the serpent's emblem flew high in the air. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 25).

(20) He learnt from Droṇa the names of heroes on both sides before the fighting started. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 25).

15) Duryodhana in battlefield. The following incidents relating to Duryodhana in actual war have been noted.

(1) In the first day's fighting he fainted, hit by the arrows of Bhīma. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 17).

(2) He attacked Bhīma with the support of the elephant division (Gaṅgasena) and the latter fainted. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 14).

(3) Bhīmasena again confronted him, and again he fell down fainted. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 80, Verse 4).
(4) Dhṛṣṭadyumna defeated him. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 53).
(5) Bhṛṣṇa killed eight brothers of Duryodhana at one stretch, and Duryodhana cried before Bhṛṣṇa. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 37).
(6) He fought against Ghaṭotkaca and killed four Rākṣasa attendants of the latter. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 20).
(7) He fell down at the blows delivered by Ghaṭotkaca. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 14).
(8) He thrashed Bhṛṣṇa to unconsciousness. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 5).
(9) Overpowered by Ghaṭotkaca, he gave expression to his sorrows before Bhṛṣṇa. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 8).
(10) He directed Śalya to fight against Yudhiṣṭhira. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 105, Verse 26).
(11) Grieved at the death of the warriors in his army he went to Bhṛṣṇa in great anguish. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 16).
(12) Duryodhana and Śātayaki fought against each other. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 111, Verse 14).
(13) He fought with Abhimanuyu. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 116, Verse 1).
(14) He appointed Drona as chief of the army. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva Chapter 6, Verse 2).
(15) He prayed for Drona’s blessings to capture Yudhiṣṭhira alive. (Drona Parva Chapter 12, Verse 6).
(16) He embraced Drona at the sight of the latter disintegrating the fighting forces of the Pāṇḍavas. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 7).
(17) He accorded sanction to his warriors to kill Abhimanyu. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 39 Verse 16).
(18) He promptly requested Abhiṣṭotkaca. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 40, Verse 23).
(19) He ran off at the blows of Abhimanuyu. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 30).
(20) He soothed Jayadratha who ran away in terror. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 14).
(21) When he admitted that he was not efficient to fight Arjuna. Drona tied a divine talisman on his body. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 73).
(22) Defeated by Arjuna he ran away with the talisman on him. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 32).
(23) Śātayaki defeated Duryodhana. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 120 Verse 40).
(24) He promptly defeated Yudhāmanuyu and Uttamājusā (Bhṛṣṇa Parva Chapter 102 Verse 30).
(25) He incited Karna to kill Arjuna. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 143, Verse 12).
(26) He lost his enthusiasm with the death of Jayadratha. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 150).
(27) He made allegations against Droṇa. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 152, Verse 2).
(28) He fought with Yudhiṣṭhira and got defeated. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 153, Verse 23).
(29) Aśvatthāma got ready to kill Karna, but Duryodhana pacified him. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 13).
(30) He fought with Bhṛṣṇa and got defeated. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 30).
(31) He deputed Śākuni to kill the Pāṇḍavas. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 170, Verse 60).
(32) He got defeated in fight with Śātayaki. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 171, Verse 23).
(33) He prompted Alambuṣa, son of Jaṭāṣuṣa to fight with Ghaṭotkaca. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 174, Verse 9).
(34) He fought with Nakula and got defeated. (Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 187, Verse 50).
(35) On the death of Droṇa he ran away from the battlefield. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 193, Verse 17).
(36) After the death of Droṇa he appointed Karna chief of the army. (Karna Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 43).
(37) He fought against Yudhiṣṭhira and got defeated (Karna Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 32).
(38) He requested Śalya to act as Karna’s charioteer. The request so enraged Śalya that he rose from his seat at once. But, Duryodhana brought him round with praises. (Karna Parva, Chapter 32).
(39) He created so much troubles and difficulties for Nakula and Sahadeva in fight with them. (Karna Parva, Chapter 56).
(40) In further fighting he got defeated by Bhṛṣṇa. (Karna Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 51).
(41) He killed the Kulinda prince. (Karna Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 19).
(42) When Aśvatthāma put forward certain compromise proposals he rejected them. (Karna Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 30).
(43) Karna was killed and Duryodhana was immersed in grief. (Karna Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 15).
(44) He rejected peace proposals made by Krpa, and reaffirmed the decision to fight. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 5).
(45) He appointed Śalya as chief of the army. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 6).
(46) He was again defeated by Bhṛṣṇa. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 42).
(47) He was defeated by Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 23).
(48) After the defeat he ran away from the battlefield, entered a pool rendering the water motionless by magical power and stayed under water. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 54).
(49) Krpaçārya, Aśvatthāma and Kṛtaæavān went to his hiding place and tried to arouse him for war but he expressed disinclination for war. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 14).
(50) Yudhiṣṭhira visited Duryodhana in the latter’s hiding place, but he answered Yudhiṣṭhira from under water. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 33).
(51) On the urging of Yudhiṣṭhira he came out of the pool. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 33).
(52) He got prepared for club fight with Bhṛṣṇa. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 52).
(53) Ill omens like storms, dust fall, thunder and lightning, followed his preparations for fight with Bhṛṣṇa. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 8).
(54) He fell down at the blows of Bhṛṣṇa with his thigh broken. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 47).
(55) Śri Kṛṣṇa spoke harsh words to him and he replied to them all. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 27).
(56) He shed tears before Śalya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 7).
(57) He appointed Aśvatthāma chief of the army. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 41).
(58) Congratulating Aśvatthāma he cast away his mortal coils. (Śaúṭika Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 56).
DURYODHANA II

16) Other information.
(1) Duryodhana was one of the eleven mahārathas on the Kaurava side, others being Yuyutsu, Duṣṣāsana, Dussaha, Durmeṣaṇa, Viṅkaṇa, Citrasena, Jaya, Kurumitra, Karṇa and Satyavrata (all of them, sons of Dṛśtarāṣṭra). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 18).
(2) With the help of Karṇa he abducted the daughter of the King of Kaśi. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 13).
(3) After his death his splendid palace was occupied by Bhim. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 6).
(4) Vyāsā brought by his esoteric powers to the surface of the Gaṅga the souls of the heroes who were killed in the battle. Amongst them was the soul of Duryodhana also. (Āśrama-vāsika Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 9).
(5) Yudhiṣṭhīra saw Duryodhana, after his death, living in heaven, resplendent as Śūrya in the company of holy devatās. (Śṛṅgāra-vāhana Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 4).

DURYODHANA II. The Mahābhārata refers to another Duryodhana, grandson of Suvira, and son of Durjaya. (Ānuśāsana Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 18). A daughter called Sudarśanā was born to him by his wife Narmadā. Duryodhana married Sudarśanā to Agnideva.

DŪŚĀSANA. A Rākṣasa, Dūśāsa, who came along with Khara to fight, was killed by Śrī Rāma. (See Khara).

DUSKARNA. One of the hundred sons of Dṛśtarāṣṭra. He was defeated in fighting in the great war by Satānīka. (Drona Parva, Chapter 155).

DUSPAṆYA. Last son of a merchant in Pāṭaliputra. Short-tempered and haughty, this Duspanya killed many children. The King outlawed him. He went into the forest where he drowned the child of mahārṣi Ugrarāvas. The mahārṣi cursed him that he also should end his life by drowning and his soul roam about in unsupportable distress. The curse came true. After roaming about for many years he approached Agastya and prayed for redemption from the curse. The sage directed his disciple, Sutīkṣṇa to get holy water from Agniśīrtha in Mount Gāndhamādana and sprinkle it on the sinful soul of Duspanya. Sutīkṣṇa did as he was asked by the guru, and the soul of Duspanya attained salvation. (Setumāḥtyam).

DUSPARĀJAYA (DURJAYA). One of the hundred sons of Dṛśtarāṣṭra. On the occasion of Duryodhana's journey to Dvaitavana Dusparājaya was taken captive by the Gandharvas. In the war with the Gandharvas he clashed with Nila. (Drona Parva, Chapter 25). He was killed by Bhima. (Salya Parva, Chapter 26).

DUSPRADHARSA. (DUSPAHARSA). One of the hundred sons of Dṛśtarāṣṭra. He was defeated in fighting. (Salya Parva, Chapter 26).

DUSSAHA. A son of Dṛśtarāṣṭra. He was wounded by the arrows of Sātyaki and killed by Bhima. (Drona Parva, Chapter 135).

DUSŚALĀ. One of the hundred sons of Dṛśtarāṣṭra who was killed in war by Bhima. (Drona Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 39).

DUŚŚALĀ. The only daughter of Dṛśtarāṣṭra by Gāndhārī.
(1) She was married to Jayadratha the Rājā of Sindhu. (2) Her birth. See under Kauravas.
(3) Yudhiṣṭhīra did not permit Jayadratha to be killed when he abducted Pāṇcāli as he was the husband of Duśśalā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 271, Verse 43).
(4) When Arjuna reached Vidarbha attending the Āśvamedha yajña the archers obstructed his progress, and he killed them all. Suratha, son of Duśśalā, was also among those killed, and she came to the battlefield with her infant child crying, whereupon Arjuna stopped the fighting and in remorse crowned the son of Suratha as the King of Sindhu. (Āśvamedha Parva, Chapters 78 and 89).

DUŚŚASANA I. A son of Dṛśtarāṣṭra,
1) His birth. See under Kauravas.
2) Other information. (1) He, along with his brothers, was present at the svayamvara of Pāṇcāli. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 1).
(3) He kept store and served food to the guests at the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhīra. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 5).
(3) He dragged Pāṇcāli and stripped her of her clothes in the assembly hall of the Kauravas. (For details see under Pāṇcāli).
(4) Gandharvas took him captive in Dvaitavana. (See under Kauravas).
(5) The Pāṇḍavas released the Kauravas from captivity, and Duryodhana laden with this humiliation did not desire to return to Hastināpura. He asked Duśśasana to assume kingship and rule the subjects well. Duśśasana rejected the offer and wept. This was a good trait in the vicious character of Duśśasana like lightning in the midst of dark and thick clouds. (Vana Parva, Chapter 249).
3) Duśśasana in the great war. (1) During the first day of the war he fought a duel with Nakula. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 22).
(2) He got defeated in the duel with Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 23).
(3) He promised Duryodhana that he would kill Abhimanyu. (Drona Parva, Chapter 89, Verse 24).
(4) Abhimanyu rendered him unconscious with his arrows. (Drona Parva, Chapter 40, Verse 13).
(5) He got defeated by Arjuna and ran away from the battlefield. (Drona Parva, Chapter 10).
(6) He fought with Sātyaki. (Drona Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 14).
(7) He got defeated by Sātyaki and ran off. (Drona Parva, Chapter 121, Verse 29).
(8) He defeated Pratīvindhyā. (Drona Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 43).
(9) Sahadeva defeated him in fighting. (Drona Parva, Chapter 188, Verse 5).
(10) He fought with Dṛśtrādyumna and got defeated. (Drona Parva, Chapter 189, Verse 5).
(11) On the death of Drona he ran away from the battle-field. (Drona Parva, Chapter 193, Verse 15).
(12) Sahadeva defeated him. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 18).
(13) Duśśasana put Dṛśtrādyumna in prison. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 33).
(14) He fought with Bhima. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 82).
4) Death of Duṣṭāsana. In the fierce fight between Bhima and Duṣṭāsana at Kurukṣetra Bhima killed him with his club and sat on his chest asking him with which hand of his he pulled Draupadi by hair. Raising his right hand Duṣṭāsana cried out, "This is the hand you seek for". At this reply of his Bhima pulled out Duṣṭāsana’s right hand and thrashed him with it. He cut asunder Duṣṭāsana’s chest and drank the blood which gushed out of it (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 8).

5) After his death. (1) After Duṣṭāsana’s death Arjuna occupied his palace. (Śánti Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 8).

(2) Vyāsa evoked the souls of the heroes who died in war and sprinkled Ganges water on them. Duṣṭāsana was one among those thus treated. (Āśramavāśika Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 9).

(3) After death he attained heaven. (Śrvagārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 21)

6) Synonyms of Duṣṭāsana. Bharata, Bharataśreṣṭha, Bharatapāsada, Dhṛtarāṣṭraja, Kaurava, Kauravya, Kurusārdūla etc.

DUŚŚĀSANA II. Another Duṣṭāsana, servant of the son of King Khadagabāhu of Saurāṣṭra is also mentioned in the Purāṇas.

Khadagabāhu had a famous elephant, which one night broke its chains and escaped, and all the mahouts could not chain it again. People in terror of the elephant ran helter-skelter. Now, a brahmin was going that way chanting verses of the 16th Chapter of the Gītā, and even though the mahouts warned him he did not change his path. Instead he saluted the elephant by touching its cheeks and proceeded on his way unhurt by the animal. The King felt great respect for the brahmin when he was told that he owed his miraculous powers to the 16th chapter of the Gītā and he took the brahmin with him to his palace. The King gave him 100,000 golden coins and received from him the Gītā mantra. He began reciting daily certain verses in the 16th Chapter of the Bhagavadgītā.

Some time afterwards the King one day went to an open ground near his palace accompanied by soldiers and set the elephant free from its chain. Then, unheeding the entreaties of the frightened people he approached the elephant, saluted it by touching its cheeks and came away unhurt. He could act in this fashion because of his firm faith in the efficacy of the Bhagavadgītā. And afterwards he placed his son, on the throne and himself led a life of recluse repeating the Bhagavadgītā.

Some Purāṇas have another version of this episode. Duṣṭāsana was a servant of Khadagabāhu’s son and he attempted to catch the elephant but was killed by it. He attained salvation by hearing the 17th Chapter of the Bhagavadgītā.

Duṣṭāsana, an idiot, betting a huge sum of money with the junior mahouts of the elephant and unheeding the warnings of several people once mounted the elephant. Children agitated the animal and Duṣṭāsana fell down from its back. The angry animal stamped the fool to death, and its rage having not yet subsided it threw around his bones. Duṣṭāsana, who ended his life thus was reborn as an elephant and was owned by King Jayadeva of Ceylon for a long time. A great friend of King Khadagabāhu, Jayadeva presented the elephant to him. At the sight of its brothers and other relations memory about its previous birth dawned on the elephant. And, it lived in great grief. After some days the King presented the animal to a poet pleased at his samasyāpurāṇa (filling the three lines of a stanza in tune with the fourth line given). The poet sold the elephant to the King of Mālava as it got ill with fever. In spite of the best treatment administered to it the elephant seemed to be nearing its end. Without either eating or drinking or sleeping the animal stood motionless shedding tears day and night. One day, the Mālava King visited the elephant when, to the surprise of all assembled there, the elephant spoke to the King thus: “Oh, King: if a brahmin recites the 17th Chapter of the Bhagavadgītā I will be completely cured of my illness.”

Accordingly a brahmin was brought. As soon as he chanted the Gītā and sprinkled water on its head it got rid of its animalhood, ascended the divine aeroplane and shone forth like Indra. The Mālava King also began daily reciting the Bhagavadgītā and within a short time afterwards attained salvation. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 8).

DUŚŚILĀ. A harlot who lived in Pratiṣṭhāna. One Devadāsa was her husband. When Devadāsa had once gone to the palace on some business Duśśilā hid her paramour, with the object of doing away with her husband, on top of the ceiling of her room. He killed Devadāsa while the latter was sleeping in the night. Next day when people gathered at her house she gave out the story that her husband was murdered by thieves. But the people got the true story about the death of Devadāsa from his four-year-old son and beat Duśśilā to death. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Śaktiyalolabika, Tarāṅga 2).

DUṬṬĀBUDDHI. See Mitrabheda.

His reign. Within a short period of time Duṣyanta became the emperor of India. (Adi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 3). His empire extended up to the sea, and he became an object of envy for other rulers. Under his rule the four castes flourished in affluence. None was threatened with illness or by thieves. The seasons marched in due order, the clouds raining at the proper time etc. “Like the ocean not getting agitated, and putting up with everything with unique patience like the earth, Duṣyanta ruled the country” (Adi Parva, Chapter 68).

¹ The genealogy given above has been taken jointly from Agnipurāṇa, Bhagavata and Viṣṇupurāṇa. But the Mahābhārata (Adi Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 17) gives Ilīn as the name of Duṣyanta’s father and Ratamīś as that of his mother. It may be surmised that Santurodha and Ilīn were one and the same individual.
3) Marriage and birth of son. Once Dusyanta set out to a forest to hunt. Seated in his chariot, which moved with the speed of Garuḍa he came to a beautiful forest. Weary with hunger and thirst the King, leaving the attendants behind walked into the hermitage of the sage Kanva. Proceeding along the sand on the banks of Mālini river and drinking with his eyes the beauties of the hermitage he reached Kanva's āśrama. 'Who is there in the āśrama?' queried the King, whereupon Sakuntalā, the foster daughter of Kanva came out, and in the absence of her father welcomed the guest. Enchanted by the beauty of Sakuntalā, the King questioned her about her lineage and she told him the story about Viśvāmitra's love for Menakā, and Kanva bringing up their daughter. Dusyanta felt deep love for her, and in accordance with rules prescribed in Dharma śāstras married her in the Gāndharva way. He also accepted her stipulation that the son born to her should become the next monarch. Sakuntalā got pregnant, and after promising that she would duly be conducted to the palace Dusyanta returned.

No sooner had Dusyanta left the āśrama than Kanva, who had been out returned to the āśrama. With his divine eyes he understood what had happened in his absence. Kanva blessed Sakuntalā that she would have an excellent son, who would become an excellent ruler of the world surrounded by the sea.

In due course of time Sakuntalā delivered a son. Kanva did the rites pertaining to the birth of the child, and named the child Sarvadamana. The child grew up to become six years old, and Kanva realising that the further stay of Sakuntalā and her son at the āśrama would stand in the way of the child's welfare and progress sent the mother and the child to Hastināpura, the capital of Dusyanta, attended by his disciples. When they reached Dusyanta's palace and sent word to him about their arrival he, pleading ignorance about his marriage with Sakuntalā, refused to receive her and the child. Dusyanta and Sakuntalā hotly argued the question. At last, when Sakuntalā, with swelling emotions was about to leave the palace, a celestial voice announced that Dusyanta had, in fact, married Sakuntalā, that Sarvadamana was his son and that he (Sarvadamana) would become a great ruler under the name Bharata. (Adi Parva, Chapters 69-74).

4) Other information. (1) Dusyanta did not eat flesh. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 64).

(2) After his death Dusyanta stayed in Yama's assembly worshipping him. (Sabha Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 15).

DUSYANTA II. A son born to King Ajamiḍha of the Pūru dynasty by his wife called Niśī. He had a brother called Paramesṭhī. (Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 33). Both the Kings, Dusyanta and Paramesṭhī are referred to as Pāṇḍālas also. (Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 33).

DĪTALĀKṢANA (M). The word 'dīta' has a special meaning in Viśvaśīta. If a man is bitten by a snake, the man who goes to the Viśvaśīta to speak to him about it and bring him if necessary is called 'dīta'. From the external signs and symbols of the dīta and from words spoken by him the Viśvaśīta understands whether the person bitten by the snake would die or survive. These signs and words of the 'dīta' are called lākṣanas. The following are some of the important dūtalākṣanas.

1. The caste of the person bitten by the snake and the caste of the dūta.
2. The first word uttered by the dūta. If it is the name of the patient, it has a special significance.
3. If the dūta makes an incomplete sentence; it is a significant lākṣana.
4. The things carried by the dūta such as stick, rope, knife.
5. The colour of the clothes worn by the dūta.
6. The tone in which the dūta speaks. These are the lākṣanas from which the doctor knows whether the patient can be cured. (Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Brahma Parva, Chapter 35, Verses 19,20).

DVĀDAŚABHUJA. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 57).

DVĀDAŚĀDIṬYA (S). The twelve sons born to Kaśyapa by his wife Aditi are called Dvādaśādiṭyas (Twelve Adityas) The word Aditiyā means 'born of Aditi'. As it occurs in Agni Purāṇa (Ch. 51) a table, showing the names of the twelve Adityas and the sign of the Zodiac over which each Aditiyā predominates and the colour of it, is given below.

DVĀDAŚĀŚKĀ. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 88).

DVĀDAŚĪVRATA. A fast ordained in accordance with the Hindu religion to make an end of the sorrow and misery in life. There is a history behind this fast or vow which is performed in the bright lunar fortnight in the month of Phālguna (Mina). It is given below.

Once King Mahābali, with a vast army of Asuras, went to the realm of the gods and drove them out of heaven. Aditi was much grieved at the misfortune that befell her sons. Kaśyapa her husband asked her the cause of her grief. She told him about the fall of gods, and asked him for a remedy. Kaśyapa told her to observe Dvādaśīvrata. Aditi took Dvādaśīvrata and Mahābali was pushed down to Pāṭalā by Mahāviṣṇu who incarnated as Vāmana. From that day onwards Dvādaśīvrata is considered to be holy fast. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

DVĀIDHĪBHĀVA. One of the six qualities, others being Sandhi, Viṛgha, Yaṇa, Āsana, and Sanūra. Sandhi is to make peace with the enemy. Viṛgha is war. The journey to battle is Yaṇa. Āsana is, not going for war. Dvāidhībhāva is dividing his army into two, i.e. if the poet Kālidāsa has made variations, suitable to his work, the Abhinavagupta-Sākuntalā. Some deviations from the Mahābhārata story may be noticed in the works of some other poets also.

1. This version of the episode is found in Mahābhārata. The poet Kālidāsa has made variations, suitable to his work, the Abhinavagupta-Sākuntalā. Some deviations from the Mahābhārata story may be noticed in the works of some other poets also.
2. Different names of Adityas occur in different Purāṇas. The names given here are based on the Agni Purāṇa.
army rose against the King, he should bring one party on his side and make the two parties fight with each other. Sanśīya was to yield to the powerful. (Manu-ṃrtī, Chapter 7, Stanza 160).

DVAIPĀYANA. A synonym of Vyāsa. He who is born in an island, i.e. Vyāsa. (See under Vyāsa).

DVAIPĀYANAM. A lake in Kuruksetra. During the battle of Bhārata, Duryodhana ran away from the battlefield and hid himself in this lake. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 80, Stanza 47).

DVAITAVANA. A forest in which the Pāṇḍavas lived during their forest life. (M.B. Vana Parva).

DVAṆARA. A friend of Kali, who went to the Sva-asīvara of Damarāṇī accompanied by Dvāpara. (See under Kali).

DVAṆARA II. The deity of Dvāpara Yuga (the age of Dvāpara). (See under Yuga).

DVAṆARA YUGA. See under Yuga.

DVAṆĀRA. (DVAṆĀVATI; DVAṆĀVATI;). The place where the capital of Śrī Kṛṣṇa stood.

1) General information. The King Jarāśandha was the enemy of the Yādavas. To save themselves from the attack of Jarāśandha, the Yādavas united themselves under Śrī Kṛṣṇa, and built a strong city in the western islands. That beautiful city was called Dvārakā. Kuśa-sthali, is another name of this city. The beautiful mountain Raivataka stood as a fortress round the city which was so strongly built that it was not possible even for the gods to enter it. Even women could fight sitting inside the forts. The fortress Raivataka was three yojanas long. In each yojana three divisions of the army were camped. In each yojana there were hundred doors, with a strong army to guard each of them. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 14).

2) Śrī Kṛṣṇa in Dvārakā. Dvārakā was the abode of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. It excelled even Amarāvati in beauty. There was an efficient council of the leaders of the Yādavas. Daśākrīt was the name of that council. Many Yādava leaders Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Balabhādra and other luminaries attended the council. The royal palace was as luminous as the Sun and the Moon. Dvārakā was built by Viśvakārmā. There were ditches on the four sides of Dvārakā. There were four beautiful parks called Nandana, Misraka, Cittaratha and Vaiḥbhāra. The mountain Raivata acted as the eastern rampart of the city. Three other mountains, Vepumanda on the North, Sukakśa on the west and Latāveṣṭa on the south acted as natural forts. On the east of the city there was a beautiful lake. The city had fifty main gates to which sharp machine rockets, big iron wheels etc. were fitted for protection. It had an area of 96 yojanas (leagues). (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 38, Daśāṅga-tya pāṭha).

3) Other details. (1) Arjuna visited Dvārakā in the course of his pilgrimage. It was then and there that he married Subhadra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, 3 Chapters from 217).

(2) The King of Śalva attacked Dvārakā. The Yādavas drove him back. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 15).

(3) Dvārakā is a city, procuring beatitude. There is a bath known as Pīṇḍāraka which is pure and divine. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 65).

(4) It was at Pīṇḍāraka that Nṛga, a chameleon attained beatitude. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 7).

(5) It was here that the pestle of iron, which proved the cause of destruction of the Yādavas, came out of the stomach of Śāmba. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 1).

(6) After the death of Śrī Kṛṣṇa this city was swept over by the sea. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 41).

4) Modern view. According to the modern researchers Dvārakā was situated in the sea to the west of Gujārat. There is a small locality near the sea, still called Dvārakā, and the principal occupation of the people of this place still is cattle-rearing, and trading in milk. They claim to be the descendants of the family of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

DVAṆĀPĀLAPURA. An ancient city of Bhārata. Nakula subjugated this city. (Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 11).

DVAṆĀVATI. See under Dvārakā.

DVAṆĀYĀSA. An ancient Kingdom in Bhārata. The King of this country brought gifts to the palace of Yuddhiṣṭhira. (Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 17).

DVIMĪDHA. A King of the Pūru dynasty. He was the brother of Ajamīdha and Purumīdha. (Agni Purāṇa, Stanza 278).

DVIMŪRDHAN. A son of Hiranyākṣa. Śambara, Śakuni, Dvīmūrdhan, Śaṅku and Ārya were the sons of Hiranyākṣa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

DVITĀ. An ancient hermit. He was the son of Gau-tama. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 37, that by the curse of his brother he became a wolf and a begot monkey, scorpion, etc.

DVIVIDA. A monkey. He was a warrior in the army of Śrī Rāma.

DYAU (DYU). One of the Aṣṭavas (eight Vasus). (For particulars see under Aṣṭavas).

DYU (DYAU). One of the Aṣṭa Vasus (eight Vasus). This Vasu has another name Āpa. (For details see under Aṣṭavas).

DYUMĀN. A King of the dynasty of Bhārgava. (Bhāga-vata, Skandha 9).

DYUMATSENAA I. A King. He was the father of Satyavān. He ruled over the Śalva country. Śaibyā was his wife. By and by he lost his eye-sight. Then another King conquered his country, Dyumatena who lost everything went to the forest with his child Śaibyā and child, Satyavān. (For particulars of how Satyavān married Sāvītī and how Dyumatena regained his lost kingdom, see under Satyavān).

DYUMATSENAA II. A King who fought with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 38). He used to attend the council of Yuddhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 4).

DYUTAPARVA. A subsection of Sābhā Parva, (Chapters 46 to 73), in the Mahābhārata.

DYUTI. A goddess who protected Arjuna. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 37, Stanza 38).

DYUTIMĀN I. A King of the Madra country. Viyājyā the daughter of this King was the wife of Sahevo, one of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 80).

DYUTIMĀN II. A King of the Śalva country. He gave his country to Rṣiīka and attained heaven. (M.B, EKÀDÀŚATATTVA (S). Five Jñānendriyas, five Kar-mendriyas and mind constitute the Ekādāśatattvas (eleven tattvas).

EKĀDASETEJOGUNA (S). Sparśa, Samkhya, Purāṇāma, Prthakvya, Sainyoga, Viśhāga, Paratva, Aparatva, Vega, Rūpa and Dravatva. (Tarkadipikā) are the eleven tejognas.

EKĀDĀṢI. The eleventh day after a new moon or full moon. The vrata observed on this day is called the Ekādāşī vrata. King Ambariṣa observed very strictly and continuously the Ekādāšī Vrata to obtain the status of Indra. (See under Ambariṣa.) (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata). This vrata would fetch food for the hungry and salvation for those who are in search of it. (Agni Purāṇa). The method of observing this vrata is detailed below:

Those who observe the Ekādāšī vrata should be on a regulated diet excluding meat and avoid sexual acts on the Daśami day, the day preceding Ekādāśī. On both the Ekādāśī days in a month one should not take any food at all. The period which combines Ekādāśī with Dhāvāsī (the twelfth day) is called Harivāsara because of the presence of Viṣṇu at that time. That is a good time for doing sacred yāojis. That day where there is only a small portion of Ekādāśī and the rest Dhāvāsī is the best day for yāojis. Trayodaśī (the thirteenth day) is good for breaking the fast. The day which merges Dhāvāsī into Trayodaśī is the best day for breaking the fast. Do not observe the Vrata on a day which combines Daśami with Ekādāśī. Hell is the result if one does so.

Completely abstaining from food on the Ekādāśī day you should take food on the Dhāvāsī day. As you take your food you should pray like this: "Bhuṅkṣeham Puṇḍarikākṣa śarāṇam ma bhavācyuta". (Oh, Puṇḍarikākṣa, I am going to break my fast. Oh, Bhagavan, let you be my heaven). If an Ekādāśī comes on a Puṇya—Puṣya—day in the bright half of the month that day should on any account be observed. That day would give the observer unlimited good result and that Ekādāśī is qualified as Pāpaṇāsini (destroyer of all evils). When Ekādāśī and Dhāvāsī happen to combine on a Tīruṇgaṇa (Srāvaṇa) day the Ekādāśī is qualified as Viṣṇya. That day gives prosperity to devotees. It is also called Viṣṇya if an Ekādāśī comes in the month of Pālgaṇa (March) on a Puṇya (Puṣya) day. The wise exot this day as one promising cures of good effects. On the Ekādāśī day you should do Viṣṇu Puja which is productive of universal happiness. He who does so will acquire children and wealth in this world and attain Viṣṇuloka on death. (Chapter 178, Agni Purāṇa)

EKĀDĀṢENDRIYA (S). Śrotṛa, Tvak, Čakṣus, Ējñā, Graṇā, Vāk, Pā́, Pāḍa, Pā́ (anus) Upaśtha and mind are the eleven sense-organs.

EKĀHAMSATĪRTHA. An ancient holy place of north India. If a man bathes in a sacred pond he will get the benefit of giving away as charity a thousand cows. (Sloka 20, Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

EKĀJAṬA. A demoness of the castle of Rāvana. This demoness talked very enticingly to coax Sitā to surrender herself to Rāvana. (Sarga 23, Vālmiki Rāma-yaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa).

1. The names of Ekādāśarudras are found differently in different Purāṇas.
EKAJĀTA. A warrior of Skandadeva. (Sloka 53, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

EKKĀSA I. A demon born to Kaṭaprapājapati of his wife Danu. (Sloka 29, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

EKKĀSA II. A soldier of Skandadeva. (Sloka 58, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

EKKĀṢARAKOŚA. Each and every letter has got a separate meaning. The dictionary describing this meaning is known as Ekkāṣarakośa. (Chapter 348, Agni Purāṇa).

EKALĀVYA I. Son of Hiranyakadu, a King of the foresters. He went to Droṇācārya to learn archery. Droṇācārya refused to accept him as a disciple because he was a Śūdra. Undaunted he went to the forests, made a replica of the preceptor in clay and standing before it started practising archery. Soon he became a matchless archer.

Some time later the Pāṇḍavas went to the forests for hunting. One of the hunting dogs wandering saw Ekalāvya and started barking. Ekalāvya sent seven arrows to its mouth and kept it open. When the dog returned to Arjuna he was dumbfounded at the skill of the archer and when he came to know the archer was an unknown disciple of Droṇa his disappointment knew no bounds. Droṇa had once declared that Arjuna was the best and topmost of his disciples. Arjuna went and complained to Droṇācārya. Droṇācārya called Ekalāvya to his side and asked him to give him as "Gurudakṣinā" (fee to the preceptor) his right-hand thumb. Without the least hesitation Ekalāvya offered his thumb to the guru and from that day onwards his skill faded and he became inferior to Arjuna. (Chapter 132, Ādi Parva). Ekalāvya was killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Sloka 77, Chapter 48, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

A son of Ekalāvya seized the sacrificial horse of Arjuna and was killed by Arjuna (Chapter 83, Āsvamedhika Parva, M.B.).

EKALĀVYA II. A King who was a rebirth of an asura, Krodhavaśa. He participated in the great war on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. (Chapter 4, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

EKĀṆĀṆĀ. A daughter of Yaśodā and hence a sister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. It was because of her that Kṛṣṇa could slay Kaūśika. (Chapter 38, Śabhā Parva, M.B.).

EKAPADA. A country of ancient Bhārata. The King and the people of this country came to the Rājāsūya of Yudhīṣṭhira but were prevented from entering inside because of the uncontrollable crowd inside. (Sloka 17, Chapter 51, Śabhā Parva, M.B.).

EKAPARṆĀ. Sister of Durgā. Ekaparṇā, Ekapāṭalā and Āparṇā were the three daughters of Himāvān born of his wife Menā. Ekaparṇā ate only one leaf and Ekapāṭalā ate a bunch of leaves. Āparṇā did not eat even a leaf. Ekaparṇā was married to a sage called Devala and Ekapāṭalā to a sage called Ījaigīśavya. (Chapter 18, Hari Vanaśa). (See under Himāvān).

EKAPĀṬALTĀLA. See under Ekaparṇā.

EKAPĀṬI. 1. See under Ekacakra.

EKAPĀṬI II. A synonym of Bhagavān Viśṇu. (Sloka 95, Chapter 149, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

EKAPIŅGA (EKAPIŅGA). Another name of Vaśira-vanā. Once Vaśira-vanā looked jealously at Pārvati seated on the left side of Paramēśvara and instantly his one eye burst. When Pārvati regained her peace of mind that one eye of Vaśira-vanā was changed into pingala colour. (See under Kubera).

EKARATATIRTHA. A sacred place. If one stays at this place righteously for one day one would attain Brahmaloka. (Sloka 182, Chapter 83, Vana Parva, M.B.).

EKĀŚRĪNGA. One of the Saptapiṭas. Vairāja, Agni-vāṭa, Gārhapati, Somapa, Ekaśṛṅga, Catuveda and Kāla are the seven piṭras. All these seven stayed in Brahmasabha worshipping him. (Slokas 47 and 48, Chapter 11, Sahā Parva).

EKĀŚRTA. See under Vararuci.

EKATA. 1) General information. An ancient sage. He was the son of the Mahārṣi Gautama. He had two brothers, Dhvita and Trita.

2) How Ekata became a wolf by a curse. There is a story of how Ekata and Dhvita duped Trita in the Mahābhārata. When Gautama died Trita became the chief of the three. Dhvita and Ekata did not like this. Once all the three were passing by a forest with a herd of cows for a yāga. Trita was walking ahead and the other two were following him with the cows. At a strategic point on the way the brothers carried away the cows by a separate route without the knowledge of Trita. When Trita came to know of the loss he was greatly distressed. On reaching the shores of the river Sarasvati, he was frightened by a wolf and running to escape from the animal fell into a dilapidated well. He performed a yāga from where he lay. Assuming a creeper inside the well to be Somalatā, Trita recited the Ṛks and the devas responded to his prayer. Devas like Brhaspati graciously appeared before him and asked him to demand a boon from them. Trita replied that his desire was to worship the gods standing on the waves of the river Sarasvati. Accordingly the river was made to flow that way and standing on the waves Trita worshipped the gods. After that he went home and cursed his brothers and made Ekata and Dhvita into wolves.

3) Other details.

i) Ekata was a sage much banked on by the people of western Bhārata. (Sloka 31, Chapter 208, Śantī Parva).

ii) Ekata attended a yajña conducted by Uparicaravasu (Chapter 336, Śantī Parva).

iii) Ekata accompanied by Dhvita and Trita once went to Śvetadvīpa to visit Nārāyaṇa. (Sloka 12, Chapter 39, Śantī Parva).

iv) Ekata and his two brothers were among the sages who visited Bhrīṣma while he was lying on his bed of arrows. (Sloka 7, Chapter 26, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

v) All these three sages lived on the west coast as Rtvikṣ of Vāruṇa. (Chapter 15, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

vi) Śukta 150 in Mahāyāna I of Ṛgveda contains the eulogistic songs of Trita, one among the trio. (See under Trita).

EKATVACA. A follower of Skandadeva. (Sloka 24, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

EKĀVALI. Wife of Ekvira, founder of the Hēyaya dynasty. (For details see under Ekvira).
EKAVIRA (HEHAYA). A founder of the Hehaya line of kings.

2) Birth of Ekavira. Once there was a King called Revanta who was an intimate friend of Indra. One day riding on Uccaihṛavas, Indra’s horse, he went to Vaikuṇṭha. Fascinated by the arresting beauty of Revanta, Mahālakṣṇi sat gaping for a while and did not hear what Visnu talked to her. Visnu was offended and lost his temper. Lakṣṇi was looking with interest alternately at Revanta and the horse when Visnu cursed her to be born as a mare on earth. Horrified, shedding tears, Lakṣṇi begged for relief. Visnu decreed that she would return to Vaikuṇṭha after giving birth to a son who would be equal in glory to Visnu himself. Mahālakṣṇi came to Earth taking the shape of a mare and lived in a forest situated at a point where the rivers Kālindi and Tamasā meet and where once Sūryapatiṇi stayed and did penance. Meditating on Sīva she lived there for a thousand divine years and then one day Sīva and Pārvatī appeared before her and asked her what she wanted. She then said “Oh, Bhagavan, Mahāviṣṇu cursed me and made me into a mare. He has decreed that I would go back after bringing forth a son as glorious as Visnu. From whom am I to bear a son like this?” Sīva promised to find a solution and going to Vaikuṇṭha sent Visnu to earth in the form of a horse. Visnu came to Lakṣṇi and they lived together for some time and soon a son was born to Lakṣṇi. Leaving the child in the forest both of them went back to Vaikuṇṭha. It is this child who later on became the famous King, Ekavira. It was because he was born of a horse that he got the names, Hehaya and Hālihaya. (Skandha 6, Devī Bhāgavata).

3) How Ekavira came to the palace. It was at this time that Satajit, son of the grandson of Yayati was doing penance to obtain a son. He was also doing penance in the forest situated at a point where the rivers Kālindi and Tamasā meet. One night a Vidyaḍhara named Campaka came with a Vidyaḍhārī named Madīlāsa and seeing the infant lying helpless in the forest took it to Devaloka. Indra recognised it as the child born to Visnu and Lakṣṇi on earth while they were living as horse and mare and so the Vidyaḍhāra put it back on earth in the same place as before. Immediately Lakṣṇi—Nārāyanas appeared before Satajit doing penance there and asking him to take care of a child lying helpless in another side of the forest disappeared. Immensely pleased at this Satajit took the child to his palace and brought him forth as his own son giving the child the name Ekavira. When the boy became a prince, Satajit crowned Ekavira King and went to the forest with his queen and after doing penance there for sometime attained Visṇu-loka. (Skandha 6, Devī Bhāgavata).

4) Ekavira marries Ekavati. Once Prince Ekavira accompanied by the son of the minister went for a pleasure trip to the banks of the river Gaṅgā. It was spring and the prince wandering about enjoying the sight of a flowery forest was soon arrested by the sight of a sweet smelling lotus with a hundred petals blooming in the river. By the side of the lotus was standing a beautiful damsel weeping. The prince went to her and asked her the reason for her weeping. After great persuasion she replied thus: “Oh, Prince, there is a country not far from yours which is now being ruled over by a very righteous King called Raibhya. His queen is called Rukmaṅkāh. They had no children for a very long time and so Raibhya conducted a Putrakāmęṣṭi yāga. When ghee was poured profusely into the sacrificial fire the flames rose up to great heights and from inside the flames came out a lovely maiden. The King named her Ekāvali and bought her forth as his daughter. I am Yaśovatī the daughter of the minister there. We were of the same age and so I was asked to live with her as her companion. She was very fond of lotuses and the King constructed big ponds with lotuses in them for her recreation. Yet she used to go to other ponds also in search of lotuses.

One day we came to this side of the river Gaṅgā to play. Then a demon of name Kālaketu came and kidnapped her. I followed her. She never surrendered to the enticements and persuasions of Kālaketu. Her father wanted her to be married to Ekavira, King of Hehaya. Kālaketu sent her to prison. Without knowing what to do next I am standing here weeping.

Hearing this Ekavira went to Pātalā and defeating Kālaketu released Ekāvali and brought both Ekāvali and Yaśovatī to the palace of Raibhya. Pleased at this Raibhya gave his daughter in marriage to Ekavira. Kārtaṛivājūnā was born in the family of Ekavira. (Skandha 6, Devī Bhāgavata).

ELĀPUTRA. A serpent born to Kaśyapa of his wife Kadrū. This serpent was very intelligent. Once there arose a dispute between Vinatā and Kadrū over the colour of the tail of the horse of Indra, Uccaihṛavas. Kadrū argued that there were black hairs in the tail while Vinatā held there were none. Really there were no black hairs and Kadrū to win the argument wanted her sons to go and hang on the hairs to create a black colour. The serpents like Vāsuki and others refused to do so and Kadrū then cursed them saying that they would all be burnt to death at the Sarpasattra of Janamejaya. To take measures to get free from this curse a meeting of the serpents under the leadership of Śesā and Vāsuki was held and in that assembly Elāputra made a stirring speech. (Chapter 38, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ELI AND PUCCA. (Eli=rat, Pucca=Cat).

The story of the cat and the rat described by the poet Kūṭṭhaṇa Nāmiḥā is from Kathāsaritsaṅgara. The story in original is the following.

Once there lived on a big banyan tree near the city of Vidhā a mongoose, an owl, a cat and a rat. The mongoose and the rat lived in two separate hollows at the foot of the tree, the cat in a cavity in the centre of the tree and the owl on the branches at the top. Of these the rat could be eaten by all the other three and the cat could kill all the rest. The rat and the mongoose afraid of the cat did stir out only during night time and the cat moved about day and night afraid of none wishing to catch hold of the rat and eat it. Their common place of activity was a rice-field nearby.

Once a forester laid a net to catch the cat and the cat fell into the trap and lay there hanging inside the net. The rat coming that way saw the plight of the cat and jumped with joy. But soon the owl and the mongoose came to the spot and seeing their enemy, the cat, imprisoned rushed to catch hold of the rat. The rat then did a very clever thing. It went and tore open the net imprisoning the cat and when the cat jumped out of the net the owl and the mongoose ran away and disappeared. The rat went to its hole. This is a story to demonstrate the fact that with a change in the situation an enemy may turn out to be a friend. (Tārāṅga 7, Madanamañcukālāmbaka, Kathāsārītāgara).

ELLU. An oil seed. (Sesame). Ellu originated from the body of Kaśyapa. Because Ellu is born of the body of Kaśyapa, King of Rṣis, it is considered as divine to offer Ellu to anybody. (Sloka 10, Chapter 66, Anuśāna Parva).

ELLU. 'This word in Malayāḷam means 'Seven'.

(1) The seven qualities which would enhance prosperity are the following: Dhaiya (courage), Śama (forbearance), Dama (control of the sense), Śucita (cleanliness), Dayā (compassion), Mṛduvāk (geniality of speech) and Ahimsā (not giving injury to your friends).

(2) The seven divisions of Kerala are Venāṭ, Pūlīnāṭ, Karkanāṭ, Cītanāṭ, Kuṭanāṭ and Malaya-manāṭ.

(3) The seven Cittāsālasyas are Daylight Candra, Woman past the prime of life, a pond without lotuses, a lovely person without learning, a lord greedy of wealth, a virtuous but poor man and a cruel royal attendant.

(4) Seven Karmas: Bravery, skill, courage, resourcefulness, non-withdrawal from war, magnanimity and commanding power.

(6) Seven Ciraṇījīvas (People who never die): Āsvatthāmā, Bali, Vyāsa, Hanūmān, Vibhīṣaṇa, Kṛpa and Paṇḍurāma.

(8) Seven islands: Jambudvīpa, Plāksadvīpa, Puṣkara-dvīpa, Kraunçadvīpa, Śakadvīpa, Śāmaladvīpa, and Kuṣadvīpa.

(9) Seven Dhātus: Rasa, Rakta, Māṁsa, Medas, Asthi, Majjā and Śukla.

(10) Seven rivers: Gāṅgā, Yamunā, Godāvari, Sarasvatī, Narmadā, Sindhu and Kāverī.

(11) Seven Nādiś: Īḍā, Pīngalā, Suṣumnā, Muṣā, Āmūṁṣ, Asthiṣhāvī, Gāndhārī.

(12) Seven wives of Vasudeva: Devaki, Śrutadeva, Yaśodā, Śrutisrāva, Śrīdevā, Upadeva and Surūpā.

(13) Seven mountains: Himāvān, Niṣadhā, Vindhyā, Mālyavān, Pāriyātra, Gandhamādānam and Hemakeṭā.

(14) Seven Pāṭalas: Atala, Vītalā, Sutala, Nītala, Tālatala, Raṣṭatala, and Mahātatala.

(15) Seven holy places: Ayodhyā, Mathurā, Māyā, Kāśi, Kāñcī, Avantī and Dvāravatī.

(16) Seven Maruts: Āvaḥa, Saṁvāha, Pravaha, Udvaḥa, Vivaḥa, Parivaḥa and Parāvāha.

(17) Seven Vargas: King, Minister, Country, fort, treasury, army and strength of friends and relatives.

(18) Seven colours: White, black, red, green, yellow, blue and violet.

(20) Seven doṣas (defects): Laziness, arrogance, ignorance, profligacy, Hauteur, pride and selfishness.

(21) Seven vices: Hunting, dice, womanising, drinking squandering, harshness of speech and cruelty.

(22) Seven seas: Lavaṇa, Iksu, Surā, Sarpiṣ, Dadhi, Kṣīra and Śuddodaka.

(23) Seven notes: Saṇḍja, Rṣabha, Gāndhāra, Madhyama, Paścima, Dhaivata and Niṣāda.

ERAKA. A serpent born in the family of the Kauravas. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasattra of Janamejaya. (Sloka 16, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

EṬAŞA. A sage who is greatly extolled in the Rgveda. The son of King Svaṭa fought with this sage and it was Indra who saved Eṭasa then. (Sūkta 62, Anuśāna 11, Maṇḍala 1, Rgveda).

EṬAŞA. One of the horses of the Sun. (Sūkta 122, Anuśāna 18, Maṇḍala 1, Rgveda).

There are no words beginning with F. The letter corresponding to F in Indian languages is Ph (ŋ). So all words beginning with this sound come under the letter P.

G

G (ŋ) The letter G means both Gandharva and Vināyaka (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

GABHASTIMĀN. An island. Once the valiant Sahasrabhābu conquered and subjugated it. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

GADĀ. A weapon. An asura called Gada was born to Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Diti. Viṣṇu killed Gada, and Viśvakarmā made a weapon with his bone. Since the weapon was made from Gada’s bone it came to be known as Gādā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 114).

GADĀ I. A brother (Yādava) of Balabhadrārāma.

1) General. Vasudeva had, besides Devalā, seven wives called Rohiṇī, Bhadrā, Mālinī, Madirā, Ilā, Rocanā and Pauravi, and out of the seven Rohiṇī had six sons called Balabhadrārāma, Gāda, Sārāṇa, Durdama, Vikala and Kṛta. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

2) Other details.

(1) Gada was present at the svayāvāvara of Draupadī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 32).

(2) On the marriage of Arjuna with Subhadrā, it was Gada who brought the dowry of Subhadrā from Dvārakā to Indraprastha. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 32).

(3) When Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to Dvārakā Gada received him with embraces. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 35).

(4) Gada also was present on the occasion when the Pāṇḍavas first stepped into the beautiful palace built for them by Maya at Indraprastha. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 39).

(5) Along with the other Yādavas Gada too was present at the rājasūya yajña of Yudhiṣṭhīra. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 16).
(6) Gada held a prominent position among the Yādavas deputed to guard Dvārakā against the onslaught of King Śālva. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 13, Verse 9).

(7) Gada also accompanied Śri Kṛṣṇa to the Asvamedha yajña performed by Yudhīṣṭhīra. (Asvamedha Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 9).

(8) Śri Kṛṣṇa felt uncontrollably angry when Gada was attacked during the mutual fighting with iron rods by the Yādavas which climaxd in their total annihilation. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 45).

GADA II. See Gada.

GADADHARA. A synonym of Mahāviṣṇu. There is a place called Gayā to the north of Mount Kālañjara, to the south of Himālayas, to the cast of Kuṣasthali and to the west of Vasupura. Once a king called Gaya conducted at Gayā an Asvamedha, a Narameđha (yajña at which man is offered as sacrifice) and a Mahāmedha and Mahāviṣṇu acted as gate-keeper of Gayā. As Viṣṇu stood guard there holding the gadā (club) in his hands he came to be known as Gadādhara also thenceforth. (Vāmanā Purāṇa, Chapter 76).

GADAPARVA. A sub-parva of Śalya Parva in Mahābhārata. (See Mahābhārata).

GADAVASĀNA. A particular centre in Madhurāpuri. The name owes its origin to the following reason. When Kṛṣṇa killed Karna, his father-in-law Jarāsandha got so angry that he hurled his gadā (club) ninety-nine times at Madhurāpuri from his capital, Girivraja. The spot where the gadā finally fell came to be called Gadāvāsāna in course of time. (M. B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 18, Verses 22-25).

GĀDHI I. Father of Viśvāmitra.

2) Birth. Kuśa had by his wife Vaidarbhi four sons called Kuśāmba, Kuśānābha, Asūrtarajas and Vasu. Of the four sons Kuśāmba built a city called Kuśāmbi, Kuśānābha built the city of Mohadhayapura, Asūrtarajas the city of Dharmāranya and Vasu the city of Girivraja, and they administered their respective cities. Kuśānābha had hundred daughters by his wife Ghrācī, an Apārā woman. He felt very sad that he had no sons. At last he performed the Putrākāmeṣṭi yajña, and Gādhi was born to him.

3) Gādhi’s children. A son named Viśvāmitra and a daughter called Satyavatī were born to Gādhi. Satyavatī was married to sage Rčκa, After the wedding of his daughter Gādhi crowned Viśvāmitra as the king and left for the forest for tapas. During his stay in the forest Gādhi was put up in the āśrama of Rčκa for a long time and he also went on many pilgrimages. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 49). (See also Satyavatī and Viśvāmitra).

4) Death. Gādhi entered mahāsāmādhi and went to heaven. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 16).

GĀDHI II. A brahmin who showed Viṣṇu’s power of māyā. (See under Māyā).

GAGANAMŪRDHĀ. A reputed asura, son of Kaśyapa-test Visvāmitra came to him disguised as Vasiṣṭha. Visvāmitra came out with rice to receive the guest but by that time the guest had disappeared. But Visvāmitra remained there with the rice for hundred years till Dharmanādeva returned. All these years Gālava looked after Visvāmitra’s comforts. Visvāmitra was immensely pleased with Gālava and allowed him to go away free without any garudākṣiṇā when his education was over. Gālava wanted to give some dakṣiṇā but Visvāmitra refused to accept it. Gālava insisted on giving and then Visvāmitra asked him to give whatever he liked but Gālava wanted the Dakṣiṇā to be named. Disguised with this stubbornness Visvāmitra said “Go and get me eight hundred horses each with one of its ears black”. Gālava was shocked to hear the demand and greatly worried roamied about in search of horses of the type specified. Garuda taking pity on his sad plight took him to the palace of Yayāti. Hearing the story of Gālava Yayāti sent his daughter Madhavi with Gālava saying that if she was given in marriage to any king he would give him the eight hundred horses of the type he required.

Gālava took Madhavi to Haryaśva, a King of the Ikṣvāku line of Kings. Haryaśva was doing penance at that time to obtain a child. Gālava said that Haryaśva would get a son of Madhavi and he should therefore, accept Madhavi and give him in return eight hundred horses each with one ear black. Haryaśva was amenable to the terms but the only difficulty was that he had only two hundred horses of the type specified. Finding this difficulty Madhavi said “Oh, Gālava please do not worry on that account. I have a boon from a brahmāvādī sage that I would remain a maiden even after delivery. So give me in marriage to this King and get two hundred horses. After giving birth to a son to this King take me to another King and get two hundred horses from him and then to another and thus by giving me to four Kings you can get the eight hundred horses you require.”

Gālava liked this plan and so when Madhavi gave birth to a son he took her to Divodāsa, Rājā of Kaśi. When a son was born to him Gālava took her to Uśinara, King of Bhoja. Gālava thus got six hundred horses but there was nobody else to give him the remaining two hundred. When Gālava was contemplating as to what he should do next Garuḍa came to his rescue. He advised Gālava to give six hundred horses and Madhavi in lieu of the remaining two hundred horses to Visvāmitra. Gālava gave Visvāmitra the horses and Madhavi and pleased with the garudākṣiṇā Visvāmitra blessed Gālava. Visvāmitra got a son named Astaka of Madhavi. (See under Astaka).

4) Gālava and Citrasena. Gālava was once having his evening prayers in the river when the spittings from the mouth of Citrasena who was travelling by air above fell on the puñā materials of Gālava. Gālava went and complained to Śri Kṛṣṇa of this and Kṛṣṇa in haste promised to bring before Gālava the head of Citrasena before the sun set. Nārada who heard this went and informed Citrasena of Kṛṣṇa’s vow. Citrasena was frightened to death. But Nārada asked him not to lose hope and advised Śaṇḍhyā and Vāli, wives of Citrasena, to approach Subhadra, sister of Kṛṣṇa, for protection. Both of them went to Subhadra and made a grand fire-pit in front of her palace. Citrasena decided to end his life by jumping into the fire and as he was circling the pit his wives wept loudly. Since her husband Arjuna was away from the palace Subhadra herself ran to the place from where she heard the cries. When they saw Subhadra they begged for ‘Mangalya-bliksa’ (a boon to live with one’s husband). Subhadra agreed to give them that. Then she heard their story in full and only then did she realise that she had undertaken to do the impossible. Yet, to help Subhadra, Arjuna agreed to protect Citrasena. When Śri Kṛṣṇa attacked Citrasena Arjuna defended. The fight then ensued between Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa. Both had very powerful and divine weapons and the world stood on the verge of a collapse by their fight. Then Subhadra did a brave thing. She stood between the two and requested for a cease-fire. Then Śri Kṛṣṇa asked Citrasena to bow down and touch the feet of Gālava. Gālava pardoned him. (Padma Purāṇa).

5) Tapodāna. Gālava once gave Yayāti one eighth portion of the goodness accrued to him by his long penance. (See Yayāti for details).

6) Gālava gets a horse. Patālaketa, a demon, used to give trouble to Gālava daily while he used to do penance. Once this demon sent a deep hot breath to the sky and then a horse fell from the sky. Soon an unknown voice from air said, “This is a very strong horse and it would travel many a yojana in an hour.” Gālava took that horse and gave it to Rādhavai. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 59).

7) Other details regarding Gālava.
(i) He was an intimate friend of King Pratīpa. (Sloka 13, Chapter 20, Harivāma).
(ii) He was a shining member of the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sloka 13, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).
(iii) He was in the court of Indra. (Sloka 10, Chapter 7, Sābhā Parva).
(iv) He conducted a discussion with Nārada on the true nature of real prosperity. (Sloka 5, Chapter 287, Śūntī Parva).
(v) On another occasion he spoke to Dharmaputra on the glory of the universe. (Sloka 52, Chapter 18, Anuśāsana Parva).
(vi) He swore before God to prove his innocence in the lotus-theft involving Agastya. (Sloka 37, Chapter 94, Anuśāsana Parva).
(vii) Śrīgava who married Vyṛdhakanyā was a son of Gālava. (Sloka 14, Chapter 52, Sālyā Parva). For details see under Viśvākarmā.

GAM. Music. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

GAṢĀ. A female attendant of Skanda. (Sālyā Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 3).

GAṢAM. An army division. Three Gulumas form one Gaṇam. (See Aksaṃabhīti).

GAṆAPATI

1) Genealogy. A son of Śiva with face like that of an elephant. As Śiva has appointed this son as chief of the gaṇas (attendants) he is called Gaṇapatī.

2) His birth. While Śiva and Pārvatī assumed the form of monkeys and enjoyed themselves in the forest Pārvatī got pregnant, and Śiva took the semen from the womb and gave it to Vāyu (wind God). Vāyu deposited it in the womb of Aṭṭanā, who delivered a son named Hanumān. Śiva assumed the form of an elephant (tusker) and Pārvatī that of a she-elephant. Pārvatī delivered a son in the form of an elephant. That son was named Gaṇapati. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

3) His tusks broken. Once Parāśurāma arrived at Kailāsa to meet Sīva. At that time Sīva was asleep. So Gaṇapati did not allow him to get in. A duel broke out between them. In that duel one of Gaṇapati’s tusks was broken. (Padma Purāṇa).

4) Gaṇapati turned into crow. An exceptionally hot summer set in once in South India. The whole land became parched. So Agastya went to Sīva and requested for some holy water, and the Lord put Kāverī who was worshipping him just then, in the Kamaṇḍalu (something like a teapot which sannyāsin carry with them) of Agastya and sent him back. Indra, who did not relish this action of Sīva, asked Gaṇapati to somehow or other upset Agastya’s Kamaṇḍalu of holy water, and Gaṇapati, in the guise of a crow went and sat on the brink of the Kamaṇḍalu and thus upset it. Agastya and the crow quarrelled with each other. Then did the crow assume its original form as Gaṇapati and blessed Agastya. Moreover, Gaṇapati filled Agastya’s Kamaṇḍalu with holy water, which the latter distributed among devotees in South India, and that is the present Kāverī river.

5) Other stories about Gaṇapati’s head. The Purāṇas contain two different stories as to how Gaṇapati happened to have the elephant’s head. Once Pārvatī pointed out to Gaṇapati the planet Saturn, and his head got burned down due to the ocular power of Saturn, and according to one story Gaṇapati’s head thus lost was replaced with that of an elephant. The other story is more interesting. When once Sīva tried to enter the room where Pārvatī had gone to take her bath clad in a single clothing Gaṇapati prevented Sīva from doing so. Sīva, enraged at the obstruction made by Gaṇapati, cut off his head, and when his anger was cooled down he replaced Gaṇapati’s lost head with that of an elephant. (Padma Purāṇa).

6) Wedding of Gaṇapati. Gaṇapati has two wives called Siddhī and Buddhī. When Gaṇapati and Subrahmanya attained the age of marriage they were in a hurry to get married. Sīva conducted a test. Sīva and Pārvatī told them that he who returned first after going round the world would be married first. Accordingly Subrahmanya mounted his vehicle (peacock) and set out for a tour round the world. Gaṇapati did nothing of the sort. But after a little time he went round his parents, viz., Sīva and Pārvatī. Asked for an explanation about his action Gaṇapati replied that since the whole universe existed in Sīva and Pārvatī, going around them tantamounted to touring round the world. Pleased at this reply his parents got Gaṇapati married first.

7) Vighnisāravatam. (Power to remove all obstacles). Gaṇapati is called Vighnisāvara because he is the god who removes all obstacles from the paths of men or creates them. Gaṇapati has the power to get anything done without any obstructions as also the power to put obstacles in the path of anything being got done. Therefore, the custom came into vogue of worshipping Gaṇapati at the very commencement of any action for its completion without any hitch or hindrance. Actions begun with such worship would be duly completed, Indians believe. In support of that belief the following story from the 6th tāranga of Lāvāṇakalīṃbakam, Kāttāsarītāgara may be quoted.

The Devas decided to appoint Subrahmanya as chief of the army to kill Tārakāsura. When Indra took up the pot of water purified by mantras to anoint Subrahmanya’s head with it, his hands became benumbed, and he stood agasth. Then Sīva said that any action begun without Gaṇapati’s puja would meet with such obstacles. At once Indra worshipped Gaṇapati and his hands recovered from the paralysed condition. And, Subrahmanya was duly anointed with the holy water.

8) Gaṇapati wrote the Mahābhārata. After the death of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas sage Vyāṣa entered again into meditation. But, the whole story of the Bhārata reflected in the mirror of his mind. He wanted to translate the story into a great poem and requested Brahmā to suggest a suitable person to write the story on his dictation, and Brahmā suggested Gaṇapati’s name. Then Vyāṣa thought about Gaṇapati and he appeared before the sage. But, Gaṇapati did not appreciate the idea of serving as Vyāṣa’s scribe. So he stipulated a condition that he would write down the poem provided Vyāṣa dictated it in such a manner that he had not to lay down his pen even once before the epic was completed. To this Vyāṣa stipulated the counter condition that when he dictated without the least interruption or pause Gaṇapati should not write down the matter without understanding the meaning of it. And, under such conditions the composition of the Mahābhārata was completed within three years. (Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Verses 74-80).

9) Gaṇapati pūja. Gaṇapati occupies the most prominent place among the Devas connected with Sīva. In South India, Gaṇapati pūja came into vogue in the 6th century A.D., and idols of Gaṇapati now extant might have been made at that period. In South India, temples dedicated to Gaṇapati are in no way less in number than those to Subrahmanya. The idol of Gaṇapati is installed at the gateways of villages and forts, under the fig tree, at the entrance of temples and at the southwestern corner of Sīva temples. Two types of idols are important: the Itaṇipīri (the proboscis turned to the left side) and the Valaṇipīri (the proboscis turned to the right side). It is stated that the enormously big belly of Gaṇapati contains in it the whole universe.

10) Synonyms of Gaṇapati.

Vināyako vighnarājo dvaimātura-gaṇādhipaḥ apyeckadanto heranbo lambodaragajānanaḥ. (Amarakōṭa).

(Vināyaka, Vighnarāja, Dvaimātura, Gaṇādhīpa, Ekadanta, Heramba, Lambodara, Gaṇānana).

GANĀ, A dāsi, who served the saptaśīris. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 93).

GANDAKA (GANĀK), A particular locality on the banks of river Gandaki. Bhimasena once conquered this place. (Sabha Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 15).

GANDAKANDU, A Yaka of the assembly of Kubera. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10).

GANDAKI (GANĀKA). A river in northern India which falls into the Gaṅgā.

2) Origin. There arose an argument between the GANDHAKALI

From the churning of Kṣīrādhvī (the milk ocean) and Mahāviṣṇu appeared in the form of Mohini and enticed the asuras away from the subject and gave the nectar to the Devas. Attracted by the great beauty of Mohini, Śiva made love to her, and the sweet produced at the time of their embrace flowed as river Gandhākī through the earth. (Skanda Purāṇa, Āsura Khaṇḍa).

3) It became a holy river. While the worms on the banks of Gandhākī were once collecting soil, they fell into the river, and all at once they attained salvation, the reason being that the water in the river had been formed by the sweet of Viṣṇu and Śiva. And, from that day onwards people began worshipping Gandhākī as a holy river. (Skanda Purāṇa, Āsura Khaṇḍa).

4) Other information.

(i) He who drinks the water of the river is freed from sins. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Verse 20).

(ii) The river is also known as Nārāyaṇī, Śalagṛāmi, Hiraṇvatī and Hiraṇayatī. (Bhūṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 25).

(iii) Śrī Kṛṣṇa Arjuna and Bhīmāsenā also once on their way from Indraprastha to Girirāja crossed this river. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 27).

(iv) The water in Gandhākī is a mixture of the waters of all holy rivers. Therefore, a bath in Gandhākī is of equal value as an Aśvamedha yajña and he who bathes in it will attain Śūryaloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 113).

(v) Gandhākī is one of the rivers which were responsible for the origin of Agni (fire). (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 113).

GANDHAKALI. Another name of Satyavatī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 48).

GANDHAMĀDANA I. A monkey, who had been helpful to Śrī Rāma, was the son of Kubera. (Vālmikī Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kānda, Canto 17, Verse 11). This monkey usually stayed on Mount Gandhamādana. During the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war he led a contingent of monkeys. (Vana Parva, Chapter 283, Verse 5).

GANDHAMĀDANA II. A Rākṣasa King, who stays in Kubera's assembly: (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10).

GANDHAMĀDANA(M). A mountain famed in the Purāṇas and lying to the east of the Himālayas. (Bhāgvata, Pañcama Skanda). The purānic importance of the mountain may be summarised as follows:

(1) Kaśyapaprajapati did tapas at this mountain. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 10).

(2) Ananta (Ādiṣeṣa) had once done tapas here. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 3).

(3) Once Pāṇḍu went to the Satsṛṅga mountain along with his wives Kunti and Mādrī for doing tapas, and on that occasion they visited Gandhamādana also. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 48).

(4) This mountain assumes the form of a divine person, attends Kubera's assembly and worships him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 32).

(5) Śrī Kṛṣṇa in the company of Nārāyaṇarṣṣi spent 10,000 years on this mountain as an anchorite. (Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 11).

(6) Arjuna on his way to Mount Kailāsa to do tapas crossed the Gandhamādana mountain. (Vana Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 41).

(7) Only those who possess power got by tapas will be able to climb this mountain. (Vana Parva, Chapter 140, Verse 22).

(8) There is the Badari tree and under it there is an āśrama of Naranārayana on the heights of this mountain, and Yakṣas stay there always. (Vana Parva, Chapter 141, Verse 22).

(9) Once the Pāṇḍavas, with the aid of Ghaṭotkaca mounted this mountain. (Vana Parva, Chapter 145).

(10) It was here, at this mountain that Maniṁāṇ, a friend of Kubera. (Vana' Parva, Chapter 160, Verse 76).

(11) Kubera, who was driven out of Lāukūka stayed at this mountain during the initial periods. (Vana Parva, Chapter 275, Verse 33).

GANDHĀRA. A stretch of land of ancient Bhārata. It is believed that this land stretched from the shores of river Sindhu to Kābul. Subala was a mighty ruler of this country. His daughter Gandhārī was the wife of Dhrītarāṣṭra. (Sloka 11, Chapter 111, Ādi Parva).

Agni Purāṇa points out a relationship between the Gandhārās and the Drāviḍas. Descending in order from Viṣṇu were Candrá—Budha—Purūravas—Ayus—Nahuṣa—Yāyati—Turvasu. In order from Turvasu were Varga—Gobhanu—Traiśāni—Karanāhma—Marutu—Dusyantu—Varūtha—Gandhīra—Gandhāra. From Gandhāra arose the five different provincialists: Gandhāras, Keralas, Colas, Paṇḍyas and Kolas. (Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa).

GANDHĀRI. Wife of Dhrītarāṣṭra.

1) Birth. There was a King called Subala in the family of Turvasu, brother of Yadu. (For genealogy see under Subala). Subala became the King of the land of Gandhāra. This land extended from the river Sindhu to Kābul. Gandhārī was the daughter of Subala. (Chapter 111, Ādi Parva).

2) Marriage. Gandhārī became a devotee of Śiva even from her childhood. Śiva became pleased with her and blessed her saying that she would bear a hundred sons. Bhīṣma came to know of this and lied planned to get her married to Dhrītarāṣṭra. One day he sent a messenger to Subala making a proposal. Subala knew that Dhrītarāṣṭra was born blind but considering his lineage and the powerful alliance it would make, consented to the proposal of Bhīṣma. Śakuni, brother of Gandhārī, then considered to have an authority, that of his father took Gandhārī to Hastināpura and Dhrītarāṣṭra accepted her as his wife. Gandhārī obeying his father's instructions without a demur accepted her blind husband with such devotion that she made herself blind by tightly covering her eyes with a silk shawl. (Chapter 110, Ādi Parva).

3) Birth of Sons. Once Vyāsa came to her exhausted with hunger and thirst. Gandhārī appeased his hunger and thirst with tasty things to eat and drink. Vyāsa was immensely pleased and he also blessed her and said she would get a hundred sons. Very soon she became pregnant. But even after two years she did not deliver, while Kunti, wife of Pāṇḍu, gave birth to a son. Grief-stricken, she hit hardly on her womb secretly and then a great mass of flesh came out. Then Vyāsa appeared before her and advised her to cut the lump of flesh into a hundred pieces and deposit one each in a jar of ghee. Vyāsa himself cut it into pieces. Gandhārī expressed a desire to have a girl also. Vyāsa cut it into hundred and one pieces and put them in hundred and one jars of ghee. In due time the jars broke and a hundred sons and a daughter came out of the jars. The daughter was named Dus'ālā. For their name see 'Kauravas'. Dhrtrāṣṭra got another son named Yuyutu. (Chapters 115 and 116, Adī Parva.)

4) Gandhārī faints. When Sañjaya reported about the death of Parṇa at the battle both Dhrtrāṣṭra and Gandhārī fainted. (Śloka 55, Chapter 96, Karṇa Parva.)

5) Gandhārī starts to curse the Pāṇḍavas. When the battle was over the sons of Gandhārī and their followers were killed. Dhrtrāṣṭra suggested that the Pāṇḍavas should visit Gandhārī and pay homage to her. The Pāṇḍavas, therefore, went and stood before Gandhārī very respectfully. Vengeance boiled in her heart and her body shivered. Gandhārī was about to curse the Pāṇḍavas when Vyāsa, intervened saying 'Gandhārī! Don't you remember you said that victory would lie on the side of the righteous in this war? Your words are not wasted. The Pāṇḍavas won the battle because right was on their side. So why should you get agitated?' Gandhārī became calm on hearing these words and she admitted that the end of the Kuru dynasty came because of the mistakes of Duryodhana, Śakuni, Karṇa and Duśāsana. She, thereafter, treated the Pāṇḍavas as her own sons. (Chapter 14, Strī Parva, M.B.)

6) Dharmapura's foot-nails become blue. Following the instructions of Dhrtrāṣṭra, the Pāṇḍavas, approached and bowed before Gandhārī. She covered her face with a cloth and wept, tears rolling down her cheeks. When Dharmapura bent to touch her feet the latter saw through the veil on her face the foot-nails of Dharmapura. A few drops of the lachrymal water fell on the foot-nails of Dharmapura making them turn blue instantly. (Chapter 15, Strī Parva.)

7) Gandhārī curses Kṛṣṇa. At the end of the battle the aggrieved Gandhārī went to Kurukṣetra together with Kṛṣṇa and other relatives. Seeing mighty Kings on the Kaurava side lying dead like huge trees lying truncated Gandhārī burst into tears. She knew that Śrī Kṛṣṇa was at the root of all this. Embittered she looked at Kṛṣṇa and cursed him. 'Ho, Kṛṣṇa, thirty-six years from this day you will lose your sons, ministers, friends and relatives. You will become a lone walker in the forests and be killed by trickery.'

It was because of this curse that the Yādava tribe perished and Kṛṣṇa was struck by the arrow of a hunter which made him end his life on earth.

8) The end of Gandhārī. After the great Kurukṣetra battle heart-broken Dhrtrāṣṭra and Gandhārī accompanied by Kuṇṭi, Vidura and Sañjaya went to the forests to spend the rest of their life there. Many people and the Pāṇḍavas accompanied them up to the river Gaṅgā and there near the āśrama of Śatāyaṇā Dhrtrāṣṭra made a hut and lived with Gandhārī and Kuṇṭi. The Pāṇḍavas felt the separation of their relatives unbearable and lived in grief. After six years one day Dharmapura saw his mother, Kuṇṭi, in a dream. He told his brothers about this and they all felt a desire to go to the forest and see their mother. The next day they reached the shores of Gaṅgā. Vyāsa also joined them. Gandhārī and Kuṇṭi expressed a desire to Vyāsa that they would like to see the dead sons and relatives once again. Vyāsa then asked them to go and take a dip in the river. When they rose up after a dip they saw standing on the shores of the river the great warriors Karṇa and Duryodhana and others. By the yogic power of Vyāsa even the blind Dhrtrāṣṭra could get the vision. Very soon the vision faded and the Pāṇḍavas returned to Hastināpura.

Two days after, fire broke out in the forest where Dhrtrāṣṭra was staying. Dhrtrāṣṭra, Kuṇṭi and Gandhārī were burnt to death in that fire. (Chapter 32, śrīmaṇa Pravara.)

9) After the death. Dharmapura performed the obsequies of those who died in the wild fire (śrīmaṇa Pravara, Chapter 30). Leaving the mortal bodies the souls of Dhrtrāṣṭra and Gandhārī entered Kuberaloka. (Śloka 14, Chapter 5, Svargaśrīhana Pravara.)

10) Synonym of Gandhārī. The following words have been used in the Mahābhārata to denote Gandhārī: Gandhārarajadudita, Saubaleiyu, Saubalei, Subala, Subalaputri, and Subalāmaṇjā.

GANDHĀRĪ II. Another Gandhārī, wife of Ajamīdhā, one of the great Kings of the Pāru dynasty. (Śloka 37, Chapter 95, Adī Parva.)

GANDHARVA I. Gandharvas are sons born to the famous Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife, Aśītā (Agni Purana, Chapter 19). Both belonged to the race of the Devas.

GANDHARVA II. A King born in the dynasty of Janañēyā. (Bāgavata, Navama Skandha.)

GANDHARVA. A marriage settled by the boy and the girl of their own accord. A love marriage. There are six different kinds of marriage: Gandhārva, Ārsha, Prājapatyā, Rākṣasa, Āsura and Paśāca. (See under Viśā.)

GANDHARVANAGARA. Vyāsa has compared munis disappearing from sight to the fading out of Gandharvanagara.

"After having thus spoken to the Kuruṣ, and while they were looking on, the band of sages disappeared in a trice like the fading out of Gandharvanagara." (Adī Parva, Chapter 126, Verses 35 and 36).

What is this Gandharvanagara? The following description occurs in Hindi Sādāsāgara. "Owing to different optical illusions (sight) of man, villages and cities may appear to exist in the sky and also on seas, rivers, etc. When during summer the air on the upper strata of deserts, tundras, etc. is heated, expanded, and rises up, the light passing through it becomes multi-coloured and gives reflections in the sky in the form of village parts or cities. Also can be seen therein reflections of trees, boats etc. One such reflection may be cast on earth also. This is a mere optical illusion. This reflection immediately fades out also. This unreal city which is an optical illusion is Gandharvanagara.

GANDHARVASENA. Daughter of Dhanavāhana (a gandharva) who lived in Svyamprabhsānagara on Mount Kailāsā. She was cured of leprous by observing somavāravarta. (Skandha Purāṇa).

GANDHARVATIRTHA. An ancient place of pilgrimage on the banks of Sarasvatī in North India. The gandharva called Vibhāvasu usually dances at this place with his companions. Balabhadra Rāma once visited this holy place. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 9).

GANDHARVI. The first mother of horses. Kaśyapaprajāpati had by his wife Krodhavāsa ten daughters: Mrgrī, Mrgamandā, Hari, Bhadramatā, Mātāgī, Śārdūlī, Śveṭā, Surabhi, Suraśī, and Kadrū. Of the ten girls, Surabhi in due course of time became mother of two daughters, Rohini and Gandharvī. From Rohini was born the cattlebreed and horses were born from Gandharvī. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranya Kāṇḍa, Canto 14).

GANDHĀVATī I. The name Satyavatī (Kāli) was assumed when sage Parāśara had swept away her mātsyagandha (fish smell). She got another name Yojanangandhī. (Adi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 80).

GANDHĀVATī II. The city of Vāyu (the wind God). There are said to be nine cities on top of Mount Mahāmeru: (1) Manovatī of Brahmā at the centre, (2) Just on the eastern side of it Amaravatī of Indra, (3) Agni’s Tejovatī in the south-eastern corner, (4) Maya’s Samyamānī in the south, (5) Nīrūti’s Kṛṣṇājanā in the south-western corner, (6) Śraddhāvatī of Varuṇa on the west, (7) Gandhāvatī of Vāyu in the north-western corner, (8) Mahodayā of Kubera on the north, and (9) Yaśovatī of Iṣāna in the north-eastern corner. (Devībhāgavatī, Aṣṭama Sandhā).

GAṆḌĪNĪ. A very beautiful princess of Kāśi. Śvaphalaka married Gaṇḍīnī. (Daśama Sandhā, Bhāgavata).

GAṆḌĪVĀ. The famous bow of Arjuna.

1) Make. It was Brahmā who made the bow. ‘This terrible bow which can punish the unjust and the wicked has been made by Brahmā.’ (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 98, Verse 21).

2) Specialities of Gaṇḍīvā. This bow is enough to fight one lakh of people at one and the same time. Both Devas and men could be defeated with it. Chiseled very smooth and shining with many colours it was a very long bow. It was worshipped by Devas, Dānavas and Gandharvas. (Viratā Parva, Chapter 43). It gained and also decreased in power as the situation called for. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 98, Verse 20).

3) History of Gaṇḍīvā. Brahmā, who made this bow kept it with him during the first 1000 years. For the next 1000 years Prajāpati kept it with him. Next, Indra got it from Prajāpati and he used it for 3585 years. After that Candra kept it for 500 years with him, and then Varuṇa came in possession of it. After using it for 100 years Varuṇa gave it to Arjuna, who used it for 65 years.

4) Gaṇḍīvā and Arjuna. Arjuna agreed to protect the Khāṇḍava forest from rain, if Indra sent rain when Agni began eating the forest. But, realising that Arjuna possessed no weapons to effectively oppose Indra, Agni requested Varuṇa to give the following to Arjuna, viz., the Gaṇḍīvā bow and a quiver wherein the arrows will never be exhausted, and the chariot marked with the symbol of monkey and drawn by four white horses—all kept by Candra. Varuṇa at once made a present of the above to Arjuna. And, it was with the aid of this Gaṇḍīvā, that Arjuna defeated Indra at the time of Khāṇḍavādāha. (See Khāṇḍavādāha). Arjuna had taken a secret vow to cut off the head of anyone who asked him to give the bow to some one else. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 69).

In after years Arjuna won many wars with the help of this bow. (See Arjuna).

5) Arjuna gives up Gaṇḍīvā. The great Kurukṣetra war, which shook Bhārata, to its very foundation came to an end. Dharmaputra was crowned a King. It was at this juncture that the Yādava dynasty got itself annihilated and Śrī Kṛṣṇa entered mahāsāmādhi. Now the Pāṇḍavas lost all interest in mundane life, and they set out for the forest on their great journey after crowning Parikṣit, the grandson of Arjuna as King. Their great travel took them to the shores of the Red Sea. The Gaṇḍīvā was still in Arjuna’s hands. On the shores of the Red Sea Agni Deva appeared before the Pāṇḍavas and spoke to them “Well, Pāṇḍavas, I am Agni Deva. Arjuna requires the Gaṇḍīvā no more. I got it from Varuṇa for Arjuna. Return it, therefore, to Varuṇa.”

No sooner did he hear Agni Deva speak thus than did Arjuna throw it into the depths of the sea and also the quiver which never got exhausted of arrows with it. Agni Deva disappeared, and the Pāṇḍavas continued their journey. (Mahāprāsthānīka Parva, Chapter 1).

GAṆĜ. The famous and holy river of India.

1) Origin and general information. Gaṅgā had its origin during the incarnation of Viṣṇu as Vāmana. When Vāmana measured the three worlds in three steps the nails on his left feet were raised high. They caused a pore on the upper side of the universe. Gaṅgā, starting from the finger of Viṣṇu’s feet fell in heaven (Bhāgavata).

The famous Viṣṇupadī, the flowing water (tīrtha) of which washes away the sins of the people in the universe is the very same Gaṅgā under discussion. For many yugas (eras) this river confined itself to the heights of the sky, otherwise called Viṣṇupadī. This particular spot is known as Dhrūvaṁdaḷa as it is here that Dhrūva, son of King Uttānapāda, does, his penance. The seven sages who constantly go round and round the Dhrūvaṁdaḷa take their bath in this holy river. The course of the river is thus: starting from Viṣṇupadī it falls on devayāṇa glittering with crores of vimāṇas and therefrom it descends on Candramandaḷa which it submerges. It follows its course again from there dividing itself into four tributaries called Sītā, Caksus, Alakanaṇḍā and Bhadrā and then falls in Brahmaloka wherefrom it flows in all directions. Of the four tributaries Sītā falls on the head of Mount Meru, flows down to Gandhamādana, then circling through Bhadrāśva varṣa falls into the eastern sea. Caksus falls on the peaks of Mount Mālyavān, flows through Kētumāḷa and falls into the western sea. Alakanaṇḍā falls on mount Hemakūṭā, flows through Bhrārata Varṣa and falls into the southern sea. And Bhadrā falls on the head of mount Śrīgavān, flows through Uttarākuru and falls into the northern sea. Alakanaṇḍā flows through Bhrārata Varṣa and is regarded as the most sacred of the four tributaries.

Gaṅgā which flowed through heaven fell on the earth after thousands of years of its origin. (Bhāgavata, Pañcamama, Sandhā, Chapter 17).

2) Why Gaṅgā became Śiva’s consort. Mahāviṣṇu was once engaged at Vaikuṇṭha in a pleasant talk with his wives, Lakṣāmī, Sarasvatī and Gaṅgā when Gaṅgā cast lustful eyes on Viṣṇu, who, behind the backs of the other two wives returned the lustful glances. Sarasvatī could not put up with that situation for a long time. Therefore, she got up from her seat and beat Gaṅgā. Lakṣāmī tried to restrain Sarasvatī lest the quarrel should become fiercer. Angered at this intervention Sarasvatī cursed that Lakṣāmī be born on earth. Gaṅgā got angry that innocent Lakṣāmī was thus cursed, and she in her turn cursed that Sarasvati be born as a river on earth. Sarasvati did not take the curse lying down, but cursed that Gaṅgā also be born as a river on earth and take upon herself the sins of the whole world. When all the three wives of Viṣṇu got themselves thus into trouble he told them as follows: “Everything has happened as it should have happened. Lākṣmī may go to the earth and be born in the home of Dharmaḍhvaja and grow up as his daughter, but not from the womb of his women. There you will purify the three worlds after which you will be born as the plant called tulāsa, and be married by an asura called Saṅkhacūḍa, who will be born as a part of me. And, after that you will be turned into a sacred river called Padmāvatī, and leaving the river on earth your divine form will return to Vaikuṇṭha.” And, to Gaṅgā Viṣṇu said as follows: “You will go to earth as a holy river to wash off the sins of people there. A king called Bhagiratha will be leading you to earth, and you will, therefore, be known as Bhagirathī also. And, you remain there on earth as the wife of the ocean of King Santanu. Your divine form will return to mount Kailāsa as the consort of Śiva.” As for Sarasvati, Viṣṇu asked her to be born as a river on earth, her divine form ultimately returning to Satyaloka and then becoming the consort of Brahṇā. And, thus it was that Lākṣmī became the consort of Mahāviṣṇu, Gaṅgā of Śiva and Sarasvati of Brahṇā. (Devi Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

3) Gaṅgā born on earth due to the curse of Brahṇā. Mahābhīṣak, an emperor of the Iṣkvāku dynasty, went to Satyaloka after he had attained heaven, to worship Brahṇā. Gaṅgā too happened to be there. In the devotional atmosphere at Satyaloka a casual breeze removed Gaṅgā’s clothes softly from position, and Mahābhīṣak then cast a lustful glance at her which she also returned. Brahṇā, who was observing this exchange of love got angry and cursed that Mahābhīṣak be born as a King on earth and Gaṅgā as his wife. Gaṅgā prayed for redemption from the curse, and Brahṇā told her that she would regain her old status after she had delivered the Aṣṭavasus. As the consequence of Brahṇā’s cure Mahābhīṣak was born as King Santanu in the solar dynasty on earth and he married Gaṅgā. (Ādi Parva, Chapters 96 and 97).

4) Bhagiratha brought down Gaṅgā on earth. King Saras of the solar dynasty had two wives called Sumati (Vai-darbhī) and Keśinī (Saibyā). A son called Asamaṇjasā was born to Keśinī, and 60,000 princes were born to Sumati. Saras drove out of the country Asamaṇjasāa, who turned out to be an enemy of the people. The 60,000 sons of Saras also proved to be a menace to the world, and the Devas approached Brahṇā for protection from the menace. He assured the Devas that a sage called Kapila will destroy the 60,000 evil fellows. During the above period of time Saras performed an Āsvamedha Yajña, and his sons went round the earth with the sacrificial horse. But, when they reached the sea-shore the horse disappeared. When the sons complained about it to their father, Saras, he asked them to look out for the horse in every part of the world and bring it back. Not finding it anywhere on earth they dug a hole and entered Pāṭalā, where they saw Sage Kapila absorbed in meditation and the missing horse tied to a pole near the sage. (It was Indra who had carried away the horse and tied it there). The sons of Saras, believing that it was Kapila who had stolen the horse were about to attack the sage when he opened his eyes, and they were reduced to ashes in the fire of Kapila’s eyes.

His sons having not returned even after a long time Saras asked his grandson Aṁśūman to seek them out, and after an extensive search he saw Kapila at Pāṭalā. Aṁśūman pleased Kapila with laudatory phrases and the latter returned to him the sacrificial horse. Kapila also pronounced the blessing that the grandson of Aṁśūman would perform the purificatory rites of Saras’s sons by bringing down Gaṅgā to earth from heaven. Aṁśūman returned to the palace with the horse and the Āsvamedha was duly concluded.

From Aṁśūman was born Dilipa and from him Bhagiratha. On becoming King, Bhagiratha lanced over the reins of government to his ministers and began efforts to bring down Gaṅgā to earth. He did tapas for thousand years on the slopes of the Himālayas when Gaṅgā asked him to please Śiva first as he alone could face her (Gaṅgā) fall on the earth. Accordingly he pleaded Śiva by his penance and Śiva agreed to receive Gaṅgā on his head. With a terrific noise Gaṅgā came down on Śiva’s head. The haughty Gaṅgā wanted to carry down Śiva also to Pāṭalā. Realising this ambition of her Śiva blocked her passage with the result that she wandered about in Śiva’s matted hair for many years without finding an outlet. Bhagiratha again did tapas and pleaded Śiva who shook his matted head and made fall some water therefrom on earth. The water fell into Bindusaras, and flowed in seven tributaries, the first three, HHādini, Pāvani and Nalinī towards the east, the next three, Sucaksu, Siṭā and Sindhu towards the west and the seventh tributary followed Bhagiratha. In this manner they progressed a great distance till they reached the āśrama of the sage Ḫahnu, and the haughty Gaṅgā flooded the āśrama. The sage got enraged at this and drank up Gaṅgā. But Bhagiratha pleased the sage who then let out Gaṅgā through his ears. Thenceforth Gaṅgā came to be called Ḫahnavī also. Gaṅgā again followed Bhagiratha to Pāṭalā and made the sons of Saras attain salvation by purifying them with her waters. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kānda, Cantos 43 and 44; Brahmannā Purāṇa, Chapter 97; Devi Purāṇa, Dviṭyā Skandha; Drona Parva, Chapter 60; Anūśāsa Parva, Chapter 4 and Vana Parva, Chapter 109).

5) Gaṅgā flowed into the sea. After the purificatory rites of the sons of Saras were over, Bhagiratha conducted Gaṅgā to the sea and with its waters the sea became full. (Vana Parva, Chapter 109, Verses 18-21).

6) Gaṅgā set on the thigs of Pratīpa. Gaṅgā once fell in love with Pratīpa, father of Santanu, and set on his right thigh when he (Pratīpa) was doing penance on the banks of the Gaṅgā for a son. Pratīpa did not agree to Gaṅgā’s proposal that he should marry her and told her thus: “the right thigh is for the children and daughters-in-law to sit on and the left thigh for the wife; therefore, you be my son’s wife.”

Then Pratīpa called his son Santanu and told him: “Sometime back a divine woman came to me and I promised to wed her to you. Therefore, if any divine woman approaches you for a son you must accept her, and whatever she may do you must not object to that...”. Not long after this Pratīpa crowned Santanu
7) Astavasus and Ganga. While the wife of Dyau, one of the Astavasus (eight Vasus) was roaming about in the forest she saw Nandini (the divine cow) grazing with her calf near the āśrama of Vasiṣṭha, and she desired to have the cow to be presented to her intimate friend Jītivātī, the daughter of King Uśīnāra. She informed her husband, Dyau about this desire of hers, and Dyau told his relations about it. Next day the Astavasus, in the absence of Vasiṣṭha at the āśrama, stole off Nandini and her calf. When Vasiṣṭha returned to the āśrama the cow and calf were missing, and he divined the reason for it with his divine eyes. He cursed that the Astavasus be born as men on earth, and when they prayed for redemption from the curse Vasiṣṭha told them that they would be born as men within one year from that day, die at once and return to heaven. At the same time the sage said that Dyau alone, who took the leading part in stealing the cow, would live on earth for a longer period before he returned to heaven. (The reputed Bliṣṭha was this Dyau). The Astavasus set out for the earth to be born as men and on their way they met Ganga and told her about their curse etc. Ganga also told them about her curse, and permitted them to be born in her womb. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 99)

8) Ganga became the wife of Santanu and the Astavasus were born. Once while hunting on the banks of the Ganga Santanu saw a beautiful maiden and they fell in love with each other. She agreed to become his wife on the condition that he would not oppose whatever she said. Santanu agreed to it and married her. Soon after a child was born to them and in the very presence of Santanu, she threw the child into the Ganga. As per previous condition Santanu kept mum at this. She threw into the river the seven Astavasus, who were born to her in succession. When she was about to throw the last eighth of the Astavasus (Dyau) into the river Santanu prevented her. She got angry at this and disappeared with the child. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 99).

9) Santanu got back the son. Thirtytwo years after, Santanu went hunting again on the banks of the Ganga where he saw the river obstructed in its course with arrows by a handsome boy. Santanu did not recognise that the boy was his son, who had been named Devavrata by Ganga. Devavrata disappeared after throwing Santanu into an illusion by his magic power. All of a sudden a doubt dawned in his mind whether the boy was his own son, and he called out to Ganga to show him the boy. Ganga appeared with her son with beautiful ornaments on him and spoke to Santanu thus: “This is Devavrata, the eighth son whom you entrusted to me. He has mastered everything in archery from Vasiṣṭha, and he is Dyau (the vasu) son of Aṅgirās reborn. You may please take charge of him.” After saying this she returned to heaven. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 100).

10) Ganga and Subrahmanya. (See under Subrahmanya).

11) Ganga and Bhiṣma. (See under Bhiṣma).

12) Greatness (divine nature) of Ganga. Mahābhārata has (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26), the following on the greatness of Ganga.—

If, after death, the bones of the dead are deposited in Ganga the departed will attain heaven. Even if one had sinned throughout his life he would attain Viṣṇu-pūḍa (heaven) if he worshipped Ganga. Bathing in the Ganga is as beneficial as performing hundred yajnas. As long as the bones of one remain in the waters of the Ganga so long will he occupy an honourable seat in heaven. He who has come in contact with its water will shine forth as the sun devoid of all darkness. Places which are not favoured by its waters will become barren like night without the moon and trees without flowers. Ganga water is more than enough to satisfy living things in all the three worlds. He who does penance standing on one leg for thousand years, and he who gives up his body in the waters of the Ganga are on a par with each other. God attaches more importance to him who has fallen into the Ganga than to him, who has performed tapas hanging by his head for a thousand years. He who smears the sand on the banks of the Ganga on his body will get the lustre and glow of the devas, and he, who smears the sand on his head will shine forth like the Sun. All the sins of those on whom has blown the air which had come in contact with Ganga water will be swept away. It should be known that Ganga water can wash off all sins and purify mortals. The Agni Purāṇa (Chapter 110) has the following on this subject.

Through whatever places the Ganga flows those places become sublime and sacred. Ganga is the refuge of all created beings who aspire for the final good. If Ganga is worshipped daily it will save families both on the mother’s and the father’s side from evil fate. To drink Ganga water is better than the observance of a thousand lunar months. If one worships Ganga for a month one will derive all the benefits of having performed all the yajnas. Even the blind (the ignorant) who worship Ganga, will attain equal status with the devas. The sight of Ganga, contact with its waters and drinking Ganga water will purify people in thousands and lakhs. 13) Ganga and Rādhā. Ganga is Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa liquidified into water. Once in goloka Rādhādevi attempted to drink Ganga dry, who, terror-stricken, hid herself at the feet of Śri Kṛṣṇa, and the whole world experienced difficulties due to non-availability of water. Śri Kṛṣṇa came to know of the situation and made Ganga appear again on earth. (Deviḥāgavata, Navama Skandha).

14) Symbols and vehicle of Ganga. Ganga, white in colour rests on makaramatsya (a variety of fish) holding in her hands a pot and lotus flowers. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 50).

16) Synonyms of Ganga.

GANGĀDVĀRA (M). The place or locality in the Indo-Gangetic plane where the river Ganges falls from the Himalayas. This place is known as Haridvāra also. arHidvāra has an epic importance.
(1) It was here that King Pratipa did tapas. (Adi Parva, Chapter 97, Verse 1).
(2) Sage Bharadvaja had stayed on the banks of the Ganga, at Haridvara. (Adi Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 33).
(3) Arjuna visited Haridvara during his tour or Pilgrimage. (Adi Parva, Chapter 213).
(4) This is the entrance to heaven. A bath here in the Kotitirtha is as beneficial as the Punadrika Yajna. (Vana Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 27).
(5) Sage Agastya and his wife Lomapadä once did tapas here. (Vana Parva, Chapter 97, Verse 11).
(6) It was here that Siva appeared to Jayadra, who did tapas. (Vana Parva 72, Verse 24).
(7) Dakshaprajapati had once performed tapas at Kanakhala in Haridvara. (Salya Parva, Chapter 38, Verse 27).
(8) Those who bathe at Kuśavarta, Vilwaka, Nilaparvata and Kanakhala in Haridvara will attain heaven. (Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 13).
(9) Bhisma did the funeral rites of his father at the mouth of the Ganga. (Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 1).
(10) Dhrutarashtra, Gandhari, Kunji and others died in wild fire in the forest at Vañgadvära, and Yudhishtira conducted their funeral rites there itself. (Āramavāsikā Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 14).
GANGÄHRADA (M). A sacred place on the limits of Kurukṣetra. There is a terribly deep whirlpool of the river Ganges here and that depth of the river is considered to be equivalent to three crores of sacred places. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, and Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 25).
GANGÄMAHÄDVÄRA (M). The particular spot on the Himalayan peak wherefrom Ganga starts. Those who go there die in ice-falls. Only Nara and Nārāyaṇa have crossed this place. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 111, Verse 16).
GANGÄSÄGARASAMÄGAMAM. A sacred tirtha, a bath in which is as beneficial as the performing of ten Āstawedha yajñas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 4).
GANGÄSARAVATISAMÄGAMAM (M). A sacred tirtha at Prayāga. Those who bathe in this tirtha will attain heaven. (Vana Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 38).
GANGÄYAMUNÄSAMÄGAMAM (M). A sacred tirtha in Prayāga. Bathing in the tirtha is as beneficial as performing ten Āståmedha yajñas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 4).
GÄNGEYA I. See under Bhiṣma.
GÄNGEYA II. Subrahmānya (See under Subrahmānyā).
GANGODBHEDA (M). A sacred place where fasting for three nights will give the results of a Vajapeya yajña, and he who fasts here will become one with the universal soul. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 5).
GAŅITA A. Vīsvadeva, who used to calculate the course of time and ages. (Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 36).
GARBHA. A son of Bharata, the son of Duṣyanta. Suhotra, Suhotā, Gaya, Garbhā and Suketu were the five sons of Bharata. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).
GARBHA (M). The Purāṇas have described the views of sages about the origin of ātman in woman’s womb. Āstīmahāmuni stated the following about the birth of a child to King Janaka. (Brahmapā Purāṇa. Chapter 48). Of the seven elements in the human body, viz., Rasa, Rakta (blood), Māṇīsa (flesh), Medas (flesh), Asthi (bone), Majjā (marrow) and Sukla (semen fluid) the last one, Sukla, is the most valuable. Brahmābija (the seed for production) is contained in Sukla. From the food we consume, blood and the seminal fluid take their nutrition. The Sukla emitted during coitus enters the womb of the woman propelled as it were by Kṛṣṭavaṇyā. It takes only one night for the Sukla to get inextricably mixed with blood in the womb. In that mixing if the proportion of blood is higher, the child born will be girl, and if the proportion of Sukla is higher, the offspring will be boy. If blood and Sukla are mixed exactly in equal proportions the child will be ‘neutral’, neither girl nor boy. During the first month of pregnancy the child will be in liquid form. In the second, it solidifies due to the mixing and interplay of heat, cold, air, etc. During the third, holes for eye, ear, etc. become ready and the vein system is formed. In the fourth, head, hands and legs of the child are formed, and it is during this period that the prospective mother develops certain desires. If those desires are not satisfied the child may be born with physical deformities. During the fifth month the hips and bones develop. The various organs get firmer and stronger gradually and fingers appear during the sixth month. It is during the sixth month that hairs on the head and body appear and feelings and emotions originate in the mind. During the seventh month the ten vāyus (winds) on the basis of the nervous system are released, and the child experiences glimpses of its previous existence, and ability to feel pain also is there. During the ninth month due to the force of the wind which effects actual delivery the child gets head down in the womb, and during the tenth month it emerges out of the womb. The child loses its memory about the past because of its contact with the female organ and external wind.
According to the Agni Purāṇa the process is a little different:
When Jīva (the soul) has entered the womb for rebirth it remains in fluid form during the first month. During the second month it solidifies; in the third month the organs begin to develop, in the fourth month skin, flesh and bones appear, in the fifth month hairs appear, in the sixth month mind is produced, in the seventh month the child will begin to feel pain. The body is covered by a skin (Garbhacarma) and both hands are held above the head in saluting position. If the child is a female it lies in the left side of the mother’s womb, if a male on the right and if ‘neutral’ in the middle of it. From the seventh month the child begins to experience the taste of foods consumed by the mother. During the eighth and ninth month there would be great emotional excitement and surges. If the mother suffered from chronic diseases the child also would inherit it. When pregnancy is matured thus, certain winds lead the child down the womb and it gets out through the female organ.
The child inherits its skin, flesh and heart from the mother. The sex organ, marrow, excretion, sweet and belly are inherited from the father. Head, the nervous system and śukla are the contributions of the ātman.
(Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 369).

GARDABHI. A son of Viśvāmitra who was a brahma-vādi. (Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

GARGA.
1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus:— Brahmā-

2) Birth. Bṛhaspati once approached, on the crest of a wave of lust, Māmatā, his brother’s wife who was pregnant then. The child from the mother’s womb said ‘no’ to the move. But, Bṛhaspati curséd the child and had his own way with Māmatā. Thus two children developed in her womb. Just after delivering the chilren the mother went away leaving the child by Bṛhaspati behind. The Devas took charge of the forsaken child and named him Bhaṛadvāja. Ultimately they handed over the child (Bṛhadadvāja) to king Bharata, the famous son of Duṣyanta. Children had already been born to Bharata by his three wives, but as all of them were found to be immoral the mothers themselves killed them. It was at such a juncture that Bharata got Bhradvāja as adopted son. (Bṛhradvāja is known by another name also, Vitatha). From Vitatha was born Manyu, from Manyu Bṛhatsētra from Bṛhatksētra Jaya and from Jaya Garga. The famous Ranițeva was the grandson of Nara, the (brother of Garga) and son of Sārikṛti. A son named Śāni was born to Garga after which he took Sannyāsa. (Bhagavata, Daśāma Skandha, Chapters 20 and 21).
3) Tādavaguru. In course of time Garga became preceptor of the Yādavas. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadrarāma who had returned to Mathurā from Āmbādi were sent to sage Sandīpāni in obedience to the advice of Garga.
(Bhagavata, Navama Skandha).
4) Garga and Mucukunda. Garga once visited Mucukunda, son of Māndāhātā at his palace, and very much pleased with the devoted reception accorded to him blessed Mucukunda that one day he would see Śrī Kṛṣṇa in person. It was according to this blessing that Mucu-kunda, while asleep once in a cave had a sight of Kṛṣṇa.
(See under Mucukunda).
5) Importance of Garga. A number of reputed sage visited Śrī Rāma on his return to Ayodhya from the forest. Amongst them were present Kauśīka, Yavakrīta, Raibhya, Kanva and Garga with their numerous disciples. (Uttara Rāmāyana).
6) Garga, a scholar in astronomy. There is a place called Gargasrota on the banks of river Sarsavatī. Garga did tapas here and discovered some principles of astronomy such as the path of planets, stars etc. He was also the chief astronomer in the assembly of emperor Prithu.
(Santi Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 111).
7) Other information. (1) While the great war was raging Garga visited Kurukṣetra and advised Droṇa to end the war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 19).
(2) He advised King Viśvāvastu about eternity. (Santi Parva, Chapter 318, Verse 49).
(3) He spoke about the greatness of the world (Vi-śvanahimā) to Yudhiṣṭhīra. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 18).

GARGASROTA. See under Garga, Para 6.

GARGYANI. See under Guruparamparā.

GARGI. A celebrated brahmavādinī born in the family of Garga.

GARGYA I. (TRIJAṬA) GARGA. A famous sage.
1) Birth. He was one of the sons of Viśvāmitra. (Sloka 55, Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva). (For genealogy see under Viśvāmitra). He became gradually the priest of Gudavas. He has written a famous book called Gargas-mirti. Vālmiki Rāmāyana mentions that Garga is known as Trijaṭa also.
2) How he became prosperous. Sage Garga had many children. It was while he was staying in the forest with his wife and children that Śrī Rāma came to that forest for Vanavāsa. The news of the exile of Śrī Rāma spread like wild-fire and many brahmins flocked to the place and Śrī Rāma gave them immense riches. Wife of Garga heard the news only late and as soon as she heard the same she called her husband from the fields where he was working and taking away from him the implements sent him post-haste to the place of Śrī Rāma.
Trijaṭa as soon as he came to the presence of Rāma told him the purpose of his visit. Huge herds of cows were then grazing on the banks of the Yamunā river. Śrī Rāma told Garga to take a stump and throw it with all his strength. He did so and Śrī Rāma gave him all the cows grazing up to the place where the stump fell.
It was a big lot and Garga became prosperous from that day onwards. (Sarga 32, Ayodhya Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyana).
3) Garga’s precepts on Dharma. The following are the precepts laid down by Garga on Dharma. (1) Be interested always on entertaining your guests, (2) Do not eat meat, (3) Do not give injury to cows and brahmins,
(4) Perform yajna with a pure mind and pure body.
(M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 127).
4) Garga’s place in the line of preceptors. Vyāsa expounded the Vedas to Vedamitra, Saubhari and Śākalya, Śākalya taught what he learnt to Vāṭsāyana, Maud-galva, Śāli, Adiśīra, Gokhali and YātuKarṇa, Yātu-Karṇa taught Nirukta to Bāskala, Krauṇṭa, Vaitāla, and Viraṭa. Bāskala combined all the other branches and made ‘BālaKhilaśākha’ and taught it to Bālayini, Garga and Saniśāra. The Rgyedācāryas are those from Vyāsa to Saniśāra. (Bhagavata, Daśāma Skandha).
5) Indrasabhī and Garga. Garga was a shining member of the Indrasabhī. (Sloka 18, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

GARGYA II. See under Bālāki.

GARGYA(M). A place of habitation of ancient Bha-rata. This place was captured by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 11, Droṇa Parva).

GĀRHPATI I. An agni (fire). (Sloka 6, Chapter 74, Ādi Parva).

GĀRHPATI II. One of the seven fathers. The seven fathers are: Vairajas, Agnisvātta, Gārhapati, Somap-as, Ekaṛīgas, Caturvedas and Kalas. (Chapter 11, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

GĀRHYASTYA. The Gṛhasthārama a stage in life when you live with your family as a house-holder. The true dharma of a householder is to live with what he gets by doing the duty allotted to him. He should feed pilgrims and should not appropriate to himself what belongs to others unless and until it is given to him. (Śloka 3, Chapter 31, Ādi Parva).

GARIŚTHA. A sage worshipping Indra in his assembly. (Sabāla Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 13).

GARUDA. King of birds.

1) Genealogy: Descended from Viṣṇu thus:—Brahmā—Marici—Kaśya—Garuda.

2) Birth. Kaśyapa, grandson of Brahmā and son of Marīcī married the eight daughters of Dakṣa called Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kālikā, Tāmra, Krodhavāśa, Manu and Analā. And to Tāmra five daughters were born, viz. Krauṇḍī, Bhaṣi, Śyeṇi, Dīrtarāṣṭri and Śuki. Out of the five women Krauṇḍī became mother of the owls, Bhaṣi delivered the bhāsas (types of birds) and from Śyeṇi were born vultures and kites. Hamisa, Kafahaṇa, Koka etc. are children of Dīrtarāṣṭri. From Śuki was born Nālā and from Nālā, Vinatā; Aruṇa and Garuda were the two sons born to Vinatā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakaṇḍa, Canto 15).

There is a story in the Mahābhārata about the birth of Aruṇa and Garuda. Kaśyapa who was much pleased with the service of Vinatā and Kadru asked them to select any boon they desired. Kadru chose to have a thousand nāgas as her children while Vinatā chose to have two sons more powerful and heroic than the thousand sons of Kadru. After granting them the boon Kaśyapa retreated into the forest.

After some time Kadru laid thousand eggs and Vinatā two eggs. Both of them kept their eggs in hot pots. In the 500th year the eggs of Kadru hatched and thousand serpents of various kinds emerged out of them. But Vinatā’s eggs did not hatch yet, and the sight of Kadru playing with her children pained Vinatā much. She, therefore, broke open one of her eggs in secret, and a half-grown child stepped out of it. That child was Aruṇa. Aruṇa got angry that Vinatā forced open the egg prematurely. He told her that as punishment thereof she would become a slave of Kadru. But, Aruṇa granted her redemption from the curse thus: After another 500 years the remaining egg of yours will hatch and a son endowed with exceptional power and prowess will be born to you. He will liberate you from slavery.” After telling his mother so much Aruṇa rose to the sky where he became the charioteer of the Sun. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 16. See also Parā 6 Ṣbra). After 500 years the egg broke itself open and out came Garuḍa with blazing effulgence, and he rose up in the sky. His body glowed like the sun. The Devas who got themselves dimmed by his effulgence asked Agni deva the reason therefor. Agni deva told them about the birth of Garuḍa and also that he was equally effulgent as himself (Agni deva). Then all of them went to Garuḍa and lavished on his head all possible blessings, and Garuḍa, as requested by them, controlled his effulgence and returned to his mother. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 23).

3) Slavery of Vinatā: The churning of the Milk-ocean was done before Garuḍa was born. Indra got a horse named Ucchāyārasas from the Ocean of Milk. Between Kadru and Vinatā a dispute arose as regards the colour of the horse’s tail, Kadru saying that it was black while Vinatā asserted that it was white. They further agreed to test the colour the next day, betting that she who was proved to be wrong would become the slave of the victor. As the nāga sons of Kadru hung on to the tail of the horse the tail appeared to be black and Vinatā lost the bet and became Kadru’s slave.

It was at this juncture that Garuḍa was born, and he felt highly mortified to find his mother working as a slave of Kadru.

Kadru and her nāga sons once ordered Vinatā to carry them to the nāga residence in the middle of the ocean, called Rāmaṇyayaka (Ramāṇa). Accordingly Vinatā carrying Kadru on her shoulders and Garuḍa carrying Kadru’s sons on his shoulders rose up in the sky. But, Garuḍa did not relish the slavish work, and he, carrying with him the nāgas, flew up to the sun’s orbit. The nāga children fainted due to the excessive heat. But, on the request of Kadru Indra sent heavy rain and the nāgas regained consciousness. By then they had reached Rāmaṇyayaka island.

4) Attempt at freeing Vinatā from thralldom. Garuḍa, extremely pained at the pitiable plight of his mother, one day asked Kadru what price she and her children demanded for freeing Vinatā from slavery, and Kadru demanded Amṛta from Devaloka as the price. Garuḍa decided to get it and informed his mother about his decision to fly to Devaloka. But, what about food till he reached Devaloka? Vinatā solved the problem by advising Garuḍa to eat the nīṣādas he will meet on his way to Devaloka at the island called Niṣādālaya, at the same time specially forbidding him from eating on any account, brahmins who might be there, at Niṣādālaya. How to distinguish brahmins from others, queried Garuḍa, and his mother replied by pointing out that the brahmin will burn the throat of him who tries to eat him, like fire. Then Vinatā blessed her son that his wings would be protected by Vāyu, the lower half of his body by sun and moon, the rest of the body by the Vāsū and the head by Agni. She also promised to wait there till her son returned.

5) Garuḍa to Devaloka. After saluting his mother Garuḍa set out on his quest for Amṛta. All the fourteen worlds shook at the lashing of his wings. He reached Niṣādālaya, where while consuming whole lots of Niṣādas a brahmin and his wife also happened to get into his throat. Garuḍa felt their presence immediately in his throat and requested them to get out of his mouth. Accordingly they got out and also blessed Garuḍa, who continued on his journey.

Next Garuḍa reached the forest where his father Kaśyapa was engaged in tapas. He told him about his mission and requested him for something to eat. Kaśyapa replied thus:—"You see a pool wherein an elephant and a tortoise are living for long as enemies. Long ago two brothers Vibhāvasu and Suprabha quarrelled over their paternal wealth and at the height of it Vibhāvasu cursed Suprabha to become an elephant when Suprabha pronounced the counter curse that Vibhāvasu should turn out to be a tortoise. You, my son Garuḍa may eat that elephant and tortoise. May your journey for Amṛta be crowned with success.

Now, Garuḍa after saluting his father, flew up in the sky carrying in his beak the elephant and the tortoise from the pool. As trees were falling uprooted due to the terrific vibrations caused by the lashing of his wings Garuḍa did not find a convenient place to sit down to eat his food. While continuing the journey Garuḍa saw a big tree, its branches spread out in a circumstance of a hundred yojanas. But, as soon as Garuḍa set foot on a branch of the tree it (branch) crumbled down. On that broken branch were the sages called Bālākhīliyas doing tapas hanging their heads down. Fearing that the sages might fall down Garuḍa continued his flight holding in his beak the torn branch of the tree. But he could not find a safe place to deposit the branch with the sages. So he came again to Mount Gandhamādana and saw Kaśyapa, who apologised to the Bālākhīliyas on behalf of his son and also explained to them about his mission. The Bālākhīliyas were pleased and they left the place for the Himalayas. As advised by Kaśyapa Garuḍa deposited the branch of the tree on an uninhabited mountain peak. Garuḍa ate the elephant and the tortoise there, and therewith flew to Devaloka (Adi Parva, Chapter 29, 30).

6) Bālākhīliyas cursed Indra. Even before the arrival of Garuḍa ill omens began appearing in Devaloka. Indra asked Bṛhaspati for explanation about the ill omens. Bṛhaspati with his divine eyes saw Garuḍa approaching Devaloka for Amṛta, and he told Indra about Garuḍa born out of the powers of the tapas of Kaśyapa and the Bālākhīliyas. He also told that such a fate as the present one befell Indra due to a curse of the Bālākhīliyas. Indra and the other Devas stood guard over the pot of Amṛta ready to repel all possible attacks.

There was a reason for Garuḍa’s birth from the powers of the tapas of the Bālākhīliyas, and also for Indra to be put into the present predicament due to the curse of the Bālākhīliyas. Kaśyapaprajāpati, a long time ago, began a terrific yajña for a son, and Indra and the Bālākhīliyas who numbered more than 60,000 were deputed by Kaśyapa to collect firewood for the yajña. The Bālākhīliyas were only of the size of a thumb, and Indra who very easily collected all the firewood needed for the yajña laughed at the tiny Bālākhīliyas who were carrying small twigs etc. for firewood. Angered at the insult the Bālākhīliyas removed themselves to another place nearby and began a yajña directed against Indra who alarmed at it sought the help of Kaśyapa who then held peace talks with the Bālākhīliyas. They transferred their yāgaśakti (yājñic powers) also to Kaśyapa and agreed to be satisfied with the condition that as the result of Kaśyapa’s yajña a son should be born to him, who (the son) would defeat Indra. Thus, for the time being Indra escaped from the wrath of the Bālākhīliyas. After the yajña was over Vināṭa came to Kaśyapa and he blessed her with a son wishing that he should become exceptionally strong and powerful, and that was Garuḍa. (Adi Parva, Chapter 30).

7) Amṛtakālasāpaharanam. (The pot of nectar carried away). Garuḍa approached the pot of nectar, and Viśvakārmā who attacked him first was felled to the ground. The dust storm raised by the waving of Garuḍa’s wings blinded everybody. The Devas and Indra, nay, even the sun and the Moon lined up against Garuḍa, but he defeated them all, and entered the particular place where the pot of nectar was kept. Two terrific wheels were rotating round the pot and they would cut into mince-meat anybody who tried to lay hands on the pot and a machine circled the wheels. Below the wheels were two monstrous serpents with glowing eyes and protruding tongues like flashes of fire, and the serpents never closed their eyes. The very look with those eyes was enough to poison anyone to death. Garuḍa blinded those eyes by raising a torrent of dust, pierced them in the middle with his beak and and through the hole, his body reduced to such a tiny shape, went nearer to the pot. He destroyed the wheels and the machine, and carrying the pot of nectar in his beaks rose to the sky shielding the light of the sun by his outspread wings. Mahāviṣṇu, who became so much pleased with the tremendous achievements of Garuḍa asked him to choose any boon. Garuḍa requested Viṣṇu that he should be made his (Viṣṇu’s) vehicle and rendered immortal without his tasting amṛta. Both the boons were granted.

8) Garuḍa and Indra became friends. Indra hit with the Vajra (his special weapon) the wings of Garuḍa who was returning from Viṣṇu. It did not wound his body, but a feather of his fell in the atmosphere. Everybody who saw the feather acclaimed Garuḍa as Suparṇa (he with the good wings). Indra was wonder-struck, and he approached Garuḍa and requested that they should be friends in future and the pot of nectar be returned. Garuḍa replied that the nectar would be returned if he was granted the power to make nāgas his food, and Indra blessed him that he would live by consuming nāgas. And then Garuḍa told Indra thus: “I took this pot of amṛta not for my own use. The nāgas cheated my mother and made her a slave, and she will be freed if only this pot of nectar is given to them (nāgas). You may snatch off the pot from the nāgas; I shall not object to it.”

Indra and Garuḍa thus became friends and the former followed Garuḍa on his way back home.

9) Garuḍa handed over the pot of amṛta to the nāgas and Indra cheated them of it. Garuḍa handed over the pot of nectar to the nāgas, who on the suggestion of the former placed the pot on darbha grass spread on the ground. Also, in accordance with Garuḍa’s advice that they should take a purificatory bath before tasting the amṛta the nāgas went out to have the bath, and in their absence Indra carried off the pot of nectar back to Devaloka. Failing to find the pot of nectar on their return from bath the aggrieved nāgas licked the darbha on which the pot was placed with the result that their tongues were cloven into two. It was from that day onwards that the nāgas became double-tongued (dvijīhvas). And, thus Garuḍa redeemed his mother from slavery. (Adi Parva, Chapter 34).

10) The fig tree which Garuḍa broke with his beaks and Lānkkā. It has been noted above that Garuḍa on his way to Devaloka rested on a fig tree. That fig is called Subhadra in Vālmiki Rāmāyana. Rāvaṇa saw the fig tree around which sages were sitting and which bore marks made by Garuḍa sitting thereon. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Aranyakaṇḍa, Canto 35, Verse 26).

There is some connection between this tree and Lānkkā. Garuḍa had, as directed by Kaśyapa, deposited in the sea the branch of the tree on which the Bālākhīliyas hung in tapas and with which Garuḍa flew hither and thither fearing about the safety of the Bālākhīliyas. At the spot in the sea where the branch was deposited sprang up an island like the peak of a mountain. It was this island which in after years became reputed as Lānkkā. (Kathāsarītsāgara, Kathāmukhalambaka, Taraṅga 4).
11) Garuda, Saubhari and Káliya. Garuda had always entertained great hatred against the nágas, and now Indra's permission having been obtained by him to eat the nágas for food, Garuda decided to launch a regular nágà-hunting expedition. He began eating the nágas one by one. Alarmed at this the nágas planned for their security in a conclave, and approached Garuda with the proposal that one nágà would go to him daily to serve as his food instead of his indiscriminate killing of them. Garuda accepted their proposal. After some time the nágas proposed to Garuda that they would conduct a sarpa-bali (sacrifice of serpents) and submit the food got out of the bali to him so that his nágà-hunting might be stopped for ever. Garuda agreed to this also. According to the new agreement daily one nágà began going to Garuda with the food got out of the bali.

But Káliya alone did not agree to the programme as he did not recognise Garuda to be superior to him in power. And, Garuda, who wanted to teach the haughty Káliya a lesson challenged him to fight, and the fight took place in river Kálini, Káliya's abode. During the fight the lashing of Garuda's wings raised the water in Kálini up in the sky and it drenched the sage Saubhari all over, who was performing tapas on the banks of Kálini. Saubhari cursed that the body of Garuda be shattered into a thousand pieces if ever he entered that area in future, and thenceforth the place became a prohibited area for Garuda. During after years Káliya was put up at this place.

A kadamba tree alone outlived the effect of the poison of Káliya. The tree could outlive the deadly poison because Garuda had rested on it on his way back from Devaloka with amrita. (Bhágavata daśama Skandha).

12) Relationship of Garuda with the kings of the solar dynasty. King Sagara of the solar dynasty was married to Sumati, the elder sister of Garuda, and there is a story behind the marriage.

There was once a king called Subáhu in the solar dynasty. He married one Yádaví, but for many years they had no issues. Yádaví had become old by the time she conceived a child as the result of many yajñás etc. But, Subáhu's other wives, viz. co-wives of Yádaví, did not like the prospects of Yádaví becoming a mother. They administered poison to her with the result that Yádaví did not deliver in time, but continued as a pregnant woman for seven years. The sad couple, for their mental relief went into the forest and lived as disciples of a sage called Aurva. But Subáhu died rather soon and Yádaví prepared herself to follow him in the funeral pyre. But, the sage Aurva prevented her from self-immolation speaking to her thus: "You shall not act rashly. The child in your womb will become a famous emperor and rule over the whole world."

Yádaví yielded to the sage's advice and did not court death, and soon afterwards she delivered a son, and he was named Sagara, which meant "he who was affected by poison even while he was in the mother's womb. It was this child who, in later years, became reputed as emperor Sagara.

Sagara married the elder sister of Garuda when he was living as a boy in Aurva's aśrama, and there is a story behind the marriage, a story which related to the time when Garuda was not born.

Vinatá, mother of Garuda, while she was working as the slave of Kadrú, one day went into the woods to collect firewood for her mistress. In the terrible rain and storm that ensued, Vinatá lost her track and wandered in the forest for many days before she could take shelter in the aśrama of a Sannyásin. The pious man felt sorry for poor Vinatá and blessed her that a son, who would be able to win freedom for her would be born to her. Garuda was the son thus born to her.

Before the birth of Garuda when Kaśyapa and Vinatá were living together with their daughter Sumati the boy sage Upamanyu, son of Sutapas, went to them and told Kaśyapa thus: "While touring round the earth I worshipped the pitrs at Gayá and I have been told that they (Pitrs) would get redemption only in case I married and became a father. I, therefore, request you to please give your daughter Sumati to me as wife. Vinatá did not relish this proposal. Upamanyu got angry at the rejection of his offer and cursed Vinatá saying that if Sumati was given in marriage to any other brahmin boy she (Vinatá) would die with her head broken into pieces.

It was during this period when Vinatá was in a fix about the marriage of Sumati that Garuda was born to her. He also thought over the problem and argued like this: the curse is only against a brahmin boy marrying my sister Sumati; why not Sumati be given in marriage to a Ksatriya; but where to find an eligible Ksatriya boy? At this stage Vinatá asked him to go and meet the Sannyásin, who had promised her an illustrious son, in the forest and this Sannyásin directed Garuda to Aurva, for advice and guidance. When Garuda met Aurva and sought his advice about the marriage of his sister, the sage thought that the context offered a very good bride to Sagara. And, according to Aurva's advice Sumati was married to Sagara, and thus Garuda became related to the Kings of the Solar dynasty. (Brahmándá Puráṇa, Chapters 16, 17 and 18). The Sixty thousand sons born to Sagara by Sumati were reduced to ashes in the fire which emanated from the eyes of Kapila. (See Kapila). When Añiśumán, the grandson of Sagara was going around the world to find out these 60,000 sons he met Garuda on the way, and it was he who advised that the waters of Gaṅgá should be brought down on earth so that the dead sons of Sagara might get spiritual redemption. (Válmiki Rámáyaṇa, Bálakánda, Chapter 41).

13) Garuda's conceit laid low. A very beautiful daughter, Guṇakésí, was born to Mátali, the charioteer of Indra. In the course of his search for a suitable husband for Guṇakésí he came to Pátalaloka in the company of Nárada, and there Mátali selected a noble nága called Sumukhu as his prospective son-in-law. But a month before Garuda had eaten Sumukha's father Cíkara, and he had also given notice to Sumukha that within a month's time he too would be eaten.

Nárada and Mátali met Sumukha at the abode of his grandfather Áryaka, who was very glad to marry his grandson to Mátali's daughter. But, the threat of Garuda that he would eat Sumukha before the month was over scared them all cruelly in their face. So, they appealed to Indra for a solution to the problem, in the presence of Mahávíśu. Indra gave an extension of life to Sumukha and he wedded Guṇakésí. The marriage enraged Garuda so much that he went to Indra's assembly and insulted both Indra and Viṣṇu at which Viṣṇu extended his right hand to Garuḍa asking him whether he could hold the hand. And, when Garuḍa placed Viṣṇu's hand on his head he felt as if the whole weight of the three worlds was put on the head. Garuḍa admitted his defeat. Mahāviṣṇu thus laid low the conceit of Garuḍa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 105).

14) Garuḍa helped Galava. Galava was a disciple of Viśvāmitra. Once Dharmadeva, to test Viśvāmitra, went to his āśrama disguised as Vasūṭha and asked for food. As there was no ready-made food at the āśrama just then, Viśvāmitra naturally took some time to cook new food, and he went with it, steaming hot, in a plate to the guest. Saying that he would return within minutes and receive the food, the guest (Dharmadeva) left the place, and Viśvāmitra stood there with the plate in hand awaiting the return of the guest. He had to remain standing thus for one hundred years, and during this whole period it was Galava who stood there looking after his guru. When hundred years were completed Dharmadeva returned to Viśvāmitra and accepted his hospitality, and then only could the latter take some rest.

Viśvāmitra blessed Galava, and now it was time for him to leave the āśrama. Though Viśvāmitra told that no gurudaksīṇa (tuition fee) was required Galava persisted in asking him what fee or present he wanted. Viśvāmitra lost his temper and told Galava that if he was so very particular about gurudaksīṇa, eight hundred horses all having the colour of moon, and one ear black in colour might be given as daksīṇa. Galava stood there aghast at the above pronouncement of his preceptor, when Garuḍa happened to go over there and hear from Galava about his sad plight. Money was required to purchase horses, but Galava was penniless. At any rate Garuḍa with Galava on his back flew eastwards and reached Raśabhaparvata and they rested on a peak of it. There the Brahmā woman, Sāṇḍili was engaged in tapas and she served them with food. After food Garuḍa spoke disparagingly about Sāṇḍili, Garuḍa and Galava slept that night on the floor, but when they woke up in the morning lo! Garuḍa was completely shed of his feathers. Garuḍa stood before Sāṇḍili, his head bent in anguish. Sāṇḍili blessed Garuḍa, who then got back his old feathers.

Continuing their journey Garuḍa and Galava reached the palace of the very rich King, Yayāti. Garuḍa introduced Galava to Yayāti, who found it difficult to get 800 horses for Galava. But, Yayāti gave his daughter Mādhavī to Galava saying that he might give her to any King and get money enough to purchase 800 horses. After thus showing the means to get money to Galava, Garuḍa returned home.

Gala gave Mādhavī first to King Harayāva of Ayodhyā, then to King Divodāsa of Kāśi and next to King Uṣīnara of Bhoja and got from them two hundred horses each, and he submitted the horses and also Mādhavī in lieu of the balance of two hundred horses to Viśvāmitra as daksīṇa. A son called Aṣṭaka was born to Viśvāmitra by Mādhavī, who had been granted a boon that she would not lose her youth and beauty even though she lived with any number of people. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 108).

15) Fight between Garuḍa and Airāvata. Śrī Kṛṣṇa once went to Devaloka and plucked the Pārijāta flower from the garden Naudana, and this led to a fight between Indra and Kṛṣṇa in which Garuḍa also joined. Garuḍa directed his main attention on Airāvata which, at his blows, fainted and fell down. (Harivaṃśa, Chapter 73).

16) Defeated by Vāsuki. To churn the Milk-Ocean the Devas and Asuras decided to use Mount Mandara as the shaft and Vāsuki as the rope to rotate the shaft. The attempts of the Devas, the Asuras and the Bhūtāgānas of Śiva failed to uproot and bring with them the mountain, when Garuḍa, at the instance of Viṣṇu brought the mountain as easily as a kite carries a frog. Again, when others failed to bring Vāsuki from nāgaloaka Garuḍa went and asked the nāga chief to follow him to the ocean of Milk. Vāsuki replied that if his presence was so indispensable he must be carried over there. Then Garuḍa caught the middle part of Vāsuki in his beak and rose in the air. But, even though Garuḍa rose beyond the horizon, when he looked down half of Vāsuki still remained on the ground. Garuḍa then tried to fold Vāsuki into two and carry it, but, again to no purpose. Disappointed and humiliated Garuḍa returned without Vāsuki. Afterwards Vāsuki was brought to the ocean of Milk by Śiva's hand stretched down into Pātala. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

17) Bhīma went in search of the Saugandhika flower on account of Garuḍa. While, in the course of their exile in the forest, the Pāṇḍavas were put up at the āśrama of mahārāja Arśṭiṣeṇa, Garuḍa picked up from the depths of the sea one day a nāga called Rddhimān, and due to the vibration caused by the lashing of Garuḍa's wings Kalhāra flowers from the garden of Kubera were flown to the feet of Pāṇcāḷi. She wore the fragrant flowers in her hair saying that if she were to have good flowers, wind had to bring them. Since there was a mild and veiled insinuation in that statement that Bhīma was inferior to the wind the former did not appreciate that comment by Pāṇcāḷi. And so he rushed to Mount Gandhamādāna to collect Kalhāra flowers. (Vana Parva, Chapter 106).

18) Garuḍa saved Uparicaravasu. Once a controversy started between the Devas and the brahmins, the former advocating the use of goat's flesh in performing yajñas while the brahmins contended that grains were sufficient for the purpose. Uparicaravasu, who arbitrated in the debate spoke in favour of the Devas, which the brahmins did not like, and they cursed Vasu to fall from the sky into the pits of the earth. This curse was countered by the Devas blessing him that as long as Uparicaravasu remained on earth he would not feel hungry and that he would regain his old form due to the blessings of Mahāviṣṇu. Vasu prayed to Viṣṇu, who sent Garuḍa to the former, and Garuḍa carried Vasu to the sky on his wings. Thus Vasu became again Uparicaravasu. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 338).

19) Other information about Garuḍa. (1) A dānava once stole away the crown of Śrī Kṛṣṇa who was on a visit to Mount Gomanta. Garuḍa retrieved it from the dānava and returned it to Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgavata, Daśāma Skandha).

(2) The monkeys who searched for Sītā visited the house of Garuḍa also. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiśkindhā Kāṇḍa, Canto 40, Verse 39).
(3) Gautama had married the four daughters of Daksaprajapati. (Bhagavata, 6th Skandha).
(4) He had a son named Kapota. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101).
(5) During the Rama-Ravana war Lakshmana, Sugriva and all the monkeys swooned by the nāgāstra of Indrajit. Śrī Rāma then thought of Gautama, who at once came down on earth and bit away the nāgapāśa. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa Yuddhakāndā).
(6) Gautama was present at the birth-day celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 50).
(7) At the birth of Subrahmanyā Gautama submitted his own son, Mayūra, as a present. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 21).
20) Synonyms for Garuḍa.
21) Names used in the Mahābhārata to represent Garuḍa. Arunāṇuja, Bhujagārī, Garumāṇa, Kāsyaṇeya, Khagaraṇa, Paktivirāja, Patagapati, Patageśvara, Suparnā, Tārksya, Vainateyāḥ, Viṇataṇandavardhanā, Viṇataśunu, Viṇataśuta, Viṇataṭmaṇa. (For story regarding how Garuḍa stopped eating nāgās see under Jīmutavāhana).
GARUḌAPūRAṆA. One of the eighteen Mahāpūrāṇas. This is believed to be a narration of Garuḍa by Mahāviṣṇu. There are eight thousand slokas in it. There is an opinion that only the TārksyaKalpa is of Viṣṇu. The theme of the Purāṇa is the birth of Garuḍa from Brahmāṇḍa. If this Purāṇa is given as a gift it should be given along with the image of a swan in gold. (Chapter 272, Agni Purāṇa).
GARUḌAVYUḤA. A system of arranging soldiers on the battlefield in the shape of Garuḍa.
GATITĀLI. A warrior of Skandadeva. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 67).
GĀTRA. A maharsi, the son of Vasiṣṭha, who had by Ürjā seven Rṣis called Rajas, Gātra, Īrthvabāhu, Savana, Alaghu, Śukra and Sutapas. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).
GĀURA (M). A mountain in the Kuṣa island. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 4).
GĀRUMUKHA. A son of sage Śaṁika. It was Śaṁika's son Śrīṅgī, who cursed Parīkṣit to death by snake-bite. (See Parīkṣit). Śrīṅgī cursed that Parīkṣit, who had thrown a dead snake on the neck of his father while in meditation, would be bitten to death by snake within seven days. Śrīṅgī sent word about the curse through his disciple Gārurukṣita. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 42, Verses 14-22).
GĀURAṆṬAṬHA. Son born to Śuka (Vyāsa's son) by his wife Piṅḍri. Śuka had four sons called Kṛṣṇa, Gauraprabha, Bhūri and Devasrūtra and a daughter Kirtī. (Deviḥgāvata, Prathama Skandha).
GĀURAṆṬIṢṬHA. A royal sage who worships Yama at his sabha (assembly). (Śabha Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 21).
GĀURĀṢIṆA. A sage of ancient days, who worshipped Indra in his assembly. (Śabha Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 11).
GĀURĀVĀṆA. A King, who was present at the rājaśūya sacrifice of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śabha Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 12).
GĀURI I. See Pārvatī.
GĀURI II. A female attendant (Devi) of Pārvatī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 48).
GĀURI III. Wife of Varama. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 9).
GĀURI IV. An Indian river. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 25).
GĀURĪṢAṬA. A royal sage and a member of Yama's assembly. (Śabha Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 18).
GĀURĪṢIḱHARA (M). A sacred place on the Himālayas. A bath in Sthānāṅkunda here brings the same benefits as are derived from the performance of Vājapeya and Āśvamedha sacrifices. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 151).

Gautama I
1) General Information. The Purāṇas record about a sage called Gautama though nothing is known about his genealogy. Yet the genealogy of his wife Ahalyā is available. See under ‘Ahalyā’.
2) Sons of Gautama. The eldest son of Gautama was Satānanda. (Śloka 2, Sarga, 51, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa). Gautama had two sons. Sārdavāna and Cirakārī. Sārdavāna was born with arrows in his hand. (Śloka 2, Chapter 130, Ādi Parva). Cirakārī used to ponder over everything before he acted and so all his actions were delayed. He got his name Cirakārī. (Chapter 266, Śabha Parva). Sārdavāna was known as Gautama also. That was why Krpa and Krpī, children of Sārdavāna were known as Gautama and Gautami. (Śloka 2, Chapter 129, Ādi Parva). Besides these, Gautama had a daughter of unknown name. There is a reference to this girl in Śloka 11 of Chapter 56 of Aśvamedha Parva. It is reported that this daughter wept when Uṣāṅga a disciple of Gautama came to the āśrama with a huge load of firewood on his head. In Chapter 4 of Vāmana Purāṇa there is a reference to a few other daughters of Gautama, namely, Jayā, Jayantī and Aparājī.
3) An attempt to kill Ahalyā. Once when Gautama was away from the āśrama Indra came there as a guest. Considering it as her duty to treat a guest of her husband properly during his absence Ahalyā received him well and gave him fruit to ease his tiredness. Indra went back. Gautama on knowing this on his return suspected the chastity of his wife and calling his son Cirakārī to his side asked him to cut off her head. After giving the order Gautama went to the forests. Cirakārī had a peculiar nature. He will ponder over things deeply before taking any action. He knew he must obey the orders of his father but killing one's own mother was a greater sin than disobeying a father. Weighing the merits and demerits of the act Cirakārī sat thinking without doing anything. Gautama when he reached the forest thought again about Ahalyā and her crime. After all what has she done? A guest came to the āśrama and as duty-bound she welcomed him. It was indeed a great sin to have killed her by her own son. Immersed in thoughts of this kind, sad and repentant, Gautama returned to the āśrama to find Cirakārī sitting silently deeply engulfed in thoughts. On seeing his father Cirakārī was perplexed and he explained to his father about the good and bad effects of his order. Gautama was pleased at this and he blessed him with long life.

4) How the disciple Utaniga was tested. Utaniga was the best of the disciples of Gautama. So even when all the other disciples were sent away Gautama asked Utaniga to continue as a disciple which Utaniga did most willingly. The disciple became old with grey hairs. Then taking pity on him Gautama received gurudakshinam from Utaniga and sent him away with blessings. (For details see under ‘Utaniga’).

5) Curse of Ahalayá. Indra became a lover of Ahalayá and slept with her. Gautama came to know of that curse and Indra and Ahalayá. (For details see under Ahalayá).

6) Other details regarding Gautama.
   (i) Kalmásapáda, King of Ayodhyá. lived for twelve years as a demon following a curse of Vasiśthá. At last he took refuge in Gautama and following his advice went to Gokarna and doing penance there to propitiate Siva attained moksa. (Sivarátrí Mālātúnya).
   (ii) It was sage Nodhas, alias Gautama, who composed Súkta 58, Manḍalá one of Áregveda.
   (iii) Laksmána, brother of Sí Ráma, constructed a palace called Vaijayanta near the áśrama of Gautama. (Uttara Rámañyána).
   (iv) Gautama is one of the seven sages (saptarṣis (Sókha 50, Chapter 133, Anúśāna Parva).
   (v) Gautama sat in the court of Brahmá and worshipped Brahmá. (M.B. Sáballá Parva).
   (vi) Gautama once blessed Dyumatsena, father of Satyavan, and said that he would regain his eyesight. (Sókha 11. Chapter 298, Vana Parva).
   (vii) When the war between the Páñdavas and Kauravas broke out Gautama went to the Kurukṣetra battlefield and advised Droṇa to stop the battle. (Sókha 36, Chapter 190, Droṇa Parva).
   (viii) Gautama was also one of the many sages who visited Bhiṣma while he was lying on his bed of arrows.
   (ix) Once Gautama built a hermitage on the top of the mountain Páriyátra and did penance there for sixtythousand years. Kála, the God of time, then appeared before him and Gautama received him well and sent him away. (Sókha 10, Chapter 47, Sántí Parva).
   (x) Once Gautama turned the moustache of Indra green by a curse for showing disrespect to him. (Sókha 23, Chapter 352, Sántí Parva).
   (xi) When Gautama was born, there was such brilliance that the surrounding darkness was removed and so the boy was named Gautama (Gau = light rays, Tamás = darkness) to mean the remover of darkness. (Sókha 94, Chapter 93, Anúśāna Parva).
   (xii) Once Gautama instructed the King Vrbádaráhi on the evil of accepting rewards for good deeds. (Sókha 42, Chapter 93, Anúśāna Parva).
   (xiii) Gautama was also one among the rsis who swore that they were not involved in the theft of the lotuses of the sage Agastya. (Sókha 19, Chapter 94, Anúśāna Parva, M.B.).

GAUTAMA II. A brahmin who was a member of the court of Yudhíshthíra. He was a member of Indrasábha also. This Gautama while he was living in Girivraja had sexual relations with a Śúdra woman from the country of Uśíñara and a son was born to them named Káśijíváñ. (Sókas 17, 18 and 3 of Chapters 4, 7 and 21 respectively of Sábha Parva, M.B.).

GAUTAMA III. An ascetic of great erudition. He had three sons named Ekata, Dvita and Títra. (See under ‘Ekata’). (Sóka 79, Chapter 36, Sálya Parva).

GAUTAMA IV. Another ascetic of great virtue. Once when this Gautama was going through the forest he saw an elephant babe lying wearied. He took it to his āśrama and brought it up. When it became a full grown elephant Indra disguised as the emperor Dhṛtarásśa came to take it away secretly. Gautama found it out and then he was offered thousand cows and much wealth in lieu of the elephant. But Gautama refused to part with the elephant. Pleased with his extreme affection for his dependant, Indra took both Gautama and the elephant to heaven. (Chapter 102, Anúsána Parva).

GAUTAMA V. An ungrateful brahmin. He was born in Madhyadeśa. He left his parents and after travelling in many lands he came to a country of foresters. The foresters received him with respect and he lived in a hut of the foresters and married a lady from among them.

Gautama abandoned his brahminhood and accepted the duties of foresters. He was living like this when another brahmin boy came to that village. He searched in vain for a brahmin house to stay for the night and then knowing that a man born a brahmin but made a forester by his duties was living there he went to his house. Gautama also came there carrying the animals and birds he had hunted down that day. His body was bathed in blood. The brahmin guest felt compassion for Gautama and advised him to leave his trade and go to his house in his country.

In the morning the brahmin guest went away without taking any food. The advice of his guest kept him thinking. He decided to abandon his life as a hunter and so leaving everything behind he went to the seashore. He met some merchants on the way and while they were travelling together a wild elephant attacked them. Many were killed and Gautama escaping ran swiftly and came to the base of a big banyan tree. He was tired and slept there for a while.

A big vulture named Nádijarágha lived on the top of that banyan tree. He used to go out to worship Brahmá at dusk and when he returned to his abode that day he saw a man lying weared down below. Gautama attempted to catch the vulture and eat it but the vulture playing a benign host placed before Gautama food for him and made enquiries about him and asked him the purpose of his travels. Gautama told him that he was very poor and that he wanted to acquire some wealth somehow.

Nádijarágha then said that he would get for him enough wealth from the demon-King Virápákṣa who was an intimate friend of his. Gautama was pleased. The vulture fanned him and sent him to sleep. Next morning Nádijarágha sent Gautama to Virápákṣa and the demon gave Gautama as much gold as he could carry on his shoulders.

Gautama took the gold as a head load and came back to the base of the banyan tree. Nádijarágha came to him and they talked to each other for some time. Gautama who had become a gluttonous flesh-eater looked with greed at the fat body of the vulture and in an instant killed it and packed the flesh along with the load of gold and went his way.

Virūpākṣa did not see Nādījāṅgha for two days and he was worried. He, therefore, sent his son to the banyan tree to look for Nādījāṅgha. When he reached the base of the tree he found to his grief only the bones and feathers of his father's friend. He knew what had happened and he immediately followed the ungrateful brahmin and capturing him brought him to his father bound hand and foot. Virūpākṣa without any mercy cut him into pieces and threw them for the crows to eat. But even the crows would not eat the flesh of such an ungrateful man.

Virūpākṣa burnt the remains of Nādījāṅgha in a funeral pyre. Devas assembled in the skies to watch the funeral. Then Surabhi sprinkled milk on the funeral pyre and brought back Nādījāṅgha to life. The reborn vulture felt sorry for Gautama and requested Surabhi to restore to life the wretched Gautama also. Gautama also was brought back to life and he embraced Nādījāṅgha. Gautama then went away with his load of gold.

Gautama returned to Śabarālāya and there married a Śūdra lady and begot evil sons. The devas were offended at this and cursing him condemned him to hell. (Chapters 168 to 173. Sānti Parva).

GAUTAMI I. Another name of Kṛṣṇī, wife of Droṇa. (See under Kṛṣṇī).

GAUTAMI II. The woman called Jātiḷā belonging to the family of Gautama is known as Gautami also. (See under Jātiḷā).

GAUTAMI III. A brāhmaṇī whose son succumbed to snake-bite. (See Arjuna).

GAUTAMI IV. A river referred to in verse 71, Chapter 165 of Anuśāsana Parva.

GAVĀKṢA I. A monkey king. A terrific warrior, he helped Śrī Rāma with 60,000 mānas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 283, Verse 4).

GAVĀKṢA II. Younger brother of Sakuni, the son of Subhaga. In the great war he broke into the military set up of the Pāṇḍavas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90). He was killed by Irāvān, son of Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90).

GAVALGANA. Father of Saṅjaya of Mahābhārata fame. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 97).

GAVAYA. A very powerful monkey King. As captain of a regiment he fought on the side of Śrī Rāma in the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war. (Vana Parva, Chapter 263, Verse 5).

GAVĀYANA. (GAVĀMAYANAM). A yājña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 102).

GAVIJĀTA. (SRNG). Th son of a sage named Nāgabhūṣaṇa, Gavijāta cut sad that King Parīkṣit should die of snake-bite. The curse was made under the following circumstances.

King Parīkṣit went hunting one day in the forest and he who had chased a deer in hot haste for some distance felt naturally very weak and tired, and requested a sage he saw there in the forest for some water. Immersed in meditation the sage did not hear the King, and mistaking him to be a haughty fellow, the King, with his stick, lifted a dead snake and placed it round the neck of the sage. Yet he did not stir. The King returned to his palace.

Gavijāta, son of the sage and a devotee of Devī heard of the insult heaped on his father's head while he was merry-making in the forest with his companions. The companions derided him by saying that though his father was Nāgabhūṣaṇa (having snakes as ornament) the nāga was flesless. Enraged at this and not waiting to study details about the incident he pronounced the following curse. "Whoever might be the person who threw a dead snake about my father's neck, he will be bitten to death by Taṇḍaka within seven days from today." Only after the curse was pronounced did he understand that it was King Parīkṣit who had become the object of the curse. And, he despatched his disciple immediately to Parīkṣit to inform him about the curse. The King's reaction was, "when the time for death comes let me die." (Devī Bhāgavata, Dvītiya Skandha).

GAVIŚṬHA. A famous asura. It was he who descended on earth as king Drumasaṇa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67).

GAYA. A particular locality in North India (Nepal). Here there is Gaya mountain and a holy centre also. There is legend to the effect that Buddha did tapas here. People of this locality gave many presents to Yuddhiṣṭhira. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 16).

GAYA I. See Gayātirtha.

1) General. A King of ancient India Gaya was a Rājaṛṣi and son of Amūrtaraya. The Rājaṛṣi had conducted many yajñas. A very well-known yajña of his is described in verse 19, Chapter 75 of Vana Parva.

2) Particular Information. (1) Gaya was a member in Yamarāja's assembly. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 18)

(2) He had earned reputation and wealth by visiting the sacred temples in India. (Vana Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 18).

(3) The Rājaṛṣi had come in his vimāna (aeroplane) to witness the fighting between Arjuna and Kṛpācārya in the war, which broke out as a result of the Kauravas lifting the cows of the Virāṭa King. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 9).

(4) Śrī Kṛṣṇa met Gaya on his (Kṛṣṇa's) way to Hastināpur from Dvārakā. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 27).

(5) Once King Māndhātā subjugated Gaya. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 62, Verse 10).

(6) Sarasvatī devī once attended a yajña conducted by Gaya, assuming for herself the name Viśālā.

(7) He once gifted away land to Brahmīns. (Śaṁti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 25).

(8) Gaya did not eat flesh. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 59).

GAYA II. A King born to Āyus, the son of King Purūravas by his (Āyus's) wife Svarbhānu (Śrīvabhānavi). This Gaya was the brother of Nahuṣa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 25).

GAYA III. An asura. (See Gayātirtha).

GAYA IV. A King born in the dynasty of the famous emperor Prthu. Prthu had two sons called Antardhāna and Vādī. A son called Hāvirdhāna was born to Antardhāna by Śikhaṇḍi; he (Hāvirdhāna) married Dhiśaṇḍa born in the family of Agni and they had six sons called Pracīnaparśu, Śukra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vraja and Ajīna. (Harivānha, Chapter 2, Verse 31).

GAYA V. A King, a descendant of Dhrūva. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).
GAYAKA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Sloka 67, Chapter 85, Salya Parva).

GAYAPARVATAM. A sacred mountain. Yamarāja honoured it on a particular occasion. Brahmasaras encircled by the Devas is on this mountain. To perform the Śrīdēha rites of the dead at Brahmasaras is considered to be excellent. (See Gayātīthra).

GAYASĪRAS. A peak of Gayā Mountain; it is also known as Gayāśīra. (Vana Parva, Chapter 87).

GAYASĪRAS. See Gayāśiras.

GAYĀTĪTHA. The following story is told in the Agni Purāṇa about the origin of this very reputed sacred place at Gayā.

An asura called Gayā was once performing tapas here. As the intensity of his tapas went on increasing, the Devas got nervous and they approached Viṣṇu with the request that he should save them from Gayāsura. Viṣṇu agreed to oblige them. Meantime the intensity of Gayā's tapas increased daily. Ultimately Viṣṇu appeared to Gayā and as requested by him granted him the boon that he would become more holy and sanctified than all the tirthas in the world. Brahmā and other Devas became afraid of Gayā's power and prowess and they complained about him to Viṣṇu, who advised Brahmā to request Gayā for his body in order to perform a yajña. Brahmā did so and Gayā lay down on earth so that the Yajña might be performed on his body. Brahmā began the yajña on his head, and made an offering when the body of Gayā was not stationary or quiet. When told about this fact Viṣṇu called up Dharmadeva (See Marici, Para 3) and told him thus: "You please hold devasīlā (a divine stone) on the body of Gayā, and let all the Devas sit upon it, and I shall be seated on the stone along with the Devas, holding the gāda (club) in my hands."

Dharmadeva did as he was bidden by Viṣṇu. The body of Gayā stopped shaking as soon as Viṣṇu sat upon the stone, and Brahmā made the full offerings. Henceforth the place became a holy tirtha under the name Gayā. After the yajña was over Brahmā gave the Gayā temple 20,000 yards (5 Krośa) in extent with 55 villages attached to it as dakṣinā (fee) to the masters of the ceremony. Brahmā presented the villages to them after creating therein hills purely of gold, rivers flowing with milk and honey, houses built of Gold and silver etc. But the brahmins who got these gifts stayed on there, their avarice only on the increase perhaps. Angry at this Brahmā cursed the people of Gayā, and according to it the brahmins became illiterate and evil-minded; rivers flowed with water instead of milk and honey. The brahmins lamenting over their evil fate submitted their grievances before Brahmā, who consol ed them thus: Well, brahmins of Gayā, as long as there exist the sun and the moon you will continue to be dependent upon the Gayā tirtha for your sustenance. Whoever comes to Gayā and gives offerings to you and performs the due rites for the souls of the departed, the souls of hundred generations of his ancestors will be transferred from hell to heaven where they will attain final beatitude."

Thus did Gayātīthra become famous. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 144).

GAYĀTĪTHA. One of the seven horses of Sūrya. The other horses are Bṛhati, Uṣnik, Jagati, Tristūthi, Anuṣṭubh, and Paṅkti. (Chapter 8, Aṣṭam 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

GAYATRI II.

1) General information. A glorious Vedic mantra. This mantra has twenty-four letters. There are nineteen categories of movable and immovable things in this world and to this if the five elements are added the number twenty-four is obtained. That is why the Gayātā has got twenty-four letters. (Chapter 4, Bhīṣma Parva). At the time of Tripura dahana Śiva hung this Gayātā mantra as a string on the top of his chariot (Chapter 34, Kaṇa Parva).

2) The glory of Gayātī. If one recites Gayātī once one will be freed from all sins done at that time; if one recites it ten times all the sins done on one day will be washed away. Thus, if one recites it a hundred times the sins of one month; thousand times, the sins of a year; one lakh times, the sins of his life time; ten lakh times, the sins of his previous birth; hundred lakh times, the sins of all his births, will be washed away. If a man recites it ten crore times he becomes a realised soul and attains mokṣa. (Navama Śkandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

3) How to write Gayātī. It should be recited sitting still with your head slightly drawn downwards with your right palm open upwards, with the fingers raised and bent to give the shape of the hood of a snake. Starting from the centre of the ring-finger and counting down and going up through the centre of the small finger and touching the top lines on the ring, middle and fore-fingers, count down to the base of the forefinger you get number ten. This is how the number of recitations is counted. This method is called the Karamālā (hand rosary) method. This is not the only method that could be used. You can use a rosary made of lotus seeds or glass beads. If you are using lotus seeds you should select white seeds for the rosary. (Navama Śkandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

GAYATRISTHĀNA. A sacred place of northern Bhārata. If one spends one night here one will get the benefit of giving away as gifts a thousand cows. (Sloka 28, Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

GERU. A mineral obtained from mountains. (Sloka 95, Chapter 158, Vana Parva).

GH (‘g’). This letter has two meanings: (1) Bell (2) a blow or assault; striking or killing. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

GHANAPĀTHA. A particular system of Vedic studies. There are four such systems. The system of separating each word from conjunctions and combinations and combining with the word just before and after it is called Jātāpātha. Jātāpātha means joined or combined Pātha. Ghanapātha is that to avoid errors in Jātāpātha Ghanapātha consists of padapātha and Kramapātha. In Padapātha the split words are once more combined and Prāśākhyas lays down the rules to combine words. It is because of this scientific system of reciting that the Rgveda remains to this day pure in text without different readings.

GHANṬA I. A brahmin born in Vasītha’s family. He spent hundred years worshipping Śiva. Once Ghaṇṭa asked sage Devala to give his daughter in marriage to him. But Ghaṇṭa’s ugliness stood in the way. So he abducted the daughter of the sage and married her. Enraged at this Devala cursed and turned him into an owl. He was also given redemption from the curse that he would regain his form the day he helped Indra-dyumna. (Skanda Purâna).

GAHÂTA II. See under Ghañtâkarna.

GHAñTÂKARNA I.

1) General. Ghañtâ and Karpa were two Râksasas brother who attained salvation by worshipping Visûu. (Bhâgavata, da'sama Skandha). But the elder brother, Ghañtâ alone is sometimes called by the name Ghañtâkanâra in the Purânas.

2) Birth. There is a reference in Dârukavadhâ (killing of Dârukasura) about the birth of Ghañtâkarna. Dâruka, after having secured a boon from Brahman, used to harass the world too much and when his depre-dation became unbearable Siva created Bhadrakâli from his third eye and she killed the asura. Mandodari wife of Dâruka and daughter of Maya was sunk in grief at the death of her husband. She began to do tapas. Siva appeared and gave her a few drops of sweat from his body saying that the person on whom she sprinkled the sweat drops would suffer from small-pox and that such patients would worship her (Mandodari) and supply her necessary food. From that day onwards Mandodari became the presiding deity over small-pox. On her way back to the earth with the sweat drops Mandodari met Bhadrakâli at whom she threw the sweat drops to take revenge for her husband’s death. Immediately Bhadrakâli fell down with an attack of small-pox. Hearing about the mishap Siva created a terrible Râksasa called Ghañtâkarna. According to Siva’s directions Ghañtâkarna licked off the small-pox from Bhadrakâli’s body. But, when he tried to lick it off from her face she prevented him saying that she and Ghañtâkarna were sister and brother and that it was improper for the brother to lick the face of the sister. And, even to this day the small-pox on Bhadrakâli’s face remains as an ornament to her.

3) The name Ghañtâkarna. This Râksasa, at first, was an enemy of Visûu, and did not tolerate even the mention of Visûu’s name. Therefore, he went about always wearing a bell so that the tinkling of it warded off the name of Visûu from entering his ears. Because he wore a ghañtâ (bell) in his Karnas (ears) he came to be known as Ghañtâkarna. (M.B. Bhavîsya Parva, Chapter 80).

4) Turned out to be a devotee of Visûu. Ghañtâkarna became a servant of Kubera. Once he did tapas for salvation. Siva appeared and asked him to do tapas to please Visûu as Visûu was greater than himself (Siva). From that day onwards he removed the bells from his ears and became a devotee of Visûu. (Bhavîsya Parva, Chapter 80).

5) Attained salvation. Handing over charge of government to Sâtyaki Sri Krsna once went to Kailâsa mounted on Garuḍa to see Siva. On his way he dismounted at the Badaryârama, and while sitting deep in meditation there he heard the thundery voice of Pâcâs (souls of dead people roaming about without attainment salvation). He also heard the barking of dogs, and thus he understood that Pâcâs were hunting animals. The hunters came to Krsna’s presence. They were led by Ghañtâkarna who was reciting the name of Visûu. Sri Krsna felt pity for him. Ghañtâkarna told Krsna that his aim and ambition were to see Visûu and that Siva had blessed that he would realise his ambition at Badaryârama. Pleased at all this, Sri Krsna revealed his Viśavûrupa (representing in his person the whole universe), and at once Ghañtâkarna brought half of the corpse of a brahman and submitted it as a present before the Lord. He explained to Krsna that according to the custom of the Râksasas that was the best present which could be made. Without accepting the present Krsna patted Ghañtâkarna on his back with the result that he cast off his body and rose up to Vaikuntha. (Bhavîsya Purâna, Chapters 80-82 and also Bhâgavata, Dasa’ama Skandha).

6) Ghañtâkarna Pratishtâ. (Installation of his idol in temples). Though Ghañtâkarna was a Râksasa, as he attained Vaikuntha due to the blessings of God Almighty his idol is still installed in temples and worshipped. The installation ceremony is described in Chapter 59 of the Agni Purâna thus: “Ghañtâkarna should have 18 hands. He cures diseases born as a result of sins. He holds in his right hand Vajra, sword, Cakra, arrow etc. And in his left hand braid, sword, cord bell, pickaxe etc. He also holds the trishula (trident). Ghañtâkarna who turned out to be a Deva is believed to cure small-pox.”

GHAñTÂKARNA II. One of the four attendants presented by Brahmana. Nandisena, Lohitaksa, Ghañtâkarna and Kumudamali are the four attendants. (Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verses 23-24).

GAÑTODARA. An asura, who was a member of Varuṇa’s assembly. (Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 134).

GHARMA. A king of the Aiiga royal dynasty.

GHÂTA. An urban area in ancient India. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 63).

GHÂTA. A notorious thief. He had a friend called Karpâra. They were jointly known as Ghañtâkarpas. Once both the friends went to commit theft. Leaving Ghañta at the door-steps Karpasa entered the chamber of the princess who after enjoying sexual pleasures with him gave him some money asking him to repeat such visits in future. Karpasa told Ohañta all that had happened and handed over to him the money which the princess had given him. Karpasa went again to the princess. But, owing to the weariness caused by the night’s enjoyment both the princess and he slept till late in the morning. Meantime the palace guards found out the secret and took the lovers into custody. Karpasa was sentenced to death and led out to be hanged. Ghañta was present on the spot and Karpasa asked him secretly to save the princess. Accordingly Ghañta, without anybody knowing about it, took the princess over to his house.

The King ordered enquiries about the absence of the princess. Under the natural presumption that some relation or other of Karpasa alone might have carried away his daughter the King ordered the guards of Karpara’s corpse to arrest anybody who approached the corpse and expressed grief. Ghañta came to know of this secret order of the King. Next day evening Ghañta posing himself as a drunkard and with a servant disguised as a woman walking in front and with another servant carrying rice mixed with dhatūra (a poisonous fruit) following him came to the guards keeping watch over Karpāra's body. Ghatotkaca gave the poisoned rice to the guards who after eating it swooned under the effect. Ghatotkaca used the opportunity to burn the corpse of Karpāra there itself. After that Ghatotkaca disappeared.

The King then deputed new guards to watch over the funeral pyre of Karpāra as he anticipated some one to come to pick his charred bones from the pyre. But, Ghatotkaca put the guards into a swoon by a mantra he had learned from a sannyāsin and went away with the bones of his friend. Realising now that further stay there was not safe Ghatotkaca left the place with the princess and the sannyāsin. But, the princess, who had already fallen in love with the sannyāsin poisoned Ghatotkaca to death.

GHATAJĀNUKA. A sage who was a prominent member in Yudhishtīra's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4). Once, Śrī Kṛṣṇa, on his way to Hastināpura met this sage. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 38).

GHATAKARPARA. One of the nine great poets in Sanskrit reputed as the nine gems in Vikramādiya's court.

“Dhanvantari—Kṣaṇapāṇi Āmarasimha—Śaṅku—Vetālabhāṭṭa—Ghatakarpara—Kālidāsa”. A poem of twenty-two verses in Sanskrit called Ghatakarpara kāvyā is attributed to him. The theme of the poem is a message despatched by the hero to his wife who has only recently been married. All the stanzas are in yamaka (repeating a word or set of words to convey different meanings at the end of each line). By composing a poem called ‘Nalodaya’, Kālidāsa answered the challenge posed by Ghatakarpara in the use of Yamaka. Ghatakarpara answered Kālidāsa in the following stanza.

Ekā hi doṣo guṇasannipate nimajjatindoriti yo babhase/nunam na drṣṭarv kavināpi tena daridryadoso guṇarāṇaśaṁ. //

(Kālidāsa, in verse 3, Canto 1 of Kumārasambhava had written ‘Ekā hi doṣo guṇasannipate nimajjatindorito kiranēśvivāṅkāh’. In the above verse by Ghatakarpara the usage ‘Kavināpi tena’ may be interpreted in two ways, viz. Kavinā+api+tena and Kavi+nāpi+tena. By the second combination Ghatakarpara converted Kālidāsa into a barber (nāpita).

GHĀTİKĀ. A measure of time equal to 24 minutes. Sixty vinādikās make one Ghaṭikā. (See Kālamāṇa).

GHĀTOTKACA

1) General. Ghatotkaca, son of Bhīṃasena played a very important part in the story of Mahābhārata. He was, from his very birth, a staunch friend and ally of the Pāṇḍavas. He courted a hero's death in the great war.

2) Birth. On the burning of the ‘lac Palace’ the Pāṇḍavas escaped through a tunnel and reached a forest. While they were sleeping on the ground, Hidimba the Rākṣasa chief in the forest saw the Pāṇḍavas from the top of a tree, and he députed his sister Hidimbi to bring over the Pāṇḍavas to him for food.

Hidimbi approached the Pāṇḍavas in the guise of a beautiful woman. She was attracted towards Bhīma and she prayed for the return of his love, which Bhīma refused. Impatient at the delay Hidimbi rushed towards the Pāṇḍavas, and in the duel that ensued between him and Bhīma, he was killed by Bhīma.

Then Hidimbi approached Kunti and requested her to ask Bhīma to marry her. The Pāṇḍavas agreed to the proposal on condition that Bhīma and Hidimbi should enjoy their honeymoon in the forest and on mountains, but Bhīma should return to them at dusk everyday. Ghatotkaca was the son born to Bhīma and Hidimbi, (Ādi Parva, Chapter 155).

Indra bestowed on Ghatotkaca prowess enough to be a suitable opponent to Karṇa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 155, Verse 47).

Ghatotkaca grew up to become a good friend of the Pāṇḍavas. When Hidimbi and Ghatotkaca took leave of Kunti said to Ghatotkaca: “You are the eldest son to the Pāṇḍavas. You should be ever a support to them.” To this Ghatotkaca answered that he would return to them whenever any need arose for it.

3) Carried the Pāṇḍavas on shoulders. During their exile in the forest the Pāṇḍavas became too tired to walk any further when Bhīma remembcred Ghatotkaca, who promptly appeared before the Pāṇḍavas, and at the instance of Bhīma got down a number of Rākṣasas also. Ghatotkaca carrying Pāṇcāli on his shoulders, and the Rākṣasas carrying the Pāṇḍava brothers on their shoulders went by air to Badarikāśrama where Naraṇārāyana were doing tapas, landed them there, and then they (Ghatotkaca and his companions) took leave of the Pāṇḍavas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 145).

4) Ghatotkaca in the great war. (1) In the first day's fighting he fought against Alambuṣa, Duryodhana and Bhagadatta. Frightened at the terrible course of the fight the Kauravas purposely postponed that day's fighting. (Bhīma Parva, Chapters, 45, 57, 58).

(2) He defeated the King of Vaiṅga and killed his elephant. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 36).

(3) Defeated Vaiṅka. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 36).

(4) On receiving blows from the great Kaurava heroes, Ghatotkaca rose up to the sky. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 6).

(5) Ghatotkaca made the Kaurava army take to their heels by the exercise of his magic powers. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 41-47).

(6) Fought a duel with Durmukha. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 13).

(7) Dhrītarāṣṭra praised the prowess of Ghatotkaca. (Drona Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 62).

(8) He fought with Alāyudha. (Drona Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 27).

(9) Killed Alambuṣa. (Drona Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 28).

(10) Aṣvatthāma, son of Drona killed Aṇjana Parvā, son of Ghatotkaca, (Drona Parva, Chapter 136, Verse 56).

(11) Ghatotkaca fought with Karṇa. (Drona Parva, Chapter 175).

(12) He fought with Jaṭāsaurna. (Drona Parva, Chapter 174).

(13) He killed Alāyudha. (Drona Parva, Chapter 178, Verse 31).

(14) Karṇa clashed with Ghatotkaca and failing to kill him by any means he (Karṇa) used Vaijayanti Śakti as the last resort. This Śakti had been given to him by Indra in exchange for his head-gear and earrings, and Karṇa had been keeping the Śakti in reserve to kill Arjuna. At any rate Karṇa used it against Ghaṭotkaca and he was killed. After killing Ghaṭotkaca the Sakti entered the sphere of the stars. (Drona Parva, Chapter 180).

5) Other information. (1) Ghaṭotkaca hated the brahmmins and their yajñas. (Drona Parva, Chapter 181, Verse 27).

(2) When the souls of the heroes killed in the great war were called upon the banks of Gangā by Vyāsa, Ghaṭotkaca's soul too had appeared. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 8).

(3) After death he lived with Yakṣadevas. (Svargarohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 37).

GHAṬOTKACA VADHIPARVA. A sub Parva of Drona Parva. (Drona Parva, Chapters 153-186).

GHORA. A son of sage Āṅgiras. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 131).

GHORAKA (M). Name of an urban region in the southwest of ancient India. The people of this region supplied money to Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 14).

GHOŚĀ. A tapasvini famed in Rgveda. She was the grand-daughter of Drgata mahārṣi and daughter of sage Kaksīvān. As she contracted leprosy in her very childhood nobody came forward to marry her. Ultimately she composed a mantra in praise of Śvāmidevas. They cured Ghośā of leprosy and she got married. (Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 7, Sākta 117).

GHOŚAVATI. The famous Viṇā of emperor Udayana. (Kathāsāritāgāra).

GHOŚAYĀṬRAPARVA. A sub-Parva, Chapters 236-251 of the Vana Parva. The procession made by Duryodhana and others to the Pāṇḍavas who lived in the forest forms the theme of this sub-Parva.

GHRÂṆÂSRASVAS. An attendant of Skanda. Always immersed in yoga he worked for the welfare of brahmmins. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 57).

GHRTA. A King of the Āṅga dynasty. He was the son of Gharman and father of Vidūṣa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

GHRTACI. 1) General. She was an exceptionally beautiful asparā woman, and she revelled in disturbing the peace of the sages and becoming mother of children by them. Ghrṭaci, who succeeded in breaking the penance of the sages like Kuṣānābha, Vyāsa and Bharadvāja occupied a very prominent position among asparā women.

2) Śuka, the son of Vyāsa. Vyāsa longed very much to have a son. Ultimately, after receiving instruction and advice from Nārada, he reached the peaks of Mahāmeru and worshipped Mahādeva and Mahādevī for one year with the one-syllabled mantra OM which is the very seed of word. By now the great tejas (effulgence) of Vyāsa lighted up the whole world, and Indra got nervous and upset. The great Lord Śiva appeared on the scene and blessed Vyāsa that he will have a son who would become a very wise man, very much interested in helping others, and very famous also. Vyāsa returned gratified to his āśrama. One day, while in the process of preparing the sticks for producing fire, thoughts about a son passed through his mind. Fire is produced by the rubbing of two sticks. But, he thought, how could he who had no wife, become the father of a son? While immersed in such thoughts he saw Ghrṭaci standing near him, herself having come along the sky. Vyāsa did not like the presence of Ghrṭaci. Fearing the curse of Vyāsa she assumed the form of a parrot and flew away.

The beauty of Ghrṭaci as also the flight of the parrot kindled erotic feelings in Vyāsa and seminal emission occurred. The semen fell on the stick used for producing fire, and without knowing the fact he went on using the sticks for producing fire. And, then did appear from it a son of divine lustre. That son became reputed in later years as sage Śuka. (Devi Bhāgavata, Prathama Skanda).

3) Two children by Bharadvāja. Once sage Bharadvāja was taking his bath in the Gangā, Ghrṭaci also came to bathe. On the banks of the river her clothes caught something and were removed from their position. The sight of it caused seminal emission to the Sage. The semen thus emitted was kept in a Drona (bamboo cup) and when it was like the Drona broke and out of it came a child. It was the child which, in later years, became so very famous as the great Dronācārya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 149). On another occasion also, the sight of Ghrṭaci caused emission in Bharadvāja, and Śrutavati or Śrūvāvati was the noble daughter born out of it. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 63).

4) Hundred daughters of Kuṣānābha. Kuṣānābha, son of Kuṣa was a saintry king. Once Kuṣānābha fell in love with Ghrṭaci and a hundred daughters were born to him of her. Once Wind-God felt enamoured of the hundred girls, but they refused to satisfy his desire. So he cursed them to become crooked or bent down in body. Later on, Brahmadatta, son of the sage Cūli, straightened their bodies and married them. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Canto 32).

5) Birth of Ruru. On another occasion Ghrṭaci attracted and subjugated a King called Pramati. Ruru was the son born to Pramati by Ghrṭaci.

6) Other information. (1) Once Ghrṭaci pleased Sage Aṣṭāvakra, who introduced her into Kubera’s assembly. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 44).

(2) Ghrṭaci danced at the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 63).

(3) A daughter called Citrângadâ was born to Viśvakarman by Ghrṭaci. (See under Viśvakarmā).

(4) A daughter called Devavatì was born to Ghrṭaci. (See under Devavatì).

GHRTAPAS. A great sage who lived on ghee. A disciple of Brahma he was an instructor of Sanātana Dharma. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 24).

GHRTAPRŚTHA. A son of Priyavrata, brother of Uttānapāda. Svāyambhuva manu had two famous sons called Priyavrata and Uttānapāda. Priyavrata, the elder son, married two daughters of Viśvakarmaprajāpati called Surūpā and Barhiṣmati, and of Surūpā were born ten sons called Agnidhra, Idmājilva, Yajtabhū, Mahāvīra, Rukmaśukra, Ghrṭapṛśṭha, Savana, Mehbātthi and Viṭihotra, and also one daughter called Urjaveati. (Devi Bhāgavata, 8th Skanda).

GHRTAVATI. An important river in India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 23).
GODILA II

GHRTEYU. A King born in the Aṅga dynasty. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

GHIRNIRĀ. Foster mother of Devayāni, daughter of Sukrācārya. (Adi Parva, Chapter 78, Verse 25).

GILGAMIŠ. It is the most ancient book of the Babylonians. It is as old as Rgveda. Another book so old as these is the "Book of the Dead" of the Egyptians. (See under Jalapralaya).

GIRIKAHRVARA. A place of habitation on the north-eastern side of Bhārata. (Sloka 42, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

GIRIKA. Wife of Uparicaravasu. 'This gem of a lady was the daughter of the river Suktimati. There is a story behind her marrying Uparicara. Suktimati was a river flowing through the capital city of the kingdom of Uparicara. Once the mountain Koliāhala driven by amorous desires subdued Suktimati. The next morning on finding no river in its place the people were surprised. The news reached the ears of the King. He became furious and rushing to the mountain gave it a hard kick. It created a hole in the mountain and the river flowed through it. But by that time Koliāhala had got a son and a daughter of Suktimati. Greatly pleased at the King for setting her free from Koliāhala, Suktimati gave her children to the King. The King brought up the son and made him the chief of his army. The girl was brought up and named Girikā and when she was of marriagable age the King married her. When once Girikā was having her monthly period the King was forced to go to the forests for hunting. While in the forests he saw the animals having sexual acts and as he thought of Girikā at home he had emission. He never wanted to waste the seminal fluid. He wrapped it in a leaf and sent it to his wife through a kite. Another kite thinking it to be something to eat attacked the packet and it fell into a river down below. A fish swallowed it and later when a fisherman caught it and opened its belly a boy and a girl came out of it. The girl was Satyavati mother of Vyāsa. (10th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

GIRINĀTHADIKŚITA. See under Gaṇanidhi.

GIRIPRASTHA. A mountain of the country of Niśadhā. Indra once hid himself on this mountain. (Sloka 13, Chapter 315, Vana Parva).

GIRIVRĀJA. A city which has gained great importance in all the Purāṇas of India.

1) Origin. There was once a King named Kuśa in the Pūru dynasty. (For genealogy see under 'Gāḍhi'). This Kuśa begot of his wife, Vaidarbi, four sons named Kuśāmba, Kuśānābha, Asūrtarajasa and Vasu. Of them built a city of his own and started his rule there. Girivrāja is the magnificent city built by Vasu. (Sarga 32, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmikī Rāmāyana).

2) Jārāsandha's rule. Vasu had a son named Bhradhratha and Jārāsandha was the son of Bhradhratha. During the rule of Jārāsandha Girivrāja became glorious like Nandanodyāna. This city lying in the midst of five mountains was the seat of prosperity then. (Chapter 21, Sabhā Parva). Jārāsandha kept many mighty kings of his time, as prisoners in this city. Unable to control his wrath against Krṣṇa once he hurled his mace a hundred times and threw it from Girivrāja to Mathurā. Śrī Krṣṇa, Bhīmasena and Arjuna entered Girivrāja in disguise and engaging Jārāsandha in a duel killed him and crowned his son as King. (Chapter 24, Sabhā Parva). Once King Dūndhumāra abandoning the gifts offered by the devas came and slept in Girivrāja. (Sloka 39, Chapter 6, Anuśāsana Parva).

GITHA. See under Bhagavad Gītā.

GITALPRAY. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 7, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

GITALVIVYĀDHARA. A great musician among the Gandharvas. When he found that sage Pulastya had no liking for music he teased the sage by making the sounds of a boar. The enraged sage cursed him and turned him into a boar. He got relief from the curse when Ikvāku killed him and Gitalvidyadhara became his old self again. (Chapter 46, Śrīti Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

GĪTHA. A King of the Bharata dynasty. (5th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

GO. (GAU). A wife of sage Pulastya. Vaiśravaṇa was born of her. The son left his father and went to Brahmā. (Śloka 12, Chapter 274, Vana Parva).

GOBHIŅU. A King who was the grandson of Turvasu of the Pūru dynasty and son of King Varga. Gobhīnū had a son named Traśānī. (Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa).

GODĀ. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 28, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

GODĀNA. In ancient India it was believed to be a very great deed of moral merit to give cows as gifts. If one buys cows with the hereditary wealth and gives them as gifts one would reach an ever prosperous world and even one who buys cows with the money received by gambling and gives them as gifts would live for several years enjoying prosperity. (Chapter 73, Anuśāsana Parva).

GODĀVARI. A river of South India. This river has been glorified much in the Purāṇas.

1) Godāvāri is a member of the court of Varūṇa. (Śloka 20, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

2) This river originates from Brahmagiri, situated near Tiyambakajyotirlinga of Nasik district in South India. The river is very deep and is a giver of prosperity to those who worship her. Many sages worshipped this river. (Śloka 2, Chapter 88, Vana Parva).

3) If one bathes in this river one will get the benefit of conducting a Gomedha yajña. Not only that, after his death he will go to the land of Vāsuki. (Śloka 33, Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

4) The origin of Agni is from Godāvāri. (Śloka 24, Chapter 222, Vana Parva).

5) Śrī Rāma, Laksmaṇa and Sītā stayed for a long time during their exile in Pañcavaṇi on the shores of this river Godāvāri. (Vālmikī Rāmāyana, Aranya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 16).

6) Godāvāri is one of the most important rivers of India. (Śloka 14, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

7) He who bathes in Godāvāri will be prosperous. (Śloka 29, Chapter 25, Anuśāsana Parva).

GODHA. A village in the north-east part of ancient India. (Śloka 42, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

GODILA I. A Sāmavedamūrti. By his curse Utathya became a dunce and later became famous as Satyatapas. (For details see under Satyatapas).

GODILA II. A servant of Vaśravaṇa. Once when Godila was travelling by air he saw Padmāvatī, wife of Ugrasena, King of Vidarbha, bathing in a pond along with her companions. The very sight of the enchanting Padmāvatī roused carnal passions in him and the Yakṣa took the form of Ugrasena and started singing from the top of a hillock nearby. Padmāvatī went to him because she mistook him for her husband. Embracing her passionately the Yakṣa outraged her modesty. Subtle differences in the act created doubts in Padmāvatī and, on being questioned, the Yakṣa told the truth and left the place. (Chapter 49, Padma Purāṇa).

GOHARANAPARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of Mahābhārata. See under ‘Mahābhārata’.

GOKATYĀ. In ancient India killing of cows was considered to be a great sin. It is interesting to note the punishment prescribed for this crime in the Agni Purāṇa. For one month he should drink barley water only. He should live in a cow-shed wearing the hide of the cow he has killed. He can have some supper and that too without salt. He should bathe for two months in cow’s urine. During day time he should follow the cows looking after their comfort. He should drink the menstrual discharge with his face lifted upwards. Fasting, he should give away as charity ten cows and a bull. If not, he should give as charity all his wealth to god-fearing brahmins. If a man only stops the cow for others to kill he should bear a fourth of the punishment; if he stops and ties it for killing he should bear half of the punishment and if he stops it, ties it and gives the weapon for killing he should bear three-fourths of the punishment. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 159).

GOKHALI. One of the disciples in the tradition of Vyāsa. He was the direct disciple of Sākalya. Sākalya divided the branch of Veda he received into six and gave one to each of the following six disciples: Vālgāyana, Madugalya, Śāli, Ādīśīśā, Gokhali, and Yāṭukarṇa. (Skanda 12, Bhāgavata).

GOKARNA I. See under Gokarṇa.

GOKARNA II. An incarnation of Śiva. In the seventh Varāhakaḷpa Śiva was born as Gokarṇa and he then got four sons named, Kaśyapa, Uṣanas, Cyavana and Bhāspati. (Satarudrasaṁhitā, Śiva Purāṇa).

GOKARNA. In the great battle Karṇa sent a serpent-missile against Arjuna. The serpent named Aśvasena was the power behind the missile and Gokarṇa was the mother of that serpent. (Sloka 42, Chapter 90, Karṇa Parva).

GOKARNA. A sacred place of Purānic importance situated on the extreme north of Kerala. (1) Origin. There was once on the banks of the river, Tungabhadra, a village made sacred and prosperous by the brahmins who lived there. In that village lived a noble brahmin named Atmadeva. His wife was a quarrelsome woman named Dhumdhuli. Even after many years of married life they got no children and Atmadeva, greatly grief-stricken, left his home and went to the forests. He was sitting on the shore of a lake after quenching his thirst from it when a Sannyāsin came that way. Atmadeva told him about his domestic life and pleaded that he should suggest a way to get a son for him. The sannyāsin sat in meditation for some time and contemplated on the horoscope of Atmadeva and regretfully informed him that according to his horoscope he was to have no children for seven successive births. He, therefore, advised Atmadeva to abandon all his worldly pleasures and accept sannyāsa for the rest of his life. But Atmadeva was not to be discouraged by this prophecy and he urged the sannyāsin to help him somehow to get a child. The sannyāsin then gave him a fruit and asked him to give it to his wife and ask her to observe a life of fasting for a period of one year.

Greatly pleased with this boon Atmadeva returned to his house and told his wife all that had happened and gave her the fruit. She liked to eat the fruit but a year’s fasting seemed troublesome to her. She was thinking of how to get over this difficulty when her younger sister came to her and suggested a plan. She said “Sister, I am pregnant. I shall give you the child I deliver. You can declare it as your child and make your husband believe so. You can announce in public that you have eaten the fruit and have consequently become pregnant. We can, to test its merit, give the fruit to a cow.” Dhumdhuli liked the plan very much and so did everything like that.

The news that Dhumdhuli was pregnant spread in the city. Very soon her sister gave birth to a child and that child was proclaimed as the child of Dhumdhuli. On the pretext that Dhumdhuli was short of breast-milk her sister started doing the breast-feeding. The child was named Dhumdhukari.

After three months the cow that ate the fruit delivered a child. The ear of the child was like that of a cow and so he was called Gokarṇa. Dhumdhukari and Gokarṇa grew together. Dhumdhukari became a very evil-natured boy while Gokarṇa grew into a scholarly one. Dhumdhukari who was the very seat of everything bad made the life of their parents wretched and the disappointed Atmadeva renounced all and went to the forests and did penance and attained mokṣa. Unable to bear the torture by her son, Dhumdhuli committed suicide by jumping into a well. Gokarṇa started on a pilgrimage. Dhumdhukari lived in his own house surrounded by prostitutes. Thieving was his only means of livelihood. Knowing this the servants of the king started to capture Dhumdhukari and the prostitutes who lived with him, for their safety, bound Dhumdhukari with ropes and put him into fire and killed him. The soul of Dhumdhukari became a great phantom. Hearing the news of the death of his brother, Gokarṇa returned home. He conducted a śrāddha at Gayā to give peace to the soul of his departed brother. But the phantom of Dhumdhukari, was not pacified. This phantom troubled him always. Gokarṇa was not afraid of it and asked him what he wanted and the phantom pleaded that in some way Gokarṇa should get him absolved of all his sins. Gokarṇa then consulted Pandits to know what method should be adopted to save a soul which could not be saved even by a Gayā-Śrāddha. The Pandits advised him to do penance to propitiate the Sun. The Sun who appeared before Gokarṇa as a result of his penance declared that if he did read the entire Bhāgavata in seven days Dhumdhukari would get mokṣa. So Gokarṇa performed a Saptāha and among those who assembed to hear it was the phantom of Dhumdhukari also. The phantom finding no place to sit, crept into a seven-layered bamboo and sat there listening to Gokarṇa. When the first day was over the first layer broke and it went on like that every day and on the seventh day the seventh layer broke and when Gokarna finished the twelfth Skanda the phantom rose from the bamboo to heaven. When it was going to heaven it looked at Gokarna and told him that his mokṣa was due to the result of his hearing the saptāha reading. When Gokarna asked him why none of the others who heard it got it he said that it was because none had heard it with such rapt attention as he had done. Gokarna then conducted another reading of Saptāha and the people present heard the same with rapt attention. When the reading was over, a chariot of Viṣṇu from Vaikuṇṭha descended and carried away all those who heard the reading. The place where Gokarna sat and read the Saptāha became known later as the famous Gokarna. (Chapters 1 to 3, Bhāgavata Māhātmāya).

2) Mitrashaha and Gokarna. A King of Ayodhya named Mitrashaha who became famous by the name of Kalmāsāpāda, became a demon by a curse of Vasiṣṭha. He attained mokṣa by living and worshipping Visnu in the temple at Gokarna. (See under Śivarātri for details).

3) Gokarna and the origin of Kerala. Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa gives a story associating Gokarna with the origin of Kerala.

By the request of Bhagiratha the river Gaṅgā fell on earth and flowing as different brooks emptied its waters in the ocean. The level of the water in the ocean went up and the temple of Gokarna and the land of Kerala were submerged in waters. The sages who were in the temple somehow escaped and took refuge on the mountain Sahya. Parasurāma was doing penance there then and the sages were to him and told him of their plight. Parasurāma went and stood in Gokarna and threw an axe to the south. All the land from Gokarna up to the place where the axe fell rose up from the ocean to form a piece of land which was named Kerala. (Chapter 97 of Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

4) Other Purānic details regarding Gokarna. (i) Bhagiratha did penance to bring Gaṅgādevī to Earth at Gokarna. (Sarga 12, Chapter 42, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa). (ii) The serpent named Śeṣa spent much time living here. (Chapter 36, Sloka 3, Ādi Parva). (iii) Arjuna visited Gokarna while he was on his pilgrimage. (Sloka 34, Chapter 26, Ādi Parva). (iv) Gokarna was one of the abodes of Śiva. Brahmā, Mahārṣis, Bhūtas and Yaksas used to stay at Gokarna to worship Śiva. (Sloka 24, Chapter 85, Vana Parva). (v) The holy place of Gokarna is renowned in all the three worlds (Sloka 15, Chapter 88, Vana Parva). (vi) Gokarna is a tapovana also. (Sloka 51, Chapter 6, Bhiṣma Parva).

(vii) Śrī Krṣṇa, Arjuna and Praduryumna together killed Nākuṁbha, who had kidnapped Bhānumati, at Gokarna. (Chapter 90, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

GOKARNI. A follower of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 90; Sloka 42).

GOLAKI. The mother of an Asura named Madhupa. This woman was born from the face of Brahmā in Krātayuga. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

GOŁOŁA. A divine world. Mostly cows live in this world which is above all the other worlds. Surabhi, daughter of Daksā, acquired great powers by doing rigorous penance in this world. Pandits say that Goloka is the upper lip, Brahmālokā, the lower lip of Mahāviṣṇu. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapter 347, Sloka 52).

GOMANTA I. A famous mountain near Dvārakā. This mountain is known as Gona and Raivataka also. Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to see Gomanta and on the way met Paraśurāma. (Skandha 10, Bhāgavata). Paraśurāma and Śrī Kṛṣṇa went together and saw this beautiful mountain. Vyāsa has devoted Chapter 40 of Viṣṇu Parva entirely for the description of this mountain of Gomanta. Once Balabhadraśrama caught hold of Jārasandha on this mountain but let him off.

GOMANTA II. A place of habitation lying to the north-east of ancient India. (Sloka 43, Chapter 9, Bhiṣma Parva).

GOMANTA III. A mountain of the island of Kuṣa. (Sloka 8, Chapter 12, Bhiṣma Parva).

GOMATI. (KAUSIKI). A celebrated river of Purānic fame. This is worshipped as a goddess.

1) The curse. Karmā Rāmāyaṇa states that this river was Kauśikī, sister of Viśvāmitra. She became a river by a curse.

Kauśikī was married to a sage called Rciika. Once Rciika went to devaloka to see Brahmā. Kauśikī unable to bear the separation followed her husband by her power of chastity. On the way Rciika saw her and cursed her and made her into a river. From that day onwards she started running as a river named Kauśikī. See under Kauśikī. (Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

2) Other details from the Purāṇas regarding Gomati.

i) Śrī Rāma conducted the Asvamedha yāga at Naimiśārya on the banks of this river. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

ii) The sins of those who drink the water of this river are washed away. (Sloka 20, Chapter 169, Ādi Parva).

iii) The devi of Gomati river lives in the court of Varuṇa worshipping him. (Sloka 23, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

iv) Dharmaputra came to this river during his pilgrimage. (Sloka 2, Chapter 95, Vana Parva).

v) Gomati is the wife of Agnideva called Viśvabhuk. (Sloka 19, Chapter 219, Vana Parva).

vi) This is one of the most important rivers of Bhāratavarṣa. (Sloka 18, Chapter 9, Bhiṣma Parva).

vii) The land of Divodāsa, King of Ayodhya, extended from the shores of Gaṅgā to the base of Gomati. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

GOMATIMANTRA. A mantra for obtaining blessings from cows. If one recites this mantra standing in the midst of cows one would get many children and great wealth and if it is recited by a woman she would get the affection and love of her husband. (Sloka 42, Chapter 81, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

GOMEDA. See under Navaratna.

GOMUKHA I. A notorious King. He was born of the family of Krodhavāsa. (Sloka 63, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).

GOMUKHA II. An asura who was a follower of an asura called Śūrapadma. (Asura Kāṇḍa, Śkanda Purāṇa).

GOMUKHA III. Son of Mātali, charioteer of Indra. (Sloka 8, Chapter 100, Udyoga Parva).

GONANDA. A soldier of Skandadeva. Sloka 65, Chapter 43, Śalya Parva).
GOPALAKA. A son born to Cāṇḍamahāśena of his wife Aṅgāravati. Besides Gopalaka he had another son named Pālaka. (Kathāsārīṣāgara, Kathāmukha-lambaṅa, Tāraṅga 3).

GOPALI. I. A nymph. Once when Arjuna went to devolaka this celestial maiden gave a performance in dancing in his honour. (Chapter 43, Vana Parva).

GOPALI II. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 4, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

GOPARĀṢṬRA. A place of habitation in the north-east part of ancient India. (Śloka 44, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

GOPATI I. A demon. He was a co-worker of another demon named Kālaketu. Śri Kṛṣṇa killed Gopati on the banks of the river Īravati on the mountain Mahendrā. (Chapter 38, Śabhā Parva).

GOPATI II. A deva gandharva. He was born to Kaśyapa of his wife Muni. (Śloka 42, Chapter 65, Vana Parva). This gandharva participated in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Śloka 55, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

GOPATI III. A son of the celebrated emperor, Śibi. When Paraśurāma killed and made extinct all Kaśtriya kings it was a herd of cows that brought up this child. (Śloka 78, Chapter 49, Śānti Parva).

GOPATI IV. A synonym of Śiva used in Śloka 151, Chapter 17 of Anuśāsana Parva.

GOPATI V. A synonym of Viṣṇu used in Śloka 66, Chapter 149, of Anuśāsana Parva.

GOPAYANA. The army of Gopas. (Śloka 13, Chapter 71, Bhīṣma Parva).

GOPIKURI. See under Urdhvatapudra.

GOPATĀRA. A place on the northern bank of the river, Sarayū. Śri Rāma with his two armies and vehicles ascended to heaven from this place. (Śloka 10, Chapter 83 Mahābhārata).

GORATHA. The palace of Magadha. This palace was situated on a mountain near Girivrajā. (Śloka 30, Chapter 20, Śabhā Parva).

GOSAVA. A mahāyajña. (Śloka 17, Chapter 30, Vana Parva).

GOSRanga. An important mountain of South India. Sahadeva captured this mountain. (Śloka 5, Chapter 31, Śabhā Parva).

GOSTANI. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 3, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

GOTAMA. A sage named Gotama, son of Rahūgaṇa, is found everywhere in Rgveda. The seventfourth sūkta in the thirteenth anuvāka of the first maṇḍala of Rgveda is composed by this sage. There are many other sūktas also in his name. This sage is not the Gautama, husband of Ahalyā, who made Sūkta 58, Anuvāka 11, Maṇḍala 1 of Rgveda.

Once this Gotama tired of thirst asked the Maruts for some water. The Maruts took a huge well to his side and poured water into a big pot. (Sūktas 86, 87, Anuvāka 14, Maṇḍala 1, Rgveda).

It was Aśvinidevas who took the well to Gotama. (Sūkta 116, Anuvāka 17, Maṇḍala 1, Rgveda).

GOTĪRTHA. A holy place. The Pāṇḍavas visited this place during their pilgrimage. (Śloka 3, Chapter 95, Vana Parva).

GOTRA. A son of Vasiṣṭha. Vasiṣṭha had of his wife Uṣījā seven sons named Rajas, Gotra, Urdhvbāhū, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas and Śukra. These holy men were saptarṣis in the third Manvantara. (Chapter 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

GOVARDHANA. A mountain of Ambādi (Gokula). This is believed to be a form of Kṛṣṇa. This is called Girirāja also. The residents of Ambādi from time immemorial used to worship Indra for getting rains. But after the advent of Kṛṣṇa there came a change in that belief. Kṛṣṇa told them that rains depended on Gоварdhana and it was enough if they worshipped that mountain and so the residents of Ambādi started worshipping the mountain. Indra got enraged at this and sent heavy rains to Ambādi intending to submerge it in water. But Śri Kṛṣṇa lifted the mountain over Ambādi like an umbrella and saved the city from the wrath of Indra. See under 'Kṛṣṇa' for more details. (Daśama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

GOVĀSANA. A King of the country called Śivi. The daughter of this King, Devikā, married Yudhīṣṭhīra in a svayamvāra. Once Govāsana met in duel the son of Abhūbhū, King of Kāśī. (Śloka 38, Chapter 95, Droṇa Parva).

GOVĀSANA (M). A country of ancient India. The people of this place presented Yudhīṣṭhīra with much wealth. (Śloka 5, Chapter 51, Śabhā Parva).

GOVIKARTA. The man who puts nose-bands on bullocks. (Śloka 9, Chapter 2, Viśrā Parva).

GOVINDA. A synonym of Śri Kṛṣṇa (Mahāvīṣṇu). He got this name because he saved the people and cows of Ambādi by lifting the Govardhana mountain and using it as an umbrella. (Daśāṅgītā pātha Chapter 38, Śabhā Parva).

GOVINDADATTA. A brahmin of great fame who resided in Bahunuvārṇa, a city on the banks of the river Gaṅgā. His wife was a very pious woman. They had five children. Once when both the parents were away from the house a sage called Vaiśvānara came there but the children did not receive him and treat him properly. Knowing this Govindadatta abandoned all his children. (Kathāsārīṣāgara, Kathāpīṭhālambaṅa).

GOVINDAGIRI. A mountain of Krauṇḍadvīpa. (Śloka 19, Chapter 12, Bhīṣma Parva).

GOVINDASARMAN. A brahmin who lived in olden times in the city of Kāśī. (See under Sīnḥadhvaja).

GOVITATA. A peculiar kind of horse sacrifice. Sage Kaṇya once made his grandson, Bharata, conduct a sacrifice of this kind. (Śloka 130, Chapter 74, Ādi Parva).

GOVRAJA. A soldier of Skandadeva. (Śloka 66, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

GRAHAS (PLANETS). Indians from very ancient days have maintained certain definite ideas and inferences about the planets. Though these ideas differ somewhat from the results of modern researches, the influence of the ancient ideas is discernible in all the Purāṇic texts in India. The main ideas are summarised below.

Sūrya (Sun), Candra (Moon), Śukra (Venus), Budha (Mercury), Kuja (Mars), Bṛhaspati (Jupiter), Śani (Saturn), Rāhu and Ketu are the navagrahas (the nine planets).

Sūryaṇ candro maṅgalaśca
Buddhaścapi brhaspatiḥ /
Śukraśtvāścaro rāhuḥ /
Ketuśceti navagrahāḥ /
Besides the above nine planets, Indian astronomers take into account a starry sphere in the sky called Saptarṣis and the star called Dhriva.

1) Sūrya. The sun gives light to all the other planets. It has an area of 50 crore yojanas and its distance from the earth is 22 crore yojanas. Sūrya exists within the universe, and is called also Mātrāṇḍa as it originated from dead (mrtā) egg (āṇḍa). Sūrya divides the sky, heaven, hell, the earth, east, west, north, south etc. from one another. According to the course of Sūrya three periods of time or 'seasons' like uttarāyana, daksināyana and visuvat are caused. Five months from May is the uttarāyana period, five months from November the daksināyana period, and the months of April and October are the Visuvats. Since during the uttarāyana the sun rises up comparatively slowly (mandagati) during this period the day is longer than night. As in daksināyana the course of the sun is quicker in pace (Sīhragati) night is longer than day, and during visuvat, (samagati) day and night are of equal duration.

The other planets have three positions called Jaradgava, Airāvata and Vaśivānara, the first being the central position, the second the northern position and the third the southern position. Nine stars, Āśvinī, Bharaṇi, Kṛttikā, Rohiṇī, Mrgaśīras, Ardā, Purnavasu and Pusya occupy the Airāvata vithi (northern position or segment). Another nine stars, Mahā, Pūrva Phalguni, Uṭtara Phalguni, Hasta, Cītra, Śvāti, Viśakhā, Anurādha and Jyeṣṭhā occupy the central position, and the last nine stars, Mūla, Purvāṣādha, Uttarāṣādha, Śravaṇa, Śraviṣṭhā, Satabhīṣak, Pūrva-proṣṭhapada, Uttara-proṣṭhapada and Revati occupy the southern position.

To the east, south, west and north of Mount Mahāmeru exist Devadhānīka (Indra-puri) Saimyanāmi (Yama-puri) Nīmlochanī (Varuṇapuri) and Vībhāvari (Kubera-puri) respectively. When Sūrya appears in Devadhānīka it will be dawn, when he has travelled to Saimyanāmi it will be noon, when he is in Nīmlochanī it will be sunset and when he is in Vībhāvari it will be midnight. This is how Sūrya circles the Mahāmeru. Within 15 nāḍīkās (6 hours) the sun travels 2½ crores plus ½ lakhs of yojanas. Sūrya's chariot has one wheel and twelve spokes. The wheel represents a year and the twelve spokes stand for the twelve months of the year. The chariot has also three nābhis representing the three cāturmāsya, and six bands representing the six seasons. The height of the chariot is 36 lakhs yojanas and it has a width of 8 yojanas inside. Aruṇadeva is the charioteer, and the seven chandas are the horses. The seven chandas are, Gāyatrī, Bṛhati, Uṣṇik, Jagati, Triṣuṭhī, Anuṣṭuṭhī and Paṅktī. Night is called Uṣṇa and day Vyaṣṭi and the time in between is Sandhya. When Sandhya begins the terrible Rākṣasas called Mandehas attempt to consume Sūrya. They have been granted the boon that everyday they will be dying though they may not be losing their bodies. So, everyday there rages a fierce fight between them and Sūrya. When the fight is on, noble brahmins throw up water sanctified by Gāyatrī mantra with 'Om'. The water turns into Vajēṣyā and burns the Rākṣasas to ashes. The first offering in Agnihotra is made with the recitation of the mantra beginning 'Sūrya Jyoti' because of which the sun is able to shine with thousands of rays with the result that the Rākṣasas are burned to death. The Bālākhilyas who number more than 60,000 form Sūrya's body-guard. (See under Sūrya for Purānic stories about him).

2) Candra, (The Moon). Candra exists at one lakh yojanas away from Sūrya, and it revolves round the earth. A candra mouth of twentyseven days is divided into twelve rāsīs (houses) viz, Śūnha (Leo), Kanyā (Virgo), Tūlā (Libra) Vṛṣćika (Scorpio) Dhanus (Sagittarius) Makara (Capricorn) Kuṁbha (Aquarius) Mina (Pisces) Meṣa (Aries) Vṛṣabha (Taurus) Mithuna (Gemini) and Karkaṭa (Cancer). Every month Candra stays in each of the above houses only for 2½ days.

The full moon makes Piṭrs happy, divides the month into two halves, Krṣṇa Pakṣa (the dark fortnight) and Sukla Pakṣa (the bright fortnight) and functions as the very life of all living beings. The twentyseven stars from Āśvinī to Revati are the wives of Candra. There is another view that Candra has twentyeight wives including another star called Abhijit. Candra has another name, Sarvamaya. Candra with his pleasing rays, as sweet as Amṛta (Nectar) bestows happiness on devas, Piṭrs and all other living beings. So he is called Sarvamaya.

Candra's chariot has three wheels. Ten beautiful horses draw the chariot white as Jasmine flowers draw the chariot. These horses also like those of Sūrya live for a Kalpa era. Because the Devas drink its digits Candra wanes into one digit (Kalā). Then Sūrya makes him wax again with one single ray of his called Suṣumna. When only two Kalās of his remain Candra enters the orbit of Sūrya and stays there in the ray called 'amā', and that day, therefore is called amāvāsyā. And on that day Candra enters waters for the first time, and after that dwells in trees, creepers etc. While Candra is thus in trees etc. those who cut them will be committing the sin of brahmahātyā, (slaughter of a brahmin). When only a little of the 13th kalā remains on new moon day hordes of Piṭrs gather round the enfeebled Candra to drink him, and they drink the amṛta kalā, one of the two kalās still remaining with him. Thus the three classes of Piṭrs, Barhiṣadās, Saumyas and Agniyāttas get absolutely satisfied for one month. Thus Candra nurtures Devas in the Sukla Pakṣa and piṭrs in Krṣṇa Pakṣa, and grows trees, creepers etc. with life-giving water. (For details see under Candra).

3) Sukra (Venus). Sukra is an auspicious Deva very much interested in doing good to the world and making people happy. His course is also, like that of Sūrya, of three types, intense (quick), slow and of equal pace. Two-and-a-half yojanas above Sūrya, Sukra follows a course alternating in front of and behind Sūrya. Sukra never goes very far away from Sūrya, and he possesses a big chariot drawn by horses from earth. (For details see under Sukra).

4) Budha (Mercury). Though inherently auspicious Budha, in contact with inauspicious planets takes their character and becomes weak. Budha also has the three paces, quick, slow and medium. Budha moves close to Sūrya and if he moves from Sūrya storms, failure of rain etc. will be the result. He is considered to be the son of Candra. His chariot is made of wind and fire, golden in colour and is drawn by eight horses having the speed of wind. (See under Budha for more details).
5) Kuja (Mars). Kuja is two lakhs of yojanas above Budha, and remains in every rashi (house) more or less for 45 days. When the position is affected it causes inauspicious experiences to living beings. The chariot of Kuja is made of gold, glittering and of huge size. Eight horses born from Agni draw the chariot.

6) Bhraspati (Jupiter). Jupiter travels 2 lakhs of yojanas away from Kuja’s sphere. Though it is an auspicious planet its reverse course is productive of evil results. Jupiter travels for twelve months in every rashi (house). His golden chariot is drawn by eight white horses. (See Bhraspati).

7) Sani (Saturn). Sani is 2 lakhs of yojanas away from Jupiter’s sphere, and it stays in every house for twenty months. As it moves only slowly it is called Sanai:carana also. Sani is considered to be the son of Surya. It is an inauspicious planet. His chariot is drawn by multi-coloured horses born in the sky.

8) Rahu. His ash-coloured chariot is drawn by eight horses as dark as beetles. Once the horses are harnessed to the chariot it will always be running. On full moon days Rahu starts from Surya and reaches Candra and returns to Surya on new moon days. It is an inauspicious planet. (For details see under Rahu).

9) Ketu. His chariot is drawn by eight horses, which have the speed of wind. It is also an inauspicious planet.

10) Saptarsis. Thirteen crores of yojanas away from the zone of Sani exists the Saptarshi zone. Seven maharshis are incessantly on the move in that sphere, wishing that all is well for the whole world. (See Saptarshi).

11) Dhruva. Thirteen crores of yojanas away from the saptarshimandala there is a place called Vιγυ经济技术．Dhruva, son of Uttanapada lives there in the company of Indra, Agni, Kaýyapa, Dharma and others. The Dhruvamandala remains there stationary like the supporting pillar of all the planets ever on the move. (See Dhruva; Dévibhágavata 8th Skandha; Vishu Purāna, Part II).

Astrologers aver that living beings pass through the periods and positions of the following planets, viz. Ketu, Sukra (Venus), Aditya (Sun), Candra (Moon), Kuja (Mars), Rahu, Bhraspati (Jupiter), Sani (Saturn) and Budha (Mercury). The following table shows how people born under different stars pass through the different daás. The order of succession of the daás and the period of each daá can also be seen from this table.

1. To find out your daá at the time of birth, please see the above table. Any one born under any of the stars is considered born in the daá shown in the right hand side against that star: e. g. People born under (Ásvayuk) Ásvini, Mbpáriśa and Mélá are born into the Ketu daá. So with the other stars also as shown in the above table. To calculate how long the daá into which a particular person is born will last requires some astrological skill; also the exact time of birth should be known. A star remains dominant for about 24 hours. If a man is born under a star when half this period of dominance is over, then that man will get only half the period of the corresponding daá. The portion of the daá that the man will get is proportionate to the period of dominance of the star. For example, a man is born under the star Ásvini (Ásvayuk) when the star is in the last quarter of the Ketu daá. The total period of this daá is 7 years. But the man will get only the last quarter of it, namely about 7/8 years. After that he will pass on to the next daá—Sukra-daá.

GRAHAŚA (Adverse planetary effects on children)

Astrologers hold the view that planets affect or exercise some influence on the lives of people. According to that given hereunder is a brief description of planets, which affect a child from its very birth as also of remedial measures to keep the child free from such adverse planetary effects.

On the very day of the birth of the child a female planet called Pañini affects it as a result of which it will refuse all food and be lying turning its head this way and that. Pañini will tap the health not only of the child but of the mother also. Bali (sacrificial offering with flesh, fish and liquor) is also avoided with flowers and fragrant materials and lighted lamp, and smearing the child’s body with sandal paste, mancetti powder, tāttiri flower, bark of pachotti, are remedies against the attack of Pañini. Burning of buffer dungs also is useful.

On the second night after the birth of the child another female planet called Bhiraṇi attacks it. Symptoms of the attack are coughing, deep breath and shrinking of bodily organs. The remedies for the attack are: smearing of the body with paste made in sheep’s urine of tippalī (long pepper), rāmacc, root of “Kajalāṭa” and sandalwood. The child should also be exposed to the fumes got by burning the horn tooth and hairs of the cow. And, with the above-mentioned things bali should be offered to the planet.

On the third night the female planet called Ghanṭāli affects the child. Frequent crying, yawning, shivering and loss of appetite are the main symptoms of the attack. Smearing the body with paste of lotus styles, aśhava stone and tooth of cow and elephant mixed with goat’s skin is a good remedy for the illness. The child should be treated with the fumes got by burning the leaves of nágáṇa (a tree) and bilva and bali as aforesaid should also be offered.

Kākolī (female planet) affects the child on the fourth night. Shivering, loss of appetite, frothing and wandering of the eyes are the main symptoms of the attack. In this case bali should be offered with liquor and flesh; the body should be smeared with a paste in horse’s urine of elephant’s tusk and the outer skin of snakes. The child should also be subjected to the fume of tamarind and margosa leaves.

Hamśadhiḥka (female planet) affects the child on the fifth night. Yawning, breathing out alone and closing of fingers are the main symptoms of the attack. Bali with Piṅgalā attacks the child, when it is four months old. Excessive coldness of body, bad odour and emanation of body are the main signs of the attack. Piṅgalā’s attack often proves fatal.

During the fifth month the planet Lalana attacks the child. Weakness, blood coming out of the mouth, and excretion yellow in colour are the main symptoms of the attack. Various kinds of awkward movements, crying in awkward and peculiar voice are the main symptoms of the attack. Offerings of liquor, fish, flesh, rice, flowers etc. will cure the illness.

During the seventh month Nirāhāra attacks the child. Bad odour, tooth-ache etc. are the main symptoms. Bali with fish, flesh etc. is the cure.

Yamunā attacks the child during the eighth month. Skin eruptions etc. are the chief symptoms. No special treatment is required for this.

During the ninth month Kumbhakarna attacks the child. Fever, vomiting and abnormal crying form the chief symptoms. Bali with flesh and liquor is the cure for it. Tāpasi attacks the child during the tenth month. Refusing to eat food and rolling of the eye-balls form the main symptoms. Bali on level ground with flesh etc. is the remedy for it.

During the eleventh month Rākṣasi attacks the child. No treatment is called for.

Caṇcalā attacks the child during the twelfth month. Breathing problems, palpitation etc. are the main symptoms. Bali during the first half of the day with Kālmāṣa etc. is the remedy.

During the second year of its life the child is attacked by Rodanī. Shivering of the body, crying and emission of blood and urine form the main symptoms. In such cases bali should be offered with pudding of molasses and gingelly seeds made into small balls. Also an idol should be made of gingelly seeds and it should be bathed in gingelly water. The child should further be exposed to the fumes got by burning the leaves of five trees.

Caṭukā (a female planet) attacks the child during the fourth year. Fever, swellings, and weakness of limbs are the main symptoms. Bai with fish, flesh, gingelly seeds and also fuming form the treatment.

Pańcāla attacks the child when it is five years old. Fever, weakness of limbs are the symptoms. Bali with flesh, rice, etc. and fuming with the excretion of sheep form the treatment. Bathing in water boiled with leaves of jack fruit tree, peepal tree etc. is also good.

Dhāvanī attacks the child when it is six years old. Thinning of face, tastelessness of mouth and weakness of limbs are the main symptoms in such cases. Bali for seven days with the above-mentioned things and bathing in kanjuny (Bhīngārāja creeper) water are the treatment.

Yavāna attacks the child in the seventh year. Speechlessness, vomiting, laughing and crying for no apparent reason form the symptoms. Bali with liquor, fish, pudding etc. and fuming and bathing form the treatment.

Jātavedā attacks the child in the eighth year. The child refuses food and cries. Bali with cooked gingelly, gingelly bread and curds, and bathing and fuming form the treatment.

Kalā (Kāli) attacks the child during the ninth year. Feelings of fear, roaring etc. are the symptoms. Bali with gingelly rice, gingelly bread, gingelly powder, Kalmāsa and pudding form the treatment. Kalahaṁśī attacks the child during the tenth year. Fever, burning sensation and emaciation are the symptoms. Bali for five days with bread called Paulīk and rice mixed with ghee, exposure to fumes of margosa leaf and smearing the body with a paste of Kottam form the treatment.

Devabhūti attacks the child when it is eleven years old. Then he will utter harsh and cruel words. Bali and smearing as above form the treatment.

Vāyasi attacks the child when it is 13 years old. All the limbs except the face get emaciated. Treatment is as follows: bali with red rice, red sandal-wood and red flowers; bath in water boiled with the leaves of five trees; and exposure to the fumes of margosa and mustard. Yakṣiṇī attacks the child when it is fourteen years old. Awkward physical expressions, stomach-ache, fever and thirst are the symptoms. Bali with flesh, rice etc. and bathing etc. as above form the treatment.

Munḍikā attacks the child when it is fifteen years old. Various kinds of pains, bleeding etc. are the symptoms. The mother of the child is to be treated for this. Vānara attacks the child during the 16th year. Falling down, continuous sleep and fever form the symptoms. Bali during three nights with pudding etc. and bathing and fuming as above form the treatment.

Gandhavatī attacks the child during the seventeenth year. Agitation of limbs and crying are the symptoms. Bali with Kalmāsa etc. and bathing and fuming as above form the treatment.

The following mantra should be repeated in all balis and gifts:

Om namah sarvamāṁbhavo bālapidāśanāyogaṁ bhunjā bhujaṁ cuṭa cuṭa śpoṭāya śpoṭāya śphura śphura ghrāṇa ghrāṇa ākaṭṭaya ākaṭṭaya kāṭṭaya kāṭṭaya evam tāṁ anyatra panḥānam rudro jñāpayati. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 299).

GRĀMADEVĀTĀ. India is predominantly a rural country with a number of villages, and the rural folk depend mainly upon agriculture for living. Agricultural land, rain and epidemics which affect them as well as their cattle—these are the main concern of the villagers. Indians, from very ancient days, used to believe that each of the above has its own presiding devatās. Such devatās are the grāmatēvātās. Devī is the chief grāmatēvātā of South India. Devī is called Durgā and Kāli also. But, Devī is worshipped in sixty-four different forms or aspects. The gentle Devī, viz. in her gentle aspect or attitude has three forms, Kanyā, Kāṃkṣi, and Mūkāṃkṣi. In Kerala Devī is called Bhagavatī also. Valiyāṅgādi Bhagavatī of Calicut is Lakṣmīdevī. Kāli temples in Kāṇṭhaṅka are called 'Koṭṭāpuram Lacṣmī Koṭṭēras'. There are such temples in Andhra also. Most of them are Jokalāmbīkā temples. In Tamil Nadu there are grāmatēvātās called Mariyamma, Kāliyamma, and Drahupadiyamma. Not the Drahupadi mentioned in the Mahābhārata; but the Kāṇṭaṅka of Cilappadikāra is the Devī worshipped in Tamil Nadu.

There are two kinds of Devīs called Saptāṁśās and Saptakanyās. Saptāṁśās have pūruṣas (husbands) and Saptakanyās have seven brothers for help and support. Devī pūjā is very prevalent in South India. The custom is supposed to be as old as 5000 B.C. Idols of Devī have been unearthed from Mohanjo-daro and Harappa. Even the Buddhists worship the Devī called Yakṣi and Hārīti. When in after years Hinduism was revitalised these grāmatēvātās got promoted as the great Devatās of the epics and the Purāṇas. The Rāmaṇa mentions the incident of the Devī called Laiṅkalakṣmi driving away Haṁmān. There are famous Kāli temples in Ujjayinī and Cālcutta. It is believed that in the temple at Gidambaram also Kāli occupied a prominent place. But, according to legends, Śiva defeated Kāli in a dance competition and ousted her to her present temple at the outskirts of the city. Cāmuṇḍa is worshipped as the ancestral guardian deity in Mysore. The Kāṇṭkṣī temple of Kāṭci, Mīṅkṣī temple of Madura and Mūkāṃkṣī temple of North Kāṅṭhāka may be cited as examples for the worship of the gentle form of Devī. Alamṛt Maṅkaṭṭāya temple at Tirucānūr is a very important Devī temple. The 'Aḍitī' in the Vedas and Koṭṭrāva of Tamil Saṁgha texts point to the very long past of the Devī in India. Kālīdāsa and Kālamegha (a Tamil poet of the fifteenth century have worshipped Kāli. Śrī Rāmaṇa Paramahāṁsa and the great modern Tamil poet Bhārati were devotees of Kāli. There are also grāmatēdevas worshipped like the grāmatēvātās. Muniśvara and Karuppan are two prominent grāmatēdevas. In certain villages Bhārīva, Viśa Īruḷa, Kāṭṭerī and Noṅgi are worshipped as grāmatēdevas. In South Kāṇṭhāka a set of Devīs called bhūtas are worshipped. Paṅkurūli being one of them. Sāstā or Ayappa is another grāmatēdeva. Sāstā is most popular in Kerala and in Tamil Nadu. Buddha also is called Sāstā. In certain places idols of Sāstā with two wives, called Pūrṇā and Pūṣkalā are also found. Sabarmalā Sāstā is yogamūrti (in yogic pose).

In most of the grāmatēdeva temples idols of the Devas are not found. A pīṭha (stool-like seat) is supposed as the seat of the Deva and it represents the Deva also. But, in some temples weapons like the sword, the club etc. are found. Offerings to the deity in grāmatēsetras and annual festivals are common in such temples. (Nāṁ vaṁamūṁ dāvaṁgāl-Tarnīl).

GRĀMANI. A bhūtagaṇa (set of attendants) of Śiva. Sins of those who worship this gana will be removed. (Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 25).

GRĀMANĪYA. One born in the family of the Kṣatriya, who is the governor of village. Nakula defeated the grāmatīyas during the conquest of lands in connection with the asvamedha of Dharamaputra. (Sabha Parva; Chapter 32, Verse 9).

GRANTHIKA. Name assumed by Nakula during his life incognito at the Virāṭa palace. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 4).
GRDHRAKUTA. A mountain of northern India. The Lamśiras gave protection to Grñhadra at this mountain. (Śloka 82, Chapter 49, Śaṅti Parva).

GRDDHRAPATRA. A soldier of Skandadeva, (Śloka 74, Chapter 43, Salya Parva).

GRDDHRAVAṬA. A mount of the Himalayas. This mount is the abode of Mahādeva. Those brahmmins who visit this place would get mokṣa and those of other castes would be absolved of all sins. (Śloka 91, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

GRDDHRIKĀ. A bird. Kaśyapa begot of his wife Tāmā, the six birds namely Kāki, Śyenī, Bhāsi, Grdhrikā, Suci and Grīvā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

GREEK LITERATURE. Greek is one of the most important Indo-European languages. As an independent branch of the original Indo-European language Greek established itself by about 2000 B.C. Even during its earliest period Greek had four local dialects as a result of the arrival of the Greek-speaking people at different periods of time. Ionic, Ionic-Attic, Arcado Cyprean and western Greek are the four dialects. Iolose was prevalent in the Lesbos region, and this is the dialect mainly used in the poetry of Homer. The Ionic and Attic dialects were prevalent in Ionia and Attica respectively. After Homer, the major portion of Greek literature was written in this dialect. The Arcado-Cyprean dialect was used in Arcadio and Cyprus. The fourth dialect was also called Doric.

Naval traditions, commerce and political power contributed to the growth and development of Greek language and literature. In each dialect, even from the very beginning, literary efforts were made. Each of the four spoken languages very soon developed into a written language. But, in the very initial periods each of the spoken dialects continued its existence in the form of ballads and songs transferred from one man to another. It was Homer who gave those popular ballads an epic form and status and sowed the seeds of the great literature of Greece.

The golden period of Greek literature was when the city of Athens enjoyed supreme political power. Literature during the period set the model for future generations. It was during this period that Greek achieved the best in different literary forms like tragedy, comedy, lyric, elegy, history, philosophy, oratory etc. Pindar, Aeschylus, Herodotus, Sophocles-Euripides, Aristophanes, Thucydides, Plato and Demosthenes—these are distinguished names who were responsible for the great development of the literary forms referred to above.

Greek literature passed the Alexandrian, Roman and Byzantian periods before it arrived at the modern period. It was Solomos and Valoritus and others who gave impetus and inspiration to modern Greek literature.

GRHADEVI. Another name of the demoness Jarā. (See under Jarā).

GRHAPATI. A sage. There is a story in Śiva Purāṇa about this sage. Viśvānara father of Grñhapati was living with his wife Suṣismati in a hermitage on the banks of the river Naṃmadā. They had no children and Suṣismati, was grieved much on this account. She requested her husband find out ways and means to get a child. Viśvānara, went to Kāśi and did penance to propitiate Viśveśvara and the God appeared before him and blessed him and said: "You will soon get a son". Very soon the wife of Viśvānara delivered a child and the son was named Grñhapati. When the child was nine years old Nārada came there once and warned them against fire. Viśvānara immediately went and did penance to propitiate Śiva and obtained from him for his son the qualities of fire also so that fire would be unable to act on him. It was on account of this that Grñhapati when he installed an idol of Śiva at Kāśi gave it the name of Agniśvara.

GRASTHA. In ancient India the life of a male person was divided into four stages, namely, Brahmacarya Grñhastha, Vānaprastha and Saṅyāsa. He who is in the second stage of life is called a Grñhastha.

When a person marries, he becomes a Grñhastha. The bride should have certain qualities to be an ideal wife. The girl should be only a third of the age of the male. She should not have hair either too much or too little. She should not be black or of a pinka Hue. She should not have any of her organs extra at the time of birth. The following types of girls are to be avoided for marriage. (1) Girls bred up by low-caste people (2) girls with hair over the body (3) not born of a good family (4) sick ones (5) ill-natured ones (6) girls who use abusive language (7) with hereditary diseases (8) with sinful hair on the face (9) girls with masculine features (10) with the sound of males (11) lean ones (12) with the voice of a crow (13) with thick eyelashes (14) round eyes. Again avoid girls having hair on their legs, raised heels and those with small depressions on their cheeks when they laugh. Girls whose bodies are too bright, with white nails, red eyes and fat hands and legs are not good for marriage. Girls too tall or too short, with eyelashes touching each other, with broad and raised teeth are to be avoided. A true Grñhastha is one who marries a girl who is separated from him by five generations on the maternal side and seven generations on the paternal side.

A true Grñhastha should daily worship devas, cows, brahmmins, scholars, old men and preceptors. He should worship sandhyā (dawn and dusk) daily and also fire. He should wear on his body leaves of Viṣṇukranti, Karuka (couch grass), Tulaśi (holy basil plant). He should appear neat and smart wearing good dress, with white flowers on his well combed head. He should never steal, speak unpleasant words to anybody nor speak an untruth even if it be pleasant. He should not openly speak about the sins of others. He should not covet another man’s wife. He should not travel in a damaged vehicle nor should he sit under the shade of a tree on the banks of a river. A Grñhastha should not mingle with such persons as (1) men hated by the people (2) outcasts from society (3) insane men (4) those having a great number of enemies (5) those who torment others (6) prostitutes (7) husbands of prostitutes (8) those who use abusive language (9) those who tell lies (10) spendthrifts (11) scandalmongers and (12) rogues. Never travel alone. He should not bathe against the flow in a river. Never enter a house on fire nor climb to the extreme top of trees. He should not grind his teeth, squeeze out his nose, yawn without covering the mouth, breathe or spit, with the face covered, laugh noisily, breathe out with a sound, bite the teeth, pinch grasses or write or draw on the ground (Anā 3, Viśu Purāṇa).

GRIVĀ. A daughter in bird form born to Kaśyapa-prajapati by his wife Tāmār. Grīvā had the following sisters, Kāki, Śyenī, Bhaṣī, Grādhrikā and Śuci, all birds.
(Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 1).

GRTSAMADA I. A celebrated sage. He was the son of a sage called Vitahaya. Grtsamada was equal to Bṛhaspati and a great friend of Indra. Once this sage lured to Yudhiṣṭhira for the glory of Siva. Many have mistaken Grtsamada for Indra. Once the auras bound him by ropes mistaking him for Indra. He had a son named Kucetā. (For more details see under Vāriṣṭhā) (Chapters 18 and 30, Anuśāsana Parva).

GRTSAMADA II. A King of the Bhārgava dynasty. He was the son of King Suhotra. Grtsamada had two brothers, Kāśya and Kuṣa, and a son, Sunaka. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

GRTSAMADA III. The son born to Indra of Mukundā.
There is the following story about him in Gaṇeśa Purāṇa.

Once when Rukmāṅgada was out from the palace,
Indra, in the guise of Rukmāṅgada, went to Mukundā, wife of Rukmāṅgada, and slept with her at that time sexually hungry. She delivered her son. This boy was Grtsamada. He grew into a great scholar. Nobody was able to defeat him in any verbal duel. Once Grtsamada went to the palace of the king of Magadhā to attend a Śrāddha (an offering to the manes) along with Vasiṣṭha and others.
Atri Mahārṣi who was present there then spoke slight-ingly of Grtsamada’s parentage and Grtsamada coming home questioned his mother. The mother then told him what had happened and Grtsamada getting angry at the immoral act committed by his mother cursed her and said “May you be a Kaṇṭha tree”. Mukundā also did not leave her son free. She cursed him thus “You will die a servant of your son”. But Grtsamada went and did penance to propitiate Gaṇapatī and got Brāhmaṇya.

GRTSAPATI. He was the son of Kapila, a King of the Pāru dynasty. He had a brother called Kauṭikā. Grtsapai-thad sons in all the four castes, namely, Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra. (Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa).

GUḌĀKESA. Another name of Arjuna. He got the name because he conquered sleep. (Sloka 8, Chapter 130, Adi Parva).

GUḌHASENA. A King of the country of Puskara-vatī.

GUHA. King of the country of Nīśadhas alias Śrīkiverapura, on the banks of the river Gaṅgā. Śrī Rāma when he went on exile to the forests went to the residence of Guha accompanied by Lakṣmaṇa and Śtā.
Guha, a devotee of Rāma, received them with respect offering them many kinds of fruits and roots to eat.
But Śrī Rāma said that it was not proper to accept fruits and roots and so he drank only pure water from him. But Guha was asked to feed his horse. At night when Lakṣmaṇa stood watch over Rāma and Śtā, Guha volunteered to stand guard but Lakṣmaṇa refused to accept the offer. So Guha kept company with Lakṣmaṇa and both of them spent the night talking to each other.
In the morning as per Rāma’s request Guha brought a canoe and Guha himself took Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa and Śtā to the other side of the river. (Sarga 50, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa).

Guha is seen next when Bharata comes to the forest in search of Rāma. When Bharata returned from Keekā to Search, he went in search of Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa and came to Guha in Śrīgīverapura. Guha then gave Bharata all available information regarding Śrī Rāma. Guha then sent the Dāśa army along with Bharata. (Sarga 84, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

Guha, chief of Śrīgīverapura, spent the night with Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa under an Oka tree. (Chapter 6, Agni Purāṇa).

GUHA (S). A tribe of people of ancient India. Āndhra, Pulindas, Cucukas, Guhas, Sābaras and Bhadras are some of the tribes of the south. (Sloka 42, Chapter 207, Śanti Parva).

GUHASENA. See under Devasmiṃa.

GUHYAKA. A Yakṣa. (A division of Yakṣas who were prominent members of the court of Kubera). They were present at the marriage of Draupadi. (Sloka 7, Chapter 186, Adi Parva).

Other details.
(i) The palace of Kubera in the sky is borne by Guhy-
AKA. (Sloka 3, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).
(ii) Bhimasena slew many Guhyakas on the mountain of Gandhamadana. (Sloka 55, Chapter 11, Śalya Parva).
(iii) Some of the soldiers who died in the Mahābhārata battle went to the world of the Guhyakas. (Sloka 23, Chapter 4, Svargārohaṇa Parva).

GULIKA. A hunter who was given mokṣa by the sage Uttāṇa. This hunter once made an attempt to steal the gold plates on the roof of the Viṣṇu temple at the palace of Sauvīra. Uttāṇa was present at the temple then and, Gulika tried to kill the sage. The sage cursed him and killed him. Taking pity on him later Uttāṇa sprinkled some water from the river Gaṅgā, on him and the hunter attained Vaikuṇṭha. (Nārādyā Purāṇa).

GUṆA. See under Pattu (Ten).

GUṆĀDHYYA. He is the author of the celebrated Bhra-kathā which is a precious mine of Sanskrit Literature.
Guṇādhyya had written this in satanic (pāśācika) language difficult for ordinary people to read or understand.
This was translated into Sanskrit by the poet Kaṃ-manda in a book called Bhraṅkathāmaṇi. This was the first translation and it was in an abridged form. Somedeva made a more elaborate translation and it is this translation that is now known as the Kāθāśarītsāgarā.
Guṇādhyya is believed to be an incarnation of the Śiva-parśada, Mālayāvān. There is a story behind Mālayāvān being cursed and made to be born as man by Pārvati.
Once Pārvati worried Śiva to tell her a story original and interesting and not heard of by anybody before.
Placing Nandikē’s at the door and instructing him not to allow anybody inside Śiva started narrating the story of the Vidyādhāras to Pārvati. At that time Puspadanta, chief of the genie-guards of Śiva who was at liberty to go to the presence of Śiva at any time, came there and Needless of the protests of Nandikesa entered the room. There he found Śiva telling a story to Pārvati and she was hearing the same with rapé attention.
The story was so interesting that Puspadanta also heard it standing concealed in a place in the room. After having heard the whole story Puspadanta went back unnoticed and told the story to his wife, Jayā. Jayā on another occasion told the story to Pārvatī and the latter was taken aback and she went to Śiva and complained: "Your Lordship told me that the story was unique, not heard of before by anybody. But even Jayā knows it." And she wept with disappointment. Then Śiva stood in meditation for sometime, and knew how Puspadanta had entered the room unnoticed and how he had told the story he had heard to Jayā. Śiva explained this to Pārvatī and she immediately sent word for Puspadanta who came trembling and confessed everything. Pārvatī then cursed Puspadanta and also Mālyavān who came to speak on behalf of Puspadanta and made them men. They begged for relief from the curse and then she said, "Long ago Vaiśravaṇa cursed a Yakṣa named Supratīka and converted him into a devil named Kāṇabhūti. This devil is now living in the deep forests on the Vindhyā mountains. When you talk with him you will become your old selves again. Puspadanta should first tell the story he has heard from Śiva to Kāṇabhūti and then he will be relieved from the curse. Kāṇabhūti will then tell Mālyavān many stories. Then Kāṇabhūti will get release from the curse. Mālyavān should make public all the stories he had heard from Kāṇabhūti and then he will also get release from the curse." Accordingly Puspadanta was born as Vararuci in the city of Kauśāmbi and Mālyavān as Gunadhya in the city of Supratiṣṭhita. (For details see under Vararuci.)

The story of how Supratīka became Kāṇabhūti is this: The Yakṣa, Supratīka, got friendly with a demon named Śūlaśiras and they moved about freely as chums. Vaiśravaṇa did not like this and he cursed Supratīka and converted him into a satāna. At once, Dirghajāha, elder brother of Supratīka, came and begged for relief. Vaiśravaṇa then said: "Puspadanta will be born on the earth by a curse as man and he will one day come and tell Supratīka many great stories. After hearing them he should narrate them to Mālyavān who will then be born on the earth as man. Supratīka will then get release from the curse and become his old self again". Supratīka was born in the forests of Vindhyā as Kāṇabhūti.

This is the story of the birth of Gunadhya. There is a city called Supratiṣṭhita in the country of Pratisthana and there lived a brahmin named Somaśarma. He had two sons, Vatsa and Gulmaka and a daughter named Śrutārthā. Before long the parents died and Śrutārthā grew up under the protection of her brothers. Kirtisena, brother of Vatsa, married her by gāndharva rites and Gunadhya was the child born to them.

Even while he was a boy he went to the south for his education and there from a brahmin he studied all arts and sciences. When he completed his studies he started on a tour and at that time became the minister of a king called Sātavāhana. He married from there. One day his (Sātavāhana's) wife rebuked the king when the latter made some linguistic errors and Sātavāhana became dejected and moody from that day onwards. Then there came to the court of the King a brahmin named Śarvavarman who promised to make the King proficient in languages within six months. But Gunadhya said that it was not possible to do so within six months. They made a bet. Gunadhya swore that if Śarvavarman would teach the King the Sabdaśāstra (science of language-sounds) within six months he (Gunadhya) would abandon his knowledge of Sanskrit, Prakrit and local language. On the other hand if Śarvavarman failed to accomplish the feat the latter should wear on his head for twelve years the chappals of Gunadhya. Śarvavarman agreed and went to do penance to please Subrahmanyā. Subrahmanyā granted him a boon by the power of which Śarvavarman made Sātavāhana a scholar in Sanskrit. Defeated, Gunadhya abandoned his knowledge of all languages and bidding adieu to the King by gestures left for the Vindhyān forests.

When Gunadhya went to the forests Kāṇabhūti, King of the Satans was not in his place. He heard the satans speaking in their peculiar language and intelligent that he was he picked up the language, and when Kāṇabhūti came he spoke to him in his own language. Kāṇabhūti told in the satanic language the great stories of seven Vidyādhāras. Gunadhya took seven years to write the stories in the satanic language and compile them into seven laks of granthas to form a Mahākavya. There were no writing materials available for him and Gunadhya wrote them all on leaves using blood and twigs. When he started reading his book all the devas assembled in the sky to hear it. On hearing it Kāṇabhūti got release from the curse. It is this book containing seven laks of granthas that is called the Bṛhadkathā.

Gunadhya then thought of how to keep alive such an interesting and gigantic book and then two of his companions Guṇadeva and Nandideva suggested to him to dedicate the book to the King, Sātavāhana. Gunadhya agreed to that and the two disciples took the book to the King. The King read the whole story. But did not like it. It was very elaborate. The language was satanic. It was written with blood. The King looked at the book with contempt.

When the disciples found that the King was not in favour of the work, they took it back to Gunadhya. Gunadhya felt a great dejection. He went to a hilltop nearby with his disciples and made a big fire-pit. He set aside the story of the Vidyādharas named Naravāhanā-datta composed of a lakh of granthas for the use of his disciples and then started putting into the fire-pit the rest, reading aloud each leaf before he put it into the fire. The sad disciples watched it weeping. Even the wild animals of the forest flocked to the place and stood there listening to Gunadhya. At that time Sātavāhana became a sick man. The physicians of the palace said that the illness was caused by the dry flesh he was taking. The cook was called in and he accused the hunters who supplied them with flesh daily. The hunters were questioned and they informed the King that only such flesh was available since all the beasts and birds were standing without food listening to a man who was reading something from a leaf and then burning it in a fire-pit before him. Sātavāhana immediately went to the place guided by the hunters. There to his astonishment he found Gunadhya sitting before a fire-pit surrounded by weeping beasts and birds and throwing leaves of his book one by one into the fire after reading each before it was put into the fire. Sātavāhana ran to him and prostrated before him. Gunadhya then told Sātavāhana his story in satanic language beginning from the curse on Puspadanta down to his destroying his own work in the fire.
His disciples translated his talk to the King. The King was awe-stricken and he asked for the granthas. But by that time he had already burnt six lakhs of granthas containing six stories. He gave to the King the remaining one lakh of granthas. After that, bidding farewell to the King, Gunañdhya jumped into the fire and abandoned his life on earth and went to the presence of Śiva.

King Sātavāhana accompanied by the disciples of Gunañdhya came to his palace carrying the ‘Bṛhatkatha’ containing the story of Naravāhanadatta. He gave presents to Gunādeya and Nandideva who explained to him the book in Sanskrit. King Sātavāhana added a preface to the book to explain to the public how the book came to be written in satanic language. The book very soon got world fame. (Pṛthānulainībaka Kathāsarit sāgara).

GUNAKEŚI. Daughter of Mātali, charioteer of Indra. She was more beautiful and well-behaved than many other girls. Mātali went about in search of a suitable husband for her in all the three worlds. At last he met Nārada going to the presence of Kubera. He told Nārada about this and Nārada took Mātali to Pātaalaloka to search for a suitable bridegroom. Then they found out a serpent boy named Sumukha (good looking) worthy of his name who was the grandson of Āryaka and son of Cikura born of the family of Airāvata. But Sumukha was in danger at that time. Garuḍa had taken a vow that he would eat Sumukha the next month. Āryaka told Nārada about this. Nārada took Sumukha to the court of Indra. Mahāvīṣu was also present there. When Nārada told the story there Indra blessed Sumukha and granted him long life. This made Garuḍa angry and he went to the court of Indra and rebuked Indra. Mahāvīṣu who was present there then did not like this act of Garuḍa and he called the latter to his side and asked him whether he could bear the weight of one of his arms. With arrogance Garuḍa said ‘yes’ and Viṣu then placed one of his arms on the shoulders of Garuḍa. But Garuḍa found the weight unbearable and begged pardon of Viṣu, the weight of his arrogance. The marriage of Sumukha with Gunañkesi was then conducted. (Chapters 97 to 105. Udyoga Parva.)

GUÑAMUKHYĀ. A celestial maiden who took part in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. She gave a dance there then. (Sloka 61, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva.)

GUÑANIDHĪ. A Purāṇic character who lived a sinful life and yet attained Svarga. In the country of Kosala there was once a noble brahmin named Giriṃtā who was rich, erudite and well-versed in the Vedas. Considering his greatness people called him Giriṇāthadikṣīta. Guñanidhi was his son.

When Guñanidhi grew up he started his education under a preceptor called Sudhīṣa. Sudhīṣa had a wife named Muktāvalī. After some time Guñanidhi started having clandestine relations with Muktāvalī. This developed so much that Guñanidhi gave poison to his guru and killed him. His parents came to know of this and they came and reprimanded him. Evil-natured Guñanidhi thought that the presence of his parents would be an annoyance to him in future. So Guñanidhi and Muktāvalī planned together to kill his parents and one day they poisoned them.

After some time Guñanidhi and his wife lost all they had and gradually Guñanidhi turned himself into a thief and drunkard. Nobody in the village liked the couple and all the villagers combined together and sent the couple away from the place. Guñanidhi and Muktāvalī went to the forests and there they started a life of looting the travellers. After some years of a sinful life Guñanidhi one day died lying beneath a Rudrākṣa tree. Servants of both Yama and Śiva came to claim the soul of Guñanidhi. The servants of Yama said that the right place of Guñanidhi the sinner, was in hell but the servants of Śiva said that even if he was a great sinner his place was in heaven because he died lying beneath a Rudrākṣa tree. In the end the Śividūtas won and took Guñanidhi to heaven.

This story was once told by Śiva himself to demonstrate the glory of Rudrākṣa. (Skandha 11, Devī Bhāgavata.)

GUNĀSARMAN. A character of the Purāṇas well versed in all arts and sciences. He was the son of the brahmin Ādityasarman of Ujjayinī. The birth of Guñasarmān bears a story. Once Ādityasarman went to the forests and by his spiritual powers made Sulocanā, a celestial nymph, to merge with him. A son was born to them and he was named Guñasarmān. Ādityasarman became a deva. Even from boyhood he became very erudite. Once Indra came to see Ādityasarman. Ādityasarman who was in deep thoughts did not see Indra and so did not rise up when Indra came. Indra felt insulted and cursed him to be born again on Earth. Ādityasarman prostrated before Indra and asked for pardon. Indra then said that it would be enough if his son was born on Earth in his stead. So Guñasarmān was born on Earth to bear the curse of his father.

At that time Ujjayini was being ruled over by a King called Mahāsena. He had a very beautiful wife named Aśokavati. Gunāsarmān became gradually an intimate friend of the King. Knowing that Guñasarmān was well versed in all arts the King and queen asked him to give them a performance in dancing. The dance was so excellent that the King engaged Guñasarmān to teach dancing to Aśokavati.

Once a royal attendant tried to give poisoned food to the King and Guñasarmān finding it out saved the King. From that day onwards the King loved him more. When once Mahāsena was imprisoned by his enemies Guñasarmān by his magic powers released him. In return for this help the King gave Guñasarmān a thousand villages.

Then to the misfortune of all Aśokavati fell in love with Guñasarmān. Guñasarmān bluntly refused her love. Embittered at this Aśokavati started talking ill of Guñasarmān and the King at last sent Guñasarmān out from the palace. The servants of the King tried to capture him and put him into prison but Guñasarmān escaped from the royal servants by his magic powers. He then went and stayed in the house of a brahmin named Agnidatta and married his daughter, Sundari. Then on the advice of the brahmin Guñasarmān did penance to propitiate Suvrāmaṇyā and got many more powers from him. Guñasarmān equipped with these additional powers conquered Mahāsena and his country and became King there. He then sent Mahāsena and his wife Aśokavati, out from the country. (Sūryaprabhālambaka, Taranāga 6, Kathāsaritsāgara.)
GUNAVARĀ. A heroine, devoted to her husband, in the ancient literature of India. There is a story in Kathāsaritsāgara describing the depth of her devotion to her husband.

Gunavarā was the queen of Virabhejuha, King of the country of Vardhamāna. He had besides Gunavarā ninety-nine other wives. But none had any children. So, the King asked the chief physician of the state to suggest a way to remedy this. The physician asked for a white and horned goat to be brought and he then made with its flesh a preparation. Then sprinkling over it a special medicinal dust, he gave it to the wives to eat. But Gunavarā who never left her husband for a moment came late to take the preparation and by the time she came the others had already consumed the whole lot. Then by an order of the King the horns of the goat were made into a similar preparation and Gunavarā took it with the dust sprinkled over it. All the wives got a child each. Gunavarā’s son was named Śrīgabhuja.

All the other wives of Virabhuja became jealous of Gunavarā. They told the King that Gunavarā was in love with a servant of the palace. The King did not believe it. But he thought he would test her. The King called the servant in question and accusing him of having committed the murder of a brahmin sent him away from the state on a pilgrimage. Sorrow-stricken the servant set out for the pilgrimage. The King then approached Gunavarā and said that a sannyāsin had declared that he, the King, would lose his crown if one of his wives was not put in a cell underground. Gunavarā who adored her husband readily agreed to live underground.

The other wives were satisfied and yet they wanted to send away her son, Śrīgabhuja also from the palace. One day when all the children were playing in the court-yard a stork came and sat perched on the top of the palace. The princes attempted to catch hold of it. A sannyāsin who came there then informed the children that the stork was none other than Agnīśkha, a demon, who had come there to capture and take away the children. All the children then tried to drop it down by arrows. But none succeeded. Then Śrīgabhuja took a golden arrow from the palace and sent it against the bird. The arrow struck the demon but the bird flew away carrying the golden arrow.

The other princes found it as an opportunity to rebuke Śrīgabhuja and they, led by Nīravabhujha, reproached him for losing the golden arrow. Unable to bear their insult Śrīgabhuja went after the stork following the path of the blood drops which fell on the ground from the wound. At last he reached Dhūmapura, the land of Agnīśkha. There he fell in love with Rāpaśikha, the daughter of Agnīśkha. They were soon married and yet Agnīśkha gave Śrīgabhuja great trouble. At last Śrīgabhuja and Rāpaśikha took the golden arrow and eloped from the place one night and reached the city of Vardhamāna. Agnīśkha followed them but the magic powers of Rāpaśikha made him turn back. When King Virabhuja saw his son Śrīgabhuja he was extremely happy. The King then released Gunavarā from the dungeon and praised her for her devotion to her husband. He loved her more and treated her with greater affection than before. At that time the servant who had been sent away also returned. (Taraṅgā 5, Ratnaprabhālaṁbaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

GUNAVARĀ. A celestial lady. This lady was present at the birthday celebration of Arjuna and gave there then a performance in dancing. (Śloka 61, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

GUṆAVARMAṆA. Ādiyasyena, King of Ujjayinī, had a wife named Tejasvati. Gunavarman was the father of Tejasvati. (Taraṅgā 4, Lāvānakalarāmbaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

GUṆAVĀṬI I. Mother of Mandodari (See under Mandodari).

GUṆAVĀṬI II. Daughter born to Sunābha, younger brother of Vajranābha. She had an elder sister named Candramati. Prabhāvatī, daughter of Vajranābha, was married to Pradyumna, son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. One day when Prabhāvatī and Pradyumna were engaged in amorous conversation Guṇavati and Candramati came to them and they expressed a desire to get husbands for themselves from among the Yādavas. Prabhāvatī advised Candramati to marry Gada, brother of Kṛṣṇa and Guṇavati to marry Sāraba, son of Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 94, Harivānaṁa).

GUṆĀṬI. A river. Once Paraṇurāma slew some Kṣatriyas on the northern banks of this river. (Śloka 8, Chapter 70, Droṇa Parva).

GUṬA. A caste appellation. In ancient India appellations to the names were put to distinguish one caste from another. So ‘Sarma’ was added to a brahmin name, ‘Varmā’ to a Kṣatriya name ‘Gupta’ to a Vaiṣya name and ‘Dāsa’ to a Śūdra name. Such appellations were considered to be a mark of nobility in those olden days. (Chapter 153, Agni Purāṇa).

GUṬAKA. A prince of the country of Sāuvira. He was a friend of the famous Jayadratha. In the great battle he was killed by Arjuna. (Śloka 27, Chapter 271, Vana Parva).

GUṆṆIKĀ. A companion of Devayāni. (Chapter 78, Ādi Parva).

GUṆU. The following five persons are to be considered as gurus: Father, mother, Preceptor, Agni (Fire) and Ātmān (soul). (Śloka 27, Chapter 214, Vana Parva).

GUṆUDĀRA. A son of Gāruḍa. (Śloka 13, Chapter 101, Udyoga Parva).

GUṆUPARAMPĀRĀ. The origin of the Vedas and the lineage of Gurus is given below:

1) Origin of the Vedas. At the time of creation the Veda was born from the face of God. It contained a lakh of granthas with four pādas like Rkrit. From the Veda were born the ten yajñas. The Veda was originally one. It was Vyāsa who divided it into four divisions resulting in the four Vedas.

Vyāsa divided the Vedas thus: When Brahmā commanded Vyāsa to divide the Vedas into divisions he first selected four disciples who could see the end of the Vedas. He accepted Paila to study Rgveda, Vaśaṁpāyaṇa to study Yajurveda, Jaimini to study Sāmaveda and Sumantra to study Atharvaveda. Besides these he selected the highly intelligent Romaharsana alias Śūta to study the Itihāsas and Purāṇas.

At first, the Veda was one. Vyāsa divided it into four. He based the division on the cāturhotra, performance of four hotris. He arranged the performance of 'Adhvaryu as Yajus, that of hotṛ as Rks, that of Udgār as Sāmans and that of Brahā as Atharvans. Then he separated the Rks to form Rgveda, Yajus to form Yajurveda and Sāmans to form Sāmanveda. He devoted Atharvaveda to specify the rites and duties of Kings and the deeds of Brahā. Vedavyāsa thus split the single Veda tree into four and from there arose later a forest of Veda trees.

2) The saints of Rgveda. Pāila divided Rgveda into two samhitās and gave one each to Indrapramatī and Bāskala. Sage Bāskala divided his Samhitā again into four and taught it to four of his disciples, Bodhi, Adīmādhava, Yājñāvalkya and Parāśāra. Indrapramatī without splitting his samhitā taught it to his renowned son, Māndūkeya. The branch of Indrapramatī thus went down into circulation through the disciples of Māndūkeya and the disciples of the disciples and so on. Vedamitra of Sākalya gotra, one sage in the line of the disciples of Māndūkeya, split the samhitā into five, and taught it to Mudgala, Gomukha, Vātsya, Śāliya and Śārā. Śākāpāna a colleague of Vedamitra divided it into three and added a division to it by composing a Nīruka of his own. He taught them to Vaitālikā, Balāka and Krauṅīca. This was how the Indrapramati Samhitā produced branches and sub-branches. Bāskala divided his samhitā into another set of three and taught it to Kāliyāni, Gārgya, and Kāṭhājaya. The sages mentioned above are the ones who spread Rgveda in the world.

3) Saints of Yajurveda. Vaisampāyana, disciple of Veda Vyāsa, made twenty-seven divisions of Yajurveda and taught them to his disciples. Among those disciples was Yājñāvalkya, son of Brahmarāta. The branch Taittirīya originated from Yājñāvalkya.

4) The Taittirīya branch. Once all the sages learned in the Vedas made a decision. He who does not attend the Brahmaśamāja meeting held at the mountain of Mahāmeru will be tainted with the sin of Brahmatyā (murder of a brahmin). At one time Vaisampāyana was not able to attend and so was charged with the sin of Brahmatyā. He called his disciples to his side and told them that they should observe a Vrata to absolve Vaisampāyana of his sin. Then one of his disciples, Yājñāvalkya, stood up and said that he would observe the vratā alone and that there was no need of anybody else in that matter. When asked why he said so he replied that none of the colleagues of his was so brilliant and majestic as he was. Vaisampāyana did not like this arrogance of Yājñāvalkya and so angrily commanded Yājñāvalkya to give back all that had been taught to him by Vaisampāyana. Obeying orders Yājñāvalkya vomited all the yajus and went away from the place. The other sages taking the form of the bird, Tītīrī, accepted the vomited yajus. Therefore that branch of the Veda got the name of Taittirīya and those sages were known as the Taittirīyas.

5) Ayātayama(4). On his leaving Vaisampāyana Yājñāvalkya put into operation a new set of Yajus called Ayātayama unknown even to Vaisampāyana. This was how it happened. Yājñāvalkya after leaving the Brahmasamāja went and did penance to propitiate the Sun-god. The Sun appeared before him in the form of a horse. Yājñāvalkya then requested him to grant him new yajus unknown even to Vaisampāyana. The Sun then remaining in the shape of the horse (Vāj) itself imparted to him instructions on a new set of Yajus called Ayātayama which were not known to anybody else, even to Vaisampāyana. Those who studied it were called Vājis. There are fifteen branches of the Vājis, Kānnu being one of them. All were put into operation by Yājñavalkya.

6) The Sannyāsins of Sāmanveda. Vedavyāsa taught Sāmanveda to Jainini. Jainini had a son, Sumantu, and he in turn had a son named Suta. Sumantu and Suta were very intelligent and they studied one branch each of the Vedas. Suta had a son, Sukarmā, and he divided Sāmanvedasmahitā into a thousand branches. Sukarmā had two disciples: Hiranyanābhā and Paupājī, and both of them studied all the thousand divisions of the Sāmanveda. The five hundred disciples of Hiranyanābhā who came from the north and studied Sāmanveda were called Uṣā numeros (those come from the north). Another five hundred came from the south and studied Sāmanvedasmahitā from Hiranyanābhā and they were called Pārācaya suṣamas (Hiranyanābhā is known as Kaulāya also). Paupājī had four disciples: Logākṣi, Kauthumī, Kakśvān and Lāṅgali. These four and their disciples split their samhitās and increased them. Kṛtī, one of the disciples of Hiranyanābhā, taught his disciples twenty-four samhitās. They also split them into many more and made the Sāmanveda bigger.

7) The saints of Atharvaveda. Vyāsa taught Atharvaveda to Sumantu. Sage Sumantu taught it to his disciple Kabandha first. Kabandha split it into two and gave one each to his disciples: Devādāsa and Pathya. Devā had four disciples: Medhā Brahmagali, Śantakaśi and Pippalāda. Pathya had three: Jābali, Kumuda and Saunaka. All these made samhitās. Saunaka split his samhitā into two and taught one to Badru and another to Saindhava. Muni jikēsa learnt it from Saindhava. He split it into two first and then again into three. The five samhitās of Muni jikēsa namely, Naksatralaka, Vedakalpa, Samihitakalpa, Āṅgirasakalpa and Sāṅkilaka are the most important divisions of the Atharvaveda. The Naksatralaka contains methods of worshipping Naksatras; the Vedakalpa contains the rites of the Ṛtvik Brahā, and the Samihitakalpa contains the science of the care of horses and elephants.

8) Purāṇas. Vyāsa compiled a Purāṇa samhitā using speeches, appendices, poems and Kalpanirnyaya and taught it to Romaharsana alīs Śīta. Śīta had six disciples named Sumati, Agnivarca, Mitrayus, Sāṁsāpāyana, Akṛta-vrana, and Sāvarni. Akṛta-vrana, Sāvarni and Sāṁsāpāyana born of Kaśyapagotra have themselves made Purāṇasamhitās. There is another samhitā composed by Romaharṣana based on the samhitās made by the above three.

Visā Purāṇa is based on the latter four samhitās. There are eighteen Purāṇas, namely, Agneya, Brahmā, Brahmatī, Vajīśvarī, Brahmanvī, Bṛhaṇḍavī, Bhāgaṇī, Bhavīsya, Garuḍa, Kāraṇa, Śīla, Mārkaṇḍeya, Mātśya, Nārāyāna, Padma, Śiva, Skanda, Vāmanī, Vāraha and Visā. There are eighteen sub Purāṇas also. In all these are described the creation, the deluge, the dynasties of the devas, history of kings and dynasties, changes of generations etc. (Aṁśa 3, Visā Purāṇa; 12th Skanda, Bhāgaṇī).
H (r). This letter has two meanings: (1) Understanding (2) Rudra. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 349).

HĀHĀ. A Gandharva, the son of Kaśyapa-prajāpati by his wife Pradha. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 59). Other Information. (1) Hāhā was present at the birth-day celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 59).

(2) He lives in Kubera’s assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 25).

(3) Hāhā welcomed Arjuna in the Devaloka when once he visited the place. (Vana Parva, Chapter 43. Verse 14).

HAIHAYA. A King, the son of Vatsa, born in the dynasty of Saryāti. He was the founder of the Haihaya dynasty. He became a brahmin by choosing Sage Bhrigu as his Preceptor. He was also known as Vitahavya. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verses 54-57).

HAIMAVATA. A region north of the Himālayas made famous in the Purāṇas. Sukabrahmaṇi on his way from Mahāmeru to Mithilāpuri crossed this region. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 325, Verse 14).

HAIMAVATI I. A synonym of river Śatadru. (See under Śatadru).

HAIMAVATI II. A wife of Viśvāmitra. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 13).

HAIMAVATI III. A wife of Śrī Kaṃṇa. When Kaṃṇa was cremated Haimavati also ended her life in the funeral pyre. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 73).

HAIRANYAVATI. A river which flowed along Hiraṇmaya, a Purāṇic region. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 5).

HALADHARA. A synonym of Balarāma. (See under Balabhadrarāma).

HĀLĀHALA(S). A sect of asuras, who were the first creation of the Trimūrtis, when they also possessed the power of creation. The Hālāhalas, who became very powerful within a short period of time earned from Brahmā all the boons they wanted, and they then conquered the three worlds. At last they barricaded Kaṭāsa and Vaikuṇṭha also, and Harīharas (Viṣṇu and Śiva) defeated them after a fierce fight lasting for a thousand years. The Harīharas returned to their abodes and spoke about their achievements. Their wives laughed at the bravado of their husbands. At this Mahāviṣṇu got angry with Lakṣmī and Śiva with Pārvatī, and in protest the Devis left their husbands. From that day onwards Viṣṇu and Śiva began losing their power. Brahmā, who divined the reason for the growing weakness of Viṣṇu and Śiva persuaded Lakṣmī and Pārvatī to return to their husbands so that they might regain their former power. Yet, Brahmā told them that in future he alone would handle the work of creation. Thus was Viṣṇu and Śiva divested of their right to creation. (Devi Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

HALĀYUDHA. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 10th century A.D. A mahākaviya called Kavirahasya is his most important work. The hero in the great poem is Kṛṣṇa III. A King of the Rāṣṭrakūta dynasty, and poet Halāyudha was a courtier of his.

HALIKA. A prominent nāga born in the Kaśyapa dynasty. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 15).

HALIMĀ. One of the Saptamātris (seven mothers). (Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 10).

HALIMĀKA. A nāga born in the family of Vāsuki. He was burnt to death in the serpent yajña of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 5).

HAMSĀ I. An incarnation of Mahā Viṣṇu in Kṛṣṭyuga. He instructed great sages like Sanaka on yoga in the presence of brahmā. He is also called yajña. (Bhāgavata 11th Skandha). Harīsa, who was a prajāpati as well advised the Śādvidyadevas about the means to attain salvation and the advice is known as Harīsaṅgītā. (Śaṅti Parva, Chapter 288).

HAMSĀ II. A son born to Kaśyapa of his wife, Aritā. He was a Gandharva and it is believed that Dīrtarāṣṭra was an āṃśāvatār of this Gandharva. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 6, See also under Āṃśāvatārā).

HAMSĀ III.

1) General. A minister of Jārasandha. Harīsa and Dimbhaka were the sons of Brahmadatta, the chief of Śāla, and they were adepts in archery. Paraśurāma was their Preceptor. (Harivānśa 3, 103). The Mahābhārata calls Harīsa’s brother Dībhaka.

2) Education. Vicakra and Janārdana were intimate friends of Harīsa from their very infancy, of whom Janārdana was the son of Mitrasaha, a friend of Brahmadatta. Harīsa, Dimbhaka and Janārdana had their education together and their marriages also were conducted at the same time. After some time Śiva presented them many weapons like Rudrāstra, Maheśvarāstra and Brahmāśirāstra, and also two attendants for self-protection. (Harivānśa 3, 105).

3) Curse of Durvāsas. Swollen-headed and haughty on account of Śiva’s boon, Harīsa and Dimbhaka turned out to be a nightmare to the world, and they once tried to give trouble to Durvāsas, who cursed them to be killed by Mahāviṣṇu. Sometimes later the sage himself informed Śrī Kṛṣṇa about this curse of his.

4) Death. The Harīsa brothers began an aʿvamadha (Horse Sacrifice) and deputed Janārdana to collect the tax thereof. Śrī Kṛṣṇa alone refused to pay the tax with the result that Harīsa clashed with Kṛṣṇa who killed Dimbhaka and kicked Harīsa down to Pātāla. He died there, in Pātāla of snake-bite. (Harivānśa 3, 128).

5) Grief of Jārasandha. Harīsa’s death caused much grief to Jārasandha, and for many years after it, he shed tears over the death of his friend. Even at the time when bhimasena, during his triumphal tour of the east, attacked Jārasandha he remembered the dead Harīsa and Dimbhaka. (Sabhā Parva, 13, 37).

HAMSĀ (M). Swan. For story about the origin of harīsa on earth see under Śrīṣṭi, Para 12.

HAMSACUṬA. A Yakṣa, who worships Kubera in his assembly. (Sabha Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 17).

HAMSADHVAJA. A King of Campānagara, who was a great devotee of Viṣṇu. During his reign monogamy prevailed in the country. He took the yājñīc horse of Yudhiṣṭhīra captive, and in the fight to release the horse Arjuna killed Sudhanvā and Suratha, sons of Hainśadhvāja. Grieved and enraged at their death Hainśadhvāja took the field against Arjuna, and Śrī Kṛṣṇa finding that Arjuna's life was in danger pacified them both. Also Kṛṣṇa requested Hainśadhvāja to be a supporter of Arjuna in future. Hainśadhvāja had five sons called Suratha, Sudhanvā, Sudarsā, Subala and Sama. (Jaimini, Aṉavamedha Parva, 17, 21).

HAMSĀJA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 68).

HAMSĀKĀYA. A Kṣatriya by caste, Hainsakāyā was present at the rājaśīya of Yudhiṣṭhīra. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 14).

HAMSĀKŪṬA (M). A mountain lying between Hastinapura and the Sātaśīka mountain. On his way to Sātaśīka Pāṇḍu crossed Hainśakūṭam. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 50). Śrī Kṛṣṇa once tore off a peak of the mountain and established it in Dvārakā. (Bhārata, Southern text, Chapter 38).

HAMSĀPARTHĀ (M). A region famous in the Purāṇas. The armies from this place fought in the great war. They fought taking their position at the grivāsthāna (neck position) of the Gauruḍa vyāha (A particular array of soldiers) set up by Droṇa. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 7).

HAMSĀPRAṬAṆĀ TĪRTHA. A sacred place at Prayāga on the banks of the Gaṅgā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 87).

HAMSĀVAKTRA. A warrior who fought on the side of Subrahmanya and defeated the Asurās. (Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 75).

HAMSĪ. A daughter of Bhagiratha whom sage Kauṭsa married. (Anūśāna Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 26).

HAMSĪKĀ. A daughter of Surabhī. This cow is said to be supporting the southern region. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 102, Verse 7).

HANŪMĀṆ. A monkey born of the elements and aspects of Devas. In the epics of no other country could be found a character that belongs to the animal kingdom who is as powerful, erudite and philosophic as Hanūmāṇ.

1) Birth. Many and different are the stories about the birth of Hanūmāṇ told in Purāṇic literature, and they are briefly noted below.

(1) The semen discharged by Śiva, whose erotic feelings were excited by the sight of Viśṇu disguised as Mōhiṇī was received by the Saptarṣis and deposited in the womb of Aṉājanā, and Hanūmāṇ was born out of it. (Śiva Purāṇa, Śatadrasanasāhita).

(2) Dāsaratha divided among his wives the divine pīyasa (pudding) got from the putrakāmeṇṭi yajña which was performed so that he might be blessed with children. Somehow or other a kite snatched some pudding and flew off with it. On its way the pudding fell down from the beaks of the kite on the fingers of Aṉājanā doing tapas in the forest. She ate that pudding and Hanūmāṇ was born as the son of Aṉājanā due to the extraordinary powers of the pudding. (Ānanda Rāmāyaṇa).

(3) Śiva, once in his fierce and effulgent form (aspect) entered Kesarī, the husband of Aṉājanā and had coitus with her. After that Vāyu (Wind-god) also had coitus with her. Thus as a result of the sexual act by both the Devas Aṉājanā got pregnant. Later, Aṉājanā was about to throw into the valley of the mountain her new-born child as it was an ugly one when Vāyu (Wind god) intervened and saved the child. Hanūmāṇ was the child thus born of Śiva and Vāyu. (Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Pratisarga Parva).

(4) Hanūmāṇ's actual father was Śiva. Gaṇapati was born to Śiva and Pārvatī as they played in the forest disguised as elephants. After that Śiva and Pārvatī played about in the forest disguised as monkeys as a result of which Pārvatī got pregnant. Since Pārvatī did not like the idea of being the mother of a monkey, Śiva, by his yogic power entrusted the child, (in embryo) that was in the womb of Pārvatī to Vāyu (Wind god), who carried it with him hither and thither till it became mature, when it was deposited in Aṉājanā, the monkey woman. The monkey called Kesarī was her husband. Thus Hanūmāṇ was born as the son of Aṉājanā.

Aṉājanā also has a story of her own. Once upon a time she was the maid-servant called Puṉjikasthālā of Bhṛṣpati. One day she went out to gather flowers when the love-making of other young women attracted her so much that, without gathering flowers, and her erotic sentiments being aroused much, she returned home and covered Bhṛṣpati with kisses. Bhṛṣpati got really angry with the misbehaviour of his maid-servant and cursed her into a female monkey. She was told that, after she had lived for sometime with a monkey-husband she would get a child from the vitality of Śiva, after which she would return to him as maid-servant as of old. And, accordingly, Puṉjikasthālā became a female monkey under the name Aṉājanā and lived at Aṉājanā forest with a handsome monkey called Kesarī as her husband.

It was while Aṉājanā was doing tapas so that she might become pregnant by Śiva that Śiva and Pārvatī played in that forest disguised as monkeys, and Pārvatī conceived and the child ultimately came out as the son of Aṉājanā.

Even while Aṉājanā was pregnant the child in her womb had much to suffer at the hands of Bāli. Hearing from Nārāda that Śiva's son had been born in Aṉājanā's womb Bāli feared that the actual birth of such a son would jeopardize his lordship over the monkeys. To ward off the threatened contingency, Bāli, as advised by Nārāda, let in the five metals (gold, copper, iron, tin and zinc) in watery form into the stomach of Aṉājanā. (This is a means of causing abortion). But, the attempt misfired. Instead of the five metals killing the child in Aṉājanā's womb, they became ear-ornaments for it, and Hanūmāṇ was thus born with ornaments in his ears. (Karīṇa Rāmāyaṇa Pūrvakāṇḍa).

2) Naming and boons. As soon as Hanūmāṇ was born Aṉājanā was released from the curse, and she wanted to return to heaven. The monkey child asked its mother what its future would be and how it was to earn its living. She assured him that he would never be destroyed and that fruits as ripe as the rising sun (she pointed the sun out to him) would form his food. And, Aṉājanā returned to heaven.
Thinking that the glowing and glittering Sun was food for him to be eaten, the monkey child made just one jump at it (Sun) and quite neared it. But seeing Rāhu, bigger than the Sun he jumped at it. Then it was that it saw Airāvata and it tried to eat it. And, seeing this attempt of the monkey-child, Indra used his vajrāyudhā (Thunderbolt) against it. The weapon hit its chin and wounded it, and in precarious condition it fell down on earth. Vāyu (Wind god) who saw his child falling down wounded carried it off to Pātāla.

When Vāyu (air) quitted the earth everything thereon came to a dead-stop. Living things were on the verge of death due to suffocation. And, then Brahmā and others went to Pātāla, comforted Vāyu and congratulated the monkey child. On the basis of Indra’s vajra having made a scar on its hanu (jaw-bone or chin) the monkey child was named Hanumān by the Devas, who, one by one blessed him as follows:—

Brahmadeva; May you live long, so long as Brahmā exists.

Mahāviśu; May you live all your life as the greatest devotee of God.

Indra; No weapon of any kind will wound or hit your body.

Agni; Fire will never affect you.

Kāla; May not death ever court you.

All the Devas: None will ever equal you in strength and speed. Brahmā blessed Hanumān again giving him more physical power than Garuḍa and Vāyu blessed him to have more speed than himself. (air). (Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakanda, Canto 15; Uttarārāmāyaṇa; Kambārāmāyaṇa, Purvakoṣaṇa; Adbhutarāmāyaṇa).

3) Education. Being born of Śiva and on account of the Śivasakti in him, Hanumān reached boyhood immediately. To learn the four Vedas and the six śāstras he chose Śūrya mentally as his preceptor, and approached him with the request to be taught the Vedas etc. Śūrya agreed to have Hanumān as his disciple subject to the condition that the latter would not be permitted to sit with the Bālakhlīyas in his (Śūrya’s) chātarī and study. Hanumān agreed to the condition to learn from Śūrya walking in front of him. With book opened in his hand and concentrating all his attention on the face of Śūrya Hanumān traversed the sky and within a short period of sixty hours he mastered all the Vedas and the śāstras thoroughly well. Though Śūrya said that he would consider the great interest Hanumān took in his studies as dākṣina (tuition fee) Hanumān wanted Śūrya to accept something more by way of dākṣina, and Śūrya said as follows:—“If you are so very particular about offering me something more as dākṣina I shall tell you. My son Sugrīva is living on earth with Bāli and he is not as strong and powerful as Bāli. You be of help to Sugrīva as his minister and constant companion.”

Happy at Śūrya’s words Hanumān returned to the forest and lived as Sugrīva’s minister for the rest of his life.

4) Śrī Rāma’s servant. From the day he met Śrī Rāma after the abduction of Sītā by Rāvaṇa till Rāma’s death his story is inextricably connected with that of Rāma. (See under Rāmeśvaram).

5) His music. Once in a musical competition Hanumān defeated Nārada. (Adbhutarāmāyaṇa; also see Para 8 under Nārada).

6) Śivālīṅga at Rāmeśvaram. There is a story in the Yuddhakānda of Rāmāyaṇa connecting Hanumān with the Sivalīṅga installed in the temple at Rāmeśvaram. (See under Rāmeśvaram).

7) Lost his divine power. Once due to a curse of sage Trnabindu Hanumān lost his great strength and vitality. But, he would regain the lost power when one reminded him of it. During the search for Sītā Hanumān felt it difficult to jump across the southern sea to Laṅkā due to the above curse. But, when Jāmbavān described to him about his noble origin and powers Hanumān regained his lost power and vitality, and successfully jumped across the sea to Laṅkā. (See Trnabindu II, Para 2).

8) A fort made of tail. He made a fort of his tail and saved Rāma and Lākṣmana within it. (See Pātāla-śāṃbhu).

9) Hanumān and Sahasramukha Rāvaṇa. (See Sahasramukha Rāvaṇa).

10) Hanumān and Śatrughna. Śatrughna, who conducted the horse in connection with the Asvamedha performed by Śrī Rāma after his return from exile in the forest, fell down unconscious in his fight with King Virāmāni, and then Hanumān brought a herbal medicine called Dront from the Himālayas and with its aid brought back Śatrughna to consciousness. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 44).

11) Taken captive by Kuṣa and Lava. The Yajñaśva (sacrificial horse) of the Asvamedha yajña of Śrī Rāma led by a contingent of Rāma’s army was resting in a tent put up near the hermitage of Gautama when Kuṣa and Lava together captured the horse. Hanumān, who rushed over to the spot receiving intimation of the news was bound hand and foot with creepers by Kuṣa and Lava and dragged to the hermitage. Sītā, was then in the hermitage brooding over the past, and the repetition of the word ‘Rāma’ by the humiliated Hanumān awoke her from her reverie. She was taken aback to see Hanumān there in that plight and got him released from captivity by her sons. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Uttarākhaṇḍa).

12) Old age. Having witnessed Rāmāvata (incarnation of Rāma) to its very end, Hanumān, who had by now become quite old, spent his days guarding the Kadali forest. Bhumī, who happened to go there to collect Saugandhika flowers got defeated in fight by Hanumān. (See Bhumī, Para 7).

13) Arjuna’s flag-Symbol (See under Arjuna 17 B).

14) Idols of Hanumān. When an idol of Hanumān is installed in a temple, he must be represented as holding Vajra in one hand and his feet must seem to tear the ground under them. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

HANYĀMĀNA. A famous place in south India mentioned in the Purāṇas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 69).

HARA I. A famous Dānava, born to Kaśyapa of his wife Danu. He was reborn as King Subāhu. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 23).

HARA II. One of the eleven Rudras. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 19).

HARA III. A synonym of Śiva.

HĀRA (M). A region of Purāṇic fame. Nakula subjugated the King of Hāra by a simple command without any resort to arms, and the King attended Yudhiśthira's Rājasūya with presents. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 54).

HARAKALPA. One of the sons born to Vipracitī by Sīthīhī. Paraśurāma killed him. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 68, 19).

HĀRAKEYŪRAKA. See under Lavaṇa. II

HĀRAVAS. An asura born from the tear drops of Brahmā. He was burnt to death in the flames emerging from Sīvalīna. (Skanda Purāṇa, 5, 2, 48).

HĀRDIKI I. A Kṣatriya King born from an aśīsa of the asura called Aśvapati. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 15).

HĀRDIKI II. Kṛtvārman. He was called Hārdika because he was the son of Hṛdika of the Yadu dynasty. (See under Kṛtvārman).

HARI I. A synonym of Viṣṇu. (See under Viṣṇu).

HARI II. A warrior of Subrahmāṇya. (Sālya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 61).

HARI III. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas and was killed by Karna.

HARI IV. An asura, the son of Tārakākṣa, who got from Brahmā a boon enabling him to prepare Mṛtasai-jīvani. (a medicine to revive dead people). (Karna Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 27).

HARI V. Son of King Akaśipāṇa. Though he was as powerful and proficient in archery as Mahāvisvā, and equal in prowess to Indra in war he got into the hands of his enemies and was killed. (Drona Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 27).

HARI VI. A particular sect of the attendants of Rāvaṇa. They attacked the army of monkeys. (Vana Parva, Chapter 283).

HARI VII. A very powerful bird born in Garuḍa's dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 13).

HARI VIII. A particular species of horses. They possess long hairs on the neck and are golden in colour. (Drona Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 13).

HARI IX. A daughter born to Kaśyapaprajāpāti by his wife Krodhavaśā. Lions and monkeys originated from this Hari. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakāṇḍa, Canto 14).

HARI XI. A sect of Devas. During the Tāmasaman-vantera there were four such sects, viz. Hariś, Satyas, Supāras and Sudhis. (See Manvantara).

HARĪBĀHRI. A great sage, who was a member of Yudhiṣṭhīra's assembly. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

HARĪBHADRĀ. Daughter of Kaśyapa by Krodhā. She was given in marriage to sage Puluha and from them were born the monkeys, Kinnaras, Kītipuruṣas etc. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

HARĪDĀSA. A monkey King, son of Puluha by Śvetā. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

HARĪDHĀMA. A great sage who was reborn in his next birth as Raigāvenī, a gopi in Gokula (Cowherds' colony) as he had chanted the Kṛṣṇa mantra of twenty letters during his life as sage. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 72).

HARĪJĀI. A. One of the Kāśasa women who kept guard over Sītā in the Aśoka grove. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Khaṇḍa, 23, 3).

HARIMEDHAS. A saintly King of ancient days. He once conducted a yājña and a daughter called Dhvajavatī was born to him. She lived in the western regions (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 13).

HARIMITRA. A brahmin, who had his āśrama on the banks of the Yamanū. Owing to his association with Harimitra a sinner called Vīkūḍaḷa took his bath in the sacred waters of the Kālindī during two Māgha months. The first bath released him from all his sins and the second bath made him eligible to go to heaven. Thus Harimitra was responsible for the attainment of heaven by the sinner Vīkūḍaḷa. (Padma Purāṇa, Ādi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 31).

HARĪNA. A nāga which belonged to the Airāvata family. It was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Jana-mejava. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 11).

HARINĀŚVA. A King in ancient India. He once got from King Raghu a sword with divine powers which he presented to King Sunaka. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 166).

HARINĪ. A daughter of Hiranyakāśipū, also called Rohini. She was married to Viśvapati, an Asura, Vana Parva, 211, 18).

HARĪPINDĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmāṇya. (Sālya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 24).

HARĪŚCANDRA I. A King of the solar dynasty very much revered for his unique truthfulness and integrity. He was the son of the famous Triśaṅku.

1) Genealogy. See under Triśaṅku.
2) A brief life-sketch. To keep his plighted word and for the sake of truth he gifted away the whole of his kingdom to Viśvāmitra. When that was not sufficient he cleared his debts to Viśvāmitra with the money got by selling his wife, Candramati, his son, Lohitāśva and finally himself. And, he earned his livelihood with the wages he got for cremating corpses, himself doing duties as guard at a burning ghat and as the slave to a Cāṇḍāla. Ultimately the Trimūrtis (Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva) appeared and heaped on him all the boons he desired and rewarded him with high honours. (See for details para 4 under Viśvāmitra).

HARĪŚCANDRA II. An emperor of ancient times, to whom Brahmā gave as a gift a palace which automatically produced everything desired by its owner. He was lord over the seven islands. About his former birth and the plenitude of his riches the Padma Purāṇa (Uttara khaṇḍa, Chapter 32) has the following story to say:- Hariścandra himself was surprised that he became so very rich in the matter of children and of wealth. Wondering what actions of his entitled him to so much wealth and to his position which was equal to Indra's the emperor went to Sumudra by vimāna where he questioned Sanatkumāra, a brahminical sage seated in meditation on a golden stone as to who he was in his past life and to which actions of his past life he owed all the present wealth and prosperity. The great sage replied as follows:-

"In the past birth you were a truthful and pure-hearted vaishya; you gave up your own profession and so you were ousted from home by your own people. At that time a famine and other scarcity conditions occurred there. One day you got into a pond along with your wife, collected lotus flowers from it and went to Kaśi to sell the flowers. But, no one purchased the flowers. At last, Candramati, daughter of Indradyumna purchased the flowers for a yajña she was performing. When you saw Viṣṇu installed along with Adityabha-gavān (Sun-God) and worshipped with flowers, feelings of devotion swept your mind and you too worshipped the idols with lotus flowers. You enjoy today the fruits of that action in the past life.
( It is not quite definite whether Hārīcandra I and II are one and the same person).

HĀRĪSCANDRA III. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 9th century A. D. The mahākāvyā called “Dharmar-śarmābhudyadaya” is his main work. This mahākāvyā comprises of 21 cantos. He has composed another work called “Jīvandharacampū”.

HARITA I. A King who was the grandson of Harīcandra and son of Rohita. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

HARITA II. A King, who was the son of Vapūsmān and grandson of Śvāyambhuvamanu. He was King of Haritavāra in the island of Śāmarī. (Mārkandeya Purāṇa 50, 28; Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 2, 3).

HARITA III. A son born to Yadu of the nāga woman called Dhūmravāṇā. He founded an independent kingdom in the Nāga island and became a prominent leader of the Madgura tribe. (Hari Vānīśa, 2, 38; 29, 34).

HARITA I. A great sage who visited Bhīṣma in his bed of arrows (Śaraśayā). (Śanti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 7). Once he attended Yudhishṭhira’s assembly and spoke on eternal truths conducive to mental peace. That talk of his became famous as Hārītagītā. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 278).

HARITA II. An author on Smṛtis (codes of conduct).

He has written two texts on the subject called Laghuhārīta smṛti and Vṛddhahārītasmṛti.

HARITĀLA (M) A mineral (yellow orpiment) got from mountains, which is red like the clouds at dusk. (Vana Parva, Chapter 158, 94).

HARITASA.

1) General. A King born in the solar dynasty. In the art of music he defeated Nārada and shamed Sarasvati (Goddess of language), pleased Brahmā and by the melody of his music sent Viṣṇu to sleep. The mounting achievements of the King in the art of music evoked jealousy in Śiva’sāṅkara, the lord of music. When Saṅkaramūrti in a competitive spirit played the rāga Saṅkarābharaṇa (a particular tune) Haritāśva) pointed out that Saṅtarasa (the calmness and poise) which was suited to that rāga had given place to raudra rasa which was a serious mistake. Enraged at this Śiva opened his eye of fire at the King who retorted boldly thus, ‘even if the eye of fire was opened a mistake was a mistake’. This stand of the King pleased Śiva so much that he bestowed on the King boons and good wishes as presents for his (king’s) victory over all.

2) Killed Andhaka. Andhākāsura conquered Svarag and took Indra prisoner during the period when Hari-tāsa was King. The combined efforts of Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva could not kill Andhaka. At last at the instance of Bhṛṣapati a representative of the Devas visited Haritāśva at Ayodhyā and sought his help to kill Andhāka and accordingly the King set out for war against the demon. Agastya told the King in secret that Andhāka treasured an image of Śiva and Parvati in his stomach, and after removing, with his arrows the idol from his stomach, Haritāśva killed him and restored the Deva-loka to Indra. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

HARIYAMŚA (M) An appendix to the Mahābhārata in 10,000 verses. The main object of it is to sing the praises of Mahāviṣṇu. It contains three parts called respectively Harīvamśa Parva, Viṣṇu Parva, and Bhaiṣyapa Parva. Creation of the world, kings of the solar dynasty and of the lunar dynasty, Yadu dynasty and the birth of Śrī Kṛṣṇa form the theme of Harīvamśa Parva. Viṣṇu Parva deals mainly with the pranks and games of Śrī Kṛṣṇa in his childhood. Though there occur certain hints about the future at the beginning of the Bhāṣyapa Parva, the creation of the world, the incarnation of Viṣṇu as Vāmana (Dwarf) and as Narasiṁha (half man and half lion), Śiva and Viṣṇu constitute its main theme.

The following verses prove that the Harīvamśa also was composed by Vyāsa.

Harīvamśastattah parva-purāṇaṁ kilāsanātiḥāditaṁ / Viṣṇuparvāśi śoścaryā / Viṣṇoḥkamsavadhastathā // Bhāṣyaparvācāpyuktān / Khiśevadābhutam mahat / Etat parvāsatam pūraṇam / Vyāsenoktāṁ mahātmanā // (Ādi Parva, Chapter 2, Verses 83-84).

HARIVARSHA (M) The northern part of Mount Hemaparvata. Arjuna, during his triumphal tour of the northern regions conquered this region and took away a lot of costly gems. (Bhārata, southern text, sakhā Parva, Chapter 28).

HARIVIRA. See Dhanaśarman.

HARSA I. One of the three sons of Dharmadeva, the other two being Śama and Kāma. Harṣa married Nandā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 32).

HARSA II. A great poet in Sanskrit, who flourished in the 12th century A.D., his most reputed work being the Mahākāvyā called Naisadha, one of the five Mahākāvyās (Epic Poems) in Sanskrit language. Another well-known work of his is Khāḍanakhaṇḍakhaṇḍāya. He was a member of the literary assembly of King Jayacandā of Kanaūj. Hira was his father and Māmalladevi, his mother.

HARSA III. King Harśavardhana who ruled over North India between A.D. 660 and 668. He is remembered and respected more as a poet in Sanskrit than anything else. Nāgānanda, Ratnāvalī and Priyadarśikā are his more important works. The poet Bāna has written the biography of Harṣa.

HARYAKKA. A King born in the royal dynasty of Aṅgā. He was the son of King Carīpa and father of King Bhṛdratha. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

HAVYAGRĪVA V. A Rākṣasa about whom the following story is told in the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa. Havaghna was born from the smoke which rose from the fire of a yajña which sage Bharadvāja along with his wife Pāṭilīnasī conducted on the banks of river Gautami, and he began eating the havis. Questioned about it by Bharadvāja Havaghna answered as follows:—“I am an unfortunate fellow called Kṛṣṇa cursed by Brahmā. If you would kindly sprinkle on me the Gaṅgā water, Suvarṇā, ghee and soma I will be redeemed from the curse. Bharadvāja complied with the request of Havaghna and he got redemption from the curse.

HAVYAGRĪVA I. An Asura, the son of Kaśyapaprajāpāti by his wife Danu. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakāṇḍa, Canto 14). As a child the Asura began tapas on the banks of river Sarasvati, and after a thousand years Devī appeared and asked him to choose any boon he wanted, and he wanted to become invincible by Devas and Asuras, and also deathless. When Devī told him that such a boon was out of question, he wanted the boon that he (Havaghna) should not be killed by anyone but by a Havaghna (one with the horse’s neck). Devī granted him the boon.

Havaghna, who became haughty and overconfident on receiving such a boon, went about the three worlds troubling good people, and at last he clashed with the Devas. As he could be killed only by one with the head of a horse the combined attack of Mahāviṣṇu and the Devas did not succeed in defeating him and Mahāviṣṇu decided to rest for some time to recoup himself from weariness. During his rest his head was hit by the end of his own bow and the head was severed from the trunk. Mahāviṣṇu replaced the head thus lost with that of a horse and killed Havaghna in fight. (For details see Cītāl).

HAVYAGRĪVA II. An asura who guarded the kingdom of Narakaśura. He was killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 130 Verse 50).

HAVYAGRĪVA III. A King born in the Vīdṛa dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 15).

HAVYAGRĪVA IV. A saintly king. Though he defeated his enemies, yet, as he had no backing and support, he was finally killed. The story of Havaghna was told by Vyāsa to teach Dharmaputra the lesson that even the greatest of heroes requires the support of others. Though killed, Havaghna secured a place in heaven. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 24, Verse 23).

HAVYAGRĪVA V. An incarnation of Viṣṇu.

1) In Vedic literature:—In Vedic literature incarnation as Havaghna is attributed not to Viṣṇu, but to Yaṭīṇa. But the Taṁtirīya ärāṇyaka depicts yaṭīṇa as a proto-form of Viṣṇu. The inference that may be drawn from the above is that the root of the Havaghna story detailed in Vedic and Purānic literature is one and the same.

About the Havaghna incarnation the Pañcaviṣṇu-brāhmaṇa contains the following story.

Agni, Indra, Viṣṇu and Yaṭīṇa (Viṣṇu) once began a yajña on the understanding that the havirbāha obtained from it should be divided among all the Devas. But, in violation of the agreement, yajña left the place carrying away the whole Yajñabhāgā with him, and he drove back the Devas who followed him with the help of the bow presented to him by Devi. Finally the Devas got the string of the bow bitten off by termites and the bow which got straightened up cut off yajña’s head. Yajña then apologized for his offence and then the devas got the Aśvinidesvas to fix the head of a horse to the trunk of Yajña. (Pañcavimśābrāhmaṇa 7, 5; Taittirīya āranyaka 5, 1; Taittirīya Samhitā, 4-9, 1).

2) In Purānic literature. The above story is told in Skanda Purāṇa with slight modifications as follows:— Once Brahmā and other Devatās conducted a test as to which one amongst them was the greatest, and when it became evident that Mahāviśv śu was, in every respect, superior to all the others Brahmā cursed that Viśu should lose his head. Viśu, who got thus bereft of his head attended a yajña conducted by the Devas with the head of a horse attached to his trunk. After the yajña was over he went to dharmāranya and did tapas there and by the blessings of Śiva got back his former head instead of that of the horse.

HAYAJṆĀNA. The science of controlling horses. (Vana Parva, Chapter 77, 17).

HAYAŚIRĀŚ. Hayagriva. (See Hayagriva V).

HEHAYA (HAIHAYA). See Ekāvira and Paraṣurāma.

HEMAGUHA. A nāga born in Kaśyapa’s dynasty. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 9).

HEMAKANTA. Son of King Kuśaketu of Vaṅga. He committed the sin of brāhmaṁtya as he killed the sage, Satārca. Later on he redeemed himself from the sin by giving water to Tṛita, a brāhmin. (Skanda Purāṇa).

HEMAKUNDALĀ. A vaisya. (See Vīkundalā).

HEMAKUTA (M) I. A mountain in the North. Arjuna once went to Harivarsa after stationing his army here. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 28).

HEMAKUTA (M) II. A mountain on the banks of the river Nandā, known also as Rṣabhakūṭa. Once Yudhishṭira went to this mountain and enjoyed the many beautiful scenes there. (See Rṣabha II).

HEMAMALI I. He used to supply flowers to Vaiśravaṇa. He had a beautiful wife called Viśālākṣi. Once when he returned with flowers from Mānasasaras he felt an onrush of love and spent time at home in love pranks with his wife. Kubera went to the temple for worshipping Śiva at noon and though he waited there till dusk time for HEMAMALI to bring the flowers the latter did not come. Kubera got angry and sent for Hemamali and he came trembling with fear. Kubera’s curse turned him into a leper afflicted with eighteen varieties of leprosy, and separated from wife he fell from Alakāpurī. At last he came to HEMĀDRI where he met sage Mārkanḍeya. Hemamali told him all about his misfortune and the sage advised him to observe Aṣādha-kṛṣṇaıkīdaś. Hemamali did so and got cured of the fell disease and returned to Devaloka. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttarākhaṇḍa, Chapter 54).

HEMAMALI II. A son of King Drupada. He was killed in the great war by Aśvatthāma. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 156, 182).

(12) It was at the Himālayas that Meruśāvarṇī imparted advice to Yuddhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 78, Verse 14).

(13) Bhagiratha performed tapas on the Himālayas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 108, Verse 3).

(14) The kingdom of Subāhu, King of Kalinda was on the plains of the Himālayas. The Pāṇḍavas stopped there for a night and left for the Himālayas the next day. (Vana Parva, Chapter 140, Verse 24).

(15) The Pāṇḍavas, on the seventeenth day of their life in exile in the forest came to the top of the Himālayas, and visited the aśrama of Vṛṣāparvan there. (Vana Parva, Chapter 18).

(16) It was while Bhīmasena was hunting in the Himālayas and appreciating the beauties there that a python caught him by the leg. (Vana Parva, Chapter 178).

(17) Sage Mārkandeya once saw in the stomach of child Kṛṣṇa mountains like the Himālayas, Hemakūṭa etc. (Vana Parva, Chapter 188, Verse 112).

(18) Much anterior to sage Mārkandeya an owl called Prāvāraṅkaka had lived on the Himālayas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 199, Verse 4).

(19) Kaṁḍa conquered all the kingdoms on the Himālayas and collected taxes from them all. (Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Verse 4).

(20) On the northern heights of the Himālayas live Śiva and Pārvatī for ever. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 5).

(21) Himāvān is one of the six rain-producing mountains stretching from the east to the west. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 3).

(22) Arjuna during his tour of Kaḷāsa in dream with Śrī Kṛṣṇa saw all the peaks of Himāvān. (Draupi Parva, Chapter 80, Verse 23).

(23) When Śiva burnt to ashes the Tripuras, Himāvān and Vindhya served as the axes of Śiva’s chariot. (Kaṁḍa Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 22).

(24) The River Gaṅgā deposited Śiva’s semen on a high peak of Himāvān and Subrahmanya was born from it. (Kaṁḍa Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 9).

(25) Himāvān, the Devatā of the mountain, also was present at the installation of Subrahmanya as chief of the army. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 14).

(26) Himāvān presented to Subrahmanya two attendants called Suvarcas and Ativarcas. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 46).

(27) Śrī Kṛṣṇa once performed tapas on Himāvān, and as a result of it was born his son Pradyumna from Rukmiṇī. (Sautpikā Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 30).

(28) Himāvān presented inexhaustible wealth to emperor Pṛthu. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 113).

(29) The peaks of Himāvān have an area of 100 yoganas; Brahmā once conducted a yajña there. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 32).

(30) Dakṣaprajāpati once conducted a yajña at the place called Gaṅgādvāra on the slopes of Himāvān. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 284, Verse 3).

(31) In Chapter 327 of the Śanti Parva the following statement occurs about Himāvān. According to the advice of King Janaka Śuka brahmaṁśi mounted the Himālayas. Siddhā-caranās lived on the mountain, Celestial women walked all over the place. The mountain always reverberated with the noise of different varieties of living beings. The noise produced by Kināras, peacocks and many other birds could always be heard there. Himāvān was the permanent abode of Garuḍa. The Aṣṭādikālas also lived there.

(32) When Śuka moved up to the world above it appeared as though the Himāvān was being cut open. He saw two divine peaks of mountains on the two sides of the path; one of them was the peak of the Mahāmeru and the other that of Himāvān. Both the peaks gave way to Śuka. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 333).

(33) Śiva desired to secure Umā, the daughter of Himāvān as his wife. Meantime sage Bhrigu demanded that Umā be wedded to him. When Himāvān told the sage that it had already been decided to give Umā in marriage to Śiva, the Sage cursed that there would not be, in future, gems in the Himāvān. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 62).

(34) Viṣṇu and Śiva once fought with each other on the Himāvān, and then it seemed as though the mountain was being clef into pieces. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 122).

(35) Nārada had his aśrama there, on the Himāvān. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 346, Verse 3).

(36) Śrī Kṛṣṇa once visited the aśrama of Upamanyu on the Himāvān. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 43).

(37) King Marutta performed a yajña on the Himālayas and brahmans went away leaving a lot of wealth there. (Āsvamedhika Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 20).

(38) Saṅghaṇḍa left for the Himālayas after Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhāra were burnt to death in a wild fire. (Āśramaśika Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 33).

(39) During their mahāprasthāna (great journey) the Pāṇḍavas travelled by the Himālayas and Dharmaputra ascended to heaven from the top of the Himālayan peak. (Mahāprasthānā Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 1).

HIMGULA. A mineral (vermilion) obtained from mountainous regions. It has the colour (red) of the sky at sunset. (Vana Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 94).

HIPPOCRATUS. A Greek scientist and thinker. Father of the Allopathic system of medicine. He has written a book on medicine consisting of nearly seventy parts. His theory is that the heart is the centre of origin of life and the heat of the body is the manifestation of life. Out of the five elements of the Indian system of medicine he accepts four, viz. Pṛthvi (earth), Ap (Water), Agni (fire) and Vāyu (air). Till the 18th century A.D. his theories were very popular.

HIRANYA. (Hiranyakaśipu, Hiranyākṣa)
1) General. Owing to a curse Jaya and Vijaya who were gate-keepers at Vaikuntha were born as two asuras, Hiranyakāśa (elder brother) and Hiranyakāśipu (younger brother). These brothers are known also as the Hiranyas. (See Jayavijaya).

2) Birth. Three sons called Hiranyākṣa, Hiranyākṣipu and Vajrāṅga and a daughter, Śīṅhikā were born to Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Diti. To Hiranyākṣipu were born four sons called Anuhūdā, Hīlāda Prahlāda and Śainhūdā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 15).

There is yet another story relating to the birth of these asuras. Though the other wives of Kaśyapa became mothers Diti alone was not blessed with a child for a long time. One day at dusk while Kaśyapa was immersed in meditation Diti rushed into his room and began lamenting and complaining about her having not yet been made a mother, and urgently asked Kaśyapa to make her one. But, Kaśyapa pointed out that it was not the proper time for such things. It was dusk when Siva with his attendants would be out sightseeing covered with ashes from burning ghats spread all around by storms. So Kaśyapa wanted to wait for some time more. But, she was not in a mood to pay heed to his advice and Kaśyapa had to yield to her proposal. After obliging her, once again he took his bath and began meditation.

Diti became pregnant. She also got alarmed about the indiscretion committed at dusk time that day and, Kaśyapa told her: “Your mind became impure, if you did not obey me, you insulted the Devas also. There are two kids of a very low type in your womb. They will oppress the three worlds and kill innocent people. Mahāviṣṇu will never tolerate such things. He will incarnate himself to kill them. But since you feel penitent now, a grand-son of yours will become liked by all good people, and he will be a great devotee of Mahāviṣṇu. (This was Prahlāda).

At any rate, one hundred years after her getting pregnant Diti delivered twin sons. The first born was named Hiranyākṣa and the next one Hiranyākṣipu. (According to certain Purāṇas Hiranyākṣipu was the first born).

3) Hiranyākṣa. The boys grew up to become a growing menace to the whole world. Hiranyākṣa toured all the three worlds with a club. He besieged svarga. Devas ran away in fear. Hiranyākṣa, shaking his club, jumped from the sky into the sea and engaged himself in the sport of thrashing the waves with his club. Years passed by like this, and at last he went to Viśhāvari, the capital of Varuṇa and challenged him to fight. Varuṇa came out of the palace, admitted his incapacity to fight Hiranyākṣa, and suggested to him to challenge Mahāviṣṇu. Accordingly he set out in search of Mahāviṣṇu. It was during this period of time that the earth got engulfed in water. Śvāyambhuvamanu requested his father, Brahmā to raise up the earth from water. But, nowhere could be seen the earth, everywhere it was only a vast expanse of water. Brahmā then meditated upon Mahāviṣṇu, who came out through Brahmā’s nose in the form of a tiny boar. It grew up into a very big boar within no time, and jumped from the sky into the ocean, and within a few minutes it picked up from under the ocean the earth on its tusks and appeared on the surface of the water. Hiranyākṣa understood that the boar, which without the least fear picked up the earth from Pātalā was none other than Mahāviṣṇu and he challenged Viṣṇu to fight. After replacing the earth in its old position Viṣṇu fought with Hiranyākṣa and killed him.

4) Hiranyākṣipu. With the killing of his brother, Hiranyākṣipu’s hatred and enmity towards Viṣṇu increased very much. He, by doing tapas for very long years, secured boons from Brahmā and conquered the three worlds and ruled them as Triloka Cakravarti (Emperor of the three worlds). He prohibited throughout the empire not only the chanting of Viṣṇu’s name, but even thinking about him (Viṣṇu) by his subjects. “Hiranyāya namāḥ” (salutations to Hiranyāya) replaced the old custom of chanting ‘Nārāyaṇa namāḥ’ (salutations to Nārāyaṇa). Meantime, a son called Prahlāda, a great devotee of Mahāviṣṇu was born to Hiranyākṣipu. (For the story of Hiranyākṣipu’s death see Prahlāda). (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa; Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmikhaṇḍa, Chapter 20).

5) Story about the name Hiranyākṣipu. Sage Kaśyapa once conducted an Śvāmedha yajña. A golden seat was put up there for the great sages who came to participate in the yajña. Diti was pregnant during the time of the yajña, and while it was duly progressing she one day came and sat on the above-mentioned golden seat, and very shortly she delivered a child. As the child was delivered on the golden seat the child came to be called Hiranyākṣipu. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 8, 5, 7-12; Vāyu Purāṇa 67, 69).

HIRANYABAḤU. A nāga born in Vāsuki’s dynasty. He was burnt to death at the sarpa satra of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 6).

HIRANYABINDU. A sacred place near the Himālayas. During his pilgrimage Arjuna visited this place also. A bath in this tirtha will wash off one’s sins. Hiranyabindu is situated on the top of Mount Kālaśājara.

HIRANYADHANUS. A King of forest tribes. Ekalavya, the great master of archery was Hiranyadhanus’s son (See Ekalavya).

HIRANYAGARBHA. A synonym of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 96).

HIRANYAHAṬSA. A son born to princess Vadhirimati thanks to the blessing of the Śvāmedha Devas. She was married by a eunuch. Sorrow-stricken at such a marriage the princess requested the Śvāmedha Devas for children and they gave her a son, (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala I, Anuvāka 17, Śākta 116) who was called Hiranyahasta. He became a sage and married the beautiful daughter of King Madrāśa. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 35).

HIRANYAKAŚIPIU I. (See Hiranya).

HIRANYAKAŚIPIU II. A dānava. He once shook Mount Meru and Śiva granted him welfare and prosperity. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 73).

HIRANYAṆKṢA I. A brother of Hiranyakṣipu. (See Hiranya).

HIRANYAṆKṢA II. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra, who was a Brahmavādīn. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 57).

HIRANYAṆABHA I. A King born in the solar dynasty. He was the son of Viḍhṛti and the father of Puṣya. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

HIRANYAṆABHA II. A son of Śrījaya. A child named Suvarṇaṣṭhīrī was born to Śrījaya, but it died before long, and then it was Nārada who brought it... back to life again. After its rebirth the child came to be called Hiranyakānātha also. Hiranyakānātha lived for 1000 years. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 149).

HIRANYAPURAM. A city of the Dāityas. The Dāitya woman, Pulomā, got the city for her children by tapas. Pulomā is called Kākā also. (Certain Purāṇas aver that Kākā was the sister of Pulomā). The children of Pulomā are known as Kākāyeśas for whose safety and security she did tapas for 1000 years. And, when Brahmā asked her to choose any boon she desired, Pulomā said as follows: “There should arise no reason or cause for my sons to feel sorrow in their lives; Devas, snakes or Rākṣasas should not kill them and they must have a beautiful city to live in. Brahmā granted her all the boons. Hiranyakapura was built by Brahmā for the Kākāyeśas to live in. It was full of gems and it could easily travel in the sky.

When life became impossible for the Devas due to the depredations of the Kākāyeśas, Indra brought Arjuna to Devaloka. As the Kākāyeśas were granted the boon that they would not be killed by the Devas, Arjuna’s help had thus to be sought by Indra. Arjuna killed the Kākāyeśas and destroyed Hiranyakapura. (Vana Parva, Chapter 173). On one occasion Nārada gave a correct description of Hiranyakapura to Mātali, the charioteer of Indra. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 100).

HIRANYARETAS. One of the sons of Priyavrata, Hiranyakaretas was king of the Kuśa island and had seven sons called Vasu, Vasudāna, Drdharuci, Nābhigupta, Satyavrata, Vivikta and Vāmadeva. ( Bhāgavata 5th Skanda).

HIRANYAROMAN. A king of Vidarbha who exercised suzerainty over the southern regions. He was also known as Bhīṣmaka. (See Bhīṣmaka).

HIRANYASARAS. An ancient tirtha of the western regions. Candras washed off his sins by bathing here. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 57).

HIRANYASRNGAM. An extensive mountain to the north of Mount Maināka, which is to the north of Mount Kaijlāsa. This mountain is said to be a mine of gems. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 10; Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 42).

HIRANYASTUPA. A great sage, the son of Aṅgiras. (Rgveda, Manuḍala 1, Anuvāka 7, Sūkta 31).

HIRANYAVARMAN. A king of Daśārma, his daughter was married to Śiṅgaṇḍi. (See Śiṅgaṇḍi).

HITOFADEŚA. A book written in Sanskrit on the basis of the Paṅcatantra. It is a collection of forty-three stories, and twenty-five of the stories are found in the Paṅcatantra. There is also not much difference in the stories, about the origin of the two books. The author of Hitopadesa is considered to be one Nārāyaṇa Paṇḍita, a dependant of King Dhavalacandra. Of the manuscripts available of the book, the oldest one is dated 1373 A.D. It has been surmised that the book was written somewhere between the 10th and 12th centuries A.D.

There are four parts to the book called Mitralābha (gaining friends), Suhrdbheda (creating dissensions between friends) Vigrāha (separation) and Sandhi (union).

HLĀDA (HRĀDA). A synonym for Hṛāda, son of Hiranyakāśipu. (See Hṛāda).

HLĀDINĪ. A tributary of the Gaṅga. Gaṅga brought down by Bhagiratha to the earth first fell on Śiva's head and thence on Bindusaras, and therefrom flowed in seven tributaries. Three tributaries, Hālāḍiṇī, Pāvani and Nalini flowed eastwards, Sucaśus, Sītā and Sindhu westwards, and the seventh tributary followed Bhagiratha. The mortal remains of the sons of Sagara were flooded with its waters, and their souls attained heaven.

HOMA. A king belonging to the dynasty of Bharata. He was the son of Kṛṣṇadratha and father of Sutapas. ( Bhāgavata, 9th Skanda).

HOMADEHNU. The cow, which offers milk needed for yajña.

HOMAKUṆDA (M). The pit for making offerings during yajñas. Rules about making the pit are described in chapter 24 of the Agni Purāṇa as follows:—

First, demarcate a piece of ground one yard square with thread and dig it one yard deep. After leaving two āṅgulas (inches) space on all the four sides of the pit make three divisions in it. The three divisions should be 12” × 8” and 4” deep; the inner division 12” deep, the middle one 8” and the one outside of it 4” deep. All the three divisions should be four feet in width. The above three divisions are called Satvamekhalā, Rajamekhalā and Tāmasamekhalā, and this is the pit, viz. Homakunda. On the western side of it a yoni (receptacle) 10 × 15 āṅgulas should be made. Its depth should gradually decrease in the descending order 6, 4, 2 āṅgulas. In shape the yoni will be of the shape of the peepal leaf. (Yoni is that of Śakti ; the Kuṇḍa is her stomach. The conception about Śakti is that of a woman lying on her back, head towards the east.). The priest performs the rites, himself seated to the west of the yoni and his head turned to the east.

HOTRAVĀHANA. A saintly king, who was the grandfather of Aṁbā. (See under Aṁbā).

HṚĀDA I. Also called Hṛāda, a son of Hiranyakāśipu. (See under Anuhlaḍa).

HṚĀDA II. A nāga. Hṛāda was also present in the company of nāgas, which carried the soul of Balabhadramā to Pātāla. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

HRADODARA. A nāga, who was killed by Subrahmanya in the war between the Devas and the Asuras. (Sālīya Parva, Chapter 46, 75).

HRĐIKA. A Yādava. He was the father of Kṛtavarmā. (Adi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 105).

HRDYA. A great sage. He lives in the assembly of Indra. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, 13).

HRI.

1) Birth. One of the 16 daughters born to Śvāyambhuvanā by his wife called Satārapā. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skanda).

2) Other information. (1) Hṛidevī worships Brahmā in his assembly.

(2) When Arjuna started for Indraloka Draupadi meditated upon Hṛi so that no dangers might overtake him. (Vana Parva, Chapters 37, 38).

(3) Hṛi too was present at the installation ceremony of Subrahmanya. (Sālīya Parva, Chapter 45, 13).

HRĪMĀN. A Sanātanaśivadeva. (eternal Deva of the universe). (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, 31).

HRĪNIŚEVA. A saintly king born in the Asura dynasty. He was one of the ancient kings whom fate had made to relinquish their kingdoms. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 227, 31).
HÜHÜ. A Gandharva, son of Kaśyapaprajapati by Pradhā.
(1) He was present at the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 59).
(2) Hūhū was among the Gandharvas who welcomed Arjuna in Devaloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 14).
(3) Hūhū lives in Indrasabhā.
(4) Once he was turned into an alligator on account of the curse of Devala. (See under Indrayunma).

HÜÑA. A tribe. There are a number of references in the Purāṇas to the Hūnas, who were created from the froth in the mouth of Nandini, the cow which was in Vasīṣṭha’s āśrama. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 174, Verse 18).
Nakula conquered the Hūnas in the western regions. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32). The Hūna kings took part in the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira and made costly presents. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 24).

HUNDA. An asura, the son of Vipracitti. (He abducted Asokasundari, sister of Subrahmanyā. (Padma Purāṇa). (See under Asokasundari).

HUNDA(M). An urban region in ancient India. The people of this area were known as Hūṇas. In the great war they fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. They took their positions in the Kramārūṇa vyūha formed by Nakula and Sahadeva. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 51).

HUTA(M). One of the five great yajñas. (See Prabhutam).
HUTAHAYVĀHĀ. One of the two sons of Dhara, the Vasu, the other son being Draviṇa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 21).

I
I. (g). This letter means Kāmadeva. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).
I. (i). This letter means ‘Rāti’ and Lakṣmī. Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

IDĀ I. Daughter of Vāyu (wind-god). Idā had a son Utakal by Dhrūva.
IDĀ II. Daughter of Manu. In Taittiriya Brāhmaṇa, we find the following reference to this Idā:—
Once Manu came to know that Devas and Asuras had performed an Agnīyadhāna (consecration of the fire).
To ascertain whether it was deposited at the proper time, Manu sent Idā to them. Idā found that both parties had followed the wrong method, She said to Manu:—“Your yajña (Agniḥadhāna) should not be as ineffectual as that of the Devas and Asuras. Therefore I myself shall deposit the ‘Trividhāgni (the three Agnis which are to be set in the proper place) at the proper place.’” Manu agreed and began his yāga. As a result of it the Devas attained plenty and prosperity. Once when Idā was in the presence of Manu, the Devas invited her openly and the Asuras invited her covertly. Since Idā accepted the invitation of the Devas, all creatures abandoned the Asuras and joined the party of Devas. (Taittiriya Sanhitā).

IDHMĀJIHĪVA. Śvāyambhuva Manu had two famous sons—Priyavrata and Uttānapāda. Of them, Priyavrata married Sūryaparīparī and Barhismati, the two daughters of Viśvakarmā Prajāpati. Idhmajīhiva was born to him by his first wife. Idhmajīhiva had nine brothers Vīz, Agnīdīra, Yajñābahu, Mahāvīra, Rukmaśukra, Ghrṭaprśṭha, Savana, Medhātithi, Viśhotra and Kavi. Uṛjjasvatī was their youngest sister. (Mahā Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

IDHMĀVAHĀ. Son of Agastyā and his wife Lopāmudrā. The actual name of Idhmāvāhā was Trisadasyu. There is a story in the Mahābhārata about the birth of this boy. When Lopāmudrā was pregnant, Agastyā asked her:— “1000 sons of average ability; or 100 sons, each of them having the worth of 10 sons; or 10 sons, each having the worth of 100 sons; or a single son having the nobility and greatness of more than a thousand sons; which would you prefer?” Lopāmudrā chose a single son with the greatness of a thousand sons. Trisadasyu or Idhmāvāhā was the son born according to her wish. The child was in the womb for seven years before he was born. He began to recite Vedas even from the moment of his birth. As the boy grew up, he used to bring small pieces of firewoods and twigs to feed the fire for his father’s home. That was why he got the name Idhmāvāhā. (One who brings the necessary things for home).

IKŠŪLĀ. An important river. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 17).

IKŠŪMATI. A river. It flows near Kurukṣetra. The nāgas, Takṣaka and Aśvasena lived in this river. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 138).
Kuḍadhvaja, brother of the King of Mithilā used to live in the Ikṣumati river valley. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Bāla Kanda, 7th Sarga, Verse 2).

There is a reference to this river in Kathāsaritsāgara, Madanamañcukālkamābaka, 2nd taranga also.

IKŚVĀKU: A son of Vaivasvata Manu.
1) Genealogy. From Viṣṇu were descended in the following order—Brahmā—Marici—Kaśyapa—Vivasvān—Vaivasvata Manu—Ikṣvāku.
Śraddhā, Vaivasvata Manu’s wife bore him ten sons—
Ikṣvāku, Nṛga, Śarvā, Diṣṭa, Dhrṣṭa, Karuṣa, Nārasiyanta, Nābhāga, Prṣadha and Kavi. Vaivasvata Manu had six more sons by another wife, Chāyā. They were Manu, Yama, Yami, Avinikumāra, Revanta, Sudyumna. The Ikṣvāku family takes its source from Ikṣvāku. The Kings of the solar dynasty were all born in the Ikṣvāku family. This dynasty is named “Solar Dynasty” because Ikṣvāku was born to Vivasvān (Sun) the son of Kaśyapa. In Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha we see that Ikṣvāku was born from Manu’s spit. The descendants of Ikṣvāku up to Śrī Rāmā’s sons Lava and Kuśa are given below:—
Ikṣvāku had three sons—Daṇḍa, Viṅkusī, and Nimi. From Viṅkusī was born Saśāda; from Saśāda, Purāṇ-jaya; from Purāṇ-jaya, Kukutā; from Kukutā, Anenas; from Anenas, Prthulāśva; from Prthulāśva, Prasenajit; from Prasenajit, Yuvanāśva; and from Yuvanāśva was born Māndhātā. Ambarīṣa, Mucukunda and Purukutsa were the sons of Māndhātā. Besides them he had fifty daughters also. The sage Saubhārī married them. The family-tree continues again from Purukutsa, one of the sons of Māndhātā.
From Purukutsa, Trasadasyu was born; from Trasadasyu, Anaranyā; from Anaranyā, Aryaśva; from Aryaśva, Vasumanas; from Vasumanas, Sutana; from Sutana, Trairyārūṇa; from Trairyārūṇa, Satyavrata or

1. Mahābhārata Aivamedha Parva (Chapter 4) says that Mahābāhu was the son of Vaivasvata Manu, Prasandhi was the son of Mahābāhu, Kuπa was the son of Prasandhi and Ikṣvāku was the son of Kuπa.
Triśaṅku; from him Harīcandra; from Harīcandra, Rohitāśva; from Rohitāśva, Harita; from Harita, Čuñcu; from Čuñcu, Sudeva; from Sudeva, Bharuka, and from Bharuka Sagarā was born. Sagarā had two wives—Sumati and Keśini. Sumati gave birth to 60,000 children, while Keśini had a single son, Assaṁas. Asaṁasā was the son of Assaṁasā; Bhagiratha was the son of Assaṁasā; Sruṭapāda was the son of Bhagiratha; Srdhūdhvāpa was the son of Sruṭanābha; Ayyatāyus was the son of Srdhūdhvāpa; Rtvuṇa was the son of Ayyatāyus; Sarvakāma was the son of Rtvuṇa; Sudās was the son of Sarvakāma; Mitrasaha, the son of Sudās; Kalmēšapāda was the son of Mitrasaha; Āśmaka was the son of Kalmēšapāda; Mūlaka was the son of Āśmaka; Khaṭvāṅga was the son of Mūlaka; Dirghabāhu (Dilīpa) was the son of Khaṭvāṅga; Raghu was the son of Dirghabāhu; Āja was the son of Raghu; Daśaratha was the son of Āja. Daśaratha had three wives. Kausalyā, Kāikeyi and Sumitrā. Śrī Rāma was born to Kausalyā, Bharata, was the son of Kāikeyī and Sumitrā had two sons, Lakṣmaṇa and Śatrughna. Lava and Kuśa were Śrī Rāma’s sons by Śītā. (See the word Kāla-brāhmaṇa) 1

ILA. The name taken by Sudūyma when, after becoming woman, he became man again. (See under ILA 1).

ILA I. Daughter of Vaivāsvata Manu.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in this order:—Brahma—Marici—Kaśyapa—Vaivāsvata Manu—Ilā. Vaivāsvata Manu was the son of Kaśyapa by his wife Aditi, and Ilā the daughter of Vaivāsvata Manu by his wife, Śrīdāha. Iśkvāku, the ancestral father of the solar dynasty of Kings was brother of Ilā.

2) Vaivāsvata Manu and Śrīdāha had, for a long time no children. Manu got performed once by Agastya a yajña to propitiate the Mitrāvaraṇas so that a man might be born to him (Manu). Soon a daughter was born to him and she was called Ilā. Then Manu asked Vasiṣṭha why a daughter was born to him instead of a son for whom the yajña was performed by Agastya. At once, Vasiṣṭha by his will-power turned the girl Ilā into a boy, and the boy was named Sudūyma. (Bhāgavata).

3) Sudūyma again turned into woman. Once Śūnaka and some other sages went to the great forest Kumāra Vana near Kailāsa to salute Śrī Pārameśvara ignorant of the fact that just then Pārvatī and Parameśvara were enjoying themselves. The sudden appearance of Śūnaka and others was not relished by the divine couple, who were then naked. They therefore, pronounced the curse that anybody who entered the forest in future would be turned into a woman. (Bhāgavata).

Sudūyma, now a young man, went for hunting one day. Sudūyma who was ignorant of this curse entered this forest with his friends while hunting. At once all of them were transformed into women. Grief-stricken, they stayed in the forest for some days, and then started for the palace. Sudūyma bearing the name Ilā walked at the head of the party as a beautiful woman. On the way Budha met Ilā, they fell in love with each other and got married. A son, Pururavas was born to Budha by Ilā. (Bhāgavata).

4) Transformation again; Ilā expressed to Vasiṣṭha, her grief at having been turned into a woman, the sage requested Śrī Pārameśvara to restore her to her former form as a man. Śiva said that Ilā would be a man and a woman every alternate month, throughout life. During the month when she was a man he would engage himself in matters of Government, and the next month, when a woman, she would stay in the inner apartments in the palace. Brahmanda Purāṇa, Chapter 32 says that Ikṣvāku, brother of Pururavas ruled the state till the latter became a major. As soon as Pururavas attained majority Sudūyma handed over to him the reins of Government and retired to the forest for tapas, and during this period he was taught the Navākṣara mantra by sage Nārada. Sudūyma adored Devi with this Mantra. She appeared to him and blessed him with the state of salvation. (Bhāgavata).

Pururavas married Urvāśī, and ruled the country. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha; Devi Bhāgavata, First Skandha; M.B. Aḍi Parva, Chapter 75 and Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 26).

ILA II. A river. At the birth of Subrahmaṇya this river paid homage to him with fruits and roots. (M.B. Anuśaṇa Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 24). Dharmaputra along with the brahmins bathed in this river. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 156, Verse 8).

ILASPADA. An ancient holy bathing ghat. A dip in the holy waters wards off ill-fate and confers the benefits of the Vaipaceya yajña. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verses 77, 78).

ILA VARTA (ILA VARTA). A King in the line of Piyavrata, son of Śvayambhuva Manu, (See Genealogy).

ILA VARTA (ILA VARTA). A locality. (See Bhūgūṇata).

ILA VARSA. That part of the country in the centre of Jambudvipa. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 26).

ILAVU. See Vāyu, Para 6.

ILLILĀ. The wife of Viśravas and mother of Kubera. Viśravas was born as the son of Pulastya, one of the Prajāpatis by Mānini. Viśravas had two wives, Kāikeyi and IliĪlā alias Devavarṇini and Vaishvaranṭha (Kubera) was born of Iliīlā. Hence Kubera is called Aśīlīlī also; To Viśravas was born by Kāikeyi, Rāvaṇa, Viślīṣṇa, Kumbhakarṇa and Śūrpaṇakāhī.

ILLIĀ. A King of Pīruvaṁśa; father of King Duṣyanta. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 71). Rathantarī was Iliīlā’s wife. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 74). Some Purūras call Iliīlā by the name Iliīla and Rathantarī as Rathantarī also.

Matīnārā, the most righteous of Kings had four sons endowed with great prowess named Taṁsū, Mahān, Aitara and Druhyu. Taṁsū was responsible for the growth of the Pūru dynasty. He conquered the whole of earth and won fame. Iliīlā was Taṁsū’s son. He also conquered the whole world, and he had five sons. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 14-18).

ILINA. Son of king Taṁsū of the Pūru dynasty. His wife was Rathantarī. Iliīla had five sons by her. They were: Duṣyanta, Śūra, Bhīma, Pravasu and Vasu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 16-18. See also under the word Iliīlā).

1. There are certain variations in the genealogy according to some Purūras. The genealogy given above is based on Bhāgavata and Agni Purāṇa.
ILLAKA. A person who led a very ideal family life. Son of a Vaiśya in the city of Mathurā, I'llaka had a very beautiful wife. I'llaka had one day to go to another place and his wife wanted to accompany him. But, I'llaka did not allow that and went alone. Then she waited at the gates looking towards the husband moving fast away. And, when he completely disappeared from sight she, who could not bear the separation, fell down on the spot and expired. I'llaka heard about the death and without delay, he hurried back home. He placed the dead body of his wife on his lap and wept. Weeping thus he also expired. (Kathāsaritasagara, Lāvānakalāmbaka, Taranāga I).

ILVALA. An Asura, who lived in the Manimati city. Ilvala and his brother Vātāpi ate up a number of brahmins and Agastya cursed them to death. (See Agastya).

INDIA. 'South Sarakh', a newspaper published from the United Arab Republic with the assistance of the Indian Embassy gives the following account of how the land originally known as 'Bharata' came to be called India. The name 'India' was given to 'Bharata' by the Arabs. Even from very early times, Arabs used to give the name 'Hind' to their girls. In ancient Arabic love poems, this name could be seen very frequently. There were commercial and cultural contacts between Bharata and Arab lands, from very old times. The words 'Kharan Fāl' (spices) 'Pulfūl' (Pepper) etc. may be seen in Arabic poems of the pre-Islamic period. These contacts became more intimate in later years and the Arabs began to take very great interest in the products and the people of this country. They began to call 'Bharata' by the pet name 'Hind' which they used for their little children. They began to use the term 'Al Hind' when referring to Bharata in their poems, records and trade agreements. In course of time this was shortened to 'Hind' and finally became 'INDIA'.

INDIVARAKSHA. A Gandharva. He was the son of Nalaṇābha, the chief of the Vidvādhāras. There is a story about this Gandharva in Mārkandeya Purāṇa, Chapter 60 :

Indivarākṣa went to the sage Brahmanitra to learn Ayurveda. For some unknown reason, the sage did not teach him. Indivarākṣa decided to learn by overhearing what the guru taught the other pupils from a hiding place. In six months' time he learnt Ayurveda. Overjoyed at the thought that he was able to acquire as much learning in this science as the other pupils, within such a short time, and oblivious of his surroundings, he laughed loudly. The guru who understood the secret, uttered a curse that he would become a Rākṣas within seven days. The repentant Indivarākṣa begged for his pardon. Then the sage told him that he would be restored to his own form and give up the Rākṣas shape when he was shot with arrows by his own children. Once when he approached his daughter Manorāna to devour her, his son-in-law, Svāroṣīc who had learnt the science of archery from that girl, defeated him. In this way, Indivarākṣa got his own former form. After that he taught Svāroṣīc, the sciences of archery which he had learnt from his own daughter and also from Brahmanitra.

INDIVARASENA. Son of Parītāyagasena a King who ruled the city of Irāvati. Parītāyagasena had two queens—Adhikasāngamā and Kāvyālaṅkāra. As they had no children, the distressed King with his queens worshipped the goddess Durgā. Durgā gave the King two fruits. She blessed that the queens would bear children when they ate the fruits. Adhikasāngamā ate both the fruits without showing them to the other wife. Two sons were born to her. Indivarāsena was the elder son. (Kathāsaritasagara, Raināprabhā ānambaka, 8th Taranāga).

INDRA.
2) Birth. Kāśyapa was born to Marici, the eldest of the spiritual sons of Brahmā. Indra was the son of Kāśyapa and Aditi, the eldest daughter of Dakṣa. The twelve sons who were born to Kāśyapa and Aditi are called Adityas. The twelve Adityas are—Dhātā, Āryamā, Mitrā, Rudra, Varuṇa, Śūrya, Bhaga, Vivasvān, Pusa, Śavītā, Vaśis, and Viṣṇu. In addition to them, Aditi had twenty-one sons more. Indra is the eldest of the 33 sons. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verses 9-15).
3) Indra and Garuḍa. Kāśyapa had two sons, Garuḍa and Aruṇa by Vinātā and a large number of Nāgas by his other wife, Kadru. Kadru and her children kept VINATĀ and her son Garuḍa as their servants. Kadru agreed to set them free if they brought Amṛta from Devaloka.

Once Kadru and her children asked Garuḍa to carry them to the beautiful Nāgilaya in the middle of the ocean. Garuḍa carried them on his shoulders and flew very high near the sky. The excessive heat of the sun made the Nāgas unconscious. Kadru, in her distress, prayed to Indra. Indra showered rain and cooled the atmosphere. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 23, Verses 7-17). They reached the lovely island in the middle of the ocean.

Garuḍa decided to earn his freedom by bringing Amṛta from Devaloka. With determination, he flew up into heaven and secured Amṛta. The enraged Indra attacked him with his weapon, Vajra. But Garuḍa spread his feathers in such a way that he was not wounded. Indra was struck with wonder, and pleased with the beautiful feathers (Parṣaṇa) of Garuḍa, named him 'Suparna'. At last Indra was pleased and allowed Garuḍa to take Amṛta with him. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 32, Verses 18-25).

4) How Indra came to have 1000 eyes. (See Tilottamā, 2nd Para).

5) Indra and Arjuna. (1) Kuntī, Pāṇḍu's wife had received five mantras from Durvāsas for begetting sons. One of those mantras was chanted meditating on the sun even before she was married and Kaṇa was born. After marriage she used three more of the Mantras and three sons were born to her from Yama, Vayu and Indra respectively. The fifth Mantra was presented to Madri the other wife of Pāṇḍu. Thus Arjuna was the son of Kunti by Indra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 123).

(2) There is a story of a rivalry between Indra and Arjuna in the Mahābhārata. (See under 'Khāṇḍa-vadāha').
(3) During their life in the forest, once Arjuna started to Kailāśa to worship Śiva. On the way Indra appeared before him and showered his blessings on him. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 41, Verses 15, 16).

(4) During his life in the forest, Indra presented to Arjuna who visited him in Indra’s residence, a Gandharva named Citrasena as his companion. Citrasena taught him music, dance, etc. (M.B. Aranyā Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 9).

(5) At the palace of Indra, as secretly instructed by Indra, Urvāši approached Arjuna with advances of love. Arjuna who refused to yield to her temptations was turned into a cūmch by her curse. But Indra lifted the curse by saying that this curse would be an advantage to him during the incognito life of the Pāṇḍavas. It was Citrasena who was used as a tool by Indra to test Arjuna’s self control. (M.B. Aranyā Parva, Chapters 44, 45).

(6) In order to ensure Arjuna’s victory in battle, Indra, disguised as a Brahmin, obtained by begging Kāraṇa’s ear-rings. (M.B. Aranyā Parva, Chapter 310).

6) Indra and Vṛtrāṣura. A famous exploit of Indra was the killing of Vṛtrāṣura. Under the leadership of Vṛtrāṣura, the Kālākeyas and many other Rākṣasas besieged the Devas. The battle raged furiously. Indra fell down unconscious owing to the shower of arrows from Vṛtra. At once Vasīṣṭha with his divine power restored Indra to consciousness. Finding it impossible to kill Vṛtra, the nonplussed Devas under the leadership of Indra approached Mahāvīśṇu. Viṣṇu told them that Vṛtra could be killed only with the bone of the sage Dadhici. So all of them approached Dadhici. Realising the situation, Dadhici let Indra have his bone for the purpose. Indra made his weapon Vajra with that bone and receiving a fatal stroke from it, Vṛtra fell down dead. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 101, Verses 14, 15; Sānti Parva, Chapter 281, Verses 13-21).

By killing Vṛtra Indra incurred the sin of Brahmaḥatyā. To expiate for that sin the Devas and Rīs took Indra to Sarayū river and performed his holy bath there. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, 24th Sarga). (For further details about Vṛtrāṣura see under Vṛtrāṣura).

7) Indra and Cyavana. Indra did not allow the Aśvinīdevas to drink soma juice. The sad Aśvinīdevas left Indraloka and while passing through a forest, they met Sukanyā, wife of the sage Cyavana. She was extremely beautiful. The Aśvinīdevas advised her to become their wife instead of being the wife of the blind Cyavana. But Sukanyā rejected their advice. Pleased by her conjugal fidelity, they restored Cyavana’s eyesight and made him a youth with beautiful eyes. In his gratitude, Cyavana promised to get permission for them to drink soma juice. He performed a yāga. Indra, Aśvinī devas and other gods attended it. Indra insisted that the Aśvinīs should not be allowed to drink Soma juice. Cyavana disputed with him and in the dispute Indra was defeated. From that time the Aśvinīs were allowed Soma drinking. See also ‘Cyavana’. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 124, Verse 14; Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 156, Verses 16-31).

8) Indra and Trīśiras. Indra’s brother Tvaṣṭr did not like some of Indra’s activities. With the object of rebuking Indra, Tvaṣṭr begged a son named Viśvarūpa. Viśvarūpa had three faces and so he was also called Trīśiras. With one face he used to recite Vedas, with the second he drank alcohol and he used the third face for observing the world. He performed a rigorous tapas. Indra, who was alarmed at it, sent goddesses to allure him, but in vain. At last Indra himself went to the forest riding on his elephant Airāvata and killed Trīśiras with his Vajrāyudha. In his violent fury he had the three heads of Trīśiras cut by a carpenter. From that day, it was ordained that the head of the cow sacrificed at yāgas should be given to a carpenter. Tvaṣṭr who was enraged by Indra’s killing of his son Trīśiras, beat another son Vṛtrāṣura. (Devī Bhāgavata, 6th Skandha).

9) Indra and Nahuṣa. See the word Agastya.

10) Indra and Bali. When Indra defeated and drove away the Asuras, Mahābali, the Asura emperor assumed the form of an ass and hid himself in an empty house. Brahmā informed Indra of this. Indra found him out there, but set him free without killing at the behest of Brahmā. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 223).

11) Indra and Yayāti. Yayāti was the son of Nahuṣa. In his old age, he handed over the kingly duties to his younger son Pūru and went to the forest for performing penance. After performing penance, he reached Indraloka in the end. Indra did not like Yayāti’s boast that there was none who had greater power of tapas than himself. Indra pushed him down to the world. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 88).

12) Indra and Saradān. Saradān was born as the son of Sage Gautama. Saradān started a penance for acquiring divine arrows. Devendra who was alarmed, sent the Apsarā woman Jānapāti to obstruct his tapas. Deeply affected by her irresistible charm and fascinated by her temptations, he had an involuntary emission of semen, which fell on the Sarastamba and split itself into two parts. Two children a boy and a girl, were born from it. The King’s servants brought them to Hastināpura. The boy was named Kṛpa and the girl was named Kṛpī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 130).

13) Indra and King Kuru. The King named Kuru was once ploughing the field at the place known as Kurukṣetra. (This was long before Kurukṣetra became famous as the battlefield of Bhārata Yuddha). Indra who happened to come that way at the time, seeing the King tilling the land, asked him why he was doing so. The King replied that he was performing a yāga to enable the men who fell dead there, to attain Heaven. Indra returned to Heaven, smiling. Other devas came to know of this from Indra. They said that if all men came to Devaloka, the share of yajña which was to be received by the gods, would be diminished and so they advised Indra to go and give some boon to King Kuru. Indra returned to earth and gave his blessing to Kuru as follows:

The following classes of people will attain heaven if they die there (at Kurukṣetra).

(1) Those who die of starvation.
(2) Those who die fighting heroically.
(3) Those who were men in their previous life, but who have been born as animals.

From that time Kurukṣetra became an important place. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 53).

14) Indra and Takṣaka. Indra’s friend, a Nāga named Takṣaka lived in Khāṇḍa forest. When Agnī burned Khāṇḍa forest, Indra caused the rain to fall in order to save Takṣaka. See under 'Khāṇḍavadāha'. (M.B. Aranya Parva, Chapter 235).

For the story of how Indra saved Takṣaka from the Sarpastra see under 'Astika'.

15) Indra and Khāṇḍavadāha. At the time of Khāṇḍavadāha, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna fought against Devendra.

16) Indra Sabbath. Maya undertook to build a sabhā (assembly hall) for the Pāndavas at Indraprastha. When it was being discussed, the sage Nārada described to them Indra's sabhā as given below:—

Indra has a Sabhā which dazzles with divine effulgence. It is 150 yojanas in length and 100 yojanas in breadth. It has a height of five yojanas. Beautiful storeyed buildings and divine trees add to the grandeur of the sabhā. Indra is seated within the holy light in it. Śacidevi takes her seat near him. Indra is very handsome. He wears a crown, he is dressed in spotlessly pure clothes, and wears a garland round his neck. Maruts, Siddhás, Devas, Rṣis and a host of others stand around attending on him. They are all bright with the halo of fire. Parāśara, Parvata, Śāvārṇi, Gālava, Saṇjkha, Liṅkita, Gaurāśiras, Durvāsas, Akrodhana, Śyena, Dirghatamas, Pavitrāpāni, Bhālūvi, Yājñavalkya, Udālaka, Svetaketu, Pāṇḍya and other famous sages are members of Indra's assembly. In this way, Indra's Sabhā is the most magnificent. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7).

17) Indra and Kāmadhenu. Once Indra saw Surabhi, the Kāmadhenu, crying in the Indraloka. He asked her why she was crying. Surabhi answered: "My Lord, the cattle, who are my children are groaning in the world under the yoke of the farmer. I was overwhelmed with grief at the sight of their sufferings." Indra's heart melted due to Kāmadhenu's tears. He caused very heavy showers in the world when ploughing the fields became impossible. In this way as a result of Surabhi's tears Indra caused heavy rainfall which gave rest to the cattle in the world. (M.B. Aranya Parva, Chapter 9).

18) Indra and Nala. Nala proceeded to Vidarbha to attend Damayanti's Svayamvara. On the way, the four gods, Indra, Agni, Varuṇa and Yama met him. (For further details see the word 'Nala'). Nala married Damayanti with the blessings of these gods. When the devas returned, they met Kali and Dvāpara, to whom they described Nala's marriage. Kali and Dvāpara who wished to marry Damayanti, naturally felt disappointed and angry. Kali was about to pronounce a curse on Nala. But on the advice of Devendra he did not do so. Still he decided to gain secret entrance into Nala's body and to bring about the loss of his Kingdom. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 58).

19) Indra and Māndhātā. A King named Yuvanāśva was born in the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He earned great reputation by performing many Aśvamedha yāgas. But he was very much distressed because he had no children. So he entrusted his kingly duties to his ministers and proceeded to the forest. One day during his wandering he arrived at the Āśrama of the sage Bhrigu. He was tired and thirsty. Bhrigu had filled a pot with water by reciting a mantra and placing it on a low stool, he had gone to sleep. Not knowing that it was a pot of water intended to cause pregnancy, and in his intense thirst, Yuvanāśva drank water from it. He became pregnant and in due course Yuvanāśva brought forth a son. Indra, accompanied by other gods came to see the child. When the Devas asked how the child was going to drink milk, Indra put his index finger into the child's mouth and the child began to suck it. Indra said 'The child will drink me'. The Sanskrit words 'Mām dhātā' mean "one who drinks me". Thus the child was named "Māṇḍhātā" by Indra and the other gods. (M.B. Aranya Parva Chapter 126).

20) Indra and Śibi. Once Indra and Agni tested the strength of Emperor Śibi's 'dharma'. Indra took the form of an eagle and Agni that of a dove. The dove flew down into the lap of Śibi. The eagle pursued it. The dove entreated Śibi to save it from the eagle. Śibi promised to do so. The eagle argued that the dove was its prey and should be returned to it. But Śibi offered to give the eagle his own flesh, equal in weight to that of the dove. Accordingly, the dove was placed in one pan, but even when all the flesh from his body was cut and placed in the other pan, it did not weigh equal to the dove. At this stage, Indra and Agni appeared to Śibi in their own forms and blessed him to be more happy and prosperous than before. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 131).

21) Indra and Yavakrītī. Long ago there was a sage named Yavakrītī. He started a tapas with the ambition of acquiring all knowledge by himself, without the help of a Guru. Indra was alarmed at the sternness and rigour of the tapas. He induced Yavakrītī to stop tapas, but it was in vain. At last Indra disguised himself as an old Brahmin and went to the tank of the Gaṅgā where Yavakrītī was performing tapas. He began to build a dam across the river with sand. Seeing this Yavakrītī ridiculed him. The old Brahmin retorted that Yavakrītī's tapas was also equally ridiculous. But Yavakrītī was not shaken even by his taunt. He resumed his tapas with renewed strength. At last finding no other alternative, Indra appeared to Yavakrītī and granted his wish. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 135).

22) Loss of Indra's umbrella. Once Narākāsura went to heaven, fought with the gods and robbed Indra of his umbrella and the earrings of Aditi, Indra's mother. Grief-stricken Indra complained to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Accompanied by Satyabhāmā and riding on the back of Garuḍa, Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to the city of Prājyotisa, the residence of Narākāsura and razed it to the ground. He recovered the umbrella and ear-rings and returned to heaven with Satyabhāmā. Indra and Aditi were overjoyed on getting back the lost articles. On their return journey, Śrī Kṛṣṇa at the request of Satyabhāmā cut for her a twig of the Pārījāta tree. This made Indra angry and he fought against Śrī Kṛṣṇa. After defeating Indra and other gods, Śrī Kṛṣṇa accompanied by Satyabhāmā returned to Dvārakā with the Pārījāta. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

23) Indra and Narākāsura. The Asura called Naraka once performed a very severe penance on the Gandhāmādana mountain with the object of usurping Indra's place. Indra was alarmed and rushed to Mahāviṣṇu for help. Viṣṇu went to Gandhāmādana mountain and killed Narākāsura. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 142).

24) Indra and the sage Baka. After the war between Devas and Asuras, Indra, in a peaceful state of mind, was going around the world, riding on his elephant, Airāvata. When he reached an Āśrama on the eastern coast of the sea, he met the great sage Baka. A conversation about the happiness of longevity took place between Indra and sage Baka who was hundred thousand years old. After that Indra returned to Devaloka. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 193).

25) Indra and Keśi. Long ago a terrible war took place between Devas and Asuras. At that time an Asura called Keśi attempted to abduct Devasena, daughter of a Prajapati. Hearing her shrieks, Indra rushed to the spot. In the clash between Keśi and Indra, Keśi’s club was broken into two with Indra’s weapon Vajra. Suddenly Keśi lifted a mountain and threw it at Indra. Indra broke that mountain also into two. One part of it fell on Keśi himself, who fled frightened. After that, Indra asked Devasena how she happened to fall in Keśi’s hands. Devasena answered thus:— ‘I am the daughter of Prajapati. My name is Devasena. Keśi had abducted my elder sister, Daityasena. My sister and I used to come to take our bath in this Mānasā lake. Keśi had expressed his wish to abduct both of us. My father has given me his blessing that a person who is worshipped by gods and asuras will become my husband. Having heard these facts, Indra held consultations with Brahmā and arranged the marriage between Subrahmanya and Devasena. See also the word “Subrahmanya”. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 223).

26) Indra and Aṅgiras. After killing Vṛtrāsura, Indra hid himself in a lotus flower in the Mānasā lake, to expiate for the sin of Brahmahatyā (killing a Brahmin). It was at that time that Nahusa became Indra. After Nahusa had been forced to go back to the earth as a serpent by the curse of Agastya, the Devas brought back Indra. At that time, Aṅgiras praised Indra with mantras from Aṭhārāvaveda. From that day on Aṅgiras got the name of ‘Aṭhārāṅgirās’. Indra was pleased and blessed Aṅgiras that his name would become famous throughout the world. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 18).

27) Indra and the Bow called Vijaya. Karnā had a bow called Vijaya. It was made by Viśvākarmā according to Indra’s liking. (M.B. Karnā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 42).

28) Indra and the Tripuras. The Tripurāsuras performed penance and received boons from Brahmā. After that they clashed with Indra. Indra was not able to kill them. The vanquished Indra had the Tripuras killed by Viśvā. See the word “Tripura”. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 33).

29) Indra and Sūrya (the sun-god). When Karnā and Arjuna came into conflict at the Bhārata battle, a controversy raged in heaven between Indra and Sūrya. Indra argued that Arjuna would win, while Sūrya asserted that Karnā would gain victory. The Devas joined the side of Arjuna and Asuras joined Karnā’s side. In the end, Arjuna came out victorious and thus Sūrya was defeated by Indra. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 87).

30) Indra and Namuci. The Rākṣasa Namuci once evaded capture by Indra by remaining hidden in the rays of the Sun. Indra went to him and pretending friendship, promised not to kill him either with wet thing or dry things or at night or in day time. Trusting his words, Namuci came out. Then Indra cut off Namuci’s head with the froth scraped from the waves of the sea at the time of dusk. The head pursued him shouting, “You murderer of a friend, by breaking your promise!” Indra sought refuge under Brahmā. Brahmā advised him to bathe in Soṇapunya tīrtha to expiate for the sin. Accordingly Indra bathed in the river Sarasvati and washed off his sin.

31) Rīver Sarasvati. There is a story about how Sarasvati river became Soṇapunya tīrtha. There were frequent quarrels between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra. Once Viśvāmitra got angry when he came to know that Vasiṣṭha was performing a penance on the banks of the river Sarasvati. He summoned Sarasvati and ordered her to produce Vasiṣṭha before him immediately. Sarasvati was in a dilemma. If she brought Vasiṣṭha to Viśvāmitra, Vasiṣṭha would curse her; if on the other hand, she did not bring him Viśvāmitra would curse her. At last she decided to produce Vasiṣṭha before Viśvāmitra. By eroding the earth on her bank little by little near the place where Vasiṣṭha was performing his penance, Sarasvati managed to bring him down into her own current. Then she carried him floating down to the place where Viśvāmitra was waiting. When Vasiṣṭha reached his presence, Viśvāmitra was pleased. But without allowing Viśvāmitra to capture Vasiṣṭha she took him away in her current, eastwards. Enraged at this, Viśvāmitra pronounced a curse that blood should flow through the river Sarasvati. Thus the water in the river became blood-red. The great sages who came there afterwards sympathised with Sarasvati in her ill-luck and as a result of their prayers Śiva made her Soṇapunyatīrtha. It was in this river that Indra took his bath and washed off his sin. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 43).

32) Indra became Satakratu. Indra performed one hundred sacrifices at the place called Indratīrtha. Thus he became Satakratu. It was there that he gave much wealth to Brhaspati. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 2).

33) Indra became a bird. Once Indra took the form of a bird and went to the forest and preached moral and spiritual duties to the sages who had gathered there. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 11).

34) Indra and Dantiḍeva. Once Dantiḍeva received a boon from Indra that he should have plenty of food and enough travellers to eat it. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 29, Verses 120, 121).

35) Indra and Brhaṭaspati. Once Brhaṭaspati told Indra that everything in the world could be achieved with soothing speech. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 2). Brhaṭaspati’s wife Tārā once fell in love with Candra (the Moon god). She deserted Brhaṭaspati and went to live in Candra’s residence. Brhaṭaspati complained about it to Indra. Indra promised to bring her back and to restore her to Bṛhaspati by whatever means possible. Accordingly he sent a messenger to Candra. Compromise talks with Candra ended in failure. So preparations were started for a dreadful war between Indra and Candra. Śukra, the preceptor of Asuras also joined the side of Indra. Brahmā who came to know of all this, came riding on his swan and reconciliated Indra and Candra. As directed by Brahmā, Candra agreed to restore Tārā to her lawful husband, Bṛhaspati, (Devi Bhāgavata, First Skanda).

36) Indra and Prahlāda. The great King Prahlāda once conquered Heaven. Indra, who lost his kingdom and glory, accepted Bṛhaspati’s advice and went to meet Śukraśārya. Śukra told Indra that Prahlāda was the noblest person and that he had earned that nobility by his good qualities. Indra decided to acquire those good qualities from Prahlāda.

Indra disguised himself as a Brahmin boy and approached Prahlāda with a request for moral and spiritual advice. Prahlāda accepted him as his pupil and gave him moral and spiritual advice. Pleased with the pupil’s devotion, Prahlāda agreed to give him whatever boon he wanted. The pupil said that he wanted only the good qualities of the Guru. Prahlāda agreed to it. Then a shadow-like figure appeared to emerge from Prahlāda’s body. Prahlāda who was puzzled asked the figure:—“Who are you” “The figure answered:—“I am your virtuous character. Now I am leaving you and entering this boy’s body.” Saying thus it left Prahlāda’s body and entered Indra’s body. Following it, all the good qualities of Prahlāda, like charity, truth, glory etc. entered Indra’s body one by one. It was only in the end that Prahlāda came to know that the cunning pupil was Indra. Thus from that day, Prahlāda began to decline in his good qualities and Indra began to prosper. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 124).

37) Indra and Gautama. There is a story in the Mahābhārata, of how Indra restored life to a dead Brahmin. Gautama was a Brahmin who had left his own home and settled down to live in the village of Dasyus (an aboriginal tribe). He married from a low caste and followed the customs of Dasyus. At that time another Brahmin happened to come there. He ridiculed Gautama who had lost his caste. Next morning Gautama left his residence and went to another place. Tired after his long journey, he fell asleep under a banyan tree. A King of birds named Nādijarhgha lived on that tree. Nādijarhgha who was the son of Kaśyapa, became very friendly with Gautama. He brought fish from the river Gāṅgā to feed Gautama and fanned him with his wings. Gautama told the bird that he was a poor Brahmin and that he was anxious to get some wealth. There was a wealthy Rākṣasa King named Virūpākṣa in that country, who was a close friend of Nādijarhgha. Nādijarhgha sent Gautama to Virūpākṣa with a request to give Gautama some wealth. Virūpākṣa gave plenty of gold to Gautama. He returned to the foot of the banyan tree carrying the gold on his head. Gautama who was quite tired after his long walk, was hospitably received by Nādijarhgha. That kingly bird lay asleep close by Gautama. An evil desire to eat the flesh of Nādijarhgha dawned upon the mind of Gautama. He killed that King of birds in his sleep. Virūpākṣa who came to know of this, killed Gautama and gave his flesh as food for Dasyus. Virūpākṣa, with tears in his eyes, made a funeral pyre and cremated Nādijarhgha’s body. At that time, as directed by Brahmā, Surabhi caused milk to flow from heaven and revived Nādijarhgha. Virūpākṣa told the whole story to Indra who came there at that time. Indra said that Nādijarhgha died as the result of Brahmā’s curse. He had offended Brahmā on a former occasion by refusing to attend Brahmā’s assembly, although he was invited. Nādijarhgha who was restored to life, was noble enough to request Indra to bring back Gautama also to life. Accordingly Indra revived Gautama. Nādijarhgha returned the gold to Gautama and sent him away with his good wishes. Indra returned to heaven. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 173).

38) Indra and Ahalyā. Indra, once fell in love with Ahalyā, the wife of Gautama. Sage Gautama who came to know of it, cursed Indra. For further details, see under Ahalyā.

39) Indra turned into a Fox. Once a haughty Vaśya knocked down a young sage named Kaśyapa, with his chariot. The disgraced sage decided to commit suicide. Knowing this Indra went to the sage in the form of a fox and spoke to him, dwelling upon the evil aspects of suicide. At last the young sage gave up the idea of committing suicide and returned to his hermitage. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 130).

40) Indra and Subrahmanya. Long ago the Asuras led by Tārakāśura, persecuted the gods in many ways. Tārakāśura had received a boon from Brahmā that only the son born to Sīva could slay him. So, to distract Paramēśvara from his penance, in order to make it possible for him to beget a son, Indra sent Kāmadeva (god of love) to him. But Kāmadeva was burnt up in the fire from the third eye of Sīva. After that Pārvati won Sīva as her husband as a result of her austere penance. She prayed to Sīva that Kāmadeva should be brought back to life and that a son should be born to her. Sīva replied to her:—“Kāma was born from Brahmā’s mind. As soon as he was born, he asked Brahmā “Kāma Īśara?” which means—whom shall I tempt and conquer?” So Brahmā called him “Kandarpa”. Brahmā had advised him even at that time that he should never tempt me. Disregarding that advice he came to attack me and I burned him up. Now it is not possible for him to be born in a physical form I shall beget of you a son with my spiritual power. I do not need the urge of Kāmadeva for this, as in the case of ordinary mortals”.

As they were discussing this problem, Indra and Brahmā arrived there. At their request Sīva agreed to beget a son by Pārvati. Since it is not desirable that all living beings should perish, Sīva allowed Kāmadeva to be born in the minds of all creatures. Brahmā and Indra returned quite happy. One day, Śīva and Pārvati began their amorous dalliance. They did not stop it even after a hundred years. The whole world began to shake to its very foundations. Fearing that the world might perish, the devas, as ordered by Brahmā prayed to Agni, to interrupt the amorous play of Śīva and Pārvati. Agni, who understood that it was not possible to achieve their object, fled and concealed himself under water. The Devas went out in search of Agni. By that time, the creatures in the water who could not bear the heat of Agni, told them the secret. Then Agni deprived them of the power of speech by a curse. After that he went and hid himself on the Mandara mountain. Elephants and parrots disclosed the secrets of Agni, who was hiding within the hollow of the trunk of a tree. Agni deprived them of their tongues by a curse. At last the gods discovered Agni. They sent him at once to Śiva to stop him in his amorous dalliance. Agni succeeded in his mission by his intense heat. Śiva transferred his semen to Agni who became pregnant. Being unable to bear its weight Agni deposited it in the river Gaṅgā, who at the behest of Śiva himself, left it in the woods on the Mahāmeru mountain. Śiva's attendant bhūtas (spirits) offered Pūjā to it there. After a thousand years a boy with six faces (Subrahmanya) was born out of it. He was suckled by the Kṛttikās employed for that purpose by Pārvatī and the boy grew up with astonishing rapidity within a few days. Having been suckled by the Kṛttikās, the boy got the name "Kṛttikkeya".

In those days, Devendra who was defeated by Tārakāsura, decided to give up war and was living in Mahāmeru. The Devas and the sages used to go to Subrahmanya for protection. When Devendra knew it, he became angry and went to war with Subrahmanya. Subrahmanya was wounded on the face with Indra's weapon. From the wound two sons named Śākha and Viśākha were born to Subrahmanya. With their help Subrahmanya encountered Indra again. At this stage Śiva appeared there and informed Indra that Subrahmanya had been born with a mission to kill Tārakāsura and to restore Indra's kingdom to him. It was then that Indra recognized Subrahmanya. He begged pardon of Subrahmanya and expressed his desire to install him as his military commander. When he tried to perform the ceremony of installation by sprinkling the holy water on Subrahmanya's head, the water refused to come out of the pot. Śiva told Indra that it was because he had tried to perform the installation before propitiating Gaṇapati. Indra then offered worship to Vighneśvara (Gaṇapati) and the ceremony went off without any hitch. Subrahmanya who thus became Indra's commander, killed Tārakāsura shortly afterwards. (Kāthāśarīsāgara, Lāvāṇakalambaka, 6th Tārāṅga).

41) Indra and Mahābālī. The vanquished Mahābālī who had left his home and country was in gloom and despair when once Indra paid him a visit. At that time Mahālaṅkām emerged from Mahābālī's body and entered Indra's body. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 224).

42) Indra and Godāna (gift of cow). Once Indra asked Brahmā about the efficacy of godāna or giving a cow as gift. Brahmā told him that there is a world free from the infirmities of old age and diseases and it is called "Goloka". He added that those who perform Godāna would get a place in Goloka.

43) Indra and a bird. A hunter in Kāśī once went to shoot birds with poisoned arrows. One of his arrows hit a big tree accidentally and the powerful poison dried up the whole tree. In the hollow of the trunk of that tree there lived a bird with mystic powers. It did not like to leave that tree which had been its refuge ever since its birth. One day Devendra, in the guise of a Brahmin came to the bird, who recognized him by its mystic power. In the conversation between them Devendra advised the bird to leave the tree and find some other suitable place for its residence. The bird did not accept his advice. Indra was pleased at the bird's loyalty and gratitude towards that tree which had been its shelter all along. So he took the bird along with him to Devaloka. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 5).

44) How Indra turned Bhaṅgāśva into a woman. There was a King named Bhaṅgāśva. Once he performed a sacrifice called "Indrāvīṣṭa" which was believed to have the power of blessing him with children. Indra being not invited was displeased with him and was waiting for an opportunity to wreak vengeance on him. One hundred sons were born to Bhaṅgāśva. Once he went to the forest after entrusting the affairs of the kingdom to his sons. Indra cunningly misguided him and made him lose his way in the forest. Wandering alone with his horse in the forest, he reached the bank of a river. Weary and thirsty, he stepped down into the river. To his amazement, he was instantly transformed into a woman! The bewildered "woman" somehow reached Bhaṅgāśva's palace. All the members of his family were deeply grieved over his change of sex. To avoid embarrassment to himself and others, Bhaṅgāśva returned as a woman to the forest and there lived as the wife of a sage and became the mother of a hundred sons. After some years "she" went back to the palace with the sons and leaving them there returned again to the forest.

Indra went to the palace at this time and made the two sets of hundred sons quarrel with one another until all of them perished in fighting. Hearing about this the mother who was in the forest, wept bitterly. Indra visited her (Bhaṅgāśva) there and she told him the whole story of her misfortunes and begged his pardon for performing Indrāvīṣṭa sacrifice without inviting Indra. Pleased with her repentance Indra promised to resuscitate one set of her hundred sons. She wanted all the hundred sons who were born when she was a woman, to be restored to life. Indra was ready to restore her manhood too, but she preferred to continue as a woman. Indra restored to life all the 200 sons of Bhaṅgāśva and leaving Bhaṅgāśva as a woman, returned to Devaloka. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 12).

45) Indra and Mataṅga. A story is found in the Mahā-Bhārata under the title of "Indra-Mataṅga-Saṁvāda" which illustrates that a Kṣatriya, Vaiśya or Śūdra can never become a Brāhmaṇa by any means. It was told by Bhīṣma to Arjuna as follows:—

"Long ago a Brāhmaṇa's wife gave birth to a boy. The boy was given the name Mataṅga. His father sent him in a chariot drawn by a donkey, in connection with a yāga which he wanted to perform. Mataṅga whipped the donkey mercilessly. Seeing this, the donkey's mother said to Mataṅga—"You are not a Brāhmaṇa. Brāhmaṇas cannot be so cruel. You are a Candala (a man of the lowest caste) born to your mother by a barber."

Mataṅga sadly returned to his father and after telling him what he had heard from the mother-donkey set out to perform an austere penance with the object of becoming a Brāhmaṇa. Devendra appeared to him and asked him what he wanted. Mataṅga asked for a boon whereby he could become a Brāhmaṇa; Indra vanished after saying that it was impossible. After that Mataniga performed penance for hundred years, standing on one foot. Indra appeared again and repeated that it was impossible for Mataniga to become a Brāhmaṇa. Then Mataniga continued his penance for a thousand years, standing on his toe. Indra appeared again and transformed Mataniga into a Deva named “Chandodeva”. Indra told him that though he could become a Deva, he could never achieve Brahminhood. In his extreme grief Mataniga renounced his life and entered Heaven. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapters 27, 28 and 29).

46) Indra and Śainibāra. There is a story in the Mahā Bhārata in which an Asura named Śainibāra explained the greatness of Brahminhood to Indra. Once Indra approached the Asura, Śainibāra and asked him what was the source of his glory and prosperity. Śainibāra replied that it was all due to his whole-hearted worship of Brāhmaṇas. From that time Indra began to offer worship to Brāhmaṇas and thus he won the place of Indra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 36).

47) Indra loved Ruci. There is a story in the Mahābhārata of how a sage named Vipula who was born in the family of Bṛhadgta once saved Ruci, his Guru’s wife from Indra. Long ago, a great sage named Devaśārmā lived in a forest. His wife Ruci being enchantingly beautiful, many suitors were attracted to her. Chief among them was Indra. Devaśārmā was aware of this. Once he had to leave his āśrama in connection with a yāga. So he ordered his disciple Vipula to guard his wife Ruci during his absence. He had given a hint to Vipula that Indra who was an expert in disguises, might appear in the āśrama in any form. Vipula, by means of his mystic power entered into his guru’s wife and guarded her.

After some time, Indra reached the āśrama in the guise of a handsome youth. He disclosed his real identity to Ruci and told her that he had come there to spend a night with her. Ruci fell in love with him. But since she was under the mystic control of Vipula, Indra was unable to fulfill his desire. At last Vipula sent him away in disgrace. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, 44).

48) Indra’s theft of Lotus. Indra once stole Agastya’s lotuses. (See under Agastya).

49) Indra’s theft of an Elephant. Indra once stole an elephant belonging to the great sage Gautama. The sage complained to Dhūraśṛṣṭra, who advised him to offer prayers to Indra. Accordingly Gautama pleased Indra by his prayers. Indra appeared and after returning the elephant took both the elephant and Gautama along with him to Devaloka. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 192).

50) Indra and Marutta. Long ago there was a famous king named Marutta. Indra was closely associated with him in many of his activities. (For more details see Marutta).

51) Indra and Dharmaputra. Another anecdote about Indra which deals with the last part of Dharmaputra’s life is given in the Mahābhārata.

The Pāṇḍavas, towards the end of their lives entered the forest and were travelling to the north. Dharmaputra who was walking in front, was followed by a dog. On the way the four brothers and Pāṇcālti fell down dead. Dharmaputra continued his journey accompanied by the dog without turning back or looking behind. At the end of the journey, Indra was waiting for him with his chariot. He told Dharmaputra that his brothers and wife had already taken their places in Heaven and that he should leave behind the dog and get into the chariot to go to Devaloka. Dharmaputra pleaded that it was not right for him to enter Devaloka after deserting the dog which had followed him so far. Even though Indra pressed him very much to enter the chariot without the dog, Dharmaputra did not yield. At last the dog assumed the form of Yama who appeared and explained to them that he had taken the form of a dog and followed his son Dharmaputra to test his noble nature. They were all happy and all the three of them proceeded in the chariot to Devaloka. (M. B. Mahāprasthānika Parva, Chapter 3).

52) Indra and Bāli. In Uttara Rāmāyaṇa there is a story as given below, about the birth of Bāli, a son of Indra:

Aruṇa, the charioteer of Sūrya (the sun-god) went one night to Indraloka to see the goddesses dancing. Men were not allowed to enter the dancing hall. So, Aruṇa managed to enter the hall by disguising himself as a beautiful lady. The moment Indra saw her he fell in love with her. The name she assumed at that time was Aruṇi. Indra secretly took her outside and they had a sexual union. Bāli was the son born from their union.

53) Indra’s theft of a Horse. A King named Sagara once performed a sacrifice. Devendra stole the sacrificial horse. Sagara sent all his 60,000 sons in search of the horse. They dug up the earth and went to the Nether worlds where they saw the horse tied in front of the sage Kapila. The enraged sons of Sagara tried to capture and bind the sage. But Kapila reduced all the 60,000 princes to ashes by his curse. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākāṇḍa, Chapter 39).

54) Indra cut an embryo to pieces. Diti and Aditi were the daughters of Dakṣa. Kaśyapa married them. Indra was born as the son of Aditi. At this birth of a son to Aditi, Diti became jealous of her sister. One day she told her husband Kaśyapa that she too wanted to have a virtuous, heroic and brave son who would be equal to Indra in every respect. Kaśyapa promised to grant her wish.

In due course, Diti became pregnant. Now it was Aditi’s turn to become jealous of Diti. She could not bear the thought of Diti having a son equal to her own son Indra, in glory and splendour. So she called Indra and secretly instructed him to destroy Diti’s child in the womb, by whatever means.

In obedience to his mother, Indra approached Diti pretending friendship and spent a lot of time in her company. He soon won her confidence and love by his affectionate attentions. On one occasion, when she was in sound sleep, Indra, by his mystic power, entered into Diti’s womb with his weapon Vajra and cut the child in the womb into seven pieces. The child began to cry loudly, but Indra said “Mā ruda” which means “do not cry” and cut each of the pieces again into seven parts. Thus the embryo (child) was finally cut into fourteen pieces which later became the forty-nine “Mārtas” or “Maruts”. When she woke up, Diti realized Indra’s treachery and in her fury she cursed Indra and Aditi. She cursed that Indra would lose his kingdom of Devaloka and that Aditi would be imprisoned and her sons would be killed. As a result of this curse Devendra lost his kingdom on one occasion. Aditi, in her next birth, was born as Devaki, wife of Vasudeva and was imprisoned by Kansa who killed her children. (Devi Bhāgavata, Fourth Skandha).

55) Indra and Anībariṣa.

(1) King Anībariṣa had a minister named Sudeva. Sudeva fell fighting in the battle-field. After some years, Amībariṣa also died. When Amībariṣa arrived in Heaven, he was surprised to find that Sudeva had already secured a place there long ago. Amībariṣa had performed many more acts of holiness than Sudeva. Yet Sudeva attained Heaven earlier than Amībariṣa. Amībariṣa asked Indra why it was so. Indra answered that just as Amībariṣa had performed many sacrifices, Sudeva had performed many war-sacrifices. He added that war-sacrifices were as efficacious for attaining Heaven as other kinds of sacrifices (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 90).

(2) Amībariṣa, King of Ayodhyā was performing a sacrifice. At that time, Indra had stolen the sacrificial animal. To continue the sacrifice without interruption, the King decided to substitute Suna's sperma, the son of Retka, for the cow. But Suna's sperma prayed to Indra who came and rescued him from the jaws of death. (This story is given in other Purāṇas with slight variations. Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bīlā Kāṇḍa, 61st Sarga).

56) Indra and Triśaṅku. There is a story that Indra once pushed down from Heaven, Triśaṅku, a King of the Sūrya varṇa (Solar dynasty). See under TRISANKU.

57) Indra and Viśvāmitra. Once Viśvāmitra observed a vow of silence for a period of one thousand years. At the end of that period, when he was about to take his food, Indra appeared in the form of a Brahmin and asked for that food. Viśvāmitra gave that food to the Brahmin and resumed his austere penance. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālā Kāṇḍa, 65th Sarga).

58) Indra, Śrī Rāma and Sarabhāṅga.

(1) At the time when Śrī Rāma and Lākṣmanā were leading their life in the forest, one day Indra paid a visit to the Ārama of the sage Sarabhāṅga. Devendra wished to take the sage with him to Devaloka. As they were talking, they saw Śrī Rāma coming to the Ārama. Indra advised Sarabhāṅga to speak to Śrī Rāma and left the place. As suggested by Indra, the sage had a conversation with Śrī Rāma. After it Sarabhāṅga offered his body to the fire and went to Devaloka. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kāṇḍa, 5th Sarga).

(2) When the battle between Śrī Rāma and Rāvaṇa was in progress, Indra presented to Śrī Rāma, an excellent chariot along with the horses. The chariot and horses were handed over to Śrī Rāma on the battlefield by Mātali, Indra's charioter. Śrī Rāma fought against Rāvaṇa from that chariot and slew him. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Sarga 103).

(3) After the war with Rāvaṇa, Indra appeared before Śrī Rāma and asked him what boon he wanted. Śrī Rāma replied that all those monkeys who died in the war should come back to life and the forests in which they lived should abound in fruits and flowers in all the seasons of the year. Indra restored all those monkeys to life and made all the forests in which they lived, green and rich with luxuriant vegetation. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Sarga 129).

59) Indra gives his sword for safe-custody. During their life in the forest Śrī Rāma and Lākṣmanā, accompanied by Sītā entered Daṇḍakāranya, Śrī Rāma’s chief object in going there was to give protection to the sages and their hermitages in the forest. But seeing that he had made the killing of Rākṣasas his main purpose, Sītā told him that this change in the objective would spoil other important matters. To illustrate this she told him the following story:

‘Once upon a time, a great sage was observing holy rites with great austerity. Indra was alarmed at it. He went to the sage’s hermitage in the form of a warrior armed with a sword. Indra handed over his sword to the sage for safe custody. The sage accepted it and from that time all his attention was concentrated on the sword. All his time was spent in guarding the sword and he began to neglect his devotional duties as a sage. As a result of it his mystic power declined and ultimately he fell into Hell. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kāṇḍa, 9th Sarga).

60) Indra and Kabandha. See under Kabandha.

61) The Post or Office of Indra. Indra was anointed as King of Devas on Meghavān mountain. In the 42nd Sarga of Kīśkindhā kāṇḍa of Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa we find that Sugrīva had ordered the monkeys to search for Sītā on that mountain also.

62) Indra and Maya. Maya, the carpenter of the Asuras, performed penance to Brahmā and acquired complete mastery in the science of carpentry and architecture. After that he constructed a forest mansion of golden colour and took up his residence in it. Once Maya set his eyes on a goddess named Hēmā. When Indra knew this he became angry and killed Maya with his weapon—Vajra. From that time Hēmā got Maya’s golden mansion. This was told by Hēmā's maid, Svayamprabhā to Hanūmān. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kīśkindhā Kāṇḍa, 51st Sarga).

63) Indra cut off the wings of Mountains. In Kṛṣṇayugā all the Mountains in the world had wings. They used to fly about here and there like Garaṇḍa with the speed of wind. The sages and the Devas feared that they might fall on their heads. The Devas held a conference and elected Indra to find a remedy for this. Indra cut off the wings of the mountains with his Vajra. The Mainākā mountain was a friend of wind. When Indra was about to cut off the wings of that mountain, Wind suddenly removed it and deposited it in the ocean. It is out of his gratitude for this that the Mainākā mountain rose up from the ocean and provided a resting place for Hanūmān, the son of Wind god, when he jumped to Lanka. This story was told by Mainākā mountain to Hanūmān. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa, 1st Sarga).

64) Indra cut off his preceptor’s head. Once Devendra accepted a sage named Viśvarūpa as his preceptor for a sacrifice. Viśvarūpa’s mother was a Dānava partisan. So this priest, as directed by his mother, performed the sacrifice with the prayer—“May the gods and the Asuras prosper.” As a result of the prayer, both the gods who performed the sacrifice and the Asuras who did not perform it, prospered. At this Devendra became furious and he cut off the head of the Guru. (Devi Bhāgavata, 3rd Skandha).

65) Indra and Mahīṣāsura. See under Mahīṣāsura.

66) Indra became a bull. Long ago there was a King called Kakutṣha in the Ikṣvāku dynasty. When he was ruling over the kingdom of Ayodhyā, a war broke out between Devas and Asuras. In that war, the Devas were not able to defeat the Asuras. Indra in distress approached Viṣṇu for refuge. Viṣṇu advised him to seek the help of Kakustha, King of Ayodhyā. So Indra with the other gods went to Ayodhyā. When Kakustha heard about their appeal for help, he gladly offered his help but only on condition that Indra became his vehicle. Seeing no other way, Indra assumed the form of a bull and Kakustha, riding on the back of the bull fought against the Asuras and defeated them. It is from that day that the King came to be called "Kakustha", "Indra-vāhana" and "Purāṇjaya". (His original name is unknown). "Kakut" means the "hump of a bull". Because he was seated on the "Kakut" he got the name "Kakustha". Because he made Indra "vāhana" (vehicle) he got the name of "Indravāhana".

As he defeated the Asuras and conquered their city (pura) he was called "Purāṇjaya". Kakustha was the son of Śāśāḍa and the father of Pṛthu. Śrī Rāma is called "Kakustha" because he was born in the family of Kakustha. (Devi Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

67) Indra's Task. Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha says that Indra is one of the "Aṣṭadikpālakas (the eight protectors of the quarters) and the name of his city is "Amarāvati".

68) Indra's term of Life. The Devī Bhāgavata 5th Skandha says that two life-spans of Brahmā make Viṣṇu's life-span. Śiva has double the life-span of Viṣṇu, that during the life of Brahmā, fourteen Indras will drop down from Heaven and perish, and one day of Brahmā is made up of one thousand "Catuyugas."

There are fourteen Manvantaras during the life of the present Brahmā (See under Manvantara). This means that fourteen Manus will be born and will die one after another during this period. Each Manvantara will have its own Indra and the Devas. The first Manu was Svāyambhuva. After him five more Manus, Śvārociṣa, Uttama, Tāmasa, Raivata and Čākṣusa, have passed away. The present Manu is Vaivasvata the son of Śūrya. The current Vaivasvata Manvantara is the seventh. At the end of seven more Manvantaras, the present Brahmā will perish and a new Brahmā will be born. For the names of the indras of different Manvantaras, see under Manvantara. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 2, Chapter 1).

69) Indra became a Calf. (See under Pṛthu).

70) The name Purandara. Sardar K. M. Panikkar in his preface to Rgveda Sanhita says that Indra got the name Purandara because he destroyed the cities (Puras) of the Dasyus. But in Chapter 71, of Vāmana Purāṇa, we are told that he got this name because he killed "Pura", the son of Mahābāli.

71) Indra in the land of K Kıkaṇa. Once an Asura named Śūrāpadma obtained from Brahmā, a boon to enable him to conquer the whole world. He persecuted the inhabitants of all the three worlds. He sent his followers to bring Indrāṇī (Indra's wife) to him as a captive. Indra, who came to know of this, secretly went away with Indrāṇī to the K Kıkaṇa land and lived in a temple there. After some days, entrusting Indrāṇī to the protection of Śāstā, he went to K Kılaśa. Just at this time, Śūrāpadma's sister Ajāmuḵī came there and tempted Indrāṇī. Sāti cut off the hands of Ajāmuḵī and took Indrāṇī to K Kılaśa. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura K Kıṇḍa).

72) Indra and Mucukunda. Mucukunda, a King of the Iksvāku dynasty, once went to Devaloka at the invitation of Indra. In the war between the Devas and Asuras, Mucukunda helped Indra and the Asuras were defeated. Indra was pleased and asked Mucukunda what boon he wanted. Mucukunda asked for a boon which would give him long and sound sleep. Indra granted it and in addition declared that anyone who disturbed Mucukunda's sleep would be reduced to ashes. After that Mucukunda went to sleep in a cave in the middle of a dense forest. A King of the tribe Yavana performed penance to Brahmā and obtained his boon which would enable him to defeat the Yādavas (Śrī Kṛṣṇa's clan) and he began to fight with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Because of Brahmā's boon, Śrī Kṛṣṇa was not able to kill him. He drove Yavana into the cave in which Mucukunda was sleeping. Mucukunda suddenly woke up from his sleep and looked at him with great anger. Yavana was at once reduced to ashes. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

73) Indra's favourite Drink. The juice of the Soma Plant is the favourite drink of Indra. (Rgveda, 1st Manḍala, 1st Anuvāka, 1st Sūkta).

74) Indra became a Goat. Sage Āṅgiras began worshipping the Devas, hoping to have a son who will be equal in glory to Indra. Indra who did not like another person to be his equal, took birth himself as the son of Āṅgiras. Śavya is the name of that son. Once Śavya assumed the form of a goat and ate up the soma plant of a sage called Medhāūthi. The sage then called him Meṣa (goat). Indra is still known by the name, Meṣa. (Rgveda, 1st Manḍala, 1st Anuvāka, 51st Sūkta).

75) Indra turns woman. Once Indra took birth as the daughter of a king named Vṛṣaṇāśva and assumed the name Menā. (Rgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 1st Anuvāka, 52nd Sūkta).

76) Indra and Rjiśvan. Once Indra helped a King named Rjiśva to defeat the Asuras, Karāṭjya, Pānṛaya and Vāṅgrā. (Rgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 1st Anuvāka, 53rd Sūkta).

77) Indra and Śūrya. A King named Svaśva offered prayers to Śūrya to bless him with children. Śūrya himself took birth as his son. Once a great sage called Eṭaṅga got involved in a fight with this son (Śūrya). When the sage was about to collapse, Indra came to his rescue. (Rgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 11th Anuvāka, 62nd Sūkta).

78) Indra and Sāramā. Once an asura called Pani stole some cows and hid them in some unknown place. Indra asked Sāramā, the bitch of the Devas to find out and inform him where the cows were kept concealed. Sāra- mā replied that she was prepared to do so, if Indra would give milk to her child and look after it in her absence. Indra undertook that task and the bitch went out and found out the place where the cows were hidden and reported it to Indra, (Rgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 11th Anuvāka, 62nd Sūkta).

79) Indra and Dadhícā. Dadhica (Dadhícī) was the son of Aṭhaṛva. He used to scare away the Asuras by his terrible look. Once when he had gone to Heaven, the earth became infested with Asuras. Indra set out to fight them. He tried to find out whether Dadhica had left behind anything to be used as a weapon. “Dadhica had with him a horse-head”, he was told. Indra went in search of it and at last found it in a lake at a place called Saranya. It is with its bone that he killed the Asuras. (Rgveda, 1st Manḍala, 13th Anuvāka, 84th Sūkta).

80) Indra and Dadhyaṇ. Indra taught Madhuvidyā (The science of intoxicating drinks) to Dadhyaṇ. He was warned by Indra that if he communicated that lore to anyone else, his head would be cut off. Once the Aśvinīs wanted to learn it. Since Indra had denied Soma drinking to Aśvinīs, they were not on good terms with Indra. So they approached Dadhyaṇ to acquire that knowledge. But he refused to teach them due to his fear that Indra would cut off his head. So the Aśvinīs cut off Dadhyaṇ’s head and fixed a horse’s head in its place. With that horse-head Dadhyaṇ taught the Aśvinīs Madhu Vidyā. After they had learnt the knowledge, they replaced his own head after removing the horse-head. (Rgveda, 1st Manḍala, 17th Anuvāka, 116th Sūkta).

81) It is said that once, in a light mood, Indra made a mare give birth to a cow. (Rgveda, 1st Manḍala, 18th Anuvāka, 121st Sūkta).

82) Indra and Satāniṇka. Satāniṇka was a King of the Lunar dynasty who ruled over the city of Kausāmbi. Indra who was highly impressed by his heroic exploits once invited him to Devaloka to suppress the Asuras. In the war with Asuras, Satāniṇka was killed. After that Satāniṇka’s son, Sahasrāṇika went to Devaloka and killed the Asuras. Indra who was pleased declared that Sahasrāṇika would marry the beautiful Mrgāvatī and they were married. See under Mrgāvatī. (Kathārīṣṭāgāra, Kathāmukha lanibaka, 1st Tārāṅga).

83) Indra and Vāsavadattā. Vāsavadattā was the wife of Udayana who was born in the world by Indra’s blessing. See under “Vāsavadattā”. (Kathārīṣṭāgāra, Kathāmukha lanibaka, 1st Tārāṅga).

84) Indra and Meghanāḍa. Rāvaṇa conquered the world with the help of Brahma’s blessing. In his pride he came into conflict with Indra. After a fierce battle, Rāvaṇa’s son, Meghanāḍa defeated Indra. He took Indra to Lāṅka as a prisoner. Rāvaṇa chained Indra’s hands and feet and tied him to his flagstaff. The Devas in distress approached Brahma for help. Brahma went to Lāṅka and secured the release of Indra. After giving the title of Indrajit to Meghanāḍa, Brahma returned to Brāhma-loka.

Sometime before this Devendra had committed adultery with Ahalāyā, Sage Gautama’s wife. At that time Gautama had uttered a curse on him, that he would have to spend a year in prison, chained by an enemy. His life in Rāvaṇa’s prison in Lāṅka was in fulfillment of that curse. (Uttara Rāmāyahana).

85) Indra and Hanūmāṇ. Hanūmāṇ, the son of Vāyu (wind) sprang up into the sky as soon as he was born, seeing the brilliant rising sun, and mistaking it to be some delicious food. He saw Rāhu who was standing near the sun and made a leap towards him. When he came near, he saw Aiṛāvata, Indra’s elephant, standing in Devaloka. At once he turned towards that elephant to swallow him. Seeing the struggle between Hanūmāṇ and Aiṛāvata Indra used his weapon Vajra which cut the monkey’s “hanu” (jaw bone) and he fell down dead on the earth. Vāyu, in deep sorrow, took the dead body of his son and went to Pāṭalā. When Vāyu (wind) left the world, the creatures of the world underwent great suffering. Then the Devas led by Brahma went to Pāṭalā, consoled Vāyu and revived Hanūmāṇ. Since his “Hanu” was cut with Vajra, the monkey was named “Hanūmāṇ” by Indra. Besides, Indra gave him a blessing that Hanūmāṇ would die only when he wished. (Uttara Rāmāyahana, Vālmiki Rāmāyahana; Kīśkinthā Kāṇḍa; 66th Sarga).

86) Indra and Gowardhana. For the story of how the people of Gokula (Cowherds’ colony) stopped the worship of Indra, how Indra caused a heavy shower of rain, and how Śrī Kṛṣṇa used the Govardhana mountain as an umbrella, see under “Kṛṣṇa”.

87) Indra becomes victim of old age. Once the sage Durvāsas went to Devaloka. The goddesses gave him a grand reception at which Menakā presented him with a garland made of fragrant flowers. The sage gave it to Devendra. Indra placed it on Aiṛāvata’s tusk. The fragrance of the garland attracted a large number of bees to it. They swarmed round the head of the elephant and annoyed it. Aiṛāvata picked up the garland trampled it under his foot, pulled it to pieces and threw it away. Durvāsas took this as an insult to himself and pronounced a curse that all the gods would be subjected to wrinkles and grey hair of old age.

Indra and the other gods fell victims to old age. Indra requested Durvāsas to release him from his curse. The sage relented and told him that if the Devas drank Amṛta obtained by churning the ocean of milk they would recover their youth. Accordingly, the ocean of milk was churned by the joint effort of the Devas and Asuras and in the end the Devas snatched it away. When the Devas drank Amṛta, the symptoms of old age disappeared and they recovered their youth. (Uttara Rāmāyahana).

88) Indra and Dandakārāyaṇa. Danda the son of Ikṣvāku, a King of the Solar dynasty, ruled over the territory between the Vindhya and the Himalayas. Once when he was out hunting in the neighbourhood of the mountains, he saw a charming woman. She was “Arā”, the daughter of the sage Sukra. The King was fascinated by her beauty and fell desperately in love with her at the very first sight. He seized her by force and committed rape on her. When Sukra knew about this, he was furious and uttered a curse that Indra should shower a rain of fire on Danda’s kingdom. Thus the whole country of Danda was destroyed by Indra’s rain of fire.

In course of time that region was turned into a dense forest and came to be called “Dandakārāyaṇa”. (Uttara Rāmāyahana).

89) Other names of Indra. Indra; Marutvān, Mṛchhavān, Bṛjājauṣas, Pākaśāsana, Vṛddhārasanas, Sunāṣira, Puruṣā, Purandara, Jisṇu, Lekhassabha, Śakra, Satamanyu, Divasapati, Śrutāmā, Gotrabhī, Vajrī, Vāsava, Vṛtra, Vṛṇa, Vāsotapati, Surapati, Valārāti, Śacapati, Jambhabhedin, Harīhaya, Śvārāt, Narumisidhāna, Saṅkrandana, Daśyayana, Turāśat Meghavāhana, Akhaṇḍa, Sahasrāka, Rbhusā.

90) Indra’s Divinity. In the earliest stage of Hinduism, Indra had occupied one of the most eminent places among the gods. Mahāvīra had only the place of younger brother of Indra at that time. In Amara Ko’a we find “Upendra Indrāvaraja” as the synonym of
In Rgveda Indra has a more important place. Although Rudra is a divinity or deity and although there are references to Kapardinu, there is not even a single stuti (praise) about Śiva in the Rgveda. Rgveda does not recognize Devipijā and idol worship. But in the Purāṇic age, Indra was transformed into a lascivious “Deva Prābhu” (Lord among the gods).

Sardar K.M. Panikkar, in his preface to “Rgveda Sanhitā” says about Indra: “The main actor in Rgveda is Indra. In the war against the Dasyus the Aryas seek the help chiefly of Indra. Indra is represented as very handsome and of a golden complexion. His weapon is Vajra, thunderbolt, which was made by Tvaṣṭā. Vāyu (wind) is his charioteer. He is constantly traveling about in the sky driving his golden chariot. Indra likes drinking soma juice more than the other gods. Indra is even referred to as ‘Somapu’. He is also sometimes described as the twin brother of Agni. Sages have sung unendingly about the exploits of Indra. Hīranyastūpa, a sage, has composed a work entitled “Indraśuti” which celebrates many of the heroic deeds of Indra. Indra was Vaijrapāṇi who had slain the Asuras like Āhi, Tūṣpa, Saṁbarā, Vāla, Vṛtra and others. There are also several stories in the Vedas about the birth of this hero. At the time of Indra’s birth, somehow, his mother felt that he was incapable of being killed. So she decided to abandon him. Fearing trouble for herself, she asked the child to leave her and go to some other place. Indra refused to do so and followed her to the house of Tvaṣṭā. There he drank the juice of the soma plant and gained strength to kill his enemies. But unaware of this, his mother, tried to keep him concealed. Indra, however, came out of the place in his dazzling attire and encountered the enemies. Vṛtra who met Indra got ready for a fight. In the fight Vyaṁsa struck down Indra. The devas fled in fear. Indra who was left alone called upon Viṣṇu and sought his aid.

Although Indra needed help in his fight with Vṛtra, he was the chief support to the Āryas in their fight against the Dasyus. It was Indra’s Vajra which broke up the fortresses of many Dasyu kings. That was why he got the name “Purāndara”. Once Indra dried up the whole river to enable his army to cross it for the sake of Sudā. When Śūrvasa became helpless, Indra destroyed twenty kings and 60,000 soldiers with his chariot wheel. Thus we see Indra in the Rgveda as the destroyer of the Dasyus and the protector of the Āryas.”

Indrāni, Śaci and Pulomājā are the names of Indra’s wife. Indra’s son, Jāyanta is also known by the name of Pākaśāsani. Indra’s city is Amaraṁati; his chariot “Vimāna”, his charioteer Mātalī, and his garden Nandavanam. “Vaijayanta” is the name of his mansion. Indra’s weapon has several other names, such as, Hṛadini, Kulīṇa, Bhūdura, Pauṇi, Satakoṭi, Svaru, Śamba, Dambholt, A’amni etc. Indra’s assembly is called “Su-dharma”. Indra’s bow is the rainbow, his sword is Parāṇjaya and his residence is Heaven. The trees in Heaven are, Māndara, Patrījā, Śantāna, Kalpavṛkṣa and Hariandana. The festival celebrated in honour of Indra is called “Sakrāddavajotuṇna” or “Indrotsava”.

11) Indra and Uttaṇaka. See under Uttaṇaka.
12) Indra and Kābândha. See the second para under the name Kābândha.
13) Indra was born as Gādhi. See under Gādhi.

94) Śiva ended Indra’s pride. See under Pāṇḍavas.
95) Indra stole the cows. For the story of how Indra stole the cows from Gokula see under Kṛṣṇa.
96) Indra and Mahāśāni. Once Mahāśāni, the son of Hiranyā, defeated the gods in a battle and took Indra and Indrāni to Pātaḷa as captives. The Devas who knew that Mahāśāni was a relative of Varuṇa, sought the help of Varuṇa. At the instance of Varuṇa, Indra was released. The revengeful Indra prayed to Śiva. Śiva appeared and asked Indra to submit his complaint to Viṣṇu. Indra offered his prayers to Viṣṇu. As a result of it, a man who had the elements of Śiva and Viṣṇu in him, took his birth from the water of the Gaṅga. He killed Mahāśāni. (Brahmāṁda Purāṇa).

INDRADAYUMNA I. A yajña (sacrifice) performed in order to get children. King Yuvanāśa got the yajña conducted. After it was over the King drank water from pots filled by brahmīns, and became pregnant. (See Māndhātā). (Devi Bhāgavata, 7th Skanda).

INDRADAMANA. A King who gifted a lot of money to Brahmins. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 18).

INDRADAITA. See ‘Vararuci’.

INDRADHVAJA. A flag staff. It is erected in order to get rain. If anybody dreams that it has broken and fallen, it is a bad omen. It means that some disaster will befal the country. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 229).

INDRADVIṣA (INDRA ISLAND). Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva refers to the island as having once been conquered and subjugated by king Sahasrabāhu.

INDRAYUMNA I. A King born in the dynasty of Śvāyambhuva Manu, and a king of the Pāṇḍya country.

2) Indrayumna turned into elephant. Indrayumna, a devotee of Viṣṇu handed over governance of the country to his children when he became old, and performed penance in the Malaya mountain. One day, when he was immersed in meditation, Agastya came there. Naturally, Indrayumna did not notice Agastya’s arrival. Enraged at this the latter cursed Indrayumna and turned him into an elephant. Being told immediately about the curse by his servants Indrayumna sought redemption from the curse from Agastya himself. Redemption was granted thus: Indrayumna would roam in the forest for years as an elephant, a devotee of Viṣṇu and he would attain salvation when Lord Viṣṇu came down to the earth and patted the elephant on its back. Accordingly Indrayumna who was turned into an elephant roamed about in the forest for many years in the company of a herd of wild elephants. At last it arrived at Mount Trikūṭa. There was a lake there on the banks of which was sage Devala engaged in penance. Hālū, the Gandharva had once come to this lake with a number of Asparā women and they indulged in amorous sports, which Devala did not like. He cursed Hālū and turned him into a crocodile, and the crocodile lived in the same lake. Indrayumna who was turned into an elephant, stepped into the lake to drink water when the crocodile caught hold of its hind leg. Neither did the elephant yield nor the crocodile leave the former free. Their tug of war continued for 1000 years when Mahāviṣṇu appeared on the scene, killed the crocodile and saved the elephant. At once the elephant was re-transformed into Indradyumna and hence attained Vaikunṭha (the abode of Viṣṇu). (Bhāgavata, 8th Skanda).

A Malayalam verse summarises the above story as follows:—Impelled by Agastya’s curse the elephant went to the lake at Mount Tṛīkūṭa, and suffered for 1000 years as the crocodile which caught hold of its hind leg did not loosen its grip. Then appeared on the scene the killer of Murāsura (Lord Viṣṇu) on his vehicle, Garuḍa, killed the crocodile with his discus and granted salvation to the elephant.

3) Indradyumna’s fall from heaven when the merits of his good deeds were exhausted. The merits or the result of his good and noble deeds having been exhausted, Indradyumna, the saintly king once descended from heaven to earth, and the sad King approached sage Mārkaṇḍeya. But, the sage did not recognise him. The King and the sage went to Prāvirakarṇa, an owl living on the top of the Himalayas. It also did not recognise the King. Then they went to Nāḍijāṅgha, a stork very much older than the owl and living in the lake known as Indradyumna. Nāḍijāṅgha also could not recognise the King. In another part of the lake was living a tortoise called Akūpāra, who was older than Nāḍijāṅgha. At last the King, the sage, Prāvirakarṇa and Nāḍijāṅgha approached Akūpāra. At his very sight Akūpāra recognized the King. Akūpāra told sage Mārkaṇḍeya that Indradyumna was a very famous King and quite liberal and munificent in distributing gifts, and that the lake Indradyumna was formed by the passage of the cows gifted by the King. Having heard these details regarding the King the sage sent him back to heaven. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 199).

INDRAYUMNA II. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 32 refers to a certain King Indradyumna, a contemporary of Śrī Kṛṣṇa; Kṛṣṇa killed him.

INDRAYUMNA III. A sage Indradyumna is mentioned in the list of Saints who paid their homage to Dharmaputra during his forest life. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 22).

INDRAYUMNA IV. Name of King Janaka’s father.

INDRAYUMNA V. A king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. (See Para 2, under Viṣṇukarmān).

INDRAYUMNA VI. A king who lived in the Krta yuga, and a devotee of Viṣṇu. He visited the Jagannātha temple in Odra Deśa once to worship Lord Jagannātha. The Lord was then hidden in the sand. When the King, disappointed at this was about to return, determined to fast unto death at Mount Nila when a celestial voice cried, “Thou shalt see Him”. Afterwards the King performed a horse sacrifice and built a magnificent Viṣṇu temple. Narasimhamūrti brought by Nārada was installed in the temple. During sleep the King had a darśana (sight) of Lord Jagannātha. Also an astral voice directed him to cut down the fragrant tree on the seashore and make idols with it. Accordingly the king got idols of Viṣṇu, Balarāma, Sudarṣāna and Subhadra made and installed them in the temple. (Skanda Purāṇa).

INDRAYUMNA(M). A lake. A stork called Nāḍijāṅgha and the Ādikūrma called Akūpāra lived in this lake. It came into existence when the cows given in gift by King Indradyumna passed along that way. (M.B. Aranya Parva, Chapter 198). The pool lay near Mount Gandhamadāna, and the Pândavas once visited it. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 18).

INDRAJIT. Rāvana’s son, Meghanañda.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus:—Viṣṇu.—Brahmā—Pulastya—Viśravas—Rāvana—Meghanañda (Indrajit).

To Pulastya, one of the Prajāpatis was born by Mālinī, Viśravas. Viśravas had two wives, Devavarni, also called Ilibilā and Kailasī. Viśravas or Kubera was his son by Ilibilā and Rāvana, Kumbhakarna, Vibhiṣanā and Sūrpanakā (daughter) being the offsprings of Kailasī. Rāvana married Mandodari and three sons, Meghanañda, Atikāya and Aṅkumāra were born to them. Meghanañda came to be known as Indrajit also, because he had defeated Indra once.

2) Son of Sīva. Though it was Mandodari, Rāvana’s wife, who gave birth to Meghanañda (Indrajit) the Uttara-rāmāyaṇa refers to him as the son of Sīva in a story as follows:

Once, after religious fasting and other rites on a Monday (to propitiate the Sun-God) Madhurā, an Apsara woman, adorned with all kinds of ornaments went to Mount Kailāsa to offer salutations to Lord Siva. Parvati, Siva’s consort was not present then, and Madhurā used the opportunity to please the Lord, and she got pregnant by him. All on a sudden Parvati appeared on the scene, and knowing what had happened in her absence she cursed Madhurā to fall into an abandoned well as a frog. Madhurā prayed for redemption from the curse, and Sīva pitying her sad plight blessed her that after 12 years she would get herself transformed into a fair damsel and become the daughter of Maya and would, then, be married by a great King. According to Parvati’s curse Madhurā fell into a well in the forest as a frog. Mayaṣūra was performing penance near the well to get a daughter. On the expiry of 12 years after Madhurā fell into the well as a frog, Mayaṣūra looked into it and beheld a beautiful girl. He took her to his palace named her Mandodari and brought her up as his own daughter. Rāvana married her. It was at this stage that Sīva’s vital fluid which had, twelve years before, entered her womb made its appearance in the form of a son. Rāvana named him Meghanañda. Being Sīva’s son he grew up with great prowess. (Uttara Ramāyaṇa).

3) Meghanāda’s yajñas. When once Rāvana was away from Lanka on a conquest of the world, Meghanāda went to Nikumbhā, the central place for conducting yajñas, and performed seven yajñas with sage Śukra as the chief priest. By the time all the seven yajñas, viz. Agniṣṭoma, Aśvamedha, Bahusvāna, Vaisnava, Māheśvara, Rājasvāya and Gosava were over, Rāvana returned to Lanka and sage Śukra gave him details about the yajñas conducted by his son Meghanāda. Rāvana did not like the Vaisnava yāga performed by his son, and Śukra, who got angry at this cursed, Rāvana that he would meet with his death at the hands of Viṣṇu. (Uttara Ramāyaṇa).

By performing a Sāva yāga, Meghanāda got the blessings of Sīva, who taught him (Meghanañda) the great art of Śanāthi, which helped one to move amongst others invisible to them.
The name, Indrajit. Once Rāvana encircled Indraloka with a big army, and Indra, very much alarmed ran up to Viṣṇu for protection. Viṣṇu told Indra that it was not yet time for Rāvana's death and when it was time Viṣṇu himself would slay him. Disappointed at this Indra returned, and a fierce war ensued between him and Rāvana. Indra fought with Rāvana, and Jayanta, his son fought with Meghanāda. When fighting reached its climax Meghanāda resorted to the art of Samādhi taught by Śiva, and became invisible to others. Then he showered his arrows. Jayanta fainted on the battlefield. Pulomā, father of Indrāni, carried away Jayanta without others knowing and concealed him in the ocean. Everyone thought that Jayanta was dead. Burning with grief and revenge Indra confronted Rāvana again. Rāvana fell down at the blow with Indra's vajra (thunderbolt). Then once more making himself invisible to others, Meghanāda jumped into Indra's chariot and bound him prisoner. By that time Rāvana got up on his feet, and he and Meghanāda carried away Indra to Laṅkā and chained him to the foot of the flagstaff.

The Devas, grief-stricken at this sad fate of Indra went to Brahmā and submitted their grievance. Brahmā reached Laṅkā, and named Meghanāda Indrajit. (He who gained victory over Indra). Indrajit prayed to Brahmā for the boon, which would, ward off death for ever. When Brahmā told him that the boon of eternal deathlessness was out of the question he sought the following boon: that when he had performed a yajña, out of the sacrificial fire should emerge a chariot and necessary horses and that he should not be killed by any one while fighting from that chariot, and that he did not mind being killed by enemies if he got away without completing the yajña. Brahmā granted him the boon. And, as directed by Brahmā Rāvana released Indra from imprisonment after one year. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

5) Indrajit and Hanūmān. A clash occurred between Indrajit and Hanūmān, who landed in Laṅkā in search of Sītā, and the former got Hanūmān bound by Brahmāstra. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

6) Death of Indrajit. At the height of the fierce war between Rāma and Rāvana, Indrajit and Laksmana clashed with each other. Finding victory impossible Indrajit created a fake Sītā and killed her. Thinking that Sītā was dead, grief-stricken Hanūmān, Laksmana and the regiment of monkeys withdrew from the fight. Informed of Sītā's death Rāma fainted.

Indrajit began the yajña for victory over Rāma at the place called Nikumbhāla. Vibhiśaṇa told Rāma and Laksmana about the warning of Brahmā that Indrajit would be killed if the yajña was obstructed. Happy at the information Rāma and Laksmana immediately went to Nikumbhāla to fight with Indrajit who was engaged in performing the yajña, and without completing the yajña he came out and began fighting, and Laksmana killed him. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Chapters 82-91).

INDRAKILÀ. A mountain in front of the Himālaya and Gandhamādana mountains. The presiding deity of this mountain is a devotee of Kubera. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 37).

INDRALOKĀBHIGAMANA PARVA. A sub Parva in Mahābhārata.

INDRAMĀRGĀ. An ancient sacred place (bathing ghat) Those who take a dip in the holy waters there will attain heaven. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 9).

INDRĀNI. Wife of Indra (Śacī).

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Viṣṇu—Brahmā—Kaśyapa—Pulomā—Śacī (Indrāni). Pulomā was an asura born to Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. Indra married Śacī, the daughter of Pulomā, and hence Śacī is called Indrāni also. She is called Pulomī also as she was the daughter of Pulomā.

2) Indrāni and Śūrapadma. An asura called Śūrapadma once coveted Indrāni. He deputed his men to fetch Śacī somehow or other to him. Hearing about this, Indra, keeping Indrāni with him, went to and stayed in the Chilyāli temple in Koṅkanadeśa, and afterwards Indra went to Mount Kailāsa after asking Śāstā to guard Indrāni. During Indra's absence Ajāmukhi, sister of Śūrapadma met Indrāni and induced her to become Śūrapadma's wife. Indrāni refused. Ultimately Indra returned and took Indrāni back to Devaloka.

3) Indrāni and Nāhuṣa. See under Agastya.

4) Indrāni and Pāñcālī. Mahābhārata says that Pāñcālī was a partial incarnation of Indrāni. (See under Pāñcālī). A part of Śacī was born in the family of Drupada as Draupadī, viz. Pāñcālī. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67).

(1) Indrāni once went to the assembly of Brahmā and worshipped him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 42).

(2) When once Satyabhāmā came to Devaloka with Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Indrāni conducted her to Aditi, mother of the Devas. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 36).

(3) Śacī also was present at the birth of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 13).

(4) Indrāni and Arjuna. (See under Arjuna).

INDRAPARVATĀ. A mountain in Videha. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 15).

INDRAPRAMATI. A disciple of Paila. He belonged to the line of Vyāsa's disciples. For other details see under Vyāsa.

INDRAPRASTHA. Capital city of the Pāṇḍavas. It is the same as Delhi, the capital of modern India.

1) Construction. As ordained by Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Dharma-putra, claimant to half of the kingdom, went to the forest Khaṇḍavaprastha with his brothers. Śrī Kṛṣṇa stood by them; great sages like Vyāsa helped them. There, in the forest, they built a city called Inraprastha as beautiful as Indraloka. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 211).

2) Reconstruction. Once Āgni burned down the Khaṇḍavā forest. (See under Khaṇḍavadāha). Arjuna saved Maya and five others from the fire. Maya asked Arjuna what he should do in return for saving his life. Arjuna replied that it was not proper to expect any reward for saving one's life and that, if Maya was very keen about doing something in return, it might be done for Kṛṣṇa. Then Kṛṣṇa asked Maya to build for the Pāṇḍavas a palace, the most beautiful one in the world at Inraprastha. And, accordingly, after getting the Brahmins duly feasted, Maya marked the ground ten thousand Kišku\(^1\) in extent. Then Maya went to the mountain Māñaka to the west of Mount Kailāsa, where in the pool called Bindu he had stored a large quantity of gold and gems. Maya brought those materials as also a conch called Devadatta from there and built the most beautiful palace in the world at Indraprastha. Within the palace were made many a beautiful pool and various patterns with galleries etc. in glass. It was built so beautifully and in such a manner as to create, at the very sight, the illusion that there was water where there really was no water and vice versa. It took fourteen months to complete the construction of that most beautiful model of architecture. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapters 1-3).

3) Vajra, son of Aniruddha of the Yādava dynasty was made master of Indraprastha after the time of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Mauṣala Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 11).

INDRAPŪJA. This pūjā (Indra-worship) is also called Indrotsava. It was during the reign of Vasu, a king of the lunar dynasty that Indrotsava being celebrated was organised in an organised manner. Please at the long penance of Vasu, Indra appeared to him and presented a Venuḍanda. Vasu planted the dāṇḍa on earth and conducted Indrapūja. Thenceforward raising the Venuḍanda became the first item in celebrating Indrotsava. The staff is decorated with flowers, sandal, garlands etc. To the top of the staff is attached the form of a Harīṇa and offerings are given to it. The reason for this is the fact that it was in the form of a Harīṇa that Indra appeared to Vasu. Please by the Indrapūja of Vasu, Indra announced as follows: —If men, and especially kings worship me in the manner done by Vasu, prosperity and welfare will accrue to them and to their kingdoms. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63).

INDRASENA I. A son of King Nala. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 60, Verse 23). Nala had also a daughter called Indrasena.

INDRASENA II. Son of King Parīśit. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 55).

INDRASENA III. Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 33. Verse 30 refers to one Indrasena, charioteer of the Pāṇḍavas. He accompanied the Pāṇḍavas in their forest life. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 11). When the Pāṇḍavas arrived at Mount Gandhamādāna they left Indrasena with Subāhu, the Pulindā king. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 140, Verse 27). After some time the Pāṇḍavas sent him to Dvārakā. (M.B. Vīrāṭa Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 58). Indrasena was present at the wedding of Abhimanyu which was celebrated in the city of Upaplavya. (M.B. Vīrāṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 23).

INDRASENA IV. A King who fought on the side of the Kauravas. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 156, Verse 122).

INDRASENA I. Name of Pāṇcāli in her former birth. (See under Pāṇcāli).

INDRASENA II. Daughter of King Nala.

 INDRASENA III. Nālāyāni, a princess of An̄ga. She was married by the sage Rṣyaśṛiṅga. (See under Rṣyaśṛiṅga). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 11). Indrasena served her husband for 100 years. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 11).

INDRATĀPA. An Asura, who was a devotee of Varuṇa. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 15).

INDRATĪRTHA. A sacred place on the banks of the river Sarasvatī. It was here that Indra performed 100 yajñas. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 49).

INDRATOYA. A river near Mount Gandhamādāna. Bathing in the river and staying there for three nights is tantamount to performing the horse sacrifice. (M.B. Anūśāna Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 11).

INDRĀVĀHANA. King Kakutstha of the Iksvāku dynasty made Indra his vehicle in the form of an ox and fought the Asuras thus. Hence the name Indrāvāhana. (See under Kakutstha).

INDRĀVARMAN. A King of Mālava, he fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas, and got killed by an elephant called Aśvatthāmah. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 190, Verse 15).

INDROTA (INDRODA). A sage, son of Śuka, the great sage, and also called Saunaka. Janamejaya, son of King Parīśit once killed a brahmin, and at once Brahmahatya (sin of having killed a brahmin) seized the King. The King lost all mental peace at this and sought the advice of many sages for redemption from the sin, and Indrota (Saunaka) advised him to go on a pilgrimage and perform righteous duties (dharma). The King acted accordingly and got rid of the sin of killing the brahmin. This story occurs under the title Indrotrapārikṣṭīyam in Śānti Parva in three chapters. (Chapters 150-152).

INDROTSAVA. See under Indrapūja.

INDUPRABHĀ. See under Malayaprabhā.

INDUMATĪ I. Daughter of Candrasena, King of Śīṁhala and his queen, Guṇavatī. (See under Candrasena).

INDUMATĪ II. Mother of Nahuṣa. (See under Nahuṣa).

INDUMATĪ III. Wife of Raghu.

IRA I. One of the wives of Kaśyapa. Aditi, Diti, Danu, Arīṣṭa, Surasā, Khāśa, Surabhī, Vīṇātī, Tāmā, Krodhaṇavāsī, Ira, Kadrū and Muni were the wives of Kaśyapa. Grass on earth originated from Ira. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

IRA II. There was a devī called Ira among the attendants of Kubera. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 11).

IRAṆĀ. A river. Sage Mārkandeya is reported to have once seen this river in the stomach of child Krṣṇa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 188, Verse 104. Also see under Mārkandeya).

IRĀVĀN. A son born to Arjuna of the serpent damsel (Nāgakanyā) named Ulūpi. (For genealogy see under Arjuna).

1) Birth. According to the practice laid down Pāncāli used to live with each husband for one year by turn. When she was living with one husband the other four husbands had no admission there. When once Arjuna wanted his arms to redeem the cows of a brahmin stolen by thieves he entered the apartment of Dharma-putra where the arms had been kept and took them. For thus having entered, against rules, the apartment then kept by Dharmaputra and Pāncāli, Arjuna had to go on a pilgrimage for one year. Numerous brahmins accompanied Arjuna and while spending the night on the banks of the Gaṅgā, Arjuna entered its waters for bathing. There he saw the Nāga damsel, Ulūpī. They fell in love with each other and got married. And, a son named Irāvān was born to them. Ulūpī granted Arjuna the boon that all water-animals would obey him and that in water he would be invincible. Leaving Ulūpī and Irāvān behind, Arjuna continued his stay in the forest.

2) Further Information. (1) In the great war Irāvān fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. During the first day's fighting Irāvān and Śrutayu fought a duel. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verses 69-71).

(2) Irāvān defeated Vinda and Anuvinda in flight. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 83, Verses 18-22).

(3) Irāvān killed five brothers of Śākuni. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90, Verses 27-46).

(4) Irāvān fought against Alambuṣa and was killed by the latter. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90, Verses 56-76).

IRĀVĀTI I. Grand daughter of Kaṣyapa. Ten daughters were born to Kaṣyapa by his wife Krodhavasā, viz. Mrgī, Mrgamanā, Hārī, Bhadrāmatā, Mātarīgī, Sārdūli, Śvetā, Surabhi and Kadrū, and Irāvāti was Kadrū's daughter. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranya Kāṇḍa).

IRĀVĀTI II. A sacred river. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 146, Verse 18).

IRJIK. A locality. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 52).

IRJ. There are hundred Kings in the palace of Yama worshipping him, and they are. called the Īris. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 23).

IRIMPU. A Malayalam word meaning 'iron'. The metal iron originated in the following way. The Devas sought Brahmā's protection against the onslaughts of Tārakāsura, who had obtained a boon to the effect that he could be killed only by a son born to Śiva. And, implored by Brahmā and others Śiva entered into the sex act with Pārvatī. The impact shook the universe. Agni separated them from the process and the semen of Śiva dropped in Agni. Agni deposited it in the Gaṅgā. The Gaṅgā could not bear it and it coursed through her (Gaṅgā's) arteries and out of it was born Subrahmānaya. Also from the particles of the semen gold and silver were produced. From the intensity of the heat were produced iron and copper. See under Subrahmānaya. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bala Kāṇḍa, Canto 37).

ISA. A Viśvedeva. (Universal deva). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 31).

ISAŅA (SIVA). Isāna, with matted hair rides on the ox. See under Siva. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

ISAṆADHYUŚṬA TĪRTHA. An ancient tirtha. Taking the water of this tirtha will give all the benefits of the horse sacrifice. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verses 8, 9).

IṢṬARASMI. A King mentioned in the Rgveda. He performed many yajñas. (Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 13, Sūkta 123).

IṢṬĀŚVA. A King mentioned in the Rgveda. He performed many yajñas. (Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 19, Sūkta 124).

IṢUPĀDA. An Asura born to Kaṣyapa and his wife, Danu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 25).

Iṣuḍāda was reborn in his next life as the very heroic and powerful King Nagnajitī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verses 20, 21).

ĪŚVARA. Once Devī told Himavān who, according to the Hindu religion, God is, and how creation takes place from Īśvara (God). The famous discussion about Godhood, called Devīgītā is quoted hereunder.

(1) Aham evāsā purvam tu nāuyad kincit na gādhipa / Tadātmārūpaṁ cit saṁvit Parabrahmāṇānāṃ namah. //

(Before the creation of the universe commenced, I alone was; there was nothing else. Then I was called Para-brahman, Citvarūpī, Saṁvītvarūpī and Atmarūpī).

(2) Aprataryamanirdesya-manaupamyamanāyam / Tasya kācat svataḥ siddhā śaktirṅyeti viśrutā //

(That form is beyond discussion (Atraparāya); beyond description (Anirdeṣya); incapable of being compared (Anu-pamam); beyond birth, death youth, old age etc. (Anāmayam). In this form of mine resides māyāsakti.

(3) Na satī śa nāsatī sānobhayātā śvirodhataḥ / Etadvilakṣanā kācid vasubhūtātī sarvadā //

(That māyāsakti cannot be said to be existing or not existing. Thus it is neither existing nor not existing. The statement existing and not existing is subject to the error, paradox. That great force exists always in me with the pair of aspects.

(4) Pāvakasyoṣatevyeśa muṣṇāṁśorīva didhitih / Candrasya candrikeveyaṁ Mameyāṁ sahañā dhruva //

(Fire does not exist without heat, nor Sun without light nor Moon without its rays. Just like this, that māyāsakti is coeval with me. It is permanent.

(5) Tasyāṁ karmāṇi jīvāṁ / Jīvā Kālāsa sañcares / Abhedana vīnāṁ sūrya / Suṣuptau vyavahāravat //

(Just as all actions, feelings and even the sense of time remain latent in deep sleep, even so all the actions and emotions of all living beings lie absorbed in Māyā).

(6) Svāsaṅkeśa ca samāyogā– dhaṁ bījātmataṁ gata / Svādhārvaranātattayasaya– dosavāṁ ca samāgatam //

(I am myself the source of this Māyā; but it has a strange power called āvaraṇa which hides my real nature)

(7) Caitanyakṣya samāyogā nimittavāṁ ca kathaṁ / Prapañcaparaṇāmāccha / Samavāyivamcaya //

(Being joined to Caitanya (Brahman) Māyā becomes the material as well as the immediate cause of the universe (Prapañca).

(8) Kecāttām tapa ityāhu– stamaṁ kecāttām kare / Janāṁ māyāṁ pradhānaṁ ca / Prakṛtiṁ śaktimāpyājam //
(This mâyâ is referred to differently by different people as tapas, tamas, jâda, jînâna, mâyâ, pradhâna, prakrâti and ajâ).

(9) Vîmarśa iti tâh prâhuḥ Śaiva śâstrīvidârâdāḥ / avidyâmitare prâhur-vedatatvârthcintakâḥ //

(Experts in Śaiva philosophical thought refer to this mâyâ as vîmarśa and Vedic seers call it avidyâ).

(10) Īvam nânâvidhih syyûḥ nâmâni nigaṇmâdîsū / tasyâh jadâtvâṃ dṛṣṭyatvât jânanâsâttataotosū //

(Thus Vedas refer to mâyâ by various names. Because of visibility mâyâ is called jâda, and because it is destructive of true knowledge it is called asat).

(11) Caitanyasya na dṛṣṭyatvâṃ dṛṣṭyatve jâdâmeva tat / svapraekâsâni ca caityanyaḥ
na pareṇa prâkâśam //

(Caitanya (Effulgence) is not visible. What is seen is jâda (material expression). Caitanya is self-illuminating; it is not illuminated by something else).

(12) Anâvasthâdośasatâvânâna svenâpi prâkâśitam / Karmakârtvirodhah śyâ-tasmattadâdpavat svayam //

(If Caitanya is not self-illuminating then it is subject to the drawback of Anâvasthâdośa (Absence of finitude). If Caitanya does not possess the quality of light and illumination there should necessarily be something else, which illuminates it, and there should again be something to illuminate that which illuminates Caitanya. And, it continues ad infinitum. This state of no conclusion is called anavasthâ dośa. Also one thing cannot be, at the same time, the subject (actor) and the object of action, and that invites the draw-back of paradox. Therefore, O King of mountains! understand that Caitanya is self-illuminating and it illuminates other things by its own illumination. And this, therefore, proves that my Caitanya is eternal).

(14) Jâgratvaprasasuprâtyâdau dṛṣṭyasvâyâbhirvârañ̄aḥ / sââvâdovâyaśâcarasãca
nânubhûtostoharicī //

(All visible things go on changing in the three states of awaking, dream and deep sleep. But, like visible things Caitanya is not subject to change, and does not experience the three states).

(15) Yadi tasyâpyanubhâva-starhyayãh yena sâksînâ / anubhûtaḥ sa evâtra
śîṣṭâh sââvâdovâpûpurâ //

(If it is argued that it (Caitanya) experiences the three states then there must be something else as ‘witness’ for the experience. But, since it is established as self-illuminating there cannot be something else as ‘witness’).

(16) Ātaeva ca nityatvâṃ drâktiḥ sacchâstrâkavidaîh / ânandarûpâtâ ca saîyâh parapremâsâpadatvâtaḥ //

(Because of the above reasons experts in the science of philosophy hold that this Caitanya is eternal, and that, since it is the basis of bhakti which assumes the form of absolute love, it is ānandarâpa).

(17) Mā na bhûvāma hi bhûyâsamîti premâmati sthitān / sarvasyânyasya mithyâ-tvâ-dasârjagatvâna śphuṭatâ mama //

(No living soul think ‘I am not’. Every body cherishes always his self-importance, the ‘I’. It is present there in every living soul in the form of love. This fact itself proves that I am different from all material objects).

(18) Aparíchinnâtâpyevamata eva matâ mama / tacca jînânaṁ nînâdharîmorno dharmatva jadâtâtmanah //

(That I am indivisible is quite definite. Knowledge is not an attribute of the soul (âtman) but is the very form of the soul itself. If knowledge were only an attribute of the soul it (soul) should have been material (jâda) and it is quite a certitude that the soul is not material, because knowledge is the very nature of the soul).

(19) Jînâsasya jadâsathavâṃ da dṛṣṭâm na ca samâbhavi / Cidaññhâtmatvânam tathā násti girâçid nahi bhidyate //

(The soul is pure knowledge without any touch of the jâda. It is also pure existence. It is one and indivisible).

(20) Tasmâtâtmanâ jînaṁnâpâḥ dukhârûpaścà sarvâdâ / satyaṁ pîrânopasârjagasça
dvaitajâjâtavirajjñâ //

(The âtman (soul) is therefore jînânamâ (of the nature of pure knowledge), Sukhârûpa (of the nature of pure joy) and satyârûpa (of the nature of absolute truth). It is unattached to anything and free from duality).

(21) Sa punâḥ kâmakarma-dîyuktayâ śvâyamâyâya / pîrânavûbhitamâsûkârât kâlakarmânapakâtaḥ //

(22) Avicekâcca tattvasya sâksîvâvân prajâyate / abuddhipûrvâḥ sargosya kathitaage nagâdhâpa //

(23) Etadâdhi yamayâ praktaṁ mama rûpamalaukikam / avâkṛtâm tâtâvyâtakâm
mâyâsâbalamityâpi //

(24) Procyate sarvasâstresu sarvakâraṇâkârañâm tattvânâmâbhidhâti ca saçcidânandavigraham //

(25) Sarvakârmaghanihûtamîcchâjînânakriyâsrayam / hîmikâramanâtâcayâm ta-dâdi tattvâm tadâcyate //

(Impeled by the Vâsanā of previous actions the Mâyâ-śakti proceeds to create the world, beginning with the 24 tattvas. My form which is immaterial and unmanififested is praised by all sâstras to be the cause of all causes and the basis of all tattvas. It is also the basis of all knowledge, action and volition and realizable only through the hîmikâra mantra).
Virāṭdeha (Cosmic body) is the sum total of these individual material bodies. The inner conscience and bodily organs like ear etc. originate from the gentle and pure aspects of the five elements.

(35) Jnānendriyāṇāṁ rajendra! pratyekaṁ militaistu tāti / antabkaranaṁekaiṁ śyād vṛttibhedācaturvirdham //

(36) Yādā tu saṁkalpavikalpakṛtyaṁ tadāḥbavettanmanā ityabhikhyam / śyād buddhisajñānā ca yaṁ pravetti suṇiścitā samāyāhmanrāpam //

(37) Anusandhanāṁrauṁ taṁcittana ca parikirtitam / ahari kṛtyātmavṛttyā tu tadahāṁkārataṁ gataṁ

(Antal)karaṇa, due to differences in state assumes four forms. When once conception and doubt arise in a subject, then it is called mind. When there is no doubt, but there is assuredness it is called understanding (buddhi). The function of examining a subject again and over again belongs to citta. To think of ‘I’ is egoism or ahaṁkāra.

(38) Teṣāṁ rajōniṁ saṁjñātāni / Kramat karmendriyāṇi ca / pratyekaṁ militaistu prāṇo bhavati paścadhā //

(39) Ṣṛdī prāṇo gudeśpāno / nābhīsthastu samānākā ca / kaṇṭhadeśpudānasyāyāḥ / vāyānāḥ sarvaśārīragaḥ //

(From the coarse (ṛajasic) aspects of the five sense organs originate the five organs of action like word, foot, hand, excretery and the genital organ, and also the five prāṇas (breaths) called prāṇa, āpāna, samāna, udāna and vyāṇa. Prāṇa is located in the heart, āpāṇa in the anus, samāna in the nābhi (navel) udāna in the throat and vyāṇa all over the body).

(40) Jñānendriyāṇāṁ paṇcaiva / paṇicakarmendriyāṇi ca / prāṇādi paṇicakāṁ caiva dhīyā ca sahitam manāḥ //

(41) Ettā suṣṭhāṣṭhāraṁyāṁ syān / mama liṅgaṁ yaducayate / Tatra yā prakṛtyā prakṛtañ cā rājan dvividdhāṁ śṛṛtā //

(Organs of knowledge 5, of actions 5, and prāṇas 5, and buddhi 1, mind 1, the body is composed of these 17 factors). This forms the Suṣṭhāṣṭhāraṁyā which prakṛti is two-fold (as mentioned below).

(42) Satvātmikā tu māyā syād-adividyā guṇamārśīta / svāśrayaṁ yā tu saṁrākṣet / sā māyetī nigadyate //

One is pure māyā and the other is adivyā possessing properties.

(43) Tasyāṁ yat pratibimbāṁsyād- bimbabhūtasya ceśiṇuḥ sa Isvarāḥ samākhyaṁ / svāśrayājaṁsnavān prāḥa //

(44) Sarvajñaḥ sarvakāṭaḥ ca / sarvānugraḥakāraḥ / adivyāyāṁ tu yat kīncit / pratibimbāṁnāgādhīpa //
(Brahmacaitanya reflected in this māyā is Īsvara (God). That Īsvara is the same as the ātman (soul), brahman absolute, creator of everything, omniscient, and the cause of all blessings. The soul reflects to a small extent in avidyā also).

(45) Tadeva jīvasaṛaṇīṁ syāt sarvaduḥkhaśrayaṁ punah / dvāyorapiḥ saṁpraktaṁ dehatrayaṁvidiyāya //

(This jīva is the receptacle of all sorrows. Due to avidyā and avidyā both get three kinds of bodies).

(46) Dehatrayābhāmānāccā- pyaḥbhūnāmatrayaṁ punaḥ / prājñastu kāraṇātmā syāt sūkṣmadheti tu taṁjalya //

(47) Sthuladehi tu viśvākhy-a strividhaṁ parikṛtiṁ / evamśopī samprakto jīvasūtravirātapadāya //

(48) Prathamo vyāṣṭirūpaṁ / samaṣṭyātmā paraṁ smṛtaḥ / sa hi sarveśvaraṁ sākṣat jīvānugrahākāmyāya //

(49) Karotī vividhaṁ viśvaṁ ānābhogāśrayaṁ punaḥ / maccakātuprerto nityaṁ mayi rājaṁ prakalpitah. //

He who is attached and is proud about the material body is called Viśva; he who attaches importance to the subtle body is called Taijasa, and he who is aware of the causal body is called Prājña. The jīva is Vyāṣṭirvāraṇa (has individuality) but Īsvara is Saṁāstyaṁatka (embraces all the jivas). Īsvara works impelled by my power.

īyam. īyam in Malayalam means the metal lead. A metal formed out of the dirt in river Gaṅgā. (See Irimpū).

j. This letter means jaya (victory). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

jābali. The mother of the hermit Satyakāma. (For details see under Satyakāma).

jābali I. A famous hermit. In Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 55, it is stated that Jābali was one of the sons of Viśvāmitra. They were expounders of the Vedas. Though he was the son of Viśvāmitra his life was mostly connected with Vaśiṣṭha. The Purānas do not make it clear how this son of Viśvāmitra happened to fall into the circle of Vaśiṣṭha who was a foe of Viśvāmitra. He was one of the seven spiritual advisers of King Daśaratha. It is mentioned in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākāṇḍa, Sarga 48 that eight hermits such as Suyājña, Vāmadeva, Jābali, Kaśyapa Vaśiṣṭha and others lived in Ayodhya in the palace of the King Daśaratha. When Bharata went to the forest, to bring Śrī Rāma back to Ayodhya, Jābali also followed him. Jābali argued with Śrī Rāma, using several arguments, to make him return to Ayodhya. These arguments made Śrī Rāma angry. But he was pacified by the consoling words of Vaśiṣṭha. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhya Kāṇḍa). Jābali comes in the line of disciples of Vyāsa. Vyāsa divided the Veda and taught Saunantu Atharvaveda. The hermit Saunantu first taught Atharvaveda to his disciple Kābandha who divided it into two parts and taught two disciples Devardarsa, and Pathya. The disciples of Devardarsa were Magadhā, Brahmabalī, Sautkāyani and Pippalāda. Pathya had three disciples. They were Jābali, Kumuda and Saunaka. Of these Jābali was a famous expounder of Atharvaveda. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amśa 3).

Jābali II. Son of Rṣṭhvaja, a hermit. (See under Viśvakarmā, Ṛṣtri 2).

Jābali III. A hermit. The descendants of this hermit also are known by this name. Jābali who performed penance on the mountain of Mandara had several disciples.

While Jābali was going along the forest he saw a young man of handsome appearance engaged in penance on the shore of a lake. Jābali wanted to know about him and his penance. But as the young man was in deep meditation Jābali had to wait there for several years. At last the young man awoke from his meditation and told Jābali the secrets of devotional meditation and contemplation of Kṛṣṇa. The remaining life of Jābali was spent in the worship of Kṛṣṇa, in consequence of which in the next birth he was reborn as a cowherd, named Citrāngadha in the house of the cowherd Pračanda. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapters 30, 72 and 109).

Jābali IV. A hermit. The intensive penance of this hermit compelled Indra to depute the celestial maid Rambhā to hinder it. Jābali became a prey to the enticement of this heavenly beauty and a daughter was born to them. This damsel was carried away by the King Citrāngada. The hermit Jābali cursed Citrāngada to become a leper. (Skanda Purāṇa, Chapters 3, 143, and 144).

Jāda. An immoral brahmin. Jāda, who set out to do commercial business once was killed by thieves. As a result of sins committed in previous births he was turned into a Pīśāca. After his death his son, who led quite a moral life went to Kāśi (Banares) to perform his father's obsequies, and at the particular spot where his father was living as Pīśāca the son recited Chapter 3 of the Gitā, on hearing which Jāda got released from his state as Pīśāca. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttarākhaṇḍa and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa).

Jagannātha Pandita. A very powerful and ruthless literary critic in Sanskrit. He lived between 1590 and 1665. He is also known as Paṇḍitarāja (King of scholars). His most important and well-known work is Rasaganāḍhara. To this day it remains as an invaluable treasure in rhetorics. (Alāṅkāra Śāstra).

His poetic theory is "Ramaṭyārthapati-pāda-kāma Śabdālā Kāvyam". (Words which convey beautiful meanings constitutes poetry). He vehemently opposed the dhvani vāda (suggestive words and phrases conveying more meanings produce more rasa than they literally and apparently appear to carry). Citrāmānsā-Khaṇḍana is another work of the Paṇḍitarāja. In this work another rhetorician named Appayadikṣa is strongly criticised. The allegoric poem, "Bhāmīnvilāsam", is supposed to have been written by this great rhetorician based on the untimely death of his wife, Bhāmīnt. He has also written five other works, the five Laharis [Gaṅgālahari etc].

Jagati. One of the seven horses which draw the chariot of Śūrya. Gayatri, Śṛṇavi, Uṣṇik, Jagati, Tṛṣṭhub, Anuśṭhub and Paśikī are the seven horses. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part II, Chapter 8).
